This is another example of this kind of subterfuge. Not only is the government about to impose the GST, the greatest tax grab and most regressive tax in Canadian history, through this budget and with this bill it will impose cuts of over $7.5 billion to the provinces over the next five years. Never before have so many been taken for so much and been left with so little.

I will start with the Established Programs Financing. This program provides equal per capita financial assistance to all provinces to assist in the funding of health care and education.

In 1982, the Minister of Finance was opposed to cuts in the Established Programs Financing. This is 1990 and, obviously, he has changed his tune. He stated that cuts to EPF:

> —could have disastrous effects on the universities and on the colleges, on the hospital funding and on the operation of the hospitals. Let us not make hospitals, universities and colleges a battleground between the federal government and the provincial governments. Let us solve those problems not on the backs of the hospitals and universities; let us solve those problems outside of that arena.

• (1700)

This was reported in Hansard at page 15776 on March 24, 1982.

Mr. Volpe: I wonder why he changed his mind.

Mrs. Marleau: I wonder why he changed his mind. When faced with that kind of tactic, the provinces will have very little choice but to either cut back their funding of these institutions and therefore post-secondary education students will have to pay higher fees.

In hospitals, the odds are that the increased costs will be passed on either in cuts to services or in increased taxes at the provincial level, or again, in increased taxes at the municipal level when the province has to make some very serious choices as to where they will find the funds to continue providing the level of service which is essential to our people, which Canadians expect, and which they deserve.

Let me also add that this is the third time that the federal government has cut the Established Programs Financing in the last few years. The total loss to Ontario from these cuts will amount to over $11 billion. I am very well aware, and so are the taxpayers in Ontario, that a taxpayer is a taxpayer is a taxpayer. If one does not pay the bill at this level, the province has to foot the bill, and there is only one taxpayer at the bottom of the heap. If that taxpayer's municipal taxes are forced to increase or if his or her provincial taxes increase, whichever way you want to look at it, it is that same middle-income average person who will have to pay the price.

Many of these people are in serious difficulties now, especially in some of the regions in this country where people live on fixed incomes, have retired and own their own homes and are trying to maintain them. They are looking at increased municipal taxes. They are very worried about the increase in natural gas and heating and hydro that the GST will inflict upon them. They are very worried, and with good reason because they do not know where they are going. They wonder why is the government doing this to them. Is there no way of stopping this?

I ask, please reconsider some of these measures. Let us tackle the problem of the debt together, but let us not pass it on to those who can least afford it. It is important that we consider all people and that we treat those who cannot pay with very much consideration, and those who can pay, that we make them pay properly.

The Canada Assistance Plan is the basis for social assistance in Canada. Under the plan, the federal government matches provincial expenditures for social assistance programs. This does not only include what we generally refer to as welfare, but also things like services and living services for the disabled, foster homes for abused children, shelters for abused wives and child care for low-income families. These are all of the things that are going to be curtailed or at least held back in the three provinces affected.

The three provinces affected by this contain about 49 per cent of Canada's poor and they are no less poor because they live in Ontario, Alberta or British Columbia. It does not change the fact that they are poor.

I quote from a press release from the Canadian Council on Social Development: "Poor children will suffer when the federal contribution to the Canada Assistance Plan is capped for two years for Alberta, B.C. and Ontario. The plan provides direct payments to poor people with no other income, 40 per cent of whom are children and half of whom live in the three provinces affected".

Through this measure the government claims that it will save $151 million over two years, but at what expense? Maybe the government will save it, but the next level will have to pick up the bill, because we are a caring society and we will not allow these people to go without at least the very basics that they are receiving now, which I will admit is not a very large amount.

These cuts are very unfair in terms of the provinces concerned. They are the rich provinces, I will agree to that. But they are also the three provinces which do not receive equalization payments. They are being singled out by this set of cuts. The budget makes no allowances for increases in the number of people receiving social assistance, even though the government's own projections predict an increase in unemployment next year.

Capping the Canada Assistance Plan for the next two years will cause welfare costs to increase. Combined with the changes to unemployment insurance, this will put an additional burden on municipal property taxpayers.

Other areas funded by the Canada Assistance Plan affecting provinces and municipalities are day care and other social programs that municipal governments have been handed. We had a case in point in Sudbury just recently. There was a proposition that a number of subsidized day care spaces be funded by the municipal government. The municipal government felt that it just could not find the additional cash to do this. It is already very worried about its own tax base. I feel very confident that it will find the moneys for these additional spaces over the next six months or so and I encourage them to do it. However, it bothers me that there is a cap put on that funding so that it will affect even further any additional spaces that might be considered.

We must remember the number of children who are in need of adequate child care because they are being raised by single parents, single mothers and fathers, who must go out and earn a living if they are to not remain on the welfare rolls. One thing leads to the other, if parents do not have adequate day care and subsidized day care, how can they go out and find any kind of employment that will offset the kinds of costs that are associated with having a family? We must help them so that we do not have generations of poor children growing up in a very rich land.

I am going to spend a little more time speaking on the cancellation of CEIP. CEIP is the Canada Exploration Incentive Program. It affects gas and oil as well as mining, but I will be referring in my comments mostly to the mining sector because that is the one with which I am the most familiar.

The Canada Exploration Incentive Program was announced in May, 1988. The program was designed to assist the junior mining and oil and gas sectors in raising equity capital to enable the exploration of oil, gas and mineral reserves in Canada. CEIP provided cash incentive contributions to qualified corporations based on 30 per cent of eligible exploration expenses incurred pursuant to a flow-through share agreement. The 30 per cent incentive rate was to be fixed until December 31, 1990. It was stated that after that date the rate may change, however, a minimum of six months' notice would be given prior to any change.

That is what we were given to believe in December, 1989. Program administration had been designed to ensure prompt payment of incentives, and application processing, inspection and auditing procedures were intended to be as straightforward and efficient as possible.

In the mining sector this was put in to take the place of another program which had been cut back, another program which had really helped greatly in the mining sector. I refer to the Mineral Exploration Depreciation Allowance which had been in place since 1983.

We all recall in the early 1980s the dire straits that the mineral industry was in, especially in northern Ontario. I refer to the Sudbury basin when the price of nickel plummeted well below $2 and there were no profits anywhere. The mines in my area were shut down for 10 months. It was a very difficult time for my area in particular and it was a very difficult time for northern Ontario and all of the mineral industries there.

• (1710)

In 1983 the then Liberal government introduced the Mineral Exploration Depletion Allowance to encourage the investing of moneys in the mining industry. Subsequent to 1983 there was an increase in the amount of funds that were invested in junior mining firms.

In the mining sector, when the minerals are pulled from the ground, there are no new ones. They do not grow back. The mining industry is responsible for, I believe, 25 per cent of Canada's exports. That amount of exports generates a great deal of tax dollars.

When a mine runs out of a mineral, the only way of replacing an empty mine is to find a new deposit. Therefore, it is absolutely essential that we continue to explore and find new sites so that a very viable, very good mining industry which we have developed in Canada can continue to flourish.

Therefore, in 1983 the government decided to try to encourage it because it was in dire need. In 1987, as much as $1.4 billion or $1.5 billion was being invested in exploration and development of new mines across the country. Of course, that was too good and we could not let it continue so we cut it off and we brought in another program and again we promised that we would not cut that one back and then we replaced it overnight by CEIP and now again we have been told that there would be no changes in this program until December 31, 1990 and whoops, in February, 1990, it has gone. Okay, we will honour any contracts that have already been entered into, but nothing else happens.

Perhaps the government does not want to give grants to mining companies and especially to junior mining companies. The mining exploration business is a very risky one. If interest rates are very high, as they are right now, the investors would be much happier to just put their money in the bank and collect interest and forget about investing in very risky businesses.

As a result, and we see it now, I believe that in 1989 the actual amount of moneys invested in exploration and development was about $600 million. It is projected by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources that in 1991 there will be only about $430 million invested in the exploration and development of new mines. That will be spent by the major mining companies that of course always continue to try to keep their stock of mines going.

But it is in effect the junior mining companies who really take the risks, and it is especially important that there be some kind of mechanism put into place to entice the investors to place their money with these junior mining companies in order that we may find new sites and develop new mines, so that when a mine closes in one area, that there is another one somewhere, hopefully fairly close to the one that closed, that can use that expertise and that well trained labour force that is in place in the one area.

I would refer in this case to the miners from Elliot Lake. We have there a fine, well trained workforce and they are losing their jobs. There are upwards of 2,000 people in Elliot Lake who will be losing their jobs shortly, if they have not already. We must have other mines that are developed so these people can continue earning their living. They do not want to be on unemployment insurance. They do not want to be on social assistance, any more than the fishermen of Newfoundland wish to be on social assistance or on unemployment insurance.

It is absolutely essential that this government try in some way. As the Liberal party, we are pushing for an enhanced flow-through share mechanism. If it is not an up-front grant, such as CEIP was, then let us go back to some kind of a fair tax incentive, so that the public will be investing in mines, not the government but the public. When new mines are generated, become operational and their profits start to roll in, then the government will reap the benefits. The government, by being very short-sighted and saving a few dollars now, will find that, down the line, there will be nothing left in this mining industry. Where will the government be then without those tax savings?

I am very concerned about the cancellation of these programs because these programs especially affect the regions of the country.

In conclusion, in every case the government has tried either to pass the buck on to other levels of government or to make cuts in areas which are not easily viable. Every government must make tough spending decisions. Municipal governments know this better than anyone else. I want the federal government to be open and honest and make those tough decisions, but not through a sham, such as this, and not on the backs of the poor and the regions of the country.

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Madam Speaker, I wish to make a comment and ask a question of the hon. member who has just given a rather insightful analysis of some of the problems of the budget.

An hon. member: Insightful?

Mr. Volpe: I see that some of my colleagues from southwestern Ontario also agree with me, at least I can judge that by their interventions. They were probably most impressed by the member's understanding of flow-through shares and the need for the government to become involved in an economic strategy, an industrial strategy, and a mining strategy. I know that they will probably be more than willing to present those kinds of views within their caucus. At least, I take that, from their interventions and my mentioning that, to be a sign of good faith and an applause for the member who has been so forthright and so incisive in her understanding of the budget. I compliment them on that.

There are two points that I wanted to address to my hon. colleague and they refer to the EPF financing, especially with respect to the implications for post-secondary education, hospitalization and medical facilities available to Canadians throughout Canada.

I know that the hon. member focused on the negative implications for British Columbia, Alberta, and Ontario. These are the three provinces which have been targeted by the government for cuts. I want to draw to her attention two points and perhaps she could comment. I am asking for only a very brief response, if possible.

Over the course of the last couple of days, a Noble Prize winner, a Canadian—I dare say almost a former Canadian—Mr. Polanyi, indicated that research and development in Canada is at an abysmal level. I think he indicated that he was ashamed even to refer to the kinds of programs that emanated from Canada as being thought of as participating in research and development.

Given our Constitution and the federal government's inability, constitutionally speaking, to be involved in the education of all Canadians on one level, except at the post-secondary level, and given that the federal government can use post-secondary education as a great leveller and as a great stimulus for research and development and for providing a national scope, a vision of where funds would be used in order to develop not only an erudite society, not only a well prepared society, but also to stimulate research and development that can be applied to the new technological necessities of tomorrow, and given as well that the government has chosen not to act on what is in its purview under the Constitution to do, and instead has decided to withdraw funds from the three provinces that appear to be in a position of leadership by virtue of the health of their economies, can my colleague indicate to us if she has been given an indication by the government or the Minister of Finance, if there is a government alternative that will replace the funds that the Minister of Finance will no longer put at the disposal of Canadians who want to establish a standard for all Canadians in technology, research and post-secondary education?

• (1720)

Is there a government alternative to cutting back those funds from those provinces? Is there, in fact, something the government is proposing to give to the other seven provinces that do not share those kinds of possibilities.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member for Sudbury will be happy to know that she still has a few minutes to answer.

Mrs. Marleau: Madam Speaker, I must be very honest and cut all the sham. I must answer no to my colleague. There is no other plan by the government.

I am always surprised at the kind of rhetoric that the government is capable of putting forth. At a Conservative general meeting on August 25, 1989, the hon. Prime Minister stated, in a nice deep voice: "This government will carry its fair share of the burden to ensure that all young Canadians receive a first-class education as they confront a world-class challenge". It is a simple case of saying one thing and doing another, as the government has consistently done over the five years that it has been in power.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, first, I want to compliment the hon. member on her address.

I have been listening to many people in my riding and other ridings across Canada in the last few months. What I am hearing from many people, especially labour, is that there is a tremendous sense of hopelessness and the morale is bad.

In order to develop a competitive mood, a sense of national productivity or global competitiveness, the first thing we must have is a happy, productive workforce. If, suddenly, in the middle of a period when morale is bad in our labour force, the government comes along and adds a further complication by giving us a complicated and unnecessary goods and services tax, the GST, is this further disincentive and pressure not going to put further stress on our health care systems and municipal services?

Would the government would be further ahead in trying to increase its revenue base and productivity if, instead of looking at the need for taxes in a technocratic way, it went back to the root of the problem and realized that no matter how much tax we were given, before we are really going get productivity—which ultimately will generate the revenue and even take pressure off our social services and health care? Should the government go right back to the drawing-board and start rebuilding the morale of the country, especially on the shop floor?

Mrs. Marleau: Madam Speaker, I agree, absolutely and completely. It is not only on the shop floor, but everywhere across the country.

While I was home during the last ten days on the Easter break, I had a number of phone calls. One person, in particular, said to me: "What can we do to bring back the feeling of wellness that we used to have in being Canadians and in our businesses?" This particular person expressed a fear that things appeared bad and people felt bad, so things got worse and that, if somehow the government could instil confidence in the Canadian people, then there would be a change in the trend.

When people feel better about themselves, they do better things. You invest a little money and you get a lot more in return. I am talking about this with the mining aspect of the budget in mind. If there are no grants—I know the government does not like to have grants of any kind if it can help it—then have an enticement for the public to use their money to invest in all kinds of businesses which will make our economy strong and bring back the kind of hope and joy to our economy and our people across Canada in all regions of the country.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I am distressed at the rhetoric that we hear from the other side.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: We have a problem of a great national debt and we have a problem that the federal government for a long period of time has been financing what are provincial responsibilities. Post-secondary education is a provincial responsibility. Social assistance is a provincial responsibility. Health care is a provincial responsibility. Medicare is a provincial responsibility.

So, here we are with a federal government running a massive deficit and criticism all over the place by those on the other side. When something is done to redress that imbalance by asking those provinces running in surplus to pay for the programs that they ought to pay for anyway, we hear crying, weeping, and wailing. Now what kind of nonsense is that?

Mr. Mills: We were constructive. We are listening to the people.

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend says he is constructive. This week the province of British Columbia produced a balanced budget, indeed a budget forecasting a surplus. The province of British Columbia is well able to look after those in that province in distress who need social assistance, day care, and all of the things that our people in urban societies require. That province is running a surplus and we hear cries that the Canada Assistance Plan for the province of British Columbia is being cut to a growth rate of only 5 per cent, approximately the inflationary rate. Surely to goodness, the province of British Columbia, in its financial position, can look after its own.

The same can be said for the province of Ontario which last year ran a surplus. Tomorrow, Mr. Nixon comes forth with his budget. I will bet it is a surplus budget. I will bet, notwithstanding the changes proposed in this bill, that the provincial economies, the provincial tax measures, and the burgeoning growth of revenues from those provinces, are more than sufficient to handle the problems of those provinces.

Mr. Gardiner: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I could not let the hon. member get by without correcting him on one point. He makes reference to the province of British Columbia and its recent budget—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member should know that this is a point that he may want to raise in debate at a later time, but this is not a point of order. The hon. member for Mississauga South.

• (1730)

Mr. Blenkarn: Never mind, Madam Speaker, he never makes sense anyway.

We have a situation where provinces are strong, where provinces have ample revenue. Indeed, we have a situation where the treasurer of the province of Alberta boasts that he is so rich that he does not even need to have a provincial sales tax. We have these people crying on behalf of the wealthy. With the condition of the economy of this country, surely it is an obligation of all of us to say to those governments that can raise the money:

"Raise the money and pay your own bills. Don't be looking for hand-outs from the federal government."

Surely that ought to be the aegis of how we operate the finances of this country in the 1990s. We cannot go back to old history and say: "At one time the federal government had the wherewithal to make massive transfers." Therefore, ever and ever and ever it should make these massive transfers. That cannot be the case. Surely there is a time when some sense of fiscal responsibility ought to be heard. These people claim they want to be government. The Liberal party claims it has the whim of public opinion behind it, that it has massive public support.

If they are going to be government, how do they propose to pay the bills? Do they propose to invent new trees behind Parliament Hill where they can pluck the $100 bills. Or, do they propose to rearrange the financing of the country in a more sensible fashion, the kind of rearranging set out in Bill C-69.

We have, unfortunately, the haves and the have nots this country, but surely the haves can carry their own freight. Surely a reasonable way of doing things is the kind of suggestions made by the Minister of Finance in his budget as set out in this bill. To say for one moment that welfare moms are not going to be looked after in rich provinces is to say that the treasurers and health officials of rich provinces are mean spirited, because the very fact of the act itself is a cost sharing act except the federal government has said: "Look, for the time being, we can't cover our full cost share without limit. We are limiting our cost share to 5 per cent. If you want to go further, go further."

Wealthy provinces ought to go a lot further because that is their responsibility. They have a balanced budget. They are, in many cases, in surplus or could easily be in surplus.

In my province, a Liberal government has increased the public service by 9,000 persons in four and a half years. Isn't that awful? Isn't that something else again? They clearly are well off. They are floating in public servants. They could tighten their belts. They could go a lot further on behalf of welfare moms. To blame the federal government because we put a cap on the CAP even though they have a balanced budget is pretty meanspirited, and certainly not within the concepts of the kind of Canada we ought to be building.

Make no mistake about it. No one on this side of the House likes to see cut-backs in social expenditures, but members on this side of the House have to be responsible. It is easy to call for more and more and more. Let's see some responsibility. Let's see some sense of leadership. Let's see if they can justify their role in the poll, or is it only because we are unpopular? Put your vote and park it with them, because it must be just a park. They do not show any leadership and they do not have any policies. This bill is a sensible bill because it comes to grips with the EPF, the CAP, the growth of expenditures and the transfers made from the federal government to the provinces.

Is it conceivably fair that the federal government should limit the growth of its departments to less than 3.5 per cent, year after year, back to back, from 1984 forward and these transfer programs increase at 6 per cent to 7 per cent per annum? Is it fair that those transfer payments should exceed the growth of federal departments year after year just because of an old agreement? That is how we got in the hole in the first place. We have to get this country out of the hole. We have to get this country standing on its own feet again. We have to get this country so it can pay its bills. We cannot pay our bills by encouraging profligacy in the hands of the provinces. It is time that the opposition understood that and opposition speakers spoke sensibly, asked themselves in their own conscience where the money is supposed to come from, paid attention to the deficit and did not say more, more, more, Ma'am, ever more, even though their plates are full.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Mississauga South is someone for whom I have a lot of respect.

I want to tell you that today he was quoting selectively. We only have two provinces in this country that have a balanced budget. I am not here today to defend the provinces. I tend to think that in some respects the provinces should be carrying more of the burden in this country.

What we on this side of the House are trying to say is that if you have some productivity in the country and all of a sudden it will produce some goods and services that will cost a lot less, that in turn will promote foreign investment and bring interest rates down which will affect everything from mortgage payments to the cost of servicing the national debt. When you ask what we over here will do to pay the bills, one thing we will do is listen to people because this government is not listening to what people are saying. You ask how we are going to get out of the hole. The only way we will get out of the hole is to galvanize people in the country. They must pull their weight and then some. Because this government does not listen, it does not get the kind of productivity that is needed to get out of the hole.

My question to the member is this. He knows the importance of global productivity. This was a man who during the last election kept his trust with the people. He was the only member on that side of the House who admitted that the GST was going to add an extra $10 billion on to consumers. That trust was respected by the people of Canada at that time. When he knows what the GST is doing to the morale of this country, will he not agree that by increasing the morale we get productivity, lower interest rates and that is the way to attack the deficit in every part of the country.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, when you write books on tax reform and you mix tax reform with Bill C-69 and then you confuse the GST with tax reform, you begin to wonder where the hon. member comes from. But let us deal with—

• (1740)

Mr. Mills: Drop the smugness.

Mr. Blenkarn: The goods and services tax is a tax provision that changes our consumption taxes and increases the productivity of the country by 1.4 per cent on average, increases the gross domestic product by $10 billion, increases the employment in the country by 60,000 a year—

Mr. Mills: It's a disincentive.

Mr. Blenkarn: —and so it is the kind of thing he ought to be advocating. But let us get on to this bill.

Here is a situation where the EPF has been growing by 6.3 per cent on average since 1984-85. While other government expenditures have been kept below inflation, indeed a full 1 to 1.5 percentage points below inflation, the EPF has been growing at 1.5 times inflation. What we have is a curtailment on the EPF transfers for two years to those provinces that can well afford to take the hit. What we have on the CAP is a restriction to those provinces—not to 3.5 per cent as federal departments are restricted, but to 5 per cent, instead of a CAP growth of an annual 6.7 per cent for a period of time.

Surely to goodness that is what he ought to be addressing. What he ought to be addressing is the fact—

Mr. Mills: You should be addressing the morale of this country.

Mr. Blenkarn: The morale of this country is right, and the morals of the country, too, the morals of someone who would say: "You are honest; you said there was going to be an increase of $10 billion." There is not. There would have been if we had played with the New Zealand figures and a whole lot of other concepts. But all you do is read headlines. My friend is a headline reader and a headline hunter. Big headlines, big hunter, big nothing on that.

Madam Speaker, the answer is that this bill is important for Canada and the Liberal party ought to stand up for it.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, I have two questions for my friend from Mississauga South. The first, he made reference in his speech about—

An hon. member: So you're friends now!

Mr. Gardiner: The member wonders whether I should use the word "friend". My colleague from Mississauga South commented in his speech about the provinces being wealthy and therefore it should not be a big problem with the bill we are currently debating. He mentioned the surplus in British Columbia and it is obvious he has done some research on this. In fact he would know by looking at the budget, as I am sure he has done, that this so-called balanced budget was created from a fund called the Budget Stabilization Fund.

In light of his comment that the province has a surplus, and in light of the Social Credit BS Fund, my first question is can he explain how the BS Fund in British Columbia operates. Second, he asked about the opposition being responsible. I am wondering if along that line he would then support my private member's bill that would call on the federal government to ensure that when these transfer payments to the provinces are made for health and post-secondary education. For this accountability and responsibility that the member talks about so often, would he support a bill that would impose upon the federal government an obligation to ensure that those funds are spent in those areas?

The first question asks for an explanation of the Budget Stabilization Fund in British Columbia; the second one, is he prepared to be responsible as he says he is?

Mr. Blenkarn: We will deal first with the fund in British Columbia. The government there has had the ability to put money aside and raise surpluses for many years. Indeed, the time has long passed when this measure should have been brought forth. The ability of the province of British Columbia to generate revenue, to pay the costs of its services, is well known.

Whether their surplus comes from stabilization funds, heritage funds or extra money that is put aside because they have taken more in taxes in the past than they needed to, indicates that they have the ability to pay their bills and look after them well.

Let us deal with the other issue. The other issue is EPF and whether it ought to be designated. My friend may not know it but there is an arrangement in the portion of the Established Programs Financing dealing with post-secondary education requiring an accounting that the money in that transfer go to post-secondary education. Unfortunately, the EPF is so structured that every province has been able to show that the cash portion of the EPF represents more cash than they pay to post-secondary education.

The EPF is a complicated program. It involves cash, tax transfers and the understanding of what tax points are worth. The consequence is that only part of the transfer is cash. In every provincial case with respect to education, the actual provincial expenditure for education exceeds the cash portion of the EPF transfer allocated to education.

Having said that, that is what managed to be accomplished in the 1982 and 1984 Parliament, and nothing much more than that. I wish my friend well but the whole concept of the Established Programs Financing Act will have to be rewritten, probably later in this Parliament.

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Madam Speaker, it is with great concern that I rise today to speak on Bill C-69.

My concern is that this government is once again introducing legislation which will impose further burdens on the sectors of our society which are least able to cope.

Bill C-69, an act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, will actually amend four existing programs: the Canada Canadian Assistance Plan, CAP; the Established Programs Funding, EPF; The Canadian Explorations Incentive Program, CEIP; and the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act.

Bill C-69 is part of the "Magic Michael Show". The Minister of Finance is going to make the deficit disappear.

Unfortunately, as in any magic show, nothing really disappears. It seems to, but then it reappears again. This is the real story of Bill C-69. It is an exercise in camouflage. The federal government transfers program responsibilities to the provinces. Presto! The federal debt load is reduced. The sad reality is that the financial burdens have simply been transferred to the provinces. Bill C-69 does not solve any problems; it just reassigns the responsibility.

The bottom line is that the ultimate burden rests with Canadian taxpayers. The problem here is that the system is not equitable. Some taxpayers, especially those in disadvantaged areas of this country, have to carry a disproportionate share of the load.

I think all Canadians have agreed that the federal deficit is a problem. However, I do not think that there is any consensus that the way to resolve it is to simply shift the burden to the provinces.

In his budget speech, the Minister of Finance said that he will reduce the deficit, and then he laid out a schedule complete with dates and amounts.

I believe he projected an interest rate of 11 per cent. That is another story and I will come back to it a little later.

The statement in the budget, however, that really strained credulity was: "There will be no new taxes in this budget". No new taxes.

William Shakespeare once said:

> What's in a name? That which we call a rose By any other name would smell as sweet.

A tax by any other name is still a tax, and it still hurts.

• (1750)

A tax increase is a tax increase no matter what you choose to call it. No sleight-of-hand, no amount of chicanery can change that. Canadians know what a tax increase is. After all, they have seen over 30 of them since this government came to power a little over five years ago.

The loss of revenue for the provinces due to Bill C-69 will total $1 billion in this fiscal year, $1.8 billion in 1991-92, and $8.4 billion over the next five years. This is a significant loss of revenue for the provinces no matter how you rationalize it. What options are left to the provinces? The number one option would be to increase their borrowing to offset the losses in transfer payments in order to maintain the current programs. The second option is to raise taxes, thereby offsetting the previously mentioned federal cut-backs. They could reduce programs so that they would not have use either option one or two, or they could combine the above in such a manner as to reduce the pain to a minimum.

Of the four specific areas mentioned in Bill C-69, the most serious blow to provincial budgets is the two-year freeze on EPF funding. Under the EPF, the federal government provides equal per capita financial assistance to all provinces through the transfer of tax points and cash payouts. This transfer was designed to assist provinces in carrying out their responsibilities with regard to health care and post-secondary education.

Since the freeze on EPF transfers affects primarily health care and post-secondary education, we are faced with three serious questions. Will the provinces be forced to make hospitals, schools and universities absorb the federal cuts? Will the sick and disabled have to suffer for this government's mismanagement of the economy? Third, will students be burdened by increased tuition fees?

Education is supposed to be high on the government's priority list. It is supposed to be the base on which we build our competence which will allow us to participate in the developing global marketplace. The government pays lip service on this on the one hand and on the other adopts a policy which runs directly opposite.

Health and education are vital services. These are the services that will suffer most as a result of the implementation of Bill C-69. This is the third time since 1986 that the Conservatives have decreased contributions to financing for post-secondary education and health care. Once again the government is ignoring the concerns of Canadians. Recent polls show that 88 per cent of Canadians oppose curbing federal-provincial transfers for health care and higher education.

It seems clear that the implementation of Bill C-69 will affect some provinces more than others. By making the maximum 5 per cent annual growth of CAP contributions apply only to the so-called richer provinces of Ontario, Alberta and B.C., the government is probably trying to give the impression that it is helping the lower-income provinces and penalizing the wealthier provinces, thus effecting a more equitable distribution of the national wealth. But this is not so.

It is a false and misleading impression. First, it is the EPF, not the CAP, which constitutes the largest transfer program to provinces. In the case of the Atlantic region the greatest proportion of federal support is now actually in the form of equalization payments. For example, P.E.I. received a total of $298 million in federal transfers during the year 1988-89-90. Of the $298 million, only $23 million was contributed under the CAP program whereas $98 million was transferred under the EPF and the remaining $195 million was in the form of equalization payments.

I will return to a discussion of equalization payments a little later. As far as Bill C-69 is concerned, P.E.I. as well as the other Atlantic provinces, will be most affected by the cuts in the EPF. The fact that these provinces are exempted from the amendments to the CAP is important, but not nearly as important as the severity of the EPF cuts. Second, we must remember that some provinces have traditionally had to rely more heavily on federal transfer payments than have other provinces. According to a study compiled by the Toronto-Dominion Bank, federal government payments represent a much higher percentage of total revenue for the Atlantic provinces than they do for Ontario.

For example in the fiscal year 1989-90, federal transfer payments accounted for 46.7 per cent of total provincial revenues in P.E.I., but only 13.6 per cent in Ontario. In fact, P.E.I. relies the most heavily on federal transfer payments, followed by Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

I want to come back to the possible provincial alternatives if Bill C-69 is implemented.

On of these options is to reduce spending by an amount equal to the federal cutback.

Since this money is designated for health services and post-secondary education, the option is almost beyond consideration. Even at its present level of funding, the health system in most provinces is not meeting the needs of the population. Hospital beds are being closed and hospital staff is being laid off in almost every province. If provinces reduce services or if they resort to user fees—which I believe to be illegal—we will be in danger of looking at two systems of health care. Our medicare system, of which we are justifiably proud, will break down. We will then be looking at one system for the rich and another for the poor. That is not a very appealing alternative.

Post-secondary education is the life blood of our future. We have constantly striven in this country to provide a system whereby every resident has the opportunity to be what he or she wants to be. Tuition fees are already rising. There have been street demonstrations in Quebec recently, protesting tuition increases in that province. Loan and bursary programs are already inadequate. Less well-to-do students are having a very difficult time getting a university education. This is a break with a Liberal legacy that we left to this country.

It is virtually inconceivable that cuts can be made in these two crucially important services. The provinces are then left to choose between increasing their deficits or raising taxes.

If they opt for the former, then we are talking simply of debt transfer. The federal government reduces its deficit; the provinces increase theirs. As I have indicated earlier, have-not provinces will bear a disproportionate burden when such transfers occur.

Moreover, there is a danger that if the provinces do increase their borrowing in response to transfer cuts the impact of the federal deficit cut might be lost. Interest rates and investor confidence might not respond in a positive fashion.

Clement Gignac, senior economist at the National Bank of Canada, warns us that an increase in provincial deficits might make a decline in interest rates less likely. This in turn could have a negative impact on Canada's credit rating. Provinces, corporations and municipalities whose ratings are linked to that of Canada's would, therefore, also be affected. Mr. Gignac's warning should not be taken lightly.

The only other option for the provinces is to raise taxes. The federal government has, in essence, said: "If you want the programs, you raise the taxes." While this shallow approach has an appeal to some people, the real problem is that this government has been hammering Canadians, particularly middle income Canadians, with tax increases for the past five years. There have been 32 increases, I believe, over the past five years.

But the worst is still to come. The infamous GST, the biggest tax grab in Canadian history, the most unpopular tax in Canadian history, is scheduled to come into effect in 1991. The feds have gone to the tax well so often there is nothing left. Canadians have been bled dry by the most tax-obsessed government that we have seen in the 123 years of our history.

The Canada Assistance Plan provides for a 50-50 cost share of social services and social assistance programs. This plan has been capped at a 5 per cent increase for the so-called wealthy provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario.

However, these provinces have over half the population of the country. Included in these population figures are hundreds of thousands of poor people. Whether they be the working poor, the seasonally unemployed or welfare recipients, they need assistance. Being poor in Toronto, Edmonton or Vancouver is just as bad as being poor in Halifax, Summerside or Tignish. They deserve the same access to assistance. They have a right to the same degree of help no matter where they live in this country.

The member from Mission—Coquitlam made a very eloquent statement on the situation in British Columbia, and I am sure the scenario could be developed for the other two provinces.

• (1800)

One program change which has attracted very little public attention is the Public Utilities Income Transfer Act. This program provides for the transfer to the provinces of 95 per cent of the eligible federal corporate income tax paid by investor-owned electric and gas utilities. To the best of my knowledge, such investment on utilities exists only in Alberta and Prince Edward Island. In all other provinces utilities such as Ontario Hydro are Crown corporations. The province of Prince Edward Island stands to lose $300,000 per year because of amendments to this program. Madam Speaker, $300,000 may not seem to be a very large amount of money to some people or to some provinces. But to a small province like P.E.I., $300,000 is a significant amount and one which they can ill-afford to lose especially in view of the other transfer reductions that have been imposed.

Utility costs in Prince Edward Island are astronomical in comparison to those in Alberta or Ontario or Quebec. We have no oil or gas resources, we have no capacity to produce hydroelectric power. It seems grossly unfair that P.E.I. should be further targeted for hardship by cutting back on this particular income tax transfer program.

Prince Edward Island will lose $4.4 million in fiscal year 1991 because of the EPF reductions. In 1991-92 this reduction will increase to $8.5 million. To each of these totals must be added the $300,000 left in the income tax transfer program for utilities. This means that just from these two budget areas Prince Edward Island will lose almost $5 million this year and almost $9 million next year. However, this is only part of the story. The unkindest cut of all came on the last day of the fiscal year 1989-90. Unbeknownst to P.E.I. Department of Finance officials, a capping provision which had been built into the equalization formula in 1982 came into play.

On March 30, 1990, almost two weeks after bringing in a provincial budget based on expected equalization payments, the Minister of Finance was informed that federal equalization payments for the province would be cut by $18.3 million over the next two years but a whopping $13.6 million of that $18 million of that would be for the current year, a year for which the budget had already been prepared and had already been brought in to the House. This is the great example of the government snubbing their nose at the expense of the smallest province in Canada.

The reduction in equalization payments, EPF payments and PUITTA payments will cost Prince Edward Island almost $20 million this year and again next year. According to the Minister of Finance a good part of this year's shortfall will have to borrowed. That portion of the federal deficit has simply been transferred to the Government of Prince Edward Island. The general situation in P.E.I. can be extended throughout most of Atlantic Canada.

Equalization payments now exceed EPF as the largest form of federal support in the region. The cut-backs and transfers for the area are brutal. The federal government calls our program a frontal attack on the deficit. Analysts are much more cynical. They call it "throwing down the gauntlet to the provinces" or "transferring the tax heat." One of the greatest problems we face in the country today is the Canadian public's lack of confidence in this government. There is, of course, good reason for this lack of confidence. This government came to power in 1984 with promises to better manage the economy and to reduce the deficit. In a five year period of economic growth and prosperity they manage to double the deficit.

Forecasts in last year's budget have been proven to have come from fantasy land. This year's budget has been based on what have been charitably described as highly questionable assumptions. Two months after its introduction, the forecast on interest rates has been proven to be totally unrealistic. Instead of being in the 11 per cent area they have now risen to 14.75 per cent, the highest since the recession in the early 1980s.

The Prime Minister forecasts a decline in interest rates but the Governor of the Bank of Canada says we have to maintain high interest rates to fight inflation. Now we have both high interest rates and increasing inflation. The Conference Board of Canada predicts that we will have high interest rates for at least another two years. The whole situation will be compounded by the introduction of the goods and services tax.

This new tax will drive the inflation rate up to 6.3 per cent from the federal level of 5.4 per cent. Labour unions are now bargaining for cost of living clauses in their new collective agreements. As workers try to protect themselves from the effects of the GST, the inflation rate could rise even higher in response.

Unemployment is expected to rise to 8.2 per cent next year, up from 7.9 per cent for this year. Economic growth is predicted to slow to 1.5 per cent from 1.9 per cent this year.

At the Bank of Nova Scotia in Summerside this morning, personal loans of up to $10,000 cost 17 per cent. Mortgages of one, three or five years now cost 14.75 per cent.

All of this points in one direction—to a recession.

I want to close with a few words on the cumulative effects of the budget and government policy in general as it applies to Prince Edward Island.

The province realizes that it has to do its share and it has indicated time and again its willingness to do so. But as the federal government introduces each individual piece of legislation, it uses the same argument—everyone has to do their share.

I contend some people and some provinces are doing more than their share. Bill C-69 cuts millions of dollars of revenue from Prince Edward Island. It reduces equalization payments and cuts millions more. Changes in UI legislation will take further millions out of the economy. Closure of CFB Summerside takes away $50 million from the economy of that town.

By the way, Madam Speaker, in a few days we will be observing the first anniversary of the announcement of the closure of CFB Summerside, and we are still anxiously awaiting the fulfilment of the promise that the federal government has made to have a comparable federal offset for the area.

There have been cuts and cancellations of ERDAs, particularly in the tourism area.

Then, there are what we could call, I suppose, indirect financial losses. These are the abandonment of the railroad, the cancellation of VIA, cuts to CN Marine subsidies, and cuts to small craft harbour budget.

All of these either reduce our revenues or increase our cost of doing business.

It is the cumulative effect of these measures that has laid such a heavy burden on the shoulders of the people of Prince Edward Island and has turned its residents so bitterly against this government.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Madam Speaker, it is with a certain amount of sadness that I listen to my colleague from Egmont speak of the disastrous effect that this bill is going to have on his province.

I am from an island province too, and I would like to zero in on one particular aspect of what my colleague from Egmont had to say. In order to do this I have to quote from a comment made by the present Minister of Finance. In 1982 he said:

> Cuts to EPF could have disastrous effects on the universities and on the colleagues, on the hospital funding, and on the operation of the hospitals.

I would like to zero in on this. Let us not make hospitals, universities, and colleges a battleground between the federal government and the provincial governments. Let us solve those problems—not on the backs of the hospitals and universities, let us solve the problems outside of that arena.

Of the $7.364 billion that this will mean to the provinces in the next five years, I am sure the House will find it interesting to recall that $5.3 billion of that is for health care, and $2.1 billion is for post-secondary education.

My concern is with health care. Coming from the province of Newfoundland, like Prince Edward Island, we do not have a large budget. Our concern with health care is very genuine. Not only do we not have the money to pay for it—despite what the hon. member from Mississauga South said about half an hour ago—we have an aging population. Although I do not have the statistics I am very much aware that the age of the population of Newfoundland per capita is generally older than it is for the rest of Canada. As it is, it is over 11 per cent now in this country, and I do not have to tell you, Madam Speaker, that our population is aging in a general sense and we are looking at close to 20 per cent just beyond the year 2000. So we have little money and we have an aging population. The other thing that concerns me is the rising cost of the high technology equipment in hospitals.

• (1810)

In support of what the member had to say I would ask for his comments on it as well. In the past three weekends I have been associated with two of the three major hospitals in my riding. One is the Cross Memorial Hospital in Clarenville, the distribution centre of that part of the riding. It is a secondary care hospital which serves 35,000 people. The other hospital is the Carbonear Hospital which, although it is in the biggest town in my riding, basically serves the whole of one of the three peninsulas of about 45,000 people. Both these hospitals have had to organize themselves into memorial trust foundations so that they can actually go out and raise money.

In the case of the Cross Memorial Hospital it costs over $1 million just to keep up with the equipment needed to provide the kind of care people in my riding, and I am sure in rural areas, deserve and need and certainly should be used to without having to do these things. That is certainly one of my concerns.

I would like to ask my hon. colleague from Egmont if that particular experience has been witnessed by him and his constituents as well?

Mr. McGuire: Madam Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for the question.

The result of the transfer payment cuts to Prince Edward Island, is the same as in Newfoundland. We only have one university, a community college, two major hospitals and a number of smaller hospitals. As my colleague stated a lot of the care in these hospitals is extended care because of the aging population.

With the bad news that the provincial government received at the end of the fiscal year, we are going to lose $13.6 million which was supposed to go to education and hospitals is no longer there. They were counting on it and all of a sudden, poof, it was gone. They are now forced to borrow to maintain the level of services of last year.

The other point is that as far as our universities are concerned, we are coming into a world where everyone tells us that we have to compete on a global basis. The only way to compete on a global basis is to have a population trained and prepared to work in a global atmosphere. At the same time we are making it more difficult for our students to prepare themselves in order to enter into the global marketplace and help Canada take its place there.

What the government is doing is actually counter-productive. The government is telling us what we have to do but it is making it as difficult as possible to prevent us from doing so.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, I also have a question for the member for Egmont. I wonder if he would comment on the three cuts to the transfers to provinces made by the former Liberal government when it was in power. You will remember that the end of block funding in 1977 constituted a reduction in federal funding to the provinces and the removal of the revenue guarantee in 1982 did something like take $6 billion over five years out of the province's funding from the federal government. You will remember, too, the six and five restraints in 1983 which took almost half a billion dollars away from the provinces for post-secondary education.

I wonder if he would like to indicate why when the Liberal government makes cuts to EPF it is acceptable, but when the Conservative government makes cuts in the same area it is not acceptable.

Mr. McGuire: Madam Speaker, it must really be consoling for the New Democratic Party because they have never been in government and the prospects of ever being in government are almost nil—

An hon. member: Hear, hear. Well done!

Mr. McGuire: —with their righteous indignation and picking away at everything.

I want to give an example. In Prince Edward Island when the present provincial government took over from the Conservative government in 1986, it was running a deficit of $30 million a year. It was able to take that $30 million deficit to almost a zero situation, a balanced budget situation.

The point is, it was able to do it, unlike the people across the way, and retain its popularity. The popularity of the present government of Joe Ghiz in Prince Edward Island is running at something like 72 per cent, as compared to 17 per cent for the government across the way.

I would like to address it, rather than the NDP, because it is really not coming from anywhere since it has not been anywhere.

Mr. René Soetens (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I found it rather interesting to hear the comments about how successful Prince Edward Island had been in almost balancing its budget since the Liberal government came into place there. Similarly, that seems to be happening in Ontario.

To go back to Prince Edward Island, my constituents in Ontario continuously ask me: "Where does all this money that we, the taxpayers of Ontario, pay go to?" I would like to ask the member from Prince Edward Island, just how many dollars it got from the federal government last year so that it was able to almost balance its budget, compared to what it got previously? What percentage increase did it get? What percentage of increase in spending did it get? Did it balance its budget because the federal government and the taxpayers of my constituency were sending money its way? Or, did it balance it through frugal control of its expenditures?

I would suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that the way he should answer that is: "We balanced our budget because Ontario sent us all kinds of money, not because we controlled our expenditures." I would ask the hon. member to answer that question.

Mr. McGuire: Madam Speaker, we appreciate every dollar that Ontario sends to Prince Edward Island, because it is well spent and the people there really appreciate it.

I want to ask him: How would he feel if the auto industry in southern Ontario closed down at the same time as CFB Summerside closed down? That devastated our economy.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Madam Speaker, I was distracted by the brilliant intervention in the debate by my friend from the riding of Ontario in the province of Ontario who, when he is not making insightful remarks in this House, is out busily mailing cheques to charity cases like P.E.I. and Newfoundland, if you were to take him seriously.

First, let us get something straight around here.

Mrs. Finestone: You can't expect them to get it straight.

Mr. Simmons: The gentleman from Calgary Southeast feels a speech coming on. Does he want to do it first and make history with his maiden speech and the whole works?

I am saying to his colleague from the riding of Ontario that he does himself, his constituency, his province and the country no justice at all when he gets on about that nonsense about how he is bailing everybody out down in P.E.I., and so on.

We have a thing in this country called Established Program Financing. We have a thing in this country called sharing. We have a thing in this country called a federal system. How much longer it is going to last with the way his crowd are botching it is another question. But we have a system, and we have a number of equal units called provinces, not so many basket cases and then so many provinces who can call the shots because they are paying so many of the bills.

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, why the riding of Ontario and the province of Ontario should be giving blood money to P.E.I. and Newfoundland. I can only talk for Newfoundland, and I suspect my colleague from Egmont can be equally lucid in terms of why it is so in P.E.I. As far as Newfoundland is concerned, in 1949 we paid a price for joining Canada. We are proud Canadians. I and my friend from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception, I believe, are the only two people in the Chamber these days—together with my good friend from Port aux Basques, one of the pages, Corey Crewe, working in the Chamber right now—and my other colleagues from Newfoundland, of course, Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte, Labrador and Gander, Grand Falls. I think we are the only people who frequent the Chamber these days. Do not let me forget my bosom pal from St. John's West and my good friend from St. John's East. In that group, save the page who is too young to have been around in 1949, we are the only people in the Chamber who deliberately chose Canada. Either we, or our parents for us, in a ballot chose Canada so we are here by choice and we are proud to be here.

• (1820)

With that preamble, let us call spades spades. Part of the price we paid in 1949 for joining Canada, to protect the manufacturing sector in Ontario and Quebec, was to sacrifice our fairly vibrant manufacturing sector in a number of areas. Yes, we will take the blood money any day at all and make no apologies for it.

I say to the member from the riding of Ontario that it is a small price to pay for what they did to our manufacturing industry, our fish processing industry, and our salt fish industry in 1948-49. If he wants to debate that issue and brag about the largesse of his pocket-book in mailing a few pittances down to the poor people in the basket case that he wants to call P.E.I., we will set him straight on that any time.

I remind him that in the great riding of Ontario he has a number of constituents who chose Canada and who had the good fortune and good sense to be born in Newfoundland. If he does not know where they are, I will show him a few thousand because he has several thousands. He would do well not to put his foot so far down his throat as he has today ever again. Never again.

Because he insults every Newfoundland-born member in his constituency, every person in P.E.I. and so many other provinces, and insults his colleagues from ridings like Broadview—Greenwood and Burlington.

I want to talk for a moment about Bill C-69, Madam Speaker. It is euphemistically described as an act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures. Does it not bring tears to your lovely eyes? To enable restraint of certain government expenditures. That is what they call it. We had a researcher look at it. Here is what she said. This bill would freeze federal transfer payments. This bill would limit the increase of transfer payments to certain provinces. This bill would eliminate the Canadian Exploration Incentives Program. This bill would freeze public utility income tax transfers over the next couple of years. Let us call spades spades. This has very little to do with restraint as such. It has got to do with parading the old right-wing agenda of the government. In speaking of right-wingers, where is the gentleman from Mississauga South?

An hon. member: He went outside.

Mr. Simmons: You are not allowed to say that in this Chamber. All you can say is that you do not presently see him. I do not see him and I wish I could. I hope he can hear me because I wanted to respond to a couple of things that he raised today.

When I heard him I sent to the library because there is something I never had a chance to find. There is a little passage in holy scripture which comes to mind when I hear that person get up. It is a passage having to do with Pontius Pilate. If ever I saw the Pontius Pilate approach I saw it today. It is the old "Let's wash our hands of all this now. It is somebody else's problem." It is the provinces' problem.

Tell that to the students whom I met two weeks ago in St. John's. There were 3,000 students from the marine institute, from the Cabot Institute and from Memorial University. Tell the many among them who will not be able to go back to university that it is the provinces' fault in the words of the Pontius Pilate from Mississauga South.

An hon. member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: Is the member for Cambridge out of his seat? He is the other person I wanted to talk to about his many thousands of Newfoundland constituents, though his friend from the riding of Ontario has quite a number of them too, as he will be aware.

Madam Speaker, I say to the hon. member for Mississauga South that it is not the provinces' problem, that it is a pathetic whimpering attack on the provinces. I want to know where is the national reconciliation that our boy from Baie Comeau was going to inflict on this country? Everyone was going to be nationally reconciled whether they wanted to be or not.

Now his whipping boy, his hired gun from Mississauga South is telling us it is the big, bad provinces that have created this problem. They are spending like a bunch of drunken sailors on sinful things like post-secondary education. How decrepit and immoral can you get that people in Newfoundland want to send their youngsters to university. How immoral, how terrible. Then the hired gun from Mississauga South, the apologist for the GST, tells us that it is the provinces we have to blame. He comes up with the same script and tends to deliver it with a bit more bravado than most over there. That is because he has more bravado than most over there. That is because he is well practised at bravado. He has done it by insulting Newfoundlanders who he said did not have anything worth while to say on the GST so he would not take the committee there.

He has done it by practising on Albertans who he said needed some grade six teachers to help them out. So he has had a lot of practise in bravado, innuendo and insulting. I am not surprised that he reads the script a bit better than my friend from Hochelaga—Maisonneuve would. He is good at it. I have to say to him without offence that he does not do it with nearly as much bravado because he is a much gentler soul than the man from Mississauga South. That is to the credit of the gentleman from Hochelaga—Maisonneuve.

Here is what the gentleman from Mississauga South says. "How are we going to pay for all those programs?", those big sinful programs that actually send people to university down in the basket cases of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, if you are to take his words for it. How? I will tell him how. For a start the government can stop the nonsense that I am sure you have heard about.

Did you hear that the Prime Minister did not like the cars in Costa Rica too well? Did you hear there were a couple flown down there for him? That is right. The government flew them down. He needed a few just in case one broke down. He would need a back-up car. You cannot have the Prime Minister running around the country on a flat tire. You cannot have the Prime Minister riding around in a foreign limousine. I mean how indecent do you want us to get up here? So, we send down a back-up limousine too. But it forgot one important detail. It forgot the gas. It couldn't move the two cars except by plane, of course. You can always move cars by plane if you own the plane or own the government that has the tax money to pay for the planes. So, it was not difficult. The government got the cars there and got them back. To its credit they never put a mile on the cars. How about that for restraint? That is the ultimate restraint. Bring a car but do not drive it.

An hon. member: We saved the gas.

Mr. Simmons: How are we going to pay for it? I will tell him how we are going to pay for it. We are going to pay for it by not wasting the taxpayers' money for that kind of frivolous expenditure. I know that one frivolous expenditure will not pay for many students to go to university but it is an example. I can tell other examples about the expenditure on 160 mini-vans when the government held the Open Skies Conference. That cost a few thousand bucks to get the luggage back and forth to the airport. I can tell about the cars that went to Halifax. There are a lot of examples like that where the government could save a few shekels here and there and maybe in the process we could get a few youngsters to stay in university with a few more federal government dollars.

The gentlemen from Mississauga South gets very patronizing then. He says "I understand". With his big, big heart, he says "I understand there are have not provinces and there are have provinces". Then he proceeds "Let the rich pay". Let the rich pay. I wish I could say to him "Physician, heal thyself". Let the rich pay. Let us see how the rich individuals have paid, since he might apply to individuals his same credo that he wants us now to apply to the provinces.

• (1830)

Here is how they paid. When this government took office six years ago the people of Canada were paying a certain level of taxation for everything federal, income tax and so on and so forth. I say this to the gentleman from the riding of Cambridge. If one of his constituents earns $35,000 or less today—and I know what the member earns—then that constituent is paying $1,200 more a year today than he was in 1984 in all forms of federal taxes—$1,200 more. On the other hand, if my friend from the riding of Cambridge has a constituent who is earning $100,000 or more, that constituent is actually paying $1,600 less in 1990 than he was in 1984.

If we have a new credo from this government now through its hired gun from Mississauga South that the rich are going to pay—and I know he meant provinces—I hope that out of the kindness of his heart and his well-known dedication to consistency that he will now recommend to the Minister of Finance that maybe the rich people in this country ought to carry their fair share of the load too.

I see the gentleman from Cambridge. I am sure he is going to be in caucus on Wednesday advocating that very point. I have a few more for him if he wants a few ideas.

Mr. Sobeski: The unemployment rate went from 12 per cent to 4 per cent in Cambridge. How do you explain that?

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I have a question before the question, but a good question nonetheless.

How do I explain the fact that the unemployment rate has gone down in the riding of Cambridge? The whole point that we were making a few minutes ago was that if you front-end load your manufacturing sector and pack it all down to southern Ontario something has got to give. That something is called jobs. You have lots of jobs down there.

Mr. Sobeski: And 18,000 people from your province live there.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, nobody has ever said that his riding has a high unemployment rate. That is not the problem at all. The problem is that we are running this government as though there were no extremities to the country, as though there was no need out there in fisheries, in agriculture, or in the Summersides of this world. That is the problem.

I understand what the member is saying because my friends from Newfoundland who live in Cambridge tell me all the time. Cambridge is doing very well, thank you very much. We understand that despite the member Cambridge is doing very well, thank you very much.

Mr. Richardson: It's the same thing in Alberta.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, it is really instructive just to stand here and watch.

Mr. Richardson: For you it is, but for the rest of us it's boring.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: None is so deaf as he who will not hear. It is instructive to watch my friend from Calgary Southeast.

Mr. Richardson: The unemployment rate dropped 5 per cent in Alberta since the Tories came to power.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member may want to rise on debate and make his points later. The hon. member for Burin—St. George's has the floor.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, you give the gentleman the benefit of the doubt, but I think much too generously. He does not want to rise on debate at all, since he might have to put on the record where he stands on this infamous bill. I invite the member for Calgary Southeast to get up and tell us what is good about this bill.

I understand that the unemployment rate is pretty good in that area. That is why no fewer than three of my sisters have gone there. I will have to check and double check before I commit the cardinal sin, but I think some of them have the good fortune to live in his riding. So if he wants to add to his mailing list he should talk to me after the debate. That is why they have been there all those years. It is because the economy is being gutted head on back home. They cannot get the jobs there. They have had to pick up their bags and go elsewhere, to places like Calgary, Cambridge and Fort McMurray in the riding of Athabasca. They have even gone to Mississauga South. Newfoundlanders are brave souls. Some of them have even settled in Mississauga South, the riding of the gentleman who spoke a few minutes ago in the debate.

Madam Speaker, I am sure my time must be just about out. I have a couple of minutes, I see.

I just want to make a very specific point about those cuts. They are not the first cuts.

Since this government came to power, particularly since 1986, this is the third onslaught on post-secondary education costs. This is at a time when the Minister for Science and others are preaching about the need to adapt to the new age. They are preaching about the need for retraining, for more education and for the ability to compete in the high-tech markets of the world.

Yet what is the government doing with post-secondary education? It is almost too shameful to talk about. The government is cutting the guts out of it completely. In 1986, again after that, and now in 1990—three times—the government has made an onslaught on post-secondary education.

If there is a sector that we ought to be looking to, beefing up and giving almost kid-glove treatment to—certainly realistic treatment to—it is the whole area of post-secondary education, universities, community colleges, trade colleges and the like. What is the government doing instead? It is making an onslaught on them.

If there were time I would talk about the Canada Assistance Plan. I would talk about the mining incentives and how they have had an impact for good in Newfoundland and other parts of this country. Unfortunately, my time is just about up.

In conclusion, Bill C-69, like a number of others which have come into this House, should hardly be dignified with a vote of any kind. But if members on the opposite side of the House want to redeem themselves from that infamy which we saw just before Easter when they voted for the GST bill, I invite them to get back on the good side of their constituents. This is the one chance they have. Maybe their constituents will be forgiving. But if these members commit two strikes in a row—GST, plus post-secondary transfer payment decreases—they are asking for real trouble.

Maybe I should use this opportunity before I sit down—in case I do not have a chance later—to say goodbye to them all because they are not going to be here very much longer if they vote for this bill.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, I thought I might ask the same question that I asked of the member for Egmont of the member for Burin—St. George's.

He will remember that in 1977 the Liberal government cut funding to the provinces with the end of block funding. In 1982, with the end of the revenue guarantee program, there was a further cut to the provinces of some $6 billion. In 1983, the six-and-five restraints ended up by reducing contributions to the provinces by almost $.5 billion.

I wonder if the hon. member could indicate why—since the member for Egmont was not prepared to—the cuts are so terrible when the Conservatives make them, but they are not so terrible when the Liberals make them when they are in power.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing for the question. When he put it to my colleague, the hon. member for Egmont—and I knew that he would do a good job of answering it, as he did—I found myself rather enviously saying: "If only I got a question like that". I really did not ask him to ask the question. I have to tell you that, Madam Speaker, to start with. I thank him anyway.

The answer is very simple. The answer, first of all, is that a member from a party, which has never been the government and never will be, would not be able to appreciate that sometimes in a government you do tailor, you do make changes. Sometimes you get a signal from the people that enough is enough.

Is his real question: "What distinguishes the Liberals from the Tories?" The NDPers, the arm-chair socialists—if they had to be real socialists they would be in real trouble—can afford to be socialists because they are getting half-decent salaries. If they ever formed the government, they would find this out. In the meantime, they are getting nervous about their place in the polls.

You will notice, Madam Speaker, what is happening. Every day 85 per cent of the country are out there railing at this government. Yet what are members of the NDP doing? They are wondering who is going to have the mate's chair on the Titanic. They are fighting over Titanic chairs, when they ought to be representing the people in an attack on this government. They are elbowing for room over here because they are worried that we might elbow them out somehow.

I say to him, a man who will never be in government unless he has the good sense to apply for admission to this particular caucus—and we would consider the application because he is a fairly bright fellow—the answer is this. Here is the difference. He is going around telling the country that the Liberals and the Tories are Tweedledum and Tweedledee. When we in 1972 and on other dates began to do things that were not particularly unpopular, we got the message. This crowd does not know how to get the message.

• (1840)

I submit that one of the most fundamental principles of our kind of government, our kind of parliamentary democracy, is, yes, we provide leadership as a government, but you never force leadership down people's throats. You never say to them: "This is medicine. It is nasty but it is going to be good for you". The patient, the country as a whole, must want the medicine.

They said on GST, they said on EPF: "We do not want this medicine". They said it to us in 1977 and 1982 and we heard them. That is the difference between a Liberal and a Tory.

If you want to know the difference between a Tory and an NDPer, one gets into government once in a while, the other one never.

Mr. René Soetens (Ontario): Madam Speaker, the member for Burin—St. George's in Newfoundland made an excellent presentation. Of course, at the start of his comments he suggested that we from Ontario were not interested in sharing our good fortune with the rest of Canada. However, that is really far from reality because we do wish all of Canada to share in some of the prosperity that we have.

In fact, because the government of Brian Mulroney was elected in 1984 we in fact helped to share in the rest of Canada. We sent to many parts of Canada, through a Progressive Conservative government, some really positive things.

For example, in Newfoundland since 1984 we have created 29,000 new jobs. That compares to the 1,000 that were lost while the member who spoke was in office. Unemployment has fallen by 14,000 in that same five-year period. While he was in office prior to 1984 it rose by 25,000. The list goes on.

Newfoundland unemployment has fallen from 23.5 per cent to 16.2 per cent. The member for Cambridge was referred to before. His unemployment rate had dropped 8 per cent, and that is great. We are sorry we only dropped it 7.5 per cent in Newfoundland, but by gosh we are trying. I think that is what we are supposed to be doing.

All the way through things have been fairly positive. The inflation rate in Newfoundland is less than it is in southern Ontario. Retail sales in December 1989 were 63 per cent higher than when we were elected in 1984. Building permits in 1988 were up 72 per cent from 1984.

The member for Burin—St. George's would lead us to believe that things are absolutely destitute in Newfoundland. I accept that there are people who are in very difficult circumstances. We as a government have to do our utmost to help those people where best we can.

But it is not all bad. Manufacturing shipments from Newfoundland were up 14.8 per cent in 1989. Farm income was up 11.9 per cent. Private sector spending in Newfoundland in construction climbed 35.6 per cent. Exports from Newfoundland were up 137 per cent.

We can go on with a tremendous list of very good accomplishments since 1984. All of those numbers are better than the last time the member who just spoke sat in this House prior to 1984. We are going in the right direction.

What the member for Burin—St. George's did not mention—and I will get to my question—is that while he was in office they drove the deficit to $38.5 billion. So far we have taken it down to $28.5 billion, and we want to go a little further.

Does he believe that all people in Canada should share in the challenge of dealing with the deficit, or just those who for his logic come from Ontario?

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I thank the member for Ontario because just as I thought he was going to be completely selective in his quotation of statistics, he half redeemed himself. He was only half selective. He did come so close as to talk about the deficit. He conveniently forgot the public debt. I wonder why.

Let us give him the benefit of the doubt. Let us say that he forgot. For the sake of the House and in the interest of time I will say what he would have said.

He would surely have pointed out that the public debt when the Tories took over in 1984 was of the order of $170 billion.

An hon. member: $160 billion.

Mr. Simmons: I am sorry, $160 billion. I hope the gentleman is listening because he will want to have this for his speech. The Tories took over with a debt of $160 billion, and they have brought it all the way down to $380 billion. Why did he not mention that? Obviously, he forgot.

I have two other quick points in response to what the hon. member had to say. First, when will he and others get the message, whether they are talking Meech Lake, EPF or about anything else concerning the way this country is fabricated and constructed? Either we believe in the equality of every voter in this country, regardless of where he or she lives, or we do not. We are sick and tired—as in stomachy, which is what we say back home—of having it rammed down our throats, just as the hon. member tried to do a minute ago again, that somehow we ought be eternally grateful with the few crumbs coming off the table.

When will the member get the message that we would like to be in a position to help buy the bread to put on the table? We would like to be sitting at the table. We would like to be full partners. Do not give me that patronizing nonsense. What we get in this country, we get as a right. We make no apologies to any man, woman or child in this country for that.

He says things are not destitute in Newfoundland. He ought to come down and visit. If I had time, I would tell him something of the detail of the terrible nightmare that many fishermen in the thousands and many plant workers in the thousands are facing because of the policies of this government. Destitution is not a bad catch-all phrase to describe it. But at another time he and I will talk about that, I am sure.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of the 80 per cent of Canadians who oppose the government's initiative in Bill C-69.

Of all the short-sighted, mean-spirited and counter-productive decisions by this government, of which there have been many of course, this current bill represents the worst. Not only will it cause needless human suffering today, as we experience cutbacks in our health care system, but if the government does not change its approach we will condemn our children to a life of mediocrity and ill-health, effectively reversing gains made by our parents and grandparents in building this country.

Let us be clear about what this Tory government is proposing to do. First, it is withdrawing from health care funding, thereby beginning the end of universal medicare and health insurance programs, thus threatening the future health of our children and the sick.

Second, it is withdrawing from post-secondary education, thereby condemning the next generation to lives of hewers of wood and drawers of water, and ensuring the slow decline of Canada in the ranks of the world's nations.

Just to illustrate the extent of the move away from supporting the provinces, the Library of Parliament's figures show that in the nine years from 1986-87 to 1994-95 this government's actions, including the actions in Bill C-69, will take almost $29 billion from the provinces in terms of health care and post-secondary education funding. These are massive cuts in support from the federal government to Canada's health care and post-secondary education system.

We have seen nurses' strikes. We have seen threatened doctors' strikes. We have seen long waiting lists for elective surgery. We have seen Canadians being turned away from hospitals and indeed dying through lack of care.

Canadians are worried, and justifiably so, by a tax on medicare, with the very real threat of one health care system for the rich and another for the poor.

The same goes for the post-secondary education system. Indeed, one eminent president of one of Canada's best universities recently wrote to me saying that our university system has experienced an outstanding fiscal erosion in the past decade, the magnitude of which is unparalleled in any other Canadian public sector. The situation has become an embarrassment and a concern of monumental proportions.

Our share of the education and training budget for the last few years, according to recent StatsCanada figures, has reduced. Indeed, it is reduced in large measure by comparison to the percentage of Gross National Product. It has been reduced from 1.3 per cent, for example, in 1986-87, to 1.1 per cent in 1988-89. It is continuing to fall.

• (1850)

Total federal government spending, if you exclude the debt charges, rose by 3.6 per cent and 7.6 per cent respectively in 1987-1988 and 1988-1989. By contrast, spending on education rose by only 1.8 per cent and 1.6 per cent, respectively.

Clearly, the federal government's commitment to post-secondary education is reducing by comparison to its commitment to other expenditures in the budget.

Indeed, the increases in education spending are the lowest year over year increases on record, according to the government's own figures from StatsCanada.

In spite of the Prime Minister's rhetoric about social programs being a sacred trust, we have here a major cut to health care funding, Canada's most prized social program. It is little wonder that the Prime Minister's performance rating is only 19 per cent, the lowest of all Prime Ministers since polling started almost 50 years ago.

The Prime Minister has also made commitments about the importance of education and the role of the federal government in ensuring a first-class education system in Canada, and every Canadian's right to a world-class education. Then, immediately afterward, he slashed $10 million from the post-secondary education budget to the provinces over the next nine years.

We have heard a lot, too, about research and development. Indeed, two years ago a committee chaired by the Prime Minister, the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, looked at research financing and recommended that it be doubled. Our scientists and scholars are operating with resources that continue to place them at a severe disadvantage when we compare them to others in the international community. Yet the proposal to double financing over three years has yet to be implemented. In effect, there is no indication that it ever will be.

There is a national interest in post-secondary education and health care funding. That is why the federal government became involved in supporting the provinces in those two areas in the first place. There has been in the past a commitment to ensure that no matter where a person lives, no matter what a person's financial opportunities might be, they be entitled, as all Canadians are, to the same quality of health care and the same quality of post-secondary education.

Yet this government is either deliberately or recklessly saying there is no longer any public interest in ensuring equal accessibility, regardless of financial means or geographic location. The government is saying that there is no longer a need for health care, academic ability and being able to use education as the criteria by which we will choose those who can have access to health care and post-secondary education. What the government is doing is turning its back on years of development toward more equality in Canada.

No longer will a sick person in Atlantic Canada have the same opportunity for health care as a person in a richer province. No longer will a young person in Saskatchewan have the same educational opportunities as someone in a richer province.

As we all know, the bill attacks the poorer provinces, creating greater strains on federalism without apparent care for the consequences. Fully 70 per cent of the cuts proposed in this bill are in terms of health care, post-secondary education and the cap on the Canada Assistance Plan.

That means that this government's decision to deal with the deficit is to ensure that those who are sick, those who are young and in the process of being educated and the very poorest in our society are to bear the burden of attacking the deficit. Eighty per cent of Canadians have told this government not to follow this approach, but of course as with the goods and services tax, unemployment insurance, VIA Rail and so many other things the government has turned a blind eye and deaf ear to Canadians.

This is a strategy which will tear Canada apart. We cannot encourage tension between the regions. We cannot pit Saskatchewan against Atlantic Canada for our resources in order to fund health care and post-secondary education. We cannot make it difficult for those in the poorer regions to experience what other Canadians experience.

What we have seen over the last few months is an increase in intolerance in this country and an increase in tension between the regions as a direct result of the government's actions. Bill C-69 is merely one example of that.

The government's approach is easy to predict. As a result of its general philosophy which is reflected in free trade and the goods and services tax, its approach is that the government should withdraw from the economy and that people should look out for themselves. If this means that those living in less well-off areas do without vital health care and post-secondary education services then, according to this government, so be it.

In some parts of our country, including my own province of Saskatchewan, provinces have very little tax room left to make up for reductions in money from the federal government. The effect is that the quality of programs in those provinces declines while better off provinces, such as Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta, are able to make up the difference through provincial taxes should they decide to do so.

That increase in regional disparity is something which those of us in the New Democratic Party not only criticize and oppose but know that most Canadians oppose it also.

In addition, we also oppose another thrust of what lies behind the government's actions under Bill C-69. That is with regard to privatization. There are many examples of supporters of the government, including the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and The Globe and Mail who argue for increased privatization both in the health care system and in the post-secondary education system. As for universities and colleges, there are something over 50 universities and colleges at the present time attempting to raise more than $1 billion in revenues to try to make up for some of the shortfalls from both federal and provincial governments.

The withdrawal of the federal government from educational funding is forcing both the gradual privatization of education with concomitant reductions in access and higher tuition fees across the country.

Madam Speaker, let me indicate two examples of the calls for privatization just to show that I am not being an alarmist but am indicating that there are many who are calling for this and that the government is responding. The National Citizens Coalition, for example, has argued that the government's monopoly of health care has resulted in inefficiency, cut-backs in services, medical rationing and that it has increased costs astronomically. According to it Canada's health care system needs a dose of competition. It also argues that the Canada health care system would benefit if the government contracted out the management of public hospitals. That is not what most Canadians want.

The nurses also have indicated that the pressure is growing on our medicare system. Indeed, they have argued that medicare is in trouble and that Canadians had better watch out if they want to have the sort of public health care system that we have grown accustomed to in Canada. Of course the federal government's actions under Bill C-69 and related actions in the past have contributed and caused the fears that I have mentioned.

In addition, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association has argued that Canadian universities should be deregulated and that Canadians are paying far too great a share of each student's education costs.

We are seeing pressures and hearing pressures on our health care system and on our post-secondary education system. Rather than respond to them by fighting back and by ensuring that our health and post-secondary systems are the best they can be, the government is giving into those pressures and cutting back on the funding to the provinces. This is having a particularly bad effect on those poor provinces, including the province of Saskatchewan.

The government's view of federal funding to the provinces under the Established Programs Financing arrangements, at least according to the Minister of Finance, appears to be that the moneys can be used by the provinces as they see fit. This is simply not the case.

The Canada Health Act and the Established Programs Financing arrangements are very closely linked, as the Canada Health Act clearly states. Indeed, in the past both the Minister of Finance when he was in opposition, and other members of his party, have argued very strenuously—that was when the Liberals made cuts to these programs—that the Established Programs Financing arrangements were indeed arrangements which were designed to finance both health care and post-secondary education in the provinces. It seems to me that they cannot have it both ways. They cannot have said, when the Liberals were making cuts, that these cuts were to health and post-secondary education and now when they themselves are making cuts argue that they are for whatever purposes the provinces so desire.

• (1900)

To say that the provinces can do what they want with the money is to ignore the Canada Health Act. To say that, the federal government is not interested any longer in national standards of health care and post-secondary education, both in terms of quality of health care and post-secondary education and in terms of accessibility. As I said, that is not what the Minister of Finance and other Conservative ministers said when they were in opposition and the Liberals were making cuts to EPF.

In 1982, in the budget of then finance minister MacEachen, there was an elimination of the revenue guarantee. At the time the present Minister of Finance said that the Liberal minister was prepared to risk major cut-backs in medical care and post-secondary education and that he should not rush into these decisions on a unilateral basis and force spending cuts and service cuts on the provinces.

We all know that the provinces are not in agreement with the cuts that they are facing. We also know that these cuts will affect the services available at the provincial level. The present Minister of Finance said in 1982 that we should not cause closures of hospitals and cut-backs in post-secondary education in this way. The Minister of Finance has had a change of heart and now argues that these expenditures are not for health care and post-secondary education, whereas he quite clearly was of the view that they were in 1982.

Many other members on the government side spoke strenuously against the cuts which were proposed and, indeed, introduced by the Liberal government in 1982 and 1984 and, indeed, pointed out the opportunities which were available to the provinces in the event of such cuts. There really are only four. The provinces can increase revenues if they have the opportunity to do so or they can increase their deficit. They can cut back or reduce services. It seems to me, as the Conservative member said, when faced with those Liberal cuts we really should not do that and, indeed, we cannot do that because of the danger that it will pose to Canadians across the country. The third alternative is to reduce standards of services and the fourth is merely for the provinces to increase taxation. None of those are attractive features and particularly for those provinces which are faced with difficulties in raising any more funds.

As I have raised in questions, I want to make just one brief mention on the fact that, when the Liberal government was in power up until 1984, it made a number of similar attacks on the health care system and on post-secondary education. Those attacks were not as great as those made by the Conservative government but, nonetheless, they indicate a lack of commitment to the health care system and post-secondary education system by Liberal governments of the time.

As I mentioned, in 1977, the end of block funding constituted cuts from the federal government to the provinces. In 1982, there was the removal of the revenue guarantee program which cut some $6 billion over a five-year period from federal transfers to the provinces and the six and five restraints in 1983 cut some $400 million to $500 million out of the education support programs for the provinces.

The irony of Progressive Conservatives and Liberals changing places is not lost on Canadians. When Liberals make cuts to transfers for health and post-secondary education, Progressive Conservative members correctly criticize, and when Progressive Conservative governments make cuts, the Liberals complain.

The Minister of Finance was right in 1982 when he said these cuts would adversely affect health care and post-secondary education across this country and he is wrong now when he says the provinces should be able to spend that money as they see fit. This government has lost track of the lives of ordinary, hard-working Canadians who rely on medicare and who want their children to have a good education. The regions, especially the less well-off provinces, will be devastated by this bill.

• (1905)

The maritime provinces already devote an enormous share of their provincial budgets to health and education costs. Cuts in federal spending will push them to the breaking point, as we have seen in Prince Edward Island, for example, with the provincial budget being pushed into deficit. In Prince Edward Island, health expenditure expressed as a percentage of gross domestic product was over 12 per cent as compared to only 8 per cent for Ontario. In other words, health expenditures make up 50 per cent more available financial resources in P.E.I. than in Ontario.

How will smaller provinces manage, given these cuts? How much less opportunity will they have to make up the cuts given the lack of fiscal base on which to raise other sources of tax revenue? As I have mentioned, the only alternatives are to increase taxes or increase the provincial deficit, or reduce services. None of those options are acceptable to Canadians.

In other words, as we have seen represented in many presentations and many reports, the government is creating a health care system for the rich and a health care system for the poor. It is creating a two-tier health care system, depending on whether you live in a rich province or a poor province, and it will do the same with regard to post-secondary education.

In closing, this government should stand up for the regions, stand up for the needs of Canadians in their health and post-secondary education systems. It should help, not hurt, which is what it is doing with Bill C-69. Government is about choices and this government has chosen the goods and services tax, it has chosen to give big tax write-offs to the rich and to corporations and it has chosen to attack health care and post-secondary education. No wonder the government is at 15 per cent in the polls. The final price, of course, will be paid at the next election.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to what was said by our colleague from the New Democratic Party, and I fully understood the message he was trying to get across. One wonders why, if the government across the way was listening, and I am sure the hon. member for Brampton was listening very carefully and that he will take to heart the points raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing—I would like to ask him whether he was aware of the fact, for instance, that Bill C-69 intends to make budget cutbacks totalling $110 billion this year, $1.780 billion next year and that, spread out over five years, these budgetary compressions will add up to about $8.380 billion.

Of course, my point is that all this will have a very negative impact on the provinces' ability to deal with the financial problems they will have as a result of the federal government's decisions. For instance, there is the impact that this budgetary restraint will have on welfare rates in the provinces, and so forth. I would like to tell him that, for instance, in my riding, in Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, the federal government intends to use Bill C-21 to cut benefits to workers, which will cause an increase in the number of people on welfare, because people will exhaust their unemployment insurance benefits faster. So there will be an increase in the number of people on welfare, and at the same time, the federal government, which gives these funds to the provinces, is saying: Listen, we know you are going to have more welfare recipients, but we are cutting back just the same. Doesn't he agree that these cutbacks are entirely unreasonable and that, in fact, the government is not saving one cent? It is just passing the problem on to someone else.

• (1910)

[English]

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): I am not sure that the hon. member asked me a question, Madam Speaker, but that clearly is what is taking place with this particular bill, indeed with the general activities of the government surrounding the budget at the present time.

The budget has been described as a pass-the-buck budget and that clearly is what it does. It transfers the responsibility for dealing with the deficit from the federal government to the provincial governments. It chooses to attack health care programs, post-secondary education systems and the poorest of Canadians by its decision to put a cap on the Canada Assistance Program. That is the decision the government has made. That is not the choice or the decision the government had to make, it is the one it decided to make and Canadians, of course, will not forget that.

It is an unacceptable approach for the government to take in dealing with the deficit. No one, I think, is arguing that the deficit is something which should not be attacked. We all agree, that the government has an obligation and that indeed we all have an obligation to deal with the deficit. The question is how we are going to deal with it. Are we going to deal with it by attacking those who are less well off in our society, are we going to deal with it by attacking those who have less opportunity to fight back, or are we going to do so by increasing the tax burden on the well-off and the corporations in Canada, for example, as well as doing such things as attacking interest rates?

The government, as we know, has chosen to attack the less well off and those who are less capable of protecting themselves. That is unacceptable. I do not think any of us on this side of the House would consider it to be acceptable and I do not think most Canadians think that it is acceptable.

As a final point of a more general nature, when we all go back to our ridings, I think we understand the way in which Canadians are responding to this attack on them by this government. One of the reasons for increased intolerance in our country, which I especially see when I go to the west—attacks on bilingualism and multiculturalism on other parts of the country—is that people are fed up with being attacked by their government when they feel that their government should be helping them rather than kicking them.

The government just has to accept the responsibility for what it is doing to this country due to financial burdens being placed on the provinces with the increased cuts to health care funding and post-secondary education funding. It also has to accept the responsibility for the mood that it is putting this country in.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the hon. member opposite and thank him for his answer to my previous question.

Madam Speaker, earlier today we heard the hon. member for the electoral district of Cambridge, if I am not mistaken, asking other members whether.

Mr. Soetens: The riding of Ontario.

Mr. Boudria: Oh, the riding of Ontario, excuse me. In his speech, the hon. member asked the rest of us whether we were aware of the fact that his constituents' money was being used, for instance, to help provinces like Prince Edward Island.

I felt that coming from a member of this House, such words were alarming, because in my view, Madam Speaker, we must be more generous as Canadians. We must try, as much as possible, to have programs for helping the less advantaged parts of our country.

Of course, these regional development programs for less advantaged areas should not be seen as they are seen by some hon. members as being funded with money taken out of the pockets of their constituents. I don't think that is the Canadian way.

I would like to ask the hon. member whether he has the same reaction to these words which were criticised earlier by another parliamentarian, words which I remember very well because I don't think they contribute to Canadian unity, especially at this time.

• (1915)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member has about 30 seconds left.

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, I just have two brief comments. I would note just in passing that prior to 1982, when my province's government was a New Democratic government, there were not deficits in Saskatchewan. Indeed, Saskatchewan was then a "have" province. Since 1982, with a Conservative government, it has had deficits and has become a "have not" province. So, it is not the case that we would want to receive funds from other parts of the country, but that we have had a government which has forced us to do so.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 is deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Madam Speaker, on March 20 I asked the Minister of Agriculture if there would be financial assistance for Canadian farmers to enable them to plant their crops this year, and when that assistance would be forthcoming.

The minister responded that the government was working on this issue and was working with the provinces to design a program and that hopefully it would be a targeted program. As yet, not one penny of aid has reached the producers and, more than a month later, we are starting into the planting season.

I acknowledge that the government has give a commitment for $500 million of aid for Canadian farmers, but only if this amount is matched by the provinces. I understand that about $250 million of this goes to Saskatchewan, $100 million to Manitoba, $50 million to Alberta, $50 million for special crops and then $50 million for the rest of Canada.

While I do not quarrel with the division of funds, I have to wonder, for example, how the province of Manitoba can match its $100 million allotment when the total agriculture budget for the province is only $85 million. Many Manitoba farmers desperately need this help, as do farmers in other provinces.

I also have to wonder just how much good the $250 million is going to be to the Saskatchewan farmers, even if it is matched by the province, because the total of $500 million would mean $10 per acre planted in the coming season. We sincerely hope the recipients of this aid will be considered on a county-by-county basis and not on a basis that requires total townships or rural municipalities to be affected.

I have to remind the government that during the 1988 drought assistance program there were long waits for cheques and a lot of appeals. The farmers need this money now in order to purchase their crop input requirements. As I indicated earlier, planting has already started. Until the government announces what the assistance will be and shows how it is to be administered, the farmers will not even be able to get bridge financing pending the arrival of their assistance cheques.

I am fully aware that discussions are ongoing with the various provinces and producer groups and understand that some producer groups have suggested their payments be made through the Agricultural Stabilization Act and that the producer's sales records be used as the basis of those calculations. Such records, of course, are available from the various marketing boards or producer organizations. I recognize that some of the producers who fed grain on the farm should also be compensated.

By comparison, it is totally unacceptable to Canadian farmers that producers in the United States receive half of their deficiency payments under their acreage allotment programs before they even plant their crops. In fact, they received this in the month of March. The other half of that payment will be made next year. In addition, they have a further advantage in that the input costs to the United States producers are 25 per cent less than those equivalent costs here in Canada. Consequently, our Canadian producers are at a distinct disadvantage, first, because they have no cash on hand to plant their crops and, second, their input cost are 25 per cent higher than those in the United States. Further delays simply cannot be tolerated.

• (1920)

I also like to place on the record that, while I do not disagree with the government's announcement of a few weeks ago to write down the debt of certain Caribbean countries due to their inability to repay, we have severe hardships here in Canada too. I respectfully ask the government to use Section 11(1)(e) of the Farm Credit Corporation Act and write down the debt load of some of our Canadian farmers who are being forced off their farms because this government has ignored the fact that these innocent victims of lower grain prices, which started to drop in the fall of 1984, need help too.

Under Section 11(1)(e) of that act, the government has the authority, under the objectives and powers of the act, to write down those loans, to make compositions, schemes of arrangements or to rewrite the mortgages itself.

Canada was built on the tradition of compassion and caring for the less fortunate. If there is ever a time to display some compassion and understanding, it is now. We have witnessed a tragedy after tragedy unfolding across this nation since last November. We have seen communities being devastated in Saskatchewan as people move away to seek work elsewhere. We have seen families being broken up and many people taking or attempting to take their own lives.

I ask this government to acknowledge this and to take action to alleviate this worsening tragedy. If the government can write down debt for other countries, it should recognize the financial disaster unfolding in Canada and apply the same criteria here at home.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the government does recognize what many Canadian farmers are going through a very tough and difficult time resulting from successive years of drought combined with uncertain prices and lingering debt.

I want to indicate as well that this government has responded in the past in many, many ways to help the agriculture industry of this country. We do not have to take a back seat to any country in the world in the support that we have given to our various sectors of agriculture.

When the Ministers of Agriculture met in Ottawa on March 29 and 30, the farm financial situation was the priority item on the agenda of that meeting. Unfortunately, in that short a time period the ministers could not come to an immediate agreement on how the federal government and the provinces could jointly address the problem. However, to send farmers and their creditors a clear signal of continuing support, the Minister of Agriculture announced a federal package of initiatives at the close of the ministers' meeting on March 30.

Under those initiatives the federal government will increase the flexibility of the farm debt review fund, which currently has $180 million available. The fund will be made more adaptable to current circumstances so that arrangements which farmers have worked out with the Farm Credit Corporation through the farm debt review process can be extended. That is responding to some of the special needs as well.

As well, the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds has asked the Canadian Wheat Board to implement procedures under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, which should encourage creditors to extend needed operating credit to producers. This initiative will help to provide farmers with the several billion dollars in operating credit that they need this spring.

We are also planning to extend the $150 million federal-provincial national soil conservation program. The additional $10 million we are willing to commit is contingent on provincial participation as well.

Once again, this government is prepared to dig deep to provide an additional $500 million in income assistance to our farmers. We are asking provincial governments to help their farmers by matching that federal contribution which alone would provide $1 billion more to Canadian farmers in the coming crop year and bring 1990-91 farm income in line with the five-year average.

We are willing to work quickly with the provinces to design the best approach for delivering assistance to producers. This initiative must be consistent with the policy pillars that underpin our current national agri-food policy review, namely, it must be production neutral, it must be environmentally responsible and it must lead us into a transition to a comprehensive long-term safety net.

As I said before, the government knows these are difficult times for Canadian farmers, but these are also financially difficult times for governments. It is not easy for any level of government to dig deeper. This includes the federal government as it struggles to control the huge national debt. About 35 cents of every federal tax dollar goes to service the federal debt compared with an average of 12 cents of every provincial tax dollar to service provincial debts. Yet total federal spending on agriculture in 1988-89 was almost two and half times of all provincial governments combined.

• (1925)

Still the Government of Canada stands ready and willing to come to the aid of farmers again this year. We are ready for further discussions with the provinces so that we can design programs that will be as comprehensive and effective as possible.

FISHERIES

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, in answer to my question on April 9, 1990, concerning the government's aid package for the east coast fisheries, I was pleased to find that the Minister of Fisheries agreed with me when I asked him, as reported at page 10337 of Hansard:

> Does the minister not think it would be wiser to be sure about the stocks and to be sure that we have fully developed all available species before we tell the people (on the east coast) that they must give up their life's work and the traditions of all those communities dependent on the fishery?

His answer in Hansard was one that I really agreed with. He said at page 10337:

> Yes, Mr. Speaker, I agree.

I was pleased because that seemed to signal, on the one hand, that the minister had been impressed by the arguments of so many fishermen in the southwestern end of Nova Scotia that these fishermen do not trust the department's stock assessment in the Scotia-Fundy region.

I was also pleased, on the other hand, that with his impending fisheries aid package he planned to greatly increase the department's participation in marketing the under-utilized species so that Atlantic Canadians could begin to reap the benefits of their total fish resource.

The reasons I have repeatedly asked both the minister and his predecessor to focus in the aid package for Nova Scotia on scientific evaluation and marketing are simple. First, to the best of my knowledge, there has never been any comprehensive stock assessment exercised in the Scotia-Fundy. Yes, research vessels have been sent out by the department, but for only a few weeks each year; two weeks on Brown's Bank and two weeks on George's Bank.

Local fishermen do not think this is enough to study the stocks. They think this because of what they are finding in the water. It does not bear out the department's pessimistic approach to stock evaluation. They will not go along with this with the exception of the haddock stocks which have been in a bad state since the early 1970s and are probably better today than they were then.

When I asked Dr. Leslie Harris in committee his opinion on the government's stock assessment on the Scotian shelf, he too felt that it was not good enough. The government has not yet applied the new "adapt model" to the Scotia-Fundy. This model has been used by the government to study the northern cod stocks since 1988 and, although it is not perfect, in the words of Dr. Harris, at least it would be a better evaluation than the hit and miss approach that the department is now taking.

Such an effort to evaluate the stocks might go some distance to repairing the non-existent credibility of the minister's department in this area, particularly in the Scotia-Fundy as it relates to stocks.

My second reason for being pleased was because the government has an equal responsibility to see to it that those affected by its poor management have a chance to profitably exploit the thousands of tonnes of so-called under-utilized species currently allocated to foreign boats within our 200-mile jurisdiction.

In this regard, the aid package should provide assistance to the fishermen and fish plant workers to go out after the under-utilized species and to market these species to the countries which come here to fish within our 200-mile jurisdiction and beyond. We have to put our money into establishing marketing of these under-utilized species. That means more money and considerably more money than the $1.9 million spent on all seafood promotion in Canada in 1989. This government will need to have in its aid package more money in that respect in order to fully develop on the east coast our under-utilized species and to compete with the foreigners who find it worth while to come here to fish, when we should be fishing.

• (1930)

I am not suggesting that this is a cure-all. I am just suggesting that we now have plants that are closed and boats tied up because they have been dependent on the three traditional stocks: cod, haddock and pollock. These plants and boats at present have no profitable alternative. I think one of the alternatives has to be with the under-utilized species and the markets that we could be searching for. At the same time that the minister brings out his aid package, I think the minister should listen to the fishermen and institute a uniform mesh size for not only the inshore but the offshore—those large, over 100-foot boats that are presently fishing and do not have any restriction on mesh size, and the foreigners who are fishing within our 200-mile limit who have no restriction on mesh size.

This regulation alone, if you listen to the inshore fishermen as to a mesh size, would probably conserve more fish than anything the minister could do in his aid package. I say that because in the last two weeks he has allowed the inshore 20,000 pounds of fish for three weeks, and he has allowed them to take it in cod, haddock or pollock. This means that they will go after the best fish and continue to dump. Had there been a mesh size for both the offshore-inshore foreigners, we would not have the dumping that is going on.

In closing, I asked my question in the spirit of offering advice that I thought would help the minister deal with the current crisis in a way that will lead to a positive solution and a healthy fishery for all. I do not like to see the negative approach which we have seen in the last few days which says that the minister criticizes the Atlantic Canadians for using the fishery, a renewable resource, as a point of entry into the unemployment insurance program. The fishery has been very profitable on the east cost. It is in a down period right now. We have alternatives. They are not to take away from the communities and the people who depend on the fisheries in those communities in the way that we heard from this minister last week.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, this government is committed to an Atlantic fishery industry which is viable, productive and contributes significantly to the benefit of Atlantic Canadians. We recognize the importance of Canadians using our resources to the benefit of Canadians. Under-utilized species need to be utilized where they can. Sound conservation and management practices are the foundation on which all of this is built. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans will soon be announcing a program for the Atlantic fisheries that will address current problems and permit us to move into ensuring a long-term viable industry.

Last year the government established an independent inquiry into the scientific and management aspects of the northern cod stocks following evidence of lower than anticipated growth in the biomass. The appointed panel examined data used in assessing and forecasting catches, the methodologies used in Canada and other countries, and the calculations leading to the 1989 assessment. The report by the Independent Review of the State of the Northern Cod Stock makes several recommendations on improving estimates of stocks, improving scientific research and expanding relevant technologies in the annual assessment process and in the management activities.

Similarly, the Scotia-Fundy Groundfish Task Force addressed a broad range of issues relating to the effectiveness of resource management, fleet capacity and the impact of adjustment. The task force makes several recommendations aimed at improving scientific evaluation. The task force also recommended improved conservation practices through methods such as improved regulations regarding gear size. All of these recommendations have been and will be discussed with the industry. We have already begun to implement the recommendations from these two reports and others are being explored in detail.

• (1935)

Both inshore and offshore harvesting sectors stand to gain from increased market penetration that can be realized through greater exploitation of under-utilized species. Of course, the processing sector will also benefit.

A pool of under-utilized groundfish was established as part of the 1990 Atlantic Groundfish Plan in order to increase the utilization of under-utilized fish stocks for the benefit of both harvesting and processing sectors. In addition, funds are being spent on under-utilized species under the federal-provincial fisheries subsidiary agreements. Also the Atlantic Fisheries Development Program, a Fisheries and Oceans program, funds work on the development of under-utilized species that are being caught at the present time. Some companies have already received allocations for the development of under-utilized species, particularly silver hake and mackerel.

The hon. member will know that this government has taken substantial action in this important area.

WOMEN'S CENTRES

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise today because I was totally unsatisfied with the minister's response to one of my questions about women's centre funding.

Before launching into my reasons why the Secretary of State's reply was unsatisfactory, I want to urge all ministers on the priorities and planning committee to positively answer the letters faxed to them by women's centre supporters in Newfoundland. The ministers have been asked whether they support the reinstatement of core funding for women's centres. It is a simple request, and a simple answer will do, a simple yes or a simple no. I urge them to respond "yes" and to send their reply to the Newfoundland women as soon as possible.

I implore this government to take positive action concerning the women's centres. Stop wasting money on unnecessary security, spend it on core funding to the women's centres. Do not blow millions on Canada Day fireworks and celebrations, spend that money on women's centres. Let us have 10 minutes less of fireworks and fund our women's centres.

I want to specifically address the Secretary of State's reply to my question on April 10. My question was: Would the minister reinstate core funding for the women's centres? My point was the Secretary of State could spend about $560,000 on extra security for his regional offices. The Secretary of State was paying to fly women from Yukon, Newfoundland, British Columbia and Nova Scotia to Montreal to meet with him about funding. Why not spend that money on core funding for women's centres and eliminate this problem altogether?

The Secretary of State is now spending about one third of the budget cuts on an attempt at political damage control. Women are angry. Women are demonstrating because the funding for essential services has been cut. These women are not a threat. They are not violent women. They are simply protesting in the ways available to them, as citizens of a democratic country, their disagreement with this government's approach. Reinstate that funding and the Secretary of State would not need to hire extra security guards.

The minister did not bother to think about the impact of extra security on the Secretary of State's regional offices. Those offices also deal with citizenship applications for new Canadians. What are refugees to think? Refugees who may have escaped from police states, only to apply for citizenship in Canada, find locked doors and swarms of security guards preventing them from entering public offices. Secretary of State offices are public buildings. The minister should know that something is deeply wrong when he decides that he must lock the offices from the public—the ones who pay for these offices.

The Secretary of State did not respond to my question on April 10. He simply attempted to turn it around and ask me if I thought he should not be meeting with women from the women's centres. Well he would not have to waste half a million dollars on security and on flying people around the country if he would simply reinstate the core funding. He just did not have an adequate answer to my question.

• (1940)

The women from the centres just want their funding back so that they can continue to provide the information, referral and the counselling services that are essential to their communities and to the women in those communities.

I have spoken out many times, both here in the House and outside on the issue of funding for women's centres. On the particular day in question, busloads of women from Quebec came here to lobby for their women's centres. My colleague, the member for Chambly, Quebec, shared the question with me that day on women's funding. He is also very concerned about the abdication of federal responsibility toward women's centres as are all New Democrats. He mentioned that 39 out of the 75 centres completely cut off core funding are Quebec women centres. That is more than half the women centres cut. He questioned the Secretary of State's press secretary for saying that the federal cut had "a beneficial effect" on Quebec women's centres.

The press secretary tried to make it sound like Quebec's decision to increase funding for women's centres happened as a result of the federal budget and these cuts. In fact, that decision was made last summer. The Quebec government has been counting on the federal government's core funding. The extra funding was to supplement, not to replace federal funding. The Quebec government official that we spoke to that morning said that the federal budget could not be called by any stretch of the imagination beneficial to women. The Quebec government has recognized the value and the necessity of women's centres. Obviously this federal government has not.

In my own province of British Columbia women's centres are closing their doors. They are shutting down. They cannot continue to operate without core funding. Ten women's centres in British Columbia have already had to close because of this Tory government. It seems that the word "Tory" has come to be synonymous with bad news for women in Canada.

In response to the question of the member for Chambly, the Secretary of State replied how pleasant his meetings were with the women involved. They would be a sight more pleasant if he would guarantee the core funding to women's centres. Again the Secretary of State appears to be a master of avoiding the question. He did not give the member for Chambly a reply to his specific question, nor did he give me a real response to my question. My question, as taken from Hansard of April 10, 1990, was:

> Will the Secretary of State reinstate the core funding to women's programming and will he do it today?.

Since the minister did not answer yes or no, I am anxious to hear from his representative today. Will women's centres, the ones which have been shut, be allowed to reopen? Will the core funding be reinstituted for women's programming? Will it be done today? Yes or no?

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the House to respond to the hon. member's question of April 10 regarding a Secretary of State meeting with representatives from women's centres.

My hon. colleague was critical that the minister was spending money to bring women to Montreal for a meeting in light of the cuts the government has made to the core funding for women's centres.

I am sure that if the hon. member gave it some additional thought she would acknowledge that during these difficult times of financial restraint, communication between government and Canadians is of utmost importance.

By having representatives from several women's centres all together, a useful dialogue was able to take place between the minister, his officials and the concerned representatives of the women's centres.

The minister was realistic at the meeting. He did not pretend that he was about to give the women all the answers they wanted to hear. But it was an excellent opportunity for the women to voice their concerns. It was an equally good opportunity for the minister to explain the situation his department and the government find themselves in.

Although core funding to women's centres has been discontinued, the government did not take that decision lightly. It is part of the sacrifice that all Canadians are being asked to make in order to get our financial house in order.

Reducing the deficit and controlling spending are absolutely essential if we hope to build a healthy and competitive economy, an economy which will enable us to implement social programs and support social vehicles such as women's centres.

Only that kind of economy can create a social climate that will nourish true equality for women and Canadians.

The funding reductions to the women's program have been a difficult decision to make but I ask my hon. colleague to remember that during this fiscal year the women's programs will support more than 500 projects.

As the minister and other government members have pointed out the women's centres are being encouraged to apply for project funding. The minister has assured them that they will receive administrative funding for specific projects.

That is what the minister was able to explain to the women he met in Montreal. There was no illusion that everyone would go away fully satisfied, but communication is essential during these difficult times and an important exchange of ideas and opinions took place at that meeting.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 7.46 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8) I have the honour to table, in both official languages, government responses to 163 petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS AND GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS—SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the second report of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations.

I am pleased to table this report entitled Moving the Mail, concerning Canada's postal service in the 1990s. It is the result of extensive study of postal operations by the committee which were begun in October, 1989. Members of all parties worked very hard on this report and we heard submissions and witnesses from across Canada.

Our mandate was to examine the current operations of Canada Post with a view to recommending improvements for the future, improvements in operating efficiencies for Canadians. We had substantial agreement among all three political parties on this report. Out of 39 recommendations we had agreement on approximately 30. The report does include minority reports on those areas where we did not find unanimous agreement.

We found that Canada Post works well today and the more it acts as a private sector corporation the better and more efficient it has proven itself for Canadians. Therefore, we are recommending the eventual privatization of Canada Post. We are recommending a share offering to both Canadians and to employees of Canada Post.

Privatization must be done in an atmosphere of regulation, therefore, we also recommend that Canada Post operations be tightly regulated so that the needs of all Canadians for efficient and effective postal services are maintained.

We also recommend that Canada Post rely on its strengths and put more effort into the sorting and distribution system.

Pursuant to Standing Order 109—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Point of order. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, as I understand it, we are in Routine Proceedings on presentation of reports of committees. The hon. member is making a speech. Either he presents his report and gives a very brief summary of what it is about, or he does not present it. If he is going to present it, present it. If he is not, then he can sit down and say nothing.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member has almost finished his statement. The hon. member for Halton—Peel.

Mr. Turner (Halton—Peel): Madam Speaker, perhaps some members do not like the content of the report but nevertheless the committee does recommend that under Standing Order 109 we request that the government respond to our report. I thank the House for its indulgence.

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, in looking at the presentation of reports section which you have called, the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations just tabled its report on the postal system.

My dissenting opinion is included in part in that document which has just been tabled. I wish to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to table the entire report that I have written as a dissenting opinion.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, there was discussion at the committee level, and it was agreed by at least a majority decision that the opposition parties would be limited to a certain number of pages. I managed to live within the constraints given to me by the committee and I do not see why others cannot do the same.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): My first remark would be to the hon. member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake. When reporting to the House from committee the hon. member who presents the report is allowed to make a succinct explanation of the subject matter of the report. Normally nobody else should be presenting any reports.

• (1110)

Should there be unanimous consent in the House for the hon. member to present his opinion I would be ready to accept it but I already have someone who has refused that possibility and henceforth we will be continuing.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[Translation]

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

MOTION FOR REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE UNDER S.O. 140

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Madam Speaker, today I wish to table a motion for reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections of a petition for a private bill that was filed late. The motion reads as follows:

> That pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 140, the petition of Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company, filed after the time limit specified in Standing Order 132, and the Seventh Report of the Clerk of Petitions, tabled in the House on Thursday, April 5, 1990, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for appropriate recommendations by the committee.

Madam Speaker, there have been discussions with the other two political parties, and it seems that there may be unanimous consent this morning for concurrence with this motion by the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall the hon. member have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce his motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

PETITIONS

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to table a petition which has been found correct and certified as to form and content.

The petitioners, who are numerous, would like to humbly submit to this House that the imposition of another tax on Canadians, in particular the goods and services tax of 7 per cent, will be strongly opposed by the majority of Canadians. This tax will cause serious and unfair hardship for low and middle-income Canadians. They say further that the imposition of this tax will create an onerous burden on small business.

They strongly oppose the imposition of the goods and services tax, which in their opinion is an unprecedented tax grab from the pockets of Canadians and will hit us all not only with higher taxes but with higher inflation, higher interest rates and unemployment. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax and hope the Senate will do that.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure as well to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 from a number of petitioners from the constituency of Kamloops who point out their concerns with the goods and services tax.

They feel that this is a very unfair tax which permits people to be subjected to taxes on reading, diapers, coffins, home heating fuels and so on. At the same time they point out that there is no effective minimum tax on large profitable corporations. They are asking the Parliament of Canada to cause the government to cease with this proposal, which they say will shift the tax burden on to ordinary Canadians with a very regressive consumption tax instead of through real tax reform policies. The petitioners hope that the Senate will stop this tax, although I do not know if they have confidence that that will actually take place.

* * *

CHILDREN'S BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Madam Speaker, I have another petition that points out that the number of children living in poverty in Canada is actually increasing. The petitioners ask the government to consider introducing a comprehensive bill of rights for children, since they have already opposed the initiative introduced by a private member in Motion M-254.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a petition on the goods and services tax. It is signed by 35 Canadians, some of whom are members of the Canadian Teachers' Federation.

They are very concerned about this goods and services tax. They feel that the tax is regressive, inequitable, and threatens the already precarious financial stability of our public schools and other social services. They feel it is not acceptable to them as a special segment of our society and that is the teaching profession.

They are also concerned about the effect it will have on the middle-income Canadians in my riding who are the parents of the students. On that basis and others, they are calling upon the government to reject this proposed goods and services tax.

OLD AGE SECURITY

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present to the House a petition certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions.

It contains the signatures of many, many Canadians who reside not just in my riding but in surrounding ridings. The petitioners request that the federal government immediately affirm the right of all Canadians to receive universal access to benefits of old age security payments by cancelling plans to introduce a clawback tax regime on old age security payments.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, while I am on my feet, I also have the duty, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present to the House petitions certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions containing the signatures of hundreds of Canadians who strongly oppose the new goods and services tax. In their opinion, it is an unprecedented tax grab from the pockets of Canadians and will hit them with not only higher taxes but higher inflation, higher interest rates, and higher unemployment.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present to the House petitions numbering literally in the thousands. The petitioners call upon the government to put a stop to the implementation of the goods and services tax. They strongly oppose the proposed goods and services tax. Unfortunately for the thousands of people who signed these petitions, the petitions themselves could not be certified correct and, therefore, I will take it upon myself to have them directed to the Minister of Finance as soon as possible.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the privilege of filing a number of petitions concerning the goods and services tax containing 35 pages of signatures from residents of Surrey and other lower mainland municipalities. The petitioners point out that the proposed goods and services tax is an unfair taxation because it lacks regard for the taxpayers' ability to pay.

It calls upon Parliament to reject the present goods and services tax and to bring in true tax reform, including a minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to table another petition. To some it may seem late. It is a petition signed by numerous residents of Kingston who are opposed to the goods and services tax.

The petitioners say that, while the tax has been passed in this Chamber against the wishes of the opposition and some of the members on the government side—now former members on the government side—they will, I am sure, place their hope in the unelected Senate in the expectation that it will return that bill to this House so we can have another vote on it and perhaps defeat the bill.

They call upon Parliament to reject the goods and services tax, and I urge hon. members opposite to heed the prayer of these petitioners.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND – ALLOCATION OF TIME FOR THE CONSIDERATION AT SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL-69

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House) moved:

That with respect to Bill C-69, an Act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, one day be set aside for the consideration of the second reading stage; and

That fifteen minutes before the end of the period provided for Government Orders, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the second reading stage shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Gauthier: This is unacceptable, Madam Speaker!

• (1120)

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I have the questionable privilege of rising in the House today to speak to the motion moved by the Deputy Leader of the Govermment in the House of Commons, and once again, it is a mistake on the part of this government to introduce such a motion.

Madam Speaker, it is the sixth time the government has moved a motion for time allocation in this House, in this Parliament, and it is a dreadful thing because it indicates that the government has lost control of the House and that it does not have the slightest idea how it should introduce bills and motions in this House and deal with public matters that are so very important.

In addition to its sixth motion for time allocation, the government has imposed closure thirteen times during this Parliament, more than any other government in Canada's history. I say that this is the worst government Canada has ever had, because of its failure to deal with the business of this House in a simple and orderly fashion. I say that this government should be deeply ashamed of its failure to accomplish anything important in this House and its failure to deal with government business. Closure thirteen times, time allocation six times and now the seventh time during this Parliament. This is going too far!

The Leader of the Government is not in the House today, but his deputy who is here should be particularly ashamed of the government's decision to table this motion today.

[English]

I have spoken many times on the evils of closure in the House, and the way the government treats this Parliament with contempt. I regret that I have to make a similar address today because what we are witnessing in the House is a complete violation of the principles of parliamentary procedure. One only has to look at the rules to see what it is that is contemplated on second reading of a bill.

[Translation]

At the second reading stage, the Standing Orders provide for eight hours of debate after the first three speeches by the minister who introduced the bill, the Official Opposition spokesman and the spokesman for the third party in this House. These three speeches, each of which may last forty minutes, are not included in the eight hours of debate. Subsequently, eight hours of debate are provided: twenty minutes for each speech, plus ten minutes for questions and comments. We now have a situation where there have been practically no bills on which the government has allowed eight hours of debate during this Parliament. Perhaps on the abortion bill, but otherwise, practically no bills had eight hours of debate before closure or time allocation was imposed.

After those eight hours, what do the Standing Orders say? Ten minutes for each speech, and we have not had a single ten-minute speech on this bill. We have had only two hours and twenty-one minutes out of the eight hours provided by the Standing Orders for each bill considered by the House. And before those two hours and twenty-one minutes were up, the government gave notice of this motion for time allocation.

[English]

It is a shocking outrage that the government would proceed in this fashion. It is unable to come to negotiate any arrangement with respect to public business. It does not seem interested in negotiations and is interested only in allowing the bill through.

The approach of the government to this House is: "We don't want to hear your debate on this bill. We just want to know when you're gonna pass it. It is adopted as is. Pass it as is and, if you don't want to pass it, then we'll just impose closure and get it through anyway." There is no desire to listen to the opposition.

I was elected to represent Canadians in the House, as was every member of the opposition. We have a right and a duty to discuss bills in the House and to point out their shortcomings and their failures to the government. Yet, the government's expectation is that we will do that in three or four speeches, and then allow the thing through. That is the expectation.

I can think back to Parliaments in years past when I followed the proceedings of the House—not as a member—either from them galleries or by reading the debates. Many debates on many bills went on for a week or two weeks at a time. We have not had the luxury of any such debate in this Parliament. What is the urgency? There is no urgency. The government lets us go on extended breaks from sitting here. When we come back, it says: "We want this bill through in two days, one day or three days." Three days is usually the maximum.

Mr. Gauthier: Or two hours.

Mr. Milliken: Or two hours. The government says: "We'll cut off debate whenever it is finished."

As the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier says, two hours is generous in the government's view for debate on particular bills.

I say this is not the way Parliament works. This is an institution for debate, not an institution for passing bills just because the government says it has drafted the bill and it is ready to pass it.

I can understand how government members in the House must be bored with a bill by the time it comes to the House of Commons. I am sure they have had extensive debates on most of the bills in Cabinet. That is what goes on.

Mr. Mills: They're nervous about defections.

Mr. Milliken: They are nervous about defections, as the hon. member for Broadview—Greenwood points out. The government has had two defections already and I hear there is going to be a flood of them coming up. Rats off a sinking ship!

Aside from that, they have clearly had to debate these bills for so long in cabinet that they are bored with the debate. They say: "We've heard it all now. We don't need to listen to members of the Opposition on this bill." Their cabinet obviously is badly divided on these issues. They cannot make up their minds. They finally do long after the bill should have been introduced. They come waltzing along to the House, drop the bill onto the table, and say: "Pass it now."

That is the attitude of the government House leader. It is a bad attitude. I hope the new deputy government House leader will avoid that attitude, will chastize his boss, and try to get it changed. It is the wrong approach to the operations of a parliamentary democracy.

This Parliament exists to debate these bills, to point out their shortcomings, and to give the people of Canada who are opposed to some of these measures the opportunity to express their opposition and disapproval.

The government feels, probably because the bills are so dreadful, that, rather than listen to the people, it is simply going to cut off debate at every opportunity. We have had it cut off, as I have indicated, so many times. There have been 20 times now in this Parliament by either closure or time allocation. It is too many. It has gone on too long, and this debate has not gone on long enough. Yet, here we have the government trying to silence the people of Canada.

I challenge any one of the ministers who was elected to serve in the House to stand on his feet to participate in the debate on this bill and allow the debate to go for more than one more day as proposed by the deputy government House leader. They, too, were elected by their constituents.

The people of Kingston and the Islands had enough of this government in the last election campaign in 1988. They wanted representation in this House that was effective, that would be a voice to speak up for their rights that were being violated by this government by the passage of the kind of motion that is being introduced here today. They did not expect to have a member of Parliament whose views would be stifled by continuous application of closure and time allocation such as has gone on in this House 20 times already in this Parliament, and we have not yet sat two years.

• (1130)

Never before has a Canadian Parliament been treated to this kind of abuse. It constitutes an abuse of the rights of all parliamentarians and a contempt of this House of the worst kind. The Deputy House Leader should have the rummel gumption to stand up and withdraw this motion at once and apologize to the House for having introduced it.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Madam Speaker, to echo my colleague's last words, I wonder if the Deputy House Leader would not want to resign from his position, because I cannot imagine that the Deputy House Leader is serious when he says that we have had enough time for debate on Bill C-69. After all, Madam Speaker, this is a bill that is going cap federal government support for post-secondary education, for health and hospital care and for social services and social assistance in the provinces. In other words, this bill goes against the very grain of what a Canadian and what Canada is all about. Yet the government says we have had enough debate.

Madam Speaker, we have only started the debate. Once again, we have only had less than three hours of discussion on this most important piece of budget legislation that we are going to debate in the next number of months and after two hours and 20 minutes of debate the government says: "We have had enough, we do not want to hear any more dissent, we do not want to hear any more opposition voices. We do not want to be reminded of what it is we are doing; we do not want the people of Canada to understand what the government is doing".

This comes at a very interesting time. In another part of the world, in some of the communist countries in eastern Europe, the governments are opening up their Parliaments; they are saying that they are prepared to listen to a dissenting voice. They are prepared to recognize that the opposition has a role. They are prepared to listen to voices that criticize what the government of the day is doing.

That is going on in eastern Europe, and the world rejoices at that. Yet in our own country, with the Progressive Conservative government, time after time after time the government says it is not going to permit those people who were elected by the people of Canada to express their views in the House of Commons that opportunity.

Look at the benches today. The benches on the opposition side are filled today. I suspect that all of us on the opposition side want to speak out against the government's cuts to post-secondary education and to health care. Yet the government says it is not going to permit the House of Commons to function as the House of Commons is supposed to function. It is not going to permit members of the opposition to express their views on this legislation. It is not going to permit the democratic system to work in the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the hon. member for Surrey—White Rock.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, the member for Kamloops has just said that all the opposition benches were filled. I would ask him to list the names of the four NDP members who are here today.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, that is the usual inane comment that we would expect from that member. I am not even going to refer to what is sitting across on the government side and be caught in that same nonsense. But you will see, Madam Speaker, that he will not participate in this debate because he is embarrassed and the best criticism he can make is to rise in his place and make a nonsense comment about attendance in the House of Commons when it is his government that is forcing the goods and services tax down the throats of every Canadian against their will.

Eighty per cent of Canadians say that they oppose this legislation; 80 per cent say: "Do not proceed". Yet this government says it is the big brother government, it is hiring thousands of tax collectors. The government says that it knows what is best for Canadians, it does not listen to any alternatives. It is the big brother of the system now; it has the majority; it is arrogant. It can do anything it wants to the people of Canada, including jamming this tax down their throats.

That is the kind of government we have—an arrogant government, a government that is undemocratic, a government that has contempt for the House of Commons, a government that has no respect for the parliamentary traditions of this country, because if it had it would permit debate on one of the most important pieces of budget legislation before the House.

But it does not and the point I was making is that, as you can see, there are opposition members here who were elected to represent their constituencies. They were elected to speak out on legislation that is before this House and this government will not allow the opposition to do that. This government will not allow the people of Canada to be heard.

That is why I say that there is the sound of jackboots in this building at the moment. You can hear jackboots crashing across on the government benches as their dictatorial, totalitarian ways are perpetuated time after time.

I ask my friends opposite whether they can remember a government in the history of Canada that has used closure so many times to muzzle debate in the House of Commons. There has never been a government that has used the heavy hand of muzzling Parliament time and time and time again. As a matter of fact, just in this short Parliament it has been used 13 times on legislation on which the government has refused to allow proper debate.

You know as well as I, Madam Speaker, that we only allow eight hours of full debate and after that we get into 10 minute speeches by members. That curtails debate after two or three days normally. After only one hour of debate the government gave notice that it has had enough. I say that that is not the democratic tradition that people in this country have fought to uphold for generations. This government has said to the people of Canada: "We have the majority now and we are going to do whatever we want, including making the Parliament of Canada irrelevant".

I still cannot believe that my hon. friends sitting across the way are so determined to jam this goods and services tax down the throat of every Canadian because they actually support it, and yet it seems that they do because they vote time and time again in support of that legislation.

We have a job to do, and our constituents expect us to do that job. The job of representatives of the opposition parties is to offer criticism to the government's legislation when it is brought forward. If it is good legislation, we support it. We have, on many occasions, with very little debate and on occasion with no debate, simply passed good legislation.

But when we see a bill like Bill C-69 through which the government is going to essentially abandon the support we in this country have known for post-secondary education, naturally a number of us want to speak against that particular initiative. After all, the young people in this country are the lifeblood of the country. They are the most important resource we have in Canada. Our young people are pursuing post-secondary education so that they can play their rightful roles in an information-based economy of the 1990s and beyond. Yet this government says, presumably, that it does not believe in young people. It does not believe in funding post-secondary education. It does not believe in doing what virtually every other western industrialized nation is doing, that is investing in our most important resource which is the young people of our country.

The government is going to cap support for post-secondary education. Can you imagine anything more regressive, more thoughtless than that? If the people of Canada knew what the government is doing, if they understood that this government is not going to continue funding the hospitals of Canada, is not going to continue supporting health care and medicare in this country as we have known it in the past, is not going to support our universities, vocational schools, technical schools and colleges as it has done in the past, the people of Canada would be even more cynical of the role the government is playing.

To stave off this opposition the government is going to try to keep the people of Canada from knowing what it is doing. The best way it can do that is to silence the House of Commons, to silence the opposition benches from exposing what this government is attempting to do in these critical areas of health care and post-secondary education. The government has announced now that it is going to close off debate, that it is not going to allow members of the opposition, or perhaps even members of the government, to express their views.

I submit that that is undemocratic, that it goes against the very parliamentary traditions that we have upheld and felt so strongly about in our country for generations, and that it adds to the dislike of the people of Canada for this government. How can you, Madam Speaker, respect a government that is anti-democratic? How can you respect a government that is totalitarian in its approach to the House of Commons? How can you respect a government that is anti-democratic day after day by muzzling the members of the House of Commons?

• (1140)

The fact that only 16 per cent of the people of Canada now reluctantly support this government—and that number is probably dropping—is no surprise.

In closing, I suggest that if this government continues to be so anti-Parliament in its process, to be so anti-House of Commons, to be so anti-democratic, not only will it lose the 16 per cent of the support of the people of Canada, it will erode even further and this government deserves the erosion of that support.

Hon. Paul Dick (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I could not help but listen to the rather ridiculous, I feel, speeches made by the member for Kingston and the Islands and the hon. member for Kamloops. As a matter of fact, the member for Kingston and the Islands did not spend any of his time dealing with the substance of the legislation and went on dealing with the motion for time allocation.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I am sure the minister knows we are dealing with the time allocation, the guillotine of time allowed on a bill, not with the substance of the bill. So he should address the subject that is before the House, that is the procedure, not the substance of the bill.

Mr. Dick: Madam Speaker, if they want to they can talk about the substance of the bill at the same time, but of course they are going to use the two hours to rail away. My hon. friend from Kamloops actually spent two minutes of his time talking about the substance of the bill. For the other eight minutes he talked about jackboots.

Take a look at the press gallery. There is not even the lone sentinel from the Canadian Press who is usually up there. The press is not even interested in what the opposition is doing.

Ms. Clancy: So you debate for the press, do you?

Mr. Dick: Take a look at the democratic institutions in this world and you will find that we are the longest winded legislature in the democratic free world. We sit more days, talking longer. There have only been two debates since 1950, at second reading, that have gone longer than two days in the British House of Commons. Debate went six days when they entered into the European Economic Community and three days when they got rid of the Greater London Council.

I had the opportunity of sitting on the opposition side for 12 years. I know how it used to be. The idea is to talk, talk, talk, to try to force the government to bring in closure or time allocation. I know it is a tactic which is used.

I really think that we in the House of Commons are on the edge of talking ourselves into irrelevancy. I think we should sit down and modernize what we are doing in this place. We should come in tune with the times. The member for Kingston and the Islands was talking of a week or two weeks for debate at second reading stage, yet they go for a maximum of two days in England on second reading.

There is lots of time. We are going to have another six hours of debate on this. There is going to be a chance for more discussion.

We really have to look at the fundamental way in which we run this place. Instead of always just opposing, getting counteracting ideas from the government side and then comments from the opposition, I think we should sit down and fundamentally look at how we run this place.

For example, I know the stall tactics of putting up petitions. In England every petition gets filed with the Clerk. They respond to them. We can file with the Clerk here. We do not have to stand up and spend hours of House of Commons time reading them. Nobody ever watches it on TV and nobody reports them in the paper. They are reported in the Order Paper when they are filed so you get as much printed press as you do when you stand up and talk about them.

We can make some observations of how other Parliaments run their affairs. Instead of becoming irrelevant and wasting time, I think we should try and organize ourselves. Perhaps on an all-party basis the House Leaders would want to sit down to organize ourselves in a better way, instead of talking about such ridiculous stuff as jackboots.

You have to admit, when you get that sort of trash introduced as a speech in the House of Commons you have to question why we are standing here taking up time, why we are spending the money, why we are being so foolish.

So let us become a little more sensible and more realistic in the modern day. Let us use Parliament to debate matters and move on. We do not have to drag them out for a week or two weeks at a time. We have to move them along. I do not think we have to hear such trash as having two weeks debate on this, that and the other thing, or that it is a place of jackboots.

Closure and time allocation has been around for a long time. You can count the number of times the Liberals used it in the last Parliament before they turned the reins over to the Conservatives. They used it many times. We used it many times in the last Parliament. The pressures of the times are going to be realized. Nobody even comments on it any more in the press because it is used so regularly and they know it has to be, otherwise the opposition will just hold things up.

We saw what the NDP did on the goods and services tax. The very party which agreed with the goods and services tax in 1987 is now trying to talk it out at committee and in the House of Commons, through all kinds of procedural tactics, rather than getting on with it.

The government has the right to propose things. The House of Commons should dispose of things. The opposition may wish to oppose on certain occasions, it may wish to agree on certain occasions. If we oppose on all occasions and try to hold up the disposition of things for one week, two weeks, or three weeks, we become irrelevant here. I think we should look at the fundamentals of the system, otherwise it is going to become a jackboot and irrelevant place.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Madam Speaker, I rise to express my disappointment at the cutting off of debate and the use of time allocation on a very important topic for the people of my region and the people of my city.

I cannot believe that in the alleged interests of modernizing this place, we as members of Parliament should choose our topics for debate and decide the business of this Chamber on the basis of whether the press gallery is empty or full. Even to suggest that is to denigrate the work that is done here and done ably by members on both sides of the House.

Mr. Dick: Not always.

Ms. Clancy: Definitely not always, and I am glad the member recognizes that. However, the question of time allocation on this particular bill is one that cannot be allowed to go by without strong protest from elected members of Parliament.

What we have here is time allocation on cuts to post-secondary education. What we have here is time allocation on cuts to health care. What we have here is time allocation on capping the Canada Assistance Plan.

In my region in the Atlantic people depend very much on funding such as this to maintain some sort of level playing field with the rest of the country. The people in the Atlantic region, the strongest supporters of post-secondary education in this country, see, along with all of the other things that have been thrown at them by this government in the past five years, the almost total erosion of federal funding for absolutely necessary services.

Are their elected representatives, the majority of whom sit on the opposition side of the House, being given a fair amount of time to put forward their views? No, they are not. The government has used its garotte and time allocation has been brought in for the twentieth time in the young life of this particular session.

• (1150)

When the universities in Atlantic Canada see that they can no longer offer the number of programs that they offered before these cuts were made, when those same universities see that they cannot pay their faculty and their staff according to the levels that are paid in the rest of the country, they are going to remember that their elected representatives were cut off in debate and not permitted to put forward the views of the people of the Atlantic region.

When health care cutbacks seriously affect the quality of life of Atlantic Canadians, Atlantic Canadians are going to remember that this was the twentieth time in a Parliament that commenced sitting in December, 1988, that this government said that it does not matter what the opposition thinks, it does not matter what the people represented by opposition members want to say and want to have said on their behalf, all that matters is that this bill gets tabled and gets passed as fast as humanly possible.

This chamber is an historic and almost mystical place for those of us fortunate enough to come here to represent our fellow Canadians. If we do not give this chamber and all its works the respect and time due to it, then we create in those people whom we represent from the Atlantic to the Pacific a sense that we are useless, that we are not here for any purpose. I do not believe that, you do not believe that, Madam Speaker, and neither, I believe, do the members opposite believe that.

But perception in politics, perception in government, means a whole lot more a great deal of the time than actuality. To use this Draconian measure 20 times is something that Canadians are not going to put up with.

I realize that the government has a fear of having a long drawn out debate on this because it is unfair. I realize that the government will do anything to avoid long discussions on the fact that it is cutting back on programs that mean survival to institutions and to health care programs, to child care programs and to various other social institutions in this country without which the lives of individual Canadians are going to be bleaker and more difficult with a loss of hope and, sadly, a loss of interest in how this country works.

Mrs. Finestone: And service.

Ms. Clancy: And yes, service as well, absolutely.

I suppose, after listening to my learned colleague from Kingston and the Islands, my distress and upset at what this government is doing in this particular case is tempered, again sadly, with a sense of cynicism that it does not matter what you do, whether it is good or bad, as long as you do it quickly so people will forget.

So we will do these things that are counter-productive for Canadians, we will do these things that are going to close hospital beds all over Atlantic Canada, that are going to shut down university classrooms all over Atlantic Canada, that are going to cut out of much needed day care spaces in Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia. We are going to cut back so that the university education, of which Canadians have long been so rightly proud from coast to coast, is no longer an asset that Canadians can put on the international market and say: "Here we are. We can hold up our educational backgrounds and our training with anyone", so that the government can sweep yet another massive whiplash attack on its citizens under the rug of parliamentary procedure.

For 20 years I have watched and studied the Canadian political system, going right back to the great pipeline debate of the 1950s when closure was introduced by a Liberal government, to its great detriment. Canadian citizens talk very little about the procedures that we go through in this House. Frequently they have neither the time nor the inclination to watch what we do in this House. But closure is something that Canadians do understand. They do understand the stifling of debate and they do understand what it means when their duly elected representatives are precluded by the government from doing the job that they were elected to do. Certainly, Madam Speaker, they do understand that when these things are said by members of the government, and when opposition members are told that the importance of their work here in this Chamber can only be gauged by whether or not it makes the national news, the national newspapers or the early morning radio, then I think Canadians have a right to stand together and cry "halt".

This bill that is being cut off from debate deals a blow to the citizens of my region and to the citizens of all the regions of Canada. It is wrong that the time for full debate and the time for full discussion of what Canadians want from their federal government should be shoved into some small corner of the parliamentary calendar and left again to be swept away because the government feels, in its bizarre and ultimate wisdom, that it knows what is best for Canadians, and that what is best for Canadians is not having elected members of Parliament stand and oppose, as they are constitutionally elected to do.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise today to also speak against the time allocation motion on Bill C-69. I am disappointed that once again this government is thwarting the rights of the representatives of the people of Canada to be heard on an important issue.

Since I have been elected, time and again we have seen from this government time allocation motions, closure motions, the stifling of debate in the House of Commons. The attitude of this government appears to be to not bother with the democratic process, to not listen to the ordinary folks of Canada. We have even seen this government drag off Parliament Hill protesters who were peacefully protesting against this government's actions.

The Tories do not want to hear what the people of Canada, the Official Opposition, or the New Democratic Party has to say about Bill C-69. They have made that very clear.

Clause 2 of Bill C-69 limits spending under the Canada Assistance Plan to only 5 per cent for British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario. This will affect social assistance, child care and shelters for battered women. That is the mechanism for funding those programs in this country between the provinces and the federal government.

Provinces and territories other than British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario are exempt from this capping for the time being. That does not mean that in the next round the government will not attack their social programs, their child care and their shelters for battered women as well.

The government is dismantling social programs. The government promised child care before two elections and then scrapped the plans for a child care program immediately after the elections. The government completely cut core funding to women's centres so that women's centres that provided referrals to shelters for battered women are closing. Already 10 centres have closed in British Columbia. Now the government is going even one step further and attacking the shelters themselves, the child care programs that were already in place and the poor of those three provinces.

As my colleague, the member for Mission—Coquitlam, has already said, Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia may be better off in this nation, but the poor in those three provinces are just as poor as the poor citizens in any other province. Approximately 46 per cent of all persons receiving assistance under CAP live in those three provinces.

• (1200)

The finance minister is predicting higher unemployment. At the same time his government is hacking at the unemployment insurance program. There will be nothing left for these people to live on but social assistance. Now the Tories are trying to restrict that too.

Some analysts say that the 5 per cent growth limit will only just cover inflation. It will not be anywhere near adequate enough to cover the increased need that has been created by Tory economic mismanagement.

What will it be next? The Tories have already attacked pensions. They have already attacked family allowance programs. What is left for this government to attack?

There is already a child care crisis in this country. In my province of British Columbia there are only 20,000 licensed spaces for the 300,000 children requiring care. British Columbia is one of the provinces that has been slapped with a spending limit on child care.

Violence against women in our society is a serious and an urgent problem. It is something we hear members on the government side mouth platitudes about, but what women really need is action to address this problem.

One in every two shelters for battered women must turn women and their children away because they lack space to house them. That is how it is right now. The Tories have chosen at this time to slap a spending limit on shelters for battered women in those three provinces. It is shameful.

In my province of British Columbia, the provincial government—the cousins of the Conservative government, the Social Credit Party—have already choked the poor. There are two food banks in operation in my constituency. Those food banks have been in operation for many years now. They have become institutionalized in British Columbia. This is not the time—nor is there any time—for the federal government to abdicate its responsibility toward Canadians.

In 1981, a parliamentary task force stated that the federal government has "a constitutional responsibility for programs of income redistribution, including social assistance programs paying money to Canadians anywhere in Canada".

This government has ignored the requirement in the Canada Assistance Plan to give the provinces one year's notice of any change in CAP funding. The federal government is currently being challenged in the courts by British Columbia as to its illegal and unethical practices concerning CAP.

The Canada Assistance Plan was first introduced in the 1960s as one of five measures to reduce poverty in Canada. Canadians know now—if they did not know before—that the Tories really only care about their rich friends, the friends and the insiders of this government. It proves it to us every day. It proved that it does not have an inkling of feeling, respect or of concern for lower and middle-income Canadians.

We have heard members on the government side talk about the savings from cutting the CAP. Who is saving? If the federal government saves, provincial governments have to spend more. It all comes out of the same taxpayer's pocket. It is ordinary Canadians who pay the bills in this country. There is absolutely no savings for the Canadian taxpayer. They only see their taxes going one way—and that is up. They pay more and more taxes and receive fewer and fewer services from this government. There is really only increased hardship for those at the lower end of the economic spectrum.

People who need jobs and food, children without anyone to care for them, battered women—these are the people who are paying for this federal government's imaginary savings.

This government is behaving in a disgusting way. We have the right to speak out. That is the democratic process. We have the right to speak out about what the Tories are doing to our country. We have the right to say that we have had enough of this government's economic mismanagement.

We want care for our children. Women want somewhere to turn to when they are battered. They do not want to find the doors of women's centres locked. They do not want to go to a shelter when they have been abused and battered and find there is no space for them or for their children.

We want our children to have food to eat. Canadians do not want to line up at food banks, to be seen standing at the door of a charitable institution. They want a decent standard of care for themselves and for their children. They want decent jobs. They want to have a secure future for themselves and their families.

That is what Canada is about. Canada is about free speech, about a caring and a compassionate society. It is about good social programs and security for all its people. That is what this government is trying so hard to destroy.

We want the opportunity to express fully our opposition to this bill. I urge all members of the House not to support the time allocation motion on this important bill and, further, to vote down this unethical bill, Bill C-69.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, we are witnessing today another sad event in the history of Parliament. This is the first time that a government has had to give notice of two measures to stifle debate, to apply the guillotine to parliamentary proceedings. To justify its ends any means is now to be used.

Indeed, a sign of a desperate government that does not know how to administer the House of Commons or how to manage the time of the House of Commons is when it has to throw the book at the opposition, as it did yesterday, and give notice that on the one hand it might use closure, but on the other it might use time allocation.

Those are the two measures at the government's disposal to cut off debate. This bill is a very important measure put forward to cut expenditures of the federal government in many important fields of Canadian systems and programs under the EPF dealing with health care and education. EPF is the program under which the government funds post-secondary education, health care and some of the Canada Assistance Programs.

It has been said before in this House, and I think it is worth repeating, that this is the twentieth time the government has moved such a motion in this Parliament. It is the thirty-fifth time that the Tory government has used either closure or time allocation since it took power in 1984. That does not say much for its capacity to administer the House.

However, it says much about the jackboot approach to the opposition in trying to prevent democratic debate on important matters. It says much about not giving the opposition a chance to explain to Canadians what is in the legislation. The government surely does not explain to Canadians what it is doing. That is possibly why today it is the least popular party in the history of this country. Some 15 per cent of Canadians, at best—according to the results of the latest Gallup poll—support the Tories.

In my view, it is a sign of a government in trouble, a government which is desperately trying to shut off debate to prevent Canadians from hearing the truth about its legislative programs. What does it do? It imposes the guillotine. It cuts off debate after less than two hours and fifteen minutes on a bill that is very important to Canadians which deals with programs to which we in Canada attach great importance. I am talking about programs which fund post-secondary education and health care—one of the best programs in the world—and the Canada Assistance Plan which has been capped in certain provinces.

It is as though the poor in Ontario, my province, were any different from the poor anywhere else in this country. The poor in Ottawa—Vanier are just as much in need of attention as any other poor people in this country. This Tory government is saying to the people of my riding of Ottawa—Vanier: "If you are poor, we are sorry, but you are going to have to submit yourselves to a system which is absolutely unable to respond with care, understanding and generosity".

• (1210)

I cannot understand why this government would use at this stage—as I said before, after less than two hours and fifteen minutes of debate—time allocation, a form of closure, on a bill of such great importance to Canadians. I cannot understand why it would allow one additional day of debate, which could possibly be tomorrow, a Wednesday, which is a very short day, giving us less than the normal eight hours allowed on second reading of a bill before we proceed to the 10-minute speeches. The 10-minute speeches are a way of getting more members of Parliament involved in debate. In that way we can hear from all the regions of this country, from all the people duly elected in this House.

A government which has by all accounts fewer friends than supporters than any party has ever had in the history of this country is indeed in trouble. With less debate on this important legislation—and I will address in a few minutes what it deals with specifically, because I think it is important that Canadians out there understand that what this government is doing is choking off debate on—

Mr. Crosby: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: I hear: "Oh, oh" from the member for Halifax West. Well, oh, oh, to him too. He should be ashamed to be a member of that crowd, that gang of people which will not let the opposition speak on this bill. It imposes its will on the minority. It calls upon its huge majority in this House to do so. By all accounts that huge majority will evaporate. It will become absolutely impossible to achieve in the months and years to come.

I hope that the member for Halifax West is not one of those who will vote for restricting debate, for putting closure or time allocation on this motion.

[Translation]

—because, Madam Speaker, this government measure, Bill C-69, is aimed at reducing transfer payments to the provinces for higher education, slashing health care programs, and capping funds paid to Ontario, my province, Alberta and British Columbia under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Since 1986, Madam Speaker, this is the third time the government has been gunning for Established Programs Financing. I have it here: total EPF cut-backs between 1986-87 and 1994-95 will amount to the astronomical sum of $31.1 billion, that is reductions of $22.2 billion which should have been earmarked for healh care, and $8.9 billion for higher education. Should the provinces decide not to raise their taxes they will have to force hospitals to close a number of beds or perform fewer surgical operations to make up for these cut-backs, or again require students to pay higher tuition fees, work in overcrowded lecture halls and probably abandon their studies because they will be unable to afford tuition fees for courses for which they would otherwise be entitled to register. And yet it was on March 24, 1982 that the same Minister of Finance who is sponsoring this measure and first presented it to Parliament in his budget said, and I quote: "Let us not make hospitals, universities and colleges a battleground between the federal government and the provincial governments. Let us solve those problems outside of that arena."

Madam Speaker, that is exactly what he is doing now. He has started a terrible debate between the provinces and the federal government. He is putting the future of our young people and the health of Canadians at risk. He is abdicating the role of the federal government, which is to redistribute, to help and to give each province the funds it needs, so that we can have a universal, non-profit health-care system open to all Canadians. There are the normal criteria for programs administered by the provinces, but one is absolutely essential, namely that a program is financed by all Canadians so that it is also available in those regions in this country which may not have enough resources to bear the costs of such a program.

This country will develop and will keep on being my Canada, our Canada, if he realizes that redistribution of our wealth, our joint assets, must continue and that it must be done by a federal government that does not abdicate its leadership role, be it in the financial sector, health care, education, constitutional or other matters. I must say that this government totally abdicates its responsibilities when it withdraws from shared-cost programs, when it decides to drop these programs and tell the provinces it is their constitutional responsibility and to get on with it! Madam Speaker, this attitude is very bad for our country. It is an attitude that should be condemned. And I again condemn the government for having introduced time allocation today, a measure that will prevent us, the Official Opposition, from informing Canadians of the serious and negative impact this legislation will have on the future of our country.

M. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, the hon. member mentioned abdication, and I say it is the Liberal Party and the NDP who are doing the abdicating.

[English]

What are they abdicating? Any sense of responsibility for the affairs of this nation and for the people of this nation. They do it consistently time after time in the Chamber. They did it consistently year after year as a government with the aid and support of the New Democratic Party.

I remember being a brand new member in the House. I had the honour, on behalf of our party, to be the second speaker in a budget debate. The NDP moved a motion to get rid of that budget. The Liberals supported it. We were in a minority situation. The budget was defeated and we were gone.

What did they defeat? They defeated a budget that was acclaimed subsequently by analysts to be the fairest budget to the poor people of the nation in the decade of the seventies. Then they presume to stand in the Chamber again today and say they are standing up on behalf of ordinary Canadians from the provinces and regions.

The Liberal Party of Canada left us an absolute mess in the financial sense. We have stood up in the Chamber to present a simple piece of legislation that deals with the control of public expenditures, and that says this nation has gone on for far too long spending and borrowing. We have reached a point where 35 cents out of a revenue dollar simply pays interest on the public debt. Yet, members opposite stand up in the Chamber time after time and say: "That is not bad enough, let's make it worse. Let's spend, spend, spend. Don't raise taxes. Don't get any revenue. Just borrow, borrow, borrow."

Sooner or later $1 out of every $1 in revenue is going to have to pay the interest on the public debt. There will not be a penny for policing, there will not be a penny for the environment, and there will not be a penny for the senior citizens of the country, if we follow the advice which flows from across the Chamber to this side. The opposition says: "Don't cut your expenditures. Expand your expenditures. Don't raise revenue. Borrow, borrow, borrow". That is the mentality that sits on the other side of the Chamber.

They then have the gall to stand up in the Chamber to say that we are cutting off debate. That is the bunch—and I include both parties on the other side of the Chamber—which has refused time after time offers to extend debate in the Chamber, to meet later in the evening, to meet until midnight, or to meet on weekends to discuss a measure for an entire weekend. They say: "No, no, no, we want the House to shut down at the scheduled time. We want days and days of debate at second reading. This would give us the time to put our prejudgments on the table. We could put our philosophy on the table. But we would make no advancement on the passage of legislation which is designed to help the people of the nation."

• (1220)

We should take a lesson from Parliaments with, perhaps, more history than we have yet to offer—Parliaments that have been around for hundreds of years.

In those Parliaments, the normal time of debate at second reading is between one and two hours. Why? Because they have learned through experience that, when a bill passes out of the House at second reading and into committee, they can tap the expertise which exists in a nation to look at whether or not the fine print is right for the nation. The examination of a piece of legislation has to be done with the help of people knowledgeable in the field, people with more knowledge than we as individual members of Parliament in most cases bring with us to the Chamber.

We get the help of witnesses in committee to look at the fine print. We have an opportunity to study a piece of legislation for days, weeks, or months, depending on its complexity, its importance, and the willingness of Canadians who have the knowledge base to assist us in the fine-tuning of that piece of legislation.

After that, the legislation should come back to the Chamber where it should move rather quickly through report stage and third reading. If there are amendments members want to propose at report stage, then they should be considered. Short speeches should be made about them. The House is either persuaded or not. We should then vote on them, and they should be disposed of.

The entire process for second reading, report stage and third reading, in terms of actual time in the Chamber, should be no more than a day in almost every case, or a day and a half in the unusual case. Yet what do we find on this particular piece of legislation? Even after we pass the motion for time allocation today, it will have taken three days simply for second reading stage in the Chamber. It will have cost a minimum of $3 million of public time and expense. That is $3 million to listen to the kind of drivel that people watching television are hearing in the Chamber today. That is only through second reading.

After second reading, it has to go through committee and then comes back to report and for third reading stage. How many more days will the jokers on the other side of the Chamber want to spend on it? How many more millions of dollars of taxpayers' funds will they want to spend standing in the Chamber spewing rhetoric that is not based on reality? We should not be voting on time allocation today, we should be voting on the bill.

It is very, very simple. Does the House believe that the time has come to cut public expenditures? Or, does the House believe that we should continue to expand public expenditures?

The only thing at issue here today is whether or not there is a single, responsible individual on the other side of this Chamber—even one member of the opposition—who is not under their Whip's control and who has the courage to stand up in this Chamber and vote for this measure. Some of them come from backgrounds from which they know that you cannot continue to expand public expenditures and to borrow money without creating massive inflation, massive unemployment, and massive problems for the senior citizens and others in the country.

That is the prescription that was in place, basically, from 1972 through until 1984, which those two parties followed. Their philosophy was: "Spend, spend, spend. Don't raise money. Borrow, borrow, borrow."

What did that philosophy lead to? It led to the worst unemployment rates this country has ever seen. It led to interest rates of up to 24 per cent and inflation rates that were absolutely killing for people on fixed incomes, the seniors of this country. It created enormous problems of spousal battering resulting from family tensions and monetary tensions. Divorce rates were rocketing out of sight because of the same kinds of tensions. It was an absolute disaster for the country.

There were twelve years of gradually increasing disaster. Many of us in the Chamber watched it. Those of us who were not in the Chamber then were watching it from outside. Now, they want to go back to it. They want to stall the Chamber from taking the sensible steps which need to be taken.

Looking down the hall to the other place, we see the legislation that is piling up. For example, there is a piece of legislation related to unemployment insurance that would enable us to provide training to Canadians. They need that training to be able to hold jobs, to make our industries more productive, and to make our economy better and our standard of living higher. Members opposite stalled it here for months and months, and then an unelected place down the hall stalls it for months and months. They then stand up here and say that we, on this side, are against democracy.

As you know, Madam Speaker, there was an election and we won it. We are responsible for our programs, but now they are trying to make us responsible for their obstinance, their obstructionism, and their waste of dollars in this Chamber. That is what they would like us to be responsible for. I say Canadians are too wise.

Canadians know that when they do not have the money in their family budgets they have to cut. Canadians know that it is the job of this Chamber, if it is going to act responsibly, to move quickly on those measures required to cut public expenditures and to get expenditures under control in the best interest of Canadians from one coast of the country to the other and from north to south. All Canadians will benefit from the passage of this legislation, an initiative whose time has come.

We have the obligation to get on with it, and to get on with it today as quickly as possible, and to get over this silly nonsense of obstructing things that are indeed in the national interest.

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Madam Speaker, I have just a few words to say concerning this particular motion before the House, and a few words concerning the address just given by the hon. member opposite.

There are two primary functions of this Chamber. One function is legislative. The other function is accountability of the Government of Canada to the people of Canada. Simply to say that there is only one function for a Parliament is to overlook perhaps the main function of legislatures throughout the world which have established their procedure under what we call the British parliamentary system.

The hon. member who just spoke went into some detail in putting forward the argument that other legislatures in other countries under the British parliamentary system have rules that mean, for example, that a motion must come to an end at the end of the sitting day. Instead of having this particular piece of legislation before the House for three days, as the hon. member said, it would go through in one day and then to a committee of the House. After careful examination in committee where the real work is done, it would then come back to the House.

However, what the hon. member is overlooking, of course, is that, although that may be one difference between the Parliament of Canada and the Parliament of Great Britain or Australia, there are other differences that make up for the loss of accountability that one finds in time limitation measures enshrined in the parliamentary rules of those legislatures. Most of the Parliaments that have built into their rules a time factor that a motion comes to an end at the end of the sitting day also have committees that originate their own terms of reference. In other words, the real accountability and the action in those Parliaments are in the committees. They are not in the Parliaments themselves.

• (1230)

You say that the legislature is separate from the Parliament. Even in Question Period notice is given of a question, but the committees originate their own terms of reference. They decide what they will do. That is where the accountability function has been established for those legislatures.

It is unfortunate that over the years the Parliament of Canada has lost that aspect of accountability. That is that the executive would be accountable to the people through the Parliament of Canada. That is the primary function of the Parliament of Canada. We have evolved our system to the point where if you examine the rules correctly, you find that no minister has to answer a question. If you examine the precedents of the Canadian parliamentary system, you find that no minister is held accountable for actions of his department or his officials. It is a far cry from Erskine May and Beauchesne to what we have today. To remove the accountability factor and to keep bringing in time allocation or closure on legislation removes from the Parliament of Canada its most important function.

The hon. member mentioned that three days of debate was long enough for second reading of this particular piece of legislation. I have to question that. The legislation that he was referring to puts a cap on and limits spending by the federal treasurer. I will use the transfers to the provinces for health and post-secondary education as an example. Once upon a time, Madam Speaker, we had what we called the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Care Act under which the Parliament of Canada had to pay to the provinces certain sums of money for the operations of hospitals. That changed a few years ago to block funding. The provinces do not necessarily have to spend that money on those particular operations but they certainly cannot afford in this day and age to have the Government of Canada saying: "Look, for the purposes of running hospitals and running your health care scheme in your province and in running your post-secondary institutions the Government of Canada is going to limit expenditures." It is not only that but it is even more serious when you consider what is actually taking place in those two areas. There were two areas that you would never touch if you had a choice and if you had a certain amount of money in the government treasury. The two areas that you should never touch should be health and post-secondary education. If there is an area that should be beyond the axe, it should be hospitals and health care.

In this day and age we have many new machines and inventions to be purchased and operated by our hospitals. Certain provinces in our nations do not have certain machines for health care and other provinces do have machines for health care. In certain provinces there are patients waiting in the corridors to receive medical treatment there instead of in hospital rooms. People wait in line for days and weeks and months for bypass surgery. When you have all of those things taking place, certainly the one area you would not dare touch—you would not think about it, you would not contemplate it and you would not dream about it—is health care. You would not touch that at all if you knew the facts and realized how important our hospitals are and how important our health care system is. That is what the Government of Canada has done. So when the hon. member says "Well, you know, it is going to take three days for second reading on this bill", the Canadian public is saying it should take three years.

The Parliament of Canada is supposed to hold the Government of Canada accountable for the people of Canada. That is the function of this Parliament. It is not to simply legislate. If that is the sole function of Parliament then let us get rid of the opposition parties totally. Let us have only one system brought in whereby the government will only introduce the legislation and no one will say anything about it at all.

An hon. member: They would like that.

Mr. Baker: On the other hand, look at the other thing the government is cutting back; post-secondary education.

Madam Speaker, you are telling me I only have one minute left. Let me say this in the one minute.

Post-secondary education. The present system that has evolved in this country is that only the rich can really afford to go to university and post-secondary education comfortably. Only the rich can afford it.

Today, this government has brought in a measure to charge for a student loan. Imagine not only paying the interest on a student loan which is hard enough to get now, but you pay a fee to get a loan, plus the interest. That is where the Government of Canada is heading.

The Government of Canada should be held accountable to the people and should not be bringing in closure. The people of Canada do not agree with this measure before us today.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Madam Speaker, I find it ironic that I have more opportunity to rise in this House to speak on closure and time allocation motions than I do on the substance of bills. I think that is very indicative of the attitude of the present government that their idea is to make sure that matters cannot be put fully before the public. I keep wondering why, particularly with a bill like this, the government does not want full debate on this type of legislation? It has a tremendous impact on the provinces and therefore on local communities.

When I look at it from my community of Surrey, I realize why the government would not want a full discussion of this bill. I am surprised that my hon. friend, the member for Surrey—White Rock, is not demanding an opportunity to discuss fully before this Parliament what impact this legislation will have on our municipality.

The premiers issued a statement at their annual conference stating that this unilateral changing of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements is detrimental, particularly for provinces like British Columbia where there is a growth in population. The impact is severe.

For municipalities with a very fast growth rate, the impact is overwhelming. Surrey has a dramatic lack of resources. It is faced with absorbing the fastest rate of growth in Canada. From 1979 to 1989 there was a 45 per cent increase in the population, which was 125,000 people. In the next 10 years the projected growth rate will be another 140,000 people. That is an 85 per cent growth increase in the number of people over the age of 70.

• (1240)

In terms of health care, those over 70 represent a seven times greater impact on hospital services than those aged 15 to 69. What we have is a crisis in health care in Surrey. The Surrey Memorial Hospital has 1.67 acute care beds per 1,000 population. If you take out those people who are stuck in acute care beds because there are not adequate long term care facilities, the elderly who should be in long term care seniors' beds, it is reduced to 1.3 beds per 1,000 population. That is compared with the B.C. provincial target of 3.3, the B.C. provincial average of 3.8 or the city of Vancouver, 6.4.

I am sure that the Tories do not want this information fully before the public. They do not want the public in Surrey to understand that through the curtailment of the federal-provincial funding, $7.3 billion is going to be removed. That is $250 million a year in payments to the province of British Columbia. What could Surrey do with an extra $250 million to meet its critical shortage of health care? The Tories want to limit debate. Certainly, they do not want a full discussion of the impact of the federal government pulling back from its responsibilities in health care.

The government keeps saying that the provinces can absorb it. That is all very nice, but in British Columbia we had a budget brought down last week that had a deficit of $650 million. Even the Socred governments could not cook the books to hide that deficit. It is there. There is not the ability for the provinces to simply pick up and bring in that money to make up the reduction from the health dollar by this government.

Of course, the government does not want a discussion. It does not want a discussion on the curtailment of the Canada Assistance Plan. Canada Assistance Plan money is designed to alleviate poverty and to do away with the causes of neglect and abuse. That is what it is designed to do, to provide services to deal with poverty, to provide services to do away with the causes of neglect and abuse. British Columbia, and particularly Surrey, are in a crisis in our social service programs.

This government has simply said that it will simply not continue to support any expansion, regardless of the fact that there is a dramatic shift in population, regardless of the fact that there is a growth in our municipalities. What is it curtailing? What does it they want to make sure the public does not understand? It wants to make sure it does not understand that this Tory government does not support programs any longer that provide services to abused children. It will curtail them.

In the last three to four years, there has been increased awareness of sexual abuse in this country. What is the Tory response? In provinces like British Columbia, it says: "You cannot expand your programs any more." The fact that the public is finally realizing that sexual abuse is a major problem in this country means nothing. It simply means that what they are doing is saying: "We will not allow for any expansion of services." They do not care what the impact is on children, and the life long damage that is caused by sexual abuse.

Prior to being elected, I worked in Vancouver with one of the street programs that tried to work with street prostitutes, young girls and boys aged 13 and 14 who are on the streets.

They are involved in drug abuse and prostitution. The government simply says that it does not want an expansion of those programs for them. In Surrey in the last two or three months articles in the paper have talked about a growing street problem in Surrey. These kids are now being called the sidewalk kids because they are not, as yet, into the heavy drug scene and the heavy street prostitution like the street kids.

There is a need for expanded services, youth programs, counselling programs and drug counselling programs to ensure that these sidewalk kids do not become the street kids in two years and in five years the ones who are occupying our jails and our mental hospitals.

The government is saying that it is going to curtail any expenditures and any expansion of programs to meet these needs. No wonder the government wishes to cut off debate. No wonder the government wants to make sure that there is limited time in the House where the impact of its cut-backs can be discussed and debated. As one hon. member said, we are not talking about philosophies or opinions. We are talking about facts. There is a critical shortage of acute care beds and increasing problems with street kids.

Hon. members over there may laugh, but come out to a municipality like this where, every weekend, there are problems with juvenile girls hustling on the street, problems with drugs and the increased use of cocaine. If you guys think that is funny, I am sorry. I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party do not think it is funny.

In closing, an hon. member opposite said that Canadians are wise and they will not be fooled. Well, Canadians are wise and that is why this government is down to 16 per cent in the polls. In British Columbia it is down to 12 per cent in the polls.

Ms. Mitchell: And going down, down, down.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I want to take the opportunity to join in this debate in the hope that I can provide some semblance of reasonableness and common sense, in view of the disinformation, misinformation and delusionary thinking expended in this House by members of the opposition, both in the Liberal party and the New Democratic Party.

The issue is very simple. We are talking about time allocation on a matter before the House of Commons—

Mr. Gauthier: Guillotined! Shutting down the House!

Mr. Crosby: Why would we do a thing like that? Well, let me tell you very briefly why. We are talking about Bill C-69 which proposes to enact restraints of government expenditures. Did this happen yesterday, the day before, or in the last week or two?

Mr. Gauthier: After an hour and 20 minutes of debate!

Mr. Crosby: No, Madam Speaker, this was brought before the House of Commons in full dress on February 20, 1990, as part of the budget of the Minister of Finance. He made all of these issues very clear and our system provides for six days of budget debate, three votes, three opportunities to express an opinion on the measures in the budget, on the whole of the budget, and this House voted affirmatively on all occasions to pass the budget. So, what we are talking about is a fait accompli.

The government has already made it clear—

Mr. Gauthier: Any means justifies the end.

Mr. Crosby: —that it has embarked upon a program of expenditure restraint. The program has been outlined in the budget very carefully and prudently, and this Bill C-69 simply implements those measures. I am sure people are saying that if that is the case, if this is part of the budget, if it has already been decided by the government that this is the way we must control expenditures as part of government policy, why are we bothering to debate this minor aspect of the budget implementation?

I can tell the people of Canada why we are doing that. It is because the Opposition have embarked upon a program of delay, of harassment of government measures and so on. why? Simply to prevent the government from putting through its program.

• (1250)

I think they are afraid that the strong medicine that the government has recommended will work, that the economy will improve, that production will increase and grow, that jobs will be provided. The opposition does not want that to happen, and let me tell you why. If they really thought these measures were so harmful, if they really thought they were going to profit in terms of public popularity by the dangers of government measures, they would allow the measures to pass. Then the public would see the action that results.

Instead, knowing that there is a definite commitment to these measures, the opposition harasses the government and causes inappropriate if not improper delays in this House of Commons because they do not want the government program to be implemented, knowing it will work.

Mr. Karpoff: What about child abuse? What about child prostitution? What about health care?

Mr. Crosby: It is not arm-chair socialism; it is not deluded liberalism; it is hard-nosed economic fact. The government deals day after day with those hard-nosed economic facts.

Let me tell the member from British Columbia that there will not be any social program for street children; there will not be any programs to help children in the streets of Canada; there will not be any hospital care—

Mr. Karpoff: Sixty per cent of the population can't get health care.

Mr. Crosby: —there will not be any educational programs unless we balance our budget and make our revenues concur with our expenditures. The basis for social programs is a sound economy, a national treasury that has sufficient money to pay for the programs that his party claims to want.

They are destroying the foundation of those social programs by standing in this House and prevailing against budgetary measures on the revenue side, on the expenditure reduction side, that will ensure the continuation of the social programs that we all need and Canadians have come to respect.

Mr. Gauthier: You are mixing carrots and oranges.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, I want to expose the hypocrisy of opposing government measures to raise revenues and restrain expenditures because that is what will support social programs now and well into the future.

Let me talk a bit about the delays. We already have documented in the House of Commons in the word of the hon. member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan of the New Democratic Party, that he and his party have indeed embarked upon a program of delay. In fact on March 23, 1990, when he was defending this very action he said on page 9683 of Hansard:

> You will find that in no way has the New Democratic caucus broken any rules of this Chamber. We have used the rules in order to point out our objections to a specific piece of government legislation, the goods and services tax. We have been thwarted in some ways in our attempts to frustrate the government by lack of assistance from the Official Opposition.

Mr. Karpoff: Nobody wants the GST!

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, the GST has been brought to the House of Commons as a financial measure to ensure the solvency of the government of Canada, to ensure that the national treasury has sufficient funds, not this year but for years in the future, to provide social programs, and members of the opposition say: "They are thwarting that measure." They do not want a balanced budget. They want expenditures to exceed revenues.

How can a member of the House of Commons possibly desire that end result? It is simple mathematics. If your revenues are not equal to your expenditures you incur a deficit. If you do not pay your deficit the national debt rises.

Mr. Gauthier: Because you are lousy managers!

Mr. Crosby: If you have to service the national debt you do not have money for social programs. Now how can a member honestly oppose revenue increases and expenditure reductions when he knows the ultimate result of that opposition is destruction of the social programs which those revenues support?

Let me give a concrete example of that. In 1984 when the present government of Canada took office the national debt was $200 billion. It rose in four years to $350 billion, a difference of $150 billion. Eighty per cent of that increase was compounded interest. In other words it bought Canadians nothing; it just satisfied the creditors of the government. Billions of dollars were literally thrown away, not available for street children, not there to help education, not there to provide medical services because we were paying it out in interest. Yet members opposite say, "continue that policy, carry on with that policy, pile up deficits".

As a result of the actions of the government over the last four years the expenditure program was reduced by $25 billion on an annual basis. In 1984 the expenditures of the Liberal government of Canada exceeded revenues by $16 billion. This fiscal year the revenues will exceed expenditures by $9 billion, which is an exchange of $25 billion. If we add that amount to the current deficit, already too high at $28.5 billion, it would be in an astronomical deficit figure of over $50 billion. What would that do to Canada? What would that do to social programs? What would that do to medical care and what would that do to post-secondary education? Yet that is what the members opposite advocate.

I am surprised that the people of Canada are taken in by this obvious disinformation by opposition members to people across Canada. Why are they taking it in? It has spread to other organizations like the Canadian Labour Congress which has 2.2 million members across Canada who are dependent on a healthy economy for their livelihood. It has joined the New Democratic Party in militating against financial responsibility at the national level. They are going to destroy the jobs of their members and sooner or later the members of the Canadian Labour Congress are going to see this point and ask what their leaders are doing to them. They are undermining their future.

If there is not a strong national economy there will be no jobs for Canadians whether they are trade unionists or otherwise. The only basis for a healthy economy is a balanced national budget and that is undeniable.

That is why on February 20, 1990, the Minister of Finance introduced his budget. That is why we took the measures that we feel are necessary with respect to transfer payments.

For example, Established Programs Financing is a program whereby the Government of Canada supports education and health care across Canada for all Canadians. The expenditures rose 6.3 per cent. What happens when expenditures increase by 6.3 per cent on an annual basis and the government of Canada is keeping its own expenditures increase at 3 per cent?

That is a great sacrifice, of course, to public servants and to all Canadians through the tax system because Canadians are paying more money for this financial responsibility. Public servants are receiving less in increases and that is their sacrifice.

The New Democratic Party does not want any sacrifice, just to carry on with the programs that have been enforced. The former Liberal government established a policy of buying votes with people's money and they do not want it to stop. They say that we do not need these measures.

Surely their conscience is telling them otherwise and surely they recognize that the rhetoric they preach in this House of Commons is destructive to the country. What does it take to bring them to their senses, if dollar bills on a chart do not tell Canadians exactly where we stand? Do they really want us to go down the road with Brazil? Do they really want us to have 200 per cent inflation like Poland? Is that what they want for Canadians?

I tell members to be honest in the House of Commons and with the people of Canada. Join with us in letting the people of Canada know that we have a financial problem in 1990 and we can solve it. We can only solve it with sacrifice by Canadians in terms of revenues, contributions and returns of expenditure reduction. There is no other answer.

I ask members of Parliament in the opposition to come clean and admit it. Let us get on with the work of governing Canada for the benefit of all Canadians and our social programs.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East): Madam Speaker, I realize that we do not have much time left but I am very pleased to be able to get up and speak on time allocation on Bill—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): If there is consent I would call it one o'clock and then allow the hon. member to start fresh after Question Period.

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order! It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock, the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, when opportunity knocks, hesitation should not be our response.

What then should we make of the Tory government's navel gazing as Europe prepares for 1992?

The Tory putting of all eggs in the U.S.A. free trade agreement basket, their inability to obtain economic, let alone constitutional, co-operation among the provinces and their fear of initiating a European policy without prior American or NATO consent is leading to a do nothing approach to Canadian–European relations.

Meanwhile, Europe's corporations are restructuring for growth. Pan–European investment is increasing sharply while Canadian banks languish in the stupor of indifference toward investment in Europe.

Almost perversely, the Tories' budgeted for a $1.9 million cut in estimates for international economic trade and aid for 1990.

Ironically, while Canadian corporations' expenditures on mergers and acquisitions in the European Community dropped by more than 75 per cent from $1.05 billion U.S. to $165 million in 1988–89, American corporations have doubled such acquisitions from $6.5 billion to $12.9 billion in the same period.

Why are we not following that lead? Are the Tories once again serving the dictates of their American masters?

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, Premier John Buchanan's offhand remark last week that joining the U.S. might be the best of a sad set of options for maritimers in the event of a separate Quebec set off a storm of predictable protests. Opposition Leader Vince McLean responded in a predictably partisan and hysterical manner.

In truth, Premier Buchanan has done Nova Scotians a useful service. As an MP travelling back and forth between Ottawa and Nova Scotia I find myself living two different solitudes. To date, Nova Scotians have not tuned in to the reality that things have changed in Quebec.

There is a new economic confidence, and on the part of many, there is a sense that the constitutional commitments of 1980 and 1982 were only fulfilled with the accord at Lake Meech. Now, that too is being rejected by English Canadians led in no small way by two Atlantic premiers.

Separatist strength and sentiment in Quebec cannot be dismissed as in the past. Should it ever come to fulfilment, the consequences for maritimers are too horrendous even to contemplate. The maritimes should tune into the true Meech Lake debate. For us, there is simply too much at stake.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, rural Canada is in a state of severe crisis.

In western Canada seeding is just beginning, and in two weeks it will be in full swing. Not only are thousands of farmers facing the loss of their farms, but many are facing the prospect of being unable to put seed in the ground. Yet to date, there is nothing in place to assist farmers, and ensure that their crop will be planted.

In my riding of Moose Jaw—Lake Centre, like elsewhere, there are many farmers in severe trouble. One of them is Arnie Taylor. Mr. Taylor lives near Kenaston and for almost 20 years has been operating a mixed family farm. However, this year the banks have refused to lend him any money to put in his crop.

Fortunately for Mr. Taylor, the Saskatchewan community spirit still exists and a local self–help group made up of clergy, farmers and business people has been formed to, among other things, ensure that all crops in the Davidson–Craik area are planted and harvested.

Mr. Taylor is willing to take on his share of the problem, but like thousands of other rural Canadians, he expects the government to do its share as well. It is time the federal government took that responsibility seriously.

[Translation]

MOUVEMENT DESJARDINS

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of talk in the current debate on Meech Lake about the distinct identity of Quebec and about Quebec as a distinct society.

The Mouvement Desjardins, an economic and social force that has been one of the principal tools of Quebec's economic development and the take–over of Quebec interests by Quebecers, is a good illustration of what is meant by Quebec's distinct identity. Over the years, with the savings of its Quebec members, the co–operative movement has managed to rank sixth among Canada's financial institutions.

Today I want to pay tribute to the President of the Mouvement Desjardins, Mr. Claude Béland, a friend of Meech Lake, who has the courage to talk to Quebecers and Canadians about the present constitutional climate and what the failure of Meech Lake would do to the future of Canada and Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to draw the attention of the House to the thirty or so directors of credit unions in the greater Quebec City region we welcome today in the House of Commons and who, with their president, embody the pride and courage of the people of Quebec.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[English]

CONSUMERS WEEK

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, this is consumers week across Canada. I would like to urge all Canadians to take advantage of some of the many activities planned across the country.

The goal of this public awareness campaign is to help Canadians to become better informed consumers. This is an admirable goal, but I would remind the government that what consumers really need is lower interest rates and a fair and just system of taxation. Consumer spending power is being rapidly eroded by Conservative policies and no number of public information campaigns will change this.

What Canadian consumers should be getting from their government is a commitment to protect their interests by lowering the bank rate, scrapping the GST and doing something about the looming recession which may soon be upon us.

It is indeed important that consumers be informed, but it is equally important that this government be informed.

* * *

ARMENIA

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham—Whitchurch—Stouffville): Mr. Speaker, last Sunday I attended a special service in Scarborough with over 1,000 Canadian Armenians to remember the brutal genocide which began 75 years ago today in which over one and a half million Armenians were massacred in the Ottoman Turkish empire.

There were several survivors who escaped the genocide at Sunday service. We owe it to these survivors and we owe it to those who lost their lives to officially recognize that a genocide did indeed occur.

Can you imagine the Jewish people of this world being told that the Holocaust of the Second World War during which six million Jews lost their lives did not occur? Can you imagine how soul-destroying this would be to Jews? The denial of the genocide for 75 years has been a soul-wrenching experience for Armenians around the world. Approximately five years ago a United Nations subcommittee report refers to the Ottoman massacre of Armenians.

In closing, it is time for Canada and other democratic countries around the world who value human rights to set the record straight and recognize the horrific genocide of one and a half million Armenians which began in 1915.

* * *

MOZAMBIQUE

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to draw attention to the presence in Canada of Francisco Nota Moises, a prominent member of the right wing Mozambican organization RENAMO. Originally sponsored by South Africa, RENAMO is now financed by funds raised by Mr. Nota Moises from U.S. groups.

Granted refugee status in 1987, Mr. Moises has been actively soliciting funds from his Victoria residence to support an organization which has killed over 100,000 people, destroyed schools and hospitals and contributed to the creation of some three million refugees.

The brutality of RENAMO is legendary. The acts of inhuman torture and ritual assassination defy the imagination of civilized individuals. Yet, an active proponent of these atrocities has been admitted to Canada and remains here today with the tacit consent of the Government of Canada.

Efforts to have Mr. Moises' status in Canada reviewed has met with obstruction. It is appalling that an individual who is actively promoting the systematic and barbaric destruction of innocent lives can be allowed to continue to reside in this country.

We are supporting development in Mozambique with much needed assistance while we house a major contributor to the agony we are trying to relieve.

* * *

ARMENIA

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, today is the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Armenian genocide. From 1915 to 1922 more than 1.5 million Armenians, half the population of Armenia, died in pogroms whose efficiency Hitler imitated.

Throughout history, and even today, Armenians have been subjected to racially motivated violence and murder. As part of their heritage language and cultural program, students are taught the importance of remembering and fighting for justice, freedom and democracy in Armenia and around the world.

In metropolitan Toronto and throughout Canada people have learned to appreciate the courage in adversity and leadership and industry of Armenians as well as the tragic human suffering and waste caused by racism.

* * *

• (1410)

[Translation]

ARMENIA

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I know very well the Canadian Armenian community. For more than 26 years, relations of friendship and mutual understanding based on our common features have developed between that community and the rest of Canada.

I can assure you of the great loyalty of the Armenian community in our institutions in Montreal, Quebec, and in Canada as a whole. Today is a special day because we mark the 75th anniversary of the genocide of 1915, a day which reminds us of very painfull events.

Turkey should admit its responsibility in that genocide, just as the current leader of the Soviet Union recognised the role played by his country in Poland and in other similar tragedies.

As always, we sympathize with our Quebec and Canadian friends of Armenian origin and we wish them a better future, while hoping that soon, Canada will submit the matter to the United Nations. Shenorhagalyem.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL VOLUNTEER WEEK

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, this past Sunday was International Earth Day. We witnessed people all over the world demonstrating their commitment and concern for the fate of our earth. People participated in international events and they did so on a volunteer basis. They cleaned parks, sorted garbage, planted trees and did whatever it took to demonstrate their desire to be part of the solution.

This week is National Volunteer Week. It is indeed a good time to recognize the good work many volunteers contribute towards improving our environment. We encourage them for we need their help. We applaud them for they are the backbone of our communities.

* * *

CORPORATE TAXATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the corporate welfare bum of the week award is back. This week's three nominees are Magna International, which got a tax credit of $8.2 million on profits of $19 million in 1988. The second nominee is PWA, which did not pay any tax on profits of $30 million in 1988. However, it did find $250 million to buy Wardair in January, 1989. The third nominee is American Barrick Resources, which paid no taxes in 1988 on a net income of $30 million. And the winner is: American Barrick Resources.

While it did not pay a single penny of federal income taxes, this large corporation did have $4.6 million to pay its chief executive officer, Mr. P. Munk. Mr. Munk obviously earned this huge salary for his accounting prowess and for helping American Barrick Resources to be the corporate welfare bum of the week.

PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, petrochemical companies in Sarnia—Lambton continue to undertake initiatives which illustrate that the environment is rightfully becoming a number one priority.

In February, Nova Petrochemicals announced two voluntary improvements in its local manufacturing facility to improve its environmental performance. A new environmentally-friendly cooling water treatment process was initiated which virtually eliminates low-level discharges of chromium and zinc from its final effluent.

Also modifications to the flare stack have facilitated more efficient use of steam in the safety system and significantly reducing the amount of smoke emissions during flaring activities.

I applaud these efforts by Nova in its pursuit of environmental responsibility and consciousness. I strongly encourage other interests, private and public, to demonstrate a comparable commitment to our most valuable finite resource, our environment.

* * *

FORESTRY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the financial challenges facing resource-based industries today are appalling and almost insurmountable. One of the industries that is suffering the most as a result of the policies of this government is the forest industry.

The sad part is that today we have a government that is more interested in listening to its own rhetoric than it is in listening to small business and the people of Canada. The forest industry is suffering because of the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber. It is suffering because of the increased value of the Canadian dollar in relation to the American dollar. The forest industry, like many other businesses and consumers, is suffering because of high interest rates.

I call upon the government, and Canadians call upon the government, to get rid of the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber and to take growing interest rates and the value of our dollar seriously in order to put what once was a thriving industry back on its feet again. Failure to do so demonstrates in realistic terms that we have a heartless and inhumane government.

* * *

[Translation]

NATIONAL CONSUMERS WEEK

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, National Consumers Week is a way to ensure that the various market interests— consumers, companies and governments—become fully aware of its operations and their respective responsibilities. Indeed Quebec has given us an outstanding example of business and government co-operation designed to provide consumers with up-to-date information. The Montreal regional office of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has prepared a food labelling guide. With the support of Laval University and a number of private sector interests, Mr. Pierre Blais, Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and member for Bellechasse, has launched today, with participating companies, a campaign to distribute about one million copies of this guide.

Mr. Speaker, this is just one example of the way consumers, companies and the government join forces to promote a more active market place.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, John Allan, Chairman of Stelco, one of Canada's largest manufacturing firms, announced that his company is cutting 800 jobs across Canada. Mr. Allan said the impact of the Bank of Canada's high interest rate, high dollar policy is, and I quote, "adversely affecting our domestic markets for steel, while making it more difficult for the steel industry and its customers to export their products".

In light of this statement by one of Canada's key business leaders, is it not time for the government and the Bank of Canada to stop this high interest rate, high dollar policy which is so damaging to our basic manufacturing industries and the people working in them? How many more thousands of jobs will be lost before the government comes to its senses and stops this policy of high dollar and high interest rates?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I take no comfort in the announcements that the Chairman of Stelco made yesterday. I do not like to see people laid off. I do not like to see companies having difficulties doing business.

What I do understand is that, if we ignore these problems, companies like Stelco are going to have a much more difficult time in the future as they did in 1981–82. At that time the government ignored the seriousness of the inflation problem. The problem got out of control and led to the very serious difficulties that Stelco and others experienced at that time. That was a very tough lesson for us all to learn. We have learned from that lesson, and we are going to avoid that problem this time.

[Translation]

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, obviously Mr. Allan does not agree with the minister. Yesterday, Mr. Allan, president of one of the country's major steel companies, also said, and I quote: "If the present monetary policy goes on for any great length of time, the tradeable goods-producing element of the economy will suffer very serious and permanent harm".

I therefore want to ask the minister why he insists on maintaining this monetary policy of high interest rates and a high Canadian dollar, when it proves to be a real threat to the health of our economy. Why?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I guess what the hon. member is asking me to do is to engineer a drop in interest rates. If we had a reduction in interest rates at this time, with the inflationary wage and price pressures we are facing today, that will lead to higher inflation down the road. That is the very thing that Mr. Allan is concerned about, which is, according to the quote of the hon. member, "a more permanent loss in their competitive position". We want to avoid that more permanent loss in the competitive position of Canadian industry by getting the inflationary problems under control now, so that we avoid the runaway inflation that we had when inflation was not 5.5 per cent in the 1980–81 period. It was 13 per cent. That 13 per cent led to interest rates of 20 per cent to 25 per cent.

• (1420)

Surely, this is something we should be trying to avoid. We are doing everything we can to avoid this problem right now with this government's policy.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the minister will not listen to me or Mr. Allan, one of the leading business people in this country, perhaps he will listen to his own colleague, a senior member of his caucus, the member for Mississauga South and Chairman of the Finance Committee of the House of Commons. The chairman said yesterday, and I quote: "I think the monetary policy is totally wrong." I repeat the quote: "I think the monetary policy is totally wrong."

If the minister does not want to listen to me and he does not want to listen to the leading business people in this country, why will he not at least listen to the Conservative Chairman of the Finance Committee and drop his high dollar, high interest rate policy, about which even that chairman says: "is totally wrong"? Why not?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if my friend is saying that the member from Mississauga South is so correct in everything he says, why does he not accept the position that he has taken with the GST? My friend from Mississauga South said that is exactly what we should be doing as a government.

I listened to these self-righteous statements on the part of the member from Windsor West where he says we must be doing this. I ask him to consider back to what he said, as I reminded him again yesterday, prior to the 1980 election. He was put on the spot by Morton Shulman. He asked: "If interest rates go up after the election, what will you do? Will you resign?" The hon. member said that, yes, he would resign.

Mr. Shulman asked him a second time: "Are you sure you would resign?" The Hon. Member is shaking his head. I have the TV clip and I can show it to him sometime. Mr. Shulman asked: "Would you resign?" a second time. A second time, he said: "Yes." What happened when interest rates went to 20 per cent and 25 per cent? This self-righteous member sat firmly in his place, right there in the House. He did not resign.

STATUS OF WOMEN

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board.

Yesterday's report, Beneath the Veneer, shows the inequities imposed upon women in the Public Service of Canada. The Canadian International Development Agency is a world-recognized authority in programs eliminating just such discrimination. Can the minister tell us when he will implement CIDA's Social and Gender Sensitization Program in Canada's own public service?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like once again to thank very much Jean Edmonds, Edna Mackenzie and Jocelyne Côté-O'Hara for having done a very good piece of work in producing the report.

The report is the first of its kind, giving us very detailed documentation about some of the problems that exist and that we suspected existed when we appointed the task force. It defines these problems.

I can tell my colleague that the report is being acted on as of today. We are not going to hold up action on this report. We are making sure that senior managers are aware of the report, the recommendations and the problems. We will be giving a comprehensive response in a very short time.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): It all sounds very pretty, Mr. Speaker, but CIDA has had something very close to the answer since at least 1986. It is a program that has been successfully implemented in India, in Nepal and in Australia. If it works in Australia, it should work here. There is even a handbook to implement this program, written at the Côté International Institute at the Prime Minister's own alma mater.

When is the minister going to use the solution at hand, and use a Canadian program to benefit Canadian women?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize the fact that this Task Force on Barriers to Women in the Public Service followed upon a number of initiatives taken by the government to improve career opportunities for women in the federal public service and to dismantle barriers.

I would like to say that among positions directly controlled by the government—for example, in the deputy minister range—we increased the percentage of women in that group from 8.5 per cent in 1985 to 16.7 per cent. For the Governor in Council appointments, the rate of increase was from 21.8 per cent to 36.3 per cent. In the senior management category, from 1984 to 1989, we went from 6.7 per cent to 13.1 per cent. We will continue. We have been working on this issue for the last five years and we have been doing very well.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who seems more intent on giving a history lesson than trying to explain to Canadians what is happening in 1990.

There are certain realities that the minister is going to have to face about his high interest rate policy. One of those realities is that we have lost 71,000 jobs in the manufacturing sector since November, 1988. Another one is that, with the cut-backs of 800 jobs in Stelco, business leaders increasingly are saying that the high interest rates are destroying business in the country.

This minister cannot deny that interest rates have gone up 20 times since the last election and that his interest rate policy is driving Canadian business into the ground. It is driving businesses into bankruptcy and putting workers on the unemployment line. Why does the minister not address his high interest rate policy and admit that it is not working?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do point out to the hon. member that in the last three months employment is up by 64,000. That is the increase for the total in the economy. My hon. friend can be selective about her statistics, but those are the total economy statistics.

She asks why I am giving a history lesson. The only point I am making is that it is important that we learn from history. It is important that we look at what happened in comparable periods in the past, learn from the mistakes that were made at that time—and there were a lot of mistakes—and try to avoid making those mistakes now.

My hon. friend says the anti-inflation policy is not working. I ask her to consider what the inflation rate would be if we had kept interest rates down and we had a lower level for the Canadian dollar. We would have inflation up in the 6.5 per cent to 7 per cent, or maybe higher, range. That is what we are trying to avoid with the policies that we are following.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have no faith in the projections of the government, a government that projected an 11 per cent interest rate and had a budget based on that 11 per cent interest rate which had nothing to do with reality.

Last week, the Consumer Price Index indicated that inflation is increasing at least partly because of high housing costs related to the high interest rates. It is obvious that the government's high interest rate policy is increasing inflation, not decreasing inflation.

I ask the minister again: Will he admit that this high interest rate policy is, in fact, increasing inflation and not decreasing it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if we go back to projections, I remind her of the projections made by her predecessor in 1984 and 1985. When we brought in our economic policy at that time, the hon. member for Oshawa, Ed Broadbent, said we were going to see 150,000 to 200,000 job losses. In fact, it was quite the reverse. We saw 150,000 to 200,000 jobs gained as a result of the policies we had been following.

• (1430)

My hon. friend talks about housing starts. Housing starts over all in the country today are about 220,000, around the level they have been at for the last four or five years. We still have a good degree of strength in different parts of the economy.

My hon. friend asks whether the policy is working. If we had not followed the policy that we are following today, we most surely would have higher levels of inflation. It was those higher levels of inflation back in the 1970s which brought the 20 and 25 per cent interest rates at that time.

Is that what my hon. friend is calling for? Does she want to see 20 and 25 per cent interest rates again? That is what we are going to avoid as a government.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Canadians want to see some responsible economic management. Ask farmers, ask Canadian business people, ask consumers about the rate of interest and ask them what their faith is in this minister's policies.

[Translation]

The Minister of Finance is aware that every time interest rates go up, the deficit goes up as well.

With the kind of interest rates we have today, the deficit will increase by three and half billion dollars next year.

This country needs full employment, a lower deficit, a lower rate of inflation and social services. Will the minister finally admit that his interest rate policy defeats all those objectives?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says she wants higher employment and lower inflation. I do not know how she is going to get that lower inflation if she wants lower interest rates. Lower interest rates are designed to increase inflation. That is the effect.

Ms. McLaughlin: So is the GST.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Now she is talking about the GST. Let me ask her this question. Why is it that the New Democratic Party is against the GST when it will lower the cost of doing business for the farmers in this country by $240 million? It will lower their cost of doing business and lower the cost of food that they will be able to sell to the wholesalers and the supermarkets.

This is what will bring about lower inflation as we get the GST into place. For the life of me, I do not understand why the NDP is against the farmers of this country.

[Translation]

LINGUISTIC MINORITIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and concerns a decision by the Government of Saskatchewan not to proceed with the federal-provincial agreement. This is a definite step backward for minority education, and I would like to ask the minister, considering the terms of the federal-provincial agreement that was signed, with $26 million over ten years, and the government's decision not to proceed with the implementation of minority management and control of French schools in Saskatchewan, what he intends to do to help the minority in Saskatchewan.

I asked him a simple and specific question. An answer would be appreciated.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): I regret that the Government of Saskatchewan has decided not to proceed during this session. Last night I spoke to the Minister, Mr. Meiklejohn, and he again promised that his government would pursue the plan without further debate as soon as possible. And you also have this government's firm commitment, with the agreement that is in place, that it will continue to work actively for our Canadian family, the entire Canadian family.

We have here an official language community in a minority situation which must have a chance to develop and mature.

[English]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we are talking here about a Supreme Court decision which ruled recently that language minority groups in this country have the right to control and manage their own schools.

Instead of talking to the minister of education, will the minister call the premier of that province and ask him to proceed with the agreed implementation of that program? If he will not proceed, what will the Government of Canada do to help minorities in this country get access to those constitutional rights which are theirs?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the minister last night that while I regret his decision, I understand some of the problems he explained to me which are legislative and perhaps constitutional.

I have indicated that we would offer any assistance possible in helping expedite the matter and we look forward to them continuing on their full commitment to allow the governance and administration of the French language schools by the community itself. I believe that that commitment will be carried forward.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Minister of the Environment has said that he will not issue a stop-work order against the Oldman River dam even though the court cancelled its federal permit and ordered two federal ministers to carry out environmental assessments. The Minister of Transport is failing to enforce the Navigable Waters Act.

How can the Prime Minister let three of his ministers neglect their responsibilities and ignore the orders of the court?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I never said yesterday that there will be no stop-work order. I said that I will be pleased to announce today that this government has the intention to comply with the judgment so as to strike a full panel review of the whole dam project.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Would the Speaker think it might be helpful to spell the word?

We are in the process of selecting the people who will be appointed.

As far as the stop-work order is concerned, I have the transcript of my answer yesterday and I said that there are safety questions to be raised in relation to the completion of the work. We are being told that work must be completed to achieve a safety point. We do not know what exactly the safety point is. We are waiting for a report to determine that. This is the reason we have not yet made any decision in relation to the stop-work order.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, since we cannot get any joint response on the responsibility of the government, my second question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

The permit issued under the Navigable Waters Act that allows the construction of this dam, which is a necessary legal requirement for the dam to be in progress, has been cancelled by the courts.

It is now six months since that decision was made. Why is he not stopping progress on that work which is proceeding illegally?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, safety may not mean much to somebody sitting in the middle of Ottawa, but it certainly means a lot to the people of Alberta.

* * *

STATUS OF WOMEN

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the task force report on barriers to women in the Public Service was released. It documented the incredible barriers women face when they are trying to escape the pink ghetto.

Women who were sexually harassed were told that they had no sense of humour or they were given negative appraisals. A woman was told by her boss that if he were her husband he would beat her black and blue. A systems analyst was told: "You're not an engineer, you're just a stupid woman". A woman who had run her own electronics shop was asked in an interview: "Do power or hand tools scare you?"

My question is for the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. When will her government show the leadership that is necessary to change this situation? What is this government planning to do to eliminate these barriers to women in the public system and when will it do it?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to extend my congratulations to the authors of this report, Jean Edmonds, Edna Mackenzie and Jocelyne Coté-O'Hara, and also to the Hon. Pat Carney who originally initiated the report and was involved in the writing of it.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: I know that my hon. colleague will have read this report. I would really like to recommend it to all members of this House. This is not just an ordinary government report. This is a report that is rich in the experience of women and some of the difficulties which they face in this Public Service.

• (1440)

The other issue which is extremely interesting in this report is that it points out that where there is commitment, action can follow. It specifically points out that where there has been political commitment, action has followed. Where the Prime Minister has made that commitment we have seen a three-fold increase in the number of women appointed through Order in Council. Where the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Some hon. members: Time.

Some hon. members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for New Westminster—Burnaby.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, we all recognize that it gives all the statistics, statistics we have actually known about before. This is not the first report. There was a report done by Nicole Morgan, "The Equality Game" of 1988 which documents many of the same problems. Specifically, both of these studies recommend prorated benefits for part-time public employees. Eighty-three per cent of the part-timers are women.

The government has had years to study this problem.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to put her question.

Ms. Black: When will the government commit to eliminating these barriers that women face in the Public Service? When will the government show leadership?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in terms of showing leadership, since this government came into power we have started implementing employment equity programs throughout government. We implemented equal pay for work of equal value. We increased the number of women at the highest levels in the Public Service by doubling the percentage of women in its management ranks. In addition, we have more than doubled the number of women appointed to federal boards, agencies and commissions.

My predecessor, the Hon. Pat Carney, during the course of the activity, appointed this task force to go still further to allow us the means to have all the data to reach some of the barriers that were more subtle. That is exactly what the report is allowing us to do today. We will continue the task that we started accomplishing in 1984.

* * *

FISHERIES

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Last Friday in Halifax he told the Fisheries Council of Canada that he did not want the Atlantic fishery to be used as a means of qualifying for unemployment insurance benefits. Yet in February his government worked out a deal with National Sea Products deliberately designed to give fish plant workers in Canso just enough weeks of work to qualify for UI benefits. That was this government's rescue plan for a fishing community that for years has provided stable, year-round jobs for its workers.

How does this minister justify the gross inconsistency between his government's actions and his rhetoric of last Friday?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if that Liberal member of Parliament wants to take a shot at the government for trying to help people in Canso who have lost their jobs, he can do it. But go out there and brag about standing up in the House and saying that we should not be helping the people of Canso. Do it.

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canso are still waiting for the help which this government has not provided.

I would like to refer the minister to the testimony earlier in April of the former president of National Sea Products, Mr. Gordon Cummings, before the fisheries committee of the Senate. Referring to the Canso plant Mr. Cummings said, and I quote:

> Canso in particular is a hell of a good plant. It has a good labour force and a high fishing plant and all of the things you could say that are good and positive about a plant. Canso is a fine plant—the people of Canso did nothing wrong.

Yet, this government, in the name of making the fishing industry viable, is presiding over the closure of a community and blaming the victims for their situation.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put his question.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Will the minister not admit to this House that all this talk about viability is nothing more than a con job on the fishermen and fishing communities of Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, when I hear a Liberal talking about a con job it reminds me of one. The member likes to quote people. Here is one from those great Grits: "Guaranteeing people an annual income will stop Atlantic Canadians from cheating and being dishonest about the unemployment insurance system. A guaranteed annual income will stop the charade of UIC fraud in Atlantic Canada where people are playing the game when in effect UIC is an income supplement program".

Some hon. members: Who said it?

Mr. Valcourt: John Nunziata.

* * *

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, at least we now know where the minister looks for advice.

My question is for the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology. Yesterday the minister told the House that Canada could do nothing about the indirect acquisition of Leigh Instruments by Siemens of Germany and General Electric of the United Kingdom. Since last November Investment Canada has been in receipt of an application for review of that takeover of Leigh as part of the purchase of Plessey.

Why did the government sit on this application for review of the takeover of Leigh Instruments when it should have acted to save 750 Canadian jobs?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, what I said yesterday still applies. The transaction with General Electric which resulted in the takeover of the British firm Plessey, owner of Leigh Instruments, took place in England, outside the country. I repeat, the Government of Canada has no say over an indirect transaction between two international companies that took place in London. Only when this foreign company advises Investment Canada of what happened last November, and only with respect to how Siemens and GEC will share responsibility for their Canadian operations, does Investment Canada proceed with its review. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, this was what is commonly referred to as a hostile takeover. Since the takeover took place outside the country, Canada could not take any direct action.

[English]

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, Canadians who know the importance of science and technology for Canada's future are worried by the takeover of high-tech companies by foreign concerns as well as the loss of a well established company like Leigh.

My supplementary question is for the same minister. When is the government going to recognize that knowledge in Canadian companies and trained and experienced Canadian high-tech workers are a national resource for Canada that is need of protection?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the member should be particularly proud of what we did for science and technology compared with what his party did for about 20 years. I think this government has done more than that government did.

In the case of Leigh Instruments, we are worried about the welfare of those workers and we are going to use all the programs, particularly with my colleague from Employment and Immigration.

My friend knows very well that Leigh Instruments is working in the defence industry which is facing some slow downs at the present time. For that reason and the reason that, as the president of Leigh Instruments himself said, there was a problem of management, we face what we face today.

Once again, I am proud of what we did for science and technology. The Prime Minister himself proposed an advisory board. We put $1 billion into that sector and we will continue to work with it. The member's party should have done that when it had the chance.

PRESENCE IN THE GALLERY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to members' attention of the presence in the gallery of Mr. Syed Kazmi, Minister of Health, Special Education and Social Welfare, Government of Pakistan.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

* * *

• (1450)

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology as well. As the minister knows, one of the centre-pieces of the government's research and development policy is the Centres of Excellence.

I ask the minister to confirm the fact that the University of Saskatchewan is unlikely to be able to fulfil its participation in six of the 14 centres because of inadequate funding to meet infrastructure and overhead costs. Would he also confirm that so far only two of the ten provinces have committed themselves to the necessary funding to permit the Centres of Excellence in those provinces to proceed?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister for Science): Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt at all that all of those universities involved in the Centres of Excellence Program will proceed with the centres. The networks that are being developed are extremely important to this country. The funding is there on the federal side and I have no doubt that it will be there on the provincial side.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, this is a government that has cut EPF transfer payments to support university operational costs. This is a government that has not sustained an adequate level of general research support through the granting councils. This is a government that has ignored the Wright Report recommendations of long standing, that the government fund with its research grants overhead costs and infrastructure costs as well.

Will this government not finally admit that it has failed to fulfil its financial obligations to ensure that even this small contribution to national research will be able to proceed?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister for Science): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind my hon. colleague that the granting councils now receive some $700 million a year from the Government of Canada. I think that is a pretty fair record. In the coming year the granting councils' funding will increase by something like 8.6 per cent.

Do not try to tell us we are not supporting the granting councils. It is simply not true.

* * *

COMMUNITY FUTURES PROGRAM

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. We were very pleased to receive a Community Futures Program last fall in Shelburne County, which provides an excellent base for economic diversification.

Could the minister tell the House what additional resources may be available in the future to allow this program and others like it to expand?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is not only in the hon. member's riding that the Community Futures Program has been helpful. The chairman of the Economic Recovery Commission in Newfoundland is quoted as saying that the Community Futures Program has been very helpful in rural development in Newfoundland. In the riding of Gander—Grand Falls, held by an hon. member across the House, the Central Newfoundland Community Futures Committee is working on a number of programs to bring about economic development.

Under our labour force development strategy, when we get our new legislation, which we would urge hon. members opposite to urge on their colleagues, it will be possible to increase by one-third, $50 million, this wonderful program for Canadians.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. The minister will know that the much heralded Environmental Protection Act is a shockingly poor example of action. Last year only a paltry 3 per cent of polluters were charged after being caught breaking the law. There is only one lonely inspector for all of Ontario, while this government will hire 4,000 people to make sure the ordinary Canadian complies with the tax rules.

How can the minister tell Canadians he is taking action on the environment when the facts prove otherwise?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that environmental efficiency must be measured in terms of people being put into jail. We must do much better than that.

As we all know, the regulations enacted during the Liberal regime did not allow the government to lay charges under the legislation because it is said in the regulations that they do not apply to mills built prior to 1971 and more than 90 per cent of mills in Canada were built before that date. This means that we must update those regulations to be in a position to lay the charges where we have to.

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, the International Joint Commission says that the health of kids is threatened by the toxins of the Great Lakes water. There were 5,000 chemical spills, three times the number made public before. The clean-up program gets only $25 million this year, while the GST gets $111 million of a $1.5 billion total.

How can the minister justify spending billions on taxing Canadians while the environment gets shafted?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this government shares the concerns of the hon. member. The Secretary of State for External Affairs met his vis-a-vis in the American government the day after the tabling of the report to discuss that. I met Secretary Reilly last week to discuss the same things.

We think we must upgrade the efforts of the two governments to deal with this great problem.

* * *

CANADA POST

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for Canada Post. Earlier today the Conservative members of Parliament recommended in a report to privatize all rural post offices, to sell to the private sector all of Canada Post, and to increase prices and services to provide for a dividend of 40 per cent to the Government of Canada.

Will the minister stand in his place now, totally dissociate himself from those propositions and commit himself to a modern, efficient and publicly owned postal system for Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to stand in my place and applaud the excellent work by this committee in recognition of the tremendous progress that Canada Post has gone through in the last few years.

I understand the rate of return recommendation to mean that the true costs of delivering the mail, including the cost of capital, should be borne by the users, 80 per cent of which are businesses.

Is the hon. member suggesting that it is a good economic and social policy to have these business users of the post office subsidized by the general taxpayer by providing for less than the real rate of return on the money invested by the taxpayer?

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the same minister.

[Translation]

The Postal Services Review Board, the consumer watchdog, was abolished in the last Budget, ostensibly to save $3 million annually. Since Canada Post spends $17 million every year on advertising to convince us it delivers the mail, is the minister now prepared to allocate at least $3 million of this money to protecting the consumer?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, the protection of the consumer is well served by an efficient and effective post office that delivers the mail within the time limits that consumers expect.

It is obviously always difficult when you have to cut back on government operations, like the Postal Service Review Committee. It was difficult because we have this monstrous deficit which we inherited from previous governments and which we are trying to manage.

In a competitive world advertising is how you reach your customers. The post office has customers. It must advertise, along with its competitors, in order to serve its customers. The hon. member believes in state control in a socialist type of operation where advertising is unnecessary. We don't.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who will know that less than two years ago Canada organized and hosted a major landmark international conference on the atmosphere, now known as the Toronto Conference.

During that conference international scientific consensus was achieved that we need to reduce carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent by the year 2005. Canada agreed to that. The scientists and politicians who were there realized and publicly stated that our problems with the atmosphere are just as serious, if not more so, than the threat of nuclear war.

• (1500)

Is Canada's word good, less than two years later, that we will reduce our carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent or more by the year 2005?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, Canada's word is good. The day we make a commitment it will be fulfilled.

We must make a serious commitment to know to what we are committed, and to know what will be a burden on the citizens.

As the hon. member knows, we are waiting for the most important report of the IPCC, a UN body, which will be tabled in August. And there will be a major conference in Geneva in November.

After that, there will be targets and schedules for SO2 reduction in The Green Plan for Canada.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplemental.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Just for absolute certainty for the Canadian public and for this House, Mr. Speaker, I would like to get an assurance from the Minister of the Environment who said that Canada's word is good.

When he says that Canada's word is good, does he and the Government of Canada mean that Canada will live up to a 20 per cent reduction of carbon dioxide emissions based on 1988 levels by the year 2005? Is that what the minister meant?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like the hon. member to listen to what I said.

I said that we are waiting for the most important scientific report ever seen on this matter, which will be published in August. He cannot pre-empt this report. He must wait, as we must, to know what will be in the report before making a statement and a commitment on precise targets.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-69

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Danis:

> That, in relation to Bill C-69, an act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, not more than one additional day shall be allotted to the further consideration of the second reading stage; and
>
> That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on such day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the second reading stage shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay East still has the floor.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this closure motion.

Once again the government has decided to use closure on an important piece of legislation, Bill C-69, a procedure that undermines the whole purpose of this institution and threatens the impoverished people of my province of British Columbia.

I would like to suggest that the use of closure is another sign of a scared government, a desperate government, a government with no direction and no future. Why else would it once again hide behind this motion and allow no further debate? Only two New Democrats have spoken on this piece of legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Yesterday, you handed down a decision regarding a question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead. You said that today we would probably have a chance to discuss the hon. member's question of privilege about what was said by the hon. member for York South—Weston, and I would also have something to say about the Italian community which is very shocked at what happened. I would have liked to take part in the debate but, unfortunately, I will not be here tomorrow. I would like to know when and on what date the debate will take place.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry the hon. member did not understand the situation. I made arrangements with the hon. member's office so that he would be here in the House immediately after Oral Question Period tomorrow, Wednesday afternoon, when the debate will continue.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may continue.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, is it because members of the government consider cutting services to poor Canadians, to sick Canadians, to Canadians living on the streets and dependent on food banks to eat an issue of such principle that they refuse to debate it? Are they afraid to debate the cutbacks they have made to the provinces in our social programs, our hospital and medical programs and our post-secondary education? Doctors in the province of British Columbia are crying out for help. Patients are crying for help to be served within the hospitals.

I believe that closure is being used to rush yet another unpopular measure through this House. None of us should be surprised. This is the same government that kicks out its own members for speaking their minds.

Mr. Milliken: Gave them the boot.

Mr. Parker: That is right.

They are not fooling any of the Canadian people. The public knows the score with this government. They have been telling Angus Reid and Gallup what they think of this government for years.

I am sure there are many members opposite who read the polls that I have referred to who think that they are living a nightmare. I want to tell them they do not know what a nightmare is.

A nightmare is sleeping on a bench in Vancouver because you cannot afford to support yourself. A nightmare is lining up at a food bank to get the minimum amount of food to keep your family going for another day. A nightmare is not being able to receive basic health care or education because this government has cut transfers to British Columbia. Between this government and its counterpart in Victoria the people of B.C. have received a double whammy.

The nightmare of the people of B.C. and, indeed, all the people of Canada will end the day this government is tossed out of office. That is a day that I can assure members opposite is not that far off.

I want to talk a little about accountability. During the last election Progressive Conservative candidates talked about accountability. I would like to talk about that accountability now.

Between 1980 and 1984 when the Liberals were in power, the then Minister of Transport was trying to bring about some changes to passenger rail service and make cutbacks to those services.

I travelled across Canada at that time with the present Deputy Prime Minister. He sought to save the rail system then. Yet when this government brought forward a measure to cut VIA Rail services he never said one word to protect them.

Where is the accountability in this government when it comes to hearing what the people have to say? Where is the accountability when it comes to the goods and services tax? Where is the accountability when the cutbacks come?

During the last election campaign the Prime Minister said that our social programs would be well protected. Yet today we have a situation in which transfer payments to the provinces are going to be capped and cut back—when the Prime Minister stated that they would be protected.

There is no accountability on that side of the House. Canadians are sick of a government that subsidizes corporate entertainment to the tune of $1 billion a year while the lines at the food banks continue to grow longer.

Canadians are sick of a government that asks lower and middle-income Canadians to pay for the debt that it has created. Canadians are sick of a government that would rather argue with physicians through multimillion dollar television commercials paid for by the taxpayers rather than on the floor of the House of Commons.

Literally millions of dollars are being spent to promote the goods and services tax which this government is trying to impose on the Canadian people. However, when we want to argue to protect the social programs, the hospital programs and post-secondary education programs in my province of British Columbia, we are not allowed even to debate them.

• (1510)

This government can continue to invoke closure. It can continue to cut programs to those most in need. I would like to leave the government with one thought. In 1992 or thereabouts, the Canadian people are going to institute closure on this government. I can assure you of that, Madam Speaker.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, we are debating a motion of time allocation concerning Bill C-69. Such a motion concerning other bills, as well as closure, has been debated more times since December, 1988 than almost any other issue that we have talked about in Parliament.

In his remarks this morning the member for Halifax West stated that we have known about Bill C-69 since it came forward in the February 20 budget. He said that because it was in the budget all Canadians know about it. As far as I am concerned, that is not the case.

As the member of Parliament from the riding of Hillsborough I believe that I and every other member of Parliament in this Chamber should have the right and the time to discuss the issues that are very important to their ridings and, indeed, to their country.

Under the EPF the federal government provides equal per capita financial assistance to all the provinces through the transfer of tax points and cash pay-outs. The transfers were to assist provinces in their responsibilities in health care and post-secondary education. Over time, and after many meetings with representatives in both health care and educational fields, the message that has been reiterated is that the provinces need more money to function, not the same amount or less money.

Since the government came to power in 1984 it has on three separate occasions reduced the amount of federal transfers to the provinces for medicare, hospital services and post-secondary education.

The impact of these cuts on Prince Edward Island alone up to 1995 will mean a loss of $155 million. For every man, woman and child in that riding it means a cost of close to $2,000 each. In turn, the spin-off of these cuts once again enters the millions of dollars.

The government tries to fool the people by saying that the richer provinces of Alberta, Ontario and British Columbia will be receiving less funding, therefore leading us to believe that the poorer provinces will be receiving more funding. However, that is not the case.

Education is the lifeline of Canada's future. However, this government continues to cut back on funding to students and post-secondary educational institutions. Each year as the population increases and more students realize the necessity of an education the demand for classroom space is increased, while the number of instructors per students will decrease if the funding for the extended budget is not there.

As our health care system advances we find people living longer lives and the rising cost of high technology medical equipment placing a further burden on the system. Now what we have are two essential systems. As the member for Gander—Grand Falls said this morning, there are two systems in this country that should never be touched when we come to cutbacks, belt tightening and restraint. They are health and education.

Now, instead, we have these two groups pitted against one another for funding due to the nature of the allocation of the funds. If the provinces now decide not to increase taxes, they will be forced to make cutbacks. In turn, the hospitals will have to close beds, limit costly operations or find other reductions.

On the other hand, students will face higher tuition fees. In the outlying regions, the Atlantic region and other regions of Canada, not only will students face the high cost of tuition fees but in those areas where seasonal employment and low paying jobs are the norm the problem will be to find a job at which they can earn enough money to see them through their education. Now, with the costs being higher, this will be even much harder to do. They are going to face overcrowded classes, or other cost-cutting measures.

I now want to reiterate a statement made by the Minister of Finance on March 24, 1982, when he said: "Let us not make hospitals, universities and colleges a battleground between the federal government and the provincial governments. Let us solve those problems, not on the backs of the hospitals and the universities. Let us solve those problems outside of that arena."

We are all aware that the deficit is a very serious and a very real issue. However, the deficit cannot be passed from the federal government to the provincial governments, causing further burden on the various regions across the country. The Atlantic region, as we know, has seen tremendous reductions in federal government financing over the past year, and it will be particularly affected by these moves.

In my riding of Hillsborough, a great many people are on a fixed income or are seasonally employed. I would like to stress that they are seasonally employed not by choice or by laziness. Now they face the possibility of another burden around their necks, that of the GST in 1991.

With the government now transferring its debt we will see an increase in both municipal and provincial taxes, adding further insult to the injury of my constituents. Municipal governments are already facing increased burdens with the decline of municipal infrastructures across the country. They cannot afford to deal with the costs associated with the federal government passing the buck.

The government must begin to negotiate with all the provinces regarding regional planning and to consider the growth factor across the country and the need to upgrade all our facilities in all of the provinces. In doing so, it must propose a framework for the progress of the nation in order to ensure equal access for all Canadians to educational and health care institutions.

I would like to conclude by saying that Prince Edward Islanders are fully aware of the deficit problem Canada is facing. We are more than willing to do our fair share. But, as I speak, our share is growing.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On debate, the hon. member for Kootenay—Revelstoke.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Could Madam Speaker advise me as to how much time I have?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member has until 3.26.

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, thank you very much.

Before rising to speak to Bill C-69, I checked a few figures. I found that the number of times the government has used closure is absolutely phenomenal. In the Thirty-fourth Parliament alone, we have seen some 17 times that the government has used closure, as well as an additional five times for time allocation. When we consider the number of sitting months we have been in session since the election of November 1988, that is approximately twice per sitting month since then. It has been invoked almost once every two weeks.

One begins to wonder just what kind of mind-set exists in the government. Maybe, in the beginning, in those cases when the government considered that members of the opposition were taking extra long lengths of time over some of the serious issues it had brought before the House in the last year and a half, it was necessary. But, it became a habit and the guillotine fell time and time again. I do not know how many times it has happened since the new government House leader assumed his role. He should have been watching the French Revolution on television recently. The use of the guillotine here and the axe falling again and again makes me think that the new government House leader is the Maximilien de Robespierre of the Conservative government and the Whip is Saint-Just.

The government should bear in mind what happened to those people. People who bring the axe down time and time again, in order to deny legitimate dissent, and in order to disallow legitimate dissent from having an opportunity to fully express itself, will end up being the victims of their own weapons.

• (1520)

Members of the government like to say—and I have heard several of them say it in this debate, the few of them who have spoken—that one has got to make hard political choices. They say: "We have to cut somewhere". They say that they have to make choices about what they are going to spend, what they are going to cut, and that there is only so much money going around.

I want to remind them that on the day prior to the last budget they brought in a bill—I believe it was Bill C-52—which was voted for unanimously by all members of the Conservative party and by all Liberal members of the Official Opposition. The supposed purpose of that bill was to reform registered retirement savings plans. But the effect of that legislation, supported by both the Liberals and the Conservatives, was to pass on large tax savings, totalling some $300 million to $350 million per year, to the sole benefit of Canadians who earn over $86,000 per year. That same legislation took away benefits from Canadians who earn under $40,000 per year. They made their choice then.

I mention this because the reasoning of some members amazes me. One of my Liberal colleagues, as reported in The Ottawa Citizen of Thursday, April 5, said: "Let us have no illusion about what this bill is about. It is a tax bill to help the rich". That was the Liberal member for Willowdale who, assuming he was here at the time, voted in favour of the legislation which he says is a bill to help the rich at the expense of the relatively poor.

The government has made its choice and members of the opposition made their choice. The government says now that we have to go along with cuts to women's programs, drastic cuts through tax increases to municipalities, and radio licence fee increases of up to 1,800 per cent in some instances in my own locality. It says that it must cap the Canada Assistance Plan to the detriment of people on social assistance, those who are at the bottom rung of Canadian society economically. It will hurt our health care system through cuts and the freezing of revenues under the Established Programs Financing.

For the government to claim that this is necessary, while just days before the last budget it handed over one-third of a billion dollars to those Canadians who earn $86,000 and up, is more than mischievous. It is a betrayal of the people it is supposed to represent, the majority of its electorate. Those people did not benefit by this action taken the day before the budget. Those people are going to be hurt by the legislation that is before us today.

It is no pleasure to take part in a debate like this. But it is a responsibility that we have to take seriously to point out to the government again and again that it must begin to be consistent. If it has to make cuts, then make cuts to those who can afford to be cut. Do not attack those least able to defend themselves, while at the same time rewarding those who do not need the help of any of us.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Danis), which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 245)

YEAS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Beatty
Bertrand
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Bouchard (Roberval)
Bourgault
Cadieux
Casey
Chartrand
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Corbeil
Couture
Danis
DeBlois
Della Noce
Dorin
Edwards
Fee
Fontaine
Gérin
Gustafson
Hawkes
Hogue
Hudon
James
Johnson
Kempling
Langlois
Layton
Lewis
Lopez
Martin (Lincoln)
McCreath
McKnight
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Porter
Reimer
Richardson
Schneider
Siddon
Stevenson
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Valcourt
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Wenman
Wilbee
Winegard
Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bjornson
Blenkarn
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Brightwell
Cardiff
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Cole
Cooper
Côté
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
de Cotret
Dick
Duplessis
Epp
Ferland
Friesen
Greene
Halliday
Hicks
Holtmann
Hughes
Jelinek
Jourdenais
Koury
Larrivée
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Littlechild
Marin
Mazankowski
McDermid
Merrithew
Monteith
Mulroney
Oberle
Plamondon
Pronovost
Ricard
Saint-Julien
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Sparrow
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Van de Walle
Venne
Weiner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—111

NAYS

Members

Angus
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Benjamin
Boudria
Callbeck
Catterall
Crawford
Ferguson
Fulton
Gagliano
Gauthier
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hovdebo
Jordan
Keyes
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
Laporte
Lee
Manley
McCurdy
McLaughlin
Milliken
Mitchell
Parent
Peterson
Proud
Riis
Rodriguez
Speller
Volpe
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—64
Arseneault
Bélair
Black
Brewin
Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
Dionne
Finestone
Gaffney
Gardiner
Gray (Windsor West)
Hopkins
Hunter
Karpoff
Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Lapierre
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacLellan
Marleau
McGuire
Mifflin
Mills
Nault
Parker
Pickard
Prud'homme
Robichaud
Simmons
Vanclief
Wood Young (Gloucester)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

It is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 38 to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Nepean, Goods and Services Tax; the hon. member for Ottawa West, The Environment; the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing, Regional Development.

The Chair is waiting for a little more calm and quiet in the House before recognizing an hon. member. Resuming debate. The hon. member for Halifax.

* * *

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, April 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-69, an act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Ms. Langan.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to be recognized. I rise today to speak on Bill C-69 and the disastrous effects that the cutbacks in established program funding will have on the various areas of Atlantic Canada that are concerned.

The two major areas of my own riding of Halifax, my own province of Nova Scotia and my region are of course those of post-secondary education and health care. I spoke briefly in the time allocation debate regarding the necessity of matters such as this having a full airing, and that the duly elected members of the opposition being permitted to do their job and represent the attitudes and the beliefs of their constituents in a debate as important as this one is. Consequently, I am delighted that I will be one of the few who will have the opportunity to make remarks in this particular area.

The government has launched a massive assault on funding for post-secondary education. The combined effect of the freeze, the 1 per cent reduction in the EPF funding after the freeze expires and Bill C-96 and Bill C-33 will result in almost $9 billion less in post-secondary funding by 1995. This is an estimate prepared by the Canadian Association of University Teachers.

Given the fact that education is the future and the hope of Canadians nation-wide, what we are seeing is a withdrawal from and a refusal to recognize the fact that this sort of program is the only sane kind of investment in our future that Canadians want to see, need to see and have a right to see. I speak from the heart when I talk about the plight of universities in Atlantic Canada. A number of my colleagues across the way will know that I speak correctly. I speak about universities such as Dalhousie, Mount Saint Vincent, Saint Mary's, the University of King's College, the Nova Scotia College of Art and Design, the Technical College of Nova Scotia, all of which are in or close to my own riding of Halifax.

• (1610)

I speak of St. Francis Xavier University in Antigonish, Nova Scotia, the alma mater of a number of members of this House, both past and present, not the least of whom, of course, is the Prime Minister of Canada. I speak of Acadia University and College Sainte Anne in Pointe L'Eglise in Nova Scotia. I speak of the other university that, although it is in New Brunswick, is considered under the funding rules to be partially Nova Scotian. My learned colleague from Cumberland—Colchester will know that I refer to Mount Allison University. And I speak of the University College of Cape Breton. All of these universities have a number of things in common. The first thing they have in common is a high standard of excellence in the training and education of students and in the level and devotion of faculty members. The second thing they have in common is a deteriorating physical plant and an inability to pay their faculty members up to the scale of other universities in this country. We are all aware that the farther west you go in this country, the higher salaries are for faculty and staff and the lower tuition rates are for students. Indeed, Nova Scotia boasts—if I can use that word—the highest tuition rates in the country and the majority of Atlantic students can ill-afford to pay those extremely high tuition fees.

These universities have in common the fact that their boards, faculty and students work in buildings that are long in need of major repair. They use laboratory facilities that are considerably behind those available to universities in the rest of the country. The fact that we can still compete at all with those researchers south of the border is absolutely amazing.

The tradition of education in Nova Scotia is a long one. All of the people who make up the founding peoples of the province of Nova Scotia have had a long-time belief in education, in cultural pursuits and in developing the best possible technology to keep our province in the best possible industrial and developmental patterns.

I go back back to the habitation at Port Royal in 1605 of the first Europeans in Nova Scotia. They founded the first social club in North America of which we are very proud in Nova Scotia. The social club is known as the Order of Good Cheer. One of the things that is not known is that the Order of Good Cheer was one of the first play writing schools and theatrical endeavours in North America as well. Indeed, the settlers at the habitation were encouraged by Champlain, de Monts, and de Poutrincourt to produce plays that related to their own situation in Nova Scotia back in the early 17th century.

Madam Speaker, that is a proud tradition. I hope that sometime you will come to Nova Scotia and we will be able to bring you into the Order of Good Cheer.

I bring up this particular story to shed light on the things happening in our universities. They are happening nation-wide, but particularly in Atlantic Canada, because of the massive cutbacks. The universities are being forced to justify their existence in the light of technology, in the light of preparing people specifically for jobs which relate to the more technical side of education. As it is, with that change in direction, they are still hamstrung to a great degree by this cutback in funding, none more so than in the science, medical and engineering faculties.

On the other side in education, the humanities and arts side—and I know that this is something that is dear to you, Madam Speaker, as well as it is to me— is where we really see people losing out. We see those faculty members trained in literature, in theatre and drama, in music, in the lively arts. The money is just not there. It cannot be raised to keep those faculties going and to perpetuate a tradition of Canadian culture of fostering young writers, dancers, actors, directors, choreographers, and so on. All participants make our country and its cultural life such a tremendous mix of all the peoples who came to Canada and settled here. That is a tragedy.

Beyond that sense of funding for universities being cut off in the lively arts area—the theatre schools, dance schools and so on—we also have the other areas of the humanities.

I can remember finishing my first degree in 1970, an Honours BA in English, and being told quite rightly that I was fit for nothing. Nobody would be prepared to pay me for anything I had learned in the past four years, which was perfectly true. Fortunately, I went on to further education at that point.

We all know that the employability of the average arts graduate in the country today is probably comparable to that of a high school graduate 20 years ago. I do not think anyone would disagree that if our universities are being forced strictly into the technological mode, strictly looking at training people for the job market and for nothing else, we lose another major piece of our soul. I cannot think of another word for it. Those of us who spent the time studying the supposedly arcane areas such as literature, philosophy, languages, logic or whatever, may not have been able to come out and operate computers. We may not have had technology at our fingertips, and, indeed, as I was told, many of those people are being told: "You have no skill that is marketable."

Educating in that area keeps alive and vibrant, in a country such as ours, the spirit of all our various cultures. The fact that people still study and still want to go on and teach in areas that are not particularly lucrative and that are not considered the high point of the technocratic age, says something for the commitment that Canadian academics and Canadian students have to the other side and to the theory that a person—man or woman—cannot live by bread alone.

As we see the cutbacks to Established Program Funding, we are going to see that universities will just not have the luxury of expanding, let alone not cutting back on English, drama and philosophy departments. I have nothing against computers and there is no one in this Chamber who could survive without them. But young Canadians, when choosing career paths and given the choice between a degree in computer science and a degree in English literature, French literature or philosophy, are obviously going to say: "Computer science."

• (1620)

On the other side, the pure science side, our universities in the Atlantic are dealing with equipment and laboratories that are 20 years out of date. In my university, Mount Saint Vincent, the only women's university in the British Commonwealth, we have just recently, with the consent of the former Speaker of the House, Madam Sauvé, established a Jeanne Sauvé Chair for Women in Science.

From my years as a faculty member in that institution, I can tell you of the dedication of women and men in the areas of chemistry, physics, and biology, in particular, who laboured to teach and to teach to the maximum of their ability. They laboured to bring to their students the latest developments in a physical plant that again was 20 years out of date. With the establishment of the Jeanne Sauvé Chair and with various other fund-raising techniques that are going on, that situation is being slowly changed. But the moneys that might have gone into improving the situation in science faculties at our only women's university, with the cutbacks to EPF, are probably going to have to be spread more thinly across the whole university. Indeed, there are going to many other shortfalls that will be found there, as at the other universities that I mentioned.

It is unfair and short-sighted that we take this cut. There is no question, and I am sure that many people will bring this up as we go on in this debate, that there is a deficit in the country and that the deficit must be handled. We have all discussed the varying ways that the deficit could be handled. My colleagues much more knowledgeable in the area than I am.

The hon. member for Gloucester, among others, has spoken frequently about what a 1 per cent drop in the interest rate would do to the deficit. We know that, by cutting back 1 per cent in Established Program Financing, we are saying to thousands of young Canadians: "I am sorry, but a university education, a post-secondary education, or a specific educational program that will make you a better trained Canadian and give you a better outlook on life and a better start when you come into the workforce is not going to be available to you." Universities are going to have to close classroom space. They are going to have to let faculty members go and they are going to have to cut back. There is just no other way. The only other possibility from that is that tuition fees would reflect the actual cost of educating a university student.

The actual cost of educating a university student in Canada today is, at minimum, $10,000 per year. How many Canadians in 1990, parents or students, could look at the possibility of post-secondary education and say: "Yes, I can afford $10,000 per year for tuition." This is without talking about how much money it is going to cost for living that year in university, how much money will be needed for books and transportation. With the cost for books, one must now add in the 7 per cent GST as well.

If we do this, we again become closer to the so-called model for the government, that being the United States. The majority of universities in the United States do have tuition rates that high and even higher. They have a different system there. They have endowments and scholarship funds and they have a population 10 times the size of ours to draw on. Even with that difference, the ideal of a university education in the United States of America is still one that belongs almost exclusively to the upper middle class. In the supposed land of the free and home of the brave, south of the border, it is not an opportunity that every child has. Indeed, it is an opportunity that only belongs, in general, to the well-to-do or to those who manage to achieve an academic level that is probably beyond the vast majority of high school graduates.

In Canada, the children of fishermen, coalminers, steelworkers, prairie farmers, Ontario factory workers, Quebec factory workers and fishermen, and loggers in B.C. have always known, in the post-war society, that a university education was within their grasp.

I ask the government, as it brings this bill to the vote, is this what it wants? Is this the memorial to this government that it wants, along with the GST, the end of VIA and a variety of other perfidy? Does it want people to stand up and say: "It was the Mulroney government that ended the dream of post-secondary education for the vast majority of Canadians." I hope not, but I fear so.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Madam Speaker, in her remarks, the member talked about the problems of university education. I want to ask her to expand particularly on one area.

We are facing a health care crisis in Canada, and part of that health care crisis is in terms of funding of health care programs. The other part is based on a lack of professional people being trained in the field.

In the last 20 years in Canada, we have relied upon immigration to fill the needs of our health care system with professionals, particularly doctors. Without the ability to recruit doctors from developing countries, Canada would have had a shortage of doctors. We would have had a shortage in the nursing field without recruitment from other countries.

Yet, when there is such a need, people in this country are unable to obtain employment because they do not have adequate training. At the same time, we are making university education and post-secondary education so expensive they cannot afford it. Why has the government not seen fit to put more money into the post-secondary education, particularly in some of the health care fields where there is a great need, and why it does not seem to put this as a priority?

I ask the member: What is her thinking as to why the government carries out this very short-sighted policy?

Ms. Clancy: Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Surrey North for his question.

I have to say that if I could fathom the workings of the so-called mind—if there is a collective mind-set of the government opposite—I would probably go into the fortune-telling business. But that is the short-sighted and short-term answer.

The long-term answer and the serious answer is that the dearth of moneys for professional schools, particularly in the area of health care, has been a problem for a number of years. Cutting back in Established Program Financing is truly going to put a knife to the heart of the being that is left. The being that is left is very small.

I know, for example, in my own province of Nova Scotia, outside the Halifax-Dartmouth area, with a few exceptions of certain other rural areas or county seats and towns, there are counties that have no dental services. There are counties that have a very short supply of doctors. There are counties that have a very short supply of nurses. Because nurses are so low paid in this country as a general rule, they are all moving to the United States. Perhaps not all, but a very large percentage of them are moving to the United States. They are going to Texas, and so are doctors.

• (1630)

In every medical school graduating class from Dalhousie University, one of the oldest and most prestigious medical schools in this country, there is a significant number of medical graduates every year who leave to set up practice in the United States.

We are not producing enough medical personnel to begin with. We are not opening our immigration. That is a whole other story about the small-minded, short-sighted and bizarre immigration policies in this country. But even those medical personnel that we are training, we are losing to another country. It is all part and parcel of the same malaise in the country. The malaise is that the government is not committed to Canadians, it does not have an agenda which Canadians follow and believe. Canadians wake up each morning and say "I don't recognize this place".

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I want to start by congratulating my colleague for her excellent discourse. I am sure that all members of the House would support that proposition.

Having listened quite attentively to her remarks on post-secondary education, I want to fully concur with those remarks. I want to ask another question on a slightly different topic, the mean-spiritedness of the government in cutting back on certain transfers to the provinces in the area of social assistance under the Canada Assistance Plan.

As my colleague will know, the mean-spirited government across the way introduced Bill C-21 which will cut back on unemployment benefits to a large number of Canadians. These Canadians who are suffering from that mean-spiritedness of the government across the way will then be forced on to welfare rolls. At the same time the government will cut back transfers of funds which are utilized as matching funds for welfare.

I want to ask my colleague what effect that mean-spiritedness on the part of the government will have on her region and what she thinks of those particular initiatives—if I can call them that—of the Conservative party across the way?

Ms. Clancy: Madam Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell for his question. Indeed, there lies the crux of the matter regarding how my region, his region, your region, Madam Speaker, the region of the hon. member for Regina—Wascana, how we are all going to react to this.

I was fortunate enough to attend a meeting of the Halifax city council not too long ago. They met with a welfare rights group. The city council already had a massive cut in its budget from the province which in turn comes from the Canada Assistance Plan. It was looking at ways to keep from closing a shelter for homeless teenage boys. As it happened, by cutting, scrimping, saving and making do, and also by making a fairly major increase in property taxes in the city of Halifax, they were able to make up the shortfall in the social assistance budget.

The situation is bordering on the desperate in the province of Nova Scotia. Municipalities are hard pressed. The provincial government is hard pressed. If this government is successful, if it does not change its mind and withdraw the pernicious bill, UI will effectively disappear.

We are seeing cut-backs in transfer payments to the provinces. The money is not going to be there. I do not know what is going to happen. I know it is going to be terrible, but what the particular effects will be, I am not sure. We have families and children living in the streets in all of our cities, Halifax no less than any others. This is going to make it significantly worse. Everyone in this House who has sat on a municipal council knows what I say is true. Everyone in this House who represents an urban riding knows what I say is true. We are yet to see the devastation that these cuts will cause in our urban centres from coast to coast.

Mr. Boudria: Good answer.

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure for me as well to be on my feet today to address the matter before us, Bill C–69.

Mr. Boudria: I hope the Conservative members are paying attention.

Mr. Schneider: I could not help but sit in utter amazement and listen to some of the debate that preceded my opportunity to speak. I wondered if we were in the same room, the same country and talking about the same subject. I suppose that is the option of the opposition, and that is, of course, to interpret things in their own way.

Bill C–69 as we have it before us has been interpreted by many and much has been said. I would suggest that what has been said is wrong. We have heard that transfer payments have been cut and the government has attacked education and health. All these programs according to their impression, the EPF and the Canada Assistance Program, have seen a reduction in their budget and, of course, nothing is further from the truth.

To explain to someone in a hurry that there has been a reduction in the growth is a little difficult to comprehend—

Mr. Boudria: We will explain it later; explain it slowly.

Mr. Schneider: —much more so than to understand if a member of the opposition, rightly or wrongly, says that there has been a cut. There has not been a cut. In fact, what has happened is that the rate of growth has not kept pace with previous expectations and the budget continues to grow in these particular areas. For others in the Canadian community to devoid themselves of the responsibility for the federal deficit, to complain that they are going to suffer any more than the rest of us, is of course not to carry their share of the load, and that is essentially what this bill does.

Perhaps a history of Bill C–69 and the matter we have before us would be of some interest to those who will some day read what we are discussing today. Bill C–69 was introduced in the House of Commons on March 15 of this year. Its purpose was to implement key aspects of the expenditure control plan affecting statutory programs proposed in the February 20 budget of the Minister of Finance.

Combined with the restraint initiatives announced in December 1989, this plan will reduce government spending by an estimated $3 billion in 1990–91 and $3.8 billion in 1991–92. The federal deficit is projected to decline from $30.5 billion in 1989–90 to $28.5 billion in 1990–91 and to $26.8 billion in 1991–92.

This bill affects four programs: the Canada Assistance Plan, the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program, the Established Programs Financing arrangement and the public utilities income tax transfer. I would just like to focus on a couple of these.

First, the Canada Assistance Plan. The federal government pays the provinces half the cost of eligible social assistance expenditures under the CAP. These transfers have grown from $4 billion in 1984–85 to about $5.5 billion in 1989–90, an average annual increase of 6.7 per cent. The amendments do not affect provinces which receive federal equalization transfers. The federal government will, therefore, continue to share half of all eligible expenditures incurred in these provinces.

For provinces not receiving equalization, the bill provides for a maximum of 5 per cent annual growth of CAP contributions for 1990–91 and for 1991–92.

Mr. Boudria: How do we know?

Mr. Schneider: The provinces of Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia are in a much better financial position than the federal government to finance expenditures beyond the 5 per cent growth rate. The implementation of this measure will provide for resumption of the present regime on April 1, 1992.

I would like to focus some attention on the Established Programs Financing. The EPF is the single largest transfer program to provinces and has grown from $14.5 billion in 1984–85 to almost $20 billion in 1989–90, an average annual increase of 6.3 per cent. Under EPF the federal government provides equal per capita financial assistance to all provinces through the transfer of tax points and cash payments. Historically these transfers were undertaken to assist provinces to carry out their responsibilities with respect to health care and post-secondary education. Since 1977 provinces have been able to use these transfers according to their particular priorities rather than in a more restrictive fashion required by the previous cost-sharing arrangements.

• (1640)

The bill will hold the per capita EPF transfer in 1990–91 and in 1991–92, to its 1989–90 level. However, total EPF transfers will continue to grow with the population increase of each province or about 1 per cent nationally. The bill provides for a resumption of EPF growth in 1992–93 at the rate of growth of GNP less 3 percentage points consistent with the announcement in the April 1989 budget. The growth of the total EPF transfer beginning in 1992–93 will not fall below the rate of inflation.

This change in the EPF will have exactly the same per capita impact on all provinces and represents less than 1 per cent of provincial revenues in 1990–91. Low-income provinces will continue to benefit from large and growing equalization transfers which have been exempted from the expenditure control plan.

Bill C-69 is a major component of the budget that was announced in February as we made earlier reference and I think it would be of some interest at this time to make reference to how the impact of Bill C-69 relates to the budget and more important how our budget affects our country.

Our budget is about building for the future, not borrowing from it. That is why our budget deals firmly with the major obstacle to that future, the problem of our growing debt. The measures in our budget reflect the seriousness of the debt situation we face and at the same time we have worked to ensure that the total package of measures is balanced, reflecting regional circumstances and placing the greater burden on those who are better able to carry it.

As a government we are acting with a resolve to reduce expenditures and to improve our own efficiency and operations. All Canadians are being asked to play a greater part in dealing with the debt problem.

Let me outline the actions we are taking to deal with this debt. We are reducing government spending affecting a wide range of programs from national defence to government operations. As a result of these and earlier actions program spending, relative to the size of the economy, will continue to decline significantly. By 1993–94, it will fall to its lowest level in a quarter of a century.

The budget measures will cut the annual deficit in half to $14 billion by 1993–94. As the deficit goes down the debt will shrink as a proportion of our national income. Interest costs will take less of every revenue dollar. Our healthier fiscal position will help to reduce inflationary pressures and thus create an environment favourable to lower interest rates. In this way the fiscal actions in this budget make an important contribution to achieving sustainable economic growth.

To achieve this goal a period of moderation and demand is also essential. Indeed, economic growth is expected to moderate and to average about 1.3 per cent at an annual rate for 1990. Employment will continue to grow during this period, however, but at a somewhat slower rate than labour force growth.

Over the medium term inflation and interest rates are expected to decline and the economy to resume growth at its potential rate, averaging about 3.5 per cent a year. If we had not acted, we could have faced a growing danger of higher inflation and even higher interest rates that could have led to a severe recession.

For the longer term we will continue to build a foundation for economic progress by moving forward with a balanced agenda of fiscal and economic action. The replacement of the existing federal sales tax is a key element of this strategy to safeguard essential programs and strengthen Canada's economy. The government will proceed with reform of the federal sales tax effective January 1, 1991, certainly no surprise to you. This reform is expected to result in major gains in economic output in the range of about $9 billion a year, gains that will be felt in all sectors of the economy and in all regions of Canada.

I would like to comment about the effects that this program has in total for our federal government support for education. We deem education to be an important priority. That is why the Prime Minister and the provincial premiers agreed in a November communique that they would work together to examine ways of allocating resources more effectively with a focus on results through the proposed new task force on Canada's human resource development system.

On January 30 the Prime Minister told the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology that to improve Canada's competitive position and I quote: "We must control the deficit and the debt if we are to unshackle our hands". That is what the budget and Bill C-69 are all about.

Students of today are going to be major beneficiaries of the improvement in our fiscal and economic position in coming years. As part of our broad-based efforts to get us out from under a growing mountain of debt we have introduced Bill C-69. Among other things it will hold constant for two years per capita entitlements under the EPF financing arrangements, which is the government's largest transfer to provinces. Historically, these transfers were undertaken to assist provinces to carry out their responsibilities in respect of health care and post-secondary education.

Since 1977, provinces have been able to use these transfers according to their own particular priorities rather than in the more restricted fashion required by the previous cost-sharing arrangements. In any case, transfers under EPF will remain large at over $20 billion in this year alone.

Together with equalization assistance to the lower-income provinces, the federal government will make available over $28 billion which provinces can draw upon. Federal support for education is broader than transfers to provincial governments. It includes many programs that are not affected by the Budget or Bill C-69.

These include research funding to granting councils of over $700 million this year. There is about $40 million for the innovative centres of excellence program and there is available funding of $17 million for the Canada Scholarships Program. There is about $250 million for the Official Languages and Education Program, almost $25 million for the literacy program, over $700 million for education services to native people and over $400 million for Canada student loans. There is also a large and growing amount of support for training and labour-market initiatives under the new labour force development strategy.

I would like to comment on the effects of Bill C-69 on my home province of Saskatchewan. The EPF financing transfer to Saskatchewan will be limited to the same per person levels as in 1989-1990 for the next two fiscal years. Equalization transfers, which are of great importance and in Saskatchewan are nearly 60 per cent of the size of the EPF, are expected to continue to grow with the national economy, which is much faster than other federal spending.

Growth of social assistance transfers to Saskatchewan under the Canada Assistance Plan will also be unaffected because the budget exempts provinces that receive equalization from the 5 per cent cap on the growth of these payments. The result is that transfers to Saskatchewan under these three major programs, which in 1989–90 totalled $1.23 billion, are expected to rise in the next two fiscal years to $1.25 billion and $1.29 billion. While these increases are less than they were projected to be prior to the budget, they still represent average growth of about 2.4 per cent over the next two years. Federal support to Saskatchewan is going to continue playing a strong positive role in the provincial fiscal picture.

On a per capita basis, the federal transfers are expected to amount to $1,236 for each Saskatchewan resident in 1990–91 and $1,269 the subsequent fiscal year. The comparable figures for Ontario are $956 and $963.

One of the major criticisms that I have received with respect to the attainment of office is the fact that we as a government must continue to keep our shop in order, keep our program spending under control and in fact to effect cuts. There is a feeling that we are not capable of doing that but for the record I would like to go through as many of these as time permits to explain how this government has in fact responded. That response may not have been made with the bells and whistles that would attract the eye and the ear of the average ratepayer but nevertheless we have been quite effective.

We have provided three elements to approaching a program of fiscal management. First, the government has taken action to cut the growth in spending on government programs. Second, the government has acted to increase its revenues. Third, it has put in place a policy framework which is revitalizing the private sector and will permit sustained economic growth.

Economic growth is essential if the Canadian economy is to generate new wealth and new income. This includes, of course, the Free Trade Agreement, tax reform, deregulation in the energy and transportation sectors, privatization and measures to encourage new investment.

The government previous to our election increased spending by an average of 15.1 per cent a year. This was cut to an average of 5 per cent during our first four years. Excluding interest payments on the public debt, the previous government increased spending by an average of 13.9 per cent a year and we cut this to an average of 3.6 per cent a year during our first four years in office. After accounting for inflation this means that program spending has fallen, on average, by half a per cent a year in real terms. In comparison, the previous administration increased program spending by an average of 5.2 per cent a year, and above the rate of inflation. Oh, but to have that freedom, that reckless abandon.

• (1650)

Spending has grown at a rate that is considerably less than the rate of the growth in the economy. As a result, expenditures have fallen from 24.6 per cent of GDP to 22.2 per cent last year. Spending will further decline to 20 per cent of GDP by 1993–94. Program spending has fallen from 19.5 per cent of GDP to 16.1 per cent and will fall to 15.2 per cent by 1993, back to the level of the late 1980s.

The cost of operating government, that is salaries, equipment, maintenance, et cetera, is actually less today than it was five years ago. But this does not mean the government has not acted to introduce new initiatives to meet new priorities or to deal with short-term problems such as we responded to with respect to the drought in western Canada. We continue to offer $.5 billion on a matching basis to assist the continuing dilemma that exists in agriculture today.

A further initiative we have undertaken is the privatization of 16 crown corporations. The government has improved its cash management and its use of resources. For example, the public service has been cut back to the size it was in 1973. Members of parliament have themselves set an example by receiving average annual salary increases of only 2.8 per cent over the past six years, a rate that has been considerably below the rate of increase in the average industrial wage and in the inflation rate.

Many projects have been cancelled, including the Canada Oil Substitution Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program, a savings of $180 million and $315 million, respectively. The position of ambassador to the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization in Rome was cancelled along with five other small posts. The $3.1 million Petroleum Incentives Program terminated in March 31, 1986, with an annual savings of some $600 million in 1986–87 and $1.7 billion in subsequent years. The list goes on. TV studio production services available to all members were discontinued with annual savings of some $300,000. AECL's two heavy water plants on Cape Breton Island were closed with savings of $115 million in 1985–86 and $100 million in subsequent years.

We have cancelled programs and projects in response to those people who have written to us requesting that in fact we tighten up on government spending, subsidies, and assistance programs which perhaps were not as readily available as at the time the programs were initiated.

In the area of privatization a number of crown corporations have been sold since 1984, generating revenues for the federal treasury and also producing savings on operating costs. The Northern Transportation Company is an example, saving some $27 million, plus another $26.7 in the form of repayment of debt and accrued interest owed to Canada. De Havilland Aircraft of Canada is an example, with some $90 million plus a further $65 million payable in successive instalments.

Mrs. Gaffney: A giveaway!

Mr. Schneider: Canadian Arsenals Limited, $92.2 million; Canada Development Corporation, another savings of some $361 million; CN routes, $29 million in savings; Canadair, a $120 million cash payment, and an estimated $173 million in royalty on future sales of Challenger aircraft and a $3 million dividend; Northern Canada Power Commission in the Yukon, with proceeds totalling $75 million; TeleGlobe Canada, $700 million. The list goes on and on.

In the area of management there have been several significant and rather innovative changes that have made a positive reflection upon what I deem to be fiscal responsibility in terms of responding to the will and the wishes of our Canadian taxpayers. Cost recovery is an item that time does not permit me to comment on but there are several areas where the federal government has provided incentives to workers to be more cost-conscious. This program has become more effective.

Some capital projects have been cancelled or deferred, something which is no at all popular with us. Many of these have involved constituencies represented by the government and one is liable to think that perhaps this government would favour our own constituencies over others. But I believe this government, in the final analysis, can be accused rightly of being fair. That is an accusation that I will feel proud of and continue to take home with me.

Bill C-69 is a major portion of our federal budget. It is an attempt to further bring our economic house in order and while it is a tough measure in some quarters I think that if one wants to be fair one has to conclude that it is a fair measure.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Madam Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the member from Regina—Wascana.

The member and I once both belonged to a national organization, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. I was the Director and he was the President of that organization. It strikes me as odd that when he ceases to be a municipal politician and becomes a federal member of Parliament, suddenly his opinion changes on the importance of transfer payments to the provinces. It is almost a bit of double speak. It is very confusing for the people not only in his constituency but also in mine, and equally so for the Federation of Canadian Municipalities.

The federation is saying that cutback in transfer payments to the provinces will have a tremendously adverse affect on the provinces and, in turn, the municipalities. It will affect their ability to cope with their infrastructure problems, the educational problems and the health problems that are affecting the municipalities.

Does the hon. member not feel that he is carrying a different message today than from what he carried for many years as the Mayor of Regina and through the Federation of Canadian Municipalities?

Mr. Schneider: Madam Speaker, believe it or not I do thank the hon. member for the question. I know her well, and know the spirit in which the question was asked.

First of all to clear the record, I never was at any time President of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. I should have been, I thank the hon. member. I did come very close to being on that elite group because I did sit on the executive.

The hon. member said that as a municipal politician I had a certain perspective and now that I am federally positioned, my position seems to have changed. She wanted to know how that happened. I would like to advise the hon. member and the House that my perspective has not changed a bit. During the time that I was the Mayor of Regina it was our goal as dictated to us by the responses of the citizens of Regina to be fiscally responsible.

During the last three years that I was in office, we effected a zero per cent increase in the rate of our own financial expectations in that we made political heroes out of ourselves by having a mill rate increase of zero for some two years. Another year, it was below the rate of inflation.

We did that anticipating that we would receive continued growth from our other two favourite sources of funding, namely the federal and provincial governments. When that does not happen then we as municipal politicians have every right in the world to scream, kick, holler and blame others, because certainly we do not want to take the blame ourselves. Whatever our role, we fulfil a function that is rather infallible. Of course, as a result we would not take the blame.

With respect to Bill C-69 we as a federal government have simply followed the budget, and proceeded with an intense and serious program. It is an extremely difficult path to follow because we know it is not a popular one. On one hand we get reams of mail from people telling us to be fiscally responsible and on the other hand we have an opposition telling us how cruel we are because we are cutting funding.

We are not required to cut funding. We are not required to increase taxes. We are required to reduce interest rates and at the same time, keep control of inflation. If you put this entire collage together in the Mulligan pot stew I am afraid that it would not be palatable because one product would conflict with the other.

We are in a difficult position. I know the hon. member appreciates that, but given that she is a very patient person, she will wait until some day when she is in office when I will be able to ask the question. If I should have the patience that she has to be in opposition, should that period of time ever occur in the long life in which I wish to live, perhaps she will find the question as easy to answer as I did today.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

Private Members' Business

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

NEEDS OF YOUTH

The House resumed from Thursday, April 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Anawak:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider developing special initiatives, in consultation with aboriginal peoples, to respond to the serious employment, education and health needs of aboriginal youth.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, as you know, this motion calls on the government to develop special initiatives in consultation with aboriginal people—and this is the key subclause in the sentence—to respond to the serious employment, education and health needs of aboriginal youth.

This motion is extremely timely. It is one that deserves the fullest attention of the Government of Canada for a number of reasons. It is a well documented fact that aboriginal people have been mistreated in North America since Europeans came to this country.

In other words, aboriginal people have had a rough ride. No one can deny that historical fact. We know that in the early stages nations were massacred. We know that from time to time treaties were broken. We know that reserve lands, on some occasions, were poor in resource, poor in location and poor in size. We know that there have been cases of forced relocation. I know of the case of one band near Chicoutimi which, between 1920 and recent months, was relocated seven times to accommodate the exploration ambitions of a mining company.

We know that the earlier European settlers brought with them diseases, infections and certain social habits which proved to be devastating to the aboriginal people. We also know of denial of rights, the most recent one in the proposed Meech Lake Accord, which has been the object of persistent and consistent objections on the part of the native people, and understandably so. Meech Lake is not designed, structured and written in a manner that meets the approval of our aboriginal people. On the contrary, it has been objected to strenuously.

We know also that there are certain parts of Canada, most notably British Columbia, where treaties do not even exist. We know also of megaprojects that were put in place in the 1970s, as in the case of James Bay, where development destroyed the native way of life.

Today, as we debate this matter, we know that a second James Bay project is being proposed which would have a devastating effect on the lifestyle of the aboriginal people, namely, their ability to live off the land if, as proposed, substantial tracts of land are to be inundated and removed from their use.

In addition to that, as we all know, when forests go under water they develop a form of insidious mercury poisoning which infects the fish. This, in turn, has negative impacts on the health of the native population which consumes the fish. In other words, to sum it up, the impact of the white population and the white civilization has had negative consequences on the well-being of our aboriginal people.

It is true that now we can point to some signs of hope and it is worth while putting them on record. For instance there has been the negotiation of South Moresby on the part of the Haida nation; the work by the Lilloet tribal council, not only to try to save the Stein Valley but also to save their culture; the recent progress that has been made with land claim negotiations in the Yukon and Northwest Territories; and efforts by individuals such as Tom Henley who, through his rediscovery program, has attempted, and quite successfully so, to teach again to native youth their roots and their old ways.

Nevertheless, if one looks at the statistics produced by the Canadian Institute of Child Health last year prepared by Denise Avard and Louise Hanvey entitled "The Health of Canada's Children" and looks to the native population you will find some elements which justify the validity of the motion of the member for Nunatsiaq. They also make his motion one of an urgent nature.

For instance, Madam Speaker, if you look at the age composition of the registered native population in relation to the total Canadian population, you find that in 1985 nearly 34 per cent of the native population was less than 14 years of age, that is, slightly over one-third was below the age of 14. That compares with some 22 per cent in Canada as a whole. That means, therefore, that the native youth population is larger by 50 per cent roughly than that of the non-aboriginal population. That in itself is a figure that commands the attention of this House and that of the government.

Turning to page 112 of that study under the heading "Suicide", we come across another set of figures which makes you pause and think. In 1984, the suicide rate for registered native teenagers between the ages of 10 and 19 was about seven times higher than the total Canadian rate. Suicide, as a footnote, is indicated as being of particular importance as a cause of death among young Indian adults.

Madam Speaker, obviously you would know, as would many in this Chamber who are familiar with social studies, that the suicide rate is of course a reflection and indication of the well-being of a culture to which that person belongs. It is not to be considered simply a disease or a temporary aberration. It is a very serious matter when it occurs, even in small percentages. However, here we are talking of a rate that is devastatingly high, namely seven times higher than that of our non-aboriginal population.

I ask myself what is the root of this problem. You are indicating to me, Madam Speaker, that my time is up, therefore we cannot explore the possible answers to this question. I can therefore only stress to you, Madam Speaker, and to receptive members on the government side, the extreme importance and urgency of the motion by my colleague from Nunatsiaq and indicate to you that it would be extremely desirable that this motion be passed and made part of the policy of the Government of Canada because of its crucial and central importance.

• (1710)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, it is a great privilege to rise in the House to speak on this issue. It is not the first time that the member for Churchill has had that opportunity. For a number of years I have risen in this House and talked about the very elements of this motion, the serious unemployment problem that is facing native people, the lack of facilities for education and the lack of real initiatives to provide adequate health care for native Canadians.

I wish to commend the member for moving this motion. It is a very important issue and it is good that this House is addressing it.

This is not a new problem. One of the things that has upset me about the debate in the last five years in this House is to hear Liberal members get up and pretend that the problems that native Canadians face are something new, that they are the result of Conservative government cutbacks, when that is anything but the truth.

We have had over 100 years of neglect of native Canadians. That neglect is coming home to roost. If you go into the communities of northern Manitoba, you see that they do not have water and sewage systems. If you go into some of the schools in those communities you will find holes in the floors. If you go into the nursing stations you will find that at any given time there is a 25 per cent shortfall in the required number of nurses for native communities in northern Manitoba.

That is something which can be found in all the remote areas of Canada. I am sure you will find the same thing in the Kenora—Rainy River riding, in the Territories, in northern Saskatchewan, in northern Quebec, in northern Alberta and in parts of B.C. So it is not an isolated problem. It is a problem that has resulted from years and years of government neglect.

The white paper of Jean Chrétien of almost 20 years ago basically called for assimilation of the native people. It called for a cutback in direct federal government programs to native people so that they would be forced into the white society, forced to accept provincial government programs. The federal government program, the Buffalo Jump of the 1990s, was a restatement of that by the Conservative government of the day.

In this year's federal budget, money is being taken away from national spokesgroups of native people and those groups that have co-ordinated activities among natives such as the northern chiefs in my riding. If you take a look at those cuts you realize that the federal government is again going down the road of restricting the ability of native people to explain their needs to the Canadian population.

There have been years and years of neglect of government programs and now there is a concerted effort by the government to make sure that the native groups cannot get their message across, not only to Parliament but to the Canadian population as a whole.

Let me give you an example of some of the problems that do exist. A study was done of the York Landing School in my riding. An engineer's report was prepared in March of 1988. There are 81 students in three rooms, three grades per room. The school is built of wood with no fire-retardant being added to the wood. Electrical panels are not covered. The fire alarm system does not work. The four-foot hallway between classes is used as a storage room. There is no library. There is no common meeting room. There are tools for a shop but no space to use them. There are no smoke detectors. The fire exit doors are stuck closed. That report was made two years ago. To date, there are no plans for a new school for that community. Each and every day, 81 students go to that school, a fire trap, a facility which should have been closed many years ago. That is not an isolated case. I can give you examples from throughout my riding, as I am sure can others in the House, of schools that are inadequate.

I see one of the former Ministers of Indian Affairs making a hasty retreat from the House. I can understand his need to do so.

Mr. Epp: No, I was just apologizing to the Speaker for the fact that she had to listen to a Manitoban.

Mr. Murphy: Perhaps if the minister had done something when he was the Minister of Indian Affairs, we would not need to have this debate in the House today. The member for Provencher should know of what I am speaking because some of the communities of which I am speaking used to be part of his riding but are now, happily, part of my riding. Unfortunately, when he was the minister, schools were being built with the knowledge that in four or five years those schools would be over-crowded. In other words, there were young children born in those communities who would not have a place in those classrooms by the time they got into kindergarten or Grade 1. That was the deliberate government policy for dealing with the school shortage in native communities across the country.

If you have ever been into a native community and looked at the conditions of housing, you would realize it is appalling, Madam Speaker. We give money for native housing in remote communities that would not build a decent cabin for people in those northern areas. We expect them to live there with inadequate heating systems. We expect them to live in those communities, knowing full well that there are not proper foundations for their houses. We know the houses will start to rot in five to ten years. And that is what we call a housing program. One of the richest nations calls that an adequate housing program, and minister after minister of Indian Affairs has stood in the House and defended that type of program.

That same neglect and refusal to deal with the real problems can be found in each and every program that the federal government is responsible for with regard to native Canadians. We can talk about education, employment, economic development, medical services, water, and sewage. These are all important to native Canadians and we have a sad history of neglect.

Just this year, the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal again condemned our country for our treatment of native people. Again, we were reminded that a native youth has more chance of going to jail than completing high school; a very sad statistic. We know from other studies that have been made in this nation that our jails have a very high percentage of native Canadians; much higher than the 4 per cent to 5 per cent that they make up of the Canadian population. In many facilities, in areas where the native population is between 5 per cent and 10 per cent of the population, the native population within our criminal institutions is over 50 per cent. In some cases, it is approaching 75 per cent of the total population within those institutions.

Why does that happen? It happens because there is a real system of neglect in this nation. The neglect is continuing. This summer there will be fewer native people taking advantage of federal government programs for job creation because there is less money provided for those communities. One-third of the native youth who used to be employed through federal government programs in the past will be employed this year. That is despite the fact that there is a growing native population. We are taking away their hope and, as long as we take away their hope, we take away their future and we taint our own future.

• (1720)

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Madam Speaker, I thank you very much for recognizing me at this point. My colleagues, I am sure, will have other things to say as we go along.

With regard to the topic today, the report of the Special Senate Committee on Youth, tabled in 1986, states: "native Canadians have suffered from injustice for many decades". A separate chapter was devoted to native youth. It was found that unemployment among young natives was alarmingly high, as were pre-marital pregnancies, alcohol and drug abuse, suicide and problems with the law; in fact, more so than with other youth groups in our society. It became apparent that in order to address these problems the entire context of the historical and present status of Canadian native people has to be considered.

One of the basic needs which has to be addressed is health. It is true that our natives are entitled to special health and medical facilities and programs. The very isolation and remoteness of their villages greatly reduces the effectiveness of adequate care. In addition to this, there are often problems of language and a distrust brought about by generations of rejection and struggle.

The problem, of course, is tied to the requirement of adequate nutrition. Isolated areas find it difficult to avail themselves of fresh produce, to name only one element of proper nutrition. The February 1989 issue of Canadian Family Physician carried a special feature on the nutritional problems of native Canadian mothers and children. Deficiencies were identified in Vitamin D among toddlers who suffered from rickets. It was noted that fluoride is not present in the water supply of most native groups, thus requiring particular attention in order to prevent dental caries.

Research indicates that expectant mothers show a lack of sufficient intake of calcium and Vitamin D. It stands to reason that, if native expectant mothers are not healthy, babies will not be healthy, and the statistics prove it. Infant mortality rates among the Inuit for the period 1983 to 1985 are much higher than Canadians for almost all categories. Sudden infant death syndrome is an important cause of infant mortality for Indians, Inuit and all Canadians. However, the rates for Indians and Inuit are higher than the Canadian rate. For Indians and Inuit, the post-neonatal death rate is higher than the neonatal death rate, whereas, for the Canadian population, the reverse is true.

Significant nutritional problems still exist in the native Indian and Inuit population of Canada. Since eating patterns have changed for the natives, as well as for everyone else in Canada, studies show that native adolescents are also prone to eating junk food high in calories, fat and carbohydrates. Here again, an iron deficiency is noted among teenage girls. Changes have been noted during the last four decades in the way native communities nourish themselves. Poverty also plays a big part in the poor nutrition of mothers and children.

Professionals treating natives must be aware of their particular traditions, evolutions and present-day problems. Nutrition counselling must be made available by fully qualified native people whose advice might be more culturally appropriate. At any rate, all professionals should be well versed in the special needs of the native Indians and the Inuit.

It is a sad commentary on Canada that a country as rich as Canada, as the hon. member for Churchill said, sees so many of its citizens suffer because of malnutrition. A healthy body will contribute to a healthy mind. How can we expect under-nourished students to progress, to learn, and to develop to their full potential? Discouraged at an early age, many will succumb to drug and alcohol abuse and, unfortunately, to an early death, whether accidental or by suicide.

A study done for Canadian Social Trends, in the 1988 winter issue, indicates that suicide rates in Canada during the 1980s have been the highest in the history of our country. During the last decade, the suicide rate has been about double what it was throughout most of the period from 1921 to 1961—that is 40 years—and all well about previous record highs during the depression of the 1930s.

Sadly, suicide rates are especially high among native people. In 1986, there were 56.3 suicides for every 100,000 native men, almost 2.5 times the rate for all men, which is at 22.5. At the same time the rate for native women, which was 11.8, was almost double the rate for all other women at 6.4. The incidence of suicide is particularly high among young native men. In 1986, there were more than 100 suicides for every 100,000 native men age 15 to 29. What a waste, Madam Speaker. What a waste of potential for our country.

I spoke earlier of the need for good nutrition to ensure a healthy, inquiring mind, and the danger for young native men and women to get discouraged when faced with lack of opportunities with the added burden of ill health. Unfortunately, their despair quite often leads them to worse health through substance abuse.

While detrimental to their health, these abuses invariably lead them to problems with the law, and here again they become part of the very high suicide rate experienced in federal penitentiaries and provincial prisons.

I think the time has come to review in a very special way the needs of our native and Inuit groups. It is time to give them a greater role in their own health and welfare services. It is time to prepare professionals for service and work in remote native and Inuit communities. Improvements to health and medical services do not automatically mean that we limit ourselves to only one area. Rather, I see improving the standards of living for native groups as an attitude encompassing a broad variety of social needs—health, education, social services and transportation. Within these headings the government should look at the related services. For instance, while considering better health services, attention must be given to dental health, nutrition, pre-natal and post-natal services.

The parliamentary Special Committee on Indian Self-Government, which was prepared by Mr. Keith Penner and his committee in 1983, agreed that "—ill health is not an isolated issue that can be resolved with more and better medical facilities. Through the exercise of Indian self-government, Indian people will be able to control the other problems to which ill health is linked—Jurisdiction over such areas as education, child welfare, and health is considered essential. By exercising control over these matters Indian people could ensure future generations are able to preserve and enjoy their culture and heritage".

The issue of native control has received a lot of attention and I realize, Madam Speaker, that planning is ongoing. But in light of the preceding statistics are we not left with the feeling that we must do more, and we must do more quickly?

Last year the Minister of State for Youth tabled a book entitled Hot–100 in which was listed an interesting array of programs for youth. Among the 100, several were designed for young Indians and Inuit. One in particular, the Indian and Inuit Health Careers Program, offers bursaries for those interested in pursuing a career in the field of health. I believe that this is a very worthy initiative, but maybe we could go a step beyond.

The criteria for the program says the program "will provide bursaries according to need". I would like to add to this that special funds should be put aside for visits to the student's community to relieve loneliness, to keep his or her interest current on local health issues, and to ensure that the students will not get discouraged and abandon their studies.

This is only one idea, Madam Speaker. As I mentioned before, The entire social fabric must be looked at. The entire needs and particular aspirations of the young Indians and Inuit must be taken into consideration.

• (1730)

My colleague from the Northwest Territories was not able to be here today to participate in this debate. I know that if he were here he would lend his voice to all hon. colleagues in this House.

He would be saying to all of us here that we must respond to the needs of our young native people. We must respond now if we are going to have any effect on their future well–being.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Madam Speaker, I, too, am very pleased to stand in support of the motion of my colleague, the hon. member for Nunatsiaq.

The question that begs to be asked is this. What does it mean to be young, aboriginal and living in Canada today? The government's own documents refer to the economic disparities endured by aboriginal people in Canada. For example, the Canadian Aboriginal Economic Development Strategy released by the government last summer states:

> By all measures of socio–economic disparity, the 600,000 people who identify themselves as aboriginal continue to be the most disadvantaged group within Canadian society. Employment rates among the aboriginal working–age population have been about 45 per cent compared with 63 per cent for the non–aboriginal population. Of those employed, incomes are up to a third lower than levels for employed non–aboriginal people.
>
> Almost 30 per cent of aboriginal individuals aged 15 to 24 have less than a grade 9 education, compared with 7 per cent of their non–aboriginal counterparts. More than 76 per cent have neither completed high school nor pursued post–secondary education, whereas the corresponding percentage for non–aboriginals is 44 per cent.

The social costs of the high unemployment rates, and relatively low educational attainment levels, are enormous.

In the Canadian Human Rights Commission annual report for 1988 it was stated that Canada's treatment of aboriginal peoples is a national tragedy. In its 1989 annual report the commission said it had no reason to alter that judgment.

The government is simply not doing enough. Aboriginal issues should be a priority. A focus on aboriginal youth is critical.

According to the Canadian Aboriginal Economic Development Strategy:

> For at least the next 15 years, the aboriginal share of the young labour force, which is 15 to 34 years of age, will be rising, reaching a level of 50 per cent higher by 1996. Most of this growth will occur in non–urbanized areas. Aboriginal people will account for 57 per cent of the increase in the labour force in northern Canada and 12 per cent in each of Manitoba and Saskatchewan.
>
> For every year in the next five years, more than 5,000 individuals will have to find and keep jobs to achieve a level of 50 per cent employment among young Indian adults living on reserves.

Despite the fact that the government knows that half of the aboriginal population in Canada today is under the age of 25, and that these young people will need jobs, the government has not focused on these needs.

It capped the Indian post–secondary educational assistance program, limiting its accessibility. There is no initiative developed to respond to the serious employment needs of aboriginal youth.

In the area of health, serious inequities continue to exist in the area of aboriginal health. A recent report by the Canadian Institute of Child Health confirms the continuing problems.

The aboriginal mortality rate from injuries and suicides, hospitalizations due to respiratory diseases and pregnancy complications remain much higher than the national average.

Life expectancy is still much lower than for non-aboriginal people.

Aboriginal children born today will live, on average, 68 years. Other Canadian children can expect to live 76 years.

The aboriginal infant mortality rate is double the national average. Aboriginal children have consistently higher death rates due to injuries.

Aboriginal teenagers have a suicide rate seven times higher than that of the Canadian rate.

Tuberculosis and other infectious diseases affect aboriginal people disproportionately.

The government must come to grips with the Third World conditions that face aboriginal people and aboriginal youth in this country.

The aboriginal health, education and unemployment statistics are not acceptable and cannot be tolerated any longer.

The aboriginal people of this country want to contribute. The aboriginal youth want to contribute, but they need a fighting chance.

The circumstances which are currently blocking the opportunities for young aboriginal people have to be addressed as a priority.

That is all the motion the hon. member for Nunatsiaq is requesting. He is asking the government to pay attention to these serious issues. The government will say that it is already doing a lot. Whatever it is doing it is certainly not enough.

The frustration level of young Indian, Inuit and Métis people is rising. Current conditions do not offer them much of a future. Without dramatic changes they can most probably look forward only to unemployment insurance, welfare and an early death.

These young people deserve more from the federal government. We urge this government to respond favourably to the motion of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise and speak in support of the motion presented by my colleague, the hon. member for Nunatsiaq. The motion states:

Private Members' Business

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider developing special initiatives, in consultation with aboriginal peoples, to respond to the serious employment, education and health needs of aboriginal youth.

My relationship with the aboriginal community began about two years ago when I was beginning my campaign in Broadview—Greenwood. Many people would probably be surprised to hear that there are a lot of native people in downtown Toronto. Because of the frustration that native people experience when they are living on the reserves, they come to the city. Inevitably, however, when they are in the city they experience all kinds of rejection and frustration. They do not get proper employment opportunities. Because of that frustration they end up finding themselves out on the street. Social services are overburdened and they do not get the proper care.

It was during this period that I ran into Chief David Youngwolf from the Toronto Urban Indian Council. It was Chief Youngwolf who would tell me repeatedly of the frustrations that his people were having. That was the beginning of my realization that the native community of this country for some mysterious reason has not been looked at and appreciated in the way it should be.

We developed our relationship. Of course Chief Youngwolf's plea to me was this: "We are all going through a period right now where we care about the environment". Native people are really Canada's first environmentalists.

He worked with me for many months as we organized together the First Peoples Summit on the Environment. He brought his people in from all over Ontario. They put on displays and taught the younger children who came to this event from across the metropolitan area how to treat the land, how to work with the land. It was not just Chief Youngwolf, but many of his associates taught the youth the importance of having a healthy environment.

It was at that point in time that I realized that if we really are going to be committed to this environmental movement, we are going to have to treasure the resource of our native peoples.

When I realized this as time went on I went to the Minister of the Environment's book, which is obviously going to be the bible for this government come September. It is called a framework for discussion on the environment, and is entitled: The Green Plan: A National Challenge. I looked in the document to see if the minister had recognized that the real environmentalists of this country are our native peoples.

Sure enough on page 14 I read:

> Today's youth are tomorrow's decision-makers. If they are to play a meaningful role in environmental decision-making and diplomacy, they must develop environmental literacy as well as leadership skills. The Government proposes to take measures to ensure that Canada's youth will have the opportunity to channel their energy and talents toward achieving environmental objectives.

• (1740)

The Minister of the Environment then goes on to state:

> The Government plans to support summer employment, training and career development in environmental conservation and protection, and to support international youth exchanges and conferences. Options include a federal government summer employment program; a private sector co-op program; and a youth conference in preparation for the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development in Brazil.
>
> Canada's aboriginal peoples are often the first to experience changes made to the natural environment by human activities. Those changes have sometimes threatened their traditional and close relationship to the land.

I must say that when I read this today I felt like I was reading my colleague's motion. You will see the similarity, Madam Speaker. There are not more than 8 or 10 words missing. The Minister of Environment states further:

> The Government will also consult with aboriginal peoples about other possible initiatives, including measures to support activities of natives that enhance or protect the environment and a special native component of the government's youth employment initiatives.

My colleague's motion was introduced in this House on November 27, 1989. I read that the Minister of the Environment has picked up on this motion. I am happy to see that. We can only hope now that the government will take these words and put them into action.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I am really very pleased to stand to add my voice to that of the member for Nunatsiaq, and all the other colleagues in the House who have spoken to the issue of his motion which reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider developing specific initiatives, in consultation with aboriginal peoples, to respond to the serious employment, education and health needs of aboriginal youth.

I think my colleagues have pointed out the serious situation that the aboriginal youth across this land find themselves in. Of course there are no magic solutions. It will take time.

There is no question that there must be a forward-looking strategy. We must look at the kinds of issues that are ahead and ask ourselves: "Before we move to cut a program in this area, what are we doing to the lifestyle and to the future of the youth who are involved?"

It is really quite regrettable that with the challenges facing our young people in general, and our aboriginal youth in particular, that the government has chosen to cut community support programs that have often eased the struggle through these very difficult times. It has cut very important support mechanisms that we had built up in this country over many years which had helped the day to day realities of our aboriginal youth.

Far from enough, statistics indicate that we have done too little. Yet the little we have done has been cut. Once again, the government, unfortunately, has seen bottom line deficit reduction as the only yardstick of measure when looking out at society. If it had a constructive view of how to move forward, particularly in the area of our aboriginal youth who have serious educational and health problems, as well as serious problems with drugs and alcohol abuse, and in terms of the numbers in our jail system, I think the government would see that this is one area where we can ill afford to cut any funding or services.

I would say that I have been very privileged. I have attended the three First Minister's Conferences on Aboriginal Rights. I have seen outstanding leadership from the aboriginal communities, negotiating with the government in an effort to move forward their land claims concerns, to move forward their interest in picking up their society and their community and becoming more constructive and helpful in helping their own communities help themselves.

Those were very interesting but very frustrating conferences for aboriginal peoples. I appreciate their concern and their frustration in that regard.

I also sat on the legislative committee concerning Bill C-31 which looked at amendments to the Indian Act. It was very important at that time that we gave to Indian women equality of rights, the rights that their brothers and fathers enjoyed. I remember the argument in this House as we moved for assurances that money would be given for educational institutions when women and their children moved back on reserves. We sought assurances that more schools and homes would be built. In that way, their children would be assured of a better future. We all know that education is synonymous with an improvement of options and job skills training and an improvement in the future life of our children.

The statistics concerning youth in the aboriginal community are quite shocking. In that regard I would recommend to any one of my colleagues or people who are interested in the particular issue of the aboriginal peoples the speech of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq as reported in the House of Commons Hansard, Volume 131, No. 100, Second Session of the Thirty-Fourth Parliament of Monday, November 27, 1989. This is a subject that should interest us because the aboriginal people are the founding peoples of this country. Of any in our society, they are the distinct society. I think that this government has forgotten to include them in its major priorities.

The hon. member's speech is a most interesting, informative and somewhat sad critique of the way we have handled our responsibility as Canadians and as parliamentarians with regard to the place, role and importance of the Inuit and Indian people in the life of our country.

I would remind you as well, Madam Speaker, of when the annual report of the Canadian Human Rights Commission made those newspaper headlines with its grim statement: "An Indian youngster in Canada has a better chance of being sent to prison than of completing university". That is a statement that gives us food for serious thought and very serious concern.

In my critique portfolio of communications, one of most serious of the cuts comes to mind. I do not have to tell this House the importance of the communications media and how essential they are to the preservation of the cultural heritage of Canada's aboriginal peoples.

Broadcasting policy by itself, I acknowledge, will not ensure the survival of native language and native culture. But it can play a key role in helping to mitigate the threats that are commonly felt and the pressures that exist in a society. It can ensure a sense of belonging and participation. It can enhance that sense of roots that make people feel that they belong to a society and are reflected in that society.

That has an important role to play in the mental health and the well-being which comes with feeling that you have some knowledge of self, some place in your society, and that you are respected for the values that you have, as well as for the values that are promoted when one's image and one's place is acknowledged.

I believe —and that was certainly the view of the aboriginal leaders across this land—that the cuts put in place through the Secretary of State were unconscionable.

One of the things that I recall was that the then Secretary of State, the hon. member for Roberval, said: "It is particularly important that native people have access to communications, giving the aboriginal perspective during a time when such issues as self-government, aboriginal title and equality rights are being debated".

What did the government then do under the new Secretary of State, the hon. member for Pierrefonds—Dollard?

• (1750)

The Secretary of State cut the lines of communication to the people in their own language and in the manner which is important to the sense of importance and identity in terms of Inuit culture. I would say that the social culture and economic disaster that is brought about by the cuts to the native programs is totally unconscionable.

The CBC and native groups had begun to provide opportunities for aboriginal peoples to broadcast in their own languages. This came about, I would remind the House, through the establishment of the Northern Native Access Program in 1983, which provided support funds to stimulate the production of native language, radio and television programs. Outstanding programs have been produced.

When I was in Iqaluit I visited the Inuit Broadcasting Corporation. I saw incredible and creative programming. That is being cut.

All their newspapers are being cut.

If I had time I would list the areas of cuts that have left this native community in shock. I sincerely hope that serious reconsideration will be undertaken. The minister evidently set up a private task force, a hidden task force. Let him bring that task force report out into the open. It commenced at the beginning of March. Let him reinstate these programs which are fundamental to the well-being, both mentally and physically, of these societies.

I urge the government to reconsider its attacks against the native communications system which is key to their survival in their own society as well as to integrating them into the larger society, one which we then can appreciate as well.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I wanted to say a few words but I did not want to do so without first determining whether I would be in that case preventing another member from speaking. But seeing no one else rise I want to take only three or four minutes before we adjourn to say a few words on this very important issue.

Madam Speaker, you know that I represent the native community of Cornwall Island, the Aquasasne Community No. 59, which is located in the great constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. I thought I would take a moment to bring a few issues to the attention of the House in relation to the motion that was placed before us by our colleague from Nunatsiaq who moved the very constructive motion which states that the government should consider developing special initiatives, in consultation with aboriginal people, to respond to serious employment, education and health needs of aboriginal youth.

What is important in this motion, apart from everything else, are the words "in consultation with". The reason why I say that is because there is too much of what my colleague from Nunatsiaq has referred to as "big brotherism". That means that someone here in Ottawa designs programs for natives, as if all native Canadians live in similar conditions on reservations that are similar to one another and that they are all in climatic conditions which are similar to one another.

Of course, a native Canadian living in Tuktoyaktuk does not experience very many conditions that are similar to those natives living in the constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell on Cornwall Island. That is important for all of us to remember.

I hope that through whatever program the government establishes, once we adopt the motion that is before us today, hopefully, we will ensure that we have this good and appropriate consultation, not just at the regional and national level with native Canadians, although we need that too but, indeed, at the local level so that programs are designed in such a way as to accommodate the various situations right across the country under which many of our native citizens live.

Needless to say, I have identified that a native Canadian living in the constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell lives under very different climatic and other conditions than others do in certain other areas. But the social conditions and so on are very different as well.

We know of course that that particular community is located roughly one-quarter within the province of Quebec, one-quarter in the province of Ontario and one-half in the United States of America.

If you can, picture the following situation, Madam Speaker. Imagine that you are a citizen of that community and you travel between St. Regis, Quebec and Hogansburg, New York, and there are no Customs. If you travel between one country and the other there are no Customs duties, no Customs officers—no Customs anything.

On the other hand, if you live in another part of the same community on Cornwall Island and you go from there to Massena, New York, then there are Customs officers. That would be the same situation, Madam Speaker, if you were to leave Centre Block to go to the West Block and there were Customs, and there were no Customs if you went to the East Block and the East Block and the West Block were in the same country.

That is totally illogical in terms of conditions that people have to live under. It is only one element of conditions that my constituents live under which would appear to many of us as being not only very peculiar but in some cases nonsensical.

It creates various situations. We know that there is a problem with the illegal smuggling of goods through the reserve from the United States to Canada going through the American and the Canadian side of that community. That of course is most unfortunate. The Grand Chief of the Aquasasne reserve on the Canadian side has done his best and so has his council to eradicate this problem, but it is very difficult. It is very difficult when you look at the high unemployment and the attractiveness that some might see in making a quick dollar that is otherwise not available.

When there are so few opportunities for those people one can see how some people could unfortunately be attracted to living off the avails of this kind of activity. It does not make it appropriate of course, and obviously the chiefs are very concerned and they are doing their best to stop it.

If we want to give other opportunities to those young people in Aquasasne, and elsewhere for that matter, we have to provide the necessary funding for a better education and better conditions.

It is my hope that we will adopt this motion today. I will leave enough time for us to be able to vote on this item.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 is deemed to have been moved.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Madam Speaker, I am standing here in the House today because a few weeks ago because I was not satisfied with a response to a question on veterinary services, the GST and how it would affect veterinarians.

The Canadian Veterinary Medical Association and the Canadian Animal Health Institute both state that the proposed goods and services tax will have a drastic effect on veterinary services. In fact the firm of Deloitte and Touche on behalf of the CVMA studied the possible effects of the proposed GST on veterinary services and proved that small animal practices will face an increase in operational costs of more than 6 per cent. In some instances, due to administrative costs and cash flow problems, consumers may face up to a 12 per cent increase in veterinary care and drugs.

• (1800)

Because of these increased costs and cash flow problems, consumers may face up to a 12 per cent increase in veterinary care and drugs. Because of these increased costs, animal control programs will face a dramatic setback since spaying and neutering of small animals will inevitably decrease dramatically. Furthermore, we will see a decrease in health care provided to small animals, since consumers will not want to cover the increase in costs. This can have a drastic impact on not only the health of small animals, but also on humans because animals are carriers of many diseases that can be transmitted to man.

More than 50 per cent of Canadians have cats, dogs or other pets. Even if someone does not have a cat or a dog, one might be exposed to diseases such as rabies. One could be exposed to toxoplasmosis, which is transmitted through meat and cats and causes birth defects to the human foetus. One could be exposed to psittacosis, which is transmitted by birds and which can cause fatal meningitis. Therefore, the need to protect Canadians against parasites, fungi, mange, et cetera is essential, and an increase in the cost of veterinary services and drugs could deter many Canadians from making sure their pet is protected.

When I asked the Minister of State for Finance how his government could possibly justify putting the health of animals, and ultimately humans at risk, his response was: "The inputs presently paid by the veterinarians will no longer be paid after the GST is implemented. This will constitute a considerable diminution of the prices." This was said by the minister.

The CVMA and the CAHI both disagree with the minister's statement. In fact, Deloitte and Touche's study states that veterinarians presently pay the federal sales tax and also the telecommunication and programming services tax, at a rate of 11 per cent. Deloitte and Touche point out: "However, the removal of these two taxes will reduce the costs of operating veterinary clinics only marginally." This reduction in cost is estimated at less than 1 per cent.

Thus the minister is wrong. He is misleading Canadians. If the minister still stands by his statement, then where are his studies? Why not table them in this House?

The Deloitte and Touche report went on to state that there is no doubt that the costs of veterinary services and animal drugs to pet owners will increase under the GST as much as 12 per cent.

On a larger scale, veterinary services are essential to dairy and beef cattle breeders who have to resort to these services in order to keep their animals healthy and to protect them from contagious diseases. If this government taxes these services, it risks taxing the quality of food.

Veterinary services are essential to human health because in Canada there are veterinary inspection services in over 500 slaughterhouses and in food processing plants. As Mrs. Christiane Gagnon, President of the CVMA, told the finance committee last October, food such as pork, poultry, beef and eggs are checked by veterinarians, thereby ensuring the quality of safety of the food that we consume. Therefore, taxing those services boils down to taxing Canadian health.

In an August 1989 GST technical paper, the government stated that all health care services funded, in whole or in part, by health insurance plans in two or more provinces will be exempt under the GST. Even though governments in more than six provinces have established an animal health insurance plan, therefore meeting the stated criterion, the government has decided to overlook these facts.

Veterinary medicine is a medical profession and provides essential services to Canadians. Provincial governments and the federal government, have consistently recognized that animal health is essential to the health and well-being of all Canadians.

Furthermore, as I pointed out in my question to the minister, veterinary drug manufacturers were literally forced into complying with the Patent Act under which the whole pharmaceutical industry is regulated and under which no differentiation is made between human and veterinary pharmaceuticals. Nor has there been any difference made between the two under the Excise Tax Act or under the Food and Drugs Act.

Now, under the proposed GST, human pharmaceuticals are zero rated while veterinary ones will be taxed, another prime example of this government's willingness to contradict itself over money. The CVMA points out that the inclusion of GST on veterinary pharmaceuticals will increase the costs of providing human health care and food products to the Canadian public as well as to the animal health care.

• (1805)

There will be both a direct and an indirect impact. Regardless of the fact that farmers can apply for refunds, they will be burdened with an increase in administration and financing costs. They could also experience increased product costs as manufacturers, distributors and veterinarians pass on their increased administrative or GST costs, through price increases.

The equal treatment of veterinary and human pharmaceuticals would ensure that price differentiation, due to the GST, would not promote the use of human pharmaceuticals and that adequate research and development continues on veterinary medicines.

The Canadian Animal Health Institute believes that the level of animal health care impacts directly on the level of human health care. Therefore, the differentiation of human and veterinary pharmaceuticals compromises the health of Canadians.

In conclusion, the statements made by the minister in reference to my question were unacceptable. The Canadian Veterinarians Medical Association, the Canadian Animal Health Institute and Deloitte and Touche have all refuted what the minister said in this House. They also refute comments by the member for Perth—Wellington—Waterloo.

When will the government listen to Canadians and scrap this unfair tax? Not only is the government grabbing money from Canadians, it is also risking the health of both animals and humans to do so. It is not too late to stop this madness and to scrap this tax grab.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I want to point out that, unlike the existing federal sales tax which applies to only one-third of all goods and services consumed in Canada, the GST will apply to most goods and services. This means that sectors across the economy will be treated more equitably, and that consumer decisions will not be distorted as they are by the current system.

Consistent with this principle, veterinary pharmaceuticals will be subject to the GST. However, under the new system, all vendors of goods and services who charge GST on their sales will be entitled to claim a credit for GST paid on their businesses and inputs, that is, the goods and services acquired for the purpose of conducting their businesses.

Vendors of zero rated goods and services will not charge tax on their sales, but will be allowed to claim full input tax credits. In both cases, only the difference between total GST charged on sales and total GST paid on business inputs, will be remitted to the federal government. Moreover, when GST on purchases exceeds GST on sales, in the event, for example, of a large capital purchase, the difference will be refunded.

As a result of this approach, veterinary pharmaceuticals acquired by farmers and other commercial users will not be subject to the tax. This is because the GST they pay will be fully recoverable as input tax credits. Consequently the GST treatment of most veterinary pharmaceuticals will be effectively identical to that afforded prescription drugs for human consumption.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, I rise to pursue several questions I have placed in the House concerning the court decision on the Oldman River Dam, but more broadly, on the implications of that decision and the ability of the government to exercise some genuine leadership and control over the environmental degradation of Canada's natural resources.

It is more than six weeks since that decision came down from the courts. It was a very strong decision. It made it quite clear that the federal government has not only the right but the responsibility to carry out a full environmental assessment of any project which impacts on an area of federal responsibility. It is unfortunate that it was not the Government of Canada that went to court seeking clarification of that right and that responsibility, and was testing the strength of its legislation to determine how far it could go in meeting the new imperative of Canadians to protect their own health and the health of their environment, through government action and government leadership. It was not in this case and the case of the Rafferty–Alameda Dam. It was private, independent, non-profit organizations that chose to stand up and fight for what the government refused to fight. It was a decision I thought the government and the minister would welcome as a green light to assume full responsibility for promises made to Canadians, and indeed to the world, at numerous international conferences, through protocols and press conferences. That is not what is happening.

• (1810)

The court stated very clearly and directly that the Minister of Fisheries shall carry out an environmental assessment, that the Minister of Transport shall carry out an environmental assessment. The federal permit to proceed with this project is cancelled. The government has chosen not to act on any one of those very direct orders from the court. It has chosen for over six weeks to answer repeatedly in this House that it is thinking about it. It is considering the implications and suggests that opposition members who raise the issue really do not understand the implications. Of course we understand the implications.

The first implication we understand is the contradiction between the words and actions of the government, which on the one hand states that it wants to act on the environment, but on the other hand not only fails to act, but refuses to act.

The government has several other challenges before it on which to take action. One of these is on the Point Aconi power plant in Nova Scotia. Again, it has been aware for some time of serious problems to the environment arising from this plant. It has simply sat back and let the process take its course. It has exercised no leadership on behalf of the people of Canada or on international commitments made on behalf of Canada to set targets for the reduction of emissions into the atmosphere.

The government has let the project go to the eleventh hour. It has allowed large amounts of money to be spent on preparing the project. It has not done what the legislation and the order in council states it must do, that is, carry out an environmental assessment early in the project, so it will know the environmental impacts and any mitigating measures can be taken. Once the project is approved, the design need not be changed, the project need not be interrupted and millions of dollars of investment need not be disturbed because work the federal government should have done in the first place was not done.

We face projects right across the country which clearly impact on federal responsibility. The government will have to decide to act. In Point Aconi, there is a request from the Coalition on Acid Rain for an environmental assessment. Will the government do as it did at the Oldman Dam and the Rafferty–Alameda Dam and refuse to carry out an environmental assessment which the order in council under that legislation mandates and, in fact, directs it to do? If it does, it is simply abandoning its responsibility.

It is now nearly two years into the discussion around the Carmanah Valley. The government has taken absolutely no action to examine the environmental asset of Carmanah, to determine what can and should happen to that environment in order to protect not only a unique Canadian resource, but in fact a unique world resource.

We hear the government talking about introducing its environmental assessment review legislation within a matter of weeks. I wonder how much effect that legislation will have, however weak or strong it may be, if the government refuses to implement a direct order of the courts to carry out environmental assessment. Will it in fact even obey whatever legislation it brings in? If it refuses to use the environmental tools now at its disposal, what hope is there that a new piece of legislation will make any difference? If the Minister of Transportation sits in the House as he did today and refuses to account for why he is allowing the project to go ahead without the federal permit that it legally requires under an act that is under his jurisdiction, then what hope do we have that environmental assessment review legislation will have any affect?

• (1815)

The minister knows perfectly well that a federal permit was issued for the dam to proceed and that that permit has now been cancelled. For six weeks now that project has been proceeding illegally. Once again we are relying on private non-profit organizations to hold bazaars and fund-raisers to go to court to defend the laws of the land and not the Government of Canada. Yet the minister continues to ignore an illegal act.

If the minister is concerned about the safety of the project he has every opportunity to make public, as the environmental assessment review process requires, the safety implications. He has chosen not to do that so the public and members of the House can only question whether indeed, and what indeed, the safety factors are that allow and encourage him to over-ride the law of the land.

If he is concerned about safety factors he has the mandate under the act to determine how and under what conditions to meet those safety factors, He might issue a permit for the project. He has chosen not to do that because that, too, would be subject to public scrutiny.

We had the recent announcement of The Green Plan. The Green Plan was full of questions that I thought were answered a long time ago. The Prime Minister and other ministers of the government had this great Montreal–Toronto conference and agreed to a 20 per cent reduction. However, that is not what is happening.

I simply call on the government to answer these questions for members of parliament and for the public. Are you serious about the environment or not?

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member raised a number of questions about the way the present government deals with its environmental responsibilities, and I would like to give a specific example to demonstrate that this government's activities are sensible and consistent. The Great Whale River project is a case in point. As you know, there is a serious problem, but for several months we have been talking to the Quebec government about ways of harmonizing this environmental review, since the project is subject to the environmental review requirements of both government.

Furthermore, considering the rights and privileges conferred under the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement on the Cree and Inuit people who live in this region, we intend to associate them directly with any process that will be put in place.

I must admit that we are currently up against some major obstacles to developing a completely integrated review process. The process itself must be independent and rigourous to be credible, a requirement that is difficult to reconcile with Quebec's exclusive jurisdiction over the project itself and with a project schedule that leaves little time for completing the required studies and reviews.

Nevertheless, recent Federal Court decisions leave us no choice. In fact, in addition to our own desire to apply sound environmental planning to the Great Whale River project, the Federal Court has handed down decisions that affect federal areas of jurisdiction involved in this project. Recent judgments in the Rafferty–Alameda and Oldman River cases stated that the court order on the guidelines for the federal environmental assessment and review process has force of law.

The court stated that a project is subject to public review under the guidelines whenever the federal government has decision–making power over environmental impact deemed to be non–minimal.

• (1820)

The court also emphasized the arm's length character of a public review board and the need for informing the public and providing the means for the public to participate and make its views knows in the course of the process.

The project is already subject to environmental assessment under the provincial processes provided by the agreement. The question arises whether these processes would not suffice. However, the emphasis on public participation and on the independence of review boards created under the federal order does not appear in the James Bay Agreement. Consequently, the Federal Court's decisions would seem to limit the possibility of using the agreement's processes while observing the requirements of the court order. If we want to meet the requirements of the order, we will have to set up a separate board, created under the order, or persuade the other parties to the agreement to accept a joint assessment process that maintains the essential elements of the order.

Our room to manoeuvre has shrunk considerably in recent months. This partly explains why it took so long to set up the requisite mechanisms, since we want to respect Quebec's requirements and harmonize existing processess in order to avoid duplication and be as effective as possible. However, we will have to do so in a way that is consistent with recent judgments by the Court.

If we are unable to reach some kind of agreement with Quebec, we will have to create an environmental assessment board under the federal order. The board would consider the concerns of Native people in relation to the Great Whale River project. In fact, we are convinced the Federal Court will force us to do so if we fail to meet our obligations under the court order on the guidelines.

In concluding, I repeat it is our intention to protect the environment of Arctic Quebec as well as the way of life and the rights of the Native people concerned, while respecting the legitimate desire of the Quebec government to develop responsibly its natural resources.

Madam Speaker, that was a good example of how the government and the Minister of the Environment see their responsibility with respect to environmental projects.

[English]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, on April 6 in response to a question I raised concerning the impact upon the province of Prince Edward Island of changes the federal government has undertaken in its equalization payments which will cost the province some $18 million, the Minister of State for Finance told the House that:

> The record of this government stands for what we think about the poorer regions of Canada.

What has that record been? In terms of assisting the Atlantic fishery on December 13 of last year and again on January 22 of this year, the Prime Minister made some very specific commitments to Atlantic Canadians:

> I have already indicated to my right honourable friend that the government of Canada will act in respect of the Atlantic fishery with exactly the same kind of generosity and enthusiasms that we brought to resolving the problems of the prairie farmer.

That commitment was repeated on January 22 of this year. However, here is what the Minister of Fisheries told an audience of fishing industry representatives in Halifax on April 19 of this year. He said:

> We are developing an adjustment, not an aid package for Atlantic Canada.

It is clear that Atlantic Canadians have been misled by this government. There is no aid package which will help communities to weather this crisis. The only thing the federal government intends to do is to provide Atlantic Canadians who have relied upon the fishery for generations a bus ticket to Toronto.

In two recent reports prepared by the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council, a group which reports to the Minister of Employment, the impact of the government's policies toward Atlantic Canada were criticized.

In December of last year the council released a report on regional unemployment in Canada in which it stated:

> For many regions, the recession and its debilitating effects on individuals and communities is continuing to persist and some regions are still struggling to regain their pre-1981 levels of employment.

Later the council indicated that:

> Among those involved with the problems currently being experienced in some regions, there is concern that Canada may actually be evolving into a two-tiered society—the prosperous industrial heartland and the depressed outer regions.

It should be kept in mind that this was a report written by an advisory council appointed by the federal government and is reporting on the situation it has found to exist five years after the Conservative government has been in office.

Contained in the same report is an assessment of the federal budget of April 1989 and the same comments with regards to cuts in the budget of 1990. That report states:

> It appears certain that major negative effects will be experienced in some regions as a result of the following federal decisions: cut-backs in regional development funding, commitments for business development, forestry agreements, mineral exploration, transportation infrastructure, and oil industry megaprojects, reductions in the growth of transfer payments to provinces for health, social welfare and education, changes to the UI program, closures of Canadian Forces bases, and lower subsidies for VIA Rail.

The Minister of State for Finance also told the House: "The unemployment statistics are the lowest they have been since 1981".

Again, the Advisory Council to the Minister of Employment stated:

> "As far back as 1977 the Economic Council of Canada stated that 'Unemployment in some areas of Canada continues to be a national disgrace.' Now 12 years later, this situation has not improved. In fact, it has become worse in many regions".

On March 28, 1990, the council issued a policy paper on the Atlantic fishery and the crisis which the collapse of much of it means. It stated:

> Hundreds of Atlantic communities will lose their only industry. Predominantly in Newfoundland, there are few other jobs in these isolated settlements. Thousands of families, left without adequate incomes, will be forced to rely on welfare, or to uproot their lives for the dubious promise of mainland wealth.

The Minister of State for Finance said the record stands for what the federal government thinks of the poorer regions. It is obvious the government does not think very highly of those regions.

And what of the future? The Minister of Fisheries believes the best way to save the fishery is to destroy the lives and communities of many of those involved with it. Again, here is what the advisory council to the federal government says with respect to this attitude:

> The unimaginative solution to over capacity and excess labour supply is to eliminate it. Reduce harvesting and processing capacity, and allow/force workers to move away. Additionally the cliché of diversification is trotted out as the ultimate solution. The result of these solutions would be the disintegration of the fishing industrial structure, especially in economically non-diversified areas, with chronic unemployment and the turning of many fishing communities into ghost towns".

Considering the vital importance the fishery has to the economic viability of the entire Atlantic region, how the federal government responds to this crisis will determine the future of the region.

If the indications given by the Minister of Fisheries in his Halifax speech are reflected in government initiatives, the future of many Atlantic communities and countless families will be placed in jeopardy.

Madam Speaker, in closing I have four brief suggestions that the government might follow to effectively deal with the problem of the Atlantic fishery and in fact would be a solution to put people first. This would resolve the problems faced by those who presently live in Newfoundland and who wish to. First, the federal government could begin to bring forth proposals to take control over the area of the nose and tail of the Grand Bank and the Flemish cap slightly outside the 200 mile limit.

Second, given the current crisis in the Atlantic fishery, they could intervene to ensure that a community based quota structure be put in place, even if only on a temporary basis to ensure that the fishing communities presently involved in the fishery can survive.

Third, the federal government must begin to enforce or take seriously its responsibility for the management of the fisheries and accept the financial responsibility of in fact mismanaging that resource over the last years and provide financial assistance to help people and communities survive the present storm.

Last, they might undertake in consultation with the industry and representatives of the workers a full environmental impact assessment of the technology presently used in both the deep-sea and mid-shore fishery with a view to seeking an effective determination of what is necessary to ensure sustainable development.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the federal government has been providing strong and growing support to the financially weaker provinces through regional assistance.

In the case of equalization, entitlements have increased by over $3 billion in the past five years from $5.1 billion in 1985-86 to an estimated $8.2 billion in 1990-91.

These increases have occurred in every single year. In 1986-87 there was an increase of $632 million or 12.3 per cent; in 1987-88 an increase of $813 million or 14.1 per cent; in 1988-89, $661 million or 10 per cent; in 1989-90, $511 million or 7 per cent; and in 1990-91, $449 million or 5.8 per cent.

These increases have been substantially higher than those for federal program spending as a whole and strong increases have applied to all provinces.

Prince Edward Island provides a typical example of the pattern of increases with its entitlements having increased from $134 million in 1985-86 to $203 million in 1990-91. The annual increases to this province have been $4 million, $15 million, $15 million, $15 million and $11 million for this five-year period. These are not cuts. What does happen for any given year is that successive estimates of entitlements are made and sometimes a province's entitlement for a given year will be lower than in the previous estimate for that year.

This happened for some provinces in the case of recent estimates carried out in March and covering a period of four years from 1987-88 to 1990-91.

The important thing to note is that on a year over year basis there was not a single province that had a reduction in this entitlement during the four-year period. The year over year growth rates were in almost all cases about 5 per cent and in many instances well above this level.

We would also like to refer to federal spending on regional development. This includes expenditures funded through the new regional development agencies, the regional program activities of industry, science and technology and the expenditures of other departments under federal-provincial regional development agreements. This has also increased strongly under the present government, thus average annual expenditures for these programs or their predecessors have increased from $558 million for the period from 1979-80 to 1983-84, to $832 million from 1984-85 to 1988-89 and to $1.107 billion from 1989-90 to 1994-95.

The Atlantic provinces' share of these totals increased throughout this time frame from 33 per cent for the first period to 34 per cent for the second period to an estimated 38 per cent for the last period.

These and many other examples all illustrate the high priority given by this government to the needy provinces.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.32 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 25, 1990

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers

[Translation]

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF WOMEN'S RIGHT TO VOTE IN QUEBEC

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, 50 years ago today, on April 25, 1940, the Quebec Legislature passed a bill giving women the right to vote.

This marked the end of a struggle that lasted nearly a century, to obtain a right that is absolutely fundamental in a democracy, the right to universal suffrage.

We owe this victory to the many women who, although they remained unknown, worked unselfishly to further the cause, each in her own time and her own environment.

We also owe this victory to famous figures like Thérèse Casgrain and Lady Drummond, a francophone and an anglophone who together not only worked for women's suffrage but were also genuine political organizers, dedicated, energetic and persevering. I also want to mention Mrs Gérin-Lajoie and Mrs Walter Lyman, co-chairwomen of the Canadian alliance for women's suffrage in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, with all my colleagues in this House, I wish to pay tribute today to all those women, the unknown and the famous, who were part of the struggle for women's suffrage.

[English]

Now, 50 years later, Quebec enjoys a pluralistic society in which women of all races, language, creeds and colour can fully participate in the democratic life of our community.

The right to vote has been won. Full rights to equality of opportunity remains the challenge.

PEACEKEEPING

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, during a recent Interparliamentary Union trip to Cyprus, the Canadian delegation had the opportunity to visit the Canadian peacekeeping contingent on that divided island.

The commanding officer of the whole UN peacekeeping force is the highly-regarded Canadian, General Milner. The 575-man Canadian contingent is made up primarily of the Princess Patricia Regiment, with some reservists as supplementals.

Everywhere we went on the island the Canadian forces were praised for their competence, fairness and co-operation, as well as for the excellent humanitarian work they are doing with both Greek and Turkish civilian populations.

We as Canadians can be very proud of our troops in Cyprus as an example of international peacekeeping at its best. We wish General Milner, Colonel Sutherland and the troops good health, safety and a successful mission.

* * *

[Translation]

ARMENIAN COMMUNITY

Ms. Nicole Roy-Arcelin (Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, Canada has among other countries a reputation for tolerance and freedom.

Our country has been considerably enriched by the contributions of hundreds of thousands of immigrants. Among these immigrants, thousands of Armenians have found refuge in this country. Their dedication and unwavering loyalty have enriched the Canadian mosaic. The Armenian community's contribution to Canadian life is reflected in the churches, schools and cultural centres it has built across this country. In addition, they have made a major contribution to the arts, architecture, literature, photography, business, industry, law, public administration and education.

Yesterday was a memorable day for all our fellow citizens of Armenian origin, and especially in the riding of Ahuntsic.

Mr. Speaker, with Canadians across this country I want to say that the terrible events of the past of this valiant and courageous people must not be forgotten.

* * *

[English]

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the federal government is abandoning its moral and legal authority to lead the country on social policy; and it is forcing provinces to go it alone. This will result in greater regional inequality.

For example, the reaction from B.C. to the cap on the Canada Assistance Program has been to have the Public Gaming Branch speculate that the government controlled slot machines could raise as much as $120 million a year—enough to offset the loss of federal transfer payments.

The Socreds have even gone so far as to consider putting its own cap on, a cap on the amounts of money now earned by non-profit organizations that use casinos and bingos for raising money.

The Ontario Liberal government has reacted in its budget to the Tories' abandoned leadership by making it clear it cannot and will not revamp its welfare system as planned.

In addition, the Liberals in Ontario will be putting more emphasis on a shift to user-pay programming.

The mean-spirited Tory agenda is not an attack on the deficit, but an attack on the poor.

* * *

• (1410)

[Translation]

MEMBER FOR YORK SOUTH—WESTON

Mr. Yvon Côté (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I must strongly denounce the unworthy accusations and attitude of the member for York South—Weston, who called those who favour sovereignty for Quebec traitors and racists.

Should the hon. member for York South—Weston not have made the same remarks about those who, like APEC, promote a unilingual English Canada, or the hold-out premiers whose attitudes will lead to the weakening or disappearance of Canada in the Meech Lake affair?

The Liberal member for York South—Weston should have understood and recognized that Quebec separatists used to be great Canadians, until they were deprived of their rights, of a bilingual Canada and a strong Quebec.

In short, this Liberal member should have foreseen the dramatic effects his statements would have on all the other Quebecers who had until then been seeking a new Canada but who can no longer believe in it. Alas, this Chrétien hack has sabotaged his own country which he claims to be virtuously defending!

Who is the real traitor, Mr. Speaker?

* * *

[English]

MONCTON

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the citizens of Moncton as the city celebrates its 100th birthday as a city.

The city was granted its Charter on April 23, 1890. April 23, 1990 was a special day—from the Citizenship Court swearing in of new Canadians, followed by students participating in the historical review "One Hundred Steps", to later in the day when Moncton City Council and Premier Frank McKenna went through a light-hearted re-enactment of the original granting of the Charter.

Moncton certainly lived up to its unofficial motto: "The City to Watch".

[Translation]

The history of Moncton is very varied. We have had shipbuilding, railways and now high technology. Our city is solidly built on two cultures. We are a microcosm of Canada.

[English]

My father and I both were mayors of the city of Moncton and, as all Monctonians, proud of its accomplishments. Happy Birthday, Moncton.

[Translation]

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF WOMEN'S RIGHT TO VOTE IN QUEBEC

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): In a show of solidarity with all women in Quebec, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that today marks the 50th anniversary of their right to vote in provincial elections.

It was after constant and unrelenting struggles that, on April 25, 1940, pioneers like Marie Gérin-Lajoie, Thérèse Casgrain and Idola St-Jean were successful in having the Quebec legislature acknowledge their right to equality in chosing their elected representatives, men or women.

In difficult times, these women paved the way for what has now become an irreversible movement towards full equality. Today's feminists owe them a lot.

* * *

CANADA POST

Mr. Gaby Larrivée (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to their service reliability program, Canada Post management made a public commitment in 1987 that they would guarantee regular delivery of standard letters properly addressed between major urban centres within the following time frames: two working days for letters sent within the same urban centre; three working days for letters to another major urban centre in the same province; and four working days to a major urban centre in another province.

The Ernst and Young report tabled yesterday and based on a survey of more than 50,000 items mailed during the first three months of the year indicates a service performance averaging 97 per cent of set objectives. Specifically, the Sherbrooke and Quebec City regions recorded 99 per cent, Montreal, Laval and Longueuil 98 per cent, and Winnipeg, Regina and Saskatoon 99 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, Canada Post and all its employees are to be commended for their outstanding service to the Canadian people.

An Hon. Member: Hurrah for Canada Post!

[English]

FISHERIES

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, with the advent of the spring lobster fishery in Nova Scotia, lobster fishermen in Nova Scotia and in the Gulf are nervous about their chances to survive another year.

As a result of lobster size regulations recently enacted by the United States Congress, prices have plummeted, falling to $2.50 a pound in southern Nova Scotia, well below last year's price of $4.50. Some industry observers think Gulf prices may soon fall below $2.

Yesterday's leak of the preliminary judgment by the binational free trade panel looking into the size regulations will no doubt put even more downward pressure on prices at the start of the season.

This is potentially disastrous. It will cost lobster fishermen untold thousands of dollars in lost income, maybe even their livelihood.

Atlantic Canadians cannot afford a crisis in yet another sector of the fishery. I call on the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to provide immediate help, both to cushion these fishermen against the offending size regulations and to help them find alternative markets for these lobsters.

* * *

[Translation]

BILL C-21

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I want to give Canadians the assurance that we want to achieve long-term economic prosperity for all the citizens of this country.

I think it is absurd that, at a time when tens of thousands of unemployed workers cannot find jobs, so many employers are complaining about a shortage of qualified manpower.

Our Canadian Jobs Strategy has a number of aims which include providing the necessary training programs to help unemployed workers find satisfactory employment; ensuring that employers have an adequate number of qualified workers; and implementing the programs needed to achieve these two objectives through a partnership involving the federal government, the private sector and the provinces.

We must urge the Senate to pass Bill C-21 without further delay.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

Today, the Canadian Real Estate Association announced that last month the sales of existing homes and condominiums in major cities dropped by 22 per cent compared to March of last year.

Speaking about this, Carl Beigie, a leading Canadian economist, said:

> We haven't seen the worst of it yet. It's like a house of cards. We're just starting to see the start of a really bad financial problem.

So I ask the minister this. Why are he and his government insisting on pursuing economic policies that are creating the start of a bad financial problem? Why is he doing this to Canadians, Canadian families, and Canadian workers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have responded to questions along those lines before. Perhaps I could read from an editorial which appeared in The Financial Post today.

> It's just as well the governor can weather the criticism; if he heeded his critics and loosened the monetary floodgates, we would really be in a pickle.

The editorial goes on to state:

> —inflationary pressures have been stronger in Canada than in the U.S—But if our costs are not contained, how can we remain competitive? Easy money and a lower Canadian dollar may deliver a temporary advantage—Any weakening of the Bank's resolve to maintain the value of the currency will be quickly pounced upon by long-term investors who will demand an inflation premium—Once such a flight begins, it's hard to stop.

These comments in this editorial from The Financial Post set out quite clearly the problem that we face as a country, that we are committed to dealing with, and that we find absolutely necessary to deal with and not to run away from, as did my hon. friend opposite in the late 1970s and the early 1980s.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a quote that I consider credible, and so will Canadians because it is from President Maurice R. Faraggi of the Canadian Real Estate Association. He said that the Canadian Real Estate Association:

> —believes there is room for interest rates to come down and in fact called upon the Central Bank to reduce them. Instead we see increase after increase, putting enormous pressure on Canadian consumers and impeding the government's own deficit reduction goals by increasing the cost of servicing its enormous debt. Enough is enough. Interest rates must come down!

So says Maurice Faraggi, the head of a major business organization, the Canadian Real Estate Association.

If the minister is so concerned about inflation, then why is it that senior officials of the Prime Minister's own office and the Bank of Canada have been given pay increases of up to 17.6 per cent? Over the same period working people have received increases of only some 12.9 per cent? Why is the minister asking Canadians to bite the bullet on cost-of-living increases when he is not doing the same thing for the staff of the Prime Minister's office and the Bank of Canada?

• (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member has asked those questions because I want to put the accurate picture on the record.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As far as the staff of the Prime Minister's office is concerned, the article is wrong. Until this month, the staff had not received an increase since the last election—since the last election. The staff received a 4.2 per cent increase this month which is not retroactive. That is one raise of 4.2 per cent in nearly two years. That is not excessive.

As far as the Bank of Canada is concerned, according to the article that I saw in the newspaper, the bank's salary structure in the 1987 to 1989 period was up 12.6 per cent. The public sector settlements during that same period were 14 per cent. Private sector settlements during that same period were 14.8 per cent. The Bank of Canada is in line with what is happening in terms of settlements in other parts of the public sector, as well as in the private sector.

I might point out that personal disposable income per capita during that 1987 to 1989 period is up 25.2 per cent.

[Translation]

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance avoided any comments on the salary increase of the Governor of the Bank of Canada which, according to my information, is above the level he mentioned.

I also want to ask the Minister of Finance why he did not react to what was said by the President of the Canadian Real Estate Association, who asked him for major reductions in interest rates. Why is the minister so reluctant to respond to one of our country's important businessmen?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how the Leader of the Opposition can say I have not given an answer to the question that he says was asked by the Canadian Real Estate Association. I answered that question on Monday. I answered it yesterday. I answered it again today. If he would like me to repeat it again, I will give him the answer.

First, let me say that I am not happy about interest rates being where they are today. I would like to see interest rates lower. It would certainly make my job a lot easier as Minister of Finance.

I do know that if we let these inflationary pressures get out of hand we will be back to where we started at around a 5.5 per cent inflation rate in the mid-1970s. It moved up to 13 per cent because the government of the day did not take the problem seriously. We are taking the problem seriously. We are trying to head off the problem before it gets out of control and before it leads to a 13 per cent inflation rate and the 20 per cent to 25 per cent interest rates that we saw in the early 1980s.

Surely my hon. friend's memory is not that bad that he cannot remember the damage that that period did to the economy of Canada. We are trying to avoid that with the policies we are following.

[Translation]

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, in his Budget the Minister of Finance explained that the average interest rate in Canada this year should be around 11.1 per cent. Subsequently, the Prime Minister of Canada told us that interest rates should go down very shortly.

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Does the government set monetary policy for this country or does the Financial Post, which is the impression we get from his answer to the Leader of the Liberal Party?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first, let me congratulate my hon. friend for having been moved from the back row up to the second row. I would caution him not to be too influenced by those people on his left flank.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I might also say that he should be pretty cautious about the ideas he takes from his right flank as well.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister could respond to the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, these are serious matters. I have discussed them at some length in the House during the past two days, and I am willing to do so again. I am willing to discuss these matters further at committee, if members wish me to do so.

I reported what was stated in The Financial Post. That is a responsible newspaper expressing, I think, a point of view that is a responsible point of view. It is a point of view that I think is important for Canadians to understand.

As I have indicated, I am not happy about high interest rates. I would like to see them come down. But I want to see them come down on a permanent basis, not on a short-term basis to then find that interest rates and inflation are much higher. The problem would be much more difficult to resolve at that stage, as we found out in 1980 to 1982 when we went through a very serious recession and we saw all the damage that caused.

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance.

For months, if not for the last couple of years, the Governor of the Bank of Canada has said that inflation is public enemy number one. Does the Minister of Finance not believe that the time has come to recognize that the high interest rate policy and the high value of the Canadian dollar are creating the real public enemy number one in this country, which is a recession? Does the minister not realize that this is what the end result of his policies will be? As a result, will he change those policies?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if we could go back and look at every recession that has happened, at least since the war, we would see that there has always been a period of high inflation, inflation that got out of control, before we had a recession. What we are trying to do is to keep the level of inflation down, avoid the problems that a high level of inflation causes, along with the blow-off that comes from it and the sudden drop that follows. That is the essence of the policies we are following.

My hon. friend says that there is a lot of advice to the contrary. I understand that. But I can take my hon. friend back to August of 1988 and August of 1989 when we had the unanimous recommendation from the provincial premiers to reduce interest rates. If we had reduced interest rates at that time, we would have considerably higher levels of inflation today and we would be that much closer to a serious recession of the type my friend is talking about, the type of recession we are committed to avoid.

* * *

CHILD CARE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

In July, 1988, the Prime Minister told a meeting in Toronto: "We will implement and build on our national child care program". During the last election campaign in October, 1988, the Prime Minister said again of the government's child care legislation: "We will be reintroducing that legislation and pass it as soon as Parliament comes back after the election".

Parliament has been back for a year and half, and we are still waiting for child care legislation. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister this. Will the government make a commitment now to bring in child care legislation this year?

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare said yesterday, and as was announced in the Speech from the Throne on April 3, 1989, this government will have a child care program implemented before 1993.

If it had not been for the other place, we would now have a child care program implemented.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

There are 1.3 million children in Canada in need of child care spaces. There are just over 200,000 licensed child care spaces. Now the government is saying to wait until 1993.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in 1984 during the election campaign, the Prime Minister promised to improve child care services. Six years later, the situation is still the same. A whole generation has grown up since. Will this government take action now instead of waiting until the next election campaign?

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the New Democratic Party says that in 1984 we talked about this program, she is right. However, we not only talked about it, we passed legislation in the House of Commons. It has not been implemented, not through the fault of the government but of the other place. The Senate failed to pass legislation, not us. We did our job, and the Leader of the NDP should congratulate the government on the good work it did during its first term.

• (1430)

[English]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The government knows that that legislation was not put in force because it was unacceptable to every child care group in this country.

The government continually refuses to live up to its commitments to the children of this country and is abandoning the families of this country. The government has promised that child care facilities will be available in all new and renovated federal government buildings. Yet the government is breaking its promise again for new federal buildings. I cite one example in Whitehorse, Yukon.

Will this government guarantee now that child care facilities, as it has been agreed to with the Public Service Commission in Whitehorse, Yukon, and throughout Canada, will be assured in all federal buildings?

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party says that we did nothing. We put $6.4 billion for child care programs in our last mandate. How can the hon. member say that was nothing; $6.4 billion.

The only reason it is not implemented is because the other place would not do so. It is not the fault of this government, it is the fault of the other place. Maybe the Liberals should talk to their colleagues in the other place.

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Currently there are more than 2 million children under age 12 who require day care. Yet, thanks to this government's previous commitment to day care, there are only enough licensed spaces for about 10 per cent of these children.

My question is, quite simply, when is this government going to recognize the day care crisis in Canada and give us a firm date on when the new legislation will be introduced? Nineteen ninety-three is not acceptable.

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, 1993 may not be acceptable to the hon. member, but 1988 would have been acceptable to this government when it passed the legislation.

I am surprised that this question would come from a member of the Official Opposition. All the member would have had to do was talk to the members of the Liberal Party in the other place and we would now have a child care program in place in Canada.

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, the member should refrain from giving the government's old refrain and answer the chorus of discontent in this country. Working mothers are not among the 15 per cent of Canadians who still support this government.

If and when the government decides to live up to its new-found interest in children, is this government prepared to guarantee to this House that new legislation will not put a funding cap on new spaces, will set all-important national standards for high quality care and assure Canadians for the first time that it will provide for the national enforcement of those standards?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, for the second time, I am surprised to have a question on a national child care program from a Liberal member of the Official Opposition. This government passed legislation that created a national child care program and allocated $6.4 billion to it. The only reason many children in this country do not have a national day care system is the Senate, the other place.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Everyone in Canada opposed your proposal.

Mr. Danis: And I hope that the Liberal member opposite will give the Senate the message about child care, and about the unemployment insurance bill as well.

* * *

LINGUISTIC MINORITIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Secretary of State, but in his absence, I shall direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday, the Secretary of State told us in this House that he had called Saskatchewan Education Minister Meiklejohn and obtained an assurance from him that his government intended to move quickly on implementing a school system controlled and run by the minority.

Mr. Speaker, today's Le Devoir informs us that the same education minister said that he was not sure he could proceed with this program of minority-controlled schools promised by the Saskatchewan government.

I ask the minister to obtain a firm commitment in writing from the Saskatchewan government that it will keep its promise to its minority and provide Saskatchewan francophones with a school system that meets their needs and which they will manage and control, in a clearly specified time frame.

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, Prime Minister Mulroney wrote to the Saskatchewan government very recently to deeply deplore the delay in setting up the separately managed school system. He even offered the Saskatchewan government legal services and the federal government's legal expertise, since the Saskatchewan government used this argument to justify the delay in establishing the new system.

The National Commission of Francophone Parents today issued a press release congratulating Prime Minister Mulroney for his leadership on this issue.

[English]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the minister may satisfy himself with a letter from the Prime Minister, but that does not give that minority anything in terms of concrete actions from its provincial government. An agreement was signed in 1988 for $26 million over 10 years to provide for a service, the implementation of a system of control and management of the schools by the minority.

Will the minister give this House his assurance that within that bilateral federal-provincial agreement no moneys will be spent at this time until a reasonable, acceptable, concrete commitment by the province has been given to the francophone population of that province that meets with their ideas of what should be in place in Saskatchewan?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, nobody can raise any question on the sincerity of the efforts made by this government to promote French outside of Quebec. I would remind my hon. colleagues from the other side of the House that today the Fransaskais themselves have issued a communiqué recognizing the leadership shown by the Prime Minister on this issue.

* * *

INTEREST RATES

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and concerns high interest rates and inflation. Over the last year increases in interest rates have meant that monthly mortgage payments on an average home have increased by over $200 per month. Because of taxes and payroll deductions, in order to have $200 a month a person must earn $400 a month. This is a major cause of wage pressure and wage inflation.

In the face of this clear evidence, will the minister now admit that high interest rates are a prime cause of inflation, not a cure for inflation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, I do not accept that statement at all, Mr. Speaker. Let me take my friend back to what has happened during the course of 1989.

We had bank credit, that is loan demand for business loans, for consumer loans, for household mortgage loans, all growing in excess of 10 per cent per annum throughout this period and for mortgage loans the rate of growth ranged between 15 and 20 per cent per annum.

If we had reduced interest rates at that time, as my colleague has said that he would like us to have done, we would increase the demand for those loans. That loan demand would have been much higher than it was and that just sows the seeds for future inflation.

This is precisely what we are trying to avoid. High interest rates are the symptom of the problem. The cause of the problem is inflation. Inflation causes high interest rates.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. It is obvious that the government does not care about child care but it also becoming apparent that it does not care about homeless children.

• (1440)

Each increase of 1 per cent in the mortgage rates means another 100,000 Canadians cannot afford to purchase a home. Housing resales have plummeted. Houses starts will fall within six months.

The Minister of Finance knows that housing construction is one of the main engines of our economy. Will the minister now say that interest rates have peaked, or will he continue with his bull-headed high interest rate policy and force this country into a full recession?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, housing starts, according to the most recent figures, I believe, were 222,000 on an annual basis. They have been in excess of 200,000 starts a year for three or four years now. So we have had a very strong housing market that has been well supported by the policies that have been followed by this government. That is one of the reasons why we have unemployment down to the lowest levels that it has been for many, many years now. This suggests to me that our economy is operating at high levels of activity which is leading to the levels of inflationary pressures that we are seeing today.

But, Mr. Speaker, my colleague is forgetting that in the 1970s and early 1980s, when problems of inflation were ignored or were not taken seriously enough by the previous government, we ended up with exactly the problem that my hon. friend tells me that we should be trying to avoid.

That is why we are doing what we are doing, to stop the inflationary pressures where they are now, to start the levels of inflation turning down rather than continuing up, because if they do continue up, we will most certainly see the problems of high interest rates, high unemployment and a plummet in housing starts which my hon. friend is concerned about.

* * *

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State (Employment and Immigration). Some 54 weeks have elapsed since this Government tabled in this House the Labour Force Development Strategy. Also, Bill C-21 has been passed by this House.

Right now, Mr. Speaker, a number of my constituents have to wait between 14 and 20 weeks to be entitled to UI benefits. I would like to know from the Minister what she intends to do to help the unemployed in my constituency, because they are hurting.

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is expressing the concerns of many Canadian workers. I would like first to reassure this House and express this Government's intention to provide Canadian workers with a long-term economic future.

This being said, we all know that Bill C-21 is based on a variable entrance requirement which will provide us with a system that is fairer. Under that requirement, workers in high unemployment areas will only need 10 weeks of employment. The requirement becomes higher in more prosperous areas. It may be important to add that there will no longer be that six week penalty for seasonal workers who apply for benefits more than once during one year.

I would like to take this opportunity to once more urge the other House to pass within the shortest possible time frame Bill C-21, which will be of help to our workers.

* * *

[English]

PRESENCE IN GALLERY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to members' attention the presence in the gallery of the United Kingdom Select Committee on Members' Interests, led by Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

FIREARMS CONTROL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Justice or perhaps the Leader of the Government in the House of Commons.

When the Minister of Justice visited the École Polytechnique in Montreal recently, students presented the minister with 25 boxes of petitions, with more than 500,000 signatures, asking for more effective control of firearms. On that occasion, the minister promised to table a bill in the House by the end of this month. Since it is now April 25, could the minister inform the House when we will have this bill before the House? On what date?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): I want to thank my hon. friend for the question. It is, indeed, a very serious situation. The government has been reviewing the present firearms legislation for some time now. I can assure my friend that it was a very extensive consultation process because in my former capacity I was heavily involved in that consultation process.

The new minister is seized of the matter, and I am sure that she will be bringing it forward as soon as she has an opportunity to familiarize herself with the legislation and with all the ramifications.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, the minister promised to bring in that bill before the end of the month.

Can the minister tell this House whether the law will ban the sale of military and paramilitary weapons to private citizens?

I want to remind the minister that the gun that was used to kill those 14 women at the University of Montreal was a Ruger semi-automatic rifle which could fire up to 50 rounds of ammunition and which is now used by several police SWAT squads and military forces.

Does the minister and the government think that this is the type of gun that should be sold to private citizens over the counter?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should advise my hon. friend that the initiative started off to look at banning the sale of automatic weapons which had been converted to semi-automatic weapons for the purpose of bringing them into the country. Since this legislation had not been revised for some ten years, there was an effort made to review all of the ramifications of the firearms control legislation in an effort to improve it.

I can assure my hon. friend that we take the sale of military weapons very, very seriously. My colleague, the Minister of Justice, is looking at the question of magazine size, but there is no intention to ban semi-automatic weapons.

* * *

[Translation]

TRADE

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There are reports today that the Free Trade Panel is about to support the U.S. measure to restrict exports of Canadian lobster to the United States. Considering the devastating impact of such a decision, what does the minister intend to do to remove the uncertainty this U.S. measure has created in the lobster industry in the Maritimes, at a time when the fishing season is about to begin?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the House will remember that on December 21, Canada invoked Chapter 18 dispute resolution mechanisms of the free trade agreement to have a bi-national panel set up that would challenge American amendments to the Magnuson Act, amendments which would effectively prohibit the importation into the United States of live lobster smaller than the American minimum size. That panel has completed its interim report. That was a confidential report until elements of it were published today in the press.

As the member will know, there is a procedure which allows the Government of Canada and the affected industry to comment on this interim report up until April 30. There were consultations held yesterday in Halifax with regard to the comments that Canada would make. Those comments will be made prior to April 30.

I remind the House that the final report does not come in until May 15. We intend to continue to press the interests of Canadian lobster fishermen.

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, last fall when the U.S. legislation the minister is talking about was introduced, the Prime Minister promised to use the full weight of government influence to prevent it from being passed. Yet it was passed and now we have reports that this measure, which the Minister for International Trade has called "a trade distorting measure", has been found acceptable by the bi-national panel.

Will the minister tell this House today what further action he will take to lift the cloud which this U.S. trade restriction has created on the Atlantic lobster industry?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said that he would bring the full weight of Canadian influence to bear. I was with him when he raised the matter specifically with the President of the United States and argued strongly that the legislation not be proceeded with. Unfortunately, the President moved in his own jurisdiction to proceed with the amendments. We then immediately triggered the provisions that exist under the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

• (1450)

A panel was established in accordance with the provisions of the FTA. The panel was not unanimous on the basic question that is of concern to Canada which is what we believe to be the trade distorting implications of the U.S. measure.

There has been an interim report. We are disappointed with the interim report. We are availing ourselves of the provisions set out in the FTA and will comment on the interim report with the hope that the final report which has yet to come will be more satisfactory from the Canadian perspective.

* * *

ENERGY

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Two days ago, during the energy and transportation session of the parliamentary forum on global climate change, all three expert witnesses, including the President of the Canadian Automobile Association, condemned the government for going in the wrong direction by cutting funding for energy alternatives and conservation by over 90 per cent since 1984.

As it is a waste of time to consult further on what is universally agreed and as, in the words of the environment minister, "the price of inaction is too high", will the energy minister restore funding for these very effective programs to 1984 levels now, and not use the excuse of The Green Plan discussions to further stall what virtually everyone agrees should be done immediately?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member's question, I have met with a number of the Canadian automobile manufacturers and have raised the issues with them. We have had a good discussion as to what possible further energy efficiencies we might be able to meet in that field.

I am meeting with the window and door manufacturers of Canada later on with respect to inert gases in doors and windows as well as the work on R-2000.

I am not using the excuse of The Green Plan at all to withhold any plan on energy efficiency and conservation. In fact, the Minister of the Environment and I are concourant on those issues.

The issue at which the hon. member for Edmonton East and I are at odds is that I do not intend to spend money, as was done before, on programs that paid public servants for work that was already in the marketplace. I believe that money should be spent for further R and D so that we can get more energy efficiency, rather than pay for the salaries that were then in place.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, while no one advocates the duplication of expenditures, I do not think anyone would agree that meetings and discussions are substitutes for money.

However, given that Petro-Canada is well placed to take a leadership role in helping to make Canada, in the words of The Green Plan paper, "the industrial world's most environmentally friendly country", will the minister go back to his cabinet colleagues and urge them to scrap their plans to privatize Petro-Canada? Will he urge them to start using Canada's energy corporation actively and creatively to promote a more environmentally responsible energy future?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think that the philosophical position which the hon. member has put forward, that in some way a publicly owned corporation is more energy efficient, or can be more conscious of environmental issues, is a very short-sighted view.

Right across the energy field there are energy efficiencies. There are different blends of fuels, for example. It was not only Petro-Canada that introduced different blends and removed lead, it was all companies because this government made that decision.

It is of no consequence whatsoever whether a company is private or public. The issue is how to get more energy efficiency, how to use energy more effectively, how that fits in with the environmental plan and how we educate Canadians on those issues.

That is the issue. It has nothing to do with the Neanderthal view the NDP has that public is somehow better.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There presently exists a terrible situation in Burma. There is brutal suppression of human rights. Thousands of human beings are being massacred.

Will the elections that are going to be held in May in Burma be democratic when members of the opposition parties are thrown in jail without trial if they choose to contest the upcoming election?

Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs advise this House whether Canada will send a delegation to observe the Burmese elections in May?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are deeply concerned about the political situation and the abuse of human rights in Burma, which is now known as Myanmar. The government of that country has made it clear that it will not welcome political observers. Indeed, it has gone a step further and indicated that it is putting a severe limitation upon the visits by tourists and others to the country because it expects that some of those tourists, journalists or others, might function as election observers. I think that makes it extremely unlikely that the election that is planned for that country will be a democratic or a full election.

We are calling in the Ambassador of Myanmar to Canada to express our most serious objections to that procedure and we are making those representations in Myanmar itself.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE CANADA

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Recent media reports have indicated that Correctional Service Canada plans to install a newly conceived and designed parole office in downtown Toronto. This office would exclusively serve a concentrated number of high risk offenders who are released on mandatory supervision. This particular office location is not far from where the Tema Conter tragedy took place a couple of years ago.

What steps is Correctional Service Canada taking to explain to the community what exactly is being planned here and why these so-called high risk offenders are being released in the first place to the community prior to the termination of their sentences?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the release of inmates, either on parole or on mandatory supervision, as my hon. colleague knows, there are some programs to that effect and the Parole Board obviously makes those decisions bearing in mind the criteria which is the utmost safety of the people in the community or communities which may be concerned.

With respect to the "super office" that he is referring to, there is a pilot project that will be under way and I am convinced that the service will do whatever consultation is necessary in order to make sure that everybody is aware of what is coming down.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, this particular facility will be bringing together a relatively large number of potentially high risk offenders and they will be concentrated administratively in one particular place.

In view of the fact that this type of initiative is a new concept for Correctional Service, specifically what steps are going to be taken by the government to increase the security and protection for the public and to reassure them that the correction system maintains public security as its primary goal?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, public safety is the prime criteria that is taken into consideration when an inmate is given either probation or mandatory supervision. Therefore, the public security concept is taken into consideration and the service will continue to make sure that public safety is maintained and protected.

I think it might be important once in a while to look at the success stories of those particular situations rather than only the unfortunate circumstances that do occur from time to time. The service is very aware of those concerns and will take every step necessary to protect public safety.

* * *

[Translation]

CANADA POST

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for Canada Post and concerns the report on mail delivery released yesterday. As the minister is aware, the report recommends either closing or privatizing all rural post offices in Canada. Considering that this measure would result in 10,000 people being laid off, 80 per cent of whom are women, which would be the largest number of women laid off in Canada's history, will the minister today, on the anniversary of women's suffrage in Quebec, reject this recommendation and give Canadian women working in rural post offices the assurance that their jobs are safe?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, if things were anywhere like the description in the preamble of the hon. member's question, I might be inclined to. Of course he knows that is not the fact.

In fact, he knows there is no lay-off of rural postmasters. Only when there is an occurrence of somebody resigning or someone who is deceased or so on, or where the community has shrunk, does the post office look at the possibility of putting in a retail postal outlet. Where that has been done around the country, the users of the post office have approved of the change by an overwhelming percentage. They end up with better service, they like it.

It is service to the customers of the post office we have asked the management to look after first and foremost, and they are doing it in superb fashion.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party will be shrunk the day after the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: I want to ask a supplementary question of the minister responsible for Canada Post. Why is he not prepared to say right now in the House of Commons that he intends to protect the quality of the delivery of mail to rural Canadians? What does the Conservative party have against rural Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I will go further than that and say I will protect the quality of rural mail delivery. I will also guarantee to continue the improvement in rural services that we have seen over the last four years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I would like to bring to the attention of the House a most important matter of privilege which originated here and that I was informed of on Monday.

* * *

[English]

PRIVILEGE

REMARKS OF HON. MEMBER FOR YORK SOUTH—WESTON

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to clarify the remarks I made at the Liberal leadership forum in Halifax on the weekend.

I would like to make it absolutely clear at the outset that it was not my intention in any way, shape, or form to insult Quebecers or anyone else. I did not in my statement use the words "sedition" or "treason", words that have been attributed to me. I did not cite the Criminal Code of Canada. Yet there are those, for political reasons I suspect, who have attributed certain words to me.

I did indicate in Halifax that in my view separatists were traitors. Those were the words I used. I was not referring to Quebecers. I was referring to the small minority of individuals who have as their raison d'être the destruction of our country, who promote actively on an ongoing basis the division of Canada. I did not mean the word in the criminal sense. On the contrary, I meant it in the dictionary sense, if you will, and I would like to cite the Oxford dictionary definition of "traitor".

> One who is false to his allegiance or acts disloyally (to country—

Mr. Speaker, after our election when we became members of Parliament, we were all required to swear an oath of allegiance before we could take our seats in this place. That is a requirement in law under the British North America Act. Each and every one of us in this House had to swear the following oath:

> I, —, do swear, that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second.

That is required under the British North America Act, The Fifth Schedule. Those who for religious reasons feel it necessary to affirm in lieu of the oath are required to state that:

> I, —, do solemnly, sincerely and truly affirm and declare that taking of an oath is according to my religious belief unlawful, and I do also solemnly, sincerely and truly affirm and declare that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second.

That is the duty and the responsibility of each and every one of us who has been elected to the Parliament of Canada.

With respect to separatists, there are a number of people who have different definitions or interpretations of the word "separatist" and who is a separatist and who is not, and whether a separatist is a nationalist, and whether a nationalist is a separatist. In the context of my comments at Halifax, I was referring to those who have as their preoccupation, their raison d'être, the division of Canada. If that is their ambition and goal, then how can it be said, according to the dictionary definition, that the person is loyal to Canada.

In so far as the words "racist" and "bigot" are concerned, I did not call anyone a racist or a bigot. I did not refer to any particular individual as a racist or a bigot. I did not introduce the words racism and bigotry into this debate. A few months ago the Prime Minister said the following, and I agree with him with respect to this particular quote.

In the article entitled "Language Intolerance is Near Racism, PM", the Prime Minister said: "Great nations are built by generosity and understanding and by resisting the temptation to knock one's neighbours or diminish someone who is different. Once you get after language the next thing is race, the next thing is religion and the next thing is colour. That is the absence of tolerance."

The Prime Minister said on September 14, 1984, and I quote: "To try to curry the favour of the Parti Quebecois organization during a leadership campaign is dangerous to the candidate who does it. It is dangerous for the future of the party he seeks to lead and it is dangerous to the future of the united country he seeks to govern. You do not become Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada by playing footsie with the Parti Quebecois."

At the time, he was expressing concerns I have, that all too often, in recognizing the sensitivity of the matter, it appears difficult to stand up and fight for Canada, to defend Canada and to take to task those who have as their vocation the division of Canada. What I intended at Halifax was to take the separatists to task for their goal and ambition.

Others have used similar language. It is strong language, but we have the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in Canada. Each and every one of us is afforded certain rights and privileges, and one of them is freedom of speech. I do not deny those who advocate separatism the right, in a lawful manner, to advocate separatism or division. That is their right. As long as it is not done in a violent fashion or as long as one does not promote violence, it is their right. But it is also my right as a Canadian and as a member of Parliament to stand up and debate and discuss in a very firm fashion my views with respect to the issue of national unity.

• (1510)

A great number of members in this House have made comments as of late with respect to the whole question of the Meech Lake Accord or national unity. The member for Kitchener, for example, just a few weeks ago said and I quote:

> When I listen to some of my Quebec colleagues I don't like what I am hearing. I sometimes wonder if it almost treason to keep talking about separatism.

There are others, and I will not cite all of them, that have expressed—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if I could perhaps help all hon. members and the hon. member from York South—Weston. I have been listening extremely carefully, as other members have, I think, to what is a sensitive statement.

I wonder if the hon. member could keep on the subject which caused the application a couple of days ago. I do not think it adds very much to be quoting other members on other matters, although I understand that clearly the hon. member has done so up to this point to indicate that he is not the only person who may have strong views on delicate issues. I would ask him to stay as closely as he can to the matter which I think he has already introduced very properly.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by saying that all too often a different standard is used with respect to different individuals, and I understand that. I am part of the cut and thrust of this place, and you yourself have indicated that this is not a place for the weak and timid. I have taken my lumps and I will continue to them. I just wish to be afforded the same fairness and opportunity to express my point of view, and I will try to make my statement in the most sensitive manner possible. I would expect that the same standard be used when members on the other side of the House, for example, ask Canadians to choose between Newfoundland or Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: When given the opportunity, and I do not want to engage with the members opposite—

Mr. Speaker: I think what the hon. member is trying to do here—and hon. members have been very quiet and very co-operative—is to indicate that whatever was said was not meant to apply to other members of this honourable place. I think that the hon. member is intending to say that. I must invite him to perhaps make that clear, because I think that if that is what is made clear that is very much the end of the issue.

Mr. Nunziata: I will make that clear, Mr. Speaker. Some of my comments, as I indicated, were distorted. I did not make some of the statements that have been attributed to me with respect to treason and sedition in the Criminal Code of Canada. I did not direct my comments to any member in this House. On the contrary, every member of this House has sworn an oath of allegiance. My comments were directed to others outside this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the hon. member very much for coming into this House.

[Translation]

I thank the hon. member for his comments. There is no need for further discussion. It was originally intended as a question of privilege—

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Speaker: In the opinion of the Chair, the case is closed.

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the floor, if I may, because I was the only member of this House who was mentioned–indirectly in what the hon. member said earlier and directly during the days that led up to the present events. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to say anything that would in any way worsen a situation that is almost unacceptable. I think this is not the time for petty bickering. I believe the occasion demands that we rise above such considerations.

Bearing this in mind, I would like to deal very quickly with two questions. I realize it is not very prudent, but I feel it is my duty because I have known these men and women. The hon. member referred to the Parti Québécois as a party that, he implied, was separatist. Not seditious, but separatist as synonymous with treason. He did not say "treason" but he said traitor. I knew most of the men and women who were part of that government. I knew Mr. Lévesque personally. He was a great democrat, a man whose democratic and peace-loving spirit all Canadians should appreciate, a man who led a very difficult debate in a political situation that was extremely volatile and who brought this debate to a democratic conclusion, with the results we all know. I think that at least in this House, the honor of this man and of those who work with him deserves our respect.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Second, Mr. Speaker, the Parti Québécois is a lawfully established party that was democratically and lawfully elected to guide the destiny of Quebec during those years, and it too is entitled to the respect of this House.

Furthermore, I see a number of things in what the hon. member said. I will not get into details, but I certainly see a breach of the privileges of this House. I see an insult to Quebecers, I see a breach of the privileges of this House and I see a breach of our privileges in Quebec, because of the undue burden they would have us carry. Every time we want to speak for Quebec, every time we want to promote Quebec's interests, they want us to prove our loyalty to Canada.

Let's talk about this loyalty to Canada. We hear a lot about it. I think, Mr. Speaker, that we must recognize—especially the member concerned—that the members of the House from Quebec made an act of faith toward both Quebec and Canada when they came here. They did by coming here after their election to represent Quebec in this House, as the members from Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Atlantic Canada and Newfoundland represent their constituents. I must say, however, that they did not want to be asked to forget where they were from when they came here. Do not ask us to forget that we are Quebecers and that we come from a nation who has had to struggle relentlessly for its survival. A Quebecer coming to Ottawa must not forget that.

Coming to Ottawa, we also became aware of the risk we were taking. It has sometimes been called "le beau risque". It was a risk worth taking and, as far as I am concerned, it still is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): The risk of succeeding or failing. Success means opening the way for the future of a very large country in which there will be room for Quebec, a country that all Quebecers wil be able to love wholeheartedly. That is what I call success, Mr. Speaker. The way to success on the Meech Lake Accord is reconciliation. And the Prime Minister (M. Mulroney) has lead the country on this path, pursuant to the committment he has taken in 1984 and that he has honored, a path on which all Premiers have joined him in 1987.

One other thing, Mr. Speaker. There is also the case of another liberal candidate whose choice of words was even worse in a way, since he used the word "sedition" and that member, who is here today, has not been repudiated by the other candidate, Jean Chrétien. Jean Chrétien stated that not everybody is a criminal, leading to believe that some people are. I want—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I would ask for the co-operation of hon. members in a difficult situation. We have procedural difficulties.

I must say to the hon. minister that this is becoming a debate which has no procedural basis whatsoever.

• (1520)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: One moment, please. I have been listening with much interest to the comments of the Hon. Minister, because this is a concern. This is all very eloquent, very emotional, very intelligent. It is not appropriate however to mention many others.

I would invite you to please continue, but at this stage it possibly is time to conclude your remarks.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): I defer, Mr. Speaker. Let me conclude my remarks concernings the hon. member's comments.

It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that everyone will refrain from making that kind of comments, which revive memories that are unfortunately too recent and might rekindle ashes that only a true reconciliation can dampen. An honourable and enthusiastic reconciliation. And I emphasize honourable, because a people demands respect! And enthusiastic, because a people needs hope!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, on a matter of privilege!

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a matter of privilege concerning the comments made by the hon. member for York-South—Weston where he referred to the oath of allegiance to the Queen. He questioned the validity of the oath made by all those who propose a different form of federalism, a new political contract, and who in fact—

Mr. Plamondon: On a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Speaker: Please! I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but this is not a matter of privilege. It maybe a matter of debate with your colleague, but it is not a matter of privilege.

Mr. Plamondon: Indeed! Indeed! A matter of privilege!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Tabling of documents. The hon. minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Plamondon: No, no! I have a matter of privilege!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Tabling of documents.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government responses to 16 petitions.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CF-18 AIR CRASHES

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise to extend on behalf of all members of this House our sympathy to Captain Hollis Tucker's family, following a CF-18 crash last Sunday on Vancouver Island.

I would also like to take this opportunity to extend our condolences, on behalf of the House, to Captain Kirk Leuty's family following a tragic CF-18 accident last week in Germany, and to say to their comrades that we understand their loss of good friends. We extend our sympathy to them.

As a result of these accidents, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that I ordered a 48-hour suspension of all CF-18 operational training activity. At that time I said I would inform the House and my colleagues as to what had come about in that 48-hour time period.

This measure was to allow our senior Air Force commanders time to assess the situation and, during this period of time, do an intensive assessment by commanders at all levels of our fighter operations has been conducted.

Pursuant to this assessment and in the absence of an exact determination of the causes of recent accidents, the Air Commander has modified training materials and procedures, exercise scenarios, flight envelopes—for example, the altitude limitations, the air speed, and so on—to reinforce the safety aspects of the safety/realism equation.

Based on these changes, I have accepted the recommendation of my military commanders that the return to routine tasking and operation commence as air crew are briefed on these new measures. These briefings will conclude this week, and I expect that routine tasking will begin next week.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Madam Speaker, I join the Minister of National Defence, also on behalf of all members of this House, in extending our sympathy to the families of Captain Hollis Tucker and Captain Kirk Leuty, and indeed, to the families of all the CF-18 pilots who have lost their lives in the line of duty in the service of their country.

Our Canadian military won in war the reputation of being professional, a reputation that they fiercely protect and unquestionably maintain in peace. It is that reputation and a continuing trust in their professional conduct and judgment that allows this side of the House to appreciate the Defence Minister's statement.

That statement, as I understand it, is that, although an exact determination of the cause of recent accidents has not been found, with restrictions and appropriate briefings, including special emphasis on the safety/combat realism equation, routine taskings will begin next week. Nevertheless, I enjoin the minister to continue to pursue vigorously a "tiger-team" approach to finding the cause of these tragic accidents and to make the results public in a timely manner.

I think it is appropriate to inject a thought at this point in time. What a society gets from its armed forces is exactly what it asks for—nothing more and nothing less. What it asks for tends to be a reflection of what it is.

When a country looks at its fighting force and what it does, it is really looking into a mirror. If the mirror is a true one, the reflection it sees there will be its own. It is within the context of this principle, and without prejudice to the follow-on investigations that may follow or any other further restrictions that may be placed on the CF-18 aircraft, that guides our response to this very sensitive and important issue.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I, too, on behalf of my party and all members of the House, wish to extend our sincerest condolences to the families of Captain Hollis Tucker and Captain Kirk Leuty. It is very sad and tragic that in training, whether it be the the Air Command, Army or Maritime Command, from time to time there are casualties, some of them the extreme casualty of death.

However, we do have a responsibility in this Chamber to make absolutely certain that everything is done to minimize those tragic incidents. I commend the minister for his 48-hour moratorium. I do question, however, whether in 48 hours enough information could be obtained to permit him, not to lift the moratorium, but at least to allow routine flying to recommence with that particular airplane. However, he has information from his senior officers and staff. Obviously, he is satisfied at this point that routine training flights will not jeopardize the lives of those other pilots who are flying. I would, however, stress that there is always an element of danger, particularly in such a sophisticated plane as the CF-18.

• (1530)

What I would like to see is a full, public inquiry. We live in an age of information; we are an informational society. People want to know, people have the right to know, and if I can sound crass for a moment, the taxpayers of Canada have a lot of money invested in the Canadian Armed Forces and indeed in those planes that are in the range of $35 million to $37 million each.

I am getting a little tired of the in-house, behind closed doors approach that National Defence usually adopts in its investigations. That is appropriate in wartime or if national security is at stake. However, if it is purely a safety measure, an investigation should be established so that all interested persons, either military or non-military, have an opportunity to find all the facts and all the information as they were presented.

Finally, I find it difficult to accept that the CF-18s should continue to practice low-level tactical flying exercises related to such things as the follow-on force attack and the pursuit of cruise missiles at a time when we are making every effort to wind down what used to be called the cold war. By "we" I mean our country, the United States, certainly Europe, and the Eastern Bloc. I see no practical purposes served in those particular simulated low-level tactical flights in view of the high risk involved in terms of lives being lost at this time.

I hope that the minister will see fit to open up the inquiry somewhere down the road in the not too distant future so that we all may benefit from the information and the input that goes into that inquiry.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member for Saint-Denis.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I would like to give the House notice that at the first opportunity I wish to raise a question of privilege with the Speaker concerning the exchange that took place earlier between the hon. member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and other members. This is my first opportunity to give notice. I am not giving it in writing but I am notifying the House, because I want to carefully review the exchange that took place. In my opinion, the procedure was flawed. I want to go over it and notify you today that if I conclude that I have a question of privilege, I will raise it at the earliest opportunity—I have served notice.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair has taken note.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): On the same point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) on the same point of order.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Madam Speaker, I also submitted a question of privilege to the Speaker this morning. Unfortunately, I did not indicate the subject on which I wished to speak and the Speaker refused to recognize my question of privilege. I too think that we need more details on this question, because I think that my right—

Mr. Plamondon: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon) on a point of order.

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Madam Speaker, on the same question raised by the two previous speakers. Two days ago when we were commenting on the statement made by the hon. member for York South—Weston, I was given the floor but Mr. Speaker interrupted me to say that, the hon. member being absent, I would be recognized after he would have had a chance to explain himself. Well, the hon. member has had his say but I was not recognized even though I had advised the Chair that I wanted to continue the remarks I had begun Monday when the hon. member was absent.

My rights as a member have been breached. I do not accept the decision of the Chair and I denounce its decision concerning the other 20—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think we are arguing a point which has been settled a moment ago. The hon. member for Saint-Denis rose on a point which I think was different from the one that had just been settled. Perhaps the hon. member for Richelieu would want to go over what he has just said and reconsider some of his remarks because I do not think he wanted to question a decision made by the Chair earlier this afternoon.

So I think the best thing to do right now is to stop entertaining questions of privilege and points of order since these are not points of order anyway. In my opinion, there is not legitimate point of order. We will proceed with the daily routine of business. I see the hon. member—

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead): If we cannot speak here, where can we do so?

If we are not allowed to speak in the House of Commons, where can we go to speak?

Mrs. Venne: On a question of privilege, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the hon. member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead rising on a point of order?

Mr. Gérin: Yes, thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to explain that the House of Commons is, I think, the only place where members can express their views. Whenever we rise on a question of privilege, the Chair asks us what we want to say. And if 20 members of this House wish to speak, they should at least be asked what they want to talk about. I support all my colleagues in this regard. I myself rose on a question of privilege Monday. I agreed that the debate be adjourned until Tuesday, then Wednesday. After other members spoke in this House, the Speaker probably thought that nobody else wanted the floor. Had he realized that others wanted to speak, he would obviously have given them the floor. I myself was about to speak. Members of the House of Commons cannot be muzzled like this.

I think that, even if we take a half hour to allow members who want to do so to briefly express their views, we would simply be complying with basic democratic principles. Otherwise, it means that the Chair has decided to ignore questions of privilege and points of order that members want to raise and to arbitrarily resume another debate. If that is the case, there is nothing else for us to do here in this House and we should simply get up and leave.

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have just had a chance to refer to the record of Hansard for April 23, and the Speaker was quite clear in indicating that he would hear other members take part in the debate.

The Speaker's ruling today was also very clear. He found, after the intervention of the member for York South-Weston, that there was not a valid question of privilege raised by the the member for York South-Weston. That is the Speaker's ruling.

There may well be another question as to whether or not members who heard from the Speaker that they would have an opportunity to participate in the debate would be, in fact, allowed that opportunity. I think, Madam Speaker, that it is difficult for you to adjudicate this matter sitting in the chair, but I am sure that the matter will be brought to the attention of Mr. Speaker directly. It might be in the interests of order and debate in the House if all members of the House would accept that there is a debate which we can all understand with regard to the words that were uttered by Mr. Speaker Fraser in which he stated, as reported at page 10529 of Hansard:

> During the debate, of course, all other members will have a chance to make themselves heard.

It may be that some members would want to raise that matter directly with Mr. Speaker when he is here, but I think it would be in the interests of orderly debate that we not pursue that matter now.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On the same point, the hon. member for Saint-Denis.

• (1540)

Mr. Prud'homme: On this point, Madam Speaker, just to have a good understanding, I would say that I entirely agree with the right hon. minister. That is exactly why I knew that a multiplicity of colleagues were ready to rise. It was obvious, unless one did not have a feeling of the House. One does not need to be here long to have a feeling of the House and I had a feeling. I was well informed that many members were going to rise on this question.

That is why I did not want to participate in the debate today, but reflect upon it tonight. However, I want to reserve my right at the first opportunity. The rules are clear that one must rise at the first opportunity. Everybody sees me here so therefore this is the first opportunity.

I totally agree with the right hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs that a day of reflection is exactly what we need. We may all be in agreement tomorrow not to pursue it any further or, after discussion with the Speaker, we may be in agreement that we would like to pursue the debate.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would like to thank the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis for their contribution in this most difficult situation.

I have listened to the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead and to the Hon. Member for Richelieu, and I must come to the following conclusion: a few days ago, the Chair, having heard the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead, decided to wait until the other member involved in the situation would be in the House before listening to what other Hon. Members had to say.

Today, the hon. member was present, he stated his case and explained the statements attributed to him.

The Speaker then heard a remark made by the Environment Minister which he felt quite probably reflected the interpretation and the feelings of most of the hon. members who now wish to be heard.

That is why I have refused at this time to re-open the case and deal again with this issue, and I think that all hon. members will understand that I had really no choice.

I suggest, therefore, that we continue with Routine Proceedings.

Mr. Prud'homme: Fine: we are at peace again!

* * *

STRIKING COMMITTEE

THIRTY-SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary-West): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present the thirty-seventh report of the Striking Committee.

* * *

PETITIONS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. Chas L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present today a petition on behalf of several Ontario residents. This is—

[English]

—with respect to a Canadian citizen, Mr. Yih-Sheh Leo, who was arrested unlawfully and sentenced to 10 months imprisonment for exercising his right to return to his native land and is currently under indictment in Taiwan.

This petition is duly signed according to the rules of this House and I submit it on their behalf.

[Translation]

ROYAL PARDON REQUESTED FOR MRS. ANNETTE PROULX

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for Science): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to support and table in the House this third petition which, together with the two previous ones, carry 25,000 names of people asking the House to step in before the Privy Council with a view to making it possible for Mrs. Annette Proulx to be granted the Royal Pardon, has been held at the Maison Gomin in my own riding for the past 11 years.

The people feel that Mrs. Proulx has paid her debt to society and that she should be pardoned on highly humanitarian grounds because of her advanced age. I should like to mention that Mrs. Proulx will be 75 years old on May 3, 1990.

[English]

PROPOSED EXPANSION OF PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions from residents of the constituency of Etobicoke North. Pursuant to Standing Order 36, they have been certified correct as to form and content.

The residents who have signed these petitions are deeply concerned about the impact on the environment of the proposed expansion of Pearson International Airport in Toronto. The noise and other forms of pollution of the past may be increased by the expansion of the airport.

The petitioners urge upon the government several measures to help ensure that this does not happen.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise in this House to present a petition signed by numerous residents of Kingston and the Islands who object to the cuts this government proposed in the recent budget that will increase the cost of housekeeping services to Canada's veterans and will increase the charges to veterans who are hospitalized or who are in special care.

They call upon Parliament to reject these vicious, nasty cuts that the government is proposing to the persons who have served their country in wartime.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, it is my pleasure to present a petition regarding the goods and services tax. While we recognize it is before the Liberal-dominated Senate at the moment, I assume that it will be coming back to the House of Commons at some time in the future.

The petitioners humbly pray that the Parliament of Canada takes advantage of the opportunity when it presents itself and stops the goods and services tax, in other words, that a sufficient number of people in the House vote against the goods and services tax if the Senate does not do that.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I have a petition signed by hundreds of Canadians who would like to make this Government come to its senses, through the democratic process of a petition they asked me to table their names, in the matter of the goods and services tax the government proposes to implement in January of 1991.

Those people would like to raise the matter again, as we have done for a number of months, and tell the House of Commons that they hope, they pray, they very much hope the Senate will stop this government's tax folly that will increase the burden of the poor, the have-nots and the small business sector.

[English]

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I, too, have the pleasure to present a petition under Standing Order 36 signed by several petitioners from various communities in Ontario. They call upon Parliament to reject the current proposal for a goods and services tax and to reform the taxation system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, Question No. 261 will be answered today.

[Text]

HIRING OF CONSULTANT FIRM TO ASSIST IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE CANADIAN CENTRE FOR OCCUPATION HEALTH AND SAFETY PRIVITIZATION PLAN

Question No. 261—Mr. Keyes:

Did the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety retain a consultant firm in order to assist them in the development of their privatization plan and, if so (a) what sums were paid in consultant fees (b) by whom?

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour and Minister of State (Transport)): The firm of Price Waterhouse was retained by the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety to assist in the development of a Business Plan for the period 1990–1991 to 1994–1995. Consulting fees in the amount of $85,000.00 were paid by the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question as enumerated by the parliamentary secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, I ask that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand?

Mr. Milliken: Madam Speaker, I have a Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers that has been standing on the Order Paper since last October.

I have asked the parliamentary secretary to look into it. He told me two or three months ago that he would. Of course, I know that he has great influence with government departments in that when he makes inquiries, people move and leaves shake. It appears in this case the shaking leaves and the buzzing telephone lines have been insufficient.

I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could use his very good offices in an effort to expedite the production of the documents that are so reasonably requested in this motion that has been sitting on the Order Paper for so many months. Really, the delay seems inexorable in this case.

• (1550)

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, my hon. friend has just discovered the full extent of my influence. I can tell him that I will attempt, once again, to revisit his particular motion and see what we can do to proceed with it.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wish to inform the House that by reason of the statement by minister, Government Orders will be extended by nine minutes.

* * *

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resume from Tuesday, April 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke–Centre): That Bill C–69, an Act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, be now read a second time and refer to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Ms. Langan.

[English]

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, today I rise to take part in the debate on Bill C–69. This legislation covers many areas and it will have a very negative effect on the province of Prince Edward Island, especially with the transfer payments. The freezing of transfer payments means that Prince Edward Island will lose about $13 million over the next two years. That is the money that is given to the provinces to help education and health.

However, today I am here to discuss and debate Bill C–69, as the party critic for Energy, Mines and Resources. This legislation, among other things, eliminates the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program, known as CEIP. The CEIP issue combines two issues that are very important to me: mining policy and regional development policy.

Cancelling CEIP without any notice to the industry, without any consultation with the people involved, reminds me of this government's decision to close CFB Summerside. It was about one year ago, April 27 last year, that the government announced the closure of CFB Summerside, which is close to my riding of Malpeque, P.E.I.

The people of Summerside, in fact all Islanders, are feeling the effects that decision and will be feeling it for some time.

This government must realize that it cannot make major decisions that have sweeping effects on whole regions, such as the decision to close CFB Summerside, without considering alternatives and consulting the people involved.

This government's lack of planning has left an entire region of my province in limbo. People have been waiting for approximately one year for a firm federal commitment of jobs. For the past year, the people of Summerside and surrounding area have been working hard to save the base and to keep the economic security of their region intact. These people deserve nothing short of total admiration and praise from this House, for they are working against a government which does not plan ahead, which has not fulfilled its year-old commitment for jobs, and which, for all intents and purposes, does not listen to the people of my province.

The government must start to plan ahead with and for the people who will be affected by its decisions.

In the case of the cancellation of CEIP, the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program, as in the case of CFB Summerside, this government offered no alternatives and it failed to consult with the people involved. Furthermore, it failed to honour a well publicized commitment that it would give six months' notice of any change in this program. I will deal with the cancellation of this program more fully in a moment.

First, I want to describe the importance of the mining industry to Canada and the world. In terms of world-wide production, Canada is the third largest producer of minerals in the world. We are the world's foremost exporter. In fact, the mineral industry exports about 80 per cent of its production. In 1988, mineral production was valued at approximately $21 billion.

Before these minerals can be exported, they must be found and then processed, which provides the Canadian economy with about 150,000 direct jobs and many more indirect jobs. Some 120 communities, mainly in the north and remote regions, depend on mining.

The mining industry, mining communities, and the government all realize that mineral exploration is a very risky business. It requires enormous capital investment. Prospectors and developers are at the mercy of our country's geology and the world market. It is that high-level risk in mineral exploration that makes conventional investment very difficult to find. That is why governments over the years have provided various programs and allowances to offset that relatively high risk. CEIP, the program that has just been cancelled, and the Mining Exploration Depletion Allowance were both designated with this in mind.

The energy minister, in a speech to the annual convention of Prospectors and Developers Association in 1988, had this to say regarding the two programs, CEIP and MEDA, and the mining sector: "they make the sector more competitive as an investment vehicle. In terms of investment vehicles there is nothing to match flow-through shares." That is what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said in March, 1989.

• (1600)

About one year after he made that statement, the government cancelled the program, which was the only mining exploration incentive program in Canada.

Flow-through shares have been around for a long while, in fact, since 1954. It was not until the introduction of the MEDA program by the Liberal government in 1983 that they were widely used by junior, or smaller, mining companies. This program was started in 1983 and was a very popular program. It was started by the Liberal government of the day, it was popular with the industry and yet this government eliminated it in 1987.

In 1988 the government openly recognized the importance of supporting these junior companies when it introduced the CEIP program. It recognized that the government had to act to maintain a healthy level of exploration in the Canadian mining industry. In May of 1988 CEIP was announced. Its purpose was to help these junior companies raise the equity they require, with the hope that in turn they would do the exploration and the development that Canada needed.

The program actually began in 1989. I know there were problems in the beginning with the complexity of the program. It took some time before the industry was able to work through all the complicated arrangements. Once they did, they started to use it. In fact, of the $750 million spent in 1989 on mineral exploration, approximately one-half, or $375 million, was generated by flow-through shares.

Yet this government claims that CEIP was not that popular with junior mining companies. If the program was not fully utilized in 1989, it is largely because the industry was still becoming familiar with the complexity of the program. They were learning how to take the best advantage of it.

There are other reasons why 1989 exploration figures are lower than 1988. First of all, we had the effects of the elimination of MEDA. Then we had the investors who were trying to cope with the aftermath of tax reform. Of course, we had the 1987 stock market crash. The government cancelled this program after one year, citing apathy on the part of the industry as the reason. That is bad policy and it also shows bad faith. The cancellation of CEIP means that junior companies will lack sufficient investor incentives to raise the capital they need to explore.

The government has failed to provide any alternatives to this program, as was the case with the closing of CFB Summerside. It provided no alternatives and did not consult with the people involved. What we have today in the mining industry in 1990 is the same situation we had in 1988 when the government announced this program. At that time the existing 100 per cent write-off was not enough to raise the necessary money for mining exploration because it is a risky business. It was not enough then and it is not enough today.

What we are likely going to see is a decline in Canada's base metal reserves. We are also seeing the end of mineral development agreements such as the one between Ottawa and the province of Ontario. The timing of the cancellation of the program could not have been worse. But it is worse when one considers the fact that the government had promised that any changes in the program would follow after six months' notice and that the industry would be notified six months ahead of any changes. This did not happen.

The government promised it as recently as December, 1989. In an Energy Department publication called "CEIP Explained", it stated: "A minimum of six months' notice will be given prior to any change (in CEIP)". But less than five months after that promise the government cancelled CEIP without ever notifying the industry that it was being cancelled.

I think it is important that hon. members know what people in the industry are saying about the cancellation of this program. The President of the British Columbia and Yukon Chamber of Mines stated: "The (loss of CEIP) is going to have a dramatic effect on the exploration by small companies". The Prospectors and Developers Association of Canada said: "The cancellation of CEIP will render flow-through shares unmarketable, and the junior mining sector will collapse".

Those are quotes by people in the industry that certainly show the seriousness of cancelling this very important program to the mining industry in Canada. At the very best there will be a real loss of exploration incentive and that will lead to a decline in exploration and development of base metals and other mineral reserves. Such a decline will lead to fewer exports and fewer and lower export revenues.

What we will probably export, however, is not minerals but jobs, because there is a world-wide demand for minerals which will be easily met by other countries who will be eager to meet the demand.

Our reserves are already falling. From 1981 to 1988, even with the incentive provided under MEDA, Canada's reserves of base metals such as copper, zinc, nickel and lead registered declines ranging from 20 per cent to 34 per cent. Between 1988 and 1989 lead reserves did increase about 4 per cent and zinc by 2 per cent. At the same time, copper and nickel reserves fell by 2 per cent and 5 per cent respectively.

• (1610)

An article that appeared this week in the Ottawa Citizen quotes an energy department official as saying: "We're not out of the woods yet in regards to replenishing our reserves". Officials said any progress we are making now is far from enough to maintain our production into the 1990s. In fact, the Department of Energy estimates that simply replenishing Canada's mineral reserves—I am not talking about expanding them, I am simply talking about holding the line—will require an annual expenditure of at least $1.3 billion a year.

In 1989 about half of that amount of about $750 million was spent in exploration. The Prospectors and Developers Association estimates that the total for 1990 will probably fall to about $610 million. It expects exploration in 1991 to fall even further. It is readily apparent that Canada needs to give some kind of assistance for the mining sector to maintain a healthy level of base metal and other reserves. Certainly, that requires a federal commitment.

Madam Speaker, I know my time is running out. In talking about this whole mining area and the cancellation of CEIP which will mean less money going to remote northern areas, that there is a very human element involved here. Small northern and remote towns in Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia, and elsewhere depend on a healthy mining industry. Certainly that is going to suffer as the result of the loss of CEIP.

I think this government's action contrasts sharply with the tradition of government support of the mining industry in the country, a tradition the Liberal party helped continue and one to which this party remains committed.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Malpeque on her most interesting speech.

At the outset of her address she indicated that the passage of this particular bill would be very detrimental to people in her riding in Prince Edward Island. For the benefit of hon. members, I wonder if she could expand on that particular point and tell us in what way the bill is damaging in that part of Canada.

Ms. Callbeck: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for the question. I am always pleased to talk about my province of Prince Edward Island.

Bill C-69 will have very negative effects in P.E.I. I think the area which will cause the greatest damage is the freeze on transfer payments, that is the Established Program Financing, money given to the provinces to look after health services and education.

Prince Edward Island will end up with $13 million less in 1990-91. What does that mean to our education and health system on Prince Edward Island? If the provincial government is getting less money from the federal government, it has either to raise taxes or to cut services. What the federal government has done is transfer part of the debt onto the provincial governments.

The government has to cut services and it has to raise taxes. If it cuts services, the Government of Prince Edward Island will have to cut funding to educational institutions. Tuition fees may have to be higher. Certainly, that is something that the students on Prince Edward Island are very concerned about.

Two weeks ago, I was pleased to take part in a demonstration of Prince Edward Island students where several hundred had gathered to express their concern about government cutbacks in transfer payments, because of a number of things: the transfer payments, the GST, and the cutback to the Challenge Program this year which means that fewer university students are going to have jobs this summer. The students are also upset about the student loan program. They are concerned about the transfer payments, because it may mean that the quality of education will go down. It may mean higher tuition fees. They are concerned about the GST because, for the first time, we are going to have a tax on learning. It will mean 7 per cent on books, supplies and services. If they get their hair cut, they are going to have to pay 7 per cent on that.

It is at a time when students these days are feeling really strapped, because certainly there are real problems with the student loan program. Here again, the government comes in with 7 per cent and puts a tax on learning.

It is also going to affect health care. Are the sick and disabled in the province of Prince Edward Island going to have to suffer? I certainly would hope not, but when the federal government is passing less money to the province, the province will have to increase the tax or cut services. If it cuts services, that is certainly going to affect the people who are sick and disabled.

We have the transfer payments. The hon. member asked me was how the legislation was going to affect the province of Prince Edward Island. I talked about the transfer payments, and their effect on education and health, and about the students and their concern with the GST.

There is also a lot of concern by small business about the GST. We all know it is a very complex taxation that is coming in. A lot of small businesses are going to have to buy new equipment, such as new cash registers. They are going to have to have new accounting systems. I talked to the owner of a restaurant in my district of Malpeque last week. He was talking to me about the GST. He said: "Look, I run a restaurant. It is a very marginal business. I really cater to the working poor. They come in once or twice a week and buy a hot hamburger or a hot chicken sandwich." He said: "When that 7 per cent comes in, my clients are not going to have any money to buy a hot hamburger because that money is going to be gone on the 7 per cent to pay for the children's clothing, their haircuts, or whatnot." He went to say: "On top of that, for the money that I do take in, I am going to have to keep track of all the tax and submit that tax to the government every so often. I am going to have to get a new accounting system and a new cash register. I might as well pack it up and go work for somebody else".

• (1620)

That attitude has been expressed to me several times in the riding. Small businesses are really feeling the policies of the government, policies which are not helping small business in any way. I would think that the government should be helping small business because it is small business that provides the jobs. As we know, it has been estimated that 7 out of 10 new jobs—in fact, I read somewhere where it was claimed to be 9 out of 10—that are created in the country are created by small business. I would think that the government would be doing everything possible to encourage small business instead of bringing in policies like the GST which discourage people and make people think about getting out of business, such as that restaurant owner in Malpeque whom I talked about.

These things affect the province—the equalization payments and the announced closure of CFB Summerside which is going to take possibly $50 million out of the economy and for which the government has today provided no firm commitment for jobs. People in Summerside have been waiting for approximately a year, but there is no commitment. The government has left the people of the area in limbo. They do not know whether an industry will be coming in to provide a job for them or whether they should think of moving off the island and selling their homes. It is the uncertainty. It has created a lot of—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the time for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate, the hon. member for Surrey North.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Madam Speaker, I rise to talk about this bill because I think it is one of the pieces of legislation that is going to have a profound long-term effect on Canada.

Canada is a country that has a few very distinct characteristics, one of which has been our approach to basic services for people, services such as education, social services, income support programs, and health care. Particularly when we compare ourselves to the United States, one of the ways in which there is a tremendous distinction is the fact that the federal government has always had a role and responsibility in these areas. Its responsibility and role has been more than just providing funding. Canada has developed a system on a national basis that is known as our safety net.

In terms of people in dire difficulties, those with health problems or illness, loss of income, who need other types of social services or people seeking education, particularly at the post-secondary level, this bill is the starting of the erosion of those fundamental services. I think that we must recognize that this is the logical follow-up of the free trade agreement. This is the beginning of the level playing-field. This is the beginning of the erosion of our social services and health care system and all the things that the government unilaterally denied were under attack in the free trade deal.

The government said our social services were untouchable and now it brings in this type of legislation. It has already dealt a severe blow to our unemployment insurance program. It said: "Of course, our national health care schemes are not under attack." Now, it brings in this type of legislation which clearly is intended to erode these programs on a national basis. One could spend all one's time talking about the impact that these reductions in funds had on any one of these program areas.

The provincial premiers have stated that this type of unilateral changing of federal-provincial fiscal programs is tremendously detrimental to provinces and the provinces' abilities to provide services. The province of British Columbia is facing a deficit this year of $650 million. It is not in a position simply to pick up and replace the money being eroded by this legislation.

I would like to spend a few minutes looking at the whole business of the Canada Assistance Plan. I think it is important when we talk about national unity in the country to look at the part the Canada Assistance Plan has played in Canada in developing those kinds of social safety nets that have held the country together allowed people to move within Canada, from one region to another, and still be entitled to benefits.

The Canada Assistance Plan sets out very clearly in its preamble that: "Whereas the Parliament of Canada recognizes the provision of adequate assistance to, in respect of persons in need, and the prevention and removal of the cause of poverty and dependence on public assistance are the concerns of all Canadians". That is what the preamble says. It is the concern of the Canadian Parliament, not the provinces, that the focus is on, not only providing for people in need, but removal of the causes of poverty and dependence on public assistance. It goes on to say that: "It is desirous of encouraging the further development and extension of assistance in welfare service programs throughout Canada."

There are two fundamental parts to the Canada Assistance Act. One deals with income maintenance programs and the other deals with welfare services. There are a number of things that we should look at. With the income assistance program, the Canada Assistance Plan unified the country. Prior to the introduction of the Canada Assistance Plan, we used to have all kinds of things like residential requirements for someone wanting to draw welfare or income assistance. Municipalities were administering income assistance programs. They had to chase around to try to find out where someone was a resident because they would be held responsible for the cost of income assistance.

• (1630)

The Canada Assistance Plan was used as a mechanism of saying to people in Canada: "You have the ability to move from one area of the country in order to pursue jobs, to pursue a better lifestyle, or to be near family, and you are still entitled to receive income assistance". The costs would be picked up and shared between the provinces and the federal government.

It also did away with the concept of categorical assistance. Assistance must be granted based on need, and not based on some arbitrary determination that you are just and worthy, as under the Elizabethan poor laws. It was based on the fundamental concept that income assistance was to be granted to people who were in need.

Included in the Canada Assistance Plan was the right to appeal. It was a right to appeal which said that a person was not being granted this as a charity but as a right, with the legal recourse of an appeal procedure and, if necessary, access to the courts.

The concept of a national program of income support based on legislation and a right to appeal is diametrically opposed to the charity style of income maintenance programs found in the United States. It is an area in which Canada can be justly proud. This piece of legislation, which is curtailing expenditures in the three largest provinces, is going to affect well over half of all income recipients in Canada.

This is at a time when we have 1.2 million children living in poverty. This is at a time when, in the province of British Columbia, income assistance rates for a mother with two children allow her to feed her children for only two and a half weeks each month. She must depend on other sources of income, on food banks, on neighbours and even on schools for the rest of the month.

In the city of Vancouver and in my own municipality schools are having to feed children. That is not the intent of educational institutions in this country. Because of the cut-backs by this government and provincial governments, particularly governments like the Socred government, schools are having to provide basic necessities.

The Canada Assistance Plan under its assistance provisions also provides other types of services to people who are in need or who are on income assistance. It provides basic medical care, all types of medical care, including access to prescriptions and specialized medical care. It also allows for rehabilitation and getting people who are on income assistance back into the workforce where they can become independent.

It allows for training programs to train people for jobs, for jobs that we often have difficulty filling in this country. Some of the better programs have trained people to work as care aids in hospitals or in long-term care facilities, as well as to work in day care centres.

Sometimes we use our income assistance provisions not only to help people to become independent, but to provide much needed resources in the community.

Other parts of the Canada Assistance Plan refer to basic child welfare services. These are protection services to investigate children who have been abused and neglected, and to provide counselling services for those children or, in extreme cases, alternative living arrangements.

In the last number of years Canadian society has become more and more aware of the inadequacy of our services to children. Basic child welfare services are often tremendously strained. We have just begun to understand the long term effects on people who have been involved in abuse, particularly sexual abuse.

One of the factors that emerges continually when we begin to examine many of the horrendous stories of sexual abuse is that many of the adults who are involved in abuse were themselves abused as children. We can all sit back and say how deplorable their behaviour is, and we can condemn them. But in many of the cases we should be condemning ourselves. These are the children who, if they had been provided the proper counselling services 15 years ago, if our child welfare services had been adequate, would not be the adults now engaged in abusive conduct.

I have worked in social services and corrections all my life. I have been involved in juvenile courts, juvenile street programs and juvenile prostitution. I have also been involved with teachers. There are very few Grade 1, 2 and 3 teachers who cannot tell you who are the children in trouble, which families are having difficulty, or who needs the services that are provided under the Canada Assistance Plan. They will tell you that if these services are not provided now, society is going to pay more in the future. This, in my 25 years, is something I have watched, regrettably.

I have known children who have grown up to be notorious criminals who are serving 25 or 30 years in jail. I worked with them at a time when it was said: "Let's provide more resources to this family now. It will cost us maybe $4,000 or $5,000 to provide proper counselling services, or day care so that the mother has a break, or drug counselling that is necessary to make sure that a person does not become a chronic addict". Yet the money was not provided.

Now we pay $50,000 a year to keep that person in a federal penitentiary. We will pay an equal amount to keep that person in a mental hospital. We will pay money to keep that person's family on income assistance.

The services that are provided under the Canada Assistance Plan are basic services. We are not talking about frills. Under the Canada Assistance Plan it defines what are welfare services. It states that welfare services mean: "—services having as their object the lessening, removal or prevention of the cause and effects of poverty, child neglect or dependence on public assistance". Then it lists some of the services.

The general thrust of the Canada Assistance Plan is to deal with child neglect and poverty. I cannot understand why a government would attack such fundamental programs. Its members stand up and say: "We want to deal with drug addiction. We want to deal with family violence. We want to deal with child poverty, child abuse and child neglect". That is what they say, but then they bring in legislation that is the first step to the total destruction of Canada's system of economic underpinning to provide such services on a national basis.

• (1640)

Other services that are provided are rehabilitation services, adoption services, homemaker services, day care, community development services, consulting and research. These are the fundamental services that form the structure of Canada's safety net.

I come back to the point that this legislation is not just legislation dealing with a restriction of transfer payments to the provinces. It is the beginning of an attack on our fundamental services. Obviously, it flows out of the free trade deal by which we must harmonize our social programs with those of the United States.

In the time I have left I want to talk a bit about one of the other sections covered in this legislation. I refer to the Established Programs Financing. This bill is attacking two of the other fundamental structures of Canadian society, that is health care and post-secondary education.

The province of British Columbia is in a crisis in health care. We do not have adequate health care facilities. We have a shortage of health staff.

In my municipality it is more than just a crisis, it is an absolute disaster. Surrey now has 1.67 acute care beds per 100,000 people. If you take out people who should be in long-term care facilities, that figure is reduced to 1.3. The target for the province is 3.3 beds per 100,000. The average in British Columbia is 3.8 beds per 100,000. In the City of Vancouver it is 6.4. We have less than one-third of the hospital beds that we need.

What is the impact on my community and my constituents? In closing, I will point out what the impact is. Nearly 50 per cent of the people in that municipality have to travel elsewhere for basic health care services. There are now nearly 3,000 people on the waiting list for beds in the hospital.

This government chooses to attack this type of program, simply making it impossible for fast-growing municipalities like Surrey to ever catch up in providing basic health care to the residents who so desperately need it.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to speak to Bill C-69, which follows from the budget tabled in February. That budget, hon. members will remember, had many great advantages, among which was the fact that for the first time in many years, no increases whatsoever in taxes were announced. I think it is important to mention it, because we too often hear about the budgets the federal government has tabled since 1984 and all the tax increases they contained. Unfortunately, we do not insist enough on the fact that this governement was able to introduce a budget with no tax increase for the first time in many, many years, after tabling in 1988 a budget providing for a reduction in income tax for low-income individuals and an increase in corporate tax. Also, as you will remember, we introduced a minimum tax for high-income Canadians who were legally using tax shelters. This year, even if they still benefit from tax shelters, they do have to pay their fair share of tax.

That budget must be looked at as a whole, and Bill C-69 is part of it. Our fiscal policy dates from 1984. You will recall that, in 1984, when the Conservative government was elected, there was a $200 billion debt left by our friends opposite. The $200 billion national debt was financed by borrowings and interest payments were huge.

But even more serious, Madam Speaker, in 1984, the federal government, the Government of Canada, was spending each year $16 billion more than what it was getting in tax revenue. The government of the day was therefore running an annual deficit of $16 billions in program spending.

This year, this Conservative government now in office will spend $9 billion less than it brings in, the amounts payable in interests excluded once again. That is a $25 billion turnaround over a period of five years, Madam Speaker.

That is why we can say, Madam Speaker, as the Minister of Finance did rightly, that in four years from now, our annual deficit which adds to our national debt every year, will be reduced by half. That is important, because it shows that we are finally on the right course to bring down our annual deficit to zero, for one thing. The moment that is achieved, we will finally start—I hear my colleague laugh, Madam Speaker, but it is a fact—paying not our debts but those left us in 1984 by that government who was spending, I repeat, $16 billion more money yearly that it brought in.

You can understand, as do all of those Canadians who are listening, that if they spend $16,000 more then what they earn, they will eventually end up in an intolerable situation.

Madam Speaker, that is the total picture. Since 1984, it is true that there has been cuts. Since 1984, there has been tax hikes. But, what we must keep in mind, Madam Speaker, is that those cuts made since 1984 account for 70 per cent of the redution of the annual deficit, which was at $39 billion in 1984.

Only 30 per cent of the decifit reduction comes from tax hikes. It is important to mention it. The expenditure control plan tabled in 1990 accounts for 60 per cent of all 1990-1991 government expenditures, which made it possible to save $3 billion the first year and $4 billion the next.

Yet, it should be emphasized that exemptions are provided for under the expenditure control plan. For instance, Old Age Security pensions will not be affected and will continue to increase; the same with the Guaranteed Income Supplement and the family allowances.

The expenditure control plan will not affect the amount received by low income Canadian men and women.

• (1650)

But all the rest will be affected, which means that 60 per cent of total federal expenditures will be reduced under the budget plan tabled in 1990. As you know, Madam Speaker, Bill C-69, which flows from that budget plan, affects transfer payments to provinces. We know there are two important programs that give money to all provinces. There is the established programs financing, which applies to all provinces. Under this program, each province receives a certain sum on a per capita basis. It is a fair and equitable program for all provinces.

The other program that we know, particularly in the province of Quebec, is equalization. Under this program, the federal government gives money to provinces that are considered poorer, in addition to the money they receive under the other program. Those provinces are the Maritimes, Quebec, Manitoba and, some years, Saskatchewan. If you look at the situation since 1984 and up to 1990, the amount paid to the provinces by the federal government has increased, on average, by 6.5 per cent a year. At the same time, other expenditures of the Canadian government have increased only by 3.6 per cent a year. We see, therefore, that the federal government, which has a huge accumulated debt and a deficit just starting to be under control, has transferred annually more money to the provinces that it has spent. Transfers to the provinces, Madam Speaker, will amount this year to $35 billion. A quarter of all the money spent by the Canadian government goes directly to the provinces: $35 billion this year.

We must look at the Canadian reality. Referring to the Canadian government deficit, may be very nice, but if you are a foreign investor, Madam Speaker, and you look at what you would like to do in Canada, you will consider the Canadian government deficit, and you also will consider the situation in each and every province. And you will find that interests on the debt in provinces eat up an average of 12 cents on each dollar of revenue, that is the amount of interest paid by provinces—12 cents on the dollar. But turning to the Canadian government, the rate is 35 cents on the dollar. Which means the Canadian government, out of each and every revenue dollar, must pay 35 cents in interest not to repay the principal but simply to cover the interests.

Mr. Milliken: That is because of your incompetence.

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, I hear the hon. member opposite make comments. I would like to point out to him, because he should not forget it, that since 1984 the deficit only increased because of interest charges on the debt inherited from the previous Liberal government.

Mr. Milliken: What nonsense.

Mr. Vincent: That is a fact, Madam Speaker. I will do the figures with the hon. member afterward, we will sit down together. He will see that the cost of the increased debt and the cost of the annual deficit amount to the interest on the debt inherited from the Liberal Party in 1984. That is the reality, Madam Speaker. I appreciate this annoys the opposition, but what can I do, they have to be reminded once in a while of the incompetence they showed in government for 20 years.

Mr. Milliken: Those are gratuitous figures!

Mr. Vincent: It annoys, Madam Speaker, to hear the truth.

An Hon. Member: This is because of your incompetence!

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, looking at transfers to provinces in 1984-85, under the Established Programs Financing among others.

In 1984-85, the provinces received $14,5 billion from the federal government. In 1989-90, they will receive $20 billion. So, they will receive a lot more money they can spend the way they want. They don't have to account for it to the federal government. On the other hand this government, this Parliament, must report to the Canadian people every time it raises taxes. I think that that major increase of funds is in line with the needs of the provinces but it is also necessary to limit its increase in the face of the astronomical federal debt threatening the future of our nation.

Again and again, opposition members ask for more money, less taxes, and God knows what. But we must face facts and be realistic. Appropriate measures must be taken now so that we do not end up in an absolutely unbearable situation two, three or five years down the road. It is not normal for a country such as ours to be as heavily in debt as it is, considering its population. Steps have been taken since 1984 to ensure that we get back on track. The effort that we are requiring from the population with the cuts and the tax hikes is a collective effort on the part of all Canadians. We are asking everyone of them, whatever the province they live in, to share in this collective effort, as well as the provincial governments, which have also spent much more than the federal government since 1984. If we look at the rate of increase of their spendings, we see that it is almost double that of the federal government spendings.

There is a certain lack of logic in having the federal government collect taxes from Canadians, take the money, give it without any conditions to the provinces and tighten its belt while the provinces increase their expenditures. I can understand why they spend more because the needs are increasing. But Canada as a country has a debt and we must all work on it together, as individuals, provincial governments, social groups and everyone else, to make Canada less indebted in future and in the hope that one day the debt will be gone and we can do something with the money now being wasted.

Just think that it costs us $35 billion a year in interest. How many programs and organizations could be helped with the $35 billion now being wasted on interest? Again, on a debt left to us by the former government which spent—

Mr. Milliken: You doubled the debt!

Mr. Vincent: —thoughtlessly for 20 years. We are trying to pick up the pieces. We are trying desperately, with everyone's help, to solve this debt problem, because we are accused of doubling the national debt. It is a simple calculation. When we were elected, the debt was $200 billion. Ten per cent of that is $20 billion. Two hundred billion at 10 per cent gives $20 billion in interest we had to pay, not on our debts but on the debts you left. However, those $20 billion increased the deficit instead of being used to help Canadians. And my colleagues criticized the GST!

• (1700)

Madam Speaker, the present federal sales tax is more than 65 years old. When I was doing my masters degree in tax law more than 10 years ago, our professor said: "This tax is bad for the country! We keep hoping every year the Liberal government will change it". Madam Speaker, the Liberal government at the time never had the political courage to bring about this change.

The GST is a good thing for Canada and for Quebec. At last our industries will be able to get ahead, go outside the country and compete with foreign industries that come and try to sell their goods here. And it will be fair and equitable. It will be fair and equitable for Canadians, including Canadians on low incomes.

Those with an income of $30,000 or less will benefit under the GST, Madam Speaker. They will have more money in their pockets at the end of the year then they had this year.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge my colleagues on the other side of the House to read a number of articles on the subject that appeared in La Presse, where the figures were given by an experienced journalist, without political overtones. He proved, providing the appropriate figures and examples, that to people with an income of $30,000 or less the meant was a net gain at the end of the year. Those are not my words, Madam Speaker. That is what was said in an article that appeared in La Presse a few weeks ago. I urge my colleagues to read that article. It is very instructive.

Madam Speaker, in concluding, Bill C-69 must be passed as soon as possible. I hope my colleagues across the way will vote in favour of the bill so that we can proceed with the financial and administrative reorganization of the Canada they left us in 1984.

[English]

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Madam Speaker, Bill C-69, which is before the House today, is a devastating indictment of this government. It is a sorry state of affairs that this government, in the name of debt reduction, should devastate two particular areas that have always been considered very sacred in this country. I refer to the areas of health and education.

Bill C-69 is typical of the pass the buck philosophy of the present government. Instead of taking on its responsibilities, it has passed them on to the provinces. This is the third time since this government came into office in 1984 that it has attacked the Establish Programs Financing. Either the provinces will have to raise their taxes or the hospitals and education systems will have to absorb the costs.

The total loss to the provinces over the next five years will be $7.4 billion. If we add the two previous cuts announced by the government, we find that the cumulative reduction in federal contributions from 1986-87 to 1994-95 amounts to $31.1 billion.

On March 24, 1982, the current Minister of Finance said in this House: "Let us not make hospitals, universities and colleges a battleground between the federal government and the provincial governments. Let us solve those problems outside of the arena."

Yet that same member, who is now the Minister of Finance, has brought forward a budget that does exactly those things.

With respect to post-secondary education, the Prime Minister betrayed once again his own promise to have first-class education for our youth. In so doing, he made a mockery of the national task force on education that he himself created.

I quote a statement from the Prime Minister: "This government will carry its fair share of the burden to ensure that all young Canadians receive a first-class education as they confront a world-class challenge." That statement was made by the Prime Minister on August 25, 1989.

Also under Bill C-69, growth under the Canada Assistance Program will be limited. Under CAP the federal and provincial governments share equally in the costs of welfare payments and basic necessities such as food, shelter, clothing, dental care for the poor and essential services for the disabled. This is the first time in the 24-year history of the program that CAP has been limited. Ontario, Alberta and B.C. are the only three provinces to have a limit. Does the government think for one minute that the poor in Ontario are less poor than the poor in Quebec? To me, poor is poor is poor, regardless of which province you come from in this country.

The Canadian Exploration Incentive Program, which provides for a grant of 30 per cent of the cost of resource exploration—mining, oil and gas—financed with flow-through shares, was cancelled as of budget day. The elimination of CEIP will have a devastating impact on primary exploration in Canada, with junior exploration firms bearing the brunt. We can expect a substantial reduction in mineral exploration at a time when Canada needs to replenish its dwindling base metal reserves. Already in 1989 the amount spent on exploration was down from $1.2 billion in 1988.

This is another broken promise by this government. On May 3, 1988, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines said: "This rate, 30 per cent, will be guaranteed for two years until the end of 1990, after which the rate may be adjusted." Can we ever believe anything that the government tells us?

Under Bill C-69 public utilities income tax transfers are frozen. The Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act provides for the transfer to provinces of 95 per cent of the federal income tax collected from certain privately owned electric and gas utilities. Transfers will be frozen for two years at the 1989-90 levels, reducing projected expenditures under the act by $16 million in 1990-91 and $34 million in 1991-92. PUITT was implemented in 1986 and its purpose was to put private electric and gas companies, which pay federal tax, on an equal footing with Crown corporations in the resource sector, which do not pay tax.

Canadians have every right to be cynical about this government. We in the Liberal party oppose Bill C-69. Interest rates are high, and if this government continues with its present policies more unemployment will be created. Provinces will be less able to cope. The people who are less able to cope, who are the poor, the handicapped and the sick, will suffer the most. The government is asking those people to help reduce the deficit, one which it has doubled since coming into office, while others are getting off scot-free.

• (1710)

This government has lost all sense of propriety and this is a reflection of the extreme limits to which it will go to force its will on the people.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Madam Speaker, I am very happy to enter the debate this afternoon on Bill C-69.

Bill C-69 looks rather innocuous. It is just a few pages with a nice title on it. It has all the proper logos and the Minister of Finance has his name at the bottom. It really looks very straightforward, very simple.

I suppose in one respect it is very simple. The bill is entitled, "An act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures". That is another way of saying that this is a bill to dismantle Canada. This is a bill to begin the destruction of what we know as being Canadian. I do not think the title is very accurate. The government missed the boat there. Maybe it should have said that this is the beginning of the end of Canada as we know it act, or this is a bill that begins to undo what Canadians have struggled to achieve for, in some cases, generations. There is a whole set of more appropriate titles than the one given to Bill C-69.

I have listened with interest to the previous speakers, and I can only assume that Conservative members have not visited their constituencies in the last few months because if they had they would know what the people of Canada are saying.

For example, one item in the bill refers to the Canadian Exploration Incentives Program Act. This is a program which for many years provided incentives and encouragement for those people who go prospecting for new mineral deposits. That is what much of the basis of our economy is built on, particularly in British Columbia. Mining is our number two industry. It is second in importance in terms of employment, investment and attracting capital into our part of Canada. But, of course, it depends upon those people who go out and explore.

Exploration companies normally are small companies. They tend to be Canadian-owned companies. They tend to keep their money in Canada, in their communities, and provide employment for people to seek out new mineral deposits and then develop them into potential ore bodies for production. In other words, they are the lifeblood of the mining industry.

The government has decided to take away encouragement, support and incentive for these folks. These are people of whom we as Canadians are proud, because they take those Beaver airplanes up into the north and hike and live in the muskeg and so on. They discover what has made this country known around the world for its huge mineral deposits and developments.

But the government no longer wants to encourage people to do that. As you know, Madam Speaker, the statistics indicate that mining exploration in Canada has fallen off in the natural gas and oil sectors, as well as in the mining sector. So exploration activity in all of the primary resource areas is falling off because of the high interest rates. The stock markets are also falling so we cannot look to the stock market for a place to raise revenue for exploration.

While the whole bottom is falling out of the exploration business, the government says: "We have a great idea. We are going to cause even more pain. We are going to inflict more suffering on to this critical sector of the economy by pulling out our support". One wonders what on earth would motivate a government at this critical time in the mining industry to make life worse for those people who seek out new mineral deposits.

That is not the worst of it. I find it passing strange when I look through this bill to find that the government has come up with what it thinks is an appropriate idea for the 1990s, and that is to cut back support for young people going into education.

When looking around the world and, in particular, at all European countries, one sees that nations are investing in their young people. They are investing in their universities, colleges, vocational schools, technical schools, and training institutes. They realize that to invest in their young people—and to reinvest in those who are not young people anymore but require new skills to meet the demands of a knowledged-based economy of the 1990s—they have to invest in their colleges, universities, and post-secondary institutions.

Europe is doing that. Countries in the Far East, such as Japan which is a major competitor on the international markets, are investing heavily in what they know is their most important resource, their people. We have to be the only country in the world that is going to reduce support for education, that is going to reduce the funding that we normally would give to our universities and colleges. I find that almost unbelievable.

I must tell you a little story, Mr. Speaker. Over the last few weeks I made a point of visiting a number of high schools in my constituency. I visited Kamloops Secondary School, North Kamloops Secondary School, Chase

Secondary School, Logan Lake Secondary School, Barriere Secondary School and Clearwater Secondary School as well as Caribou University College.

I had a chance to meet with students informally and to address some larger assemblies as well. I asked whether they would believe that there is a government in the world that is curtailing its support for education. They said they could not believe that and wondered what backward country that would be. I asked whether they could believe that there is a government now in the western industrialized nations that is cutting back on support for student loans and that is now imposing user fees for those students who want to obtain a loan.

This was the one that really caught their attention, Mr. Speaker. You will love this one. I asked if they knew what country in the world is now imposing a tax on reading. There is only one in the whole world. The students did not know which it was. I said that it is Canada. The Government of Canada is imposing a tax on literature; on newspapers, magazines and books. This is the only country in the entire world doing this.

I think we are also the only country in the world that has now imposed a user fee for those young people who need to borrow to pursue education. We know education is very expensive these days. It is a $10,000-a-year ticket for a single person to go off to college or university. Not many people can afford $10,000 a year to go to university, college, or vocational school. If one have two or three children in one's home, that is a lot of money. We depend on the ability of young people to go out to work in the summers so that they can derive income to at least pay part of their way along with loans, bursaries and, perhaps, help from friends and family.

What government do you think, Mr. Speaker, curtailed investment in summer work programs for young people? What government do you think decided to cut back on the Challenge 90 program, a program to encourage the private sector, the non-profit sector, and the public sector to hire students in the summer so that they can afford to go on for post-secondary education? Do you know what government cut back on that by 30 per cent in my constituency this year? It was the federal government.

It is bordering on madness when the Government of Canada says it is going to cut back on support for students' summer programs, it is going to impose a user fee on loans for students, it is going to cut back on funding to the universities, colleges, and vocational schools across the country, and it is going to tax reading.

No wonder students are standing around a little dazed these days wondering what on earth is coming next. I suspect they get up in the morning and dread reading the newspaper to find out what the federal government is going to be doing next to the young people of the country.

Do the Conservative members in the House of Commons realize what is in Bill C-69? Do they support this notion of cutting back support to the colleges and universities across the country at a time when every other country with which we compete is investing heavily in these areas? I do not think they do. I encourage my friends opposite to at least look at this bill before we are asked to vote on it later today.

• (1720)

What would you think, Mr. Speaker, of a government that says: "We have to pick on somebody now and we have decided to pick on sick people"? What kind of a government would it be in a country that picks on sick people? What would one think of a government that says to the poorer provinces: "Rather than assist you, as a central government should, in the development of your health care system in terms of your hospitals and your long-term care facilities, which would give relatively equal access to decent health care across the country, we are going to begin to curtail our support"?

If one is sick in some parts of the country, particularly in a have-not province, one will not have the same access to decent health care as one would in a wealthy province. Do we want a Canada where health care is available at a reasonably high level in certain parts of Canada and at a lesser level in other parts of Canada?

The reason the federal government got involved in the first place was to provide uniform health care across the country. It did not matter whether one was sick in Nova Scotia, Manitoba or Ontario. One would get the same medical treatment. One would have the same access to quality health care. But this government said: "We are now going to abandon that tradition". What kind of an uncaring government would do that?

Mr. Milliken: A Tory government.

Mr. Riis: As my friend says, a Conservative government. I can only assume that that is the government that is doing it. It is cutting back on health care and cutting back on support for sick people in the country.

This is the same group that took a slap at veterans in hospitals in its budget. It said: "Look, folks, you have to pay more." These are people who were prepared to die for their country, die for what we have struggled to achieve in this country. They were prepared to die. As a result, they are very sick and are now in hospital. Yet, the government says: "We are going to have to charge you folks more." Such actions really make one wonder.

On top of all this, in just a couple of days, these petitions have come in from one constituency, the constituency of Kamloops. These petitions represent people speaking out against the goods and services tax. There are hundreds and hundreds—maybe thousands—of names that have arrived in just a few days.

I see my hon. friend from the Liberal party is here. He knows that the goods and services tax is now before the Liberal Senate.

Mr. Milliken: Thank goodness for a Liberal Senate.

Mr. Riis: We are counting on it. We realize that the father of the goods and services tax was our good Prime Minister. Now, we have Allan MacEachen as the godfather when it is before the Senate. We will have to see what the Liberal Senate is going to do with the goods and services tax. Time will tell. We will all be watching and waiting with bated breath to see whether or not the Senate does the correct thing.

What else have we got in this legislation? In Bill C-69, the government cuts out support for the mining exploration sector. Then, it decided to cut back on funding for post-secondary education. Of course, what that means is that we perpetuate the hewers of wood and drawers of water type of life-style we have been fighting and struggling to overcome for many years.

Then, the government cuts back on health care funding in this bill. What else could it possibly do? The one area that springs to mind is social services. I refer to programs to help single parents and the poor of Canada. Surely, the government would not cut back on those programs.

When you get to page 5 of the bill, there it is. The government indicates that it is going to cut back on the Canada Assistance Plan, which means cutting back on social services and social programs for the poorest people in Canada.

One of the banks we have in the country that is thriving in terms of business is the food banks. When you drive through large cities like Toronto you see a lot of McDonald's hamburger places with those golden arches. They seem to be on almost every corner as you drive through the city. Do you know that there are more food banks in Toronto than McDonald's hamburger joints? That is only one city. We have thousands and thousands of people who every day line up to get a food hamper because their social services simply cannot meet the needs of their families.

As members of Parliament, we are all aware that in our own constituencies there are families on social assistance with two or three children and, in particular, single parents, who come to us with escalating rents and escalating costs to say: "By the end of the month, I do not have any money. I have to go to the food bank. I have to go to the thrift shop to get a pair of used running shoes for one of my children".

We have hundreds of thousands of people living on the very edge and, quite frankly, if we are going to be honest, over the edge. On what they receive in social assistance, particularly in the large urban areas, it is simply impossible to sustain those individuals and families.

What is the federal government going to do about that? Is it going to improve that situation? No, it is going to make it worse, it is going to cut back on its support for social services in the country.

I know that some of my friends across the way on the Conservative benches are saying: "That is all right, Mr. Riis, you can go on and talk about this all day, but where is the money going to come from? Where is the money going to come from if we are going to continue education?" Let me make a modest proposal.

Under the tax systems of most countries around the world, when an individual or family receives a huge inheritance of many millions of dollars—perhaps in some cases $10 million or $20 million—they pay tax on that. Canada is one of the few countries in the world where one does not pay any tax if one inherits a large sum of money. I am not talking about somebody inheriting a family farm, a family business or a family house. I am talking about people who end up with a windfall inheritance of many millions of dollars. Not a single penny of income tax has to be paid on that. We say that is not right. If it can be done in other countries like the United States, why do we not do it here in Canada?

Let us look to the United States. In the United States, in 1986, President Reagan noticed that there were thousands and thousands of profitable corporations that did not pay any income tax at all, year after year, and he said that was wrong. He wanted to close that loophole so the President of the United States introduced a minimum corporate tax. Those thousands and thousands of corporations that were making good profits and could use all the fancy loopholes the system, and had first rate tax lawyers and tax accountants to enable them to get into a non-taxable situation, had to pay at least a minimum corporate tax, which generated billions of dollars.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that there was not a single corporate spokesperson in the United States who spoke out against that initiative? Not one. I mean, how could one not? If one makes $400 million and is asked to pay a few dollars income tax, how could one say one ought not to be doing that? Not a single person spoke out in any serious way against that initiative.

Why do we not have that in Canada? Why would we not have the same thing in Canada so that those 65,000 profitable corporations that do not pay any income tax whatsoever, year after year, pay their fair share? We are not asking for them to pay exorbitant amounts. We are not asking them to pay significant amounts, just their fair share. If they paid just their fair share, we would generate hundreds of millions of dollars that we do not presently generate to support programs such as helping our young people get a decent education or helping people who are sick have access to long-term care beds.

In the city of Kamloops, we have a major hospital yet I personally know a number of individuals who are waiting months for surgery. There is a list of over 2,000 people waiting for surgery. If one has a heart problem, the province of British Columbia says that one should go down to the United States and have one's operation because we do not have any room. That is not the kind of health care system that we developed in this country. Our health care system needs to be supported and this bill does exactly the opposite.

I draw to your attention something I came across today. These are some interesting figures, hot off the press, that point out how the tax system in Canada has shifted. Back in 1950, the amount of revenue that came in from corporations and individuals was even, it was balanced. Fifty per cent came from the corporations and 50 per cent from individuals.

Over the years, as a result of a number of Liberal, as well as Conservative governments, this is no longer 50 per cent. It has shifted so that today 79 per cent of the taxes come from individual Canadians and 21 per cent comes from corporations. That is quite a shift over just a handful of years. While individuals have been gouged, gouged, gouged, corporations have been getting a better deal than ever, particularly since the 1950s. Over the years, the corporate sector has been the major beneficiary of our tax system at the expense of individuals, which we are all well aware of.

• (1730)

May I make another suggestion in terms of where we can obtain funds for reducing both our deficit and our debt.

By the way, I noticed with interest the previous speaker in the Conservative benches was concerned about the debt. I have to remind that individual that since the Conservatives have become government in our country, the debt of the country has risen from about $150 billion to nearly $400 billion. In other words, we have seen more than a 100 per cent increase in the country's debt during this particular government.

To talk about their concern, it would not appear they have much concern. If they did, may I suggest something that the government could have done in terms of gaining more revenue?

I have all these petitions against the goods and services tax. One of the reasons that people are concerned about the goods and services tax is because they know the system is unfair. When the system is unfair, an underground economy builds. Some economists now suggest that it is as high as $100 billion in untaxed transactions each year. If the underground economy is that size and was simply taxed at the regular tax rate, that would be the amount of our deficit on an annual basis. That is what is going to happen, an increasing underground economy.

In closing, I would like to say that obviously we in the New Democratic Party do not support Bill C-69. We do not think that curtailing support for education, health care and social services in this country, particularly during these very difficult times, is the right thing to do. As a matter of fact, it goes against what we know as being Canadian.

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for allowing me to participate in this debate which deals with the government's expenditure restraint act, Bill C-69.

As you will no doubt agree, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative government's record clearly demonstrates a litany of broken promises, of misguided and mean-spirited policies which have attacked average taxpaying Canadians, and left them a little more dispirited and a little more disenfranchised than they were before the Tories came to power.

Canadians have had enough. Indeed, the latest opinion polls confirm that the Prime Minister and his government are the most unpopular government in all of Canadian history. Only 15 per cent of all Canadians support the present administration. With that kind of support, the government ought to be asking itself very serious questions.

Moreover, it should realize that something is seriously wrong. What kind of government would pursue a misguided policy, such as the Government Expenditures Restraint Act, when it knows that it is the most unpopular government in our history? I will tell you what kind of government, Mr. Speaker. One that has lost touch with reality, one that has let power go to its head and one that has a complete disdain for the average Canadian.

The oligarchs of ancient Greece used to say that we are the enemies of the people, and we shall devise all the methods which we can to harm them. Unfortunately, the Conservative government is not nearly so frank. From free trade to the unemployment insurance reform, to the clawback of old age pensions, family allowances, to the goods and services tax, to the cut-backs in VIA Rail, to the cut-backs in veterans' affairs, cut-backs to summer employment for student programs, the long list of the government's mean-spirited initiatives clearly demonstrates that the government is taking its frustrations out on the backs of the Canadian people.

That is right. The government is frustrated because it has failed to fulfil its promise to balance the budget. The deficit is still hovering around $30 billion yearly, and the government has doubled the national debt since it came to power in 1984. Think of it. This government which preached that it intended to balance the budget and exercise fiscal restraint, has done more to increase the public debt than all other Canadian governments combined. That debt now stands at a walloping $320 billion. After having taken individual Canadians for all they were worth, this government has realized that it would have to find another victim upon which to lay the responsibility for its financial mess. Since it knew that it would never get away with another program cut, or another tax hike, and it realized that its options were limited, it opted to lay the burden of its death on the shoulders of the provinces. The freezing of federal transfers will cost the provinces an estimated $7.4 billion over the next five years. That is a lot of national reconciliation.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the federal government transfers approximately $24 billion of its $943 billion budget to the provinces under three specific programs. That amount compares with $39.4 billion to service the debt and $32.6 billion in transfers to individuals. Moreover, two of the programs which federal-provincial transfers served to finance are being attacked by Bill C-69, the bill that we are debating today.

First is the Established Program Financing which provides provinces with equal per capita block grants pertaining to the provision of health care and post-secondary education, and second, the Canada Assistance Plan which matches provincial payments for social assistance and social services.

For instance, the cuts to the Established Program Financing will cost the province of New Brunswick $206 million from 1990 to 1995. Looking at the figures from 1986 to 1995 provides an even gloomier scenario. Over that period Conservative policies will have cost the province $1.057 billion. That is not a government which cares for the health and welfare of the people of New Brunswick and of Canadians.

The passage of this legislation will represent the third time that the Conservative government has attacked the Established Programs Financing since 1986. Cumulatively, EPF cut-backs between 1986 and 1995 amount to the astounding sum of $31.1 billion, of which $22.2 billion should have been allocated to health care and $8.9 to post-secondary education.

It is hard to imagine that the government would savagely attack education in Canada in this manner. The Prime Minister claimed at a Progressive Conservative general meeting last August, and I quote:

> This government will carry its fair share of the burden to ensure that all young Canadians will receive a first-class education as they confront a world-class challenge.

The tragedy is that the Prime Minister's words are contradicted by the actions of this bill. At a time when student enrolment is up by 35 per cent and when operating budgets are down by 19 per cent, the Prime Minister's actions spell disaster for post-secondary education in Canada.

Bill C-69 helps to demonstrate the government's inability to deal with the problems faced by students and young people across Canada. As a result of this legislation, post-secondary education will be faced with harsh alternatives which may include a combination of tax increases and higher education costs in general.

I believe that the Canadian Association of University Teachers summed it up best when its representatives declared that the last budget "makes a mockery of the federal commitment to the young men and women of this country. The magnitude of the reduction is insupportable".

It is obvious that the provinces could make up for any federal cuts to the cost-sharing program out of their general revenues. However, when federal transfers to the provinces are reduced, university budgets generally follow suit. Ultimately it is the students who suffer.

Last February the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada warned the finance minister in a pre-budget submission to him that cutting transfer payments under the Established Programs Financing would be harmful to provincial grants to overcrowded and under-funded universities.

The Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada's submission observed that federal government support for higher education has declined by 20 per cent since 1977, while university enrolment has increased by 35 per cent over the same period. If this trend continues, there is a definite possibility that the current federal policy of matching grants to universities from private sources will be discontinued when the policy runs out in 1991.

Clearly the government's policies are creating a system whereby only those students who are from the wealthiest backgrounds will be able to aspire to a higher education. It is heart rending to imagine that the Canada our forefathers created, a caring, peaceful, just and tolerant country, will have become an elitist society where only the few can hope to gain from the benefits of a higher education. This trend clearly flies in the face of Canadian tradition, and the government will have to answer for its actions.

• (1740)

Let me remind the government that Canada is a country which values equality of opportunity and social justice. Any government that tampers with these truths runs a considerable risk, indeed.

If this government thinks that it had a hard time with Canadian seniors when it tried to deindex their pensions, just wait until the students begin to protest these cut-backs and the treatment to which they will be subjected if this bill passes.

Time and again we have heard from the Conservative government that Canada must be able to compete in a global economy. Time and again we have heard it said that Canada needed more funding for research and development. Time after time we have heard this government proclaim how much it intended to do to put Canada back on the right track after years of alleged Liberal mismanagement, yet the facts clearly demonstrate their governing philosophy is "Let the fittest survive and the rest will have to make do with less".

The problem with this government is that it likes power too much. It knows it intends to slash social programs, but it cannot bring itself to be frank with the Canadian electorate and tell them because it knows it will tossed out on its ear. But after six years of being told one thing and then being subjected to treatment that is completely at odds with those words, Canadians have had enough. Indeed, the polls indicate that this government is the most unpopular government in history.

Canadians are telling this government that they are not impressed. This brings to mind a saying "If you fool me once, shame on you. If you fool me twice, shame on me".

Canadians are onto this government's intentions. They see clearly and they are not being fooled by the Prime Minister's sweet-sounding rhetoric. They know that this government is the one which swore it would never do anything to undermine Canada's unemployment insurance system, and then proceeded to gut it through legislation now before the other place. They know this is the government that promised never to slash VIA Rail services but did so at the first opportunity. They realize that this is a government which promised never to touch old age pensions and family allowances, but clawed them back without so much as a second thought. They realize that this is the most unpopular government in history and are telling themselves that they have had enough and will not put up with it much longer. Canadians are sick and tired of this government.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, total cuts in health care in this bill will amount to $5.247 billion for the next five years. And that is not all, far from it. If we take into account cuts in Established Programs Financing from 1986 to 1995, the total comes to $22.154 billion. You will agree, Mr. Speaker, that these budget cuts are absolutely outrageous.

It is most ironic that the Prime Minister, who as we know admires the American way of doing things, is cutting back on health care financing at a time when Americans are looking with envy at our health care system.

Mr. Speaker, the truth is the Canadian medicare system does not take up more than 8.5 per cent of the National Gross Product, compared to 11.5 per cent in the United States, despite the fact our system is universally socialized. Our system is not perfect but it provides Canadians with the best, the most economical and efficient health care in the world. It is more than popular; 85 per cent of Canadians believe it to be our most important social service. About 60 per cent of the people who responded to a recent survey in the United States said they were in favour of establishing such a system in their country. The Canadian government is nonetheless bent on transforming a program this is the envy of the whole world into a nightmarish and under-financed program.

Madam Speaker, it is obvious that our medicare system is being axed by this government, and that it will look more and more like the American system. Furthermore, this government is showing us that it wants the provinces, and consequently the middle class and the poor, to pay more taxes. Of all policies put forward by this government, the cuts in medicare are the most reprehensible and repugnant simply because they make health care a luxury. If the provinces decide not to raise their taxes, they will have to pass on the cuts to hospitals, which in turn will be forced to cut the nomber of beds, reduce costly operations, and so on. As a result, Madam Speaker, the Canadian taxpayers will have once again to pay the bill.

It is ironic that this Bill should be introduced by the Minister of Finance who said a few years ago: "Let's not make hospitals, universities and colleges a battleground with the provinces. Let's find a solution outside these fields."

You know, Madam Speaker, power is a strange thing. A famous English writer, Lord Acton, said in this regard: "Power has a tendency to corrupt, and absolute power corrupts absolutely."

However, power does not always exact such a toll. Twenty-four years ago, the Liberal government of Prime Minister Lester Pearson created the Canada Assistance Plan. This agreement provided for a shared financing, between the federal and provincial governments, of social assistance programs.

Nevertheless, the government decided in its last budget to limit to 5 per cent the growth of the transfer payments made under the Canada Assistance Plan to the provinces of Ontario, British Columbia, and Alberta. For the first time since the beginning of this program 24 years ago, the federal government was limiting its contribution. That means that Ontario stands to lose $90 million in revenues in the next five years, Alberta, $28 million, and British Columbia, $38 million.

In order to justify his decision, the Minister of finance, in the budget Speech he made in 1989, stood up for the clawback of family allowances and old-age benefits, claiming that, and I quote, "the central purpose of social security is to assist those most in need, not to subsidize those with high incomes." But then the measures included in that budget were attacking the poor people in Canada. The governement could use a reminder that poor people in the provinces of Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta are just as poor as those in the other provinces.

Besides, let us keep in mind that social welfare payments have yet to enable a poor family to rise above the poverty line.

A few days after the last budget was tabled the provinces of British Columbia and Ontario announced their intention of having the courts rule on the propriety of the CAP cut-backs unveiled in the budget. This legal hassle might delay the introduction of this measure until the courts have rendered their decision. Alberta stands four square behind these two provinces. The contesting provinces argue that, under the CAP agreement, arrangements cannot be changed unless a year's notice has been served, and with the consent of the provinces. None of these conditions has been met.

• (1750)

Madam Speaker, in closing I want to say that the Liberal Party is adamantly opposed to Bill C-69 because it amounts to an assault on medicare, post-secondary education and the Canada Assistance Plan. These programs are the basis of Canadian society and as such should be immune to the frustations and meanness of the government.

[English]

As the right hon. member for Vancouver Quadra said some time ago, let us hope that hospitals will not be checking our credit cards before they check our pulse. I am afraid that this bill may lead us in that direction.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Point of order. The hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, there have been discussions and it is the interest of the government to refer this bill, not to a legislative committee, but to the Standing Committee on Finance.

As you know, Madam Speaker, we have had some difficulties with the Chair of the finance committee and the way he has done business. I understand, however, that he has taken significant steps today to resolve our concerns. We will be filing a report with the House tomorrow. I would like to say, assuming that that is accomplished, it would be our intention at that time to ask for unanimous consent to have this bill go to the Standing Committee on Finance. At the moment it is destined to go to a legislative committee until the report from the standing committee is tabled in the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, my understanding is that the Official Opposition and our party are ready to send the bill to the Standing committee on finance and I am anxious to hear the NDP's answer tomorrow, so that we may send bill C-69 to the Standing committee on finance instead of a legislative committee.

So, Madam Speaker, I believe we will be asking for that permission tomorrow, with the consent of the Liberal Party.

[English]

Mr. Milliken: Madam Speaker, I concur. We would be prepared to see the bill referred to the Standing Committee on Finance instead of a legislative committee. Given what the hon. member for Kamloops has said, it appears that since there is not unanimous consent tonight I guess we will have to deal with the motion before the House as it is.

I presume that tomorrow, if everything goes according to the plan of the hon. member for Kamloops, the House will be able to re-refer the bill, or call it back from one committee and refer it to another. It sounds unusual but I guess it can be done and I am quite prepared, on behalf of the Official Opposition, to say that we will, of course, consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member does know the House can do whatever it wants. I am sure that the House is happy to see that there is movement toward co-operation and understanding. We will look forward to the decision.

Is the House ready for the question? The hon. member for Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso.

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Madam Speaker, I just wanted to compliment my colleague, the member for Restigouche, on the way in which he addressed this legislation.

The reduction in transfers will have a dramatic effect particularly on Atlantic Canada, which benefits the most from assistance payments which are affected by this legislation. Will the hon. the member elaborate on some of the comments he made with particular concern to New Brunswick?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Unfortunately, there will not be time for the hon. member to elaborate.

[Translation]

It being 5.54 p.m., pursuant to order made Tuesday, April 24, 1990, under S.O. 78, it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to complete the second reading stage of the Bill now before the House.

[English]

The question is on the amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Ms. Langan), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 246)

YEAS

Members

Althouse	Arseneault
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)	Baker
Bélair	Black
Blackburn (Brant)	Boudria
Caccia	Callbeck
Campbell (South West Nova)	Catterall
Crawford	de Jong
Ferguson	Finestone
Foster	Gaffney
Gardiner *Gauthier	Grey (Beaver River)
Gray (Windsor West)	Harb
Guarnieri	Heap
Harvey (Edmonton East)	Hovdebo
Hopkins	Karpoff
Hunter	Kristiansen
Keyes	Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)	Lee
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)	MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacAulay	Manley
MacLellan	McGuire
Marleau	Milliken
McLaughlin	Mitchell
Mills	Parker
Parent	Pickard
Phinney	Prud'homme
Proud	Riis
Rideout	Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Robichaud	Vanclief
Taylor	Young (Gloucester)
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—61

NAYS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Atkinson	Belsher
Bertrand	Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blenkarn	Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Brightwell	Cardiff
Champagne (Champlain)	Clark (Yellowhead)
Cole	Collins
Cook	Cooper
Corbeil	Côté
Crosby (Halifax West)	Danis
Darling	DeBlois
de Cotret	Dick
Domm	Dorin
Duplessis	Edwards
Epp	Fee
Ferland	Fontaine
Friesen	Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)	Greene
Gustafson	Halliday
Hawkes	Hicks
Hogue	Holtmann
Hudon	Hughes
Johnson	Joncas
Kempling	Koury
Langlois	Larrivée
Layton	Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lewis	Littlechild
Loiselle	Lopez
Marin	Martin (Lincoln)
Mayer	Mazankowski
McDermid	McKnight
Merrithew	Mitges
Monteith	Moore
Nicholson	Oberle
O'Kurley	Plamondon
Porter	Pronovost
Reimer	Ricard
Richardson	Robitaille
Roy-Arcelin	Schneider
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)	Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon	Sobeski
Sparrow	Stevenson
Tétreault	Thacker
Thompson	Thorkelson
Turner (Halton—Peel)	Valcourt
Van de Walle	Vankoughnet
Venne	Vézina
Vincent	White
Wilbee	Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)	Worthy—100 *ediv

• (1820)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the amendment negatived. The next question is on the main motion.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I think that if you asked, you would obtain agreement to have the vote on the New Democratic Party's motion apply in reverse, I suppose, to the main motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): You have heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)), which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 247)

YEAS

Members

Anderson
Andre
Atkinson
Belsher
Bertrand
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blenkarn
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Brightwell
Cardiff
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Cole
Collins
Cook
Cooper
Corbeil
Côté
Crosby (Halifax West)
Danis
Darling
DeBlois
de Cotret
Dick
Domm
Dorin
Duplessis
Edwards
Epp
Fee
Ferland
Fontaine
Friesen
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greene
Gustafson
Halliday
Hawkes
Hicks
Hogue
Holtmann
Hudon
Hughes
Johnson
Joncas
Kempling
Koury
Langlois
Larrivée
Layton
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lewis
Littlechild
Loiselle
Lopez
Marin
Martin (Lincoln)
Mayer
Mazankowski
McDermid
McKnight
Merrithew
Mitges
Monteith
Moore
Nicholson
Oberle
O'Kurley
Plamondon
Porter
Pronovost
Reimer
Ricard
Richardson
Robitaille
Roy-Arcelin
Schneider
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Sobeski
Sparrow
Stevenson
Tétreault
Thacker
Thompson
Thorkelson
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Valcourt
Van de Walle
Vankoughnet
Venne
Vézina
Vincent
White
Wilbee
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—100

NAYS

Members

Althouse
Arseneault
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Baker
Bélair
Black
Blackburn (Brant)
Boudria
Caccia
Callbeck
Campbell (South West Nova)
Catterall
Crawford
de Jong
Ferguson
Finestone
Foster
Gaffney
Gardiner
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grey (Beaver River)
Guarnieri
Harb
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Heap
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Hunter
Karpoff
Keyes
Kristiansen
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
Lee
MacAulay
MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacLellan
Manley
Marleau
McGuire
McLaughlin
Milliken
Mills
Mitchell
Parent
Parker
Phinney
Pickard
Proud
Prud'homme
Rideout
Riis
Robichaud
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Taylor
Vanclief
Wood
Young (Gloucester)
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—61

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

[English]

Mr. Attewell: Madam Speaker, I would like the record to show that I did not participate in the voting because I have been asked to chair the legislative committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 6.25 p.m., the House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 26, 1990

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

• (1110)

[English]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government responses to several petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS

TABLING AND REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a number of Order in Council appointments which were made by the government.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(1), these are deemed referred to the appropriate standing committees, a list of which is attached.

[Translation]

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table the annual report of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation for 1989, in both official languages.

* * *

[English]

COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

THIRTY-NINTH SEMINAR ON PARLIAMENTARY PRACTICE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 34(1), I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the report of the Canadian branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association of the official parliamentary delegation which represented Canada at the thirty-ninth seminar on parliamentary practice and procedure at Westminster from March 6 to March 17, 1990.

* * *

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS AND GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS—CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I stand today to move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley, concurrence in the second report of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Let there be no mistake that although I am proposing that the House adopt the report of the committee, I intend to vote against the motion because peculiarities of the House allow me only to move concurrence. As a private member I am not allowed to move non-concurrence in the report to which I am fundamentally opposed.

The report calls for the eventual privatization of the Canada Post Corporation. On a matter of this importance I believe that the House of Commons must have an opportunity to debate the issue and ensure that Canadians understand what it is that the government, as proposed by this committee, intends to be considering over the next period of time.

We sat in the Consumer and Corporate Affairs committee for most of the last six months hearing testimony from people from across the country on the operations of Canada Post. What we heard in committee, including testimony from the minister, from the president of Canada Post Corporation, and from witnesses from the private sector and community organizations, did not provide us with enough information to properly conclude that privatization is an option for the post office.

Even the minister suggested in his testimony before the committee that privatization was an option that would require two or three years worth of work, of solid performance by the post office, of productivity increases, of profits generated by Canada Post.

Unfortunately, the standing committee has provided the post office with an opportunity to continue doing what it has been doing for the last several years and which has led to the profit picture of this last year. That means the cutting of services to Canadians in suburban and rural areas and the harassment of workers who dedicate their lives to ensure the mail is delivered.

Essentially, the committee gives carte blanche to the post office to remain unaccountable to the people of Canada. The direction that Canada Post has been taking has been protested by Canadians from coast to coast, time and time again, over the last several years. We have newspaper clippings galore. We had testimony before the committee galore. We had all sorts of opportunities to pursue the matter of what Canada Post is doing and why it is influencing negatively the needs of Canadians and Canadian communities.

When the report was tabled in the House of Commons the day before yesterday, and at the media conference announcing the tabling of the document, the chairperson of the committee indicated that the time has come for Canada Post to be privatized. I fundamentally reject that notion. As a member of the committee who sat in on almost six months of testimony, I want to ensure that the House and all Canadians recognize that we heard very little testimony that would lead us to conclude that the time has come for Canada Post to be privatized.

The worst thing about privatizing the corporation is that it loses accountability. Canadians will no longer have the ability to hold the post office accountable for their needs. It also ensures that the process by which the government removes itself from being accountable to Canadians for their postal needs is addressed.

I want to put on the record today a couple of things about the process that led to the delivery of that report of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and also outline some of the things that I believe Canadians can do to ensure that we have, not only an accountable postal service, but one that meets their service needs as well as their community needs.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, contained in the majority report of the Consumer and Corporate Affairs Committee are minority reports, dissenting opinions from the opposition members of that Consumer and Corporate Affairs Committee. My dissenting report, as restricted by the committee—and I understand that the committee has the powers to do that—is 12 pages long and contains a large number of recommendations which I believe, if followed by the government and Canada Post, would lead to better delivery service by the post office.

The fact that the committee restricted me in the number of pages that I could include in that dissenting report meant that, in order to say all of the things that needed to be said about Canada Post, I had to produce a minority report of my own. That report is some 50 pages long. It details quite a lot of the advice that we got from different witnesses who appeared before us in committee and outlines a number of recommendations which I believe, if followed, would give Canada Post operating directions for the delivery of the mail in the future.

Before I discuss my own report, I want to put on record a few of the things that I am quite concerned about in the existing report, the second report of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

As I already indicated, there is a problem with taking the testimony of the witnesses and putting it into the recommendations. We had no evidence, when writing the report, that the mandate given to Canada Post in 1981 was inadequate to meet the postal service needs of Canadians.

• (1120)

As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, in 1981, Parliament passed an act and gave a mandate to Canada Post that set the direction it was to follow. That mandate was quite clear: Meet the service needs of Canadians and try to be self-sufficient. Self-sufficiency does not, in the interpretation of most Canadians, mean showing a profit or making a return on investment to the government, its current shareholder.

The mandate of Canada Post, as described by many witnesses before the committee, was quite clear. The mandate was adequate to meet the needs of Canada Post, to meet the needs of government, to meet the needs of its workers, and to meet the needs of Canadians, whether they be in the urban setting and are now subjected to the supermailboxes, or whether they be in the rural setting where we are finding post office closures.

We did not have any evidence to conclude that the mandate was incorrect. We also did not have much evidence to support some of the contentions that were made in the report, particularly dealing with the rural side of Canada Post and the needs of rural Canadians to be able to get the mail service they deserve. Rural route service people were ignored entirely by the majority committee report.

The other oversight the committee made was its failure to recognize that as Canada Post is moving into the private sector. It is turning a lot of rural post offices and suburban post offices over to the private sector and individuals operate those private sector post offices. Canada Post calls them retail postal operators or retail postal outlet operators. Those RPOs are the subject of disagreement among large numbers of Canadians, particularly on the rural side.

Not once did this committee call before it for testimony an operator of a retail postal outlet, the people who are supposed to deliver the mail in rural Canada. I think that was a tremendous oversight. Under no circumstances could this committee rightly argue or set out in a report that the RPOs are operating, not only efficiently, but correctly and within the needs of the communities they are servicing. I believe very strongly in the right of rural Canadians to be able to get as good a service from the Canada Post Corporation, a Crown corporation, as do people in urban centres.

The main promise of the report is privatization and the selling of shares over the course of the next couple of years if Canada Post meets some of the standards it is trying to set for itself. Those are the standards which will lead to more post office closures, less letter carrier service, and less service to Canadians. Privatization was the main bone in this report.

What is the purpose of privatization? What is the reason, not only the government, but this committee is moving toward the privatizing of this Crown corporation? We have a very great need in this large country of ours to ensure that communication fairness exists in all parts of this country.

The privatizing of this corporation was not something about which we heard a great deal of testimony in committee. The minister alluded to it. The president of the corporation said they were not ready for it. We did not have definitions presented to us. We did not have any of the claims that Canada Post presented to us verified by independent witnesses. We never called before us the polling firms that do all of the work that Canada Post relies on for its public image. We did not have any of the individuals who are responsible for setting the direction of Canada Post called before us.

We had very loose statements by the minister that indicated he would like to move in that direction. But we had no evidence at all that the privatizing of one of our most essential Crown corporations would be in the interests of the Canadian people or in the interests of the communication system of the country, not to mention the major mail users who, in a sense, make up about 80 per cent of the volume of the Crown corporation.

The idea that Canada Post needs more money is the reason for selling shares in Canada Post as the means to privatize it. What evidence do we have that Canada Post is in need of more capital? We heard not too long ago in the House the government's desire to sell Petro-Canada, a Crown corporation. The main reason for selling shares in Petro-Canada, with which I also have some disagreement but I will not get into that debate today, was that Petro-Canada needed more money and the government was not prepared to make any further investments.

We have not heard that evidence from Canada Post. In fact, we have seen just the contrary. The evidence provided to us in the annual reports of the corporation indicate that, not only is Canada Post making a profit in this last fiscal year, but it is going to continue making profits, to turn some of those profits back into the corporation for new technology, and, in turn, to make a rebate to the federal government. If this committee report is to be accepted, in the neighbourhood of 40 per cent of that profit will go back to the government.

At no time has this Crown corporation or the government indicated that Canada Post is in need of greater capital investment from the Canadian public through the government. Now, a committee of the government, without testimony to the contrary, is advocating to the government that it go ahead and sell shares in Canada Post and privatize the operation. And for what purpose? No good purpose, I maintain.

The report completely ignores the majority of the testimony that we heard over the course of that six months. At one point, I was very strongly considering advocating that the committee stop work on the report that it was drafting, go back to the drawing-board, and prepare another report that reflected in greater detail the evidence that had been presented before us. The committee did not do that. As a result, I felt very strongly that I had to do some work to try to set out what I believe would be an efficient, well operated, publicly owned Crown corporation delivering the mail across the country.

I have released a report, part of which was tabled with the main report. It is called: Canada's Post: A report of the New Democratic Party on the Future of our National Postal System. This report indicates that the government and Canadians have choices to make—choices about what kind of a national postal system we really want; choices that will relate to the needs of Canadians today and tomorrow; choices that will allow us to have full postal service in rural areas delivered by people who are accountable to the Crown corporation and who are ensuring that the needs of their communities are well fulfilled.

One of the things that I propose in my report is the creation of a permanent full-time Canada Post commission that will administer the Crown corporation in a way that adheres to the mandate that Parliament and the people of Canada gave it in 1981. A Crown corporation with full accountability to Canadian people is the absolute necessary bottom line.

We should create a permanent, full-time Canada Post commission, established to oversee the operations of Canada Post, and whose prime function should be to ensure that the corporation adheres to its mandate in the context of placing accessible, quality service for all Canadians as a first priority.

The commission should be directed by a board composed with equitable representation from the rural organizations which are being ignored by the government. As we know, the representatives from Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan, and other rural areas were basically told by the committee and by the government that they were wrong.

• (1130)

There must be representation from consumer organizations, the people who work for Canada Post within the postal unions, representatives of small business and big business, seniors and the disabled on this commission to ensure that when we have situations where supermailboxes are absolutely essential that the needs of the seniors, the disabled, and the physically challenged are adhered to. Of course, there must also be representation from environmental and native organizations to ensure that the needs of the north and the needs of our new environmentally-conscious society are adhered to. The board of course would ensure that there would be equitable regional, provincial and territorial representation among its members.

The insurance that this commission has is that it is not just accountable to the government doing what a majority government wants to do, but it is accountable to the people of Canada and to Parliament through the Canada Post Act of 1981. We have to ensure that the mandate is adhered to so that we do not see a continuation of the decline of service, particularly in rural areas.

I go back not too long ago when even cabinet ministers were fighting to save post offices in rural Canada. In early April 1989 the minister of health was calling for the maintenance of a post office in his own constituency, a post office which I believe has not had the support of this government.

Countless retailers have been telling us about the problems that they have had. One franchise owner in Wilno, Ontario had to go to the community asking for donations because the funds that were provided for the sale of stamps from his post office by Canada Post were not enough to meet the operating needs of his store.

Canada Post must remain a Crown corporation and not be privatized as suggested this week by the second report of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs. There is no justification for a privatized post office which would never ensure that service to rural Canada is met adequately. The Crown corporation exists to meet certain communication needs of Canadians and only a Crown corporation accountable to Canadians through Parliament will meet those needs.

Rural Canada has been fighting the Canada Post conversion program from day one and I know that they will continue to fight the corporation and the government, if it continues to close rural post offices. To lose a post office in rural Canada so that the government can earn a profit is scandalous and any process which moves us further in that direction must be opposed.

Canadians, rural and urban, depend on their post office and this government has a responsibility to see to it that this service is provided in an affordable and dependable manner for Canadians from coast to coast.

When Parliament created the Crown corporation in 1981, MPs expected it to grow with the needs of Canadians. Instead, Canada Post has grown away from the service needs of Canadians, particularly rural Canadians, and because it is virtually unaccountable for its actions nothing has been done to correct the damage which has resulted.

Privatizing the post office will not correct any problems that we see in the present day delivery of post office service. Only an accountable public corporation with a renewed mandate for service will correct those problems.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Under Standing Order 43, the hon. member does have 10 minutes for questions and comments. I will now recognize the hon. member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley on questions or comments.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the comments made by my colleague on the report on Canada Post. I know that he has done a great deal of work in this House, in committee, and in his own riding on how important Canada Post is, especially its rural outlets, to many of us who represent those parts of this country that this government is ignoring.

I have two questions that I would like to ask the member. The first has to do with what direction do we offer the people in rural communities who are concerned about the potential closing of post offices? What advice can he offer to these communities and groups in terms of keeping the pressure on to ensure that whether it is privatized, as members opposite seem to want, or if it stays as a public Crown corporation, we continue to improve the service that we get?

My second question has to do with commitments from Canada Post. Like many members in this House—I am not sure that Conservative members are concerned about post offices in their ridings—we write to the president of Canada Post and express our concerns. We want to keep monitoring the activities of Canada Post in our ridings. I am wondering what experiences he has had with commitments that the post office has given to members and communities about maintaining post offices, keeping them open, or have we had examples across the country where perhaps a little more rigorous watching of Canada Post is needed to ensure that our communities are served well?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley for his question.

I know from our work in caucus that the hon. member who asked the question is very concerned about post offices in his community and has provided me with many opportunities to discuss postal matters with people in his riding and has made many representations to me and to government on this very issue.

As you may be aware, Mr. Speaker, a number of post offices in rural Canada have been under attack for closing, conversion or the new expansion program of Canada Post. In fact, in my own riding of The Battlefords—Meadow Lake, there are eight post offices that are currently in negotiations with Canada Post about the future of the operations in those communities.

I have also worked strongly with the people in Dubuc, Saskatchewan, which has been fighting as hard as any community in this country to ensure that its post office is retained and the postal services from those full-time post offices are retained. I have also worked with people on Prince Edward Island with the help of Rural Dignity, the organization that has been working very hard to help maintain post offices. I must say that the advice and direction I am able to provide to these people comes down to one of just remaining vigilant, being constant and never giving up.

The Dubuc situation is one that provides us with a great deal of frustration and many of the other communities could find it very difficult to deal with. The community of Dubuc found itself 100 per cent in favour of maintaining service from the existing post office. Canada Post came into that community and asked if there was a business person who would be willing to provide service from his or her business location and establish a retail postal outlet in the community of Dubuc, Saskatchewan.

The people of Dubuc said no. None of the business people in the community of Dubuc wanted a retail postal outlet. They wanted service from the post office and a full-time postmaster working from that post office meeting the needs of that community. They even travelled to Ottawa to make their case before our committee, before the minister and before members of this House.

When Canada Post could not find a retail business that was willing to give service from a store, cafe, or even the grain elevator, Canada Post said: "All right. We will just close your post office and you will not get any service". Canada Post blackmailed the community, and now one of those businesses has said that it will put in a retail postal outlet, if it is the only way there can be service to the community and residents do not have to drive 15 miles to the next community to pick up registered mail, buy stamps, and those types of things.

That community right now is very angry. They have held a funeral service in their community for their post office. They have continued to write letters. They have not given up. They are going to fight Canada Post and this government for as long as it takes to get maintenance of the service in their own community.

The advice that I can give to other communities in this country is to do what Dubuc has done, and that is to remain vigilant, strong, united and true to their belief that rural Canada must be served well by a Crown corporation that delivers postal service in a quality and effective manner, and I salute the people of Dubuc for that very reason.

• (1140)

I could say similar things about people in Prince Edward Island whom I travelled to visit with for several days earlier this year. When the committee of Consumer and Corporate Affairs refused to travel across the country to meet with people in rural Canada, to meet with retail postal outlet operators, I decided I had to travel myself. On doing so, I learned a tremendous amount about rural Canada that this committee never had an opportunity to learn.

I presented a report to the committee on my findings throughout the Atlantic region. Obviously not only the needs of rural Canadians were ignored but also the voices of all those people through my report were ignored.

In answer to the second part of the question offered by my colleague, the commitments from Canada Post are ones that are very well couched in good public relations language. Canada Post treats what is happening in rural Canada, not as a problem but as a public relations challenge. They would rather not have to deal with the problems of rural Canada, maintaining a rural postal service, but instead would rather convince people that what they want is wrong, that what Canada Post is providing is the best for them.

Commitments made by Canada Post to communities in my own riding are: "We will maintain a quality service in your community". That means that the business person who is also selling everything from diapers to pizzas to you name it in that community will also be selling postal services. That is not a maintenance of quality postal service in a rural area where the full time postmaster is providing services that go way beyond selling stamps from the counter next to where he or she sells cigarettes, diapers, magazines and the other things that are sold in those community stores.

I thank the hon. member for asking me these questions. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I wish Canadians well right across the country in their bid to help save a Crown corporation, a national postal system from the destruction that this government through this report is wreaking upon us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is still enough time for one more question or comment. The hon. member for Saanich—Gulf Islands, for a short question or comment.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, my colleague from The Battlefords—Meadow Lake has articulated very eloquently the frustration with the dismantling of Canada Post and its service to Canada.

My question is on the same subject but a different facet of it. That is the rural route contracts. In my constituency of Saanich—Gulf Islands, the people who have been contracted by Canada Post have phoned me and complained with some trepidation because they feel that their jobs are at risk by complaining. They are having to be the deliverers of large volumes of junk mail, which is a whole other problem that I am also getting a lot of mail with complaints from constituents on that, and they are not being given any further money for this. I would ask the member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake, what has his minority report done to articulate or deal with this problem?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The member has one minute to answer the question.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, my report does deal with rural couriers and I am more than happy to go through some of that with the member. Given the time constraint, I should point out one thing. What is happening to the rural route couriers is a direct result of the slow privatizing, the contracting out of services that has been going on within Canada Post. This will even be exaggerated more as Canada Post becomes more responsible to the private sector rather than the Canadian people.

Privatizing a corporation like this is akin to privatizing a public utility. When you are dealing with trying to earn profits, you are earning them from the funds that are spent on this essential type of service. Contracting out to the rural couriers simply means that people are competing against each other to get a job. People in this country should not have to be competing against each other for employment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions or comments has expired. On debate, the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, late yesterday afternoon a rumour was circulating that a member of the New Democratic Party would move to concur with the government's report to shut down the Post Office.

As you will well understand, Mr. Speaker, I refused to believe that. I refused to believe yesterday that any member of this House of any party would move to concur in that report. I apologize. I was proven to be wrong. Someone did move to concur in the government's report to shut down the Post Office.

Under our rules, Standing Order 124 refers to a motion of concurrence. That is what was proposed to us this morning. Of course, the first thing that came to my mind was that perhaps I do not understand what concurrence means. Perhaps my limited knowledge of Canada's other official language is such that I did not fully appreciate this. So I went to The Concise Oxford Dictionary and looked at the definition of concurrence and concur and it says—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is important that I raise this point of order. I think my hon. friend is being mischievous because the person who moved the motion indicated clearly that he opposed the intention of the report. It was the only way that we could get it on the floor of the House of Commons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member knows very well that that is not a point of order. It is debate. The hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has the floor.

Mr. Boudria: As I was saying, before I was so rudely interrupted, according to The Concise Oxford Dictionary concur means:

> Happen together, coincide; combine in its action; agree in opinion, express agreement.

"Concurrent" means:

> Running in same direction, as parallel lines; meeting at or tending to one point, existing or acting together—

Some of us have suspected a little togetherness between the NDP and the Tories across the way, but now it is all confirmed.

I was not content with that definition in the Oxford dictionary. I figured I might as well look at another dictionary, Webster's dictionary, which could perhaps this one would clarify the situation. Maybe I was misunderstanding what was being said here. The definition of "concur", according to Webster's New Dictionary of Synonyms is:

> To conjoin; to unite; to combine; to co-operate; to accord; to harmonize.

Canada was harmonized with the United States in the trade deal and now the NDP is being harmonized with the government. It goes on to define concur: "To agree, to coincide, to consent, to assent, to accede, to acquiesce". Would you believe it, Mr. Speaker, that the NDP are acquiescing with the government?

I do not know about you, Mr. Speaker, but I do not acquiesce to shutting down rural post offices in Canada. I do not acquiesce to shutting down 5,221 post offices. I do not acquiesce to the firing or laying off of 10,000 rural employees, 8,300, or 83 percent, of whom are women. I do not acquiesce, agree or consent to the largest firing of women in the history of Canada, and I certainly do not concur with that proposition.

I hope that there will be an opportunity for us to vote on this concurrence motion, because I intend to oppose the NDP's attempt to concur with this government's report. I do not want to concur with shutting down post offices in Canada. I do not want to concur with a number of things that the government is proposing here.

• (1150)

Let me summarize some of the things that I do not want to concur with. I do not want to concur with recommendation No. 2 that states:

> Canada Post continue with its plans to realize a 14 per cent return on equity—

I want Canada Post to generate operating profits necessary to meet its own capital investment needs and to maintain and improve services to Canadians. That is why I do not concur with that proposition.

I do not concur with recommendation No. 3 which states:

> The Government of Canada examine the feasibility of requiring Canada Post to pay corporate income tax.

I do not concur with recommendation No. 4 which states:

> The Government of Canada consider the replacement of postal subsidy programs with direct recipient programs.

I want us to have those subsidy programs that help northern Canadians. I want us to have those programs that help the delivery of rural newspapers in Canada. So I do not concur with that proposition of the NDP. I do not concur with that at all.

I do not concur with recommendation No. 5 which states:

> The Government of Canada endeavour to provide publishers of rural community-owned newspapers—with—financial support—

—without giving any further details of that and while allowing the government to dismantle the infrastructure subsidy program. I want the infrastructure subsidy program to continue.

I most certainly do not concur with recommendation No. 7 which states:

> Canada Post discontinue its retail postal business and devote its resources to the collection, processing and delivery of mail.

Instead, my colleagues and I want Canada Post to maintain its existing retail network and to continue to devote resources to the collection, processing and delivery of mail. So I do not concur with that part of the report. I do not concur with those who produced the majority of the report, nor with those this morning who propose for us to concur with it. I cannot agree with that proposition.

This is what we are being asked to concur with this morning: "Where possible Canada Post contract out mail delivery". We are being asked by the NDP to concur with contracting out mail delivery. What is this world coming to?

We are being asked to concur with recommendation No. 33:

> In the event of a disruption in postal services, Canada Post's exclusive privilege to deliver letters should be suspended—

We are being asked to concur with that this morning. Mr. Speaker, do you believe that? The minister responsible for Canada Post probably has a hard time imagining that the NDP would have proposed for us to concur with that proposition.

The NDP has proposed for us to concur with this report, and Committee recommendation No. 36 of the report with which we are asked to concur states:

> The Government of Canada privatize Canada Post once adequate financial performance, comparable to the private sector levels, has been attained and once the industrial relations climate has improved.

The Liberals do not want to concur with that. Instead, we want Canada Post to remain a Crown corporation. We stand firmly behind that proposition in my party. We do not want to concur with any such proposition.

Mr. Keyes: Do you think Mr. Parrot concurs?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Parrot I do not think concurs with that either. I think he is with us when he says that Canada Post should remain a Crown corporation.

Government recommendation No. 37 that we are asked to concur with this morning—

Mr. Gauthier: By the NDP.

Mr. Boudria: By the NDP my colleague reminds me. I am sorry, I had almost forgotten that. It is hard to fathom that proposition. We are asked to concur with the following:

> The privatization plan be carried out by means of a public share issue and should incorporate an employee share ownership plan.

The Liberals want that clause to be eliminated. We do not concur with that.

We are also asked to concur with the following:

> That Canada Post, if privatized, continue to be regulated by an independent, third party regulatory agency with decision-making power.

The Liberals do not want Canada Post to be privatized at all. In addition to disagreeing with all those things we are asked to concur with this morning—

Mr. Keyes: By the NDP.

Mr. Boudria: By the NDP, my colleague reminds me. I had almost forgotten again. The Liberals also want Canada Post to restore its previous corporate identity; that it have a program that reflects the role of the corporation as an institution of the Government of Canada.

We think it is important for Canada Post to have the flag of Canada. The Government of Canada has allowed Canada Post to adopt this new corporate logo and name, which states: "Mail" and a logo symbol of a wing and then poste. There is nothing wrong with that. However, it has removed the flag of Canada from its logo, and there is something wrong with that. It has removed the word "Canada" from Canada Post. We want to put Canada back into Canada Post. That is a dissenting recommendation of the Liberal Party. We do not want to concur with anything otherwise.

We, the Liberals, also want Canada Post to ensure that postage stamps being sold at retail counters are not being sold below the retail price, as a result of those privatized jobs that the minister likes so much. What is happening now is that chain stores are selling postage stamps as loss leaders. We think that proposition is wrong and we want measures to prevent that.

In The Montreal Gazette this morning the following editorial appeared, and I want the minister to be well aware of this. The headline states: "Post office is a public service" and the article states:

> Some Conservatives in Ottawa have an almost indecent urge to privatize for the sake of privatization.
>
> Their latest target is Canada Post. The Conservative members of the Parliamentary committee, with the blessing of the Mulroney government, have just recommended the selling off of the Crown corporation as soon as it gets profitable enough to interest private investors.

It further states the following:

> Would a privatized postal system keep rural post offices open? Would it scrap the hated supermailboxes? Would it continue "unprofitable" activities, such as delivering the mail to the far corners of the country? Not bloody likely. Indeed, it would be likely to prune service even further in those areas—notably service to remote places—that are not profitable. Yet such service is clearly in the national interest.
>
> Now that Canada Post is no longer a drain on the treasury, the government should not be thinking of selling its profitable parts to the highest bidders. It should be thinking of using the profits to pay back taxpayers for long years of deficits, and to restore lost services to the customers.

I want to tell the minister, very briefly, one tangible example of what has happened with the closure of one post office in my riding. Yesterday, the minister said that rural post offices were only closed when there was a so-called natural opportunity. These alleged natural opportunities were defined as the resignation or death of the postmaster.

There is an incident going on right now in the village of Dalkeith in Glengarry, in my riding. The minister has been around Ottawa long enough that I am sure he knows where Glengarry is. He may not know the community of Dalkeith. It is not one of the larger communities, but it is, nevertheless, an important one in my riding.

Here is what happened. The Postmistress is no where near retirement age. She may be a few years away. Canada Post went to the Postmistress and offered her a lump-sum payment. In other words, they offered to create a natural opportunity because none was there. They offered this money, and I do not know the amount and, of course, I do not blame her for taking it. A person who is a few years away from retirement can always use money. But in any case, they actually purchased the rest of the time.

They gave her a financial incentive, asked her to retire and then, once they had artificially created this so-called natural opportunity, they circulated a letter to my constituents saying, "Guess what folks, your post office is shutting down because of the retirement of your postmistress". As a result they are going to offer alternative services to us. We will have a retail postal outlet, as Canada Post calls these things, inside a store in the village. There is only one store in the village and Canada Post officials went to see the store owner. The store owner then said, no way, we don't want this. We don't want to be the cause of the shutdown of the post office. We don't like the proposition and we don't want in any way to be associated with any such devious scheme by Canada Post.

• (1200)

Then they went to see the local furniture store. It is a small store where they manufacture furniture themselves. It is called Pine Teak and they have asked the owners if they were interested. At last report they were totally uninterested.

The present situation is that Canada Post has created artificially the closure of our post office without even pre-organizing another outlet. It is bad enough that they orchestrated this thing artificially. They did not even bother to see the store owner first and make a deal with him. We went from having a post office to having no post office at all and no alternative service in that community.

We were at a meeting the other day when they told my constituents not to worry, because they could always go pick up their mail and have postal services 13 miles away in the other village. If worse comes to worse that is what they will have.

Well, that's great, Mr. Speaker, that is going to be really useful for the people in my riding, going from Dalkeith to Vankleek Hill. It is unfortunate that those people who have these plans do not think them through a little bit better.

We are assured by the minister and by others that the post offices in rural areas are there to stay, but that is not always true. When we are told that post offices in rural areas are not shut down unless the postmaster is ready for retirement, it is not necessarily true. In this case, they created a situation where the person was made to retire years ahead of time. All the assurances we are hearing in this House are, and I am putting this gently, inaccurate and that is the best way I can put it.

The people of the riding that I represent want to keep the rural post offices and want to have a postal system that is not just a business but is also a service to the community. That is why my colleagues and I have issued a dissenting report to the document known as Moving the Mail. That is why we cannot support the government's idea and why we cannot support the concurrence motion proposed to us this morning.

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague from Kamloops has just said, the member who just spoke is being quite mischievous this morning. He is having a lot of fun at my expense and I very much enjoy this kind of partisan rhetoric because he knows how much I oppose the direction that is taken in this report. I can appreciate him having fun at my expense and I realize that he too does not concur with the report.

The member is knowledgeable of the rules of the House. He knows that as a private member neither he nor I can move any motions of non-concurrence, or can put on the floor of this House for debate, at times like this, any dissenting opinions about the committee's work or about the role that the government is taking. He knows we have not had any debate in this House on privatization and as private members we have a great deal of difficulty initiating this. Does he not appreciate the opportunity that I have given him this morning to get a few words on the record about how much he opposes the government's work? If he does not appreciate the opportunity that is presented to him this morning, I wonder if the member could tell me what procedural moves he has proposed to hold this government accountable for their destruction of the postal service in our country.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to be a procedural adviser to the New Democratic Party caucus.

Mr. Gauthier: I wouldn't let you do it.

Mr. Boudria: It is the last thing I had in mind. My House leader says he would not allow it, and I thank him, because that is a very wise decision. It is an interesting proposition for a House leader to entertain, that is allowing Liberal members to advise the NDP—not that we would do it anyway.

Seriously, my colleague should know that you do not move concurrence in a report that you do not want. To say that that is the only trick he could come up with is just not good enough. Mr. Speaker, you do not move to adopt something that you oppose. I do not understand that proposition. I do not know how the idea ever came to the hon. member, but it is not for me to ask where that idea came from.

I could give some free advice, perhaps, to my colleague. For instance, I asked questions on the report yesterday, and the day before, through a mechanism reasonably well known. It is called Question Period. I have raised questions on two separate occasions during Question Period. I have also issued press releases regarding it, another device which is relatively common here.

After one raises an item in Question Period, there is also a procedure known as the adjournment debate. One can use that mechanism as well. In addition to the adjournment debate, one can move a private members' motion, and place it on the Order Paper. This is another reasonably well-known device. One can always ask for an emergency debate, ask to adjourn the House under Standing Order 52 and have an emergency—

Mr. Gauthier: You are giving them advice.

Mr. Boudria: Sorry, my House leader says I should not be giving advice, but I was asked to provide alternatives. It is hard not to do so when I am being urged on like this, notwithstanding the wise counsel of my House leader.

I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I do not ever recall moving to adopt something that I was against.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the advice of my learned colleague.

I would like to ask the member another question along similar lines. As he is aware, even though the privatization of the Post Office issue has been kicking around for some time now, it has never come forward for debate. Questioning the minister is one thing, but the minister and the government have not brought matters to the House so that backbenchers could comment on the closure of post offices in their own constituencies.

I am wondering if the member is aware of situations in any constituencies in this country, outside of his own, that might prompt members of the opposite side to rise, and to talk about the saving of rural post offices, about the saving of rural constituencies. Is there any need for a full-fledged debate on what Canadians want in an accountable postal service in this country?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have just illustrated five different devices available to members in order to debate these issues.

We could go through the Standing Orders one by one on some later occasion and probably come up with a number of other ways. But I have enumerated five different ways in which this issue can be addressed in the House. To repeat what I said before, I cannot propose something that I disagree with. I just do not want to do that, and there is some difficulty in terms of that proposition.

My colleague also—I thank him for the compliment—referred to me as a "learned" colleague. I am not a lawyer. I appreciate the compliment nevertheless, but I am not learned in the law. I wish I were, but I am not at the present time. Seriously though, in addition to what has been raised, my colleague asked if there are examples of Conservative members of Parliament losing post offices in their constituencies.

• (1210)

I know through speaking to people at Canada Post that the Minister of Health personally objected to the closure of the post office in his riding, that he literally had a temper tantrum in front of some officials of the post office in a futile attempt to try and keep the post office for his riding. Apparently he was unsuccessful, as have many other Conservative members who have probably tried this as well.

Canada Post at the present time is not in a deficit position. We know that.

The Marchment Committee, the Postal Services Review Board, said that the indiscriminate closing of rural post offices, whether or not they made any money, did not make sense. That policy should be revisited. I invite the minister to think about that. That is an independent agency which the minister himself appointed. When the government did not like some of the recommendations which the Postal Services Review Board made, they fired the committee. They turfed them out of office because they did not like the message that they heard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend or expect to be talking about the post office today but I welcome the opportunity.

Unlike the member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, I was not too alarmed to hear the New Democrats move concurrence of that report. Consistency has never been their long suit. I knew it had to be a cover for something else because they would not have suddenly been struck smart. So I was not sent running to the dictionary like the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell to find out what the NDP were doing. They were doing what they were usually doing—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: —and only Jean-Claude Parrot knows for sure! I suspect that is why we are having this debate today.

But in any event, Mr. Speaker, it is comforting to know—I am sure Fidel Castro is comforted to know—that there is at least one or perhaps two other political parties in this hemisphere of the world that still believe in state ownership as preferable to private ownership. It is getting lonely for the fellow out there, getting lonely all over the world. His soulmates are saying socialism does not work.

We must go to the market if we are going to satisfy the aspirations of our people for a decent standard of living and opportunity. And there was poor old Fidel getting isolated on his island in the Caribbean saying: "Woe is me! Am I the only one who still believes in state ownership? Socialism is the preferable system." Naw, he is not isolated. We have the Liberal Party of Canada and the New Democratic Party of Canada who are absolutely and firmly committed to the principle that the state can do it better than any private organization, and the state should do it, should do it all.

Gorbachev does not believe that any more. But the New Democrats do, and apparently so do the Liberals.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I say they are welcome to their points of view. If the lessons of history do not serve to educate and they are determined to remain the soulmates of Fidel Castro and, is it Hawkes in Albania? There are not many soulmates left for you folks, is there? It is getting awfully lonely being a socialist.

An hon. member: Hawkes is in Australia!

Mr. Andre: Nowadays socialists are getting to be a rare breed and except for the odd professor, it is really quite rare to find anybody to willingly come out and openly suggest that socialism is still a way to go, state ownership is still preferable to private ownership. I am sure the member for Papineau does not agree with the member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

When the hon. member for Papineau was Postmaster General, he indicated that for the post office to be able to perform in a satisfactory manner for its customers, the people of Canada, it was necessary to remove political interference and that political interference was at the root of the historic problems of the post office. That was obvious to everyone who has studied the post office and, goodness knows, there has been study after study after study. In spite of that, we still have the hon. member from the New Democratic Party asking me, as a minister, to intervene and impose my political judgment on the post office in Dubuc, Saskatchewan. I have forgotten the name of the village in—

Mr. Boudria: Dalkeith.

Mr. Andre: Dalkeith. The hon. member thinks that we should not allow the post office management to operate in Dalkeith and that we should impose our superior political judgment on the post office.

That kind of call is understandable, but it is the collective result of all that over decades that produced the catastrophic situation which existed in the post office in 1983-84, when it was running a $500-million deficit. Think of that, Mr. Speaker, in terms of economic policy and social policy—$500 million from the taxpayers to the users of the post office.

Eighty per cent of the post office's revenue comes from private sector business such as mass mailers, Visa cards, utility bills, and so on. We had a situation where the taxpayers were subsidizing business to the tune of $500 million a year.

An hon. member: Oh, come on!

An hon. member: Shame!

Mr. Andre: The New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party say: "That that is quite all right. Is that not what governments are supposed to do? That is an acceptable price for the purity of a state-owned operation. What is a puny $500 million of taxpayers' money if you are able to retain the purity of a system where the government runs things as opposed to the private sector."

I ask members of the New Democratic Party to look back in Hansard and they will see that their own members stated that the problem with the post office is political interference. They will see in the committee evidence the testimony of Shirley Carr and Jean-Claude Parrot saying: "Let management manage". It was on that basis that we unanimously said: "Yes, we should change the post office from a department of government to a Crown corporation so management could manage." Well, that is what we have been doing.

An hon. member: With success.

Mr. Andre: Yes, with success. In 1984 the government said to the post office: "Go manage. We will try to keep the political jackals off your back. We will try to prevent people from coming in and saying, 'No, no, no management.' You can manage, but not in Dubuc and not in—"—I am sorry, I keep forgetting the name of that village.

An hon. member: Dalkeith.

Mr. Andre: We said: "We will let the post office manage, but not in Dalkeith, and not in Dubuc". You cannot have it both ways.

Can someone go around and say anecdotally that the post office made an error here in this town and that town? Of course they can. Any group of people, and certainly an organization like the post office, makes mistakes. It will be the first to admit that. But, if one looks at the things it has done right versus the things it has done wrong, one reaches the inescapable conclusion that it is doing a whole lot more things right than wrong. The post office today is a whole lot better than it has been in the past.

Mr. Boudria: Why do you want to get rid of it then if it works so good?

Mr. Andre: The hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell wants to know why we want to get rid of it if it is working so well. He said "good" but I will say "well". That is the American influence where they have given up adverbs entirely. We still use adverbs in Canada and we are determined to keep using adverbs in Canada!

Mr. Boudria: My English isn't too good but it's better than your French.

Mr. Andre: Your English is a lot better than some of those on American television whose English you are copying.

No decision has been taken in terms of privatizing the post office. That is a fallacy, that somehow there has been a decision taken. This committee did not recommend that tomorrow we start selling shares in Canada Post Corporation. The committee did not say that. The committee recognized the reality—if one cared to look at it—that things are different today than they were in the 1940s and 1950s and that the structure of a post office which was appropriate in the 1940s and 1950s is not appropriate today. Times have changed. They are changing.

• (1220)

Those rural post offices, which people talk about in terms of some mystic influence bewildering to the people who actually live in those communities, are a part of the past. Today, when someone gets into their car—be it from a farm, a suburban area, or from a downtown area—to go to do their personal business, they drive to a shopping centre or a store that is open in the evening when they have access when they are off work.

The New Democratic Party says that, in terms of equal work opportunity, it believes that the traditional family where the woman must stay in the house is no longer appropriate. We agree absolutely with it. Statistics reflect that families today are totally different in terms of how they function compared to the families of the 1940s and 1950s. We have participation rates in my city of more than 75 per cent. That is 75 per cent of the work age population, men and women, actually work. People, such as the housewife, are not at home to do the household mailings from nine to four, the time traditional post offices are open.

Mr. Boudria: Nine to four? Name one that is open from nine to four. Name one!

Mr. Andre: As I said, they get into the station-wagon after coming home from work, go to the dry-cleaners, and stop at the grocery store to get the milk and bread and to do their shopping. It is convenient for them if they can also do the household business and mail the cheques to MasterCard, Visa, or whatever. They do not use the mail today as they did 30, 40, or 50 years ago to keep in touch with Aunt Nellie. They do that by phone.

The post office serves a different function today and, in recognition of that different function and of how our society has changed, the post office is changing the way in which it operates. There is a lot more competition. Today, 58 per cent of the post office business is fully competitive. That seems to have escaped the notice of some members. They still think of the post office in terms of delivering the standard letter. No, that is nonsense. There is a whole range of products, parcels, special delivery, and courier-type services. There is a whole variety of competitive business at which the post office is doing very well.

By what rationale, other than some philosophy that you are so stuck in you cannot change, does one say: "Well, that may be true or not, but if, in fact, state ownership was the way we operated 40 or 50 years ago, that is the way we have to operate today"? Why? Why would members of Parliament be so closed-minded as to say we cannot consider an alternative?

Two or three years down the road, when the post office will be fully self-sufficient in the real sense of the word, including cost of capital, I will concede that someone may then say: "Well, here are the arguments for privatization of some sort; here are the arguments against. In our view, the arguments for are not sufficiently strong to overvalue the arguments against. Therefore, we do not think it is appropriate to go ahead with the privatization at this point in time." I will concede that possibility. But, why will members opposite not concede the contrary? Perhaps, two or three years down the road, it will be looked at by someone who is rational and not locked into philosophical positions more to do with 19th century socialist philosophy than with 20th century reality, or even 21st century reality.

I do not understand the mentality that says state ownership is a must. I understand the New Democratic Party to a degree. It gets funded by the unions and I understand why Jean-Claude Parrot would prefer government ownership to private ownership. It is far easier for him to try to achieve what he wants to achieve through the exercise of political influence than through the normal collective bargaining of the private sector. I understand that and I understand why the New Democratic Party has to do that.

I do not understand where the Liberals are coming from. I do not understand that whatsoever, unless, perhaps, they are getting some money as well. Philosophically, what has been proposed in this report is something the member for Papineau, the former Postmaster General of a Liberal government, has in essence said should occur.

Mr. Boudria: When did he say you should shut down rural Canada?

Mr. Andre: I am glad he raised this rural Canada thing because I have got to deal with this nonsense about shutting down rural Canada. Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of places, a few hundred places, where the traditional post office has closed and been replaced by a retail postal outlet, in a general store, for example. They try to go into a business with which people in that area would normally interact and, therefore, make it convenient for them.

Where that has happened, we have gone back with post-change public opinion polling and the approval rating is over 90 per cent. That is an over 90 per cent approval rating. If one goes there before the change, as in Dubuc, people say: "My God, they are going to take away our post office and soon we won't get any mail. Soon, we are going to have to drive to Saskatoon or Regina to pick up your mail and soon, soon, soon—". The bogeyman and the scare tactics are used and the people say: "Holy smokes, holy smokes." It is human nature to be afraid of change. People say: "I don't know about change. I am pretty comfortable right now and you talk about change. This is comfortable, so why change?"

It is easy for the demagogue to tell them to fight that change. Change? They do not know what is going to happen. If we start this change, every woman in the post office might be fired, according to the hon. member. We might have weeks of delay. We might have to travel hundreds of thousands of miles to pick up our letters. People say: "Don't change, don't change! Where do I sign? Give me this petition and I will sign right now." It is easy to raise false fears in people when one says that change is coming. But change is inevitable.

The dinosaurs in the New Democratic Party and, increasingly, in the Liberal Party are locked into some notion that change can be resisted by political will. Well, it cannot and it should not, because change is progress and we are for progress. The change must be managed to make sure people are not hurt. The change should be undertaken in such a way to result in improvements and that is what the post office has been doing. It is running a profit for the first time in 30 years. Its users all say that the service is better today. Where these changes have occurred in rural Canada, the people affected have said: "This is an improvement." Not in every case, but an overwhelming majority say that this is an improvement.

The rest of the world is trooping in to Canada Post headquarters in Ottawa to see what is happening and they are amazed at the performance. In an article which I wish I had brought with me—but have not because I did not know this debate was coming up—Major users and mail groups in the United States said, if only Don Lander, the President of Canada Post, would come and become the Postmaster General of the United States Postal Service.

We are leading the world because of one very little simple policy decision we took. That is that we are not going to allow political interference in the operation of the post office. With that one little policy decision we said: "You manage and we will keep the dogs at bay." I have the scars to show that sometimes that is tough, but it is worth it. We have the performance to show for it. This committee has said: "Keep up the good work, and two or three years down the line, when this progress has reached another level, as any intelligent government should do, take a look at the prospects of perhaps some form of privatization. You may find that the benefits are significant enough to make it worth while."

• (1230)

I ask the Opposition, in vain I appreciate, but I ask it nonetheless, to keep an open mind. Change very often. Indeed, most of the time, it is beneficial if you think about it. If you get nervous when you think about change, perhaps you should be finding yourself a nice beach blanket for the beaches of Cuba, because that is the place where change is being resisted the most in this hemisphere, and if you are comfortable there, you are welcome to it.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to apologize to the minister for my failure to use the right adverb, as he pointed out earlier. As I indicated to the minister, my English may not be the best but it is probably better than his own ability to speak the language of Molière.

I am sorry about my less than perfect ability to use the correct adverb in English. However, I am sure his Quebec colleagues will remind the minister that his French adverbs leave something to be desired as well.

In any case—

[English]

I am sure the minister's colleagues will want to ask him a question or two later. Perhaps I could ask the minister a few questions, if I can get his attention.

The minister said that he does not interfere with the operation of Canada Post. He says, and I paraphrase here, that for members to want postal policy that does not shut down rural post offices, that would be somehow interfering with the post office. Does the minister deny that it is his government which adopted the Canada Post corporate plan of November 1986 which called for the shutdown and/or privatization of all 5,221 rural post offices in Canada?

Given that it was indeed his government that approved that corporate plan, why is it so right for the government to impose that will of shutting down all post offices in Canada? Similarly, what is wrong with wanting to keep all post offices in Canada? Surely if one is deemed to be political interference, the other should be seen as being the same, and if one is not political interference, advocating the other should equally be appropriate. That is the first thing I would like the minister to answer.

Second, the minister says that Canada Post had a deficit in the past, and that deficit was supported by Canadians. I agree. The minister says 80 per cent of the post office's revenue is created by business. Of that 80 per cent, does the minister think that that portion of it was losing money? He said that Canadians would be supporting businesses. Would he not agree with me that the evidence that he has is the exact contrary, that the biggest paying proportion of postal operations is the ad mail business. In fact, that part is the revenue-generating portion that creates tremendous profit for Canada Post, as indicated in the last annual report of the post office.

Given that the minister probably knows that that information is such, I wonder why he pretended a while ago that individual Canadians were supporting businesses by wanting to have a publicly-operated postal system.

Second, if the minister was right—I think I have just proven he is wrong, in any case—in his proposition that Canada Post, and therefore the public, when it was losing money was supporting businesses. If when Canada Post was losing money it was supporting businesses, the public was supporting businesses, would it not be equally right that Canada Post, while making money, would have businesses supporting everyone else? If that is the case, why does he want to sell it now?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I did not mean to criticize the member's English. His English is excellent, given that his first language is French. I was merely pointing out that along with a lot of other Canadians, as we get influenced by the United States, the use of adverbs is falling. As Nancy White said on one of her CBC radio shows, will the adverb disappear gradually or will it die real quick. That was the only point.

The so-called policy to shut down rural post offices is nonsense. The way in which all current corporations operate is that they are required under the Financial Administration Act to put forward a corporate plan.

An hon. member: The Crown Corporations Act.

Mr. Andre: The Crown Corporations Act. In any event they put forward a corporate plan indicating what they anticipate in new expansion, growth and so on over the next few years and how they intend to match it. That is there. It is not something the government tells them to do in terms of its details. It is what management proposes to alert the government, alert the House, alert the country, alert everybody, in terms of what this Crown corporation is doing.

The corporate plan indicated the policy in terms of rural operations, and the policy is today, as the hon. member knows, that where there are natural opportunities, and no one is being fired or dismissed—

An hon. member: No. no!

Mr. Andre: I heard the hon. member during his debate talk about his side of Dalkeith, the so-called bribe as he describes it. Whatever it was, in any event the policy is very clear. The policy is that when the—

Mr. Boudria: I accused no one of committing a crime.

Mr. Andre: Gee, I listened to the hon. member. I did not say he committed a crime.

Mr. Boudria: Point of order. Mr. Speaker, I accused no one of committing a criminal offence. A bribe is an offence under the Criminal—

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I will be allowed an opportunity. It seems the hon. member just cannot—

Mr. Boudria: He didn't withdraw.

Mr. Andre: Now here he is, heckling again. He is not allowing me to get a sentence out before he is heckling again. Will he allow me to speak? I sat here and listened to him. I did not interrupt him. Would he please allow me to proceed?

I have not accused the hon. member of any illegal act, for goodness sakes. What I said, as he knows, is that the policy of the post office in terms of—

Mr. Boudria: He did not.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I may move an amendment to the Standing Orders that once a member has spoken he shall put a gag on his lip physically and allow others to speak and not heckle and interrupt.

Mr. Gauthier: That goes for you too.

Mr. Andre: I don't heckle and interrupt. The hon. member knows that.

Mr. Gauthier: Never.

Mr. Andre: Now here he is, heckling and interrupting me again. And now the New Democrats. Everybody is picking on me, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope hon. members would not pick on the minister, please.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: I said, if the hon. member had kept his mouth closed and listened, I do not accuse the hon. member of any criminal act. That is what I said previous—

An hon. member: Now, Harvie.

Mr. Andre: Ah, come on. Once a rodent, always a rodent, eh?

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the hon. member on a very short point of order, but I think that the hon. minister would probably withdraw that other remark. The hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, if you will review the "blues" the statement has been made by the minister where he said that I had accused someone else of committing a criminal act. The insinuation was not that I had personally committed a criminal act, but that I had made that reference to someone else. I did not make that statement, and I do think that the minister should withdraw any statement that he made with reference to what I had said about someone else committing a criminal act.

• (1240)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We will review the "blues" and then come back if necessary to rectify whatever it is that has to be rectified.

Mr. Andre: He said that I said that he said that somebody might have done something which he says may be a criminal act. He says I should withdraw.

I would like something in return. I would like a commitment from the hon. member that if I withdraw whatever I might have said, and I did not say what he thinks I said, that he will keep his mouth shut, not interrupt me and allow me to continue with the rest of my remarks.

Mr. Boudria: No conditions.

Mr. Andre: No conditions.

Mr. Speaker, let me deal with the substance of his questions, which I thought he wanted answered.

The question of the policy in rural closures is not to fire anybody or dismiss anybody, but when natural opportunities come up, to look at retail postal outlets. Where that has happened in communities of sufficient size, or because of the nature of the business and so on, the reality is that they simply replace the postmaster, postmistress, whoever it may be. The fact is that where the change to a rural post office has been made, it is found to be very popular with the people affected.

On the question of ad mail, the hon. member is wrong to suggest that ad mail is a source of a huge amount of revenue, because that happens to be an area where there is intense competition. The Southam chain and another—I forget the owners of—are also in the business of distributing ad mail door-to-door. If he looks at the annual report, as he claims to have done, he will see that the revenues on that have been falling off, but they never did amount to anything like a significant percentage. The major source of revenues is the first class letter mailers, the billers from banks, businesses and so on. That is the major business revenue.

I again say: "If you are going to run a subsidy, if you are going to run deficits, it is tantamount to the taxpayers of Canada subsidizing those businesses." I do not think that is good economic policy. I do not think that is good social policy. That is why we insist—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to participate in the debate today.

To make it perfectly clear, what we are debating is the report submitted to the House by the Consumer and Corporate Affairs committee that examined the state of the postal system of Canada. While the committee made a number of recommendations, I think it is fair to say that we, in the New Democratic Party, virtually dissociate ourselves from all of those recommendations.

I must say that my hon. friend, the hon. member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake has submitted a minority report. It is entitled Report of the New Democratic Party and the Future of our National Postal System. It is one of the best reports I have ever read in terms of describing what is being done to the postal system. I suspect that if people are interested in copies, they could simply contact the member of Parliament for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake and get a copy of this excellent report.

I have read a lot of reports on the post office and most of them are rather gobbledegook. They try to justify the dismantling of the postal system of Canada. This is an outstanding report, and examines every minute detail of the postal system. Again, I have to compliment the member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake for doing what has to be only described as an outstanding job, as a parliamentarian in his work, particularly serving the people of Canada through the providing of a report that describes our postal system so accurately.

More important, it points out not only the problems associated with it, but I could take some time, which I do not think I will today because it is all available here in writing, a number of very important recommendations, 34 recommendations to be exact as to what could be done to make our postal system one of the best postal systems in the world, and maintain its comprehensive nature across Canada.

I listened with interest to the minister responsible for the postal corporation where in a sense he confirmed that it is the government's support of the postal corporation to dismantle 5,221 rural post offices in Canada. This can only be described as being anti-rural Canada. This is the dismantling of important infrastructure in rural Canada.

This is part of an ongoing program of the federal government to abandon support for those living in small communities and rural areas of the country.

As the minister has indicated, they say the post office has to make a profit and be run like a business like General Motors or the Royal Bank of Canada. I do not know why we have to make that assumption. We want an efficient and effective postal system. Why does it have to be run like a business?

We do not run our Armed Forces like a business and we do not expect our navy to make a profit. We do not expect the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to make a profit. We do not expect our hospitals, our long-term care facilities, our universities, colleges or schools to make profits. We do not expect our army to make profits and we do not expect the ambulance service to make profits. There are a number of areas like these that the taxpayers of Canada expect as a service.

We expect to be protected and therefore we pay taxes to have one of the best police systems in the world, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. We pay taxes and we have a decent health care system across the country. Taxpayers say, not only do we pay taxes but we also pay for the postal service because it is, to a certain extent, user pay.

When I was first elected I think it cost 17 cents for a stamp to mail a letter across the country. Now, not too many years later, it costs 39 cents to mail a letter across the country. That is a tremendous increase in order to cover the cost. The same could be said of postal service for parcels and so on.

The corporation, with the support of the federal government, has denied the opportunity to enter into a whole variety of other services to help it raise money. The postal service in other countries includes many services, such as banking facilities. In very small communities they provide simple and straightforward banking services. They provide all sorts of retail and courier services and so on. In other words, there is a whole range of services that the post office could be providing in terms of revenue raising, but it has had that eliminated.

It seems to me that the government has tried to make it impossible for the postal corporation to succeed, except to dismantle it across the country. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that those Canadians who are most adversely affected are those people living in rural Canada and small-town Canada.

I want to give an example of a situation that took place in my constituency in a community called Westwold, British Columbia. Let me describe Westwold, as I know you are familiar with much of British Columbia and I suspect you even know the community well, Mr. Speaker. It was founded back in the 1880s when the first cattlemen brought their herds into British Columbia from the United States on their way to the gold rush. They found this huge area called Grand Prairie to be a fantastic place to feed animals over the winter season.

In the 1880s the agricultural sector was established and it has been a thriving community since. Today, Westwold is a community that is thriving. The farms are well kept and some of the ranches and farms have been there for generations. As a matter of fact, I know a number of families with four generations still on the land. There is the great grandfather, the grandfather, the father and now the young children. That is rather remarkable.

Westwold is one of the oldest communities in western Canada. It has had a post office for over 100 years, which, for western Canada, is a long time to have a post office in a small rural community. It is very vibrant and very alive. People are proud of their community, proud of their heritage and proud of what they have accomplished in terms of developing farms and ranches and a variety of other businesses, particularly in the forest industry.

Here we have a community with a relatively long history by Canadian standards. Here we have a community that is thriving and we have a community where the people are proud of their community and they are proud of their accomplishments. They are good and hard-working people. They work hard to make a success of their lives and they provide for their families in a way that can only be considered a model in our country. Part of the spirit and life-blood of that community is its post office.

• (1250)

That is where a lot of community work takes place, the exchange of ideas and notices, where people do their post office work at a certain time each day. There is a regular pattern of life in the community that focuses around the post office and has done for over 100 years.

The postmaster had to resign a few days ago. This was a sad day in the community. The postmaster performs many functions other than simply handling and processing mail for the people of the area. The postmaster keeps an eye on senior citizens in the area and when they do not show up for two or three days they ask someone to drop in or perhaps the local RCMP members are asked to check out this person to make sure everything is all right. Often they find out that things are not all right. This service is a lifeline in the community.

Within hours after the postmaster resigned bureaucrats from the post office descended on the place and said "This is our chance. We can now get rid of the post office". It was almost sinister. It was sad and a shock to the community. People could not believe that somewhere out there lurks these people who just wait for the opportunity when someone either passes away or has to leave the post office for family reasons, or for whatever reason, and there is a change of postmaster.

The bureaucrats come and pass around notices in the community stating "There is great news. We are going to close the post office". People could not believe it. They were aware that this was going on elsewhere.

My colleague from The Battlefords—Meadow Lake has raised this issue on many occasions in the House. Post offices in Atlantic Canada, the prairies, Ontario and Quebec, and in northern Canada are closing down almost on a weekly basis. Hundreds of post offices have closed. But until it happens to you one does not really appreciate the effect. You cannot believe that the Government of Canada would actually close a post office that has been open for over 100 years. That is what is happening. It is Canada Post Corporation that is doing this with the support of the federal government. If the federal government did not support this initiative, it would speak out.

This is a rural community based primarily on ranching and forestry and because there have been a number of disastrous fires over the last number of months there are no retail outlets in the community. There is no service station or community store because of these drastic and tragic fires which have taken place. There is no place to have a post office. You cannot consider a local service station, shop or restaurant running a franchise post office on the side, so the alternative is to have none.

A post office serviced the community for decades and now because of this policy there will be no post office. The corporation can say "Cheer up, folks, we are going to put some boxes in your community where you can pick up your mail". That is small comfort for a community that has had a post office for about 120 years. That is despicable, disgraceful and unCanadian. It is anti-rural Canada. It is as if there was a wish to destroy rural Canada. There is always someplace to put a franchise in the cities.

My hon. friend across the way is shaking his head. I can hear him from here.

In rural Canada there is not always an alternative. There is not always a shop to franchise the postal operation. As in this community, there is no way to have a post office. They either have the existing one or none at all.

Do hon. members opposite really want to say that they represent a government that wants to take away the post office from Westwold, British Columbia? I see the Conservatives nodding their head that yes, this is their policy. This is what they support. We, in the New Democratic Party do not support this system. We feel that the taxpayers of Canada, the people who work hard and pay taxes, buy stamps and provide all the necessary costs, deserve to have small post offices.

Mr. Speaker, you should see this post office. This is not a fancy post office with big pillars. It is a little small box. It is a very small place packed full of boxes. It is very crowded and inconvenient for the postmaster. It is a very modest, humble post office. The government is saying "You cannot even have that kind of post office". It is a disgrace. It is unCanadian.

Ms. Mitchell: Right, absolutely.

Mr. Riis: This is not what this country is built on.

The government is saying that it does not have confidence in Westwold, British Columbia.

It does not appreciate what the people who have lived on that land since the 1880s and have developed that community have done for the country. The one federal government installation that provides support for that community is going to be ripped out by this government.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is like ripping out your heart. It is like ripping a vital organ out of your body.

An hon. member: They want postal services!

Mr. Riis: Listen, he can't understand very well what I am saying, Mr. Speaker. There is a goat or something over there bleating, saying that they want postal services. I am telling you they cannot have postal services because there are no alternatives other than a post office. I know that is a hard concept for the member opposite on the Conservative benches to understand, and I respect that. But I will explain it to him later—as a matter of fact I will put it in writing if it will make it any easier for him to comprehend.

There is something sinister going on in this country. When I read in the report that the government intends to close down over 5,220 rural post offices, I wonder what kind of government would close down every single rural post office in Canada if it had any respect for the people who built this country.

The people who built this country are from rural Canada by and large. We have had a rural-based economy for years. They are the ones who struggle hard. They are the ones who work 18 hours a day and continue to do so. They are the ones who are being challenged by high interest rates and the spectre of a GST and the dismantling of a whole number of services. Now the final death blow to the community, the final spike is being driven into the heart of Westwold, British Columbia, and the people of Westwold, with the government saying it is going to rip out their post office.

Mr. Speaker, it is a despicable act by an uncaring, arrogant government. That is the only way to describe it. I hate to do so because I know the hon. members across the way are not like that. As individuals they are wonderful people, but when they get together in a group something goes wrong. Their minds close off, or they blank out in terms of logic and rationale. There is something about a group of Conservatives that makes me shudder when they get together because this is what they come up with, a lovely plan to dismantle a rural postal system.

According to this report, the government is going to remove support for a number of Canadian publications. In other words, one of the ways that the federal government can encourage a Canadian identity is to promote and support Canadian publications, such as B.C. Beef which is a very important communication tool for the livestock industry in British Columbia. We struggled and got a postal subsidy so that they could actually circulate their publication. Ranchers and cattlemen read it regularly and learn what is going on in the industry. They are up-dated, educated, and informed of the state-of-the-art machinery and technologies involved.

That is likely going to go now because the government is saying it can no longer afford to support Canadian publications like this anymore, it cannot afford to encourage the development of Canadian culture and communication. Publications like B.C. Beef are probably on the chopping block as a result of the government's initiative to make money.

When the government says it has decided to change everything and will have our Armed Forces make money then I will understand. But I see my time is quickly running to a close so I would like to move an amendment to the concurrence motion. I move:

That the second report be not now concurred in but that it be recommitted to the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs with instruction that they have the power to amend the same so as to recommend that Canada Post remain a crown corporation and that a commission be appointed with the powers to oversee Canada Post.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[Translation]

TRIBUTE TO JEAN FONTAINE

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, today I wish to pay tribute to Jean Fontaine who on April 24 was awarded the Prix Robert Cliche by the Corporation du Salon du livre du Québec after a unanimous vote by the jury, as part of the Festival national du livre, for his novel: Les lièvres de Saint-Giron.

In addition to being a writer, Jean Fontaine also works as a cameraman for Radio-Québec in Val d'Or. Incidentally, he was born in Rouyn-Noranda in 1958.

His book, to which the author referred somewhat humorously as an allegoric adventure story, has an unusual history. It was submitted to several publishers, including Éditions Quinze where it was initially turned down but later published. His novel also provided the basis for a scenario for a feature film in 1981 and for a dissertation submitted towards a Master's in literature at the UQAM in 1983.

Mr. Speaker, we congratulate the winner of the Twelfth Prix Robert Cliche for young Quebec writers and wish him every success with his current activities.

* * *

[English]

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario agri-food industry is under attack while the government sits idly by.

It has been confirmed that a large Toronto based vegetable oil refinery has purchased 10 million pounds of subsidized soy oil from Spain. Spain imports soybeans from Brazil and the United States, crushes them, then exports the oil at a subsidized rate to protect its olive oil industry.

In contrast, the Canadian government is refusing to protect the soybean producers by allowing unfairly subsidized oil to be dumped in Canada. This dumping was brought to the attention of the Canadian government by the grains and oil seeds critic and the Ontario soybean producers over two weeks ago, and raised in the House at the first possible opportunity, but the ministers did not respond.

In my riding, as in ridings across Ontario, this will have drastic effects on the agri-food industry. If gone unchecked, it could cost the Ontario industry $8.5 million.

I call upon the government to act immediately by countervail tariff or other anti-dumping measures at its disposal to protect this valuable Canadian industry.

* * *

NATIONAL BOOK FESTIVAL

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Mr. Speaker, this week is the Canada Council's 1990 National Book Festival. For the twelfth consecutive year there will be a national celebration of Canadian books and authors. More than 500 Canadian authors will participate in projects planned for 442 cities, towns and communities throughout the country.

The theme of this year's festival is "Book an Adventure". The activities planned are as diverse as the country itself. This year there will be public readings of prose, poetry and drama, writing workshops, instant book productions and many film festivals based on Canadian works.

I invite all Canadians to participate in this year's activities, and to take the time to read to our children and to help those who have reading problems. The ability to read is a skill that we should not take for granted.

* * *

BANKING

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Conservative government gave the giant U.S. corporation, American Express, the right to go ahead and establish itself as a bank in Canada, and essentially do the kind of business that our own Canadian banks are, by the laws of Canada, not allowed to do.

Further, this Conservative government has given the American Express Company bank status that the company is not even entitled to in the United States, because the business that AMEX conducts is not considered appropriate to a bank in that country either.

Even if the government proceeds with the changes in the financial regulations, the head start it has given this American company is unconscionable. Is the selling out of Canadian interests the price this government is willing to pay for the support that AMEX has given it in terms of the free trade deal?

I find it appalling that this government has chosen to ignore the laws and the interests of Canada.

* * *

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, in today's highly technological world, individual Canadians, industry and governments have to rethink the commitment presently being made to research and development in this country.

This government is instituting many economic reforms to make Canadian goods more competitive in the international marketplace. Not only is this an important step, it is essential. But we must not stop there.

To ensure the prosperity of future generations of Canadians, we must devote more effort to research and development, not only through government but through industry and universities as well.

In recognition of this fact, the government has established the Centres of Excellence Program, which promotes excellence in science and co-operation between these three institutions of our society.

This innovative program encourages research relevant to industrial competitiveness, working toward making Canada a strong player in the international marketplace. We can compete.

* * *

CROATIAN ELECTION

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, this weekend members of the House were privileged to have been invited to monitor the first democratic elections held in the Republic of Croatia in more than 40 years. The results mirrored those of last month in the neighbouring Republic of Slovenia in a clear repudiation of the Communist party and all that it has represented.

It was heartening to observe this extremely emotional event and to witness the democratic zeal and excitement brought about by this unique opportunity. Croatians take their democratic responsibility very seriously and the rejection of the iron fist of the Communist party, after a history of repression, was an honest expression of a people who have suffered greatly.

As my colleagues and I watched the political process unfold, we were acutely aware that history was in the making and that once the floodgates of democracy have been opened, it will be difficult to retreat from the course of ongoing reform.

I hope that all members of the House will join me in congratulating the Croatian people and welcoming them as the newest member of the international democratic family.

CFB SUMMERSIDE

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, today, April 26, we will observe the first anniversary of the most infamous budget leak in Canadian history. For the people of P.E.I. the most vivid recollection of that budget leak was the announcement of the closure of CFB Summerside.

The town of Summerside, the riding of Egmont and the province of P.E.I. were in shock. The second largest employer on the Island was to close. Twenty-six hundred jobs would disappear. A $50 million payroll would be lost.

The people of Summerside and area gathered their forces to fight the closure, to fight for the life of their town. The Friends of CFB Summerside was set up. A Mother's Day march and a Caravan of Hope to Ottawa were organized. A federal-provincial task force was established. A comparable federal presence was promised. A private consulting firm was hired, but the report is still top secret. We are still waiting for the announcement.

One of the worst situations is the plight of the civilian workers. Some are being uprooted from their homes. Some are getting lay-off notices and are facing unemployment in a depressed area.

The solution is obvious. Leave 413 Search and Rescue Squadron where it is. Summerside is the best location. P.E.I. would have a military presence, it would save lives and it would save the government money.

* * *

• (1410)

[Translation]

NATIONAL VOLUNTEER WEEK

Mr. Jean-Pierre Hogue (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, this is National Volunteer Week, an opportunity for all Canadians to pay tribute to so many of their fellow citizens who work for the well-being of their community.

Individually or as members of a group, about 13 million Canadians have made volunteer work part of their lives. Without them, many programs and agencies would no longer exist. Many of these organizations have made it their aim to remedy the inequities and injustice in our society.

Through volunteer work, all Canadians have a chance to play an active role in their community. Volunteer work and the personal commitment it represents are firmly anchored in the democratic principles on which Canada was founded. In fact, this active personal commitment is considered to be one of our basic human rights.

Without the contribution of its volunteers, Canada would not be as we know it today. The generosity of these Canadians is therefore an important part of our national identity.

Today, I urge you to join me in congratulating all volunteers and to thank them for the invaluable contribution they are making to our society.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[English]

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, April 23, this House voted in favour of my private member's motion calling upon the government to reinstate funding for the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety.

Although the government had planned to remove all funding for the centre by next year, even Conservative members opposite voted in favour of reinstating its funding, clearly signalling their disapproval of the government's privatization plans.

For ten years the CCOHS has provided Canadians with cost-free, impartial and unbiased information on occupational health and safety matters. Under privatization the centre would concentrate its efforts on the sale of products as opposed to the delivery of vital services.

In an open letter delivered to the Minister of Labour yesterday, I stressed that, in light of all-party support of the motion, the minister is now obligated to reinstate full funding for the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety.

This place has spoken. Canadian workers anxiously await the minister's reply.

S. O. 31

[Translation]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun—Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, the federal government has admitted that certain groups of the labour force in the urban area of Montreal have major economic problems. The south west sector of Montreal Island is represented by a committee of volunteers who have joined forces to invite all three levels of government—municipal, provincial and federal—to form a partnership and co-ordinate the implementation of their various economic programs.

In this connection, the Minister of State for Employment, the Hon. Monique Vézina, and the Minister of Labour, the Hon. Jean Corbeil, announced on April 9 that $1.2 million had been set aside for the current year as financial support for the harmonization committee of the City of Montreal and the economic and community development corporations (CDEC).

The partnership concept promoted by the forum on employment was reflected Employment and Immigration's participation in the Montreal action plan for neighbourhood economic development.

Thanks to this concept, the development committee will be able to adjust our employment and training programs to the specific and pressing needs of the community.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-21 provides for a similar, dynamic use of unemployment insurance funds. Bill C-21 would let us do more to meet labour force needs. The recent announcement by the Minister of State for Employment reflects our desire and our ability to help workers overcome their difficulties by ensuring that they will be able to obtain worthwhile and permanent employment.

* * *

[English]

LAW OF THE SEA

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister likes to speak of the need for international co-operation to solve global problems. If he wishes to be taken seriously he should see to it that the Law of the Sea is ratified to honour Canada's commitment in 1982. Because of the Prime Minister's lack of leadership, Canada has not done so.

The Law of the Sea, intended to serve humanity in managing the oceans, is unenforceable because an insufficient number of nations have ratified it.

When will the Prime Minister cross the bridge between rhetoric and action? If he is to be taken seriously on environmental issues, Canada should ratify the Law of the Sea, but the political will, alas, seems to be missing.

* * *

TRADE

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we were reminded of just how effective the free trade agreement has been for Canada. It was another victory for the United States, this time on the issue of lobster exports.

Atlantic Canadians have heard repeatedly that the Conservative government intends to defend the interests of our lobster fishermen. The Minister for International Trade described U.S. action against Canadian lobsters as trade protectionism at its rankest. The Prime Minister told the House that the full weight and influence of the Canadian government would be brought to bear on the U.S. Congress and administration in an attempt to settle this very serious problem, in the interests of our fishermen.

The consequences of the U.S. action are estimated to cost the Canadian lobster industry up to $127 million over the next three years.

It appears that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has already given in, indicating in a briefing book that discussions are now under way with industry on how best to implement the changes made necessary by this American government action. The final decision will not be made until May 15, yet the federal Department of Fisheries has conceded defeat already.

Whose side is the government really on?

* * *

VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, last Saturday I had the pleasure of attending the ninth annual Volunteer Recognition Banquet. In attendance were some 200 people, representing over 4,000 volunteers from throughout the communities of Abbotsford, Matsqui and Clearbrook. The energy and good will that filled the Ag-Rec building of the Central Fraser Valley Exhibition Park was phenomenal.

It has been said that volunteers are the heroes of our society and I can tell you that it is a great feeling to spend an evening with 200 heroes.

The Matsqui Abbotsford Recreational Committee awarded three individuals—Fred Phillips, Frank Bogle and John Whittenburg—with commemorative plaques in appreciation of their exemplary commitment. Commitment is what volunteering is all about, commitment to the sense of community. It makes me proud to live in a community that is so well served.

To the thousands who contribute selflessly as volunteers, thank you and congratulations.

* * *

STANDING COMMITTEE ON ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, on April 11, at a public meeting before witnesses, the Aboriginal Affairs Committee, without a dissenting vote, invited Georges Erasmus to attend committee meetings to question ministers on the budget Estimates affecting native people. At this meeting a minority of government members were present.

Yesterday, the committee met again, on short notice in camera, to discuss committee business. This time, all the Tories attended but there were no Liberals. As a result, Tory members were able to push through two resolutions. One limited the ability of committee members to present motions without notice and the second disinvited the National Chief of the AFN to assist the committee in questioning the ministers on Estimates.

It is time the Liberals and Tories attach some priority to attendance at meetings of the Aboriginal Affairs Standing Committee. How can the committee retain any credibility if it reverses its decisions from one meeting to the next, based on whether Liberal or Tory members are interested enough to attend?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Canadian Manufacturers' Association issued a report which stated that the government's policies on interest rates and the dollar have already placed our manufacturing sector in a recession and that these policies could "permanently damage the manufacturing sector".

Is the minister going to persist in this high interest rate, high dollar policy which the Canadian Manufacturers' Association has said would permanently damage the manufacturing sector of the country? Why does he want to do permanent damage to a sector that is the foundation in many ways of the entire Canadian economy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on three separate days I have answered a series of questions on this same topic.

Mrs. Gaffney: We never got an answer.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says that I have not given an answer. I think she will read in Hansard that I have answered as precisely and as fully as I can. I am going to give another very precise answer and I would encourage her to listen carefully to it.

In the early part of 1989, we had business credit growth in the country somewhere between 9 and 10 per cent. In the early part of this year, business credit growth is in the 11 per cent to 11.3 per cent range. In consumer credit growth, in the early part of the year, we were at 14.5 per cent. It is down in the 11.5 to 12.5 per cent range in the most recent figures, but the economy is growing at a rate of 7 per cent.

By either of these measures, bank credit growth has been growing more quickly than the economy has been growing, and that is a prescription for further inflation unless we can slow down that credit growth. The best way that we know to slow down that credit growth is to have an interest rate policy which puts interest rates higher, makes that credit more expensive, and, therefore, will slow down the credit growth. That will solve the problem of inflation, which is the thing that we are most concerned about, and which is what a government in the 1970s did not take seriously enough. That led us to the problems of the very serious recession in 1981–82. Surely, the hon. member remembers those problems.

• (1420)

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Canadians would like an answer to the conclusions and concerns of the Canadian Manufacturer's Association, as expressed in a report which came out only yesterday afternoon. With respect to the point the minister is trying to make, the association states:

> The objective of monetary policy is to permit economic growth with reasonable price stability. We believe the balance has shifted excessively to price stability at the cost of undermining economic growth and competitiveness.

Is the minister now going to listen to the Canadian Manufacturer's Association on this, or is he going to persist in policies which drive manufacturing and jobs out of the country? If so, how can he follow a policy which is so damaging to the Canadian economy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I listen to this new-found concern of the Liberal Party for the manufacturing sector of the country.

Mr. Peterson: Nonsense. We've been there all along.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The member for Willowdale suddenly wakes up.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister is responding, apparently, to a new-found concern. I am sure all hon. members would like him to continue his answer.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, thank you for drawing me back to the question.

The question is: What are we doing for the manufacturing community in the country? We are removing the manufacturer's sales tax which will lower the cost of doing business for the manufacturers in the country.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It will make them more competitive in international markets and will make it better for them to be able to sell their products on international markets. What do we hear from the Liberal Party of Canada? It says, "Scrap the GST, go back to the manufacturer's sales tax."

You cannot have it both ways. You cannot, on the one hand, talk about saving the manufacturing sector from the high interest rates and, on the other hand, increase the cost of doing business for the manufacturing community by leaving the manufacturer's sales tax in place.

Canadians understand when a political party is talking out of both sides of its mouth and that is what the Liberal Party of Canada is doing.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Canadians' understanding of this government is reflected in the polls.

An hon. member: Right on.

An hon. member: Exactly.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Obviously, the government will not go up in the polls with that kind of remark.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Manufacturers Association also said, and I quote: Manufacturers are being beaten with the blunt instrument of monetary policy for inflationary problems for which they are not responsible. Why is the minister refusing to listen to Canadian manufacturers who create so many jobs? And when will the minister stop harassing them and stop driving companies and jobs out of the country?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said on Tuesday of this week, I take no comfort at all in what is happening to some of the companies that are finding it tough to do business today. But I know what the alternative is. The alternative is an increase in inflationary pressures which will lead to higher interest rates on a more permanent basis and that will be far, far more damaging to the manufacturing sector of the country than the policies that we are following today.

If we want to see proof of that, we need only go back ten years to find out what happened when the Liberal government—the government that my hon. friend supported—ignored the problems of inflation. It led to a blow-off in the inflation rate of 13 per cent in 1981. That led to the very high levels of interest rates in 1981 and 1982 and the high levels of unemployment that were caused by that. That is what we are trying to avoid.

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, the minister has to understand that representatives from every sector of our economy are now asking that interest rates be reduced and that the value of the Canadian dollar be allowed to fall.

Is the Minister of Finance going to listen to business, labour, and consumers, or is there a part of the free trade deal that requires the Canadian Government to keep the value of the Canadian dollar above 80 cents and is that, in fact, why it will not lower interest rates?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have had this red herring time and time again. If the hon. member understood how financial markets work, how interest rate markets work, how the Canadian dollar market works, he would never ask that question. He would know that if a commitment of that sort were given it could not be fulfilled.

[Translation]

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, the Governor of the Bank of Canada is clearly obsessed with zero inflation, and now the government is supporting that obsession. I want to ask the Minister of Finance today, since he is responsible for Canada's monetary policy, whether, considering demands across this country from all sectors of our economy, he is prepared to see Canadian interest rates and the value of the Canadian dollar go down. The time has come to listen to Canadians. The minister did not listen to them during the GST debate. Will he now listen to what they have to say about interest rates?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing that the government and I, as a minister, can say we have done, it is that we have listened very carefully. We have consulted broadly about all the ranges of economic policies that we have put in place over the last five and a half years. That is a matter of fact; that is a matter of the record. It is not a matter of judgment on the part of anyone.

We have talked to a wide range of people, during the course of the last few months and the last few years, on the questions of economic policy, be it it is inflation, monetary policy, or fiscal policy. We listened and we have taken all that into account in the decisions that we have taken as a government.

My hon. friend talked about an obsession. Our obsession is to have good, non-inflationary, sustainable growth over an extended period of time. We had a good period of that in the latter part of the 1980s, from 1984 through to 1989. We are going through a rough period now, but our commitment is to get back on that track of sustainable, non-inflationary growth, and I believe that if we continue these policies we will be able to do so in the very near future.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The discount rate of the Bank of Canada today went up for the twenty-first time since 1988. The Canadian Manufacturer's Association is stressing that the manufacturing sector across the country is being devastated by these interest rates.

I want to quote another economic observer who put things as follows:

> The inflation rate is between 5 per cent and 6 per cent. The current interest rate at 13 per cent or 14 per cent is simply too high."

Does the minister accept this clear judgment, and will he act to bring these rates down now?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that the answers that I gave earlier this week in the House, as well as those I have given today, are a very clear response to that question.

We have indicated very clearly our concern about inflationary pressures. We are determined to get those inflationary pressures down. When they do come down, interest rates will come down. That is very clear. That is a clear statement of this government's policy.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Of course, Mr. Speaker, that quote was the hon. Minister of Finance, himself, when he was in opposition.

• (1430)

I ask the minister if what was right then is not right now. If what was right at that time as an analysis that those interest rates were too high at 13 to 14 per cent, with an inflation rate of 5 to 6 per cent, and if that was wrong then to keep those rates so high in December 1982, according to Michael Wilson, why is it suddenly right now, according to the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me say to my hon. friend that I would like him to show me that precise quote. I would like to see that precise quote, but I will respond to the question, in any event.

The statements that I was making in 1981–82 were presenting an essential position that decisions that had been taken in the 1970s and the early part of the 1980s led to the problems that we were facing at that time. That is exactly what I am saying today. Mistakes were made then. Surely my hon. friend would like to learn from those mistakes today and avoid the problems of the 20 to 25 per cent interest rates and the 13 plus per cent unemployment that spread across the country after that. This is the problem that we are facing. We want to avoid seeing that repeated.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I must say I am entranced. I am interested in discovering which Michael Wilson was mistaken. Was it the Michael Wilson of 1982 or the Minister of Finance of 1990?

In view of the precise conditions being exactly the same as the minister stated in 1982, is he not in fact doing a complete flip-flop on the position which he took in the past with reference to interest rates, and does he not recognize that this country requires, for the sake of consistency, that he bring these interest rates down now?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I note that my hon. friend has not given me a precise quote and he has not sent that quote over to me. I again ask him to give me that precise quote and then we will talk to that. What I will say is that the Mike Wilson of 1981, the Mike Wilson of 1979 when I came to this House, and the Mike Wilson of 1990 is exactly the same person.

* * *

AMERICAN EXPRESS

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. How can the minister tell this House that American Express has not received a special deal when the government has broken five out of its own nine guidelines?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have had frequent opportunities to explain to the hon. member, here and in committee, why this decision was taken and why it was such a good decision.

Here we have an organization, one of the world's largest financial service institutions, that is already operating here. They are here today and they were here yesterday, unregulated, doing exactly what they will be doing tomorrow, providing competition. We wanted to bring them in line with others and allow them to compete within the Bank Act.

I am fully satisfied that this is a good decision and this will not prevent us from making sure that good, sound, vibrant national institutions develop in this country. But we must bring in more competition for consumers.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the American Express bank licence is fraught with suspicion. We have the flaunting of our guidelines. We have the role of three American Express directors, James Robinson, Ross Johnson and David Culver, all leaders of the pro-free trade lobby during the last election. We have the last minute Order-in-Council sneaked through by this government on November 21, 1988, election day. Now we have the finance minister's broken promise that Canadians would see their new financial legislation before this licence would be issued.

There are many unanswered questions. Will the government agree to an independent judicial inquiry so that all the facts regarding this very special deal for a special friend can be made public?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think I will give up hope of ever convincing the hon. member that he is wrong, but he is.

American Express first approached this government in mid-1985. They started discussing it seriously in 1986, years before the free trade agreement came into place. We had very serious discussions with them because we wanted them to be brought in within the Bank Act. We asked them to move out of certain areas. We looked at the precedent created by the Liberal government when it was in power, giving authority to the Midland Bank and giving to the German Deutsch Bank the right to have links with Mercedes. We looked at that very seriously and we convinced ourselves that we could accept them, and we should accept them for the good functioning of our institutions having more competition.

As I said, this is a publicly traded, widely owned, well capitalized institution that has given us all the guarantees we need to proceed with the licence.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, my question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and it concerns a very serious and even tragic matter.

As the minister will know, the proud people of the Mohawk community of Akwesasne in my riding are virtually hostages in their own community as a result of disputes between pro and anti-gambling natives on the U.S. side of this reserve.

Since the community straddles the Canada-U.S. border, has the minister contacted or will he contact the Secretary of State of the United States, Mr. James Baker, and ask for his immediate assistance so that both Washington and Albany can get involved and take their responsibility in this very important issue.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell for a very seriously motivated question about a series of incidents which led to a very unfortunate conflict on Monday and Tuesday of this week in the Akwesasne Mohawk community.

There have been extensive discussions among government officials, federally and provincially, over the past day or more with a view to calming and restoring order in the community of Akwesasne, particularly the St. Regis community on the Canadian side of the border.

As part of that effort, ministers have been involved and contacts have been made with the solicitors general of Quebec and Ontario and important international initiatives have also been taken.

Our embassy in Washington this morning approached the United States State Department to underline the Canadian government's concern about the escalating violence on the reserve, to express concern about the effectiveness of policing action on the U.S. part of the reserve in order to curb that violence, and our officials made it clear that this issue requires the full co-operation of law enforcement agencies on both sides of the border.

The State Department, in turn, assured Canada that they were aware of the seriousness of the situation and have initiated contacts with the New York State Governor's office and the Bureau of Indian Affairs with a view to taking action. The State Department concluded by indicating that they would be in contact with our embassy as soon as possible to report on specific further actions to be taken by U.S. enforcement agencies on their side of the border.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's response. Unfortunately, yesterday Major Robert Leu of the New York State Police is quoted as having said that his police would not intervene for the following reason: "We are viewing it as an internal matter".

I am sure that I speak for both my colleague for Beauharnois—Salaberry and myself when I say that this kind of reaction on the part of U.S. authorities is most inappropriate when the lives of both American and Canadian citizens are at stake.

• (1440)

Given that 2,000 people are landlocked in St. Regis, 26 cars have been burned, the cultural centre was burned, four and a half hours of gunfire took place the night before last, and today I have just learned from speaking to the chief that one person is reported missing, will the minister again ensure that not only the authorities in Washington co-operate but that we get specific action from Albany, particularly in the area of the State Troopers?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member and all members of this House would want to know that we also have initiated actions on the Canadian side. I have already answered the question regarding representation to the U.S. State Department, state authorities and officials and we expect a response from them very, very shortly.

As well, I personally met with Chief Mike Mitchell, Grand Chief of the Mohawk Council of Akwesasne, and leaders of the tricouncils last night here in Ottawa. I have been on the phone to Chief Mitchell again today.

As a result of our intervention with the Attorney General for Ontario, OPP police patrols were instituted on Cornwall Island last evening. As a result of that, I am told, the evening passed in a very peaceful and orderly fashion and that as of this moment peace has been restored.

We hope to have further information to report as it becomes available.

* * *

WOMEN'S CENTRES

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Recently, in Vancouver the Meralomas Rugby Club hosted something they call "hard rock night" a so-called party. At this event, they put on a skit of the Montreal massacre with a floor plan of the Ecole Polytechnique with drawings to show where the young women had died. Toy guns were passed around at this party. A video was shown of a Chinese person, his pockets stuffed full of money, going around buying up Vancouver real estate and at the end the Chinese person was hanged. This is something—

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment. As the hon. member knows, I come from Vancouver and played many games of rugby against that particular club, but that is not why I am rising. The reason I am rising is that I cannot see the relevance of the question to anything that has to do with administration of government. I wish the hon. member would put her question very clearly and perhaps we could then see what it is.

Ms. Black: Mr. Speaker, this government has cut back funding to women's programs—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. I would ask the hon. member to put her question.

Ms. Black: Will the government reinstitute the funding that has been cut to women's programs and to multiculturalism over the past two years so that the very badly needed education in this whole area in Canada will be addressed?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely outrageous. The program that has been reduced in my ministry does not—and I repeat—does not and has never funded activities which provide direct social and health services to the public.

There was a specific program that was used for information, for advocacy, for education. That program now has less money. That is recognized. Core funding, as a result, was taken away from the women's centres.

I have had some excellent meetings with women across the country. We have been trying to look creatively on how we both, in partnership, and certainly we are looking for ways of diversification as well, can guarantee their continued existence. That process should be allowed to continue right now.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, that is my point exactly. This funding was meant for education to address these very issues. This has happened not only in Vancouver, it has happened at Queen's, it has happened in Calgary, it has happened in the Maritimes and the answer from these people is that women do not have a sense of humour. They need the education. That is what the women's program funding is meant to do, provide the education. Reinstate it. Reinstate the funding for educational purposes now.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, we indeed had some excellent meetings in the last few weeks with representatives of women's centres from coast to coast. We indicated quite clearly that if they had any creative ideas that I would be prepared to examine them, which is being done, and I will get back to them as soon as we have had an opportunity to review carefully what they are asking me to look at.

* * *

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun—Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, current economic restructuring in Montreal is causing serious problems for workers in that city. My question is directed to the Minister of Employment. What does the minister propose to do to solve the problem of cyclical unemployment and manpower adjustment on Montreal Island?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, our government is aware of the serious problems being experienced by a number of Montreal workers. We are now considering measures to help these communities, and that is the spirit in which we, as a government, tabled the Canadian Jobs Strategy and Bill C-21, which will help us set up community development programs and improve training. Allow me to repeat what I said yesterday and urge our friends in the other place to ensure that Bill C-21 is passed as soon as possible.

* * *

TRADE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. During the free-trade debate, fishermen had been given the assurance that the bi-national panel would protect Canadian interests. However, the first decision on salmon and herring went against Canadian fishermen. The second decision on lobster seems to go against them as well. The Americans are going to win again! It is now 2-0 for the U.S.

Why is Canada unable to enforce its conservation standards, as in the herring and salmon case, while the Americans, who are using conservation as an excuse to control the lobster market, have won their case? What is going on?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the first panel report under Chapter 18 on B.C. salmon and herring led to a settlement of that issue which was in the interests of Canada, as well as being in the interests of the United States and it was certainly not a victory for either side.

With respect to the lobster question, there is no report yet. There was an interim report which was given to the parties on a confidential basis under the terms of the FTA, so that they can make further submissions to the panel before the panel reaches it final conclusions.

We will know on May 15, what the final conclusions are of the majority.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Last September, the Prime Minister promised to intervene to prevent Americans from taking this kind of action. Unfortunately, the Prime Minister was unsuccessful. Does the government have a support plan for our lobster fishermen who stand to lose more than $30 million because of the free trade panel's negative decision and also, of course, because of the Prime Minister's failure to turn the situation around? Has something been planned for these fishermen?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there is no report of this particular panel as yet. Even anticipating the report that might be made, it is quite clear that opinion in the lobster trade is certainly divided on this issue and that there are several schools of thought on the issue.

I have no doubt that if lobster fishermen require assistance because of any untoward events that occur with respect to them, that will receive careful consideration, but there is no indication of that at the moment.

* * *

TRANSPORT

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

One thing that both sides of this House can agree on is that there is a shortage of air traffic controllers in Canada, particularly at Pearson Airport. We may dispute how many we are short, but we all know that there is an acute shortage.

Considering this shortage and the hours of overtime that each controller must put in to keep the system at Pearson working, how can the department reduce the number of air traffic controllers by considering overtime cuts at Pearson this year by $1.9 million?

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon.

member for his very timely question. Yes, while there is concern among the air traffic controllers and their ability to handle the traffic, every effort is being made to make sure that safety is not compromised.

• (1450)

The hon. member will recall a year ago that, when there was a concern that there was too much traffic going in and out of Pearson, a limit was put on the number of planes that could go in and out of Pearson to make sure that the traffic controllers that were on staff would be able to adequately handle everything in a safe environment.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary, just let me read from the protected memo: "The first thing to go will be all project work, meetings, refresher development training. This will not be nearly enough to meet the amount that is going to be cut: the speciality shifts, the tower, the north, south, east and west specialty shifts. Naturally, levels at Pearson will drop, as will probably the cap at Pearson".

It just seems that we cannot afford any more of this nonsense going on at Pearson. We have to take hold of this airport and find out what is going on with the security, the air traffic flow and so on. What is happening at Pearson?

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I can assure the hon. member that nothing is being compromised with regards to safety at Pearson International Airport and nothing will be compromised.

I can certainly appreciate the member's concern with the ability of being able to handle the traffic that is demanded at Pearson. I can assure him that the traffic control system of training is filled to its capacity and every effort is being made to entice more traffic controllers into the system so we can make sure we fill the needs as they become available.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

As the minister knows, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association has asked the government to reinstate the wage and price controls that the Liberals introduced in 1982.

Will the Minister of Finance, who is obviously following the high interest rate policies of the Liberals, guarantee to hundreds of thousands of Canadians that they will not have their wages rolled back or limited by further government action?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have made it quite clear that I do not believe in wage and price controls. I do not think that they work.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the minister may say he does not believe in them, but what we need is a guarantee that he will not do exactly as he said in the past. He said he was against high interest rates, but now he has high interest rates.

What is he going to do in the future to make sure that Canadian workers are not going to be forced into a regime of wage controls?

He said he was against high interest rates. We have high interest rates now. He says he is against wage and price controls. Are we going to have wage and price controls in the future?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my criticism of the previous policies of the Liberal government have been because they followed from very inappropriate policies that disregarded the seriousness of inflation and that led to the high interest rates that came about in 1981–1982.

That is the sort of policy that we are trying to avoid today, by trying to stop inflation now when it is 5.5 per cent and not let it run to 13.5 per cent. When it goes as high as 13.5 per cent, you are bound to have a blow-off like we had in 1981 and the resultant disaster in the economy and the high interest rates that led to that. That is what we are trying to avoid right now.

Mr. Pat Sobeski (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

What are the consequences of the Senate's protracted delay in passing the income tax changes arising from the April, 1989 budget contained in Bill C-28, which included a tax on large corporations?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is a very timely question. The 1989 budget and the large corporations tax were a very important part of the policies that we have been following to get the deficit down and to put a better balance between the interest rate policy and the budgetary policy.

What is happening as a result of the delay of Bill C-28 in the Senate is that corporations are not paying on time their large corporations tax. The result is that about $200 million worth of revenues that we could have put into the last fiscal year have gone uncollected. That is the problem when the Senate takes the actions that it has to delay these bills.

This action by the Senate, I believe, is a sharp departure from Canadian constitutional practice. I do not think that there have been times in the past when there have been money and tax bills such as this delayed for as long a period of time as they have. It is important for us to realize the significance of this and the importance of having the Senate blocking a measure that has been put in place by a properly elected government.

* * *

[Translation]

LINGUISTIC MINORITIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. I want to get back to the federal-provincial agreement signed by Saskatchewan and Canada on establishing a system under which the French minority in this province would control and manage its own schools, which would be a first for this province.

I would like to know, considering the fact that the province has backtracked, put the plans on the backburner, in fact, has put the whole project on hold, whether the secretary of State will give the House his guarantee that all monies, namely the $26 million to be provided over a ten-year period, will be withheld and not given to the province until it has developed a program with a firm commitment and written guarantees for the Government of Canada that it will proceed as soon as possible.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): You are no doubt aware of our very firm commitment, having read or having heard what was said by the Prime Minister who indicated he was disappointed that the government of Saskatchewan had not found a way to introduce legislation during the current session.

I also had a discussion with the minister, Mr. Meiklejohn, who told me about the reasons for the delay. I am sure you also read what was said by the Commmission nationale des parents francophones. Mr. Poirier says he is very pleased with Mr. Mulroney's gesture. I quote: "By offering Saskatchewan his government's co-operation, the Prime Minister of Canada has shown the kind of leadership all Francophones outside Quebec will appreciate".

We will follow further developments very carefully.

[English]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I will put the question in English. I am asking the minister if he will not, today, give us the assurance that he will not spend any of that money until Saskatchewan has given a firm commitment, in writing, to Canada, that they will proceed. That is a simple question. I do not want to know about all the other correspondence they have exchanged. I want to have the assurance that that money is there for that purpose, nothing else.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, there is a 10-year agreement between Canada and Saskatchewan. It calls for the disbursement of funds as those expenses are made.

Mr. Gauthier: We know that. Yes or no?

Mr. Weiner: Obviously, certain processes are ongoing. We have the assurance and the firm commitment of the Government of Saskatchewan that they are going to be proceeding within the briefest delay possible. Obviously, work will continue, and we will continue to meet our part of the commitment.

There is an agreement in place. We expect to make sure that that agreement is carried forward.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture. Almost a month ago, the minister announced a special funding for farmers facing financial crisis this spring. So far, not one dollar has been paid because provinces have not been able to come up with their share of the money.

This morning, the Associate Minister of Agriculture for Saskatchewan, Mr. Harold Martens, said: "We are not in a position where we can back down. The other two Prairie provinces feel the same way and producers are saying we're right in what we're doing".

In view of the stalemate, can the Deputy Prime Minister say how and when the money is going to be paid to these farmers facing serious financial crisis with seeding about to begin?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed very encouraged by the fact that the government of Ontario, the Minister of Agriculture specifically, has made a commitment to work with us in terms of the program that was announced. It is encouraging to note that some $48 million was allocated to farmers to help offset the income deficiency of this particular year. Those discussions are ongoing at the present time between our officials to ensure that that program is executed.

• (1500)

The Government of Saskatchewan has to provide an interest rate relief program which will be eligible for matching funds. The Government of Manitoba is, I understand, prepared to do something in a similar vein. I will be meeting with the minister of agriculture and the provincial treasurer on Sunday to talk about details.

The Government of Alberta has announced a program specifically designed to alleviate the situation in the Peace River district. That program too will qualify for matching federal funds. Progress is being made, and as soon as we can identify the total package on the part of all the provinces, the matching funds will be forthcoming from the Government of Canada.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Deputy Prime Minister has outlined a scenario that should put the money from the federal government into the hands of farmers about July or August.

Can he tell us today where farmers are going to get the money to plant their crops, especially in the prairies and areas of Ontario. Where does he propose that they get the money? The banks are holding them up and not providing funds on the basis of equity anymore, it has to be on the basis of cash flow and many of these crops will not provide cash flow. Where does he propose that the farmers get the money for this planting?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should not take issue with me or this government. Our money is on the table right now. There was $500 million made available at the end of March.

If he has any complaints he should get on the phone to the ministers of agriculture of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan and ask them where their share of the money is because when it's there, ours will be there. We're ready today to help the farmers. I am not sure why the hon. member would want to deprive the farmers of provincial contributions which would match our dollars and which would get more money into the hands of the farmers.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it being Thursday, I would like to ask the Government House Leader if he could indicate to members the projected order of business for the coming days, Thursday and Friday and next week possibly.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): It is the intention today to start report stage of Bill C-15, the plant breeders' rights bill and to continue and hopefully to end debate on that tomorrow, Friday.

It would be our hope, and I think there is agreement of the other parties, that at the end of the day tomorrow, we might call for report stage of Bill C-43 in order to get the Chair's ruling on the amendments that have been filed. It would not be our intention to continue with any debate per se but merely to have the House informed of the amendments and their consideration and grouping by the Chair.

On Monday I would expect to resume second reading debate on Bill C-26, the At and East rate, hopefully to complete second reading of that. Depending on further discussions, on Tuesday we might consider a possible return message to the other place in respect of Bill C-21. That will, of course, depend on the Chair's ruling on the point of order which the Chair, I understand, will be giving to us shortly.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, a short supplementary on a subject which is of interest to many members. It deals with the Deputy Speaker's position. As we know, we still have a Deputy Speaker, but it would be rather embarrassing for him to be sitting in that Chair since he is a minister of the Crown. I am just wondering if the government—and we would not accept that—had given some thought to following our Standing Orders, which call for an appointment forthwith. Can we expect an appointment to be made or consultations to be finished soon?

Mr. Andre: In such high esteem is the current occupant of the deputy speakership held that even though he now has cabinet responsibilities, there is a great reluctance to accept his resignation in order to propose his replacement. However, I understand that the discussions have advanced to some extent. If I may paraphrase all my predecessors—I stress, all my predecessors—in this position, we will be acting soon.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I certainly hope so!

* * *

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

SENATE AMENDMENTS TO BILL C-21—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On April 3, 1990 the hon. government House leader rose to contest the acceptability of certain amendments set out in the Senate message respecting Bill C-21, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act. He sought "the Chair's guidance in formulating a motion for a return message to the Senate," and asked the Chair "to rule that certain amendments contained in the message from the other place are out of order, because they differ in one way or another with the specific conditions laid out in the royal recommendation of Bill C-21, and because they infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown." In his reasoned and well-documented arguments, the hon. minister also claimed that the proposed amendments infringed upon the financial privileges of this House in that the Senate amendments "undermine in a significant way the budget of April 27, (1989) in which this House has expressed its confidence". He also claimed that the amendments violated the principle of the bill, that is to set up the unemployment insurance program, as an employer-employee finance program.

Following the hon. minister's intervention, we had, on April 3 and again on April 5, quite a full airing of this issue.

[Translation]

Perhaps it would be well to summarize briefly at this point the chronology of the proceedings to date on Bill C-21.

On April 27, 1989, the Minister of Finance tabled a document entitled "the Budget Speech" which at page 12 reads: "At the same time, changes will be made to ensure that the financing of the program is consistent with our efforts to control the debt. Beginning January 1, 1990, unemployment insurance paymens will be fully financed by employer and employee premiums". This budget was adopted by the House on May 11, 1989. Subsequently, on June 1, 1989, the bill entitled "An Act to Amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act" was introduced in this House and read a first time June 1, 1989. The bill was debated at second reading on June 6, 7 and 21, 1989. The debate at second reading was closured June 21, 1989 and the bill referred to a legislative committee.

• (1510)

[English]

The committee after travelling, hearing witnesses and considering the bill at length, reported it back to the House with amendments on October 10, 1989. The bill was considered at report stage on October 16, 1989. The time allocation motion covering both report stage and third reading was debated and agreed to on October 24, 1989. On October 25, the bill was again considered at report stage and concurred in with further amendments. It was debated at third reading on November 2, and after further debate on November 6, 1989 read a third time and passed.

Subsequently, it proceeded through the Senate and was there amended. The Senate sent a message to the House asking this House to agree to amendments it made to the bill. This first message from the Senate was considered on March 12 and March 13. Debate on the motion of the Minister of State and the Leader of the Government in the House of Commons in relation to the Senate amendments was closured and the motion concurred in on March 13, 1990. Therefore, on March 13, this House sent a message back to the Senate setting out its agreement with some of the amendments and its rejection of others. This occasioned a second message from the Senate which is recorded in our Votes and Proceedings of March 20, 1990.

In this second message the Senate informed the House of Commons of its concurrence in the amendments made by the House to amendments Nos. 1, 4(b) and its insistence upon its amendments 2(a), (b) and (c); 3(a) and (b); 4(c) and (d); 5(a) and (b); 6, 7, 8 and 9.

Finally, in the third message on March 21, 1990, the Senate set out the observations—and I underline that word—contained in the fourth report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-21. That is the position the House was in when the government House leader rose on April 3 to ask the Chair "to rule that amendments 5(a)and (b), 7 and 9 in the message from the other place are out of order because they differ in one way or another with the specific conditions laid out in the royal recommendation of Bill C-21, and because they infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown".

I want, of course, to thank all hon. members who assisted the Chair by participating in the discussions of this complex matter on April 3 and April 5. In the interests of both gravity and clarity I will summarize and marshall the several arguments into two categories.

All the arguments advanced dealt either with the substantive question of whether the Senate is entitled to amend Bill C-21 as it did or they questioned the process by which the Senate amendments were being challenged.

[Translation]

I must express my gratitude to the Hon. Minister for indicating when he rose on this issue that he did not expect an immediate reply. As the minister and the parliamentary secretary both pointed out, our relationship to the other House is a most fundamental one which goes back to the beginnings of parliamentary democracy.

I would not want to render a decision touching on such momentous matters in haste. Thus, I reiterate my thanks to all members for allowing me some time and distance to sort out the threads of argument advanced and to formulate a considered response.

During the course of the argument, the Chair attempted to direct the hon. member by stating its understanding of the substantive issue and I think that may bear repeating.

[English]

What we have here is a bill based upon the budgetary policy of the government, as approved by the House of Commons, which amends existing legislation, that being the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act. The bill proposes in part to eliminate funding from the treasury of Canada to the unemployment insurance account and to make that account a self-sufficient fund by means of contributions paid directly by the employers and employees. That is a somewhat simplistic explanation of the bill that was passed by this House. Now the Senate has made amendments to this proposal.

The Senate has returned with the proposal that some of the funding which this House agreed to eliminate should be restored. According to the government House leader the Senate amendments would cost the Consolidated Revenue Fund $1.75 billion annually. The question is this: is it proper for the Senate to restore a charge which this House has taken away? The question arises because of two fundamental principles. These are that, first, bills for the spending of public moneys must originate in the House of Commons, as stated in Section 53 of the Constitution Act of 1867; and, second, such bills must be recommended by a message from the Governor General which can only be obtained and presented in the House of Commons by a minister of the Crown. This is called a royal recommendation. The foregoing is also a very basic explanation of the substantive matter that has been preoccupying the Chair.

[Translation]

In addressing this substantive issue, the Hon. Members for Ottawa–Vanier, (Mr. Gauthier), for Glengarry–Prescott–Russell (Mr. Boudria) and for Kinsgston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) all questioned the necessity for a royal recommendation in respect of Bill C–21, contested the argument that the Senate had no right to amend a bill of this nature and insisted that since the amendments made to the bill reduced existing charges provided for in the existing statute, they in no way infringed upon the financial initiative of the Crown. The hon. member for Saskatoon–Clark's Crossing (Mr. Axworthy) also supported the latter contention.

[English]

I should now like to turn to the second group of arguments, those that question the process by which the Senate amendments are being challenged. In doing so at this point, I want to emphasize that in the Chair's view these present a threshold which must be crossed before we can proceed to further consideration of the substantive issues.

I would include in this category a number of inter–related arguments. The hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier, the hon. member for Kamloops and the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing, all pointed out that the Chair ought not to rule on legal or constitutional issues. In addition, they argued strenuously, as did the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, that, if the proposed Senate amendments were not in order, they should have been challenged on the first occasion when they were before the House, that is, on March 12 and 13 last, when the House first considered a return message to the other place.

The other place, for the public who is watching, means the Senate. These are words that we use to refer to the Senate; we call it the other place.

Having already made a decision to accept some of the Senate amendments and to reject others, and having so reported to the Senate, this line of argument continues. It is not now open to the House to reopen consideration as to the acceptability of the amendments. Corollary issues as to the purpose of asking the Chair to rule on the Senate amendments and the consequences of the Speaker of the House of Commons ruling a message from the other place out of order were also advanced.

My initial reaction, as a presiding officer, was that, if the acceptability of amendments made to a bill in this House were in question, then, of course, the Chair must make a determination as to the admissibility of the amendments at issue. That is the customary role for the presiding officer to play. It is the duty of the Chair to rule on amendments at each stage of a bill's passage through the House. Accordingly, my first reaction was to assess the receivability of the questioned amendments. However, as I explained, the Chair must take into account not only the fact that amendments to the bill are called into question, but at what stage they are questioned.

In fact, the House has already pronounced itself on the very amendments the government House leader invited me to rule on and the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier has complained that it is too late for the Chair to now rule on their acceptability. It must be noted that the Senate, in its message of March 20, 1990, has insisted on amendments 5(a) and (b), 7, and 9. There is no doubt that the amendments are now, again, before the House for consideration and could be adopted if the House so wished.

It can be argued that the hon. government House leader should have raised his points on March 12 or March 13 last, but I see no reason to prevent his raising the matter at this stage, since the Senate message has returned those very amendments for reconsideration by the House. If those Senate amendments can be further amended, adopted or disagreed with, as Beauchesne's, fourth edition, citation 282 suggests, then logically they would also be subject to procedural challenge.

Therefore, the Chair rules that the intervention of the minister is valid at this time and I will attempt to reply to the various points raised in that regard.

[Translation]

The Hon. Government House Leader said he was encouraged by the decision of the Chair of July 11, 1988 on Bill C–103, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency Bill, and I should like to turn for a moment to that decision.

In that instance, the Senate had split a bill the House had passed and had reported only a portion of it back to the House. It was the unilateral action of the Senate in that matter that I found objectionable and I said, in part:

[English]

There is some considerable doubt, at least in my mind, that the Senate can rewrite or redraft Bills originating in the Commons, potentially so as to change their principle as adopted by the House without again first seeking the agreement of the House. That I view as a matter of privilege and not a matter related to the Constitution.

In the case of Bill C-103, it is my opinion, and with the great respect of course—

• (1520)

I am quoting now from a former judgment.

—that the Senate should have respected the propriety of asking the House of Commons to concur in its action of dividing Bill C-103 and in reporting only part of the bill back as a fait accompli has infringed the privileges of this place.

I went on to say:

I have ruled that the privileges of the House have been infringed. However, and it is important to understand this, I am without the power to enforce them directly. I cannot rule the Message from the Senate out of order for that would leave Bill C-103 in limbo. In other words, it would be nowhere. The cure in this case is for the House to claim its privileges or to forgo them if it so wishes, by way of message to Their Honours, that is, to the Senate, informing them accordingly.

I hasten to add, however, that I also said at that time that:

—the Speaker of the House of Commons by tradition does not rule on constitutional matters. It is not for me to decide whether the Senate has the constitutional power to do what it has done with Bill C-103.

Later, having noted that Bill C-103 was a financial bill and that the Senate is somewhat limited in its review of money bills, I specifically declined to answer such constitutional questions as whether the royal recommendation still applied to the split bill and whether the financial privileges of the Commons had been breached. In so ruling, I relied heavily on actions of two of my predecessors in the Chair.

My research indicates several occasions since Confederation when the Senate amended Commons' bills with financial implications. For example, messages were received by the House on May 23, 1873, May 23, 1874, September 15, 1917, May 23, 1918, June 11, 1941, and July, 14, 1959. A close examination of these six cases reveals that the House agreed with the Senate amendments in all but two of these instances. In 1873, the House disagreed with all the amendments and, in 1959, it agreed to one and disagreed with another. What is interesting to note from a procedural point of view is that the Speaker was only required to comment on two of the occasions, namely in the 1917 and 1959 cases.

In the first instance on September 15, 1917 the Speaker replied to two points of order, one regarding the authority of the Senate to amend a money bill and another regarding the obligation of the House to insist on its privileges and reject the amendment. On the first issue, the Speaker stated, and I quote:

—the question whether the Senate can make such amendments as has been made in the Bill now under consideration is a point of constitutional law in respect to which it would, I think, be improper for me to give an official decision. Matters of such high constitutional import are for the House and not for your Speaker to determine.

On the second issue, he stated:

—there is nothing contained in—our rules which prevents this House from adopting as its own, amendments such as this now under consideration—in my judgment the principle involved as to the authority of this House to waive under stated conditions its rights and privileges is the same.

In short, my predecessors many years ago refused become involved in a constitutional issue which should be settled by negotiation between the House and the Senate, and further ruled that nothing should prevent the House from waiving its financial rights and adopting the Senate amendment as though it were its own. I say that is an option always to the House.

The second case further clarifies the situation and emphasizes the fine line between the constitutional and procedural issues. After the government moved concurrence on certain Senate amendments on July 14, 1959, the Speaker drew the attention of the House to the procedural difficulties with a motion before the House to concur in a Senate amendment and to waive the House's rights, that is, the House of Commons' rights. The Speaker, in 1959, ruled, and I quote:

—if the House in its wisdom feels that—it should waive its asserted privileges in this particular case, by doing so it in effect suspends Standing Order 80(1). Therefore the view which I take is that unless the motion properly suspends Standing Order 80(1), it would require the unanimous consent of the House at this time to pass the amendments which are proposed—I have come to the conclusion that the motion—would require notice. That is why I said Standing Orders can only be suspended by an Order of the House made on proper notice or by unanimous consent.

[Translation]

In the 1959 case, unanimous consent was withheld and four days later the government introduced another motion, with notice to concur in some amendments while rejecting others. This motion made reference to "the sole and undoubted right of the Commons to impose taxation" and was agreed to by the House.

[English]

The 1917 and 1959 cases clearly illustrate the long-standing principle that the Speaker should not become involved in constitutional issues regarding the authority of the Senate to amend money bills, but may only bring procedural irregularities affecting Standing Order 80(1) to the attention of the House in order that it can safeguard its own constitutional financial prerogatives.

I would now turn to the specifics of the case before us. In looking closely at the amendments of the Senate to Bill C–21, I must admit that on the question of the principle of the bill, the hon. minister has raised an extremely valid issue. There is no doubt in my mind that the Senate by way of amendment is modifying the principle of the bill, something which would certainly not be allowed at committee stage in this House. If the Senate amendments were adopted, the government will clearly continue to support financially the unemployment insurance account as was stated by the minister. That would run contrary to the approved budgetary policy of the government and contrary to the principle of the bill as adopted by the House of Commons.

However, for the same reasons referred to earlier in my ruling of July, 1988, the Speaker of the House of Commons cannot unilaterally rule out of order amendments from the other place. I can comment, as I am doing, but the House as a whole must ultimately make the decision to accept or reject amendments from the Senate, whether they be in order according to our rules or not.

As I have said, it is also clear from the review of the amendments of the Senate, which can be found in the Votes and Proceedings of March 21, 1990, that there will be continuing charges to the Consolidated Revenue Fund if Bill C–21 is so amended. It is perhaps less clear that there will be an increased charge over and above that which is presently lawfully provided for in the Unemployment Insurance Act itself.

I point out that the Unemployment Insurance Act was passed many, many years ago and has been amended many, many times. So, Bill C–21 is an amendment to that act.

It would certainly be permissible in this House to restore in an amending bill charges already provided for in existing legislation. For guidance on that point, I refer hon. members to Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, 21st edition, page 716, and I quote:

> The same principle applies in the case of amendments moved to a bill which abolishes or reduces a charge authorized by existing law. Amendments to such a bill, which are designed to restore a portion or the whole of the charge which the bill proposes to reduce or abolish, are in order without the need of a preliminary financial resolution.

As the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader stated, that citation applies to the British House of Commons. But Erskine May is silent on what the Lords may do. Again, I have to say that it is not within my power to rule on whether the Canadian Senate should have the constitutional right to restore charges when the Commons have decided otherwise. As the hon. minister said at page 10144 of Hansard of April 5, 1990: "It is up to the House of Commons to defend our responsibilities and our authorities".

Having addressed the amount and limits of the charges, the Chair has however some concern in the area of conditions and qualifications, objects and purposes.

• (1530)

I should remind hon. members that citation 540 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, states:

> In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown not only if it increases the amount but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge. And this standard is binding not only on private Members but also on Ministers whose only advantage is that, as advisors of the Crown, they can present new or supplementary estimates or secure the Royal Recommendation to new or supplementary resolutions.

If reviewed against this citation, the Senate amendments seem to have some impact on the royal recommendation, the extent of which is difficult to determine. Thus, for greater certainty the House might want to draw this to the attention of the Senate, even if the House were to choose to waive its financial prerogatives, pursuant to Beauchesne's fifth edition, citation 115, which reads:

> It is the function of the Speaker to direct the attention of the House, when the occasion arises, to a breach of its privileges in bills or amendments brought from the Senate, and to direct the special entries to be made in the Journals by which the House, in respect of particular amendments, signifies its willingness to waive its privileges without thereby establishing a general precedent.

The hon. government House leader further claimed that the Senate has interfered with the budgetary process of the government, as approved by the House of Commons. He said: "To tamper with that, or to reverse that somehow in another place, is to tamper with the very fundamental purposes and powers of this body," meaning the House of Commons.

The hon. government House leader has found support at pages 339 and 340 of a book entitled Modern Senate of Canada, which was published in 1965. The author's name is Mr. F.A. Kunz. He says:

> On the contrary, the Senate has acted in full understanding of the meaning and the implications of responsible government and accepted as binding upon itself the proposition that it should not unduly disturb what has come to be called the "balance of ways and means" or, as Hopkins says, "that it would be inadmissible to tamper with the overall financial program submitted by the government in its budgetary proposals in such a way as to effect a material change in the budgetary surplus or deficit envisaged therein.

I repeat: "in its budgetary proposals in such a way as to effect a material change in the budgetary surplus or deficit envisaged therein." As I have already noted, the hon. government House leader has said that the amount involved is $1.75 billion annually.

That comment by Kunz is based on an article by an author named E. Russell Hopkins, who is a former law clerk and parliamentary counsel to the Senate of Canada.

At pages 321 and 322 of the Canadian Tax Journals Volume 6, September/October 1958, Hopkins comments on Section 53 of the Canadian Constitution. He says:

> Section 53 of the Act provides that bills for appropriating any part of the public revenue, or for imposing any tax or impost, shall originate in the Commons." This clearly means that all taxation or appropriation bills must originate in the House of Commons. It is universally understood that it would be a violation of the principle embodied in this provision for the Senate to propose amendments which would increase a tax or appropriation proposed by the House of Commons.

I have a duty to comment, but I can only ask: "What would the learned author say if the words that I just read 'increase a tax or appropriation' were substituted or added to by the words 'an increase in the budgetary deficit'?" I bring this query to the attention of the House, and to the public who ultimately pay all the bills.

Hopkins went on to say:

> The question whether the Senate should or should not amend a money bill in such a way as to disturb the balance of ways and means in any fiscal year is one of policy rather than of law: that is, it is a question for the Senate itself to determine in all the circumstances. The Senate may of course reject a money bill absolutely, and, in its view, may reduce a tax or appropriation.

He went on to say:

> In either of these events the balance of the ways and means would be upset.

What Hopkins has concluded is that interventions by the Senate in money bills inevitably will change the budgetary and spending plans of the government.

I may say to hon. members and to the public that is listening, there are many Canadians across this country who may or may not have been well educated and some who think that they were well educated, who have no idea whatsoever of the awesome powers which the Senate claims to itself over the elected lower House. That is one of the reasons why it is important that hon. members listen carefully to this judgment because there is information here which many Canadians are just absolutely unaware of.

In attempting to shed light on this situation, I have looked at the British practice and I have found the following at pages 518 and 519 of Erskine May's twelfth edition. I am going to quote quite a bit of it because it is time this country got a history lesson. I am quoting from Erskine May. This is in Great Britain.

> In 1909 the Finance Bill which gave effect to the budget of the year was met on its second reading in the House of Lords by an amendment declaring—

And I quote the amendment. This is the amendment by the House of Lords, which is their upper House.

> —"That this House is not justified in giving its consent to this bill, until it has been submitted to the judgment of the country". The rejection of the bill by the Lords was condemned in the House of Commons by a resolution declaring "that the action of the House of Lords in refusing to pass into law the provisions made by the House of Commons for the finances of the year is a breach of the constitution, and an ursurpation of the privileges of the House of Commons".

Note that that statement was made by the House, not by the Speaker, but by the House of Commons of Great Britain.

A dissolution of Parliament followed,—

Which is a polite way of saying that an election followed.

—and in the new Parliament a Finance Bill to take the place of that rejected by the Lords was passed by both houses.

Now there are a lot of historical and very interesting things that happened that led to the House of Lords finally passing that.

The House of Commons also agreed to three resolutions in a committee of the whole house dealing with relations between the two houses and the duration of Parliament, as follows:

First of all, on money bills—that is what we are talking about here—that British House of Commons resolution said this:

"That it is expedient that the House of Lords be disabled by Law from rejecting or amending a Money Bill, but that any such limitation by Law shall not be taken to diminish or qualify the existing rights and privileges of the House of Commons.

"For the purposes of this resolution a Bill shall be considered a Money Bill if, in the opinion of the Speaker, it contains only provisions dealing with all or any of the following subjects, namely, the imposition, repeal, remission, alteration, or regulation of taxation; charges on the Consolidated Fund or the provision of money by Parliament; supply; the appropriation, control, or regulation of public money; the raising or guarantee of any loan or the repayment thereof; or matters incidental to those subjects or any of them".

The House of Commons resolution went on to deal with Bills other than Money Bills.

"That it is expedient that the powers of the House of Lords, as respects Bills other than money Bills be restricted by Law, so that any such Bill which has passed the House of Commons in three successive Sessions and, having been sent up to the House of Lords at least one month before the end of the Session, has been rejected by that House in each of those Sessions, shall become Law without the consent of the House of Lords on the Royal Assent being declared: Provided that at least two years shall have elapsed between the date of the first introduction of the Bill in the House of Commons and the date on which it passes the House of Commons for the third time.

"For the purposes of this Resolution a Bill shall be treated as rejected by the House of Lords if it has not been passed by the House of Lords either without Amendment or with such Amendments only as may be agreed upon by both Houses".

It went on to say other things with respect to the duration of Parliament.

"That it is expedient to limit the duration of parliament to five years".

Upon these resolutions when agreed to by the house a bill was brought in but further progress was not made with it. In the first session of the new Parliament which met in the following year the bill was again introduced, was passed by both houses, and received the royal assent as the Parliament Act, 1911.

• (1540)

It is important for every Canadian who cares about who decides how we spend our money to know that in Great Britain they settled this 80 years ago.

[Translation]

The British Parliament apparently resolved their problem some 80 years ago with the House of Lords recognizing in law the claim of the House of Commons as the final authority on money bills. Such is not the case in Canada. The Senate has consistently refused to concede the power to amend money bills. I would refer hon. members to the Ross report which was tabled in the Senate of Canada on May 15, 1918 and subsequently adopted by the Upper House, rejecting the House of Commons' position on the constitution. At page 199 of the Senate Votes and Proceedings for May 15, 1918, the Ross report states:

[English]

When the House of Commons of Canada claims that it can drag the Senate beneath it as the Commons did the House of Lords in England and through the "swamping power"—

Meaning there the addition of lords to the Upper House.

—the answer is that it—

That is the House of Commons of Canada.

—has not got this power and is as much bound by the British North America Act as the Senate. We have a Constitution that can only be altered by the Imperial Parliament. The House of Commons cannot by passing rules add to its powers or diminish those of the Senate.

That was the last Senate report of a Senate committee in 1918.

Therein lies the Canadian constitutional dilemma! Should the Senate choose to further insist on its amendments, the two Houses may well be unable to resolve their differences and be faced with a serious constitutional crisis. The strength of our parliamentary system lies in all three constituent parts that is: the Crown, the Senate,and the House of Commons respecting their constitutional roles.

The events in the United Kingdom at the beginning of the 20th century do not provide the Speaker of this House with any procedural solution to this particular conflict. Because of the Canadian parliamentary practice, the Speaker of the House of Commons is powerless when an impasse develops around this long unresolved constitutional issue which is now exacerbated by a deep difference of opinion on matters of public policy.

I want to refer hon. members to two matters. I do this as lawyers say, obiter dictum. That perhaps is part of the substandard ruling. But there is an interesting, curious book called A Student's Manual of English Constitutional History by a master of arts named Dudley Julius Medley, tutor of Keble College, Oxford, and examiner in the honour school of modern history. It was published in 1898. He was talking, of course, before the British—if I could be permitted to say this—came to their senses.

> This vast increase in membership (of the House of Lords) has almost of necessity resulted in a weakening of the sense of political responsibility in individual members of the House of Lords, while the completion of the representative character of the House of Commons has made the body of the electorate increasingly impatient of any check by the hereditary House. Those who do not believe in constitutional cataclysms cling to the necessity of a second chamber.

I also draw to the attention of my colleagues—I know they will be very interested—on both sides of the House to hear the comments by Sir Wilfrid Laurier on September 7, 1917. As I say, this is not put in as the substance of the ruling. It is just brought to members' attention, and I hope the attention of every Canadian who has a chance to listen or read this judgment. This is what Sir Wilfrid Laurier said on September 7, 1917.

This was his view. He was a great House of Commons man: "Under Rule 78, the Senate has no right to amend or alter in any way a money bill sent to them from this House". Rule 78 is the same as our Rule 80 paragraph 1.

He said: "This House alone has the privilege of dealing with money bills. The only right the Senate has is that of rejecting or assenting to such money bills. That rule has been confirmed over and over again in England".

Now, I point those two interesting comments out to hon. members because there is a long history in this. There have been strong views on both sides of this Chamber over the years as to what the Constitution does say, and what the Constitution ought to say in terms of our country, and the powers of our House of Commons of Canada.

[Translation]

I want to thank the House for its indulgence and its patience in listening so carefully to this lengthy explanation. This ruling has not been an easy one for we are here dealing with a fundamental issue which goes to the very heart of the Canadian Parliamentary process. May I close by saying I am extremely grateful to the members who made such useful contributions to assist the Chair in its consideration of this issue.

[English]

To say anything further, despite the fact that I am the Speaker of the House of Commons, would be trespassing upon what I am called upon to do, and that is to rule on procedural matters.

What I may think about the constitutional impasse which we have in this country, is not for me to say. If any of my colleagues or the public want to speculate on what I think, of course, that is their free and democratic privilege.

* * *

[Translation]

POINT OF ORDER

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order with respect to Hansard for April 25, It concerns the exchange I had with the Minister of the Environment about the school system in Saskatchewan and plans for reorganizing control and management in that system. I think everyone in the House is aware of what is involved, but I simply wish to point out that a number of terms used yesterday in the House and reported in Hansard were corrected by someone, I don't know who, and they do not faithfully report what the minister said in the House and are actually misleading. I could give you a list of the people who called me today to ask me to have this changed, because they heard the minister when he was speaking, and this is not what he said.

So I imagine the editor of the French text must have changed, on page 10650, what the minister said. I will read the words the minister used here in the House, and this is what he said:

> Dès aujourd'hui, le mouvement qui représente les Fransaskois a émis un communiqué—

In Hansard at page 10650, we read:

> Dès aujourd'hui, la Commission nationale des parents francophones a émis un communiqué—

That is not the same thing, Mr. Speaker. The Fransaskois were here during Question Period, they heard the minister, and that is not what he said, because the Commission nationale des parents francophones is from Manitoba. I believe the minister will agree these are not one and the same group.

On the same page, this time in the English version, the English editor incorporated the change, but I think this may have been done without realizing what was involved. The minister—

[English]

In answer to a question that I put to the Minister on the same subject, and I quote from the transcript of yesterday's Hansard he said:

> I would remind my hon. colleagues from the other side of the House that today the Fransaskois themselves have issued a communiqué recognizing leadership.

Mr. Speaker, that could not have been correct, because they were in the gallery and they had not issued any communiqué to that effect. Indeed, the people who did issue a communiqué were la commission nationale des parents francophones, which are an entirely different group from Manitoba. I would hope that you would have a chance to review the Hansard and change that so there will be no confusion in history.

• (1550)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier for his comments. This is a very important matter. I promise to check Hansard and make the necessary changes, as appropriate. I want to thank the hon. member for bringing this up.

We shall now proceed with Government Orders.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier, on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, because of the procedural issues, which meant we were unable to revert to Routine Proceedings until the very end, and since I know you have before you my letter requesting an emergency debate on schools in Saskatchewan, I wonder whether, with unanimous consent, we could have a decision by the House today, so that we will know whether or not there will be a debate on this matter.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member did bring to me an application for an emergency debate on the Saskatchewan French school situation and what the hon. member has asked is if there is consent for me to accept his application at this time?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly have no objections to your ruling on this particular application. It was not the hon. member who caused Routine Proceedings to be missed this day. I would hope I am not giving consent to going back through all of Routine Proceedings.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the hon. member have leave to introduce his motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: I want to thank the House for its courtesy. I am waiting for a copy of the letter I sent to the Chair. Here it is.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 52

CONTROL AND MANAGEMENT OF FRANCOPHONE MINORITY SCHOOLS IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 52, I wish to ask your permission to move that the House adjourn to discuss a specific important matter that must be considered urgently, namely the Saskatchewan government's decision to suspend the federal-provincial agreement allocating $26 million over 10 years to establish a system of schools controlled and managed by the francophone minority in that province.

The text is clear. I submit this request to the Chair.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier. Clearly, this is a very important subject, but I think that, in the circumstances, there will probably be other opportunities to raise the matter in the House of Commons. Therefore, it is not appropriate at this time, but may be later.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C–15, an act respecting plant breeders' rights, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are nine motions in amendment set down on the motion paper for the report stage of Bill C–15, an act respecting plant breeders' rights.

Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Mackenzie and Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the hon. member for Algoma are in order and will be grouped for debate, but voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 2, 6, 7, and 8 in the name of the hon. member for Algoma are identical to the motions that were moved, debated, and negatived in the legislative committee. For this reason these motions will not be selected.

Motions Nos. 4, 5, and 9 in the name of the hon. member for Algoma are in order.

Motions Nos. 4 and 5 will be grouped for debate, but voted on separately.

Motion No. 9 will be debated and voted on separately. Therefore Motions Nos. 1 and 3 will now be proposed to the House.

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C–15 be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 21 and 22 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"ties belonging to prescribed categories but shall not include categories of cereals or vegetables whose contribution to the nutritional diet is commonly recognized and deemed to be nutritionally significant and found, pursuant to subsection 27(1), to be".

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C–15 be amended in Clause 32 by adding immediately after line 41 at page 18 the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding subsections (1) and (2) the Commissioner shall, after the expiration of a period of seven years from the granting of a plant breeder's rights respecting cereal grains, oil seeds or pulse crops, on application by any person, confer on the person in the form of a compulsory licence that is not subject to the payment of any royalty or other remuneration rights to do any thing regarding the cereal grains, oil seeds or pulse crops that the holder might authorize another person to do pursuant to paragraph 5(1)(d)."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, beginning the report stage to Bill C–15, I want to say at the outset that these days all government bills are deemed to be urgent and most of them attract a closure clause within a few minutes or hours of debate.

That is not the reason for putting this amendment forward. I note that I have proposed on behalf of my party one amendment. I think this one amendment is a big compromise from our position and I am hoping that the government will see that this particular amendment has some merit given the limited response that we had from the public during the course of the legislative committee hearings.

During that period of time we found that there was some pressure for plant breeders' rights legislation from those groups and individuals that were producing ornamentals, flowers, shrubs and so on. They have been arguing for such legislation for a long time. But we did not receive very much pressure, if any, from the people who are developing plant varieties that would be used for food, forage and pharmaceutical use. I think that the case was not made well for plant breeders' rights for any of the crops, but if it was made at all, it was to facilitate trade in the ornamentals.

The purpose of this particular motion is to limit the application of the bill to those kinds of plants and prohibit the use of plant breeders' rights for that type of production that would be used to produce food.

I want to review the basic problems that I have with plant breeders' rights. I think it is unnecessary control of genetic material. There will be a lot of problems with the concept behind plant breeders' rights, that we should have private ownership of life-sustaining material, whether it is plant genetic material or other genetic material. I question whether the House and the committee have done any work to determine whether in fact that is a proper use of the private propriety concept in our world.

I point out to the House that the last time that this question was dealt with in depth was by a royal commission in the late 1950s which recommended against the use of the Patent Act or any form of plant breeders' rights. The legislative committee that this bill was sent to chose, and perhaps it was mandated, to limit itself to only looking at the very narrow legislation itself. It did not choose to call people who had a broader view of life. It did not do the kind of job that a royal commission could do.

I think that the House would be well disposed to accept this amendment. If the government wishes to go beyond this amount of patenting of life forms it should do so only after having resorted to a full public inquiry of the type that a royal commission can conduct. There are a lot of questions about who should own life or whether life can be owned by individuals.

• (1600)

This particular bill does change the assumptions dramatically. It is as big a change as the technical and legal changes that occurred back in the Middle Ages when the western European countries began the process of colonialization and used their system of establishing sovereignty over lands that they discovered, regardless of whether there were societies situated on those newly discovered lands or not. The Europeans simply established their sovereignty and power and colonized those nations.

That is essentially what we are permitting large corporate plant breeding operations to do with this particular bill. I recognize it parallels legislation that is in some other so-called western countries, but that does not necessarily make it right.

The whole system of colonialization was not fair, nor was it a proper or equitable distribution of power. I do not think that this particular effort to install plant patenting is either.

In the process of looking further afield at the effects of this legislation, I think that a royal commission or a public inquiry should hear from some of the people that we are aware of who are not anxious to have a regime of plant breeders' rights in our country.

A great many of the public plant breeders who privately do not think this is a good idea, but because they are public servants did not come forward to legislative committee hearings should be heard. So should the many farmers and farm groups who think this is a backward step, this business of privatizing genetic material that is often received for nothing from the Third World or the developing world.

They should hear from the environmental and scientific communities who can give us further insight into what this particular move does to our environment and to the future of civilization on this planet.

We should listen to the church and foreign aid groups who wanted to be heard, but very few got the opportunity to make even a brief presentation to the legislative committee.

We should listen as well to Third World development experts who realize that most of the plant genetic resources of our world are found naturally in the Third World. With plant breeders' rights legislation, more developed western countries can go and pick up that genetic material, sometimes licensing it directly, other times through process and manipulation, utilizing the material to produce a new form of material based on it. Yet the donor countries receive no benefit from the use of their resources.

Last, a public inquiry should listen to people who are concerned about ethics and the morality of patenting life forms. This is not just a simple piece of legislation that copies a handful or two of European and American legislation. This is a very fundamental question. We are making a change in the direction of what is, and is not, patentable.

The kind of questions we are being asked about this bill were raised publicly, but they did not get a proper airing in the legislative committee. I submit that the legislative committee is not structured for that kind of thing. It should have been a full public hearing under the aegis of a full royal commission.

In the interest of time, I am recommending that the House consider this resolution positively, that it accept this resolution, this amendment to Bill C–15, which would permit some experimentation with the idea of plant breeders' rights for ornamental plants only. We can then discover whether there are any advantages, economic or otherwise. In the course of doing that sort of an experiment, we will avoid creating difficulty and hardship, both economic and social for those people who depend on plant breeding as a source of nutrition for their very lives.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the motion standing in my name today, Motion No. 3, provides for compulsory licensing and I want to address that matter. Before I do that, I would like to say that this bill received considerable study in committee, however, we did not hear as many witnesses as we would have liked.

I think that the members who served on that committee came out knowing a lot more about the question of plant breeders' rights than when they went into it, because it is an intensely complicated topic. There are new developments every day in the whole field of biotechnology and, for a group of laymen, I think it is a bit mind boggling, but I believe that the committee members learned a great deal. I think that it was useful. We had people from international development groups, representatives from churches and from universities, from research laboratories, from government laboratories, and from farm organizations, a very broad range of people.

This bill, although it is often dealt with as an agriculture bill, has concerns and interests well beyond that. I think the members of our caucus have, in our second reading debate, expressed the concerns of many of the farm groups right across the country. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Ontario Federation and other groups across the country are vitally concerned with agriculture and with development in this country.

We think that the bill can make a positive contribution to plant breeding and research in this country. If you look at the situation now, especially with major crops such as cereal grains, most of the research is being done by the federal government. I hope that this legislation, when it is passed and is in operation, not only will continue to support and expand that research which is being done by the federal government laboratories, provincial laboratories and university laboratories, but, as well, will expand the research in the private sector, because it is a very important field, a field in which we want to see research take place. We have had mechanisms in this country to support plant breeders, through organizations like SeCan, which has been able to provide an incentive to the research organizations, especially those at universities and government laboratories.

We have many plant breeders' groups who produce hybrid varieties, especially in cereal grains like corn and, because of the hybridization, are able to get paid for their research, but we have not had a codified law like this plant breeders' rights to provide for that incentive to plant breeders. We have a commitment from the Minister of Agriculture that, in the long run, the government would look at increasing the percentage of research dollars which come back to Department of Agriculture from 60 per cent, which it is today, to 100 per cent of the royalties which are realized.

• (1610)

Some royalties have been realized on the current SeCan arrangement and there will be more. I think the minister and the department estimated something like $4 million would be realized per year in the long run with the bill in place. This will codify the arrangements which have taken place through SeCan and through the use of hybrid varieties.

This bill was strengthened considerably in committee by a number of amendments. For instance the complaint that we received from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and other groups was that an advisory committee was not mandated with great enough reponsibilities. It wanted more input from farm groups and others of a public interest nature on that advisory committee.

It has been strengthened in that the advisory committee will now assist the commissioner of plant breeders' rights in the manner in which the act is applied in providing licensing. It will also have a responsibility to assist the commissioner in the requirements relating to licensing of plant breeders' rights, to advise the commissioner of the plant breeders' interpretation of "reasonable price" and other key sentences in the law itself, such as "widely distributed" and "reasonable remuneration", because these are key points.

For example, we should not put in place a regime that allows a multinational corporation to charge unreasonable prices for their seed, whether it is wheat, barely, corn or whatever. Certainly that is not in the public interest. If they do not provide enough to the marketplace that prices are driven up higher, that is not in the public interest. If they charge an unreasonable remuneration, that is not in the public interest.

So, the advisory committee has been mandated to provide assistance to the commissioner in deciding on the interpretation of those particular issues. Beyond that, we put in place an amendment at the committee stage which will provide for those powers to be defined under the regulations and provided for an annual report for the commissioner of plant breeders and the operation of the act.

Those provisions are in there and the commissioner has the power to give a compulsory licence to people if an individual plant breeder is charging an excessive or unreasonable amount in royalty for the seed or plant.

In spite of that, I think there is concern for cereal grains which provide the daily bread for Canadians. Even though those powers are there, there is a feeling that perhaps we should only provide for plant breeders' rights for cereal grains, oil seeds, pulse crops, and so on, for a seven-year period. Generally speaking, that is about the life of most cereal grains as there is usually a better variety which comes on stream.

That is why I put Motion No. 3. Even though there are safeguards, I think this is a new departure, a new regime and a new provision. Unfortunately, the companion Motion No. 7 was ruled out of order because it was put in committee as well. That motion provided for a parliamentary review after seven years. That companion provision cannot be put this afternoon.

I put this motion because I think there are certain people in the industry, certainly people in the farm groups in some areas of the country, who feel that a seven-year plant breeders' rights would be adequate, and would provide a certainty that the plant breeders' rights, or the royalty régime, would not go on over a long period of time. That is why I am putting this Motion No. 3. I think it provides an additional safeguard, even though there is provision for the Commissioner to mandate compulsory licensing if a plant breeder does charge an excessive amount of royalty or remuneration to himself. I put that motion now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? The hon. parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether or not anyone else intended to rise, but I am prepared to respond to Motions Nos. 1 and 3. I would like to do that after the debate is finished, if anyone else was intending to rise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there any further debate with regard to Motions Nos. 1 and 3?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It would facilitate the debate considerably if the government side would indicate how it intends to dispose of the motion. I think that would then determine whether we can cut the debate off immediately, or whether other people want to continue to try to press the point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would you like me to put the question?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker. I am quite prepared to respond to the two motions.

At the outset, I would like to indicate that we anticipated speaking on this debate much earlier today. We were hopeful that the Minister of Agriculture would be able to be here to take part in some of the debate. Unfortunately, it has been late in the day when we started, and he will be unable to be here to take part.

That does not mean that he is not interested in this legislation. He has a keen interest in this legislation.

I also want to point out that, in the committee hearings, we did hear from some of the groups that the hon. member for Mackenzie had raised concerns about, such as the Third World, which is the Ten Days for World Development, the United Church, and the Environmental Law Association. Those are some of the people we have heard from.

The intent of Motion No. 1 is to exclude cereal and vegetable varieties from the eligibility for protection under plant breeders' rights. This would not only affect cereal and vegetable varieties, but would have implications for all species. If Canada is to join the International Union for the Protection of New Varieties of Plants, then our legislation must apply to the largest number of species available. This is a requirement of the Convention establishing the International Union.

The effect of this motion would therefore be to prevent Canadian membership of the International Union. This would mean that Canadian plant breeders would not obtain the right to protect their varieties in other countries, thus forfeiting royalty payments back to Canada. We are already losing millions of dollars because Canadian corn and soybean varieties, bred by Agriculture Canada, are unprotected in Europe and so are sold without royalties. The direct effect of this motion on cereals and vegetables would be to discourage investment in breeding varieties of these kinds in Canada. Foreign variety owners would be reluctant to permit their varieties to be sold in Canada where they could not be protected.

As is currently the case, those most penalized by this motion would be those in smaller agricultural areas such as the Maritimes. There are cereal varieties bred for areas with similar climatic conditions in Europe. However, the breeders are reluctant to allow their varieties to be sold in Canada when there is no return.

If vegetables are to be interpreted as including potatoes, then the impact of this motion would be very detrimental to seed potato producers in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. These producers would like to be able to multiply seed of Dutch potato varieties to sell on the export market. The Dutch variety owners are interested in having their varieties multiplied in Canada, but only if their rights can be protected. At the present time, there are numerous Dutch potato varieties representing substantial potential export market for Canadian producers, but these varieties are withheld from Canada because the breeders of the varieties cannot have their rights protected.

• (1620)

This motion is directly contrary to the wishes that the agriculture and horticulture producers expressed to the legislative committee studying Bill C–15. Both the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, speaking for agriculture producers, and the Canadian Horticulture Council appeared before the committees and supported the legislation.

I would like to read a letter into the record that was addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. It is dated April 23, 1990, and states:

> Dear Mr. Mazankowski:
>
> The Canadian Federation of Agriculture is becoming concerned that the Act Respecting Plant Breeders' Rights (Bill C–15) is being unduly delayed within the parliamentary process.
>
> Our members feel strongly that the legislation will have numerous benefits for Canadian agriculture. These include encouraging the development of new agriculture crop varieties as well as facilitating the exchange of propagating material between Canada and other countries.
>
> We should point out that many of the caveats which our organization has had with respect to PBR have already been addressed directly in the Bill, by the Committee amendments—In addition, because Bill C–15 is enabling legislation other issues raised in our brief to Committee will be addressed by the development of regulations specific to each agricultural crop. We are confident that a co-operative effort will result in the development of effective regulations.
>
> At this point we feel that your Government should give a high priority to the passage of Bill C–15, and you can be assured that our organization will be supportive of these efforts. Further delays in the parliamentary process will only postpone the potential benefits the farm community may derive from this important legislation. Thank you in advance for your efforts.

That is signed by Mr. Don Knoerr, the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

These two organizations did not suggest any limitations on the crop kinds which should be covered. The producers support the legislation because they want more improved varieties of all crops. They realize that those varieties will only be developed or made available if plant breeders can make a reasonable return on their investment. This legislation provides encouragement to Canadian companies to invest in plant breeding. It enables public institutions such as Agriculture Canada and the universities to obtain additional funds for their plant breeding programs. It provides the mechanism for Canadian plant breeders to obtain recognition of their rights in other countries and so obtain royalties.

All these benefits will be lost if this motion passes because the motion, in effect, destroys a large part of the benefit of the legislation. It radically alters the bill by removing from it some of the major crops in Canada.

I will take a moment or two and respond to Motion No. 3. This motion would require the commissioner to grant, on request, a compulsory licence for each cereal, oilseed or pulse variety seven years after the granting of rights in that variety.

This amendment is contrary to the principles of the bill and to the International Convention for the Protection of New Varieties of Plants. Instead of plant breeders being able to plan the marketing of their new varieties on a long-term basis, the breeders would have their marketing system dictated to them without any say in the matter.

The effect of the amendment would be that there would be a compulsory licence for every successful variety of all the major food crops. The commissioner would be required to set the royalty rate for each of these varieties. This differs from the present arrangement in which a compulsory licence is granted only on the basis of a complaint because a variety is not widely available or is unfairly priced.

The amendment diminishes the role of the advisory committee because it imposes an inflexible marketing system which would apply in every situation. There would be no provision for varying the system by regulation on the basis of advice from those affected.

The impact of this amendment would be greatest in small niche markets, such as those in the Maritimes and British Columbia. There would be no incentive to seek out varieties for small specialized markets if, after seven years, the variety owner had to make it available to competitors to sell.

The amendment provides a particular disadvantage to varieties bred in Canada, and might act as a disincentive to investing in plant breeding in Canada. With an introduced variety from another country, it might be possible to bring in sufficient seed stocks to benefit at least from seven years of exclusive or planned marketing. With a Canadian variety, it would take several years to build up seed stocks but the period of rights would have commenced and so there might only be four or five years or exclusive or planned marketing before the variety owner had to surrender the variety to competitors.

There is some difficulty in knowing how this amendment is intended to work. The proposed new subsection 3 is exempted from the conditions of the present subsections 1 and 2, but not the subsequent subsections. The present subsection 4 allows the altering or revoking of compulsory licences on the basis of representations to the commissioner. So, it would be expected that every compulsory licence granted under this amendment would be challenged, particularly as there is no provision in it for a prior hearing. This is a recipe for chaos, with a review required on every variety of food crops granted a right.

The international convention stipulates that rights may only be limited in the public interest. This proposal does not allow for any evaluation of the public interest. Instead, it imposes a marketing system which severely limits the rights of the plant breeder. The plant breeder may have set up a network of licensees to supply the market, but after seven years any market development they have done will be to the benefit of their competitors who will be able to take over the market since they will not have had the cost of variety development and promotion.

This motion would greatly increase the cost of administering the legislation. Instead of the compulsory licence being an exceptional provision for resolving abuses of plant breeders' rights, it would apply to every successful food crop variety. The market potential of each variety would have to be assessed to determine an equitable royalty rate. Even in the same crop kind, such as spring wheat, the appropriate royalty might be quite different for a variety adapted to a few thousand acres in the Maritimes as compared with one adapted to millions of acres in western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On debate, the hon. member for Burnaby—Kingsway.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have been almost two years in this Parliament. It is Port Moody—Coquitlam. That was the last—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry. You are sitting so close to the hon. member for Burnaby—Kingsway. I just noticed the hon. member. He is kind of far away. You are blending in with the concrete.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I tried to be slightly radical for this place and actually put on a spring suit to look a little different than the normal blue serge of all the males in this House. But, it never works.

Some hon. members: Shame!

An hon. member: When you speak, you should stand up.

Mr. Waddell: I am standing up, Mr. Speaker.

I have just a couple of remarks to make. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, when he spoke on behalf of the government on the amendment presented by my friend, the hon. member for Mackenzie—who is a real expert in agriculture—was giving the real reasons why plant breeders' rights do not really work for a small country like Canada. When he used the words "planned marketing"—to plan your marketing for the long term—I think of monopoly. Those are words that sometimes lead to a monopoly. To give the people the right to plan their marketing means to give them a monopoly and so they are set for a period.

The parliamentary secretary talked about taking away privileges with this amendment if it was passed. It seems to me that the amendment is giving privileges. The privileges do not exist now so the amendment is giving privileges. It is the bill that is taking away the privileges.

I also thought of the patent drug bill as an analogy. I am not an expert in plant breeders' rights, and I am sure hon. members will say: "Well, that is obvious when I hear him speak". I am not an expert. I am from an urban riding and this is a difficult subject, but I am interested in it from an international law point of view.

I recall when the government brought in the bill which deals with drug patents to give privileges and monopolies so they could plan and market for the long term. These words echo that debate. And what happened? Prices went up. There was no real new research in Canada. I believe that there is outside control and other companies are taking over some of our Canadian companies.

• (1630)

One has to approach the problem of harmonization in the international world, the new international economic order. We are a shrinking world. A Canadian, Marshall McLuhan, said 25 years ago that we are more and more a global village. We are now, as the government will no doubt argue, and there is a lot of truth to it, a global village economically as well. So we have to harmonize the world economy. I suppose that does make some sense. It makes some sense to have an international order that runs better that way.

The problem with it is who controls it. Who has the monopoly? Who has those privileges? That concerns me again with the plant breeders' rights notion that we freeze things in the world and we take away, especially from the Third World, their resources, their genetic resources in this case, and we use those resources. The rich, largely big business people in the first world, our world, get to control those resources of the poorer people in the developing world. That concerns me.

I have mentioned the monopoly aspects. That is part of this whole internationalization. Licensing a life form also concerns me. I do not believe this has been done in Canada. It leads to all sorts of interesting legal questions that are being debated now in our modern world. Can you own a human being? Can you own a gene? Those are the issues.

This amendment basically says you can have plant breeders' rights, monopoly rights if you like, privilege, orderly marketing for a long period, but do not do it to our food, continue the public breeding program for our food which, it seems to me, has worked for a smaller country like Canada. That is what gives me great concern about plant breeders' rights and that is what leads me to support the amendment offered by the New Democratic Party, my party, and the hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, my intervention will be brief. The member for Port Moody—Coquitlam mentioned the drug patent legislation. I think it is important that we point out to the House and to Canadians that if we are using the analogy of the drug patent legislation, the opposition parties have nothing to fear from plant breeders' rights.

The report of the first full year of the drug patent legislation showed the companies investing more than they had promised in research and development and that the price of drugs had increased 1.7 per cent less than inflation. That is the first time that had ever happened. So if plant breeders' rights is handled the same way as the drug patent legislation has been handled, then Canada will be far better off.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I became familiar with this bill a number of years ago. It was introduced first in this House, I believe, by the Hon. Eugene Whelan in 1980, so it is nothing new. I have companies in my community, one being Oseco Seeds, which is very concerned about this particular piece of legislation and would like to see it go through. It does a great deal of research itself but also does a great deal of purchasing of seeds from the west. I know of their concern to get this through.

I would share the hon. member's concerns if the largest farm organization in this country did not in fact support this legislation. My colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture, laid it out very well. He is, by the way, a very successful farmer as well.

I am not concerned about this monopoly that the hon. member talks about. What I am concerned about is research and development and that the people who develop the various strains get fair compensation for their development as happens in other countries as well. I just do not have that same concern that the hon. member has.

I might say in passing that orderly marketing is something that every individual business person should do if they are going to have a successful operation, whether large or small. Orderly marketing is not something that should concern the members of this House as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 1. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion is deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the hon. member for Algoma. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

An hon. member: On division.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Foster) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Motions Nos. 4, 5 and 9 in the name of the hon. member for Algoma are in order. Motions Nos. 4 and 5 will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-15 be amended in Clause 73 by striking out line 14 at page 37 and substituting the following therefor:

"73. (1) The Minister shall constitute an."

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-15 be amended by adding immediately after line 4 at page 38 the following new clause:

"74.1 The Commissioner, in consultation with the advisory committee, shall consult with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on all matters related to the administration of the Act if said matters could reasonably be considered as being of concern to the said department".

He said: Mr. Speaker, when I spoke previously I outlined that we had passed a fairly extensive amendment to the advisory committee to the commissioner of plant breeders' rights. This amendment would make the establishment of that committee compulsory.

The present legislation provides that the minister may appoint an advisory committee. I think that this is really the key amendment here this afternoon in that the powers of the advisory committee to assist the commissioner of plant breeders' rights have been more clearly defined in amendments which we passed in the committee itself. They are to advise and assist the commissioner on the manner in which the act is to be applied to individual licences or individual royalties on an individual plant variety.

It also gives the advisory committee responsibility to assist the commissioner in requirements relating to licence and to the interpretation of what reasonable pricing is, wide distribution of a plant variety and reasonable remuneration to the person holding the plant breeders' rights.

This is a key amendment. It is my understanding that the government is prepared to accept it. I know it had wide support at the committee stage so I would hope that it would find support all the way around the House this afternoon.

• (1640)

Motion No. 5 puts in place, in a codified way, a provision for ongoing consultation between the Department of Agriculture and the commissioner for plant breeders' rights. There was an agreement signed between the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Department of Agriculture in June 1988 when the previous bill was established which provides for ongoing consultation among the department, the Director of the Competition Act, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Agriculture Canada to ensure that competition continues to apply.

There has been a great deal of concern in the industry, certainly there was in the CFA brief, that there should be an ongoing arrangement. We were finally able to get a copy of that agreement. I think that the protection through the competition policy of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is there, but it seems to me that it is wise to codify it and to put it in the act itself. This agreement may lapse, maybe the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will have some other name eventually. This ensures that it is in the act itself and is codified.

It simply provides that the commissioner, in consultation with the advisory committee, shall consult with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on all matters relating to the administration of the act if such matters could reasonably be considered as being of concern to the said department. This follows closely the written agreement between the two departments.

I hope that the parliamentary secretary, on behalf of the minister, who unfortunately is not here today, will be able to accept this amendment. I think it is useful in reassuring people that the director of investigations and research under the Competition Act will be in constant consultation with the commissioner for plant breeders' rights and will ensure that monopolistic practices do not develop, that consumers' rights, mostly in this case farmers, or people in other sectors of the agriculture industry, are protected and that there are not takeovers or corporate concentration which is harmful to the general public good.

I hope that both of these amendments will get the support of the House and the government this afternoon.

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. Once again I want to express to the member for Algoma my personal support for Motions Nos. 4 and 5, in particular Motion No. 4. I believe the work of the advisory committee is very important in the administration of plant breeders' rights. I believe that in the long-term interests of the administration of the act the formation of the advisory board should be compulsory and I would support that move.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to support both of these amendments that have been put forward. Many times when we debate in the House or in committee we end up on opposite sides of an issue. It seems to me that in this particular case both Motions Nos. 4 and 5 are good examples of how committees do refine and improve legislation.

The legislation currently before us on plant breeders' rights is long overdue and the industry has been requesting it. In this particular case the committee, and indeed my colleague, have done their job in ensuring that legislation gets refined and gets to be better legislation by the committee process.

Motion No. 4 is an incredibly good motion because it ensures that there is more than one individual on the advisory committee and that there are a group of individuals to assist in ensuring that the act is being administered as it properly should as to licensing and other such things.

Motion No. 5, as my colleague has said, codifies the relationship with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. If there is any fear of the development of a monopoly —and we would hope and expect that the department would be very wary of that in any respect—it basically commanded by this piece of legislation to be very vigilant to ensure that the consumer, in this case the farmer, is not at some future time gouged as a result of the legislation.

I rise in support these two motions and I would hope that others on all sides of the House would support them because it betters this piece of legislation.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will be responding to Motion No. 4 and Motion No. 5.

The minister indicated in his speech at second reading and in the background document he released when the bill was first introduced, that he intended to have an advisory committee to advise on the administration of the Plant Breeders' Rights Act.

When the bill was drafted it followed a format that had been used previously, dating back to Bill C-32 which received first reading in May of 1980. In this format it states that the minister may appoint an advisory committee. I want to remind the House that it was a minister of agriculture who served for many years in this country, the hon. Eugene Whelan, who brought that bill in at that time.

The opposition has expressed a concern that the word "may" in clause 73 implies that there could be situations in which the minister may not appoint an advisory committee. The minister sees an ongoing function for the advisory committee and does not envisage a situation in which the committee would become redundant. For those reasons the government is very supportive of this motion.

Motion No. 5 would require the commissioner, in consultation with the advisory committee, to consult with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on matters related to the administration of the act which could reasonably be considered as being of concern to that department.

The motion is very similar to one which was considered by the legislative committee and rejected. It was rejected not because there was an objection in principle to the proposal, but because this matter is already being covered in a different way. There already exists a memorandum of understanding between the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Agriculture Canada with respect to this legislation. This MOU covers administrative aspects relating to other laws in the Competition Act and the other intellectual property laws. It is intended to ensure that the two departments work closely together and such agreements are not usually included in acts or regulations.

It should be pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that the existing MOU is broader in its coverage than this motion. The motion refers to an official in Agriculture Canada, the commissioner of plant breeders' rights, but the MOU is an agreement between departments. Considerable consultation has been necessary between the two departments in the development of the plant breeders' rights bill. Such consultation will be ongoing as the legislation is implemented. This is provided for in the MOU and so this motion is unnecessary.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 4. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Foster) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 5. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. member: On division.

Motion No. 5 (Mr. Foster) negatived.

• (1650)

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma) moved:

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-15 be amended in Clause 77 by striking out line 6 at page 42 and substituting the following therefor:

"(v) the development of sustainable agriculture in Canada,

(vi) any increase or decrease of public research in plant breeding in Canada,

(vii) the transfer of technology to Third World countries and the development of sustainable agriculture in such countries, and".

He said: Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 9 deals with a report which is provided for in the bill itself. It is envisaged that this bill, after a period of ten years, would be fully opened up and brought to Parliament for a complete review. I had suggested that this be reduced to seven years. Unfortunately, my committee colleagues did not fully agree with that, so it is a ten-year period.

In order for the House of Commons to review it, there is a provision in the bill that the Minister of Agriculture would prepare a report on the operation of the act and the commissioner's office.

Of course, there are ongoing agreements. The UPOV agreement would, I suppose, be included in any report. In any event, clause 71(2) provides for this report. It is suggested that the report will cover the impact of investment as a result of the operation of the act, that it will deal with improvements in facilities to obtain foreign varieties of plants in Canada, protection abroad for commercial purposes of Canadian plant breeders so that they are able to sell their seed varieties abroad and have proper protection and receive the royalties that are due to them, the improvement of plant varieties and so on.

This amendment would simply add to that list of items the report itself could deal with. Item one is the development of sustainable agriculture in Canada. I believe that biotechnology has a great potential in this country for developing seeds which are more resistant to disease or to pests so that we can do away with a certain amount of pesticides and herbicides. It could have a very beneficial effect on sustainable agriculture in this country.

There is a lot more to sustainable agriculture than simply the reduction of chemicals, pesticides and herbicides, but that is one aspect. I think it would be useful for a committee of the House of Commons in the future to see how beneficial this act has been to sustainable agriculture and what elements of sustainable agriculture it would have an impact on.

The second item is an increase or decrease of public research in plant breeding in Canada. One of the greatest concerns is that the government plans to reduce the amount of public research in the country and essentially privatize. I think the government could show its concern, the minister has indicated that he is prepared to maintain public research in agriculture and plant breeding, by accepting that portion of the amendment. We are only talking here about a report containing information for the benefit of members after a ten-year period of operation of the act.

The third item is the transfer of technology to Third World countries and the development of sustainable agriculture in such countries.

At the second reading debate there was a great deal of concern that big, multi-national corporations would seize the plant breeding capacity in this country and then would exploit it to the disadvantage of Third World countries. At the same time there was concern as to whether the bill would be operated in such a way that there would be a good and a safe transfer of technology to Third World countries.

Surely we have a great responsibility in this country, not only for international development but especially for development of the food-producing capacity of those Third World countries. We should be doing that on the basis of sustained agriculture, not on the basis on which much of the agriculture in North America, the United States and other countries, operates today, which is highly dependent on chemicals, fertilizers, pesticides and so on.

That concern has been expressed by church groups and many other groups which came before the committee. I would think that the government might be willing to accept this amendment so that the report that will be made after the operation of the legislation for a number of years will, as much as possible, indicate the exact impact of the bill with regard to those three items which I have listed today. Some of these things are very difficult to quantify.

I would hope that the parliamentary secretary, on behalf of the minister, might be willing to accept this amendment today. I think it touches on a number of areas of great concern to Canadians. At least in the annual report, if not in the parliamentary review which is provided for in this bill, those items of concern to many Canadians would be reported.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be as brief as possible. This motion incorporates the new section proposed for the minister's report.

I would like to list the difficulties posed by attempting to report on development in sustainable agriculture. There is no single agreed definition of what is meant by sustainable agriculture. There is no current measure of the level of sustainable agriculture against which to make comparisons. There are several thrusts, both federal and provincial, to develop the concepts of sustainable agriculture. While one of those thrusts is the breeding of varieties with improved pest and disease resistance, this is only part of the necessary changes. Other changes involve cropping patterns and systems of husbandry.

It can be hoped and expected that in ten years the level of sustainable agriculture will have increased. However, it may be difficult to quantify since the current level is undefined.

In addition, it would be very difficult to determine what proportion of any change will be attributable to the plant breeders' rights legislation rather than any of the other thrusts.

Although clause 77 of the bill does not specify that there will be a report on public plant breeding developments, it is implied in several of the items. An example of this would be improvement of plant varieties to the public benefit and any other public advantage.

It seems unnecessary to spell out every single item that might be an important factor in a report to be delivered in ten years time.

The plant breeders' rights bill is intended to encourage plant breeding in Canada and for Canada. It is possible, although rather unlikely, that some of the new varieties developed may be of potential application in Third World countries.

Currently, there is no marketing of Canadian varieties to Third World countries although some Canadian developed varieties have been used as the basis for plant breeding of improved varieties in the Third World countries.

The introduction of plant breeders' rights in Canada will facilitate the export of seed of protected varieties to other countries. However, this will only impact on exports to other developed countries with similar legislation. It will not influence the export of seed to Third World countries.

The major impediments to Canadian seed exports to Third World countries are the lack of varieties adapted to their conditions and the lack of a seed industry in those countries ready to import and distribute seed.

Seed exports to Third World countries from Canada are not anticipated. In the broader area of the transfer of technology to Third World countries, there are numerous Canadian programs intended to transfer technology to such countries. These include some plant breeding programs funded by CIDA. However, there is no relationship between these programs and the introduction of plant breeders rights' legislation in Canada.

The development of sustainable agriculture in Third World countries clearly will be determined by their national priorities. It would be inappropriate for Canada to try to direct other countries' agricultural programs in a particular direction. Canada can only respond to requests for particular expertise to be made available.

It is impossible to establish a clear relationship between the introduction of plant breeders' rights legislation in Canada and either the transfer of technology to Third World countries or the development of sustainable agriculture in such countries. This proposal is irrelevant to the measurable impact of this legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the hon. member for Mackenzie wish to call it five o'clock?

Mr. Althouse: I would like to call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the hon. member, the Chair would like to remind members that the random draw to establish an order of precedence for consideration of additional items of Private Members' Business was postponed indefinitely by an order made on Wednesday, January 30, 1990. As a consequence, once the remaining item on the current order of precedence has been dealt with by the House, Private Members' Hour will be suspended, except to consider a Private Member's Bill or Private Member's Bill from the Senate.

Private Members' Hour will remain suspended until a random draw has been conducted and the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has reported on the selection of the votable items.

Since there will be no business before the House on Monday between one o'clock and two o'clock, the House may wish to agree to meet only at two o'clock while Private Members' Hour remains suspended. On the other days of the week, the House will continue with the business before it prior to Private Members' Hour whenever there is no Private Members' Business to consider.

* * *

UKRAINIAN GREEK ORTHODOX CHURCH OF CANADA

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton Southwest) moved that Bill S-13, an act to amend an act to incorporate the Ukrainian Greek Orthodox Church of Canada be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to have the opportunity to introduce this bill for the consideration of the House. Just before I speak to the bill, Mr. Speaker, I think you would find that there was unanimous consent to proceed today with all stages of this bill including referral to committee of the whole rather than our usual practice of a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure on behalf of the Liberal Party to agree to the hon. member's request. We are in full agreement that this is a very worthwhile bill and we are agreed that it should proceed in all stages today.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I also concur. I have been informed that discussions have occurred and that the New Democratic Party is in agreement to proceed with this bill through all stages today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): So ordered. On debate, the hon. parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Edmonton Southwest.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, very briefly I would like to just touch on some of the background and history of this bill. Two years ago, hundreds of thousands of Canadians of Ukrainian origin rejoiced in the celebration of the millennium of Ukrainian Christendom.

Legend, supported by various chronicles and some research, has it that the great Apostle Andrew had preached the gospel of Christ along the southern shores of the present day Ukraine and had travelled north on the waters of the Dnipro River, and that he reached the hills where the present capital city of Kiev now stands, planted a cross on the site and prophesied that one day on those hills many churches would be built and from there the gospel of Christ would travel to many lands.

The millennium of Ukrainian Christianity traces to 988 A.D. and the occasion of the embracing of Christianity of Byzantine Rite by Grand Prince Volodymyr the Great, who adopted Christianity as the state religion and began the process of Christianizing his realm.

In so far as Canada is concerned, the Ukrainian Orthodox Church in Canada was established in 1918 to serve the spiritual needs of those who originally survived the various oppressions by immigrating to Canada and also the community of Canadians of Ukrainian heritage whose desire was to maintain their ancient Christian faith.

At the moment, the Ukrainian Orthodox Church of Canada has approximately 300 parishes, five cathedral churches, five sub-cathedral churches and its own theological seminary, St. Andrew's College of Winnipeg which is affiliated with the University of Manitoba. The church has roughly 100 clergy and three bishops whose primate is His Beatitude, Metropolitan Wasyly of Winnipeg and of all Canada.

To get to the substance of the bill, the name "Ukrainian Greek Orthodox Church" was adopted at the time, in 1918, to signify its "Byzantine or (synonymously) Greek Rite", rather than the "Latin Rite". In practice, most parishes and institutions of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church of Canada have excluded the word "Greek" from their names since at least the 1950s or earlier as being redundant to the common usage of the descriptive word "orthodox". The proposed amendments to the church's 1929 charter are intended to update the charter to reflect the present day situation of the church and the current use of its name.

In addition to the formal change of name, a number of provisions in the original charter are proposed to be amended or repealed so that the church can provide for more effective management through its by-laws. The bill would also remove, as being outdated or no longer required, certain restrictions relating to the holding of real estate beyond a certain value or not required for the church's actual use and occupation.

I am indebted to an Alberta colleague in the other place, the Hon. Senator Earl Hastings, who assisted me in the researching of some of this material and who, indeed, was the sponsor of this bill in the other place.

In conclusion, there is a meeting coming up next month in preparation for the general council meeting of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church, scheduled for the Canada Day long weekend in Winnipeg, which is the general council meeting which is held every five years. It is my hope that the House may deal expeditiously with this bill today, and I appreciate the generous unanimous consent that has been extended, so that members of the Consistory who are preparing for the May meeting and the Canada Day meeting can be assured that, indeed, the church will be renamed to reflect the reality of our marvellous Ukrainian presence here in Canada and the reality of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church of Canada.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I would move adoption of the bill at second reading stage.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Edmonton Southwest for taking on the work of this bill. It is very important and very significant that all members of all parties in this House recognize the importance of this and the contribution of the Ukrainian community. I know, in our party, we are all very pleased to be of assistance and to try to expedite this as much as possible.

I, too, would like to thank Senator Hastings in the other place for the work he has done in bringing this forward.

As the hon. member for Edmonton Southwest has said, the bill is fairly straightforward, relating to the Rite which was Constantinople more to a shift in the Latin or Roman Rite, and also with respect to the provisions in respect of the ownership of land, as well as some amendments regarding the administration and by-laws of the church. I think that it is certainly in our interest and the interest of all members of the House to have this passed as quickly as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.12 p.m., this House now stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 5.12 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 27, 1990

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

• (1010)

[English]

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, April 26, consideration of Bill C-15, an act respecting plant breeders' rights, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee and on Motion No. 9 (Mr. Foster) (p. 10738).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When Bill C-15 was last before the House, the hon. member for Mackenzie had the floor. The hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I had risen to begin discussing Motion No. 9 on Bill C-15. This motion proposes to amend the clauses of the bill which outline the rules or the goals of a review of the act. In effect, the ministry of agriculture of the day is to lay a copy of the report before the House after the expiration of 10 years of use of the Plant Breeders' Rights Act.

The bill itself lays out some areas that should be looked at when reviewing the act. They are to find out whether the implementation of the act has resulted in the stimulation of investment in the businesses involving the breeding of plant varieties. They should decide whether the operation of the act results in any improvement in obtaining foreign varieties of plants in the interest of Canadian agriculture. They should check whether the operation of the act results in protection abroad, for commercial purposes, of Canadian plant varieties, and they should test whether the operation of this act provides improvement of plant varieties to the public benefit and particular to the benefit of farmers and nurserymen.

My friend from Algoma has proposed in Motion No. 9 that three more areas be looked at: whether the implementation of the act has led to the development of sustainable agriculture in Canada; whether implementation of the act has increased or decreased the expenditure and application of public research in plant breeding in Canada; and whether the implementation of the act has resulted in the transfer of technology to Third World countries and the development of sustainable agriculture in those countries.

The parliamentary secretary argued on behalf of the government that these three additional areas would be very difficult to measure because there is no agreed single definition of sustainable agriculture. I would accept that, except I have great difficulty when I look at the rules that the government is prepared to accept. The criteria that the minister's parliamentary secretary has used for rejecting the additional three points in Motion No. 9 could apply equally to the four points that the government is willing to accept.

It is not easily determined how anyone could decide whether investment had been stimulated by the introduction of this act. The government and the department admit that no baseline study has been done to determine how much investment there is now. So if there is nothing to measure from, how can one tell that there has been an improvement or a diminution of investments? The minister's Parliamentary Secretary could have argued equally strongly that it would be very difficult to carry out this part of the Act, and yet he is prepared to support that.

In the Act itself, the government is proposing to measure whether or not the operation of the Act results in an improvement of facilities in obtaining foreign varieties of plants into Canada. No one knows now how many foreign varieties are working in Canada. I am aware that there are foreign varieties here which the Department of Agriculture probably does not know about or, if it does, it does not seem to have a list that it was prepared to show to us during the course of the committee's hearings.

For protection abroad for commercial purposes of Canadian plant varieties, we have no baseline study to know now what our penetration of the foreign markets are, so how are we going to measure whether it has been improved or diminished?

The fourth point that the government is prepared to support is with regard to whether there would be an improvement of plant varieties to the public benefit, particularly to the benefit of farmers and nurserymen. We may be able to go backward, find what varieties are in existence now, and set up a system to provide that kind of monitoring and measuring. To my knowledge, and from listening to the witnesses we had before the committee, that system is not in very good shape, if it exists at all.

Therefore, on all these items, the minister's Parliamentary Secretary is correct when he said that it was going to be difficult to make a measurement. I do not see how that can justify the government's to not support the three additional points. The whole area is rather fuzzy, but these are all questions that should be looked at.

It is not going to be easy to make the assessment that Section 77 calls for in the review procedure, but it does give some guidelines. I think that the additional guidelines that have been proposed by the member for Algoma do not conflict with the four already required by the Act which have the government's support.

If it is impossible to make the measurement in the 10–year review, the review panel can simply say it was impossible and explain why. It may find that it has to do this on all four items that the government is now prepared to support, too. But it will be able to give the Parliament of the day, farmers, plant breeders, and consumers in the country some idea of the direction in which the country has shifted because of the introduction of this legislation. I am presuming that the government majority will hold to the end of third reading and that it will pass at this stage, even though I think that is a questionable call and that this is not in the best interests of the country.

In conclusion, I would call on government members and, particularly, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture to review his analysis of these three points in light of the four that he is already prepared to support. I reiterate that the problems that he has with the three that are being proposed by my friend from Algoma are very similar to the problems that he should have with the four he is willing to accept. Since it is all going to be very difficult to measure, I think he would be well disposed to accept the other three and let us have as broad a review as is possible ten years' hence.

• (1020)

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would like to use this opportunity to put on record the concerns that many people from Victoria have expressed to me about this bill.

It is a bill which has not received the attention across the country that it might deserve. Perhaps the title is one that distracts people to believing that it is a very specialized bill. But it is one which many of my constituents feel has grave implications for Canadians, particularly at this time of concern for the environment.

The bill is seen, and in my view quite correctly, as a bill which denies the right to choose the foods and plants which we grow and consume. The bill has not had the discussion across the country that it ought to have. The amendments which have been proposed by my colleagues in the New Democratic Party will go a long way to deal with those concerns.

These amendments include a fee which should be remitted to the international board for plant genetic resources that could be used to convert and develop plant varieties and genetic resources around the world. This would ensure that the commissioner consults with the advisory committee composed of breeders, seed dealers, farmers, and the general public, and that reports would be produced. At the very least, Canadians must be kept informed as to the implications and development of this bill.

At this stage, the government seems determined to put it through. I would hope, however, that it would give very careful consideration to the various amendments, particularly the one that is before the House at this point and that it would listen to the very wise words of the member who has spoken and addressed the House on this issue on our behalf.

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-15 this morning.

I would just like to point out to the House through you, Mr. Speaker, that we in the Liberal party did have some concerns with this bill regarding plant breeders rights. However, we feel fairly satisfied with the processes we went through in the legislative committee where we heard many people with concerns both pro and con for the bill and we had some good discussions.

We feel that this bill could be improved yet, as indicated by the amendments we have put forward, but it appears that the government will not go along with them. However, we feel that the bill has been strengthened to quite an extent. We were pleased to take part in this process and to insist, to the best of our ability, to strengthen that bill. In the bill's original form, the advisory committee was not necessary. We now have agreement from the government that that advisory committee shall be appointed. It is not the prerogative of the minister any more.

We felt very strongly that that advisory committee could serve a very useful capacity in advising the commissioner, who will be put in place with the Act, in the interpretation of the Act. The advisory committee will also be in the position to give advice to commissioners as far as the requirements of regulating and licensing are concerned.

In committee we were very pleased to get the interpretation of the terms "reasonable price" and "widely distributed", as well as those interpretations that did not necessarily exist before. Because of the improvements that have been made to the bill, the commissioner will have to define what "reasonable price" and "widely distributed" are.

We would certainly like to see the passage of the amendments contained in Motion No. 9. We feel that when the reporting stages of this bill take place over the years they would broaden the report and address some of the concerns that other people have.

However, in its so-called wisdom, it is my understanding that the government does not wish to do that. I think, without question, that it is a disappointment to the agri-food industry and to many other Canadians.

I have spoken in the House from time to time about management tools, the agri-food system and the abilities that we have in the system to make our agri-food industry and our primary producer sector, in particular, competitive throughout Canada and the world. That is the name of the game. We must be competitive and have the same abilities as our competitors in order to do that.

During the legislative committee debate, the government provided us with an agreement that has taken place between Agriculture Canada and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which ensures that reporting has to be made on any transactions and any actions that are taken.

There have been concerns, but we feel that, as a result of the effectiveness of the legislative committee and the work that was done there, we could still make some more improvements. However, for the time being, we feel that this bill is sufficient to fulfil the needs requested by the industry for many years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 9. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

An Hon. Member: On division.

Motion No. 9 (Mr. Foster) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Normally, at this time, the House would proceed to taking the deferred division of report stage of the bill now before the house. However, pursuant to Standing Order 45(6), the recorded division will stand deferred until 7.00 p.m. on Monday, April 30, 1990.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Danis: Mr. Speaker, I think you will find unanimous consent of the House to suspend the sitting until eleven o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House will stand suspended until eleven o'clock.

The sitting of the House was suspended at 10.29 a.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 11 a.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

CFB SUMMERSIDE

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, today is the first anniversary of the government's arbitrary decision to close CFB Summerside. Three hundred and sixty-five days have passed since the residents of Summerside and surrounding area were shocked by this announcement. They were shocked that this government made a decision of this magnitude without consultation and without any plan for the future.

A year later the people of this area are still shocked. They are shocked that there still has been no firm federal commitment of jobs. What is really shocking is this government's inability to plan ahead. For a whole year the economy of Summerside and area has suffered because of this government's decision.

Yet there are many Islanders, and many people working to save the base. I commend each and every one of those people and praise them for their dedication.

* * *

NATIONAL VOLUNTEER WEEK

Mr. Willie Littlechild (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, Canada's volunteer force is one of the largest and strongest in the world. Countless numbers of men and women have dedicated their time, often without thanks, to causes and programs that could not exist without their generosity.

This week has been set aside exclusively to pay tribute to those citizens of our nation who have made a difference. They have exercised fully their citizenship by their actions and have sustained Canada's reputation as a caring and compassionate country.

I am asking that we as members of this House do something to encourage and support voluntary action as a vital and positive expression of our Canadian way of life.

Some 13 million Canadians from all walks of life and from every cultural background make volunteering an integral part of their lifestyle. Working as individuals or through organized groups like the Ponoka Wildrose Volunteer Week Committee, volunteers are the vital links that hold our society together. It is up to us to make sure that everyone around us is aware of National Volunteer Week.

April 22 to 28 may be the official week to recognize volunteers, but it is only the beginning. Our scores of volunteers are a valuable resource to be encouraged and cherished every day.

* * *

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, Transport Canada's refusal to intervene in the contract talks between the limousine drivers at Pearson International Airport and the owner of Aaroport, Air Cab, and McIntosh limousines has not only hurt the travelling public through a work stoppage but also the livelihood of over 150 families.

The drivers' concerns are lower driver profits, poor working facilities, refusing drivers from attending co-ordination group meetings and Transport Canada's poor performance refusing illegal scoopers from taking unlawful fares. These are legitimate bread and butter issues affecting the lives and families of each of these drivers and are most deserving of being immediately addressed by this government.

I call upon the Minister of Transport to help mediate this dispute immediately, and to issue temporary permits to the drivers during these negotiations so that their loss of income will not be continued for another two months.

It is time that the minister learned to listen and hear the concerns of this important constituency.

* * *

ETHIOPIA

Hon. David MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the serious situation in famine-threatened parts of northern Ethiopia, particularly the provinces of Wollo, Tigre and Eritrea, which presently affects the lives of 4.5 million people, recent reports indicate that in fact the small belg rains, which took place earlier this month, have provided some hope. There is the availability of seed for farmers, the migration of people has been quite limited and, in fact, the international effort, with the support of the Ethiopian relief agencies, has provided much needed assistance through the southern route.

Earlier this week the Minister for External Relations had a very important meeting with her colleagues in New York. They were trying to find a way to deal with the present situation in Ethiopia, to which the Government of Ethiopia itself responded just the day before yesterday, adding that everything that could be done will be done by it in order to ensure that relief supplies would reach all those in need of assistance. More importantly, they said and I quote:

> As regards the call for peace and national reconciliation, the Ethiopian government wishes to assure the international community of its continued commitment to begin substantive peace talks with the EPLF and other rebel groups and of its determination to reach peaceful political solutions.

We would all hope, Mr. Speaker, that peace would be the final solution to a very threatened and endangered people.

* * *

DIEFENBAKER CENTRE

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, Canadians everywhere honour the memory of the late John George Diefenbaker. As the only Prime Minister from Saskatchewan and by far the most successful from western Canada, he is fondly remembered as a great civil libertarian and friend of ordinary people.

In recognition of Mr. Diefenbaker's contribution to Canadian public life, the Diefenbaker Centre was built ten years ago on the banks of the South Saskatchewan River at the University of Saskatchewan. It houses the Diefenbaker Museum and the Diefenbaker papers and it is an important archive both for the long-term member from Prince Albert and for a major part of Canadian history.

Now the centre is threatened by a shortage of operating funds. The centre has received its last grant and will close by the end of June unless new funding is provided by the federal government. Given the massive cuts to education funding by the federal government, the university is not in a position to take up the slack.

The federal government must provide funding for this important piece of Canadian heritage. With our nation under great stress, it is more important than ever that we remember our common heritage, not emphasize our differences. When will this government honour Diefenbaker's vision, rather than permit it to be extinguished?

* * *

LENDING INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, a constituent of mine recently brought to my attention the alarming leeway with which some of our credit card companies and lending institutions are allowed to operate in this country.

This particular customer of one of the major credit card companies has forwarded to me a statement indicating that he was charged $75.17 interest on an outstanding loan in the amount of $80 for a period of 18 days. By some fancy manoeuvring the credit card company was able to invoice this individual that amount.

Because this particular individual questioned this exorbitant charge for which he had been invoiced, and because he protested so loudly, the company reacted and reconsidered. It agreed to credit him on a future billing, so that he ends up paying $4.83 instead of $75.17. The company claimed that it was not in error, this was just a goodwill gesture.

One wonders how many Canadians who are not influential have been duped by lending institutions such as credit card companies. It is worrisome to think that unless customers put up a loud protest, many of them ultimately end up paying too much for a service.

When is the government going to take up the cause for ordinary Canadians and look into the methods used by credit card companies to ensure fair business practices are applied in the matter of interest rates when applied to credit accounts of customers?

* * *

NATIONAL VOLUNTEER WEEK

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I will join over 900 volunteers in forming a human ring around the Scarborough Civic Centre to celebrate volunteerism in our community.

This event will be a very appropriate way of celebrating National Volunteer Week, and I want to pay tribute to the Scarborough Association of Volunteer Administrators for initiating this ring around Scarborough.

Volunteers play a crucial and often overlooked role in our society. Whether it is in health care, recreation, social assistance or community service, volunteers make all our lives richer.

Tomorrow, Scarborough will celebrate the important contribution volunteers have made to our community. I am proud to be taking part in that celebration and extend to all volunteers in Scarborough and across Canada sincere thanks for taking the time to care.

* * *

WHARVES

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, the livelihood of our fishermen depends on safe harbours and proper wharves, otherwise fishing boats can be seriously damaged and, more important, fishermen risk injury and possible loss of life.

I rise today on behalf of the fishermen in the community of Eastern Passage who are still waiting for the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to extend their wharf. Despite repeated promises that the extension was on the regional list of priorities, nothing—and I repeat nothing—has yet been done.

I recently met with Stan Purdy, who expressed the fishermen's frustration with this government's unwillingness to come up with the necessary funds for this improvement. At a time when the Atlantic fisheries is in a state of crisis, I believe that repairing and improving our harbour infrastructure is one way in which the federal government can show a real commitment to these fishermen.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and his predecessor are well aware of the representations I have made imploring them to allocate the necessary funds. I urge the government again today to take action now before there is a loss of vessels or, indeed, a loss of life, because of the lack of this needed improvement.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I rise to inform members of a critical situation occurring in southern Alberta. Southern Alberta is really a semi-desert area, such that early settlers and political leaders of all parties agreed that settlement required a secure source of water.

• (1110)

Under that policy, 13 irrigation districts have been organized and some 1.4 million acres of land are now irrigated. This has led to a sophisticated society of over 300,000 people raising grain, corn, beans, sugarbeets and other vegetables. As well, we have the most sophisticated beef, pork and poultry production and processing industry in North America. Over 50 towns and villages require irrigation water for their continued existence.

Members should visit southern Alberta and see this area first-hand, before so easily rejecting completion of the Oldman River dam. Indeed, courts should be more sensitive to the real consequences of their decisions. We are not dealing with abstract ideas here, but with the lives and histories of real people.

* * *

CHERNOBYL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was the fourth anniversary of the tragic explosion and fire at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Ukraine. This date has been declared by the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian SSR as the day of the Chernobyl disaster. Many people died. Three million people are living in irradiated territory in the Soviet Union and evacuations from affected villages are continuing today.

Only through effective international co-operation and the joint efforts of scientists and experts from all countries, including Canada, will the consequences of this disaster be dealt with.

I join with many Ukrainian Canadians and Ukrainians in calling for an early closure of the Chernobyl plant and a planned phasing out of other nuclear power plants. I particularly urge the Government of Canada to co-operate fully in international efforts to assist in responding to the Chernobyl tragedy.

As parliamentarians, let us join today in commemorating the memory of those who died following the Chernobyl explosion, and resolve to work together to ensure that we respond to the ecological crisis that is destroying the air, soil and water of this planet.

The Sea of Azov, the Black Sea and hundreds of lakes and rivers in the Ukraine and Canada are dying. We must take action now.

* * *

MULTICULTURALISM

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to learn of Quebecor President Pierre Peladeau's apology for his comments diminishing the place of Jewish people and women in our society, comments which were insulting and personally offensive.

As a Jewish woman, proud of my heritage and the contribution that my people and women generally have made to Canada, I believe it is important to promote a more generous Canadian approach to judging people; not by their gender, ethnic origin or mother tongue, but by their hard work, commitment and achievements. Public scrutiny and even criticism should be based on one's actions, not one's origins.

Mr. Peladeau's statements were unhelpful toward our society's goal to reinforce in our young people the longstanding Canadian values of fairness, tolerance and equality of opportunity, rather than suggesting that, no matter how hard they try, their place will be determined not by their effort, but by their language or heritage.

Tolerant, fair-minded Canadians held out the hope that Mr. Peladeau might change his attitudes and were most pleased that he finally decided to show more respect for the place of all peoples in Canada, particularly in the province of Quebec.

* * *

[Translation]

POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. Jean-Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, the report of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations concerning the future of postal service in Canada was tabled in the House this week.

This report, with its 39 recommendations, is the result of more than six months of work by members of this committee, during which Canadians came to express to us their views and opinions on the future of our Canadian postal service.

Canadians want an efficient, fast, safe postal service that is accessible to all at a realistic, reasonable cost.

They no longer want Canadians' taxes being used to pay for deficits due to mismanagement.

After thirty years in which Canada Post piled deficit upon deficit, it is now making a profit by constantly improving its services to customers. The 97 per cent user satisfaction rate confirms that.

We are now on the right track and we have every reason to be very proud of it. I therefore hope that the government and members of this House will give this report a favorable reception, in the best interest of the future of our Canadian postal services.

* * *

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance of the province of Quebec has been forced to take strong economic measures to deal with the growing recession that has been caused by the Tory's budget and the high interest rate policy.

Quebec has reduced personal taxes to stimulate the economy. It has embarked on a massive $2 billion capital expenditure program to deal with rising unemployment, and it has been forced to accept a $1.75 billion deficit.

The Government of Quebec realizes that a recession has already started, yet this government and the federal Minister of Finance continue with their opposite fiscal policy of attempting to slow down the economy by maintaining high interest rates.

We call upon the government and the Minister of Finance to abandon their ill-found fiscal policy and to heed the cries from Quebec.

* * *

POST OFFICE CLOSURE

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, the community of Orangedale, Nova Scotia, is a good example of the results of what the government is doing to rural and small-town Canada. In January, the community lost its CN VIA rail station which had been a landmark for this picturesque community for over 100 years. Now, Orangedale residents have learned that Canada Post plans to close its post office there on May 15. This is the unkindest, cruelest cut of all.

The government is not content with taking the heart of the community, now it must rob its soul. The vital service is mainly used by senior citizens who are now forced to travel 20 miles to Whycocomagh to handle their special mailing and money orders.

Canada Post, in announcing this decision, offered them a retail postal service with no money to finance it. Instead they are being told that they must accept a rural route delivery which is totally unacceptable to the community of Orangedale.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the government's own Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs released very troubling figures about bankruptcy in Canada. These figures are another brush stroke in the evolving picture—another Voice of Fire, for that matter—of the failure of the government's economic policies.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs stated that bankruptcies across Canada soared 29 per cent in the first three months of 1990. Katherine Swift, Chief Economist for the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, said about these figures:

> The first quarter statistics are certainly corroborating peoples' suspicions of an economic downturn generally.

She went on to say:

> I wouldn't be surprised if we see worse numbers over the next few months.

Why is the minister continuing with policies that are clearly causing financial crisis for thousands of Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I view those numbers with no pleasure at all. The hon. member has asked why are we doing what we are doing.

It is not unusual at this stage of economic development in the business cycle for the level of business bankruptcies to increase. However, it would be far worse if we ignored the inflationary problem today and delayed taking action. If we did so, we would see a much higher level of inflation, a much higher level of interest rates, and the consequent still higher level of bankruptcies that would flow from that.

That is the clear policy of the Government of Canada. I have made that clear in every answer that I have given to the House so far this week.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister's problem is that he is not only concerned about inflation, but he is also obsessed with it, to the exclusion of concern about any other economic indicator. Yet the minister and the government insist on imposing a 7 per cent goods and services tax on just about everything, a tax which the minister himself admits will increase inflation.

Yesterday, Mr. Laurent Thibault, President of the Canadian Manufacturer's Association, confirmed views that have been expressed by many people across the country and in the House when he said that some middlemen will take advantage of the replacement of the manufacturer's sales tax with the goods and services tax to raise prices.

Mr. Thibault said:

> That's the difficulty in trying to make a promise that prices will be lower.

Why is the minister continuing to make promises about the goods and services tax that likely will not and cannot be kept? If he is really concerned about inflation, why is he persisting with a tax that is not only unfair but, by his own admission, highly inflationary?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me point out that I am not obsessed with one particular economic indicator. In the review of our economic policies, we review the widest range possible of economic indicators and arrive at our decisions based on that.

• (1120)

It is very clear that economic history—the lessons that we learned in the late 1970s and early 1980s—fully support the position that we have taken. At that time the government ignored the economic indicators and led us into that most serious recession in 1981–82.

Mr. Mills: That's not true.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Hon. members opposite are saying that is not true. That is absolutely true and people who have reviewed the economic history of that time fully agree with the position that I have taken and stated in the House today.

The hon. member has commented on the goods and services tax. Let me make a few points here. The first is that with the goods and services tax the cost of doing business for agriculture, the resource sector, the manufacturing sector, and the service sector will be reduced. That is going to help our ability to keep the levels of inflation down.

The hon. member has said I have made promises. I have not made promises about what is going to happen with prices. I have pointed out that the transition from the existing sales tax to the goods and services tax should result in a one-time only increase in the cost of living of 1.25 per cent.

If, at the negotiating table, business and labour try to take more out of the economy than it is capable of delivering, then we could see a higher level of inflation. That is a danger that I have been pointing out. That is why I have been calling on the business community to make it absolutely clear that they will pass on these savings to the consumer so that we do not have that inflationary surge.

[Translation]

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, interestingly, the minister has finally admitted it will be impossible for him and for the government to force businesses to pass on any advantages or benefits of the GST to the public—to consumers in general.

My supplementary is also directed to the minister. Last Wednesday, Mr. Laurent Thibault also stated that the government's current policy, which includes a rapidly increasing tax burden, high interest rates and an artificially overvalued Canadian dollar, is having a severe impact on the competitive position of Canadian manufacturers. Those were Mr. Thibault's words.

Furthermore, Mr. Thibault asked the government to change its monetary policy which is penalizing the entire Canadian manufacturing industry.

My question to the minister is this: When will he finally realize that his policies are not working and that he is the only one who still believes they do?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me just point out that there are many organizations which have said that they are going to pass on those savings to the consumer.

The head of the Ford Motor Company and Mr. Peapples, the head of General Motors, have said that they will pass on these savings to the consumer. The result will be the reduction in the price of a $20,000 car of $600. That is very important. The price of a $20,000 pick-up truck for a farmer will drop by about $2,000. There are very real savings which the industries involved have made it very clear they are going to pass on to their consumers.

I want to comment on the member's reference to Mr. Thibault. Mr. Thibault said that the goods sector in the economy, the manufacturing sector and some of the companies in the resource sectors, are being very clearly impacted by the policies that we have been following. I understand that. But I have pointed out to people in the manufacturing sector that it is the service sector and the government sector that have been problems in holding up the expectations for inflation.

We heard from the Province of Quebec yesterday. It increased its program spending by 8.5 per cent with an economy that has an inflation rate of about 5.5 per cent. These are the things that I am concerned about.

I am also concerned about some of the wage settlements that have been brought in by governments. I have pointed out that the provincial governments have been increasing in the 6.5 per cent to 7 per cent range, whereas the the federal government is increasing at 4.2 per cent.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Indian Affairs and it concerns the Akwesasne Reserve in my riding.

Last night violence broke out again in the Mohawk community of Akwesasne. Four people, members of a search party looking for a missing native elder, were beaten with baseball bats and sent to hospital. Gunfire was reported and electrical power in the village of St. Regis was knocked out.

Can the minister report to us on the progress of her negotiations with the American authorities? Has she finally convinced the Americans to take the necessary measures to restore order on the U.S. side of the Akwesasne Reserve?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's concern for the reserve within his riding and I certainly share that concern with him.

We have had ongoing negotiations, talks and, certainly, action by the Ontario and Quebec policing groups to try to give whatever assistance is necessary to Grand Chief Mitchell. There have been discussions with the American officials. I am confident that they are quite aware of our concern and the need for action in this particular case. We will continue our discussions with them and watch carefully over the weekend.

We have a deputy minister on staff here in Ottawa who will be monitoring carefully over the weekend and we will continue to make the necessary contacts to assure that all help is given.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Americans do not wait until it is too late before they move ahead to provide the necessary protection.

My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue.

* * *

[Translation]

CUSTOMS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): My second question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The minister is of course aware that Canada Customs at the Cornwall port of entry is located on the reserve in other words—on Cornwall Island.

What steps has the minister taken or does he intend to take to ensure the safety of Canadian customs officers and all users of the Cornwall bridge?

[English]

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that Revenue Canada and myself, as minister, have been quite concerned about the potentially dangerous situation on Cornwall Island for some time. That is why we have taken numerous precautionary steps, including agreement with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and provincial police forces to supplement the forces already stationed around the customs office buildings. That is why we have put additional security measures in the building and are currently expanding and improving those operations.

As far as the safety of the customs officers are concerned, I can assure the hon. member that every step has been taken.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question is for the Minister of Finance. Business and consumer bankruptcies across the country are rising dangerously because of the government's high interest rate policy. Last month alone, there were more bankruptcies, over 4,100, than in the worst month of the worst year on record in the country, 1982. The Premiers, the CLC, the House finance committee and the CMA have all called for interest rate cuts.

Will the minister, even if he will not listen to these voices, at least listen to these 4,100 tragic bankruptcies in a single month?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to accept the word of the hon. member in anything that he puts in a preamble to a question. In the preamble to his question yesterday he purported to put forward a quote from me and he distorted that quote by leaving some key information out of it. I do not forget and I do not accept for a minute what the hon. member has just said in his preamble if he is going to distort in that sort of dishonest way.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. minister has a quarrel with an hon. member on something that was said or implied in the House, it should be brought to the Speaker.

• (1130)

At the moment the imputation that the hon. minister has just made is not acceptable. I would ask him to withdraw, and I will ask the hon. member to put another question. I ask both the hon. member and the minister to be very careful.

I would ask the hon. minister to withdraw.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister has made an imputation that the hon. member was dishonest. I know that the hon. minister would not want to leave that on the record.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thought you were asking the hon. member to ask the question again, but I will take back what I said about using that one word "dishonest". What I said about the incorrectness of the member's quotation still stands.

Mr. Simmons: That's bargaining.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is not bargaining. Don't be silly, Roger.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am not bargaining with the Speaker. I am planning on stating the facts.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has asked the minister to withdraw the imputation of dishonesty. That has been withdrawn, and the matter is closed.

The hon. member will put his supplementary question, and I know he will be conscious of the comments of the Chair and under the circumstances, be very careful.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in fact those statistics came directly from the statistical bulletin of the Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy which was released yesterday.

Can I ask for clarification from the Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is giving the lead question on behalf of his party, and I understand that. I would ask him to put his question.

If there is to be an argument about anything that has taken place before it will have to take place at another time. Please put the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Langdon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

In 1982, the minister attacked the Liberal government because 40 per cent of bankruptcies were taking place in Quebec. This year, according to his statistics, 42.5 per cent of all bankruptcies will occur in Quebec. Is the minister proud that he improved on the 1982 figure for Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my earlier answer I am not pleased to see companies go bankrupt, but I do know that this is one of the elements of the type of market system that we have at this stage of the business cycle. The number of bankruptcies of companies does increase.

The difference in 1982 was that we had been in a recession for a full 12 months. The interest rates were still quite high relative to the inflation picture of the day. Today we have not been in a recession. Today we are still seeing inflationary pressures that are causing concern. Those inflationary pressures were clearly subsiding in 1982. That is a very clear distinction between 1982 and 1990.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the minister that it is 1990. He is responsible for policy.

Consumer debt is reaching intolerable levels, 75 per cent of personal disposable income, up from 60 per cent in 1984. That can only lead to more bankruptcies, with these high interest rates. Will the minister stop repeating the common old refrain in his answers, or does he think that there is any Canadian left who believes what he is saying?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I read into the record some comments made in an editorial in The Financial Post, one of the leading financial newspapers in the country.

Clearly there are people in this country who do support the position we have taken. Those people have the foresight to understand that if we do not take this position, if we do not get the problem of inflation under control today, then the problems in the future, the bankruptcies that the hon. member is concerned about, will increase even more because of the fact that inflation will increase and interest rates will increase even further. That will lead to a much greater slowdown in the economy and bankruptcies will flow from that. The foresight we are using in the conduct of monetary policy, financial policy and economic policy today we believe will save us from the problems we had in 1981–82.

* * *

JUSTICE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice, I would like to direct my question to the Acting Minister of Justice, and ask him about the reported hearing and judgment recently made by the Supreme Court of Canada on the basis of secrecy.

This may be the first time that the Supreme Court of Canada has decided that secrecy should prevail over one of its hearings and decisions. I think it is important to ask the minister whether the government is a party to this proceeding, whether it has any knowledge of the matter larger than the knowledge which the public has, and whether it is in favour or against the imposition of secrecy in this matter.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think it is an important question. In the absence of the minister who is away on government business, we do not have any knowledge other than what is reported in the press at this time. Of course, it is still before the Supreme Court, as my hon. friend knows, and I would suggest that we not comment further until the Supreme Court decides what to do with this particular case.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the minister. I want to press him on this and ask whether any steps will be taken or any representations made by the government to the Supreme Court of Canada in connection with this matter, not because the Supreme Court of Canada is necessarily wrong in its decision, but just to provide greater assurance to Canadians that the public interest is being served in this matter.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I obviously appreciate my hon. friend's concern. I am sure my colleague, the Minister of Justice, who will be back early next week, will take that into consideration. As I have suggested, it is before the Supreme Court and I do not think we should comment any further at this stage.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board, my question is addressed to the acting minister.

Just a few months ago in an official report to the United Nations, the government told the world how wonderfully women are doing in Canada. Now the task force has stripped away the phoney veneer of equality and exposed the sexism and stereotypes that keep the work of women in the Public Service underutilized, underpaid and exploited. Given the minister's promise of immediate action early this week, what has the minister done to stop the discriminatory firing of women at twice the rate of men?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board accepted with appreciation the task force report and the great work done by the task force which was initiated by the Treasury Board.

The task force has indicated some legitimate concerns in terms of how the Public Service under the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission does not permit women the opportunity that they should be provided. The President of the Treasury Board also pointed out that in those areas which are totally under the discretion of this government, in other words governor-in-council appointments, the record is exemplary, far better than any predecessors.

The briefing note I have from the minister in terms of the newspaper article about women being fired at a rate of twice that of men is that that statement is simply not accurate. Those figures do not stand up to the analysis that I have in my hand.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the same minister. Women in the Public Service do not believe and do not want more words from the minister. They want action. There is clearly discrimination and firing going on. Will the minister immediately, if there is any question about the figures, put lay-offs on hold until he can get to the bottom of the question and stop the victimization of women.

• (1140)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): I wonder why the hon. member feels it is necessary to be so accusatory and to not acknowledge that it was this government which brought forward that task force and asked the task force to do the study. It is this government which has shown, in terms of GIC appointments, its concern. By its actions it has demonstrated that it believes that women are every bit as capable as men of taking on these important decisions.

It is this government and the minister who said the recommendations of the task force are immediately before the Treasury Board and should be brought forward. I do not think it serves anybody's purpose to be indignant and to make false accusations about the motives of this government.

* * *

REAL WOMEN

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. The Secretary of State Department has funded and is considering funding again REAL Women. In their recent newsletter they promoted the view that feminist women are to blame for the Montreal massacre. They also promote intolerance to gays and other minorities in our society. In view of the cuts that this government has made to equality-seeking organizations, will the minister assure this House and will she assure Canadian women that this anti-equality organization will never again receive federal funding.

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say, although I haven't seen the letter, I have certainly read the newspaper reports on it. If those are accurate I am deeply offended by it, as I am sure all members of this House would be.

The Secretary of State is not here today. I understand there is an application that has not been responded to. I will be discussing this matter with him and bringing to his attention this most recent incident because as you know the criteria for funding under the women's program are for organizations that promote full equality for women.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, women in this country are feeling pain, and minority groups in this country are feeling pain. There is a lot of pain in Canada right now.

Will the minister urge the Secretary of State and her other cabinet colleagues to give some kind of guarantee that this organization that promotes intolerance in our society will never again get federal dollars?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to reiterate that the objectives of this government, in its policies and its programs, are to ensure that we work toward full equality for women so that there is economic equality, legal equality and social justice. Only organizations that promote those goals should even be considered for funding by this government. That would certainly be my view and I am sure the view of my colleagues.

* * *

ETHIOPIA

Hon. David MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for External Relations and International Development. It concerns the current situation in Ethiopia which I know all Canadians are extremely concerned about, particularly with recent reports of the threat of famine to millions of people in the northern part of that country.

In terms of the present situation of famine threat, as one organization has said, it is more the result of war rather than the weather. I know that the minister has been working with her colleagues and attempting to find some solution to this. I believe she met with a number of her counterparts in New York earlier this week and developed a set a principles. Could she tell us what she thinks these principles might achieve and what they represent in terms of some resolution of this very serious crisis.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by thanking the hon. member for this question and his abiding interest in the situation in Ethiopia.

According to our assessment, the aid now in place is not sufficient to reach all the people in the stricken areas. It seems there are still millions of people who will not be reached. Despite Canada's continuing efforts, I felt that for humanitarian reasons we had to do more, and that is why, on behalf of Canada, I took the initiative in co-ordinating the drafting of a statement of principles—in fact, a code of conduct—for the purpose of guaranteeing delivery of food to people in the stricken areas.

This statement of principles, endorsed by the Common Market countries, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland and the United States, is an appeal to the parties to the conflict to, first of all, suspend hostilities; guarantee safe delivery of aid by neutral agencies such as NGOs, international organizations and the churches; recognize the role of the United Nations in food delivery; and abstain from all military attacks on food convoys. I repeat, all these countries endorse this initiative for humanitarian reasons, and the Soviet Union, although it did not endorse the statement, did endorse the intent of the recommendations. I hope this new initiative will make it possible to open new corridors so that we can deliver larger quantities of food to people in the famine-stricken areas.

* * *

[English]

COMMUNICATIONS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the government has once again ignored the local and human impact of its budget by jacking up the fees that cities and towns across Canada must pay to operate emergency radios for fire, ambulance and police across this land.

In the city of Côte St. Luc, in my own riding of Mount Royal, they expect their fees will increase by 1,000 per cent. The government has put its hand right into the taxpayers' pockets.

My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Why has the government decided to increase this exorbitant and unconscionable tax on public safety?

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for her question.

The fees in question were established under the Radio Act amendments, which the hon. member, as I recall, spoke to, dealt with and made a contribution to in 1986 and 1987. In 1987, the law was passed which provides for no discrimination and no artificial subsidization of users of scarce radio frequencies across the country.

In no way will there be any adverse impact upon public safety with this move. The municipalities and organizations in question have had three years forewarning and have had ample opportunity to budget for these changes. I should point out as well that 20 per cent of municipalities across the country have had reductions in the user fees.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister a supplementary question. I have some doubts about that figure. I remember when we debated that bill, Mr. Speaker, I said that we would have such a situation. Now we are faced with a 1,000 per cent increase.

Is the Finance Minister prepared to promise today to withdraw this dangerous indirect tax which threatens the effectiveness of these essential lines of communication for police, fire and ambulance services for the public? Is the Finance Minister prepared to make that commitment?

[English]

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to recall that while percentage increases may seem rather inordinate, the fact of the matter is that cities such as my own which used several hundred radio transmitters and receivers, were liable to pay only $288 per year whereas, private, charitable and safety organizations which were not related to municipalities, were paying the full fees.

So I am sure that the hon. member, in her constant quest for justice and equity, will agree that this is only fair.

* * *

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Some six mining communities in the Timiskaming and Algoma districts are facing the loss of some 3,500 jobs this year because of the closure of mines. In Elliot Lake alone, this involves some 2,000 jobs for miners and another 1,500 estimated jobs in the service industries.

Is the government willing to put in place, in co-operation with the province of Ontario, an over-all economic recovery program to help these communities and the families who face the loss of their jobs, their homes and their livelihoods?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman puts forward a point of view that is a very clear reflection of regrettable developments in northern Ontario and northern Quebec, to name two areas, particularly northern Ontario where his riding is located. He is correct about Elliot Lake. We have had some discussions in terms of Elliot Lake as to what might take place with respect to responding at least in part to the lay-offs. I remind him of the work of FEDNOR. It stands by, ready to help.

• (1150)

With respect to Community Futures and the work of the Department of Employment and Immigration, I should say the federal government has tried with decentralization in respect of the work of the Department of Veterans Affairs to move people from urban areas of Ontario to places like Kirkland Lake. These are steps we have taken. They do not replace the job loss. I would never pretend that that is the case. I do not know what the government of Ontario would have in mind, but appropriate contacts could obviously be made if those interests are there.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, although FEDNOR is a useful program, in its three years of development it has created only about one-third of the number of jobs which will be lost in one year in this one industry.

Would the minister's department be prepared to take a leading role in putting together a major cash commitment for industrial and community adjustment, for decentralization of government offices out of Toronto and Ottawa and for a major funding commitment for economic restructuring for northeastern Ontario in the face of this tremendous emergency?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer that supplementary question because there is additional information which I can share with the member about FEDNOR and what is being done by the federal government in northern Ontario that would interest him.

First, he is wrong in terms of job-creation. FEDNOR has created over 1,400 jobs. That is very close to the level of concern for job creation that exists in Timiskaming now.

As the hon. member knows, FEDNOR has had a special task force there. We have had officials in the whole Kirkland Lake-Timiskaming area for the last four months putting together a strategy which answers a great deal of what he has suggested. Most important, I think we should work together with the province of Ontario to come up with a broader strategy. We are trying to do that. FEDNOR can help but we need a broader strategy and this we are doing.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

The minister has been very upset lately because we have compared his words of 1982 when he opposed a high interest rate policy, and his actions today when he is implementing and supporting a high interest rate policy. Yesterday, in answer to my question on wage controls, the minister said, and I quote:

Mr. Speaker, I have made it quite clear that I do not believe in wage and price controls. I do not think that they work.

That was the minister's answer yesterday. Can the minister explain why, on August 4, 1982, he voted for the Liberal regime of wage and price controls? Where is the consistency in the words and actions of the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the position that I took in that particular vote may have related to a range of issues that were being discussed at that time.

Before I comment on what I might or might not have done in a particular vote, if the hon. member had had the courtesy to send me a notice of the question so I could refer to it, he might get a better answer.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Minister of Finance does not remember what he said on a bill which kept us sitting through June, July and until August 4, 1982. The legislation was the Public Service restraint act. He voted with the—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Another deliberate contempt of the rules by the NDP.

Mr. Murphy: —government almost each and every time he had a chance. He should remember what his policy was.

My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. What is the difference between a Liberal finance minister and a Conservative finance minister?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the opportunity the hon. member has given me to draw these conclusions.

Let me reflect back to 1979–80, when the Liberal finance critic at the time, who happens to be the Leader of the Opposition, was asked whether he supported the high interest rate policy at the time, and whether he would resign if that interest rate policy was not changed. He said, not once but twice, that he would resign. He said it twice. I was sitting right beside him. He said right beside me, that he would resign.

Mr. Speaker: Despite the minister's enjoyment of being given a great opportunity to consider the question extensively, I think we will have to move on.

FISHERIES

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, I would like to put a question to the right hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

He will probably know that the Newfoundland premier, yesterday, indicated that his colleague, the new fisheries minister here, had scuttled negotiations between the Newfoundland and federal governments on the subject of a fisheries aid package.

How can the federal government here possibly come up with a satisfactory package if it refuses to consult with the Newfoundland government whose fishermen and whose plant workers are being mauled and pummelled the most by the current fisheries disaster? Is this part of this government's continuing isolation of Newfoundland over the constitutional issue? Are there fish in Meech Lake after all?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are two separate questions here.

If the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador is isolated, that is an action quite clearly of their choice after a debate that they rammed through the House of Assembly of Newfoundland.

With regard to the question of an assistance program to help the fishery in Atlantic Canada, and particularly the northern cod fishery which is in serious crisis, the hon. member knows there have been extensive negotiations. I have been part of them myself. They have been going on for some time.

There has been some area of disagreement in that, at least in some of the discussions in which I have been involved, the government of Newfoundland which has contributed to the problem does not appear very willing to contribute cash to the solution of the problem. Naturally, as we are bringing forward a policy which my colleague hopes to announce in a few days, we hope that there will be an acceptance of responsibility for its share of solving this problem on the part of the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I say to the minister that it is not only a disagreement, they have stopped talking altogether. That is quite a different thing than a disagreement.

I want to ask the minister a supplementary question. When does he anticipate that the proposed, much talked about, much awaited aid package will finally be made public? What does the minister see as the real purpose of the package? Is it to help the fishermen and plant workers to bridge the gap to better times, or is it just going to be the latest element in what I submit is the government's insidious plan to shut down rural Canada by so-called diversification, a code word for resettlement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as a former supporter of Mr. Smallwood, the hon. member is a much greater expert on questions relating to resettlement in Newfoundland and Labrador than I am.

There is no insidious plan on the part of the government of Canada. We do, however, have a determination to finally take account of the fact that there is a very serious problem in the northern cod fishery. We are putting together a policy that has involved extensive consultation as to the means by which we can provide a long term answer to that problem. We have been consulting extensively with the unions, with the companies, with provinces that are willing to be forthcoming. We expect that the announcement will be made in the next days or weeks.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the House there will be a single question from the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso, and a single question from the hon. member from Windsor—Lake St. Clair.

[Translation]

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question was directed to the Minister of Fisheries, but in his absence, I will direct it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

This year, the fishermen of Chéticamp, who started their season this week, will be subject to new restrictions on their fishing activities because at the very last minute, the Minister of Fisheries decided to introduce a program to monitor fish landings, but without sufficient resources. Because of the lack of observers for this program, times and locations where fishermen can land their catch have been limited, which may put downward pressure on prices and fishermen's incomes.

Why is the Minister of Fisheries making fishermen in Chéticamp and elsewhere in the Gulf pay for his department's lack of planning?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept that the present problem is the result of a lack of planning. The hon. member asked a specific question. I am confident that the minister, if he were here, would be able to give a specific answer. Unfortunately, I don't have the details but I will advise my colleague, the responsible minister, of this question, and I can assure the hon. member that he will receive a detailed answer.

* * *

• (1200)

[English]

TRADE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to whomever speaks for the Minister of Industry, the Minister of Trade or the Prime Minister or whomever.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. McCurdy: Like many other parts manufacturers in the automobile industry, Kelsey-Hayes of Windsor, which is owned by Varity Corporation, is moving to the United States. In this instance, however, the government can do something. Varity Corporation, which was previously Massey-Ferguson, was bailed out by the federal government to the tune of $125 million, as a result of which they entered into a covenant to ensure Canadian jobs and the government has an equity position in Varity.

Will the government use its arrangement and equity in Varity to help prevent the loss of additional Canadian jobs in Windsor? Save those 450 jobs that are about to be lost. The government has an opportunity to do something. I ask it to commit itself now to do something.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to respond to my hon. friend. This particular development in Windsor is of concern to the government. It is true that the government has an equity position and will use that leverage in an appropriate way.

As the hon. member should know, in Windsor through the past five fiscal years an unprecedented number of jobs have been created as a result of the policies of this government. We are going to continue to pursue those policies. When it comes to Varity Corporation in particular, we will do everything we can to help.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that continuing on a matter that was raised some days ago the hon. member for Scarborough—Agincourt wishes to speak on a question of privilege.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

DISTURBANCE IN GALLERIES

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, during the last sitting of the House before Easter recess on April 11 it was suggested that I had some prior knowledge of a disturbance in the gallery after the recording of the GST vote on April 10.

To clarify this matter, I would like to say that passes were handed out by my office but that neither I nor my staff had any prior knowledge of what the two young men had planned to do.

While I may understand their frustration with the GST, the way in which they expressed their dissatisfaction is totally unacceptable to me. I do not condone and totally dissociate myself from this kind of action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the hon. member and I think that the response to this statement indicates the appreciation of the House.

The hon. member for Essex—Windsor has a point of order rising, I think, out of the Question Period.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In the course of responses back and forth with the Minister of Finance, the suggestion was made that the quotation which I presented to the House from him yesterday was somehow incorrect.

I wanted to quote what I quoted yesterday as coming from the Minister of Finance, the then opposition finance critic in 1982.

> The inflation rate is between 5 per cent and 6 per cent. The current interest rate at 13 per cent or 14 per cent is simply too high.

I have also the original—

Mr. Speaker: I know the hon. member would like to keep the record straight but it is getting into debate and I think it is perhaps going beyond the usual very brief point of order. I think it is a point of debate. I think I will have to leave it here.

I would like the hon. member to avail himself of Question Period or the "late show". I think there are other ways to settle the matter.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I had just one final point to make. Yesterday during Question Period I had sent to the minister the exact quote from Hansard in which he had made those statements.

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps that is where it will have to be left. I am sure the minister and the member can discuss the matter further if necessary, at another place and at another time. Statements by Ministers.

STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Solicitor General.

The point I have to raise with the Chair is that around 9.30 this morning, the Official Opposition was notified of two different ministerial statements. We did think that the time was rather short, but more importantly, Mr. Speaker, I bring the following matter to your attention. After receiving notification that there were to be two statements from two different ministers, hon. members began preparing themselves to respond. Less than half an hour ago one of the two ministers announced that he had changed his mind concerning his presentation of that particular statement.

I think, and the House will appreciate, that that does cause some serious inconvenience for a number of members in the House. I would hope that the Speaker could assist the House in determining what the proper procedure should be in such cases where ministers give, first of all, minimum notice, and second, withdraw at the last minute without making their presentation.

This is not in reference to the Solicitor General, but to the other minister, namely the Minister of Housing, who had given such indication earlier this morning.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell just said is correct. I believe the opposition has been asking us for a long time to advise the critics when ministers want to make statements in the House. In fact, if we had not advised the critics and the minister had made a statement, the hon. member would have been the first to criticize. In this particular case, a decision was made to advise the critics because the minister might make a statement. Out of courtesy to his opposition colleague, we sent a copy of the statement. Later, it was decided that there would be no statement right now. If this caused some problems for the hon. member, I think it was all done in good faith.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member in reply, and then I will see the other member.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate that we are getting notification ahead of time. That is good and proper. It was not a reflection on that principle, which obviously we fully support. I just would hope that, when we do get such notification, in order to make the House function smoothly as possible, the information provided be as accurate as possible as often as possible. Perhaps the deputy government House leader can take note of that.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): On the same point, Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a brief intervention. We too appreciate as much notice as possible.

We recognize that, as things go, sometimes 9.30 a.m. for 12.10 p.m. is the best we can do. I would ask, through you, Sir, that the government take a look at how it approaches these things, particularly in light of the fact that we have, like the Liberals, one of our colleagues preparing to make a non-statement.

As we all know, our time is eaten away by many things in this House, and if we do not have to do something, it is a bit better. The government can take a look at that, and perhaps find a procedure that is acceptable to them and helps us as well.

Mr. Murphy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, during the answer to a question from me during Question Period today, the finance minister was explaining the difference between himself and the Liberal finance minister who had offered to resign if the interest rates remained high. You cut off the Minister of Finance, and if he wishes to finish the statement with his resignation, we would give him lots of time to do that.

• (1210)

Mr. Speaker: There is no limit to the ingenuity of hon. members.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

OCCUPATIONAL SAFETY AND HEALTH

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, each year, scores of Canadian men and women are killed as a result of workplace accidents in the service of their jobs, or suffer through the agony of industrial disease.

We must not eradicate from our memory the dead Canadian workers who have given what is most priceless—their lives—while trying to earn a living for themselves and their children.

April 28 is the National Day of Mourning for workers who have been injured or who have succumbed to death and disease as a result of noxious workplaces.

I would like the Honourable Members, employers and workers to remember that progress and economic growth shall not be paid for with the price of the lives and well-being of workers.

Let us honour and respect the workers of Canada who have given so much of themselves to us.

[English]

Workplace hazards can lead to human suffering and great tragedy. For example, a chemical spill oozing dangerous fumes can cause nausea, insomnia and damage to the body. Such incidents of occupational injuries and disease occur not only in storage facilities but along the railways, inside factories and at the office desk. No one is immune to the dangers of unsafe work environments. One in every 10 workers still suffers from work-related injuries. There are medical costs and there are incalculable costs in human suffering. We all pay for occupational health and safety fatalities. In 1988, worker fatalities and injuries represented a loss of some $22 billion to Canadians.

[Translation]

Canadians have demonstrated their deep concern for the environment. The workplace is an occupational environment where the majority of Canadians spend their adult lives. This is why, among other things, Mr. Speaker, the safety and health of workers should not be endangered as a result of exposure to hazardous chemicals, nor should office workers suffer the consequences of poor indoor air quality.

We all share the objective of promoting healthier and safer work environments. This year has shown significant progress in the promotion of cleaner and safer workplaces. The Non-smokers' Health Act and its regulations came into effect last December 29. It is important to protect workers and Canadians from the harmful effects of second-hand tobacco smoke.

[English]

Several important amendments have been proposed to the Canada Occupational Safety and Health Regulations, regarding the levels of sound. The consequences of loss of hearing, because of exposure to unacceptable levels of sound are devastating. The amendments reducing the maximum permitted levels and duration of exposure to sound, should have the effect of reducing compensation costs for occupational hearing loss in the workplace by $37 million, based on the estimated reduction in the number of compensation claims over the next 10 years.

Mr. Speaker, the government promotes co-operation and consensus in all important matters affecting the lives of Canadians. This spirit of partnership has carried over to the workplace, where labour and management participate more and more in the decision-making process affecting the health and safety of workers.

[Translation]

Miners in Cape Breton are the immediate beneficiaries of such pragmatism, Mr. Speaker. The newly established Coal Mining Safety Commission ensures that workers are given a say in the decision-making process.

This spirit of partnership is also evident in the government's relationship with the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety. A Business Plan has been prepared by the Centre's Council of Governors which confirms that this excellent organization can become self-sufficient. The government's commitment to the Centre has been renewed, and the Centre has met this challenge of a new financial direction.

[English]

It is my firm belief that occupational safety and health is a state of mind that requires education and training to nurture. It is too late to talk workplace safety to a machine operator trapped in the wheels and axles of his engine. Safety must be preventive and anticipatory. Governments and laws are there to regulate, but it is the workers and employers who prevent workplace deaths and injuries.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when we talk about occupational safety and health, let us keep in mind the suffering and dying workers of Canada. Let us not forget the gruesome malignancies caused by workplace hazards that disfigure the soul and body of honest workers trying to make a living.

We must remember that together we can and do make a difference. But let's make sure that occupational health and safety becomes a reality for all of us.

[English]

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to thank the Solicitor General for providing an advance copy of his remarks on the National Day of Mourning.

Tomorrow, April 28, Canadians will pause to remember those working men and women who suffer from industrial-related injuries or illnesses and those who lost their lives while on the job. We all know there are many risks involved in helping to keep this country going, including working at jobs that are sometimes dangerous or performing tasks that could have dreadful effects for workers and their families.

I, too, would like to note that it is our duty as legislators to help reduce the risks of injuries at the work place and to provide as much information as we can so that workers will recognize and be fully aware of the hazards involved.

There are thousands of jobs in the country which have potentially dangerous consequences if not carried out properly. Sometimes accidents are a result of mechanical failure which is a reality of the modern world which we have created. However, there are also the human factors—fatigue, exposure, and a host of other problems to contend with.

The Solicitor General has just moments ago stated that in 1988 workers' fatalities and injuries represented a loss of some $22 billion to Canadians. In 1987, 894 Canadians died as a result of occupation-related accidents. Twenty-five million person-days were lost due to accidents and injuries. Obviously, this is not an insignificant problem. Over $7 billion are spent in Canada annually to cover medical costs ensuing from accidents, including costs for pensions, insurance, and loss of earnings.

The minister has just explained to the House that one in every 10 workers still suffers from work-related injuries. I believe that this number is probably much higher than that. Recognizing the problem is not enough. It is not enough for the government to rise to pay tribute to injured workers.

An important debate was held in the House a short time ago concerning the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety. For 10 years we noted that the CCOHS has provided Canadian workers with impartial, unbiased information on occupational health and safety topics to help workers and employers avoid the pitfalls of accidents. However, the government has decided to remove its funding and has begun a process to privatize the centre whose goal it will be to favour the production of markets as opposed to the delivery of services, and that is a direct quote.

I remind Canadian workers of what the Solicitor General said just moments ago. He asked us all, including members of Parliament, that progress and economic growth should not be made at the expense of the well-being or the lives of workers. I will pray for those Canadian working men and women who suffer from industrial related accidents and for those workers who lost their lives while earning their daily bread.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to rise in the House in recognition of tomorrow as a day of mourning for workers who have been killed or seriously injured in the workplace.

I would like to repeat the statistic that in 1987, the last year for which we have figures available, 894 people were killed while at work. In addition to that, 614,011 people received disabling injuries while at work in 1987.

What is interesting about that number is not only the horrendous number itself, but the fact that in the 1970s only between 400,000 and 500,000 Canadians who received disabling injuries. In other words, the trend is going up in workplaces across Canada.

• (1220)

There are many statistics that can be used to discuss what is happening to Canadian workers when they go to work each and every day. We can talk, not only about the deaths and the disabling injuries, but about the long-term disabilities and injuries that these people face and the suffering that goes on in their families, and, because of the nature of workplace contaminants, the suffering that takes place in the community as a whole.

For example, in the city of Flin Flon, in my constituency, not only do the workers have a much higher risk of dying and being injured at the work site, but the people who live in the city as well experience a much higher incidence of cancer and other very serious illnesses causing death or permanent disability.

On that particular issue, I would like to point out that the Hudson Bay Mining & Smelting has been trying for years to get federal government funding for modernization of that plant. Even though there were encouraging words from the federal government prior to the 1988 election, nothing has taken place to date. We still have that very ancient, dilapitated system in Flin Flon and no real action from the federal government. Whether in my riding or across Canada, we can show examples of the federal government failing to act on this very important matter.

It is interesting to note that the only major change to enhance worker safety in the last year has been the result of the private members' bill introduced by Lynn McDonald, the former New Democratic MP, which limited smoking in many of the workplaces across Canada, and passed by the House.

Other than that, the federal government has not taken any serious initiative. There has been no new legislation. It has not passed my private members' bill which I re-introduced on April 11 of last year with regard to a day of mourning. In addition, as was previously mentioned, the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety has been made a user-pay operation and the federal funding is being completely eliminated. Only those organizations and those workers who can afford to pay for information are going to be aware of the dangers that exist in the work site. That goes against everything that the Solicitor General said in his statement.

If the workers, their unions and the people involved in an operation are unaware of the risk that they face, then improvements are not going to take place. If funding for the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety is going to depend on those organizations that can afford to pay for the information, then it is going to become a tool of management. It is not going to be available for the workers, their families or the people in the communities affected.

It was a very sad decision that the federal government made. It affects the work and health of workers right across the country. I would say that today would have been an appropriate day for the minister to announce that there would be funding for this centre, a centre which I have toured myself, which many workers have used in the past, and which is providing a very good and necessary service for Canadians. It really makes a hypocrisy of the minister's statement to see what the government has actually done.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the minister and both hon. members for their interventions on this matter.

It has become customary in the House that at this time we should stand and take a minute's silence to remember our fellow Canadians who have died in the workplace.

[Editor's Note: The House stood in silence.]

OMBUDSMAN ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-297, an act to establish the office of the ombudsman, and amending acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the hon. member have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Gaffney: Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to introduce a private members' bill. The purpose of this bill is to establish the institution of a federal ombudsman who would deal with specific complaints from the public against administrative injustices and maladministration, and who would have the power to investigate, criticize, and publicize but not to reverse administrative action.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

PETITIONS

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 882 Canadians who want to express their grievance, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to the government's proposal to institute a goods and services tax or, as is now affectionately known, a grief and suffering tax.

These Canadians call upon the government to immediately withdraw this regressive program and they ask that Parliament reject any proposal for the goods and services tax.

* * *

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons)): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 260 could be made an Order for Return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 260 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

POVERTY

Question No. 260—Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni):

1. For each year from 1979 to 1990 (to date), has the government calculated (a) the poverty line (b) the number of Canadians living below the poverty line (c) the number who (i) fell below (ii) moved above the line (d) the annual consumer price index (e) the annual percentage increase or decrease in the net number of Canadians living below the poverty line and, if so, what is it?

2. Has the government calculated the cumulative consumer price index between 1979 and 1990 and, if so, what is it?

Return tabled.

* * *

[English]

STARRED QUESTION

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons)): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Starred Question No. 262.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Starred Question No. 262 be called?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Danis: Mr. Speaker, due to the length of the response, I ask that it be printed in Hansard as if read.

[Editor's Note: The above-mentioned question is as follows:]

[Text]

FRDA FUNDS ALLOTTED TO GROUP VENTURES IN NOVA SCOTIA

*Question No. 262—Mr. Arseneault:

For the fiscal years 1987-88 and 1988-89, were FRDA funds allotted to group ventures in Nova Scotia and, if so (a) what total amount of money was spent by group ventures (b) what amount of money was spent on (i) construction of roads and bridges (ii) treatment work performed in the forest (c) what (i) percentage (ii) amounts of funds were spent on supervision of construction and treatment (d) what total operating budgets were involved?

Routine Proceedings

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry): Funds were allocated under the Canada-Nova Scotia Resource Development Agreement (1982-89) (FRDA) to 18 group ventures in Nova Scotia for the 1987-88 and 1988-89 fiscal years. Expenditures by the Group Ventures under the FRDA were in two categories. The first category was for operations, administration and the hiring of professional staff.

Expenditures in this category were paid for by the provincial government and amounted to $1,618,258 in 1987-88 and to $1,848,344 in 1988-89. The second category of expenditures was for the completion of actual forest work. Expenditures in this category were paid for by the federal government and amounted to $4,088,930 for 1987-88 and to $4,668,720 for 1988-89. In total, the amount of money expended by the Group Ventures for both categories combined equalled $5,707,188 in 1987-88 and $6,517,064 in 1988-89.

Of the total expenditures on actual forest work, road and bridge construction amounted to $1,237,630 in 1987-88 and to $1,200,770 in 1988-89. For silviculture activities, $2,387,510 was expended in 1987-88 and $2,828,650 in 1988-89.

With respect to supervision, it is difficult to accurately establish the exact amounts spent since all staff of the group ventures performed supervision as part of their regular salaried duties. The groups, however, were provided with specific funding from the federal government, under the forest work category, to hire additional staff for supervision duties. The amount provided in this category was $337,640 for 1987-88 and $413,300 for 1988-89. These totals represent 8 percent and 9 percent respectively of the total amount of funding provided for forest work in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

BREAK DOWN OF EXPENDITURES UNDER THE CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA FRDA FOR THE 18 GROUP VENTURES FOR 1987-88 AND 1988-89

	1987-88 ($)	1988-89 ($)
PROVINCIALLY FUNDED
Group venture operation, administration and professional staff	1,618,258	1,848,344

FEDERALLY FUNDED
Forest work
– silviculture	2,387,510	2,828,650
– roads/bridges	1,237,630	1,200,770
– other*	126,150	226,000
– supervision	337,640	413,300
sub-total (federal)	4,088,930	4,668,720
TOTAL (federal and provincial)	5,707,188	6,517,064

* This refers to other activities such as management plan preparation, surveying and renewal of boundary lines and fire pond construction.

[English]

Mr. Danis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52(1)

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise today under the provisions of Standing order 52, to seek leave to adjourn the House for an emergency debate.

Canadian women are alarmed at the evidence of a rising tide of attitudes which makes light of the issue of violence against women. Two incidents in particular have underscored the spread of this dangerous view. One is the high profile rugby party which made light of the Montreal massacre of young women. A floor plan of the scene of the murder was uncovered with drawings marking the spots where the women fell. Toy guns were passed around to participants.

The second incident was a newsletter circulated by the B.C. Ministry of Tourism which offered an excuse for the massacre. It read: "Who knows why he did it? The thought immediately occurred to me that he might have been a man whose child had been aborted by a feminist and that might have been enough to trigger a terrible response".

• (1230)

I am sure there are other members of the House who share my concern that, since that last time you were asked to consider an emergency debate on attitudes toward women and violence against women, the situation has only grown worse.

I submit that a debate is needed to bring to the attention of the public, of members, and of the government the need to increase programs and initiatives to counter these attitudes. Because many of these women's centres which undertook this education work have had to close their doors in the past weeks, this can only be viewed as an emergency facing the women of Canada.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: First of all, I want to thank the hon. member for New Westminster—Burnaby for giving me notice well in advance of this application. As hon. members will know, the hon. member for New Westminster—Burnaby has been pursuing this matter with great diligence, not just in the last few hours, but for a long period of time.

I do want to indicate to the hon. member that when she raised this question yesterday in the House during Question Period, and I was forced only for procedural reasons to ask her to put her question, my intervention, which I would have preferred not to have had to make, especially on this issue, was strictly procedural.

I commented yesterday to the hon. member that I know something about the club and the place where this terrible incident happened. The hon. member indicates that she also is familiar with the club, its members and the place. So, as your Speaker, I have a sense of personal anguish over that particular incident and, of course, others. There is no question in this House how we all feel about the terrible event in Montreal, and the many other things to which the hon. member and other hon. members have referred.

The hon. member has asked for an emergency debate. I want it very clearly understood by hon. members and also the public that it is sometimes difficult for a Speaker to adequately explain why an emergency debate might not be granted when the issue is of such terrible importance to the country, as is this. There is no question in this House among all fair-minded members, and I think among decent people across the country, that this issue is of very great importance to us. It affects our children, our loved ones, our parents, our schools, the workplace, and it is of very great importance.

However, having said that, I know that the hon. member would agree with me that given the diligence of which she and other hon. members are capable, there will be other opportunities, sometimes each day and certainly in the coming days, to pursue the matter further.

With great reluctance I have to say that on strictly procedural grounds, I do not feel it appropriate to order that all of the business of the House be set aside for an emergency debate.

I want to stress to the hon. member and also to the public who has heard her important plea that the matter is treated with a great deal of concern and must be addressed constantly.

The hon. member on a point of order.

Ms. Black: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if it is appropriate, but I would like to thank you for your diligence in thoroughly looking at my request. I certainly respect your response.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for her courtesy.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to consider Bill C-43, an Act respecting abortion, which a legislative committee had reported without amendment.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: There are 30 amendment motions on the Notice Paper for the report stage of Bill C-43, an Act respecting abortion.

[English]

These motions are in the names of the hon. members for Glengarry—Prescott-Russell, Winnipeg North, New Westminster—Burnaby, York Centre, Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso, Bruce—Grey, Halifax West, Wetaskiwin, Kitchener, Markham—Whitchurch—Stouffville and Fraser Valley East, a total of 30 motions.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 1, 21, 23 and 23A were dealt with in the legislative committee. Motions Nos. 1 and 23 were ruled out of order there.

[English]

In ruling Motion No. 1 out of order in committee, the chairman of the legislative committee stated the proposed amendment would go beyond the principle of the bill as it was agreed to by this House at second reading and also adds a new concept. I concur with the chairman's ruling.

Motion No. 23 was also ruled out of order in committee as it would impose a new penalty under the Criminal Code for a new infraction of the law not envisaged in the bill as read a second time. Again, I must concur with the chairman's decision in that case that this amendment would be beyond the scope of the bill. Thus the proposed motion cannot be selected here.

Motion No. 23A is similar to Motion No. 23. A variation in the wording does not, in my opinion, make this motion acceptable and thus, I cannot select it.

[Translation]

Motion No. 21 was moved, debated and negatived in committee. Although it contains a slight variation in its wording, it does not affect the intent of the original motion moved in committee. For these reasons, pursuant to Standing Order 114(10), I will not select Motions Nos. 1, 21, 23 or 23A for debate.

Motion No. 2 has been withdrawn.

Motion No. 3 is in order and it will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motions No. 3A and 3B are both irreceivable as they add a new concept to the bill. These amendments by specifying an implanted fertilized ovum would appear to limit the medical procedure to only the very early stages of a pregnancy. That would render this amendment conceptually the same as other amendments which attempted to add a gestational concept. This would violate the principle of the bill.

Motions Nos. 4 and 22 are similar, both dealing with sentencing. They will be grouped for debate and a vote on Motion No. 4 will be applied to Motion No. 22.

Committees enjoy considerable power over a bill but procedural authorities are clear that there are some general limitations over which they are bound. First, a committee is bound by the decision of the House given at second reading on the principle of a bill and second, an amendment that is beyond the "scope" of a bill is out of order. For further clarification of and information about these points I would refer the House to May, twentieth edition, pages 549 and 550 and pages 555 to 558; Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, citations 763, 764, 773 and 774 cover the same ground.

Motions Nos. 4A, 7, 8, 11, 13A and 18A are thus not in order as they attempt to add new concepts to the bill. They are beyond the scope of Bill C-43. As hon. members are aware, this is not an admissible type of amendment.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 5 and 6 are identical and therefore the Chair will select only Motion No. 5. It will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 9, 10, 10A, 12 and 24 are all in order. However, Motions Nos. 10 and 10A are the same and the Chair will only select Motion No. 10. Motions Nos. 9 and 24 are the same essentially, as they both strip the principle from the bill. Both of these motions are in the name of the hon. member for New Westminster—Burnaby and after consultation with her the Chair has decided to select Motion No. 24. Motion No. 9 will not be put to the House.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 10, 12 and 24 will be debated and voted on separately. However, the House will have to note that the question will only be put on Motion No. 24 if all other selected motions are negatived.

[English]

I have concerns with respect to Motion No. 13 because it seems to the Chair to be attaching a condition to the performance of an abortion where there is no medically acceptable treatment to alleviate the health risk. It seems to add a concept to the bill that was not envisaged at second reading, but I will give the hon. member the benefit of the doubt and rule Motion No. 13 in order. It will be debated and voted on separately.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 14 and 15 are identical. Therefore, I shall select Motion No. 14. It will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 16, 17A and 17B are in order and will be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 16 obviates the need for a vote on Motions Nos. 17A and 17B. A negative vote on Motion No. 16 will require the question to be put on Motion No. 17A. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 17A will obviate the question on Motion No. 17B but a negative vote on Motion No. 17A will require the question to be put on Motion No. 17B.

• (1240)

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 17 and 18 have been withdrawn.

The Chair at first had doubts about the procedural acceptability of Motion No. 19 but on reflection I have decided to give the hon. member the benefit of my doubts. This motion will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 20 is in order. It will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

For the convenience of the House, I will recapitulate.

Motions Nos. 1, 3A, 3B, 4A, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10A, 11, 13A, 15, 18A, 21, 23 and 23A will not be selected.

Motions Nos. 2, 17 and 18 have been withdrawn.

The following motions are in order and will be debated and voted on as follows:

Motion No. 3, a separate debate and vote;

Motions Nos. 4 and 22 are grouped for debate and a vote on Motion No. 4, applies to Motion No. 22;

Motion No. 5, a separate debate and vote;

Motion No. 10, a separate debate and vote;

Motion No. 12, a separate debate and vote;

Motion No. 13, a separate debate and vote;

Motion No. 14, a separate debate and vote;

Motions Nos. 16, 17A and 17B will be grouped for debate with an affirmative vote on Motion No. 16 obviating a question on Motions Nos. 17A and 17B, but a negative vote on Motion No. 16 will require the question being put on Motion No. 17A. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 17A will obviate a question on Motion No. 17B, but a negative vote on Motion No. 17A will require the Chair to put the question on Motion No. 17B;

Motion No. 19, a separate debate and vote;

Motion No. 20, a separate debate and vote; and Motion No. 24, a separate debate but a vote only if all of the other selected motions are negatived.

[Translation]

I want to thank all hon. members for their co-operation.

[English]

I think I should add something and that is that we have, with considerable success, had an informal way of having discussions between the table officers and hon. members when amendments are filed. This has expedited the work that has to be done. I want to thank all hon. members and the table officers for the hard work that has gone into these particular amendments.

I might also advise the House that I have personally read all the amendments and have been very much engaged in the difficult decisions that had to be made in dealing with the procedural aspects of the admissibility of some of the amendments. I hope that hon. members will bear with us in knowing that we have to apply the procedural law as it is and it takes nothing away from the importance or the thrust of the propositions which hon. members were putting forward.

Again, I thank hon. members for their co-operation.

[Translation]

I will now propose Motion No. 3 to the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I have two points to make and I think that if you consult the House, you will find that there is unanimous consent on both of them.

First, I propose:

> That notwithstanding any Standing Order, the House meet at 1 p.m. on Monday, April 30, 1990, and that it consider Government Orders from 1 p.m. to 2 p.m.

If this motion is accepted, the government intends to call Bill C-26.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I just want some clarification and assurance from the government that if we agree on this motion, it is definitely understood that we will consider the above-named bill, that is, Bill C-26, and not another one, because it is exceptional to extend the hours in this way for a government order. We are prepared to do it, of course, provided that we have this assurance; if the minister is prepared to confirm that it is indeed so, all right.

Mr. Danis: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. That is the government's intention. We will call Bill C-26.

[English]

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate that we, too, have been consulted and we are in agreement with this change. I just want to point out that we are in fact giving the government one more hour of government time. I would like them to remember that down the road a bit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed to call it three o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Danis: Mr. Speaker, we have done a substantial amount of work today. I think it would be proper to call it three o'clock, if the members agree.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I am just wondering if we might have missed a step. I am advised that we have to adjourn this particular debate before we can call it three o'clock, or am I mistaken?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is no necessity to adjourn this debate.

The hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell on a point of order.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am not even sure that what I want to do is a point of order, but as one who has proposed more amendments than probably anyone else, I just thought I would indicate my appreciation to the Clerk and the staff for the excellent advice that they have provided on this most sensitive issue, namely, the amendments to the abortion bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being three o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at one o'clock p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 12.47 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 30, 1990

The House met at 1 p.m.

Prayers

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

• (1310)

[English]

RAILWAY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis that Bill C-26, an act to amend the Railway Act (grain and flour subsidies), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Ms. Clancy (p. 8227).

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to contribute to this debate today on Bill C-26, and in particular to address the amendment by my colleague, the member for Halifax, that this bill be put over for six months and, hopefully, not returned.

Bill C-26 bears a rather inoffensive title: "An Act to amend the Railway Act (grain and flour subsidies)". However, as the agricultural community knows, and the farmers and the transportation community in Atlantic Canada in particular know, especially those involved with the ports of Halifax and Saint John, the innocuous title of the bill betrays its real purposes.

This is a bill, in fact, which purports to give ex post legitimacy to the elimination of a statutory subsidy, the at and east subsidy which has been in place since 1966 on the eastward movement of export grain and flour. This is a subsidy which is enshrined in the Railway Act and which was eliminated without recourse to Parliament on July 16 of last year.

Bill C-26 is an act to effectively shut down the grain terminals at Saint John and Halifax and to shut these ports out of the movement of Canadian grain and flour for export. It is an act to limit competition. It is an act to limit the alternative routes of transportation for the movement of a vital Canadian export and a vital Canadian commodity and to withdraw one more component in the web of support that is so essential to the marketing and movement of our Canadian agricultural products and the support of our agricultural community, be it in eastern Canada, central Canada or western Canada.

It is an act to penalize, through higher feed costs, our livestock producers in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, and to make it even more difficult for them to remain viable, to supply local markets and to generate an export surplus for the Atlantic economy to contribute to the export base of our economy. This act will result in higher feed grain costs and higher food costs for Atlantic consumers as these costs are passed on.

Bill C-26 is an act of contempt for Parliament. It is an act of contempt for the rightful role of this Chamber to debate government initiatives, in particular government initiatives arising from statutes of Parliament before these initiatives are implemented.

In this case, the deed has already been done. The at and east subsidy has been removed. On July 16, 1989, it stopped. The day Bill C-26 was read to this House, before there was ever any debate about it, the at and east subsidy, which has been in place for nearly 30 years, was cut off. Since then the subsidy payments to the rail carriers have stopped and the rail companies, CN and CP, have raised their rates correspondingly, not only to the compensatory rates which were the levels to which subsidization was provided under the at and east program, but in fact to the full commercial rates. In fact, the rail companies, in the absence of the at and east program, are charging what the traffic will bear.

We are seeing, quite predictably, that the traffic will not bear the higher rates. In Atlantic Canada the traffic has already begun to dry up. The main elevator in Saint John, which owed its existence to the at and east rates, has closed. Forty jobs at the grain elevator have gone as have another 70 person-years in the stevedoring and railway sector, jobs which were supported by the existence of the grain terminal at Saint John.

The traffic through the elevator in Halifax has already been drastically reduced. Eighteen full-time layoffs have occurred in the elevator itself with 20 more part-time workers affected this summer. The reduction in work for stevedores and railway employees in Halifax, I am told, is in the order of the equivalent to 220 person-years. This has been the direct impact, already, of the cancellation of the at and east subsidy.

The Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission has estimated that the negative costs of the elimination of this program, even if the Halifax port does not close, will be in the order of $14 million. It is important to specify the nature of that impact. There will be a direct job and wage impact on the grain elevators themselves. There will be additional cost pressures placed on our livestock, poultry and wheat milling sectors. The farmers and livestock producers will ultimately have to pay more for their cost of production. They will have to pass these costs on.

Ports and railways charges will also be increased and there will be layoffs and a loss in wage cost there as well. If the Halifax grain elevator is obliged to close because of a lack of grain trade through that port, the costs will almost double and that again will eliminate the competition which keeps the rates to Atlantic livestock producers down. It will allow those rates to rise and it will also eliminate Halifax and Saint John from that vital category of Canadian exports. It will remove one more alternative for getting west coast grain to market, particularly in the winter when the St. Lawrence Seaway has frozen, and it will weaken the fragile economy of Atlantic Canada in particular.

These are some of the consequences which this government has blithely ignored in ramming through, without consideration and without consultation, this measure as a consequence of the disastrous 1989 leaked budget, a budget which, as we all know, imposed tax increases and cut-backs which affected the Atlantic Canadian economy in particular and which, no doubt, helped to precipitate the crisis that is already emerging in that part of the country today.

This measure, which is a statutory measure, has been introduced without even consulting Parliament, without even consulting those interests and bodies which are directly affected, such as the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, which is in a position to provide helpful advice to the government. If it could not prevent the elimination of this program, it could at least make some alternative subsidy framework available which the government could have put in place to preserve the existence of the Atlantic ports in the grain and flour handling trade.

• (1320)

The Minister of State for Transport had some rather lame and unconvincing arguments when she spoke on this bill on February 12. She claimed, as has the government, that the at and east program was merely designed to compensate for the installation of rates in the United States which would have lowered rates from Buffalo through to the port of New York which, in her words, would encourage the movement of western Canadian grain between Buffalo, New York, and the port of New York during the winter freeze-up on the Great Lakes. She said that this was the reason this was put in place and that now that our costs of shipping grain through the Great Lakes by water have been reduced relative to that of rail, there is really no need for this program.

The minister and the government ignore one very important facet which underpinned the creation of this program, that was to ensure that Atlantic ports as well as Montreal and eastern Quebec ports had an opportunity to stay in this business. In fact, then transport minister Mr. Pickersgill, speaking before the Transportation and Communications Committee in 1966, said specifically that the purpose of the at and east program was to ensure that we will have rates that will provide some inducement and incentive to shippers to use the facilities of the Atlantic ports so that Halifax and Saint John will be able to stay competitive.

The government has ignored one crucial aspect which was involved in the setting up of this particular subsidy framework for transportation. It has chosen to ignore it in order to find a ready way to hack and cut some of the budget deficit which the government itself has created.

One of the important aspects which is emerging from consideration of a whole range of government initiatives since the last election has, of course, to do with the follow up to the implementation of the free trade agreement. It is not surprising to see this subsidy go the way of so many other supports for agricultural production and marketing and to see the link between the dismantling of our support framework for agriculture and the follow-through to the free trade agreement.

We have seen time and again that this government, whether with regard to western grain farmers, pork producers or other elements of the agricultural community, has been quite willing to surrender to the vigorous and aggressive subsidization of American and European agricultural exports. While the United States is in clear contravention of Article 7041 of the free trade agreement by providing export enhancement and export subsidy programs to its agricultural producers, we in Canada have been rolling over and playing dead. We have been unilaterally disarming our farmers in the face of increasing subsidized competition by the United States and the Europeans. We are left with absolutely no room to manoeuvre when it comes down to negotiating a framework of subsidies that is fair and equitable in the North American market or in the GATT negotiations on the world scale for agricultural commodities.

Instead, this government is reducing the competitiveness of our farmers who are producing for Canadian consumption and those who are producing for export.

You cannot help but view this particular subsidy cut-back in the broader context of this government's post free trade agenda. It goes even further than that. It is a dismantling, as we have said on this side of the House time and again, of the fabric and framework that has held this country together.

The Minister of State for Transport talks about how transportation must continue to play its role as we enter the new decade and the next century. She talks about creating a transportation system which is efficient, which takes account of the intermodal competition and which will meet the needs of moving our products into the next century.

However, she ignores the history of Canada. In the creation of our transportation network, in particular our rail transportation network, the imperatives of geography were defied. While recognizing the question of efficiency, it was realized that there was a far greater objective, that being the objective of preserving the integrity of a country. The process of building that transportation network from east to west cross this country allowed for the west to be settled and built up and allowed the east to play a vital role in Confederation.

If it was not for the contribution by Sir John A. Macdonald and others at the birth of this country, we would not have a country. We all know that the simple expedient for developing a transportation network and for thereafter enabling that transportation network to do its job, to move goods and services to market and to consumers, would have been to set up trunk networks to move the goods straight down into the United States and take advantage of their much larger population and their already developed rail network.

We did not do that. We paid the price. We developed our own network parallel to that of the Americans and our forefathers realized how important it was to preserve that system. They realized how necessary it would be to continue to subsidize transportation east to west if we were not going to be absorbed through the natural north-south forces into the arms of the United States. That is an option that is always available to us and this government seems to be taking the easy way out and allowing this to occur.

That is the underpinning of the abandonment of this system. We on this side of the House recognize that from time to time we have to review the nature and design of our transportation subsidy programs to make sure that they continue to perform the role that was intended, that they do not prop up inefficient lines of production and inefficient means of transportation, but at the same time one does not simply hack the arms of the system apart without thinking, without forward planning, without examining the consequences to the users and to those consumers who are ultimately affected.

That is what this government has done with the elimination of the at and east program. That is what it has done with the cut-backs to VIA Rail. That is what it has done with the cut-backs in so many areas. The government has a hack and slash policy with no forethought. If we have to reverse the process and redesign the transportation systems and links that we have abandoned, it will cost us that much more because of the short-sightedness of this government and the short-sightedness of Bill C-26, an bill which attempts to acquire our consent to a retroactive and short-sighted elimination of a Canadian program.

• (1330)

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise first of all to thank my colleague, the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso), for his eloquent support of my motion in this particularly crucial matter to our region, the Atlantic region and in particular to my city of Halifax. As my hon. friend has mentioned, we have already seen the end of the grain elevator in Saint John, New Brunswick and we are witnessing the slow strangulation of the grain elevator operation in Halifax. This is an operation, I might add, that has a long tradition in our harbour city. With the concomitant loss of jobs, as my colleague has stated, this is yet another terrible blow to an already limping economy in Atlantic Canada.

I would like the member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso to elaborate on his remarks about Canada in the post free trade era. A number of us in Atlantic Canada were less than enthusiastic about the free trade deal. I think perhaps that is why there are a number of us here on this side of the House. Where does he believe the cancellation of the at and east to fits into the scenario of a post free trade Canada.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague, the member for Halifax, for her remarks and also for her question.

There is no question that the cancellation of at and east has to be understood in terms of the broad economic policy agenda of this government, if you can call it an agenda. What it is doing is putting the Atlantic economy even more at the mercy of the strong pull which has always existed toward the United States. One of the ironies of this particular bill is that the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, in order to defend the interests of the livestock producers in Atlantic Canada in the face of the reduction in competition and the increase in costs which they will suffer as a result of this bill, have had to appeal to the government to withdraw a countervail on the importation of U.S. corn into Atlantic Canada.

They are countervailing us on everything that moves, including our pork exports and other exports for which they are harassing us at the border. Many of our agricultural products, including potatoes from Prince Edward Island, western beef, and pork are being affected. They have made it impossible for Atlantic farmers to survive and have a cost framework which allows them to compete. We have imposed countervail duties on the Americans which only hurt the farmers from another part of the country, and we have had to go begging to let the U.S. corn in. It is a telling example of how the Atlantic economy is being progressively shut off and isolated by this government. There is no question that this is part of the post free trade agenda.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I must say to my colleague from Cape Breton Highlands—Canso that I am a little disappointed that he would take such a regressive attitude toward a measure which was recommended by the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission some time ago for consideration by the government. Obviously it is a subsidy that is obsolete, based on a situation that existed some time ago. There is an obvious need for reform. I am sorry that he joins the member from Halifax who perhaps does not have sufficient background in some of these things to know some of the pertinent facts to realize that whatever else, the at and east is not accomplishing the goal which it was set out to accomplish.

Just to make sure that the member from Halifax especially knows what the at and east is all about, it was designed to allow east coast ports to compete with United States ports. They now can compete very favourably. The problem is with the competition from the St. Lawrence ports, from other Canadian ports. It is a matter entirely within Canada.

I am somewhat disappointed that the member does not recognize the facts of the situation, that the at and east is gone. It has been effectively terminated. There are no shipments now being made. Why would anybody stand in the House of Commons and move a six-month hoist? The at and east is already history. What members have to do is work positively toward some off-sets to accomplish the ends that need to be accomplished.

Has the hon. member talked to the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission? Does he endorse their suggestion for off-sets to the elimination of the at and east rate? Perhaps we can move positively in this direction once this bill is passed. If we simply object to the passage of the bill then we are in suspense. We do not know what is going to happen. I would ask the hon. member to put his mind to the future so that we can resolve some of the problems, rather than continue to pour money into the Canadian National Railway.

Why do members opposite want to continue to pour money into the Canadian National Railway company when they have the opportunity to help the farmers, to help the grain elevator operators and a host of other people?

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, first of all, for the hon. member's edification, I spoke with the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission this morning on this bill.

It is certainly not my understanding that they are supporting the elimination of the at and east program prior to their even being consulted about their proposal. They were complaining that they had made useful suggestions to the government, and they never even got an answer. They did not even get the courtesy of a substantive reply from the Minister of Agriculture and the Deputy Prime Minister.

The member suggests that we take a more positive attitude and that we go forward because this has been eliminated and we should accept it. I beg to differ. This bill is before the House of Commons. For the government to have the arrogance to eliminate a statutory subsidy before it is introduced in Parliament is a complete contempt of Parliament. There is just no way that we on this side of the House are going to abide by the kind of action that rides roughshod over the rights of all the members in this House.

If we were to apply that logic, perhaps we should concede to the passage of the goods and services tax, which 80 per cent of Canadians oppose vigorously and which we have opposed and will continue to oppose vigorously.

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Mr. Speaker, I just want to congratulate my colleague from Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso for an excellent speech.

Does he see in Bill C-26 an intent by the government to set up certain targets in its deficit reduction, particularly Atlantic Canadians? There seems to be a target set on the elderly, the unemployed, students, veterans, those who require child care, farmers and indeed, fishing people. Does he agree that these are the people who should be hit the hardest? Are these people able to manage some of those reduction measures?

• (1340)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Restigouche has asked quite a few questions, and you have a minute to try to rebut, or answer.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. Essentially, this bill targets the agricultural community in Atlantic Canada, which is going to be facing higher costs as a consequence of this measure and will have to pass those costs on or will be in even more difficulty vis-à-vis other parts of the country, than it already is. That is one community which is threatened. It also says that when it comes to moving grain for export or being involved in this activity, Atlantic Canadians do not have a role to play. It is pitting one part of the country against the other and, as is so often the case, it is Atlantic Canada that is coming up the loser.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The hon. member for Regina—Lumsden. Before he begins his speech, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate him on his sixty-fifth birthday and, of course, his 23 years in Parliament.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and—do not start counting my time yet. I appreciate your remarks, Mr. Speaker, and the reaction of my colleagues. I know I do not look it, act it, or feel it, but I am. The only problem is that I have spent all my working life earning that old age pension which starts tomorrow, and the Minister of Finance is going to claw it back. However, that is another fight.

For over a century Canada has had a system of transportation assistance programs that took into account our geography, our distances, our climate and where our people who produced agricultural products were located. Hence, we had the statutory grain rates in western Canada, we had the bridge rates in northern Ontario, the Maritime Freight Assistance Act, Atlantic Provinces Freight Assistance Act, and the at and east rates.

These rates were designed, to use the stupid phrase of the government about the free trade deal, to make a level playing field for agricultural producers in Canada. Australia and New Zealand producers have an average grain haul of about 200 miles to salt water. The European Economic Community has about 300 or 400 miles and a massive inland water system to move it all. This is similar to the United States that has a massive inland water system, including a canal that is over 100 miles long from Galveston, Texas, which is used to haul grain. So these transportation assistance programs were designed to allow Canadian producers to get their production into export position on a relatively equitable basis with competing countries. Since 1981 we have had nothing but a continuous erosion of those programs.

The value and relevancy of the at and east freight rates are as valid today as they were when they were first started. This is but another kick in the head for western grain producers and for the cities of Saint John and Halifax. Let me show you how, starting on April 1 of last year, for the next three fiscal years agricultural producers right across the country will pay $1,677 million more in increased costs because of cancelled assistance by the federal government and lost programs such as the at and east freight rates.

The branch line rehabilitation program has been wiped out. We have 2,000 miles of track out in the west that has to be fixed up and finished; there are commodity-based loans, such as the $7 million to the Canadian Dairy Commission. For crop insurance it was $90 million for last year and an additional $110 million for the current year that farmers are going to have to pay.

Western grain producers are going to have to pay an additional $27 million for interest rates on cash advances. The western grain stabilization producer levy increases about $91 million each year for those three years. Transfers to the system improvement railway reserve fund and the two-price wheat system, which by the way, did not cost the government a nickel, made the consumers of grain to produce cereals, bread and confections pay a higher price for grain consumed in Canada. It did not cost the government anything and then what did the government do?

They cancelled the two-price system, which had meant $200 million a year to western grain producers in a good average crop year. Last year it was not nearly that because of the crop failure. It was not costing the government or the taxpayers anything. They said the milling and the baking industry was being hurt. That is baloney. They took off the higher price for domestically-consumed grain. Have the prices of confectioneries and bread gone down? They have like hell. That same baking, confectionery and milling industry that this was designed to help, supposedly, has kept its prices the same or higher and kept the money, instead of it going to grain producers.

I listen to the hon. member for Halifax get up with inane questions. He wouldn't know a bushel of wheat if it hit him in the face. I would also like to say—

Mr. Crosby: What do you know about pork?

Mr. Benjamin: What is in jeopardy, in the grain terminals in both Saint John and Halifax and Dover flour mills, will be several hundred jobs. There will be a further reduction in our capacity to export milling grain and flour. It has got to the point that with the loss of this program, the agricultural producers in the Atlantic provinces are now looking at and asking for the same kind of exemption as they get in British Columbia on bringing U.S. corn in for feed. They are also looking at bringing in feed, oats, barley and wheat from western Europe. They can do it cheaper than paying the full cost of transportation from western Canada. That is a betrayal of the hon. member's own province and his own city.

When you see the spectacle of a country like ours which produces the best grain in the world forcing its livestock producers in Atlantic Canada to consider bringing in corn from the U.S. and feed grain from western Europe, there is something terribly wrong. There is another point I want to make about the subsidies. The European Economic Community subsidizes their grain producers, for export out of the EEC, anywhere from $20 to $30 a tonne and the Americans, under their Export Enhancement Program, anywhere from $12 to $18 a tonne. At least the European Economic Community does it honestly. They do not take any tax revenue for the subsidies on grain out of the EEC. They have something like the goods and services tax. It is called the value added tax which is why consumer prices at wholesale and retail levels in Europe are much higher than they are in Canada. That value added tax in the European community is what pays for the subsidies that the community allows on grain that they export. This is why they have been biting into the markets of the Canadian Wheat Board. The export enhancement program of the United States is a direct payment out of their tax revenue.

• (1350)

The government says it cannot compete with the treasury of the United States and the European Economic Community. We know that. We know that it cannot have programs anywhere near what those two groups have. But why does it expect individual grain producers, our flour mills, our grain handling facilities to compete with the treasuries of the European community and the United States?

The other thing that needs to be said about this legislation is that the government has enforced its effectiveness as of last July. In other words, they have implemented the legislation long before it was ever dealt with by this Parliament. That is an attack on and an insult to the institution of Parliament.

My colleague from Moose Jaw—Lake Centre raised a point of order. The Speaker ruled that he could not rule out what the government is doing on procedural grounds. He said it may well be that the hon. member from Moose Jaw—Lake Centre may have to use some other available institution, which means going to court. Neither he nor I have the money for that.

We are hoping that some people in Atlantic Canada will rear up on their hind legs—

Ms. Clancy: We have been.

Mr. Benjamin: —on constitutional grounds alone, to see the spectacle of the government of the day enforcing a law that has not been dealt with by Parliament. What the hell is Parliament here for?

Ms. Clancy: Exactly.

Mr. Benjamin: Are we going to just let the cabinet by Order in Council run the whole country and make all the laws? When the Liberal government tried this in 1981 with the repeal of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, they owed the Canadian Wheat board $96 million. We took them to Federal Court in Regina and they lost. We won $96 million, plus interest, for our western grain producers because they made the damn bill retroactive for 18 months.

I do not understand why every member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada isn't up on his hind legs and raising hell about this.

Ms. Clancy: We are. You haven't been paying attention, Les.

Mr. Benjamin: I said every member. All of them aren't. When you listen to what I call the inane question of the hon. member for Halifax—

Ms. Clancy: Halifax West.

Mr. Benjamin: —Halifax West, you know, with friends like that who needs enemies.

The people in Saint John have told us that it looks like the grain terminal there will have to close. One of the reasons poultry and livestock producers in Atlantic Canada are looking at bringing in feed and grain from the U.S. and western Europe is because they need the terminals in Saint John and Halifax to store feed grain.

Mr. Crosby: Get serious. Saint John.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, we have heard from witnesses and the mail we have had tells us that they bring in a large bulk quantity, store it, and then haul it out by truck to farmers, livestock producers, and poultry producers. If you close down the grain terminal you reduce their capacity to be able to do that.

When you look at the total picture of the financial responsibilities of the government of Canada, the loss of payments for 1988 was $32 million and they still owed $3.3 million, so that is $35.5 million. That is no big deal in a budget of over $30 billion. What is more worrying is that while they might think they are saving that amount of money, the costs that have to be taken over by grain producers, livestock producers, the owners of the flour mill and the grain terminals in Halifax and Saint John, several hundred employees and those communities, will only take a very few short years to far exceed any so-called savings with the cancellation of this program.

There has been a continuing effort by governments which started in 1981, when I got a cabinet document in a plain brown envelope in which the then Liberal government of the day outlined a long-term policy to get the national government out from under every transportation assistance program. Their main claim to infamy was the destruction of the statutory grain rates, and grain producers are going to get hit every year with higher freight costs because of that.

At a time when grain prices are going down and when we are having our most serious difficulties with the United States and the European Economic Community, surely is not a time to be making our grain producers pay more to reduce the capacity and effectiveness of our grain handling and flour milling systems to compete in a relative degree of equity with other countries.

If there is any one thing that I cannot understand, it is why this government, and previous ones, have continually resorted to attacking our primary producers for every nickel this federal government has sent out to western grain and agriculture producers across Canada. It has hit them with higher taxes, higher prices or higher costs that are in excess of any assistance sent by this government to agricultural producers.

I have already illustrated that over three years, the last fiscal year, this one and the next one, those increased costs and levies will amount to $1.677 billion on agricultural producers and their infrastructure which depends on them. That is not what you could call sound business practices. That is not what you could call treating the whole country fairly. It would be nice if we could produce all our grain in Atlantic Canada and British Columbia. We would not have to worry about the kinds of costs that we are faced with out west.

I do not know how many times I have had to get up in this Chamber and talk on this subject since 1968. I do not know what one has to do to get the government members to reconsider and change their minds. If they would even do it once on some of these programs it would be a nice change. It would be refreshing.

All I can do on behalf of my party is appeal to the government to reconsider and withdraw this bill. If it insists on going through with it, will it do what is asked for as a compromise, a last resort, by people in Atlantic Canada to make sure that they do not have to pay any more freight rates than they do up as far as Montreal?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member's time has expired. He will have 10 minutes for his questions and comments, should we continue this debate after three o'clock.

It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 31.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

WOMEN'S CENTRES

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, the women of Canada are still waiting for action from this government. The destruction of core funding for women's centres has been a cruel blow. Women who work to assist other women through these centres have lost all sense of security. They do not know whether their rent will be paid, whether their heat will be paid, or whether they will have light to do their work by. This government has abdicated its responsibility and left thousands of women without crucial services.

The Secretary of State has met with many of these groups, and so has the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, but weeks have passed and nothing has changed.

The lot of women in this country is not improving. In every area we see barriers, inequities and blatant discrimination.

Pious words do not create a climate of equality. So-called sympathy and understanding will not keep the doors of these centres open.

Core funding must be restored. Canadian women deserve these services, and the government has a duty to provide them. Fifty-two per cent of the population will not accept vague promises. They want action, and they want it now.

* * *

FISHERIES

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, the recent ruling by the free trade panel on the American legislation restricting the import of what the Americans consider to be undersized lobsters potentially undermines the credibility of the redress process of the FTA itself.

I commend the American government and the fishing industry for their discovery of the need for conservationist measures in the lobster industry. Indeed, changing the carapace to the higher standard makes sense for the Canadian industry as well. Indeed, it is a measure supported by many Canadian fishermen.

However, few Maritimers interested in the lobster industry see the American action as anything but what it is, namely, a trade distorting action impacting at a time when there is an over-supply of lobsters on both sides of the border, and when lobster prices have dropped to record lows.

On the basis of recent history, the U.S. is hardly in a position to provide lessons in conservation to the Canadian fishing industry.

I urge the government to respond to the interim panel ruling by indicating that it is simply unacceptable.

* * *

SOVIET JEWRY

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua (York North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in this House to raise an issue of international importance. Pursuant to a meeting I had with the Emergency Action Committee for Soviet Jewry, I am extremely concerned about the issues that were raised relating to the state of Jews in the Soviet Union.

Their concerns were consistent with the well-documented cover story of the April 16, 1990, edition of Maclean's magazine. According to the report, anti-Semitism is on the rise in the Soviet Union.

The increased and repeated vandalism of Jewish businesses, synagogues and cemeteries in Moscow and Leningrad, widespread rumours of a pogrom—an organized massacre of Jews, allegedly planned for Moscow and Leningrad on May 5, 1990, is of grave concern to me, to the Jewish community and, I am sure, to all Canadians.

I urge this government to exercise international leadership on this issue in order to protect the lives of Jews residing in the Soviet Union.

[Translation]

BILL C-21

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to rise in the House and ask my colleagues in the other place to pass Bill C-21 without further delay.

When will the Senate release the funds that will give all Canadians a chance at better training and better jobs?

The Labour Force Development Strategy announced by our government a year ago will make it possible for over 60,000 welfare recipients to stand on their own two feet and get jobs, thanks to training. By its actions, the Senate is showing its complete indifference to what happens to these people. The strategy will help communities plagued by serious economic problems to make a fresh start, diversify their economies and train their residents. The Senate has decided to ignore them as well.

Nearly $100 million will be earmarked for training for older workers who also want to contribute to our economy. We must not rob them of this opportunity. Young people who have dropped out of high school or have trouble staying on the labour market will have access to basic training programs. Does the Senate want to ignore them as well? How long will it take the Senate to show it supports Canada's workers?

* * *

[English]

NORTHERN BENEFITS

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, on October 27, the task force report on the northern and remote tax allowance was released. Northerners and people involved rejected the recommendations of that task force.

In replies to petitions and questions on the Order Paper, the Minister of Finance said he would decide quickly on the allowance.

Northerners hope the minister's delay means he is rejecting the task force report and developing a new community-by-community approach.

In any case, according to departmental officials, there is no timetable for a decision. My colleagues in the New

Democrats' northern caucus call on the minister to act now to bring in a fair and positive decision on the northern tax.

* * *

[Translation]

RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Mr. Speaker, as the Conservative government closes down rural post offices, allegedly to reduce the deficit, this will have a very serious impact on rural communities across Canada. These post offices provide a reliable service and invaluable employment opportunities. They are often the only federal presence in a small community.

Last week, in a committee report on mail delivery, the government proposed either closing or privatizing all rural postal offices in Canada.

[English]

The result of this ill-conceived measure would be the laying off of 10,000 people—80 per cent of whom are women. This would represent the largest lay off of women in Canadian history.

The Liberal party firmly believes that postal service is an essential public service which must be equitably provided to both urban and rural residents. We also believe that it is in the public interest to put the highest priority on providing quality service ahead of any government deficit reduction strategy.

The federal government must reconsider its plans to privatize and close rural post offices in order to ensure the continued existence of this important link between the federal government and rural communities.

* * *

[Translation]

REMARKS MADE IN HALIFAX BY THE MEMBER FOR YORK SOUTH—WESTON

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, a number of my constituents, all residents of Abitibi, have asked me to speak in the House with respect to what was said recently in Halifax by the Liberal Member for York South—Weston.

In May 1980, a referendum was held in Quebec. Today we all know that in our Quebec caucus, some federal members voted no and others voted yes.

An hon. member: That's true.

Mr. Saint-Julien: The same applies to the Liberal government in Quebec, where some members and ministers voted yes, others no.

An hon. member: Exactly.

Mr. Saint-Julien: Like the Liberal member from Toronto, I would like to refer to the dictionary, in this case le Petit Robert, in which 27 words separate "dépraver" from "député", and I would like to say to the hon. member that he "depraves" both the Quebec National Assembly and the Parliament of Canada.

* * *

[English]

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Mr. Speaker, as a proud Canadian I rise in the House of Commons this afternoon to support the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord process.

Three years ago the Prime Minister and the provincial premiers agreed to an accord to chart the future of Canada.

The Premier of Alberta, the Hon. Don Getty, demonstrated leadership and statesmanship in helping to draft the agreement, and has been a strong supporter of the accord.

The people of Alberta, and the constituents of St. Albert riding, want a united Canada, a stable Canada that will ensure economic growth, employment and prosperity for Canadians.

Albertans believe in Canada—a united Canada. Canada has tremendous resources, the greatest of which is our people—talented, skilled and industrious.

As Canadians let us not dwell on our differences, but rather highlight what we have in common. Let us replace confrontations with consideration, tolerance and understanding.

The recommendations of the Meech Lake committee will be vital to the future of our country. Canadians working together will find a solution—a united Canada.

SAULT STE. MARIE LOCK

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian lock at Sault, Canada, has been down for over two years. The total cost of rehabilitation or restoration could be $7 million to $35 million.

The Canadian government says: "We will give you $5 million, privatize the lock and the City of Sault Ste. Marie should take full responsibility for the future operation of the lock". We cannot disregard this option entirely, but I want to point out that in an official letter from the American State Department it is stated:

> Under such an occurrence, we believe that the U.S.A. and Canada should jointly consider remedial actions, including a sharing of the costs for the continuation of navigation at Sault Ste. Marie.

• (1410)

If this were implemented, a new super lock in Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, will cost $260 million. Our share at 30 per cent of the traffic would be $75 million. Canadian tax dollars would go to operating an American lock.

I ask the Minister of the Environment, the minister responsible for the Canadian lock, to approach, as I will, the Secretary of State for External Affairs to reconsider the Canadian position on this vital, nationalistic issue.

We require more dollars to ensure the operation of a Canadian lock, not an American lock.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, the problem with inflation continues to be one of the fundamental challenges to our future economic growth and well-being. It must be reduced for us to have sustainable lower interest rates, higher productivity and the elimination of distortions caused by price instability.

One piece of the puzzle which I strongly feel needs more investigation is the question of price points. While we continue to control spending and pursue a tight monetary policy, one must ask why, in the wake of the competitive environment created by the free trade agreement, we have not seen more downward movement on prices.

This absence is already having a profound impact on our border communities, such as Sarnia—Lambton.

The answer to this question could not only help stabilize prices, but also lower consumer prices. Coupled with spending restraint this could help reduce the burden on monetary policy of fighting inflation through higher interest rates.

It is my hope that price points will be one area to which the government will be attributing more attention in its pursuit of non-inflationary economic growth for this country.

* * *

GEORGE PRICE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, today is the last day that George Price will serve as the agriculture and natural resources reporter for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on Parliament Hill.

He has served in this post for 23 years, and previously for eight years with the corporation. He started in private radio reporting on agriculture in Saskatchewan in the mid-1940s and has completed some 43 years of agriculture reporting—a splendid achievement for any career.

Today, I want to pay tribute to the contribution of George Price to agriculture over the years. He has reported on this turbulent industry in a balanced and fair way. His reports span the breadth and scope of agriculture and resource industries all across Canada. His efforts are applauded by farm groups and individual farmers from sea to sea. It is a pity that the CBC did not show its appreciation for his loyal service by retaining this position rather than by cancelling it in such an insensitive way.

The members of this House, I am sure, join me in extending our appreciation to him and wish him well in his retirement years.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

* * *

OLDER WORKERS

Mr. John E. Cole (York—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in a recent article in The Toronto Star journalist Carol Goar rightly drew attention to the special barriers facing older workers who have lost jobs or whose jobs are radically changing.

Older workers, perhaps more than any others, can find themselves facing insurmountable difficulties in adjusting to technological and other change, and many are in need of more government assistance.

The federal government's Labour Force Development Strategy is one measure that can help older workers, and provides in the order of $100 million for new training and adjustment programs tailored to their needs.

I urge all hon. members to fight for that assistance and to help convince the other place that Canada's older workers need the new programs that depend on passage of Bill C-21.

* * *

INCOME TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, today is the last day for about 18 million Canadians to file their income tax returns for last year. After agonizing over their tax returns, most of them are wondering why their taxes have increased while the richest 1 per cent of Canadians had a tax cut averaging $3,570.

While hundreds of thousands line up at food banks every week, they are wondering why the government allows certain Canadians to deduct the cost of their martini and caviar lunches.

While low and middle income families struggle with their mortgage payments to stay out of homelessness, they are wondering why the government continues to allow billions in capital gains to go untaxed.

The 18 million taxpayers are wondering why businesses can deduct the expense of having accountants calculate their tax while ordinary Canadians cannot. They also wonder why thousands of profitable corporations still do not pay any income tax year after year.

Canadians are wondering why this government is bankrupting the nation with its high interest rate policies which cannot but lead to high income taxes in the future.

The answer is clear. This government is itself bankrupt of any ideas for running our economy, save one—give to the privileged and make the poor pay.

CANADA POST

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations is recommending that Canada Post be sold to the private sector. Privatizing Canada Post is the last thing that this government should be thinking of, unless of course it wants to continue to alienate the regions of this country.

In my riding, more and more post offices are being closed in favour of contracting out services to retail outlets. Constituents living in rural communities view the post office as part of the Canadian identity. If Canada Post is sold, that identity will be lost.

My constituents do not agree with the recommendations of the committee. In fact, over the weekend, I was told repeatedly that they support the recommendations of the Liberal minority report. They told me to tell the government to leave Canada Post alone.

Canadians want to keep their rural post offices. They want door-to-door delivery in all areas within an urban community, and they want to continue to identify the post office as a symbol of being Canadian.

It is clear that the Conservative government continues to make decisions which are not reflective of the aspirations of Canadians living in the regions. It is clear that this government's days are numbered.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, there were more dark days for the residents of Timiskaming last week—more dark days for resource-based regions and rural Canadians.

After three years of hard lobbying the environmentalists have finally succeeded in closing down Temagami's sawmill.

With the closure announcement 80 employees have had their livelihoods stripped from them, and over 100 families are directly affected and the communities of Temagami and Latchford have been delivered another fatal blow.

I cannot relate to you, Mr. Speaker, the hurt that has been felt by the residents of the area. Those people who want to hug trees, dip a paddle and take pictures of birds have won the battle. They are not having to take the opportunity to learn about the problems that they have left to us—rents and property values, careers and livelihoods, future opportunities for our children.

It is about time urbanites who want to control the rural parts of our country take responsibility for the socio-economic destruction that they are causing.

They want us to board up our windows and move to the cities. They want us to stop living off the land and start living off UI and welfare lines. That is exactly what they are doing to us today.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as a volunteer for my campaign, the Minister of Finance, just suggested I should say the bland is strong. I should perhaps ask the press to treat all my questions as being off the record.

My question is for the Minister of Finance. On Friday in his answer to my questions about the recent dramatic growth in bankruptcies, he said:

> It is not unusual at this stage of economic development in the business cycle for the level of business bankruptcies to increase.

I would like to ask the minister just what stage in the business cycle he is talking about. Is he finally admitting that his disastrous mix of economic policies is pushing this country into the next stage of the business cycle, a full-blown recession?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, without breaking the confidences of last Saturday night I would like to congratulate the Leader of the Opposition in the kick-off to his campaign, but I would caution him not to get overly excited after one good speech. He has a long way to go until June 22.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has made reference to the remarks that I made last Friday in response to his question. What I was pointing out was that Canadian business bankruptcies at their peak in 1982 were 1.28 per cent of the total number of business establishments in the country. In 1988-89, that level of bankruptcy incidence is down less than half of that to .59 per cent in both 1988 and 1989.

I am just pointing out the fact that as an economy has to slow down, which is the normal course of business cycles, one would expect that that .59 would increase somewhat, but certainly not to the extraordinary levels that were achieved in 1982 under the government of which he was a member.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, today Statistics Canada, the government's own statistical agency, released figures showing that the Canadian economy shrank for two successive months this year, in both January and February. That is before taking into account the negative effects on the economy of the most recent increases in interest rates.

• (1420)

If the minister says his policies are not pushing this country into a recession, why have we had two successive months of a weakening economy? How many more months of economic decline, of lost jobs and closed businesses will it take before the minister drops his high interest rate blueprint for a government-made recession? Surely what has happened so far should be enough for him.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the Leader of the Opposition that during those same two months of January and February we had a total job creation of 64,000 people.

Mr. Crawford: Where?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The hon. member back there asks where. In Canada, right across this country we have seen 64,000 jobs created.

The only point that I am making is that I acknowledged in my last budget that we expected to have a slowdown in the economy this year. We expected that in the first half of this year. So there are no surprises here.

Going back to my remarks on Friday, when an economy has been operating as quickly as it has over the course of the last four or five years, one does expect that there will be some slowdown, and that is being reflected in the statistics that we have seen today.

[Translation]

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance just admitted that the present slowdown in the economy was in fact created by this government's economic policies.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, today Statistics Canada tells us that the Gross Domestic Product went down, at this stage in the economic cycle, during January and February. It says the manufacturing sector is already experiencing a recession and that housing starts in the construction industry are down. Why won't the minister admit that, at this stage in the economic cycle, the time has come to reduce interest rates before the whole economy is in a recession?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again I caution the Leader of the Opposition from zeroing in on one or other of the specific economic indicators. It is important to look at the total picture in the economy, and we are still seeing signs of inflationary pressures today.

I also point out to my friend what I said on a number of occasions last week in the House. When a government is looking at the development of economic policy, alternatives have to be considered. The alternatives that we have had to consider in previous times, such as was considered by the government of the day in the 1970's, underestimated the importance of inflation.

We are not going to fall into that same trap again this time. If we do so, we risk going back into the same trap that we saw in 1981–82 when inflation hit 13 per cent, and when the level of interest rates was in excess of 20 per cent. That clearly led to the disastrous recession of the 1981–82 period.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the Mohawk community of Akwesasne.

As the minister will know, living conditions on Akwesasne have become so dangerous and so bad that last Friday and Saturday several hundred residents of the village of St. Regis in Akwesasne had to be evacuated by barge across the St. Lawrence River to Cornwall, Ontario.

Can the minister tell this House if he has had any success in convincing the American authorities to take the necessary actions to disarm the so-called warrior society operating on the U.S. side of the border?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I not only thank the hon. member for his question but I thank him for the very constructive way in which he has approached a crisis situation affecting constituents of his. It is as well of concern to all members of the House.

I have been in touch with the Secretary of State of the United States, Mr. Baker. I have told him that we have a situation that we regard as being one of near anarchy, that in our view the great majority of the source of the problem is on the American side, and have asked him to urge response by American authorities, including, particularly, authorities of the Government of New York.

I have not yet received a reply from Mr. Baker, although I understand that one is in the mail. I have some confidence that the Americans will treat this matter with the seriousness that we do.

I can report to the member that there is occurring today a meeting of police authorities from both sides of the border, all the relevant agencies, to ensure that there is a co-ordinated police approach to the crisis to which he refers.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for his response.

As the minister will know, over the weekend the Chief of the Assembly of First Nations, Chief George Erasmus, has formally requested that the U.S. National Guard be called in to restore law and order on the U.S. side.

Given that statement, I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he has personally contacted, or if he will, contact Governor Mario Cuomo of New York and impress upon him the urgency of this issue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, officials of my department through the Consulate General in New York have been in touch with Governor Cuomo's office to demonstrate precisely the concern that we express.

I obviously cannot comment on Mr. Erasmus' statement, except to say that it underlines the concern held by individual Canadians and by governments here about the situation.

Our determination is to play our role in bringing it to a peaceful resolution. Our expectation is that the Americans, both on a state and a national level, will also play an effective role to resolve this situation as quickly and as peacefully as possible.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

The Minister of Labour is quoted over the weekend as having said: Canadians are really much better off. They take vacations. Restaurants are full on the weekends, and they drive cars. The facts indicate something quite different.

Today, Statistics Canada reports that the Gross Domestic Product has declined for the second straight month. Bankruptcies were worse last month than they were in the worst month in 1982, during a recession.

Will the Minister of Finance and his government finally pay attention to the real economic indicators: lower the interest rates and scrap the GST?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I have made it very clear in answers to the Leader of the New Democratic Party and the House last week why we are following the policies that we are following. It is very easy for members opposite to make these comments here. On this side of the House we have to deal with the issues. We have to deal with the policy prescription.

If I might draw her attention to an article by Norman Webster recently, the former NDP Leader of Saskatchewan, Allan Blakeney, is quoted as having said: "I have written to Audrey McLaughlin asking her how she proposes to deal with the deficit, and she has not replied".

We have to reply. That is the job that we have as government. We do not have the luxury that the hon. member for Yukon has of ignoring these problems. We are not going to ignore the problems. We are going to deal with them, as we have dealt with them in recent years. The results are better economic performance, one of the best in the world today.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Finance does not wish to take my opinion, I would like to point out to him the opinion of the Canadian Real Estate Association which says that the minister should curtail the interest rates before he brings the country down.

A Wood Gundy senior economist says that the interest rates are driving the economy into a serious recession.

The Canadian Exporters Association says that the current monetary policy is one-minded, amounts to overkill and is proving disastrous for Canadian exports.

I ask the minister again: When will the government respond to the mounting evidence that this interest rate policy is increasing, not decreasing inflation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is saying that our interest rate policy is increasing inflation, then she sadly misunderstands the role of interest rates and the role of central bank policy in dealing with inflation through the means of keeping interest rates high.

• (1430)

I draw to her attention that during the course of last year there was a very substantial increase in bank credit ranging from the 10 to 12 per cent range for businesses to the 15 to 20 per cent range for mortgages.

When the economy is growing at 7 per cent, if we were to decrease interest rates, that increase in bank credit would be much more substantial than it was. That would lead clearly to more inflation, clearly to the problems that we are trying to avoid, the similar type of problems that led to the recession of 1981–82. That is the policy of the government. We have to deal with these pressures today and we are determined to do so.

[Translation]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): I have a supplementary question for the minister, Mr. Speaker.

Figures released this morning show that the cost of living is rising faster than wages. When he tabled his budget, the minister of Finance had said that wages must remain stable to fight inflation.

How can the minister justify maintaining this policy? It isn't working!

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I am not quite sure that I follow the question the Leader of the New Democratic Party has posed.

Mr. Simmons: You are not alone.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Liberal members agree with me. They do not understand the question either. Maybe she would like to rephrase it.

[Translation]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, when he tabled his budget, the minister of Finance had said that wages must remain stable to fight inflation.

How can the minister justify maintaining this wage control policy? Because, of course, when the cost of living increases, wages must also increase.

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think my puzzlement came from the fact that wages and salaries have been increasing quite significantly in recent months. We have also seen an increase in unit labour costs which last year averaged 6.3 per cent during the course of the year, but throughout the year increased every quarter, ending at 6.9 per cent. This is one of a range of inflationary pressures that we are looking at. We do not look at just one indicator. We look at the range of pressures that are in the economy. Once we see those pressures subsiding, then we will be able to get interest rates down.

I have made that statement very clearly over the last few months. Until we see the pressures subsiding, it would be wrong for us to move too soon.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. This past Friday, the Finance Minister of Nova Scotia, in tabling his budget, announced a number of regressive tax increases which he said were necessary because of the loss of over $61 million in federal transfers.

Will the minister now finally admit that his number one plan for dealing with his government's own fiscal mismanagement is to simply transfer the federal deficit on to the backs of the poorest provinces of this Confederation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): My friend from Dartmouth is saying that for the $61 million change in the transfers to the provinces, the province of Nova Scotia had to increase taxes $150 million, so clearly there is an inconsistency in the figures.

However, I want to point out to my friend that we have a national problem; it is called the deficit. We have had to ask the provinces to participate in solving this problem and that is what the budget in part did.

While we have reduced the growth in transfers to the provinces, the growth for the province of Nova Scotia will be 3.9 per cent this year and 4.3 per cent next year. The program spending of the Government of Canada, that is on everything but interest costs for this current year, is an increase of 3 per cent. So we are not asking the province of Nova Scotia to do anything more than we are prepared to do ourselves.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same minister. Two weeks ago it was P.E.I. that got nailed for $13.5 million and last Friday Nova Scotians were asked to swallow $61 million.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance the same question that I asked the Prime Minister two weeks ago. What actions are his government prepared to take to offset this very serious loss of revenue to the coffers of the poorest provinces of this Confederation, especially at the very time when his own high interest rate, high dollar policies are pushing Atlantic Canada over the brink of recession?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if my friend will look at the range of measures as to how we have been treating the provinces, I think he will see that we have done so in a fair way. I indicated that the province of Nova Scotia transfer increased 3.9 per cent in this current year. For the province of Ontario, it is 2.25 per cent, for the provinces of Alberta and B.C., it is about 2.5 per cent. We are treating the provinces in an equitable way, recognizing the financial strength that they do have.

I also say to the hon. member that the federal government is spending 35 cents out of every revenue dollar on its interest costs. For the province of Nova Scotia, I think something like 16 or 18 cents of every revenue dollar is spent on interest costs. That is one reason why we felt it is important that the provinces share in the solution to dealing with the national deficit, and that is the presentation that we made in this last budget.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Bankruptcies in Ontario and Quebec increased 29 per cent over the first quarter of last year. In Atlantic Canada in the first three months of this year, the increase is 60 per cent over the same period last year. Atlantic Canadians are paying the price in spades for the government's high interest rate policy and the government's insensitivity.

What is it going to take to make this government stop its ruthless assault on the lives and businesses of Atlantic Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes it sound as if we are deliberately going out to cause businesses to go bankrupt. That is not true. There is no sense in that being left in the minds of Canadians.

I do not take any pleasure in seeing companies go bankrupt. I do not take pleasure in seeing an individual go bankrupt. But I do know that if we do not follow the policies that we are following and ensure that we get this inflation problem under control, the number of bankruptcies will be considerably higher in future years.

If we let inflation go out of control, we will get right back to where we were in 1982. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, of the figures that I used with the Leader of the Opposition. Bankruptcies then were 1.28 per cent of total businesses. In the last two years, they have been .59 per cent, about half as high.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Minister of Finance that Atlantic Canadians do not enjoy seeing their economy disintegrate.

What is the Minister of Finance going to do to help Atlantic Canadians who are now enduring the pain of bankruptcies? Is he going to tell them to get a job in the fishery, to look at the classifieds in the Micmac News, or take a train to central Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member understands that we have to have a national monetary policy. We cannot have a monetary policy that is different in Nova Scotia than Ontario, and different in Ontario than it is in British Columbia.

What we have done and continue to do is provide offsets through fiscal policy by having agencies such as the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency in place, or a major project such as Hibernia. These are things that are offsets, if you will, to the effects of these policies, plus the fact that equalization provides an ongoing measure of support for provinces in Atlantic Canada to allow them to continue to meet their responsibilities in the range of government policy there.

I remind my hon. friend that there are no strings attached to the equalization payments. Those moneys can be spent in any way that the province wishes to spend them.

* * *

• (1440)

PRESENCE IN GALLERY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to members' attention the presence in the gallery of His Excellency George Vassiliou, President of the Republic of Cyprus.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: And also, colleagues, I am pleased to draw the attention of the House to the presence in the gallery of the Hon. Henri Nallet, Minister of Agriculture of France.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I also wish to draw to the members' attention the presence in the gallery of Kazimiera Prunskiene, Prime Minister of Lithuania.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

* * *

BANKRUPTCY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, I have a question for the Minister of State.

The minister will know that the bankruptcy of Odyssey International and Thompson Vacations has stranded thousands of Canadians in the Caribbean and southern U.S. The minister will also know that a loophole in the National Transportation Act allows charter companies created like Odyssey to operate without financial guarantees.

Will the minister tell the House that he will move as soon as possible to plug that loophole, so that Canadians can be protected when they are travelling abroad.

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour) and (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for this question. It allows me to reassure tourists that the tour operators emergency stand-by group, a committee of the Canadian Association of Tour Operators is working diligently to bring home those passengers who were affected by this bankruptcy.

I would also like to remind passengers who find themselves in a situation like this, first to make contact with their travel agencies and our embassy offices, who have been requested to provide any necessary consular assistance to affected passengers.

I am informed that all passengers are on the way home.

I would also like to inform the hon. member that this is not a loophole in the law. It is an exemption that was granted to charters operated by carriers that have a scheduled licence because they were considered to have the financial capabilities. The National Transportation Agency has been reviewing its regulations, with a view to determining whether to revoke the exemption and require all charters to be protected by advance payments. We expect their decision to be reached within the next few weeks.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to the Minister of State. I remind the minister that that exemption was designed at a time when the airline industry was extremely stable and was not designed for a deregulated period which allows for all sorts of new companies to pop up overnight to serve scheduled situations.

Given the possibility that the provincial travel industry funds, either in Ontario, B.C., or elsewhere where they exist, will not be sufficient to totally compensate those passengers who have suffered a financial loss because of this bankruptcy, and given the fact that it is a federal exemption that has allowed this situation to occur, will the government give consideration to assisting those travel funds in meeting 100 per cent of the draw created by this bankruptcy?

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour) and (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the hon. member by saying that deregulation has in fact created an environment in which airline companies are competing in the best interests of the Canadian public.

As far as all his doom and gloom possibilities are concerned, I would like to tell him that as a responsible government, we will cross the bridge when we get to the river.

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Transport along the same line of questioning. I have been discussing this situation with people in the business. Organizations representing travel agents and tour operators informed the government months ago of a serious problem in Transport Canada regulations pertaining to chartered airlines, a problem which is directly related to the stranding of 7,000 Canadians this past weekend.

Considering there were four bankruptcies in past months—they were bonded, I agree—can the minister explain why he did not take action when he was told about the problem months ago and we saw what happened this past weekend?

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour) and (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member has stated that in most of the cases that happened recently the tour operators were in fact bonded as required by the regulations.

As far as looking at the whole situation, I have just told the previous member that the National Transportation Agency has been reviewing the regulations, with a view to examining the possibility and the necessity of requiring all charters to be protected and their decision is expected within the next few weeks.

[Translation]

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I accept the minister's answer, but he was notified.

In any event, I would like to ask the Minister of External Affairs, since so many Canadians are stranded throughout the world, whether senior officials of his department in the countries where we are represented are prepared to help Canadians who are very anxious, to say the least.

Is your department ready to give them information to reassure them that they can return home?

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour) and (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the hon. member again that yes, all embassies and consular offices have been instructed to do what is necessary so that all passengers with any problems when they travel abroad can contact them.

I just said that the first thing people must do is to contact their travel agent and as soon as we were informed of the possibility of this problem arising under the present legislation, the National Transportation Agency was instructed to review the present legislation. That is what they are doing.

Again I say to the hon. member that the National Transportation Agency's decision should come in the next few weeks.

* * *

[English]

FISHERIES

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): I have a question for my friend, the Minister of Fisheries, whose torrid honeymoon in the ministry is clearly over.

I want to draw to his attention something that he ought to know, that confidence in the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada is clearly and completely destroyed because of the lack of support from this government. Now there are rampant reports in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia that one of the giants in the business, National Sea, is looking at selling off some of its plants in those two provinces.

Is the minister aware of that? In the event that National Sea does sell off some of its plants in Newfoundland and/or Nova Scotia, is the minister prepared to ensure there will be a supply of fish to communities such as Burgeo by, if necessary, revoking the trawler licences of that company?

Mr. Speaker: I must point out to the hon. member that that is a highly hypothetical question. The minister may want to deal with it.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I guess you have my answer. This is a hypothetical question.

The point I want to make to the hon. member is that I have seen press releases about the possible attempt by some people to purchase the Canso and Burgeo plants from National Sea. All I can say at this moment is that we have been working with the communities, as the member knows, to find a way to give the people in Canso a way of earning their living.

We have never promised that we would be able to create jobs out of nothing, but I know that certainly discussions are taking place right now, and if and when something can be done in a positive way for Canso or Burgeo or any other place in Atlantic Canada, I will be pleased to let the House know.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): The minister will also know that the latest blow to the Atlantic fishery is the glut in the lobster fishery. Today you can buy lobster for less a pound than you can buy bologna, our traditional steak back home. In view of the continuing onslaught on the fishermen and plant workers in Atlantic Canada, can the minister tell the House when is he going to realize that he cannot afford to wait any longer before announcing his long-awaited aid package. They are hurting and they are hurting even more because of the lobster situation. Will he act now?

• (1450)

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, someone suggested that I say to the hon. member that he is an expert in baloney. I would not say that to him, although he may very well be.

I want to take the occasion to warn the hon. member that Atlantic Canadians, especially fishermen, are not asking for aid.

Mr. Simmons: They want to fish.

Mr. Valcourt: They do not want a hand-out. They want a hand up, and we will give it to them.

NICARAGUA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State for External Affairs. Three years ago I raised in this House of Commons actually four times, the question of arms sales by Canadian companies to the Nicaragua contras.

Yesterday The Toronto Star reports that arms dealer Arif Durrani has seen the shipments first-hand, and is testifying that documents were falsified.

In light of the new, direct evidence of illegal activity of Canadian companies, will the minister make public the RCMP report, which I do not believe has ever been made public, and can we expect charges against these companies in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct. He raised the matter four times and I think that on each occasion I gave him the assurance that the Canadian government was not involved in and had no knowledge of a transaction to supply arms.

He quotes Mr. Arif Durrani. He does not give his full credential. He is a convicted arms dealer in prison in Oregon. He is the source of the latest round of concerns that have been expressed in The Toronto Star.

The hon. member knows as well as anyone in the House that there is a practical rule against releasing RCMP reports. I trust him and I take him as a man of his word. If he is prepared to accept the normal confidentialities that would apply, I will be sure that there is a complete briefing given to him on a confidential basis as to the circumstances. Then he can base his questions on the facts, not on allegations that come from persons occupying cells in Oregon.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): I did neglect to mention that. That is a very good source though, and the minister should consider that.

I say to the minister that I will not take up his offer. He should make the report public to the Canadian people, as they have done in the United States with respect to the Iranian-contra affair.

My supplementary question is to the Prime Minister. Either the Canadian government in this matter was ignorant of what was going on, were wilfully blind or, in fact, knew what was going on.

Given that this happened in a period when he was very close to the American President, Mr. Reagan, and to the White House, was he ever asked by President Reagan, Mr. Poindexter, or any other officials in the White House at that time, and did he agree, to secretly ship arms to the Nicaraguan contras through Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, but they did tell me to keep my eye out for subversive socialists in Canada.

* * *

[Translation]

LABOUR FORCE DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As part of our unemployment insurance reform and our Labour Force Development Strategy, we plan to spend several million dollars on helping older workers and supporting the development of communities hit by high unemployment rates. For instance, $100 million was earmarked for the Program for Older Worker Adjustment and $50 million for the Community Futures Program.

Mr. Speaker, we have been waiting four months for the Senate to act, and meanwhile the unemployed, workers and disadvantaged regions are being penalized. Does the minister have any indication whether the Senate will finally come to its senses and stop using the unemployed and the regions for its own political ends?

An hon. member: Good question.

An hon. member: Very good question.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we, as a government, are aware of the problems of the unemployed and more specifically of unemployed older workers, and we have the solutions to these problems in our Labour Force Development Strategy. For the sake of all older workers and others who are unemployed, I sincerely hope the Senate will decide to support a bill that is of vital importance to all Canadian workers.

[English]

LITHUANIA

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs met this morning with our distinguished guest, the Prime Minister of Lithuania.

Does that meeting indicate that Canada will be playing a role in helping to ease the tensions in the struggling country of Lithuania?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did have the opportunity this morning, as a parliamentarian meeting another parliamentarian, to have some discussions with the Prime Minister of Lithuania.

We identified a number of areas in which Canadian help to the elected leaders of Lithuania can proceed, ranging all the way from advice on establishing banking systems and government departments, through to the provision of training in Canadian business schools and the discussion of trade with members of the trade delegation accompanying the Prime Minister.

Of particular interest to me was the response by the Prime Minister of Lithuania to the proposal made on the weekend by President Mitterrand and Chancellor Kohl. The response was a constructive and positive one, indicating that they would, of course, require some international guarantees. I indicated to the Prime Minister that Canada would look for ways in which we could contribute to international guarantees that might allow the independence of Lithuania to be achieved by negotiation and peacefully.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister for External Affairs and it also concerns Lithuania.

Did the minister have an opportunity in his discussions this morning with the Prime Minister to indicate Canada's recognition of this as being an international problem and not just a national problem for Moscow, and our willingness to indicate to Moscow our support for a peaceful settlement and the eventual independence of Lithuania?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that position was communicated some time ago, not least by a unanimous resolution of this House of Commons.

I think that the practical problem being faced now is how one achieves that result in a way that encourages and maintains in control in the Soviet Union the forces of reform which all of us applaud.

There was a very important initiative taken by President Mitterrand and Chancellor Kohl. There has been a constructive response by the Lithuanians to that initiative. There is a requirement from the point of view of the Lithuanians of some kind of international guarantees. There are a couple of ways in which Canada can work on that. One is to consult with some of our allies, which we will do, beginning in the next few days. Another would be to respond positively to the request of the Prime Minister of Lithuania this morning that there might be some Canadian expertise in international law that could be made available to Lithuanians. We are prepared to look at that.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the same minister.

I am sure all Canadians appreciate the initiatives being taken here, but I would like to pursue one specific one. Given Canada's commitment to international organizations, does the minister see a role for the United Nations, particularly the Security Council, and the presence of international organizations during these very, very insecure times for Lithuanians?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that matter was discussed with the Prime Minister of Lithuania this morning. I conveyed to her my view that it would be premature to involve the United Nations or the Security Council at this stage because that might have the effect of hardening attitudes on all sides. I thought the informal but highly effective approach that had been initiated by President Mitterrand and Chancellor Kohl should be followed up with a similarly informal but effective attempt by nations in the west to provide the kind of international guarantees, quite reasonable guarantees in my view, that were sought by the Prime Minister of Lithuania.

• (1500)

[Translation]

LINGUISTIC MINORITIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. In exchange for a federal contribution totalling $26 million over ten years, Saskatchewan promised to set up a system for the control and management of minority schools by the Fransaskois.

We know the provincial government has withdrawn from this agreement. Since Saskatchewan broke its contract, shouldn't the federal government withdraw its contribution and give it to the minority so that it can look after its own interests?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, there is a Canada-Saskatchewan agreement involving $26 million. As I said before, I regret the delay in introducing legislation to hand over management of the schools to the francophone community and francophone parents. Certain amounts of money are being transferred through this agreement and will be used in a process that is now taking place, and we will stand by the agreement that is now in place. I see the Saskatchewan government's commitment as a very firm one, despite the delay, and our commitment is firm as well.

[English]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled that minorities have the right to control and manage their own educational institutions.

We know that four provinces, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and P.E.I. have such a system. None of the other have it. I ask the Secretary of State: Will he convene a conference of the provinces to discuss this matter with a set timetable, with something like a constructive approach to settle this problem which is getting out of hand?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I will be meeting in two weeks or a little less with the Minister of Education for Alberta, Mr. Dinning. I intend to see what progress we can make.

It comes about as a result of a very constructive meeting I had with ACFA, Association canadienne française de l'Alberta. I do intend to write to all my provincial counterparts and do hope to be able to make very important progress on this matter, that I know is of extreme concern to the member and to all members of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that I have notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam. Immediately after that I will be hearing the hon. House leader of the government. However, with the consent of the House the House leader has a matter which I think might be helpful to the House. If I could have consent I would hear him first. Then I would hear the hon. member. I need the consent.

Some hon. members: Agreed.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to indicate that it is my intention to call an Opposition Day tomorrow, to designate tomorrow a Supply Day for the opposition.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of an answer in Question Period.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, for three years I have been doggedly trying to get the government to deal with the question of international arms dealers, and specifically our involvement in the Iranian contra affair. I put the question to the Prime Minister today and he suggested that it is somehow subversive, that is disloyal or traitorous.

I have a sense of humour like the Prime Minister, but I put it as a very serious question. It is a serious matter. It is not a joke. For three years we have been trying to get the government to make public an investigation in Canada over this very serious matter.

There has been new evidence that it has come to light. I ask the Prime Minister to withdraw the suggestion that the matter is subversive and disloyal in any way, that in fact it is a serious matter and his government will respond to it.

Mr. Speaker: I know that the member put the question in a serious way, even though the way the question was put might have elicited some attempted humour in reply.

The right hon. Prime Minister may wish to comment.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I always take questions and suggestions from my hon. friend very seriously.

I did, indeed, take the last one very seriously. The government offered the hon. member the opportunity to have a complete, confidential briefing on the information available to us so that he could then base his questions on knowledge as opposed to conjecture and rumour.

I regret that I heard the hon. member decline the invitation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Perhaps he would like to reflect upon that and perhaps change his mind. I can assure my hon. friend of something that he already knows well and that is that anything that would offend him in any way at any time, I would withdraw.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government responses to several petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

ANNIVERSARY OF LIBERATION OF THE NETHERLANDS

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the House today that during the next 10 days we will be commemorating and celebrating the liberation of The Netherlands by the First Canadian Army. It will be 45 years ago on Saturday since Lieutenant General Charles Foulkes, Commanding Officer of the First Canadian Corps, officially accepted the surrender of the German forces in The Netherlands.

[Translation]

The surrender came at the end of a long, tough battle to liberate the people of the Netherlands from their oppressors. During that battle, our armed forces kept access routes to the major port of Antwerp open so that the Allied advance would not slow down through lack of supplies.

[English]

It was a struggle that saw our forces prevail over a do-or-die enemy and the worst ground conditions encountered during the war in western Europe. More than 7,600 Canadians died during that successful struggle to return freedom to others. Later this week, in the company of members of this House, I will have the privilege of leading a pilgrimage to The Netherlands, in order to honour the memory of those men and women and to celebrate what they achieved.

[Translation]

On the other side of the ocean, we will have an opportunity to meet thousands of our veterans, guests of the many "Thank you, Canada" committees in the Netherlands.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the Dutch people have never forgotten what young Canadians from every province and every service achieved 45 years ago. Neither should we, ourselves, ever forget those who won our country such enduring respect.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege to respond to the statement just made to the House by the hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs.

On this, the approaching forty-fifth of the liberation of The Netherlands, we commemorate the more than 7,600 Canadians who gave their lives for freedom. At the same time, we, the people of Canada and The Netherlands together, take comfort in the knowledge that out of the anguish and the horrors of war, there developed warm and powerful bonds of friendship that still endure today.

The foundation of a special relationship between our countries was established during the dark years of the Second World War. When Holland was overrun by the Nazis in May 1940, Queen Wilhelmina sought refuge in England and from there headed her country's government in exile. But even Great Britain was a precarious haven and in 1942, the Crown Princess Juliana was persuaded to leave for Canada where she made her wartime home, another dimension to this tangible and historic bond.

• (1510)

Perhaps I should mention in the context of what we are discussing here this afternoon that only this weekend I spoke with the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, accompanied by Mr. Fred Williams of the Royal Canadian Legion, Newfoundland. They had just returned from the pilgrimage abroad to commemorate the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Gallipoli, one that is deeply ingrained in the minds and hearts of many veterans of the Royal Newfoundland Regiment who served in that campaign. They remarked on the solemnity and the reverence of that occasion.

Mr. Speaker, as the Official Opposition veterans affairs critic, I am very pleased to join the minister's pilgrimage to The Netherlands to pay tribute and to honour the memory of those Canadians and to recognize what they achieved for others and for themselves in the cause of freedom.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my caucus and my party, it is a pleasure to join with the minister and my colleague from the Official Opposition to also recognize these coming days in honour of the forty-fifth anniversary of the liberation of The Netherlands by the First Canadian Army.

I had the pleasure and privilege of being there five years ago on the fortieth anniversary in the company of George Hees, the former minister, who won a Distinguished Service Cross in the Schelde Estuary, trying to get across the canal.

I appreciate the fact that the minister has invited me and some other colleagues to join him at the celebrations in Holland next week and the week after.

One thing impressed me very much in that previous experience. I am sure I will find it again starting next week. That is the school children, all three generations from the last 45 years, learn what happened from 1939 to 1945 and what Canadians did. I just wish more of the same would happen in our schools—not for the glorification of war, but for what we did to fight for peace in our own country. I hope that among ourselves and others we will do more to make sure that Canadians, present and future, will be fully informed.

Outside of this Chamber right now is a remembrance, a gift from the people of Holland, tulips in bloom. There could be no finer gift to decorate this Hill and these buildings. We who attend these ceremonies over the next 10 days will do our best to express our appreciation to the committees all over Holland which organize and provide hospitality and accommodation for thousands of Canadian veterans.

Many hundreds of Dutch people became spouses of Canadian veterans. These Canadians were very smart. They married people from Holland. I have a number of these people in my riding.

I hope, Sir, that this House will continue the tradition of each year acknowledging both World Wars and the Korean War, wars that had to be fought and in which we fought. We took no part in those wars that did not have to be fought. That is to the everlasting credit of our country.

* * *

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF FIFTEENTH REPORT OF CANADIAN NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 34, I have the honour to present to the House the fifteenth report, in both official languages, of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association.

* * *

PETITIONS

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 on behalf of a number of people from the community of Kamloops. These people point out a whole list of grievances regarding the government's proposed goods and services tax. They are calling upon the Liberals in the Senate to stop this tax dead in its tracks right away.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition on another topic. Petitioners are still concerned over the government's decision to cut back on VIA Rail. These are petitioners from western Canada who are calling for the government to reconsider the decision to close down a good part of the VIA system and introduce a modern passenger train service for Canada from coast to coast.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present, on behalf of a number of residents from the riding of Vancouver South, a petition that calls upon Parliament and the Canadian government to take immediate and effective measures to secure Mr. Leo's release from prison. They are imploring Parliament to do everything possible to help this Canadian citizen.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have two sets of petitions signed by constituents of my riding of York West.

The first one, and there are about 15 petitions, asks this government to go back to the drawing board with respect to the GST. We know that the GST is currently in the hands of the Senate. The petitioners ask the government to have a second look as this is going to damage and undermine the fabric of not only average and middle-class Canadians but as well many of the small businesses that are the engines and the creators of jobs across the country.

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the second petition concerns Pearson International Airport. It comes mainly from individuals who live in and around the Pearson air flight zone.

They are asking that a further runway not now be constructed and that the enforcement for late night travel past midnight in the wee hours be stopped. This will allow individuals living in those neighbourhoods to have a viable neighbourhood to live in not only for the short term but for the long term as the airport looks toward expansion.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, today it is my privilege to bring forth many petitions that oppose the goods and services tax and the negative impacts this tax will bring upon Canadians.

They voice their opinion from my riding in Essex—Kent and ask the government to reconsider its position.

[Translation]

PROTECTION AND REGULATION OF FISH STOCKS

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Mr. Speaker, I have here a number of petitions signed by residents of Robertville, Pointe-Verte, Madran, Belledune, Petit Rocher and Beresford.

Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to extend its jurisdiction to include the entire continental shelf, as permitted under international law, so that Canada can protect and regulate the fish stocks that are vital to Atlantic fishermen and to all Canadians.

[English]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions signed by several hundred of my constituents in Bruce Mines and surrounding areas of the Algoma district.

They call on the government to not proceed with the goods and services tax because of the adverse effect it will have on low income and elderly people throughout the riding.

* * *

• (1520)

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 259 will be answered today.

[Text]

VIOLATIONS OF THE FISHERIES ACT

Question No. 259—Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Alberni):

For each calendar year from 1984 to 1990 (to date) have any Native fishermen been charged in British Columbia with violations of the Fisheries Act and, if so (a) what number were (i) charged (ii) convicted (b) what number of charges were (i) withdrawn (ii) dismissed (c) for those convicted, in each case, what sentence was imposed?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): In British Columbia, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans does not maintain a record of the number of Native fishermen charged with violations of the Fisheries Act. However, the Department does maintain records for prosecutions involving individuals who qualify for an Indian food fish licence under Section 27 of the British Columbia (General) Regulations.

The Department is only able to provide data relating to charges initiated by DFO staff. Charges initiated by Provincial authorities tasked with enforcement of the Fisheries Act, are not recorded by DFO.

The attached table sets the number of files processed (ie; incidents), the number of charges laid and the final disposition of these charges, for the period 1984 to 1990 (to date).

DFO ENFORCEMENT STATISTICS

VIOLATIONS INVOLVING PERSONS ELIGIBLE FOR AN INDIAN FOOD FISH LICENCE

Year	Number of Files	Charges Laid	Convictions	Withdrawn	Dismissed	Acquitted
1984	79	121	73	19	20	0
1985	156	309	143	118	30	0
1986	254	489	235	168	53	0
1987	309	583	222	164	38	0
1988	174	358	61	37	17	2
1989	339	646	156	90	31	6
1990	8	10	1	1	0	0

	Sentence
Année	Probation	Suspended Sentence	Absolute Discharge	Jail	Conditional Discharge	Fine	Total Fines	Charges Outstanding
1984	1	7	6	2	3	54	$ 6 526	9
1985	5	15	1	7	1	114	$ 16 580	18
1986	4	31	3	12	4	181	$ 25 741	33
1987	11	15	5	22	6	163	$ 27 195	159
1988	1	2	2	5	0	51	$ 10 230	241
1989	6	3	0	4	2	141	$ 25 070	363
1990	0	0	0	0	0	1	$ 25	8

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered.

Mr. Kempling: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

AKWESASNE RESERVE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 16 I wish to move the adjournment of the House to discuss a matter of extreme urgency, namely, the violence on the Mohawk community of Akwesasne which is partially in my riding.

This violence has resulted in shootings, grenade blasts, arson, beatings, injuries and now the evacuation of hundreds of citizens of the village of St. Régis. Mr. Speaker, as you will know, this community is located less than 50 miles from Parliament Hill. This violation has got to stop. This issue has to be raised publicly in this House now.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I received notice of the application of the member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell on a matter which is extremely important.

The hon member put questions to the appropriate minister during Question Period today. The response of the government through the right hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated the seriousness of the matter, and also his appreciation of the steps that the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has already taken both outside this Chamber and inside this Chamber on the matter.

Members will know that there is an allotted day tomorrow. Under those circumstances, I would not, as I would ordinarily do, order an emergency debate. Depending on what happens tomorrow I would invite the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, if he deems it necessary, to apply again.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

RAILWAY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of motion of Mr. Lewis that Bill C-26, an act to amend the Railway Act (grain and flour subsidies), be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee; and on the amendment of Ms. Clancy (p. 8227).

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of Ministerial Statements, Government Orders will be extended seven minutes.

I believe the hon. member for Regina—Lumsden had 10 minutes of questions and comments.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, just a very brief question to my colleague.

I listened with interest to his speech earlier today. A lot of the focus was on the impacts on Atlantic Canada and the west. As he and the House will know, there are a number of small transfer elevators located in Georgian Bay, the upper Great Lakes and even the lower lakes in the upper St. Lawrence, that each year receive anywhere from 90,000 tonnes to 530,000 tonnes of at and east shipments.

I wonder if the hon. member for Regina—Lumsden can give us his impressions of what the impact on these smaller elevators will be in what we call the bay ports and the lower St. Lawrence?

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, my colleague is quite right. There will be an impact on the Georgian Bay and other St. Lawrence Seaway ports. Not only will it impact on the ports in terms of the grain handling, there are two or three flour mills in that system that will be affected by the moving of flour to Montreal, and Halifax and Saint John in particular, for export.

The cancellation of the at and east freight rates is a relatively small saving to the government, at $30 million to $40 million a year. Yet it could mean the loss of at least two flour mills in the Great Lakes system and the grain handling facilities, not only for milling grades of wheat but for feed grains, a fair amount of which is produced in Ontario.

As I pointed out earlier this day, when the Atlantic provinces are forced to consider bringing in corn from the United States and feed grains from western Europe there is something fundamentally wrong with the government's policy. The ramifications of this action by the government are far wider than just a reduction in subsidies for the transportation of milling grain and flour to eastern ports.

The ramifications reach west past Regina and so the government, I submit, needs to reconsider what it is it is doing. The so-called savings under this bill will be offset by much higher costs not only to the government but to people in the milling industry, the grain terminals, the employees and the grain producers, both of feed grain and grain raised for milling into flour.

I want to thank my colleague again because the government has to reconsider what it is doing to some Great Lakes and St. Lawrence Seaway ports, not just Saint John and Halifax, because there will be ramifications for them as well.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, I too am glad to take part in this debate, but I do so with mixed feelings because we have been wrestling with the implications of Bill C-26 in the transport committee.

The bill has been before the House since last June. My hon. friend, the hon. member for Regina—Lumsden mentioned that even though we have not passed the bill, it is being implemented retroactively by the railways against the shippers.

Certainly, having been in the opposition for many years, I share the views of my friend, the hon. member for Regina—Lumsden, in terms of the effect of retroactive legislation. That is one reason why I speak with very mixed feelings today.

This bill, which appears to be insignificant, with just two pages and one clause which amends the Railway Act and something called "at and east", is a complete mystery to most members of this House. Yet, for those of us from Atlantic Canada, the "at and east" provision of that Railway Act that is being abolished by Bill C-26 is as fundamental to us in Atlantic Canada for the export and the movement of grain as the Crow's Nest Pass was in western Canada.

I am very embarrassed that a government would bring this on without consultations with all the affected parties, as has been promised. We heard it was going to be brought forward last Thursday. Having checked with the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Council today, there has been no response to them from the ministry to discuss something that Atlantic Canadians, the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission and most of the Atlantic members were prepared to accept.

We understood there needed to be change in the "at and east" subsidy, a subsidy that was valued at $35 million in direct payments to the railways to pay the difference between a frozen rate in the 1960 climate of freight rates and the compensatory rate which obviously is a higher rate. That difference is a subsidy of about $35 million. It is quite correct, this is a budget item which, of course, is another element which gives me some concern in view of other things that have happened with budgets around here.

• (1530)

The sad thing is that the Atlantic community most affected by this and Atlantic members on all sides, especially the government side, have been waiting to see what was going to come from something called "offsets". "Offsets" is about as mysterious as the words "at and east". The offsets are offsets that could be done by cabinet order involving one, two or three ministers to, in effect, offset the loss of the subsidy by doing some other things, for instance, removing the tariff on the importation of American corn. That itself would help somewhat to redress the loss of the subsidy.

There was to be some type of agreement with unit trains from the lakehead eastward. There were to be many things, and yet none of that has happened even though we have known about a change.

In fact, to give full credit where credit is due, it was the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission itself that came up with a proposal in 1985 suggesting changes in the subsidy. It realized that this government was trying to reduce a deficit. It was trying to be sensible and reasonable and came up with a formula to reduce the subsidy from $35 million to approximately $10 million with consequential offsets to come into place.

That was 1985. It has not happened. There has not been any movement. There has not been any response. There have been some letters. Perhaps the problem is that it involves three or four ministers of the Crown and/or the Atlantic Province Transportation Commission and the Maritime Farmers Council, but there has not been any response to the most reasonable, responsible reaction to this element of at and east which we all knew needed change.

The Budget Papers say that this is one of the subsidy programs that has outlived its usefulness because now Atlantic ports are competitive with American ports. The phrase "at and east" was introduced to have Atlantic ports competitive at and east of Buffalo with American ports, i.e., the ports of Saint John and Halifax would be competitive. That was one of the reasons for the at and east subsidy and that has been recognized by the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Council.

There is another reason, which I know is going to surprise some members of this House, why there was an at and east proposal and this was never even touched on in the Budget Papers. I will go back to the initial debate on this bill in the Transport Committee in 1966. A fellow called Mr. Pickersgill, the then Minister of Transport, came before that committee and said certain things.

We honour my friend from Regina—Lumsden today. It is his birthday and he is going to get into the hallowed halls of retirees and pensioners. He has been a most diligent, constructive, and sometimes cantankerous member of the transport committee for 21 years, but he has always brought an insight on transport matters which I wish was shared by all members of this House. I compliment him for that.

This took place just before the member came along the pike, but I happened to be there. Mr. Pickersgill appeared before the transport committee on Thursday, October 6, 1966.

To digress for a minute, I wish that some members of this House on all sides would start to pay attention a little more to many aspects of our history. Quite frankly, if we looked at some of our history perhaps we would not have some of the problems that we have today.

Mr. Pickersgill, the then Minister of Transport, came before the transport committee on Thursday, October 6, to explain this mammoth change in transportation. In fact, it was the new transportation policy, it set up the national transportation agency. It was the new blueprint which was not changed until the Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport when we took over, brought in the new transportation act. About the at and east rates Mr. Pickersgill said, among other things:

> The one other thing that affects the Atlantic provinces, in this Bill especially, is something that has never been done before, and that is the underwriting of the so-called "At and East Rates", which are the rates on grain between the lakeports and ports from Montreal east, including and being of particular importance to Halifax and Saint John. According to the Board of Transport Commissioners, these rates are already unremunerative. In the year 1966 the railways already have been paid some compensation for maintaining these rates. We have decided to keep those rates at their present level and to pay compensation for doing so. This is because we feel there is an equal obligation in this field to the obligation with regard to the Crowsnest. The purpose of this is to ensure that we will have rates which will provide some inducement and incentive to shippers to use the facilities of the Atlantic ports. This might be a debatable question but, at any rate, it is the policy embodied in this bill and I think, on balance, when we consider the terms of the Atlantic Development Board study on the ports of Halifax and Saint John, as to the effects of the increased St. Lawrence transportation, it is one very desirable offset in that field.

That explanation extends the reason why there ever was an at and east. It was not just to be competitive with American ports. It was so that Halifax and Saint John could be competitive with the St. Lawrence ports. The St. Lawrence ports are still there. They still get the benefit of coast guard, ice navigation and many elements from the Department of Transport, and I do not quibble with that. But what I do take exception to is that in his budget speech the Minister of Finance mentioned only one reason why the subsidy was there. He is right that it is not necessary any more, because of containers and everything else, for that subsidy between Atlantic ports and the eastern ports at and east of Buffalo on the American side. But it is still very necessary for Saint John and Halifax in terms of the St. Lawrence ports that are still very much there and still very much get help from the federal government through many programs.

I, as one Canadian from Atlantic Canada, cannot accept Bill C-26 in its present form, especially with no assurance that there are going to be offsets, because we still have something from your neck of the woods, Mr. Speaker, and from the neck of the woods of my hon. friend from Regina—Lumsden. We still have something call the Western Grain Transportation Act which distorts the movement of grain to the tune of about $850 million. I am aware of some of that history. I know there are some moves to try to reform and revise that, to perhaps give some of that money to the producers rather than paying it to the railways. There are many different things being discussed.

Well let us discuss them and try to define where we make the change. But is it fair to make the change on the little $35 million in Bill C-26 that hits Atlantic Canada right in the gonads and not do anything to the Western Grain Transportation Act which affects the western farmers to the tune of $850 million? That is not fair or equitable and that is why Bill C-26 should not be before this House at second reading until there is something done.

As I said earlier, we had the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission before the Transport Committee on February 22. They are so reasonable. In fact, I talked to the chairman afterwards and said that he most likely shot himself in both feet let alone knee-capping himself because he did not come out a little more critically of the fact that since 1985 there has been no response fundamentally to the proposals they put forward then for offsets. They were so reasonable that they said they had looked at some of those offsets and they think that perhaps they are not in the complete balance that should be applied, and they came up with another proposal. They came up with a proposal that removes the subsidy on an ongoing yearly basis and only ties it to the three winter months when, in effect, the St. Lawrence is closed and the Atlantic ports could still get the benefit of the flow of grain to the east as long as they got the subsidy to help pay the difference between the frozen rate and the compensatory rate that the railways would charge.

• (1540)

I just wanted to put on the record that this is much more than just a subsidy to be competitive with American ports. It is part of our national dimension. It is part of the fabric which keeps this country together. Mr. Pearson said many years ago in this Chamber that there is a price to pay to have a Canada. He was referring to the questions about the cost of bilingualism. There are so many costs to keep this country together from coast to coast.

One of the little elements that helped us in Atlantic Canada was at and east. The Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, on its own without pressure from the federal government, came through with suggestions to reduce that subsidy to about $10 million if there was movement on the offsets.

I want to put on the record what we are talking about when we talk about offsets. I understand that the problem is that there are four or five ministers involved and perhaps not one minister has tried to address this. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that those of us in Atlantic Canada cannot stay quiet anymore on this unless we have some assurance that those offsets are going to come into play.

I quoted Mr. Pickersgill who brought in the national transportation bill and then became the first chairman of the national transportation agency. That was a very good bill for him. But he did something good for Atlantic Canada on the at and east. For us to let that go and quietly wait for some action on the offsets is not correct for any of us from Atlantic Canada. It puts members on all sides, and especially the government side, in a very embarrassing position.

I am not talking about the moon. I am not talking about the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars in terms of offsets. Do you know what I am talking about? I am talking about unit trains to move the export grain to Halifax and Saint John, the use of water transport for the shipment of Plan "C" feed grains to Atlantic Canada, the elimination of the countervail and duty on U.S. corn, provision of facilities to receive grain by water at Saint John, promotion of the continued use of Halifax for the shipment of export flour and provision of permits allowing the importation of feed grains from foreign countries. Just about all of those things involve not only two or three ministers of the government but—and this is fundamental—involve the co-operation and the action of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Often, for understandable reasons, to protect the credibility of our wheat, to make sure we had a hard durum that did not have imperfections and was not going to be diluted with soft grains, the Canadian Wheat Board, for so many years, has maintained that very proper control of the wheat trade. But there comes a time, when you are trying to help one area of the country, when quite frankly we do not need the Durum wheats and the hard cereal grains in the west, we need the soft grains and feed grains in the east.

In the meantime, we need some help at the export level to keep the elevators at Saint John and Halifax, because if you do not have elevators in Saint John and Halifax you are not going to have the wherewithal to keep these feed grains that you can develop in Atlantic Canada. That is the bottom line that is so disastrous, to have this bill come into effect with no action on the offsets.

The Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission is as sad as I am that they have had no communication whatsoever, I am told, since they wrote after their appearance before our committee on February 20, 1990. I find that regrettable at best. Perhaps I had better watch what I think at the worst, because I just cannot understand that.

The Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission came before the committee and said that they understand some of the difficulties the government is having and are prepared to suggest a new change for offsets. I want to get this on the record so that someone somewhere in the bureaucracy can finally read it because perhaps it has not got around. After all, it was only February, 1990, and perhaps it has not had time to circulate around and be addressed.

The proposal that the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission laid before the transport committee for the first time caught us all by surprise. It is as follows:

> In lieu of "At and East" and proposed only to apply on an annual basis during period of seaway winter closing:
>
> (i) rail rates on export grain and flour to Halifax/Saint John be set at a fixed rate differential over St. Lawrence ports at a level necessary to make the Maritime ports competitive with St. Lawrence ports and to encourage the use of the Maritime ports and the railways serving these ports;
>
> (ii) railways to be reimbursed by subsidy for the difference between the "fixed" rate level and compensatory rates;
>
> (iii) facilities to receive grain by water at the Saint John elevator be provided; and
>
> (iv) to prevent undue burden on the federal treasury—

These are not politicians talking, this is the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission trying to get something in place to help us. Out west they have the tariff off of corn. I see colleagues of mine from the west. The parliamentary secretary is from the west. Why should they have the removal of the corn tariff in British Columbia when we still have it hanging around our throats in Nova Scotia and Atlantic Canada? That is part of the other discrimination.

To continue my mild remarks on their reasonable proposal, they say:

> (iv) to prevent undue burden on the federal treasury, the special provision for "fixed" rates could be limited to maximum tonnages both for export grain and flour but not less than the volume required to maintain the grain elevators at Halifax and Saint John and the flour mill at Halifax as viable operations.

They end up their note by saying:

> The APTC would be prepared to work with federal officials to assist with the development and implementation of these proposals.

That is dated February 19, 1990. That is a variation of what they presented in 1985, and we had not heard. Can I stay here and stay silent as a member from Atlantic Canada when we have not even heard?

This is second reading and this is going to go to a committee. I wish one of the four ministers responsible for resolving these offsets was in the House. There was one but he has left. I wish there was a minister involved in the hoped for discussion on this issue who, before this debate concludes, could come into the House and give some assurance that there is going to be action on the offsets, perhaps not to the total satisfaction of the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, but at least some action.

That memo to the transport committee was dated February 19 and they came on February 20 and presented their evidence and in effect supplemented what they said.

I certainly cannot support this bill at this time. I am only hoping that some sense is going to come to the ministers involved to address this serious issue. You are from western Canada, Mr. Speaker, and have been a valued member of this House for many years, as is my friend from Regina—Lumsden.

I just cannot believe that a government would bring in a bill affecting the Crowsnest Pass without a lot more deliberation, especially when there was an agency that was willing to work out a resolution of the difficulties with the loss of the subsidy. Their proposal, on their own figures, and I have not heard a rebuttal yet from the federal officials, is to reduce this subsidy on their own from $35 million to about $10 million. That $10 million means the future of the elevators in Saint John and Halifax, the feed situation in Atlantic Canada and what that does to our farmers in Atlantic Canada.

Quite frankly, there are some people in Atlantic Canada who suggest that in Atlantic Canada we should not even try to raise feed grains. I am not going to go that far.

• (1550)

I just want to conclude by saying that never in my experience has an agency so affected by a budget matter been so reasonable, frankly I think almost to their own detriment, in not trying to organize Atlantic members in a much more aggressive way to speak on their behalf, to ensure that there is some type of offset. You have heard about the offsets that we are talking about. They are all by Order in Council with the co-operation of the Wheat Board, and yet nothing has happened.

There should not be any mystery as to why this member on this side cannot support this legislation at this time. I am only hoping that when we get this into committee, those officials charged with looking at these offsets since 1985 can indicate what they have been doing since then and/or what they have been doing since February 19, 1990.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise very briefly just to compliment my colleague, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley—Hants. I am sure the people of Nova Scotia and and of the Atlantic region will be delighted to hear his comments today, comments that have been echoed on this side of the House by other members from Atlantic Canada. Perhaps my hon. friend has realized that if we do not hang together we certainly will hang separately.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the hon. member for Halifax. She could have rubbed it in even a little further. She did not really rub it in the way she could have. Quite frankly, as far as I am concerned, as some of my colleagues on this side of the House know, we have to really start to practise some of the reforms in the McGrath report with regard to issues, not on the partisan things that we run elections on, but on subject matter. This was never an issue in an election. Obviously if it had been and my party had this position and I got elected, I would not be standing up here opposing it.

But I think the only way this place is ever going to survive is if we can have some repartee and exchanges on all sides of the House on different issues where government confidence is not involved. I appreciate that this matter is a budget item. There are different degrees of budget items but, notwithstanding that it is a budget item, I still think that on so many issues members have to start saying what they believe and let the chips fall where they may.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the hon. member, my colleague and the chairman of the transport committee. I appreciated his remarks about my birthday and service in the committee. When I get cantankerous it is usually because of the chairman.

This bill amends an ordinary statute, the Railway Act. It may have been announced in the budget but it is not a budget bill. How does he make that a budget bill? I submit that this bill is not a matter of confidence. There are occasions when members from all sides, including government members, as a last resort, can decide to let the government and the government House Leader know that they must withdraw a bill or change it or they will vote against it or stay out or something.

Does he not agree that this is one of those rare opportunities when members can do as Liberal members failed to do on the Crowsnest Pass rates when they went along with getting rid of them?

For a matter of sheer survival, if nothing else, I would think government members from Atlantic Canada should be ready to say, "Look, withdraw this bill or substantially change it or we are not going to be here to vote or we are going to vote against it". It is not an issue of confidence. How does the member say that this bill is a matter of confidence?

Mr. Nowlan: I will be very quick because I know other members want to speak. My friend shows his experience here in the House. All I said was it came down in the budget. I might have said a budgetary proposal, but there is no ways and means motion. I said I could not support it as it is. Whether I vote against it or not is something I have to decide. I am certainly not going to be here to support it the way it is.

I will be horrified if there are very many Atlantic members, other than the members of the cabinet, who have read the bill and understand the implications of it, who would support this bill going through now. I would have no hesitation supporting this bill if we could come up with the offsets. Frankly, the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission and others in the Atlantic farm community understood our position.

We have the bill before us now and there has been no action on the offsets. I quite agree with the hon. member. I am just not going to support it as is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Before we go into debate again, the hon. member for Mississauga South on a point of order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE—PRESENTATION OF FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to present the fourth report of the Standing Committee of Finance in connection with the rules and procedures of committees.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the fourth report deals with procedures in committees. If the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence in this report at this time. The concurrence would be seconded by the hon. member for Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to move concurrence?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the other side and you will find that I have unanimous consent for the following motion:

> That the reference to a Legislative Committee of Bill C-69, an act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, be amended so that the Bill stands referred to the Standing Committee on Finance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the parliamentary secretary have unanimous consent to introduce his motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

RAILWAY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis that Bill C-26, an act to amend the Railway Act (grain and flour subsidies) be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and on the amendment of Ms. Clancy (p. 8227).

• (1600)

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that we did not quickly adjourn this time and are giving a fair hearing, in some ways, to Bill C-26. It is not quite as fair as it should be in that the rules for implementation of this bill were carried forth last summer. It is not fair because the government directed the rail subsidies to be altered last July. It is not fair to everyone involved. Nevertheless, it is a bill that has been brought forward by the government.

What in fact is the at and east legislation or Bill C–26? In 1960 the Liberal government realized that various subsidies had to be put in place in order to help the areas at or east of Buffalo to compete with American ports and harbours which were sending grain to Europe and other areas. Also, it was to help them compete with Montreal and the harbours in that area. All grain subsidies were looked at and there were some rules set aside.

Some rail rates were put in place so that communities at and east of Buffalo would be able to reasonably compete with other areas of the country. The ports that were eligible for at and east until last summer were Halifax, Montreal, St. John's and areas east of Montreal. The grains that were subsidized at that point were wheat, wheat flour, oats, buckwheat, barley, rye, corn and soya beans.

We all recall the budget of March or April 1989 when the Canadian government seemed to change its total perspective on what was happening in agriculture. The legislation that came down at that point must have been written by the Minister of Agriculture in the United States. If we stop and think about what in fact it stated, in 1989 it removed $90 million from crop insurance programs across this country. This year it will be $110 million. It changed our branch line rehabilitation or our rehabilitation of rail lines that carry agricultural products by $46 million in 1989 and $2 million in 1990. It changed our advance payments to crops in 1989 by $27 million and in 1990–91 it was the same, $27 million.

Dairy export subsidies were cut by $5 million in 1989 and $7 million in 1990. The farm credit cuts were $6 million in 1989 and $8.5 million in 1990. The fuel tax rebate was cut by $42 million in 1989 and $125 million this year. All of those cuts that were engineered after the free trade agreement were not designed for the betterment of Canadian agriculture but were designed for other reasons. All of those cuts were not done by the U.S., but by the Canadian government to Canadian farmers.

The at and east bill was put in place, a bill which cut $20 million in rail subsidies in 1989 and $40 million in total by 1990. The government says that it listens to Canadians. It may listen to Canadians but certainly its actions are anti what it hears. Its actions are very much against the Canadian agricultural community. These are actions very much against the solid environment that we had in agriculture and are bringing it down more and more.

Before the election the present government suggested Canada was in a very healthy condition. They were going to put billions of dollars into helping agriculture and billions of dollars for all kinds of programs. Suddenly, after the election, we saw a very bleak picture.

We heard all we could about the debt and the deficit. We heard all about all of the difficulties that have come about in Canada. Not once was that mentioned during the election campaign. Not once was the dire effect of this budget, which cut in almost every area of agriculture, ever mentioned. Was it part of the agenda for free trade? Many people in this country strongly believe that to be the fact. Was it something that was given up at a point? Many people believe that.

In 1985 the Atlantic Provincial Transportation Commission made some very strong statements about what should happen to the program at and east. It suggested the government take no action on the at and east because it would create some serious problems in Canada. Its warning suggested that the serious economic impacts would hurt agriculture, the longshoremen and the elevator system in the east, as well as across Canada.

It suggested that the loss to the maritimes alone, if the at and east program were removed would be $27 million. It suggested that hundreds and hundreds of jobs would be lost in the Atlantic provinces, let alone the hundreds of jobs that will be lost throughout Canada as a result of this program being cut.

Capital purchases for milling ports would be lost by those who are involved in the milling of grains, not only in Ontario but throughout the eastern area. Livestock feed for cattle will certainly escalate in price when the grains that are shipped there are no longer subsidized, but are shipped in at a much higher cost. Certainly, the elevator workers in Saint John have lost their jobs because of the closing of the major elevator there.

The at and east program affects not only the east, but Ontario as well. The Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board has made some pretty strong statements about the problems with the at and east program. The at and east program did allow orderly marketing for those who were involved in the wheat program, and if you were in an area where you harvested all of your grain within approximately a four week period, that grain was shipped to market.

If you do not have a program in place that will help the shipment of grain at different times of the year, after the freeze of the lake or after other low prices of grain are there, we all know that when we take grain off during those four weeks, there is a tremendous amount on the market. The price drops quite dramatically. However, three, four, five, or six months later, the price of grain escalates quite dramatically.

To make it fair for those producers to sell their grain, not all at one time as though everyone is dumping it at the same time, a grain transportation program was put in place and elevator programs were put in place so that the grain could be taken to elevators on Georgian Bay or to other areas of Canada, stored there until such time that the price of grain improved and the grain could be sold.

With this particular bill coming into place, of three elevators on Georgian Bay, one has already been sold and two are up for sale at this point in time. This indicates that that orderly marketing, that chance that they have to sell grain throughout the winter and through the next spring, is lost. We also know that there is insufficient storage for grains in Canada and, without a grain transportation bill, those depots, those storage areas will diminish and as a result the Canadian farmer, the grain producer in particular, is going to be in a more difficult situation.

Non-availability of rail structures means a great deal to the demise of the price of wheat throughout the Canadian production. Ontario wheat producers produce 700,000 tonnes of wheat, 450,000 tonnes of which is exported at the best market price possible. As a result, there will be bottlenecks and stoppages where producers will not be able to gain the best market for their grain.

The government, in undermining the at and east bill, also moves along to undermine orderly marketing. Removal of at and east places in jeopardy the ability to move and export grains to customers in many different regions as well. The Ontario Wheat Producers' Marketing Board indicated that the program will totally undermine the orderly marketing procedure. What the at and east program would in fact do or has done is diminish the chances of bottlenecking of products and sales all at one time.

• (1610)

Let us look back at the issue of free trade. As the government continues down its unilateral process to reduce the agriculture programs and subsidies that have been in place for several years, the U.S. has not taken one step in dealing with its programs and its subsidies. The Atlantic Provincial Transportation Commission has recommended the removal of countervail duties on American corn. Reactions such as this not only hurt the existing situation, but damage the economy in other parts of Canada.

If we allow American grain into Canada, the Atlantic producers, Ontario producers or western producers will suffer a great deal of hardship. This program seems to divide our country quite dramatically. It pits one area against another. Those kinds of issues should have been taken into account before this transportation bill was brought into effect.

Even though the at and east subsidy was announced in 1989 and the bill was not presented until June 1989, subsidies ceased on July 26, 1989. We are now debating the bill in April, going on May 1990, when subsidies were cut last July. We certainly have to look at the government and its respect for the parliamentary process.

Railroads have been instructed to take their lost subsidies into account as of July 1989. The government bypassed the House of Commons and bypassed the parliamentary process in doing such. Why are we here debating nine months after the actions of the bill have been taken? It seems quite ridiculous and quite unacceptable that we are in this position at this time. This government continues to do that type of thing. It not only loses credibility with the Canadian public but it loses credibility with everyone involved in any programs. At any time the government can retroactively cancel a program and take back the money or subsidies that have been put in place by bills or other measures.

People functioning under many of our programs have to be very confused and upset. They have to wonder whether the grant they are receiving is going to be carried through properly or if the government going to ask for pay-backs at a later time.

When the government placed the GST ads in newspapers, we suggested that it was overlooking the view of Parliament. With this it seems much worse. The actions were put in place nine months before the bill was debated in the House of Commons and that is a shame. The government has suggested there will be a saving of $40 million. That is misleading. It is a false saving. If the maritime economy suffers, as it has, then we must pay unemployment insurance to help those who have been foisted out of their jobs. We have to look at the extra costs to the producers of chickens, pork and beef who have to pay extra funding for the grains that they feed to their animals. Then, somebody else is paying the bill. Much the same way that the finance minister foisted expenses on to the provinces, he is again here foisting expenses onto other areas of government and foisting expenses on to other production areas in the maritimes. It is costing somebody that extra money. Certainly it is costing in the wrong way, a non-productive way.

We need to have programs in this country which really bring about better production, not cut jobs, not cut security, not cut agriculture. The maritime economy has been very hard hit lately. We all know that. Adding extra costs to the livestock and poultry feed costs is no option. The loss of milling quality wheat in the maritimes will result from this bill. When we are already suffering the loss of VIA Rail, losses in the fishing industry and high unemployment, that is very unacceptable to me and I am certain it is unacceptable to you, Mr. Speaker, that the government now foists another problem on the maritimes.

Ontario will also be affected. The Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board has made its comments on how it will be affected. All of Canadian agriculture will suffer, particularly at this time. We face low prices and we face a great deal of pressure and demand from the U.S. free trade agreement. We are suffering as a result of world subsidies on grains, and certainly as a result of the battle between the United States and the European markets.

Why is Canada at this time taking away the support we had for this very valuable agricultural industry and pushing the farm community aside when our counterparts are doing just the opposite? The U.S. is more highly subsidizing. Certainly, I know of no program where it has taken away the profits, the subsidies, the help that it has given its farmers. Was it an agreement that was made before? Is it just the realism of the free trade agreement that is coming down on paper, things that we were not aware of that were discussed and put in motion in 1988 which are now being placed?

I am not clear, but as I look at our budgets, as I look at what is happening to agriculture and as I look at the pressures that are coming through Canada, I feel very strongly that Canada, particularly in agriculture and transportation, is strongly under attack.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Since there are no questions or comments, debate.

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on Bill C-26, an act to amend the Railway Act with respect to the grain and flour subsidies.

This bill before us is but one in a series of measures announced in the 1989 budget by this government, which has the effect of harming Canadian farmers, dismantling piece by piece the underpinnings of orderly agriculture marketing, and abandoning Atlantic Canada once again.

Like many other pieces of legislation introduced by this government, the elimination of the at and east subsidy is ill-conceived. Like many other pieces of legislation introduced by the government, this bill has as much to do with this government's mistaken approach to free trade as it does with deficit reduction. The way in which this government has proceeded with this measure is an insult to our respect for democracy and the rule of law. In the strictest sense, the at and east program allows for the shipment of grain and flour to ports east of and including Montreal, by rail, at a fixed rate. The program's cost is $40 million annually.

In a report by the Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board we read about the at and east: "In due consideration of the economics associated with the at and east program, as applied to the total marketing process, the Ontario Wheat Board considers the program to be invaluable to its operation and to the interests of all facets of the industry". It went on to say that for the amount of dollars extended in the subsidy program, it may be the best and least expensive insurance plan available to the eastern marketing system.

The government has decided that the at and east program should be eliminated. We on this side ask why the government is doing this? It is possible the government just did not have all the facts when it announced its intention to eliminate the program in the 1989 budget.

• (1620)

The members opposite did not truly understand the purpose of the program, the conditions which make its continued relevancy, and the benefits the program brings to many regions of the country and sectors of our economy. I trust they are listening to the arguments being made not only by myself and my colleagues but mostly by the Ontario wheat farmers, a number of whom from my own riding who are calling on this government to withdraw this bill.

There is little question that the government made a serious error of omission in identifying the original intention of the at and east program. In announcing its planned elimination, the government stated: "The intent of the program was to ensure that Canadian grain and flour shipments would continue to be exported through Canadian east coast ports, rather than competing U.S. ports". That is all the government said.

In fact, the intention of the government of the day in bringing in this program was twofold, not just for that reason. In addition to ensuring that eastern Canadian ports could compete with U.S. ports, the program intended to enable the ports of Halifax and Saint John to complete the ports of the St. Lawrence.

In 1966, the then transport minister said: "We feel there is an equal obligation in this field with regard to the Crowsnest. The purpose of this is to ensure that we will have rates which will provide some inducement and incentive to shippers to use the facilities of the Atlantic ports".

This omission is very important because it nullifies the government's contention that the program is no longer needed because the conditions which justify it no longer exist. One of the two reasons given by the government for its elimination is just plain wrong.

The second government justification for the program's elimination is equally misguided, but much more erroneous than the first. The budget papers read: "The subsidy has the effect of diverting traffic away from the Seaway in favour of subsidized rail movements and is inconsistent with the government's market-oriented policy". The government uses the term "market-oriented" as a banner, more like a shield to hide behind. These are the government's catch phrases, as though their mere invocation should be enough to stifle dissent, lest a government critic be labelled a socialist.

The fact of the matter is that this government has brought the term "market-oriented" and the term "free trade" along with it into the realms of obscurity. These terms now mean anything the government wants them to mean. Most often, that spells hardship for Canadian farmers.

The Canadian government has embarked on the path of unilateral disarmament. In the wake of the free trade agreement and in the midst of agricultural negotiations at GATT, as well as in the expectation of the subsidy negotiations with the United States, the members opposite and the government are stripping the country of programs that have served us so well. Prior to any negotiations with the free trade agreement, it was giving away the boat.

The at and east program obviously is one of these programs that should be protected, but that the government is giving up prior to negotiations on subsidies for the free trade deal. The program has resulted in benefits to Atlantic ports in the elevators of Saint John and Halifax. The at and east forms a vital part of the orderly and efficient marketing of its grain by providing control over its movement of exports.

It is a system that has benefited exporters of Canadian wheat by providing a year-round supply, while at the same time, benefiting producers by protecting them from forcing to sell their wheat at a fixed time, even if that time coincides with a temporary drop in the world price. The at and east has also enabled grain producers to more efficiently utilize the limited storage and elevator space in the Georgian Bay and Great Lakes regions. It has helped to alleviate the problems of bottle-neck and congestion within our transportation system. The at and east had facilitated the development of a storage and transportation system that served producers and consumers well at very little cost to the government in real terms.

As the Ontario Wheat Board has stated:

> The fact that non-availability of rail facilities during harvest forces the Ontario Wheat Board to use lakeside transfer elevators within the boundaries of Ontario in itself justifies the at and east as the board's only economical movement to winter markets.

While the U.S. and the EEC trade war continues to strongly depress world wheat prices, what does this government do but cut out a $40 million annual program which has created jobs, increased storage capacity and formed a cornerstone of orderly marketing.

This program has done much to help the Ontario wheat producer. The elimination of the program could increase the board's marketing cost by approximately $3 million per year. Normally, they would have moved up to 110,000 tonnes out of Georgian Bay port elevators to the east coast export position by rail at $5.50 a tonne. In the absence of the program the rate may go as high as $32 a tonne.

The Georgian Bay elevators provide almost 25 per cent available storage capacity to the Ontario industry. If the loss of program leads to those elevators becoming non-economic then the board will be forced to export earlier or develop other storage alternatives. Clearly, there will be a loss of jobs and a loss of the ability of Ontario farmers to to export their wheat in an orderly manner. If the government was committed to ending the program it would have been preferable to phase out the rate assistance over a period of two or three years while at the same time negotiating more competitive rates with the railways.

This government has failed, time and time again, to consult with those who would be most adversely affected by it. As a result, it has been detrimental to the ability of these people to export to their markets in a reasonable way.

The point cannot be lost on producers that the budget change falls in line with the elimination of the two-priced wheat system and a commitment in the free trade agreement to open up Canadian markets to U.S. grains. Have the Americans been stripping their farmers of agricultural exports? No, they have not.

I have been talking about the at and east in the present tense, as though it were still around and there was a chance to change the government's mind after informed debate.

The fact is that members opposite have already done away with the program. They could not be bothered with the democratic process. Clauses 1.1 and 4.1 contain deeming provisions. Even before the bill had been debated in the House the government put the word out that all contracts signed after July, 1989, nine months ago, would not be converted by the at and east. I quote from a letter by the director of rail freight programs. He says:

> The deeming provisions are intended to assure that the effective date of this measure will be July 16, 1989, even if final parliamentary approval comes later.

That is no way to run a government. That is no way to run a democracy. I believe that this sentence and the attitude it betrays is an insult to each of us in this House. The government seems at times bored and impatient with parliamentary democracy. It does not seem to be listening. It does not take the time to ask before it acts. Had it listened, it might have realized that there were ways to alter the at and east program to better serve Canadians, not needlessly harm them.

I could go on about its effect on agriculture in the maritimes but I understand my friend, the member for Dartmouth, will be talking about that shortly. In closing, we on this side do not appreciate the way the government has dealt with this issue.

• (1630)

The government should not try to reduce the debt and the deficit on the backs of the farming community and rural Canada. If that is its intention, it should first negotiate and talk with those who would be adversely affected by such a program and, in that way, try to alleviate some of the hardship that these programs would cause.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment my colleague, the hon. member for Haldimand—Norfolk, on his excellent speech and intervention on this piece of legislation. I want to draw particular attention to his very cogent suggestions about the way in which a reconsideration of the at and east subsidy program could have been approached by this government, rather than the ham-handed fashion in which it was carried out, with no consultation, and effectively cutting the rates without even bringing the matter before Parliament. That is something that I discussed in my own remarks today.

I would like to ask the member to elaborate on some of the points that he has made, particularly from his perspective as a member representing an agricultural riding in southern Ontario. What effects would the bill have on the producers in his area? What alternative arrangements have been proposed that were not considered by this government?

Mr. Speller: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for that question.

Today, farmers in my area are facing hard times, and this is just one more attack by this government on the farming communities in our country. Wheat producers in my area can use the at and east in differing ways. The main advantage of the at and east for wheat producers in my area is to assure that they can market their product in an orderly fashion. This means that they can hold onto their product and get just that little higher price for it than they might be able to get otherwise.

That small profit allows them to survive as farmers. Farmers in my constituency and, indeed, farmers across Canada live on the edge. A $40 million program may not mean a lot to a government that is intent on reducing the debt and reducing the deficit, but it means a great deal to my farmers who only earn that little bit. It means the difference between having a viable farm operation and actually having to get out of farming all together.

I thank my hon. colleague for asking me that question because I think it is an important one. I do not think that members opposite realize how much a $40 million program could mean to the viability of farming in southwestern Ontario.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to speak on Bill C–26.

At the outset let me join with you, Sir, in your compliments to my colleague, the hon. member for Regina—Lumsden who, as you duly noted, celebrated his 65th birthday yesterday. He is a veteran of this House and a veteran of the transport committee, with at least 21 years of continuous service.

I know all members will agree that while they may not have agreed with his positions, he certainly has done yeoman service on behalf of transportation. He is very happy to once again be battling a bill that is designed to take away services in transportation, as the Liberal government did with its bill to end the Crow benefit. Now, the irony of ironies is that on his birthday, the Conservative government is now attacking the at and east freight assistance program.

I also want to compliment my colleague, the member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre, a new member in this House who has dual responsibilities as grain and oilseeds critic and transportation critic for grain. He has done an overwhelming job in preparing for this bill and for the debates that have taken place. I do want to thank him as well for his fine work.

The at and east freight assistance program pays a subsidy to the railways on export grain and flour moving by specified routes through eastern Canadian ports. The rates paid by the shipper have been frozen since 1960 with respect to export grain and 1966 with respect to flour. It is primarily grains and flour that is coming from the west, through the port of Thunder Bay, through the Great Lakes to the bay ports, to some of the lower St. Lawrence ports and eventually railed through to Atlantic Canada to the elevators there.

Some of it does go by rail from Thunder Bay under the flour subsidy component and is taken by train through to Atlantic Canada. The program freezes bulk rates from any rail point along Georgian Bay, Lake Huron, or any waterways directly or indirectly connecting with Lake Huron and not farther east than Prescott, being shipped to Halifax, Saint John, West Saint John, Montreal and any other St. Lawrence port east of Montreal. That rate is for grain to be exported only.

With respect to flour the program freezes the rail rate on export shipments from any point east of Thunder Bay, the aforementioned ports.

The reason this program came into being was that back in the early 1960s the railways wanted to increase their rates for movement of these grains and flour. It was argued at the time, obviously very effectively, that those increased rates would price Saint John and Halifax out of the market. What was saved by a subsidy in the 1960s will be ended by the elimination of the subsidy in the 1990s if and when this bill receives third reading in this House, is passed by the other place and proclaimed.

It was felt important to maintain the rates at a fixed level so that eastern rates would remain competitive. This program has been beneficial primarily to Halifax and Saint John but by no means is it an insignificant component for the port of Thunder Bay, nor is it an insignificant component for the maritime community along the Great Lakes, the shipping companies who move grains from Thunder Bay to other ports, or for the ports along Georgian Bay and Lake Huron. They, too, have had most of their existence created by the at and east program, as I will explain in a few moments.

Of all the grain moved through Saint John, 95 per cent moves under the at and east program while 67 per cent of grain moved through Halifax moved through the at and east.

With respect to flour, virtually all flour moved through the two ports moves at at and east rates. Flour amounts to approximately one-third of all general cargo handled at Halifax and 7 per cent of general cargo at Saint John.

In 1988 there were 944,719 tonnes of grain and flour moved under the at and east rate, of which approximately 90 per cent moved via the ports of Halifax and Saint John as their final Canadian ports. The cost to the taxpayers on an annual basis is $32 million, but if we look at its impact the Halifax-Dartmouth Port Development Commission says that the "economics of grain traffic at the port in 1988 amounted to $25.9 million in revenues and 263 jobs, while flour traffic resulted in $28.4 million in revenues and 220 jobs".

Quick mathematics tells me that there was a profit made for those communities and for the taxpayers. For a cost of $32 million, well over $50 million of revenue and wealth was created in the port of Halifax-Dartmouth alone. If we add the impact to Saint John, the impact to the ports along the Great Lakes, the impact to the port of Thunder Bay, to the railroads, to the shipping companies, to the farmers, I would say that this has been a very good investment by the taxpayers of Canada. We have created employment from Saskatchewan through to the Atlantic Ocean. We have kept people working, who in turn have paid taxes, and have purchased goods and services in their communities.

• (1640)

So I would say that a subsidy of $32 million a year is not a drain, not an expenditure that contributes to the deficit, but it is an investment in the long-term viability of the farmer, the flour mill operator, the shipper, the port worker, the elevator operator. Because the grain is for export purposes, it assists Canada in its foreign trade balance, ensuring that this wonderful product that we grow on our prairies and in Ontario and Quebec can be exported to feed others in other parts of the world.

However, the government is prepared to throw all that away. In the name of deficit reduction, in the name of harmonization, and as part of the over-all plan to eliminate subsidies because they are evil—much like they did with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement—all of these jobs, all of the stability is placed at risk. Is there not a better way to protect the livelihood of the producers and of those who move and process these grains? Perhaps there is, but it certainly has not been found yet.

We heard earlier from the chairman of the transport committee, who expressed his concern that the government of the day had not come up with any alternatives, had not met the requests of the people of Atlantic Canada who were looking for what he called offsets. Not one of the items that he mentioned has been dealt with in any way. I do not necessarily agree with his suggestions, but clearly it does indicate the failure of this government to balance out its desire for deficit reduction with the desire for Canadians to keep working.

A moment ago I talked about the benefits, particularly to the Atlantic Canada ports. Let me talk a bit about the ports in Ontario who depend on the at and east program for their survival. For some, like Collingwood, the at and east share is only 3.2 per cent of their operations. However, at Midland, 34 per cent of the shipments that they handle are at and east; Owen Sound, 30 per cent; Port McNicoll, 87 per cent or 232,936 tonnes over a five year average are handled by that port; Sarnia, nearly 13 per cent of the grain that they handle comes under the at and east; Prescott, nearly 18 per cent and so on.

This is not just a benefit for Atlantic Canada. This is clearly a benefit for those small port communities along the Great Lakes. We have already heard reports of those elevators being in jeopardy.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if we check the record we will find that one of them has already closed since the illegal termination of the at and east rates last summer.

The other interesting thing that seems to be be ignored in this debate—people will say shipping by water is cheaper, and yes it is. If I had my druthers, all of the bulk commodities moving from the prairies would move through Thunder Bay and be placed on a vessel and transported down the seaway rather than going by rail. It is more efficient from the point of view of energy, and more efficient from the point of view of the environment. It just makes so much more sense. Plus, there is a spin-off of creating a lot of jobs in my constituency, which would certainly go down well in Thunder Bay.

But what people do not understand is that towards the end of the season when the freeze-up begins in the Welland Canal area, the lakers from Thunder Bay are still able to carry export grains to the bay ports. They basically fill up those elevators in the late fall and early winter. That is the grain shipped under the at and east program throughout the winter months to provide a continuous flow for Halifax and Saint John. That will now cease to exist. Instead of having a mix of water and rail east of Thunder Bay, we are going to lose both, because we know that the grain will not be moving.

This is not the first attack on the system. Thanks to the Western Grain Transportation Act passed by the previous Liberal administration just before they were defeated in 1984, there was a section which unwittingly changed the balance in Canada. It changed from a market-driven distribution, and by that I mean it did not matter which direction the grain was going to flow, the price was the same. But under the WGTA, shipments through the west coast are treated, in effect, differently than they are through the east coast. The rail rates are equalized and distributed according to distance between the farm gate, Thunder Bay and Churchill on the east and Vancouver and Prince Rupert on the west, but the water component east of Thunder Bay, and even the rail component east of Thunder Bay is not included. So there was always an extra cost.

The Canadian Wheat Board, which has a mandate to get the highest price for the lowest cost for the producer, something that we fundamentally agree with, is forced to maximize the west coast. This leaves Thunder Bay with the residuals and Churchill with very, very little, even to the point where grain is being exported through the port of Vancouver destined for Egypt and they have to go through the Panama Canal to make that delivery. It is because of the WGTA.

I realize that is not the bill before us, Mr. Speaker, but I thought it was important in the context of the shift away from the traditional water commerce component of the Great Lakes and the shift away from Atlantic Canada and Quebec. As grain movements through the seaway on the Canadian side have gone from 60 per cent of exports going through Thunder Bay and the seaway, we are now down to 30 per cent. That means that Baie Comeau, Port Cartier, Quebec City, Halifax and Saint John are losing valuable vessel traffic. The elimination of the at and east subsidy is only going to make those matters worse. It may mean, for example, that our already dwindling seaway fleet which was 160 or 180 ships 15 years ago, has gone down to 70 or 80 ships currently, with a number of them having been flagged out because there is not enough trade nor is there a positive tax incentive for them to remain in Canada. The reality is that more of those ships are going to be scrapped.

• (1650)

When you take 400,000, 500,000, 600,000 or 900,000 tonnes of grain out of the system there has to be a reduction in the fleet, there is no question about it. I think the government has made a major error. It is trying to play poker at GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, which is meeting to take a look at agricultural subsidies, to try to develop some kind of rules which are fair. But, when you are playing poker, you do not play your hand or fold before you get to the table. You wait until you are playing those cards before you make your decisions, you do not decide to get rid of a subsidy in advance of being at the table. That is what this government has done.

This government is saying that this is an unfair subsidy and that it should not exist, instead of being able to trade it off when it gets to the table. So we say what about the at and east, what about the EEC treatment and the BICEP program in the States?. The government could do a trade-off for that—if we are going to trade—but you do not throw it away before you even start because the impact is too important.

I do not know whether, in this great country of ours, we can ever eliminate some kind of financial assistance to the transporters of our commodities. I say that for one primary reason, the way we are built. We are an extremely long and narrow country when it comes to our population. Distances are very, very great. We produce our grain anywhere from 1,000 to 1,600 miles from our oceans. Argentina, one of our competitors, produces only 100 miles from the ocean. Australia produces at less than 100 miles from its coasts. The United States, with a much larger network of waterways through the Mississippi and other man-made canals are within 100 or so miles of water transport, which I indicated previously is the most efficient, the cheapest and the most environmentally friendly form of transportation of bulk commodities.

We cannot compete on a level playing field because we have to move our bulk commodities thousands of miles just to get to salt water, so that we can then take advantage of the ocean rates and move our goods to the purchasers.

I think the bill is wrong. I know that people in my community feel that it is wrong because they see an ever-declining workforce declining even further. Because of this we will lose jobs in the port, in the elevators, on the railway. We will lose jobs at McDonald's, the corner stores, the restaurants, and the school board. As the jobs decline in one industry, there is a trickle-down effect which means the loss of 2.8 additional jobs for every one job that is lost. That has a major impact on a community which has seen its grain handler workforce go from 1,500 or 1,600 at its peak not too many years ago, to around 700 or 800, if they are lucky, this year, with no end in sight.

I realize I just have a minute or two left. The long-term danger is that if we allow not just Thunder Bay, but the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway to become a residual carrier of our grains, there will come a time when we will have bumper crops again and the port of Thunder Bay will be asked to move upwards of 25 to 26 million tonnes of grain. It will have to rot in the fields because we will not have the elevators, boxcars or the ships to move that amount of grain. The hon. member said, "Just ship it through the U.S.".

The reality is that they too do not have the capacity to move so much grain any more, nor do they have the kind of quality controls that has led Canada to be the No. 1 producer of quality wheat in this world. It is because of our inspection and handling procedures that the Americans cannot touch our No. 1 position. No country in the world will accept grain that has been trans-shipped through the United States as Canadian grain. It is just not acceptable.

Whether it is for Atlantic Canada, the ports on the Great Lakes, the port of Thunder Bay, the men and women who produce the grain on the prairies, or the people that mill and package the flour, I say this bill should be rejected by this House because it will come back to haunt us and the government time and time again.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I rise to debate this motion, which in effect is another one of those cracks that we are starting to get used to, taking down Atlantic Canada.

The at and east subsidy program was cancelled in the second last budget of this government. It was cancelled under the guise of deficit reduction. Coming from Atlantic Canada, forgive me if I question the motives of the government or the reasons given for cancelling such a program. Every time we have turned around since this government has been re-elected in November of 1988, we have another reason why it cannot keep its promises or programs to assist Atlantic Canada.

I have listened to most of the debate today and the debate that has taken place up until this point. Anybody watching would be quite aware of the reasons that the at and east program was put in in the first place. It was was to keep Atlantic Canadian ports competitive in the movement of grain and flour, as were the American ports east of Buffalo, New York. It served us well.

As a result of the at and east program, the Canadian government put a cap on the movement of grain to east coast ports, and we were able to maintain a very viable industry in Atlantic Canada, particularly in the port of Halifax. There were over 220 jobs made directly possible and sustainable because of the at and east program.

We have a flour mill in Nova Scotia. It counted on the grain terminal there for its product. We had a terminal in Saint John, New Brunswick, which was very viable as it provided a lot of jobs in that area, an area that has consistently borne the brunt of economic downturns.

They were good jobs. They were healthy. We did not feel that we were getting anything that we should not have received because the government had embarked years earlier on a subsidy program out west. The government did not seem to have any difficulty when it came and told us that it had to rationalize or cut its deficit, explaining that the only place it can cut are the guinea pigs down in eastern Canada, down on the Atlantic.

I am not for one moment suggesting that the government should cut the rail transportation under the Western Transportation Act or the western grain. I am not going to suggest that.

• (1700)

I am not going to suggest that there should be a new benchmark put on the movement of goods down the St. Lawrence Seaway, that everything has to be on cost recovery all the time, because the government of past days has embarked on a transportation policy to ensure that our product was competitive, to ensure that the grain was being shipped from Canadian ports.

When the government felt that, under the guise of deficit reduction, it had to tackle this big problem, did it go after the Western Transportation Act and the subsidies under it? No, and thank goodness for those western ports, for the railroad out west, and for the grain producers.

Did it decide all of a sudden that it had to have increased pilotage fees for the St. Lawrence Seaway for goods that were going down there? Absolutely not. When it came time for the government to address what it thought or said was such a serious problem, it only went one place. It went after the at and east program, the program that was directly benefiting Atlantic Canada, most particularly Halifax and Saint John.

Now that by itself would give reason for great concern, because it appears once again that the government is proceeding with unholy haste to punish people in Atlantic Canada for having the foresight not to elect these guys opposite, at least not very many of them, and for having seen through the very thin veil that they presented of progressivity during the last election campaign. Every time we turn around they are creating another excuse to damage industry in Atlantic Canada. Goodness knows, if there is one industry in Atlantic Canada that does not need the type of pummelling that this government has given our other industries, it is the shipping industry.

I rose in this House after the last budget and I raised some real concerns about basically a tax on the profits of the ports in this country. I raised a concern that the U.S. ports, particularly the ports of New York, were pouring billions of dollars into facility upgrading, because they wanted to take business from the east coast Canadian ports.

At the same point in time, Canadian Pacific and Canadian National were looking at acquiring lines directly from New Jersey or New York up to the Montreal market, and up to the Toronto and southern Ontario markets. At the same time, we see this government abandoning any responsibility for a national rail link in this country.

I talked to officials from the port of Halifax and they said that things were not good but they did not want to say it too loud and were going to try to work through the system. In trying to work through the system we saw what happened. Shortly after this particular budget and that particular cut-back, a dividend of $100 million is what the finance minister required of the ports on the east coast by way of a tax. They wanted a dividend.

The port of Halifax has been struggling to maintain its competitiveness, particularly as a result of the government's abandonment of a national rail policy. It had to cancel two major expansion projects, which makes it less competitive. The port of Halifax has been a very healthy part of our economy in Atlantic Canada, and at the very time that it is feeling the increased pressures of competition from the Atlantic seaboard ports, particularly the ports of New York, down south of the border, the government comes in with what it considers to be a necessary reduction of subsidy that, God forbid, is only going to affect Atlantic Canada. They have not rethought the rest of their domestic transportation policy or agricultural product transportation policy.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, we have heard this song before. When we went into the free trade debate, the government was so absolutely adamant that the Prime Minister of the day had to have a comprehensive free trade deal that they showed their hands to the Americans. The Prime Minister said on a nationally televised show that his political future and that of his government depended on his government concluding a comprehensive trade deal with the United States, and the U.S. took them right to the wire at 11.30 at night because they knew what he had said, he had showed his cards, and as a result we got a free trade deal without even the definition of a subsidy in it.

Now as we go through further negotiations on the definition of a subsidy, as the GATT negotiations continue, and the subsidies in the agricultural sector, it appears we have had another little giveaway. The little giveaway that we have had is called the at and east program, which at this point, Mr. Speaker, has already shut down the terminal in Saint John. Fully 60 per cent of the feed grain that is going through Halifax is subsidized grain under this program, 100 per cent of the flour is subsidized and, as I said earlier, there are nearly 300 jobs, 250 jobs at least. In Halifax alone last year before this regressive change came in, 372,486 tonnes of export grain were handled in the port of Halifax.

I just want to let everybody know that we are not talking about a city the size of Toronto where 250 jobs perhaps do not mean very much. We are talking about an area of about 325,000 people.

There were 201,676 tonnes of export flour moved through the port of Halifax in 1988. I was reading a statistic before I came in which I think stated that every tonne of product, of grain or flour that is moved through that port, is equivalent to one stevedore's job.

The Atlantic Provinces Transportation Council came before the transport committee. I am glad that the chairman of the transport committee had the good sense not to wait for the government to get this bill through second reading and referred to committee. That particular committee, under the chairmanship of the member for Annapolis Valley–Hants, did an advance examination of the effects of this particular subsidy cancellation and it found out what was happening.

This subsidy was cancelled last year without this bill ever being passed by Parliament, and I should remind all Canadians of that. This government does not even care to hear the full debate on the merits of its legislation. It just goes and introduces it and then cancels it. It knows that once it cancels it, once a grain terminal shuts down, once 100 or 200 people are put out of work, the impact is gone by the time the bill receives Royal Assent, if it ever receives Royal Assent in the other place.

When the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Council went to the transport committee, and I think it was on February 20, it had already talked about the major economic impact. At the port of Halifax, throughput at the Halifax elevator for the coming year in terms of export grain is expected to be no more than 60,000 tonnes. That is down from the last year in the program which was 372,000 tonnes.

The government did not care. It went ahead and introduced the bill last year. It saw it had some trouble on the other side and decided to put it off until the fall. But the impact has already hit Atlantic Canada. The impact on the poultry industry and the livestock industry in Atlantic Canada is going to be severe because of the shutdown of the terminal in Saint John and because of the decreased traffic through the one in Halifax which means that the per unit cost goes up in Halifax. We are going to find that the Atlantic Canadian poultry and livestock producers are going to be at an even worse disadvantage than their counterparts in the industry in Ontario, Quebec and western Canada. Goodness knows, they certainly do not need that. They are having a hard enough time as it is.

The government did not wait for a full investigation as to the impact of what it was doing. It was in such haste to give away another card in the GATT negotiations that it gave us away. It cancelled the program and it has already had its effect.

I listened to the member for Annapolis Valley—Hants earlier, and I have to commend him. I was in my office and I listened to his remarks on television. The member for Annapolis Valley—Hants has the backbone to stand up in this House and stand against the government. He had the backbone to stand up and speak for the people in Atlantic Canada who elected him. I listened to him make a plea to his fellow Conservative members from Atlantic Canada for once not to be led like dogs on a leash, not to be dragged along for fear that somehow they were going to be left out in the cold when the Prime Minister reshuffles his cabinet, and to do what was right and fight this legislation and vote against this piece of legislation.

He did that for a couple of reasons. One reason is that I believe that the member for Annapolis Valley—Hants has a keen understanding of the agricultural industry. He has been around long enough to smell a bad bill. He knows this bill is a very bad bill. He also is a little annoyed that there was a report put into the department back in 1985 by the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Council and it recommended some alternatives. It recommended some amendments to the at and east bill that would have saved the government a lot of money, at least half of the money that was going into subsidies. It has never even received a reply.

• (1710)

On February 19, in a major effort toward compromise and to try to bring the government to its senses, what did it do? It came in with a set of proposals which should have been acceptable to the government, if the government had not already enacted the regulations last July. The member for Annapolis Valley—Hants was absolutely incensed today, as he should have been. I am incensed, as are other members from Atlantic Canada, that the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Committee has not even heard a response, nor has the government uttered a word about the proposals that were put forward on February 19.

My hon. colleague and friend from Halifax West, at the other end of the province right next to my riding, did not seem to have the same gumption to stand up. The last time this was before the House, the hon. member for Halifax West stood up and said, in defending this unconscionable cut, this double standard bill on the way that the east and west coast ports and the St. Lawrence ports are treated in this country, that the at and east subsidy should be cut. Then he challenged the opposition instead to join him in lobbying the government for direct assistance to farmers, the Port of Halifax and operators of the grain elevators. Who, in the name of goodness, does he think he is talking to? He says to his colleagues who are opposing this very bad piece of legislation, and opposing it on good grounds, not to complain that the thing has to be done away with, but help him lobby.

We have seen the effect of his lobby. He is the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board. If he has lobbied, he has had absolutely no success. It was just around that time that the Minister of Finance came in with a budget that in effect took $100 million away from the Canada Ports Corporation and, as I mentioned earlier, caused the cancellation of two major expansion programs in the port of Halifax and is going to make the port of Halifax and every other east coast port less competitive than its American counterparts.

The hon. member for Halifax West should learn a lesson. The lesson is that sometimes it is better not to be led around by the nose. Sometimes it is better to get off the picket fence and try not to have a foot on both sides of the line and to take a stand on an issue. When you take a stand on an issue, sometimes perhaps that sharp point you get from the fence will alleviate the pain. Perhaps, just perhaps, the pain will be lessened the next time that members such as he have to go to the ballot box and explain the comments he made about how everything is all well and rosy down east with the cancellation of the at and east subsidy.

Mr. Crosby: You certainly know all about the ballot box, having been there once.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): I am very happy to see that he has come into the House. I have had many of his own constituents call and ask me if I could make any sense at all out of his comments. I told them I had listened carefully to his comments, but as of yet there is not any sense. Perhaps a little later in this debate he will tell us exactly what he means, and also explain why there is a difference between his statements on the at and east subsidy, since he represents a riding near Halifax harbour, and the statements of the member for Annapolis Valley—Hants who seems to have the best interests, not just of the port of Halifax, but of the farmers of Atlantic Canada at heart.

This bill should be defeated. This bill is a thinly veiled attempt to further cut subsidies in Atlantic Canada. If the government is serious about addressing the problems in the grain transportation sector, then it should do it all at once. It should not use Atlantic Canada as a guinea pig, as a sacrifice on the GATT altar, as a sacrifice in the free trade negotiations. It should come up with a policy that recognizes the importance of maintaining the viability of ports like Halifax, not just for the trans-shipment of grain or flour, but make them much more viable than they currently are because of this government's policies.

The last thing I want to see, as an Atlantic Canadian, is this government being allowed to go forward with policies that are going to shut down what should be one of our most prosperous and viable sectors, at the expense, not just of jobs in Atlantic Canada, but also to the great benefit of the ports in the New Jersey and New York areas.

I urge my colleagues opposite from Atlantic Canada to take a page from the book of the member for Annapolis Valley—Hants, show some gumption, show a great deal of skill and concern for the people of their area, and vote against this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments, the hon. member for Halifax West.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for this opportunity to dispel some of the myths that the hon. member for Dartmouth has just tried to project on the House of Commons, but I hope not across Canada.

In the first place, the at and east is dead and gone. It was finished June 23, 1988, when people stopped making use of it and the shipments under that subsidy provision stopped. We are here simply putting a finis to a book that has already been written, read and over with.

The member does not understand that. He likes to take the opportunity to get up in the House and spout off on a subject which no longer has any practical application. The at and east is finished. He does not bother to mention that the millions of dollars poured out over a long period of time under the at and east subsidy went to Canadian National Railways. They did not go to farmers, the grain elevators or the port of Halifax. They went to Canadian National Railways. What he is doing is asking the House of Commons to continue to pay more and more money to the Canadian National Railways because of the trickle down effect to the east coast ports, some farmers and some other areas of activity.

Getting rid of the at and east means that we have a new opportunity to accomplish the desirable ends in a direct fashion and not working through some outmoded subsidy. He does not even know that the competition is no longer between the east coast Canadian ports and U.S. ports, which was the origin of the at and east, but it is between Canadian ports. Fortunately, our very efficient port in Halifax can compete against the U.S. ports, but it has a little difficulty competing against the St. Lawrence ports, given the subsidization that they were given over the years by the Liberal government's failure to collect ice fees, providing free ice-breaking, and so on. That is why we are at a disadvantage, not because of any policies of this government.

It is a shame that a member of Parliament should get up and preach rhetoric and falsehoods to the members of the House of Commons, when he should know better, but he does not know better. He does not understand the at and east. He apparently does not know that the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, representing the three maritime provinces, has said time and time again: "Get rid of the at and east but give us offsets".

That is why I stood up in the House of Commons and said that the at and east is dead. Forget the at and east. Get on with obtaining suitable offsets to accomplish the benefits for the port of Halifax, the grain industry, the feed freight that the farmers require, and all of those things.

I say to him once again, as I complete my remarks, please recognize the simple fact that the at and east is dead. Give it a decent burial and go on to accomplish something in the future for your constituents, and all the people in Halifax. Stop the rhetoric and get on with reality.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, certainly I do not need a lecture from the member for Halifax West about the at and east program or representing the people of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Crosby: Yes, you do. You need a lecture.

Mr. Fontana: You need a muzzle.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): My hon. friend from London is issuing a statement that might be more appropriate than anything that has been said in the House today.

I would like to address the comments that were just made by my colleague from Halifax West. I am not a great card player, but I do not think that when you are sitting down and playing poker with the jobs and the livelihoods of hundreds of people in Atlantic Canada that what you say, especially with this government, is that it will do away with the program and we will worry about the offsets later. He is quite correct that the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Council came up in 1985 and recommended some offsets. When they recommended the offsets, this government did not even have the decency to respond.

The member for Annapolis Valley—Hants said a few minutes ago when he got up in debate in this place that he was appalled. The member for Halifax West should be appalled that the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Council once again on February 19 put some proposals forward but this government did not even give it the decency of a reply because this government does not want to listen. It is hell bent on destroying the transportation sector right across this country, particularly in Atlantic Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the hon. member for Nepean.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to stand here in the House today to address Bill C–26, an act to amend the Railway Act, which terminates the at and east subsidy for the movement of grain and flour to eastern Canadian ports.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the impassioned speech of my colleague from Dartmouth, Nova Scotia. Someone might wonder why I, from central Canada, am here speaking on this bill. I am very familiar with Atlantic Canada. I know what is going to happen to the ports in Atlantic Canada and I am very pleased to be speaking.

• (1720)

First, I want to make it clear that we are discussing a bill today at second reading which in reality has already become law. Second reading has not been completed. It has not received committee study. It has not had third reading. It has not had Senate approval. It has not had Royal Assent. This is just another prime example of a government which has absolute contempt for the workings of this Parliament. The subsidy we are discussing today has already been terminated. It was terminated over a year ago. It is a fait accompli.

The arrogance of it is only equalled by other examples set by this same government. In August of 1989, it placed full–page ads in the newspapers across the country which stated that "Canada's federal sales tax system will change. Save this notice". The ad was rebuked by the Speaker of this Parliament. He said at that time it was a contempt of Parliament. Again, this government's arrogance knows no bounds.

The at and east grain and flour subsidy program, which has been in effect since the mid–1960s, was created not only to offset some of the economic advantages that U.S. eastern ports had over Canadian eastern ports, but also because Canadian farmers needed a place to consolidate their grain shipments for export. As the Hon. Jack Pickersgill said in 1966 when this legislation was being discussed: "One of the aims of the subsidy was to ensure that we will have rates which will provide some inducement and incentive to shippers to use the facilities of Atlantic ports".

Atlantic Canada had flour mills that needed a steady supply of the grains which were eligible for the subsidy, grains such as wheat, wheat flour, oats, barley, rye, corn, buckwheat and soybeans.

The Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who spoke for the Minister of Transport when this bill was referred to the House for second reading, said that the terminating of the subsidy will "stimulate creativity and innovation. It will allow the industry to take advantage of unanticipated sales opportunities, no longer constraining potential cost savings".

Why should we believe this government? Nothing it promises comes true. I do not think that the 1,200 workers whose jobs are connected to Bill C–26 will believe this government either, nor will the 320 transport workers and the 295 who hold milling jobs in western Canada, the 75 workers in Georgian Bay ports, the 85 who hold jobs in Halifax and Saint John, and the 402 workers in central Canada.

This is the same government whose leader said in 1988: "I know something about the maritimes. As one whose first seat in Parliament was Central Nova, I feel something special for Atlantic Canada and its needs". Well, I certainly hope that the Prime Minister never tries to seek a seat in Atlantic Canada again, because I am sure he would never get it.

The government has slashed the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and it has sold out Atlantic fishermen to foreign interests. Now this government has continued to inflict hardship on Atlantic Canada with the cutting of the at and east grain and flour subsidy.

The government says it will save $40 or $60 million by ending the at and east subsidy. Let us not forget the $200 million cut out of crop insurance, $48 million cut out of advance payments for grain, $15 million cut out of the Farm Credit Corporation, $12 million cut from the Canadian Dairy Commission; a total of 339 farm support programs alone in the 1989 budget, and this government talks of saving $40 million or $60 million by cutting the at and east program as if it was the sole cut-back in farm subsidy.

All of these cuts come at a time when the government's own figures are showing that for the coming year farm incomes will drop in Canada 39 per cent; 101 per cent in the province of Saskatchewan, 87 per cent in Manitoba. All of this is because of cuts to their industry and this government's disregard for farmers.

The cut-backs for the coming year will see the income drop by $2.6 billion, a drop of 64 per cent. All of these cuts are coming at a time when the United States, our partner in the free trade deal, is getting ready to increase its export enhancement program.

It seems very odd to me that we are cutting back on our subsidies while at the same time our neighbours to the south are increasing theirs. This year the U.S. export enhancement program will see at least $566 million in their export programs.

By withdrawing the at and east subsidy, the markets in Atlantic Canada will now be available for imported grain out of the U.S. and other countries. Yet again Canadian producers will be deprived of another market. Atlantic Canada will have to look elsewhere for its purchases.

The withdrawal of the at and east subsidy will place a heavy burden on livestock and poultry producers in Atlantic Canada and it will take away a traditional market from western farmers.

According to this government, the free trade deal was going to benefit Canadians because it would open up agricultural markets for Canadians. We have seen the regard the U.S. has for Canadian agriculture. It used GATT to gain entrance for its dairy products into Canada and one can only wonder how the Americans will benefit from the terminating of the at and east subsidy.

According to the Canadian Transport Commission, Canadian flour exports will be practically non-existent without the subsidy. The government should realize that the at and east is an important part of processing in Canada. Yet, according to this government, there is a lack of processing of highly-processed agri-food products here in Canada.

This government continues to contradict itself time and time again. It says we need more processing yet it cuts back on subsidies to enhance processing. This government talks about regional sensitivity and about a viable agricultural industry in Atlantic Canada but it has yet to demonstrate it.

In conclusion, it is time this government stood up for the interests of Canadian farmers. The U.S. is putting in place an export subsidy program while at the same time we are removing ours.

The at and east subsidy must be reinstated and the government should begin to fight for a level playing field. This government must act hastily to resolve the subsidy program before more farmers suffer further devastation.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to again address this bill. I do not propose to go on for too long having addressed the merits of it some time before, but I do want to make a few comments.

First, a few moments ago I listened to the member for Halifax West. I was amazed at the comments he made. I was appalled at his ignorance of the effect that this bill is having on his own riding.

He has got some basic facts wrong in the first place. He said that the program ended June 23, 1988. Well, it did not end June 23, 1988. For his edification, the bill was announced in April 1989 in the budget and the government effectively withdrew the program on July 15, 1989.

This member also talked about competition with the port of Montreal which is correct. The ports of Halifax and Saint John have some difficulty competing with the port of Montreal, that is very true. In fact, the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission back in 1985 recognized that point and that is why it put forth a proposal at that time.

If this member was paying any attention to his own riding, he would realize that. For him to stand in the House and make those comments is simply appalling. He should be ashamed of himself at what he is saying.

This bill is simply an example of this government's arrogant attitude to Parliament and its arrogant attitude to this country. It is not surprising. This is the government that has brought in closure or time allocation something like 35 times since it has been in office. It has acted in an arrogant manner in a whole host of areas and this is simply one example.

The fact is that there is a very logical alternative to at and east as it stands now, a proposal that was put on the table in 1985 by the APTC, which is a very well respected organization.

• (1730)

In fact, the member from Halifax West should take the time to have a chat with those people. They might educate him a little bit on their concern for the at and east and their concern for this bill.

The effect this bill is going to have on Atlantic Canada is outrageous. It is going to affect $27 million to $30 million per year for the ports of Halifax and Saint John. It is going to put something like 250 to 300 people directly out of work. The elevator at Saint John is already closed. The elevator at Halifax is in danger of closing. Rail crews will be laid off, longshoremen, maintenance workers, elevators workers all laid off. Dover Flour Mills is on the verge of closing.

The member from Halifax West will appreciate knowing that Dover Flour Mills is now effectively out of the commercial flour market because of the loss of this program. In fact, if the Halifax elevator closes, and it may well close in the near future, then Dover Flour Mills will very likely close. If the Halifax elevator closes, it is going to have a devastating effect on the livestock industry, the poultry and hog industries in Atlantic Canada. In Atlantic Canada alone, the poultry industry is a $125 million a year industry.

In Atlantic Canada, despite the good efforts they have made with respect to growing their own feeds and grains in that area, they are still dependent upon western grains. When this program is gone, if the Halifax elevator closes, the storage facilities will be reduced. I do not know what the member's alternative is to storage facilities for the agricultural industry in Atlantic Canada if the Halifax elevator closes. The ripple effect is outstanding, especially when we have a fishing industry that is in desperate straits.

I was in Nova Scotia last week. While the fishing industry is having a very difficult time, things are not going too badly in the Annapolis Valley. People are are doing better than other areas. One wonders with the bill this government now has before the House whether it is its objective to drive Atlantic Canada into poverty. If it is, it they is doing very well and has been very successful.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board has indicated that they like having ice-free ports in Atlantic Canada, at Saint John and Halifax. Certain customers, Cuba for example, would prefer to pick its grain up from Halifax or Saint John as opposed to Montreal. But all things being equal, if there are no ice-free ports, then they may just go elsewhere. There is concern that the western producer may lose markets. The ripple effect is outrageous.

The thing that is so frustrating about this bill, is that there is an alternative. It has been on the table for five bloody years and this government never paid attention to it. In fact, when the minister rose in the House to make her speech about this bill, she did not know anything about it. If this government paid a little more attention to the people of this country—

An hon. member: She has the same problem.

Mr. Laporte: —it would go a lot farther.

I just want to indicate that this bill will be going to a legislative committee. I hope the legislative committee will be making a thorough examination of this bill and hearing a number of witnesses and coming back to the government with its alternative. Perhaps the member for Halifax West would appreciate being part of that. I hope he is, because it would be very good for him to learn something.

I want to compliment the member from Annapolis Valley—Hants. He knows the situation. He has had the courage to stand up in this House and say that he is going to oppose this bill. I think that takes a lot of courage, especially in light of how this government handles people who even make any indication of opposing the government. Heaven forbid. The government never makes a mistake. I commend the member for that. I think it is very courageous for him to do that. I wish the member from Halifax West would consider such an alternative.

In conclusion, the legislative committee will be looking at this bill and coming back with some recommendations. There are some very good recommendations. There is a very good alternative on the table. If this government will look at it, it will cut the cost of the at and east program in half. It will keep the ports of Halifax and Saint John viable. It will retain the jobs and it will be good for Atlantic Canada. It will be good for western Canada. It will be good for all of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): We all know that there will be a vote at seven o'clock as a result of a decision of this House made last week which deferred the vote on Bill C-15 to seven o'clock tonight. I just wonder if there would not be a disposition at this time for us to defer this vote to seven o'clock tonight and have all the members here to vote on Bill C-15 at that time.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I think the Standing Order requires that vote tonight to begin with a bell at seven o'clock, with a vote at 7.15 p.m. Certainly the government would have no objection continuing past those votes and into this vote at that time. To be clear to all members who would be listening in their offices, the bell is at seven o'clock and the vote, I believe, is at 7.15 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed.

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will now suspend the House until seven o'clock.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 5.37 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 7 p.m.

* * *

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, April 27, consideration of Bill C-15, an act respecting plant breeders' rights, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being seven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 45(6) the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division at the report stage of Bill C-15, an act respecting plant breeders' rights.

The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Mackenzie.

Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 248)

YEAS

Members

Althouse	Angus
Benjamin	Brewin
Edmonston	Fisher
Harvey (Edmonton East)	Hovdebo
Hunter	Karpoff
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)	Laporte
McLaughlin	Taylor
Whittaker—15

NAYS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Arseneault	Atkinson
Beatty	Bélair
Belsher	Berger
Bernier	Bertrand
Bevilacqua	Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais	Blenkarn
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)	Boudria
Bourgault	Boyer
Cadieux	Campbell (South West Nova)
Cardiff	Chadwick
Clancy	Clark (Yellowhead)
Cole	Corbeil
Côté	Couture
Crawford	Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)	Darling
DeBlois	de Cotret

Dingwall	Dionne
Domm	Dorin
Duplessis	Fee
Ferguson	Ferland
Finestone	Fontaine
Fontana	Foster
Friesen	Gaffney
Gagliano	Gauthier
Greene	Guarnieri
Halliday	Harb
Hawkes	Hicks
Hockin	Hogue
Hopkins	Horner
Horning	Hudon
James	Jelinek
Johnson	Joncas
Kempling	Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Langlois	Larrivée
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)	Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lee	Lewis
Littlechild	Loiselle
Lopez	MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)	MacKay
MacLellan	Marin
Marleau	Martin (Lincoln)
Mazankowski	McCreath
McDermid	McGuire
Merrithew	Mifflin
Mitges	Monteith
Moore	Nault
Oberle	Pagtakhan
Pickard	Plamondon
Porter	Pronovost
Proud	Reimer
Ricard	Richardson
Robichaud	Saint-Julien
Schneider	Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)	Shields
Simmons	Sobeski
Soetens	Speller
Stevenson	Thompson
Tremblay (Lotbinière)	Turner (Halton—Peel)
Valcourt	Vanclief
Van de Walle	Vankoughnet
Vézina	Walker
Weiner	White
Wilbee	Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)	Winegard
Worthy	Young (Gloucester)—132

• (1920)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Hon. Don Mazankowski moved that the bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the bill be read a third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Angus: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): At the next sitting of the House.

Government Orders

RAILWAY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis, that Bill C-26, an act to amend the Railway Act (grain and flour subsidies), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Ms. Clancy (p.8227).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions.

Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the amendment.

The House divided on the amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 249)

YEAS

Members

Althouse	Angus
Arseneault	Bélair
Benjamin	Berger
Bevilacqua	Boudria
Brewin	Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy	Crawford
Dingwall	Dionne
Edmonston	Ferguson
Finestone	Fisher
Fontana	Foster
Gaffney	Gagliano
Gauthier	Guarnieri
Harb	Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hopkins	Hovdebo
Hunter	Karpoff
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)	Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte	LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
Lee	MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacLellan	Marleau
McGuire	McLaughlin
Mifflin	Nault
Pagtakhan	Pickard
Proud	Robichaud
Simmons	Speller
Taylor	Vanclief
Walker	Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)—53

NAYS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Atkinson	Beatty
Belsher	Bernier
Bertrand	Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais	Blenkarn
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)	Bourgault

Boyer
Cardiff
Clark (Yellowhead)
Corbeil
Couture
Crosby (Halifax West)
DeBlois
Domm
Duplessis
Ferland
Friesen
Halliday
Hicks
Hogue
Horning
James
Johnson
Kempling
Larrivée
Lewis
Loiselle
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Marin
Mazankowski
Merrithew
Moore
Plamondon
Pronovost
Ricard
Saint-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Soetens
Thompson
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Van de Walle
Vézina
White
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—91

Cadieux
Chadwick
Cole
Côté
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Darling
de Cotret
Dorin
Fee
Fontaine
Greene
Hawkes
Hockin
Horner
Hudon
Jelinek
Joncas
Langlois
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Littlechild
Lopez
MacKay
Martin (Lincoln)
McDermid
Monteith
Oberle
Porter
Reimer
Richardson
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Sobeski
Stevenson
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Valcourt
Vankoughnet
Weiner
Wilbee
Winegard

• (1930)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the amendment lost.

The next question is on the main motion.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, in the interest of saving time, I think you would find there is unanimous consent to apply the vote just taken on our amendment, which is an important one, and apply it to the main motion, but in reverse. I take it the government would insist on that.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I too wish to indicate that we would be prepared to agree with that. However, in light of the celebration we just had for the member for Regina—Lumsden, perhaps the government would like to change its mind. Why do that to the at and east rate on Les' birthday?

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed? The hon. government whip.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, we agree to apply the vote in reverse in spite of the fact that it is his birthday.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 250)

YEAS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Belsher
Bertrand
Blais
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Boyer
Cardiff
Clark (Yellowhead)
Corbeil
Couture
Crosby (Halifax West)
DeBlois
Domm
Duplessis
Ferland
Friesen
Halliday
Hicks
Hogue
Horning
James
Johnson
Kempling
Larrivée
Lewis
Loiselle
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Marin
Mazankowski
Merrithew
Moore
Plamondon
Pronovost
Ricard
Saint-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Soetens
Thompson

Andre
Beatty
Bernier
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Cadieux
Chadwick
Cole
Côté
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Darling
de Cotret
Dorin
Fee
Fontaine
Greene
Hawkes
Hockin
Horner
Hudon
Jelinek
Joncas
Langlois
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Littlechild
Lopez
MacKay
Martin (Lincoln)
McDermid
Monteith
Oberle
Porter
Reimer
Richardson
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Sobeski
Stevenson
Tremblay (Lotbinière)

Turner (Halton—Peel)
Van de Walle
Vézina
White
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—91

Valcourt
Vankoughnet
Weiner
Wilbee
Winegard

NAYS

Members

Althouse
Arseneault
Benjamin
Bevilacqua
Brewin
Clancy
Dingwall
Edmonston
Finestone
Fontana
Gaffney
Gauthier
Harb
Hopkins

Angus
Bélair
Berger
Boudria
Campbell (South West Nova)
Crawford
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Gagliano
Guarnieri
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hovdebo

Hunter
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Laporte
Lee
MacLellan
McGuire
Mifflin
Pagtakhan
Proud
Simmons
Taylor
Walker
Young (Gloucester)—53

Karpoff
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacDonald (Dartmouth)
Marleau
McLaughlin
Nault
Pickard
Robichaud
Speller
Vanclief
Whittaker

Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 7.36 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 7.36 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 1, 1990

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS

TABLING AND REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for Science): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a number of Order in Council appointments which were made by the government. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(1), these are deemed referred to the appropriate standing committees, a list of which is attached.

* * *

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for Science): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government's response to eight petitions numbered as follows: 5484, 5488, 5489, 5490, 5532, 5560, 5627, 5651.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

PETITIONS

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents from Kamloops concerning the government's goods and services tax that is now before the Liberal Senate.

They are asking that the tax be stopped. They point out a whole set of reasons why they feel it ought to be stopped. One of the reasons is that it taxes reading, which makes Canada the only country in the world that does so.

They call upon the Liberals in the Senate to stop the tax.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, on another matter I have a petition to present from a number of western Canadians who point out the benefits to a country the size of Canada having a first class passenger rail service.

They also point out that all large countries like Canada have first class passenger rail service which is the most environmentally friendly way to travel.

They are urging the government to reconsider its decision to abandon a good part of the VIA system in the country.

CHILDREN'S BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, on a third matter I have a petition to present from petitioners who point out the increasing number of Canadian children who find themselves living in poverty. They point out that the number is actually increasing during these trying economic times for many families.

• (1110)

They are asking that the government support the initiative first introduced by the hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam calling for a comprehensive bill of rights for children in Canada and to implement policies and take initiatives that would ensure that Canadian children cease living in poverty.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition certified correct under the Standing Orders. It is from a number of my constituents who are calling on the government again to save the VIA Rail system.

The government has already taken action to cut back the railway. Yet, Mr. Speaker, you will know that on Vancouver Island we still have our VIA system thanks to the protection granted to that passenger service by the Supreme Court of the Province of British Columbia. My constituents are concerned that the National Transportation Agency in its biased method has dismissed a fair appeal on this rail system.

This petition is signed by a number of constituents who live on Vancouver Island.

WOMEN'S CENTRES

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition as well from people in the communities of Tofino, Ucluelet and Port Alberni in my constituency who have expressed their opposition to the cut-back in funding of the women's programs of the Secretary of State, and in particular the core funding that was provided to women's centres across Canada.

The petitioners are asking that the funding be reinstated so that those women's centres can provide the kind of service that is so desperately needed in communities in my riding such as Tofino, Ucluelet, Port Alberni, Courtenay, Parksville and Qualicum Beach.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36 I have another petition to present with 405 names on it. I would like to add these names to the thousands of names that I have already presented to this House.

This petition is from people who are calling on the House and the government to reject the current proposal for the goods and services tax. They are asking the government to cease with its proposal which would shift the tax burden on to ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of through real tax reform.

EDUCATION WEEK

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, as this is Education Week in Ontario, I take pleasure in tabling a petition signed by a great number of students from the University of Ottawa who would like to tell the House that they feel that the present situation concerning post-secondary educational institution standards is indeed sad. They point out that they are in over-crowded classrooms, working with obsolete laboratory equipment and so on.

They would like to have the House of Commons and Parliament commit to arranging as soon as possible a federal-provincial conference of the highest political representatives to establish obligations of the two levels of government, that is the provinces and the federal government, to financing post-secondary education, and to ensure an end to the shameful neglect of higher education in Canada.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for Science): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all questions stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That this House reaffirm that all persons are equal under the law and demand that the government (1) promote this fundamental human right for Canada's aboriginal peoples, (2) ensure that our system of justice is more responsive and suitable, (3) pursue alternative aboriginal justice initiatives, and (4) in cases of jurisdictional conflict, that the Government of Canada, in consultation with aboriginal leaders, ensure the protection of the life, liberty, and security of aboriginal people who are entitled to the status of Canadian citizens.

He said: Mr. Speaker, thank you for this opportunity to consider my motion.

It is time to lay out for the people of Canada in detail the extent to which the plight of our aboriginal peoples has become a national tragedy. Today, I only want to deal with one aspect of this tragedy, the question of human rights and our Canadian society.

As Canadians we have long pointed our fingers at others, and for good reason. The stories of El Salvador, Iran, Nepal, China and the Soviet Union, to mention only a few, have brought senseless grief to millions. We have a right and an obligation to speak out as a democratic society in an undemocratic world.

With that privilege also comes an obligation. That obligation is to put our own house in order, to ensure that every Canadian is looked after in the spirit of a truly democratic society, and to ensure that this spirit is present in the structure of our judicial system, in the daily application of our laws, in the operation of our governments and in the political system itself.

We must give substance to our Charter of Rights which guarantees that:

> Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

Sometimes these words have to be read in the House to remind ourselves as to what our obligations are as representatives of Canadians.

It is finally dawning on all Canadians that words are not enough. We are losing our way, and nothing shows our lack of commitment more than the way we treat this country's aboriginal peoples.

This motion is not based on my own opinion, but on the research, views and analyses of every individual, committee and commission that has looked into the critical problems facing our aboriginal peoples.

We are using this opposition day to request that the government show some understanding, some sympathy and some concrete movement in reaching out to these Canadians, and to recognize that the experience of aboriginal peoples is the dark side of our reality. We are bringing these issues forward so that we can leave behind the stage of denial and compel the Government of Canada to show good faith to the world. The aboriginal peoples are, after all, our people, and should be our friends and neighbours.

The law, and in many respects we have to say bluntly, the white man's law, has been unkind to Canadian aboriginal peoples. Throughout much of our history the law, like a two-edged sword, has denied natives the freedom to exercise the fundamental prerogatives of their ancestors and the Europeans who occupied their lands.

In the years which followed Confederation, one province after another enacted legislation which excluded natives from the franchise. In 1875, for example, British Columbia decreed that "no Chinaman or Indian" could vote, a provision which was upheld by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the highest court in the British Empire. Quebec, the last province to repeal its discriminatory legislation, only did so in 1969.

On the federal level, aboriginal peoples were also barred from participating in the electoral life of their country, a ban which was not lifted unconditionally until 1960. Not until 1972, it appears, did an aboriginal sit on a Canadian jury. The names of such individuals had been hitherto omitted from the list of potential jurors.

The list goes on and on as to how history has been an unfair weapon against our aboriginal peoples. But if you look at the situation currently, Mr. Speaker, you will see that we have not changed.

I would like to review some of the major findings that people have made concerning certain conditions of Canadian aboriginal peoples. The 1989 annual report of the Canadian Human Rights Commission repeats again the findings that it brought to the attention of Canadians in 1988.

In 1988, the commission stated that the justice system is heavily weighted against Canadian native peoples. It also stated that an Indian youngster in Canada has a better chance of being sent to prison than of completing university.

The commission argued that ways must be found to remove bias and to dispel the views of some natives that the justice system is "white law".

When the commissioner wrote his report this year, he came to the same conclusion as he came to in 1988. This time he said:

> If there is any single issue on which Canada cannot hold its head high in the international community, any single area in which we can be accused of falling down on our obligations, it is in this area of aboriginal relations.

In his frustration in trying to get the Government of Canada to act this time he recommended the creation of a royal commission. That recommendation is still before the government.

• (1120)

This year, an interdepartmental committee finished its review of Indian policing policy. This report states that "Indian communities are entitled to effective and culturally sensitive law enforcement services" which should be of the same standard as those enjoyed by similarly situated non-native communities.

It also states that Indians can "legitimately expect to increase their control over their own future and be policed increasingly by Indians," regardless of the policing program which is serving them.

The statistics that the committee presents indicate that the average number of on-reserve crimes per thousand is approximately four times the national average.

Reserves which are served by regular police programs suffer from problems of slow response time, little to no preventive policing work, no enforcement of band by-laws and poor communications between the band, its membership and the regular police serving the reserve. So far the government has not taken any action on this task force report.

I would like to refer now to the final report of the Task Force on Aboriginal Peoples in Federal Corrections. This was a task force created in 1987, which reported in 1989, to find ways to improve the treatment of aboriginal peoples in the federal corrections system. It stated that the need for improvement was demonstrated by the fact that aboriginal people comprise 2.5 per cent of the Canadian population but a full 9 per cent of federal inmates.

Also, fewer aboriginal people are granted full parole, and when it comes it is later in their sentences, and they are more likely to have their parole revoked.

The task force made more than 60 recommendations touching every aspect of the corrections system as it relates to aboriginal offenders. These include recommendations such as having increased aboriginal correctional staff, working with aboriginal communities and organizations so that they be better informed and involved with the delivery of programs and that the institutional environment provide further support to aboriginal culture, spiritual values by, for example, improving the access of aboriginal elders to correctional institutions.

The task force emphasized that in judging the performance of aboriginal inmates it was important to understand the social and cultural realities of aboriginal life, otherwise discrimination in the treatment of aboriginal offenders would be certain to continue.

More recently, and I think perhaps more important because it brings home the message to all of us, was the 1990 report from the Task Force on Federally Sentenced Women. Eight emergency measure recommendations were made. A number made specific mention of aboriginal inmates.

One of the major concerns that we have in this country is the fact that not only is there a high rate of incarceration among aboriginals in general, it is even higher among women. Their problems are compounded by the fact that the prisons available to them take them away from their community life and take them away from their family support systems. Many end up in Prince Albert or, on occasion, they are brought east to Kingston. Most of these people originate in western Canada, far removed from Kingston.

Once cut off from these services the likelihood of being able to return to a productive life back home on a reserve or in urban centres that they come from is near impossible. The fact is that the government has failed to recognize that the issue of women in prisons is largely at this time an issue of aboriginal women in prison and that it needs to be addressed immediately.

It is not only the federal government which has been reporting on the problems facing aboriginal peoples in Canada in dealing with human rights issues, but also provincial governments. For example, as this debate takes place, there is a task force in Alberta reviewing the judicial system there.

There is also a judicial review in Manitoba which is coming to its conclusion. Hopefully, its report, which is coming out shortly, will add and contribute positively to the debate.

In Nova Scotia last year we heard from the Royal Commission on Donald Marshall. This report will be referred to in more detail by one of my colleagues who finds it particularly oppressive. She will bring the report to the attention of the House in more detail.

For now, it is important to point out that this Royal Commission concluded that Mr. Marshall's race was a factor in his wrongful conviction and 11-year incarceration for the murder of Sandy Seale. It found that the judicial system failed Marshall at virtually every turn from his arrest and conviction in 1971 up to and beyond his acquittal by the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia.

It found that the individuals involved in the judicial system failed to perform their duties in a professional and/or competent manner, thereby allowing this tragedy to happen.

In 1988, the Canadian Bar Association turned its attention to aboriginal peoples and cited in its report, called Locking up Natives in Canada, a Saskatchewan study that shows that a treaty Indian male who turned 16 in 1976 had a 70 per cent chance of at least one stint in prison by the age of 25. For a non-native, this figure was 8 per cent—70 per cent versus 8 per cent. That is almost a factor of 10. Again, it draws to our attention the dramatic difference in the lifestyle and problems that aboriginal youth run into compared to non-aboriginal youth.

Some of the grim statistics the report reviewed show that infant mortality among Indian children was 60 per cent higher than the figure for the country as a whole. These are figures that you read about normally concerning Third World countries. If there is anything that hits at the heart of human rights and why the UN has turned its attention to human rights, it is the treatment of children. The fact that we have an infant mortality rate in Canada so much higher for this particular group again points out one of the many ways we are failing these people.

Indian children who survive their first year of life can expect to die ten years before their non-native contemporaries. The rate of violent death among Indians is more than three times the national average. The likelihood of Indian minors being placed in the custody of a child welfare agency is five times higher than that for non-native children.

The Bar Association concluded that what we need in Canada is a criminal justice system which does more than respond to dispossession and deprivation by locking up natives. This again shows the frustration not only of people in government, not only of people in the communities themselves, but very much of people such as lawyers and judges who are looking at these people on a daily basis wishing that another system could be set up.

The Bar Association came up with an idea which is gaining currency in Canada. It is one that I think the House should look at. I refer to an alternative native justice system. Members of the committee of the Bar Association believe that there is a sound constitutional basis for them. Although they refrain from endorsing a particular model, they feel that these systems could reflect the accumulated wisdom of both aboriginal law ways and the common law. I think it is time that the government begins to look at the alternative legal systems being tried in the United States and being suggested by different inquiries throughout Canada.

Perhaps one of the most moving ways of looking at the issue of native people and the law was offered by a reporter, Geoffrey York, of The Globe and Mail who has just published a book called The Dispossessed. In using his experience, mostly throughout western Canada, he went to different communities and talked to the leadership and people in different communities about native issues. He stated that for many native youths the reformatory is more attractive than life on the reserve, that incarceration provides a welcome escape from isolation, poverty and boredom.

He quotes one young aboriginal person who said of his peers:

> We have nothing to look forward to when we wake up in the morning. We get frustrated and scared. We don't give a damn what happens to anybody any more because nobody gives a damn about us. The only thing we know is to cause trouble and go to jail, where you have three meals a day and a place to sleep and a TV to look at.

I cannot think of a more incriminating commentary on the situation we have created, and everyone is responsible, than to think of people who see their life as one in which going to jail is the only alternative because they cannot work productively in their community.

However, many communities are trying to take the initiative to improve their lot, with or without the support of the government. In 1987, for example, crime rates fell significantly in four native communities in northern Manitoba after a sports and recreation program was instituted for the inhabitants.

It is hard to believe that when the government built some of the reserve infrastructure it did not bother to build sports and recreation facilities on these reserves. So the youth had no place to go. Even the schools often have very limited facilities. During the long winter periods in remote communities people get more and more frustrated. A simple thing like a physical infrastructure would make it possible for them to live a more positive lifestyle.

• (1130)

Prince Albert is very well known for its prisons in western Canada. There are in fact three facilities, and each is filled with natives. The population of the federal penitentiary is 50 per cent native, the population of the provincial correctional centre is 75 per cent native and the population of the women's jail is 85 per cent native.

It is obviously easy to spend all day going through statistics and reports, but I think the point is well made that no matter who looks at the Canadian system, whether it is the United Nations which has sent an observer into western Canada, whether it is the South African ambassador who took the opportunity to embarrass Canadians by visiting a reserve in central Manitoba, whether it is a departmental committee, whether it is the Human Rights Commission, whether it is a provincial royal commission or whether it is a judicial study in Manitoba or Alberta, everyone comes to the same conclusion. The human rights of Canadian aboriginal people are being put at risk by one generation after another of Canadians who fail to come to grips with this problem, who fail to recognize that they must do something, and begin now.

This is an opportunity and an obligation on the part of the government. This is not something that people come to do easily in their communities. Anyone who thinks that out of local goodness people will begin to look at the problems of aboriginals, is walking away from his or her own responsibility as federal leaders. People need to see that the government itself is willing to stand up and protect people. They need to see that there will be programs which respond to people. People living in Norway House or in Shamattawa want to know the government is willing to come up and say: "Here is a facility for you. Here is a local police program. Here is an opportunity for you to join in crime prevention. Here is an opportunity for you to protect your own human rights."

People look to the federal government as the heart of liberal values in this country. One of the reasons why we have tried to develop a strong federal government in Canada, going back to the turn of the century, is that it has become the focus for human rights battles. This is where we develop law.

This is where we develop the interpretation of laws, through the federal government and through the federal court system. This is why we provide money through the Court Challenges Program. This is why we have provided for the education of the RCMP. This takes place at the federal level, and therefore I call upon the government today to think about its inactivity, to think about the fact that it is not taking these initiatives.

In the meantime, people are going to jail at the age of 16. Family violence is on the increase. People are having difficulty developing a positive lifestyle. In the the absence of action on the human rights questions, we once again have failed many people.

This motion has four components to it. Each one of them asks the government to consider different approaches: promoting equality; ensuring that our system of justice is more responsive and suitable; and pursuing alternative aboriginal justice initiatives. These three components, plus the fourth component which deals more specifically with the problem to be addressed by the next speaker, are very straight forward. There is nothing complicated about asking the government to act immediately.

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate today.

Yesterday, I had an experience that was both saddening and uplifting as I visited the families, mainly the elderly, women and children, who have been forced from their traditional lands by a small group of violent people trying to impose their wishes by force of arms. We have all heard on the radio, seen on television and in the newspapers, the report about the critical situation at the St. Regis Akwesasne Reserve.

I know that members on all sides of this House realize that what is happening in this native community is extremely complex. The current difficulties have been brewing for some time. Informed people understand that there is no easy, quick solution to a problem involving five governments, the governments of Canada, Quebec, Ontario, the State of New York, the United States of America and the Mohawk people on both sides of the border.

Not the least of the complications is the fact that the community of St. Regis, part of the reserve, is Canadian territory but is physically cut off from the rest of Canada by the St. Lawrence River and the St. Regis River and the United States border. This explains why the Sûreté du Québec evacuated many residents of St. Regis by boat last Friday. This unusual move was necessary because the normal route by road was controlled by members of the Mohawk Warrior Society, a group based on the American side.

I think it would be helpful to review briefly the events of the last few days to gain a better understanding of the current situation. On Wednesday my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and myself met with several native leaders, including George Erasmus the national Chief of the Assembly of First Nations, Mr. Harry Laforme who is the Indian Commissioner of Ontario, Grand Chief Mike Mitchell of the Akwesasne Community, Chief Harold Tarbell who is Head Chief of the St. Regis Tribal Council, and Tom Porter, Chief of the Traditional Council.

The same night and the following day we consulted with the Attorney General of Ontario and the office of the Minister of Public Safety in Quebec.

Early Friday morning, following several days of violent clashes, the band decided to evacuate the St. Regis Reserve and sought the help of the Quebec police force to move its people to safety. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Ontario Provincial Police provided assistance, including boats, to the Sûreté du Québec who co-ordinated the operation to ensure the protection of the persons evacuated.

Approximately 600 persons registered at the Transport Canada Training Institute in Cornwall and the evacuees were accommodated there. For those who do not know the training centre, it is a school-room and hotel-like atmosphere where students who are being trained by Transport Canada normally stay.

Some of those evacuated wanted to return to protect their homes but Grand Chief Mike Mitchell has convinced most of the band members to remain in Cornwall for their own safety.

At a meeting on Saturday morning, the community discussed what they might do regarding a return to their homes. As we can all understand, they were most anxious about their homes, now empty and unprotected from possible attack. The group decided to stay in Cornwall and postpone their return to the reserve.

Chief Mike Mitchell, Chief Harold Tarbell and Chief Tom Porter thanked the city of Cornwall and the Canadian government for their assistance and called once again for American intervention. I would like to join them and express my sincere appreciation for the co-operation and assistance of those who participated in this commendable effort.

Mr. Speaker, I think Parliament can take satisfaction in the actions of the government in assisting those men, women and children that sought refuge in Cornwall. The Transport Canada Training Institute provided food and shelter for those who did not feel safe on the reserve.

In fact, when I was there yesterday they were showing me the food that had come in from the community, from the people in Cornwall—everything from disposable diapers, to food, to toys for the children. It really was rewarding to see how the city of Cornwall responded to this situation and helped these unfortunate people.

Officials from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are there now and have been throughout the evacuation period to provide whatever help and reassurance necessary to our native people.

When I travelled to Cornwall yesterday and met with the St. Regis Band members there, I must say I was deeply moved by the fear, which was mixed with courage and determination not to submit to the scare tactics that threaten their community and their way of life.

Our objective is to strive for a peaceful solution, acceptable to all sides. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has explained to the House that he has made representations to the Secretary of State of the United States. He has told his American counterpart that we have a situation that is near anarchy; that much of the source of the problem is on the American side; and that we urge response by American authorities, particularly those from the State of New York.

The government has shown its determination to play an effective role in bringing about a peaceful resolution. We expect the Americans, both at the state and national level, to act promptly to resolve the situation.

• (1140)

In its actions over the last few days, our government has demonstrated its commitment to protecting the interests of all Canadians and all aboriginal peoples. No one in this House accepts the idea that native people in this country can be forced from their homes by a violent and illegal action of a small group from another country, even if that country is our good neighbour, the United States of America.

Canada has a different history with respect to resolving conflict than those of our American cousins. We have a tradition and a Constitution which emphasizes negotiation, not confrontation.

The hon. members across the floor, and our own members, may grow impatient with our desire to find a solution which is both peaceful and lasting, but that is a non-violent approach which contributes to a high reputation in this world as a nation of peace-keepers.

Personally, I am proud of this history of treaty-making and peaceful negotiations which has characterized our approach in resolving our relationship with native people. This does not mean that there is not room for further improvement. The Marshall inquiry and other continuing inquiries have shown us that justice is a matter for every responsible person, and it is an institution which must strive continually to obtain goals of justice and freedom.

The most recent events in Akwesasne show that Canada should continue to strive for a land where all citizens have access to peace and freedom. We must have order and peace so we can reach that freedom, not reach it through violence. Most importantly, in full respect of their honour and dignity to deserve its high reputation as a leader among nations, as Canadians we must strive continually for justice for all.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for her measured speech this morning. I appreciate her comments. I know she was at Akwesasne yesterday, or near Akwesasne, I should say. I would not blame her for not going there right now. I would not either, even though part of the reserve is in my riding. I would not go there now out of fear for my own safety, and besides I would not want to cause tempers to flare any higher than they are at the present time. I am sure that is the case for the minister, as well.

We will be discussing this subject today and tomorrow, and hopefully finding a resolution to a very difficult problem. I want to make one or two suggestions.

I notice the Solicitor General is here and I welcome his presence. Whatever means we find must be utilized to disarm the community. This is what will have to be done. I do not think there is any question that efforts will have to be made on both sides of the border simultaneously. I do not want the minister to give me any great detail on how that is going to be done because, obviously, it will have to be done in certain confidence that all police forces approach this at the same time.

My concern is that the village of St. Regis is on Canadian soil but only accessible through the United States, as the minister has indicated. Perhaps for some members, that may be a little hard to figure out. One would almost need a map of the area, as a prop, to show members the configuration of the reserve, so that everyone would understand what we are talking about. Of course, we cannot do that in this House. I only say that to illustrate how complicated the border is.

I want to return to the remarks I was making and suggest to the minister that efforts be made on both the Canadian and the U.S. sides with the police forces in order to disarm the community. It is important that it be done simultaneously simply because, if we are talking about the community of St. Regis and the United States, there is no Customs officers there.

Perhaps the two ministers have not been to that part of the reserve. Our distinguished colleague from Beauharnois—Salaberry and I have been there on a number of occasions. There are no customs. It is actually the only place in Canada where you can legally cross between Canada and the United States without going through customs. There is actually such a place in Canada. It is Akwesasne. Strangely enough, if you go between Cornwall Island in Akwesasne and the U.S. side you have to pass through customs, but if you go from St. Regis to the U.S. side there is no such thing as a customs office. My fear, of course, would be that the guns and everything else would just move across the border if whatever is done is not done simultaneously on both sides. That is the first concern.

I have discussed the second point privately with the Solicitor General. It is my hope that once everything is solved, we will find a way to build a road or a bridge—it will have to be a combination of a road and a bridge—between the village of St. Regis and the village of Snye. Both villages are on the Quebec side of the Akwesasne Reserve but one is separated from the other by a body of water, as the minister has indicated. By constructing this access—and I hope it is done on an urgent basis and hopefully this year in a combination between the Government of Canada and the Government of Quebec—it would ensure that the people of St. Regis are never landlocked again and are never put in a situation where they become hostages in their own village. That is unique to Akwesasne and it is something which is certainly undesirable. We are seeing now that our citizens can be landlocked in that manner and dependent on the level of law and order in another country for their safety.

I will have several other remarks to make later when I make my own speech but I would like to raise one of my concerns. I do not expect a response to the first one as it is probably better that there is no response other than an acknowledgement of the concern.

On the second one, I would hope that I could get a commitment from the government that there would be high level negotiations with Quebec in order to build such a road and bridge between those two Canadian communities so that they are no longer landlocked and potentially held hostage, as we have seen over the last few days.

Mrs. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his comments on this issue. I know it is one that he has a great interest in because we have had personal conversations as this has been going on.

I thank you for the suggestion about the bridge because it is very unique and it is hard for people to understand. It would be as if we, sitting here in the House, to get to our office in Hull had to go out the back door and climb into a boat to go across the river in order to get there. That the reserve is in Ontario, Quebec and the United States is a very unique situation and there is not a continuous method of transportation between them.

As far as the disarming is concerned, I agree with the hon. member. This is not something that can take place unilaterally by any part of the reserve. It must be done in unison. If we are to attain a peaceful solution, the arms must be laid down. People cannot live in fear of their lives because of shots being fired, and even though they may be only fired in the air, it is still a method of intimidation and fear. It is very important that those arms be laid down.

I do not know of any place in the world where peace has been obtained and solutions have been found under gunfire. In all cases the guns have been laid aside and then negotiations and mediation have taken place. I feel that this is what has to happen at Akwesasne. As most of the guns and certainly the majority of the firing has come from the American side, it is very important that we have the co-operation of the United States and the State of New York in order to obtain this.

In fact, as we are debating this matter in the House, there is a meeting going on between the officials in the Department of Indian Affairs in Canada, the bureau of Indian Affairs in the United States, representatives from the State of New York and from External Affairs and from Washington. These officials are discussing opportunities for a peaceful solution to this particular situation. I am looking forward to the results of that meeting. We may not have an immediate solution based on the meeting this morning but it is a first step in the right direction, the bringing together of both sides to try and obtain a solution.

• (1150)

The problem belongs to Akwesasne. It is the people of Akwesasne who must face the issue of the gambling that is taking place. It is something they have to solve among themselves. However we, as the government of Canada, with the provincial governments of Ontario and Quebec, as well as the American government, must do what we can to help facilitate the groups to come together and to forge a peaceful solution to the problems they have there.

Mr. Phillip Edmonston (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in hearing what my hon. colleague, the Minister of State for Northern Development had to say about what the government is doing for Indians, the promotion of native justice particularly, and for natives in general.

How does this coincide with what we have been hearing, particularly what our caucus has been hearing, from native groups who tell us about the cutting of funds, through the Secretary of State's ministry. These cuts affect native groups as far as broadcasting facilities and native publications are concerned?

The information we received as a caucus when we met with native groups was that this was creating serious problems for native groups and their ability to communicate with each other. Their common culture and their communication through broadcasting and papers is so important to them that they feel this is something the government is doing which will severely handicap them.

Mrs. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the funding of native Canadians comes from many sources within this government, primarily through my department, the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs. In fact, the budget for my department was increased by some 8 per cent this year to ensure that the necessary funding to provide the services to the native people that are required, whether it be in education, in health, or in infrastructure within their reserves, has been increased because we realize that the need is there.

Native people have been making great strides in education. There is a long way to go but there has been much growth in the number of people going into post-secondary education and post-elementary education over the last four to five years and I hope to see that continue to grow.

While there were some cut-backs in the over-all budget of the Secretary of State, and some of those cuts were reflected back within the native people, there is also a committee put together to look for other ways of funding those communication areas for the native people. Money will come from other sources and be on a more ongoing basis to allow them to continue with their communications. But certainly the over-all budget as far as aboriginal and native people in Canada are concerned has been increased and will continue to be funded at levels where we can continue to work with the native people.

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the member for Winnipeg North Centre for presenting this motion and raising this issue in the House today, and also for his comments on how native Indians relate to the justice system in Canada and some of the problems that he has outlined in his comments.

Also, I appreciate that the Minister of State would want to confine her remarks to the current problems at Akwesasne. I think all that we on this side, in this party, would like to say is that we appreciate that this matter is being treated sensitively and that we would not like to see the kind of violence that has taken place over the past few days increase. We appreciate the fact that there is an attempt being made to bring the parties together to negotiate a resolution to this issue rather than to follow the suggestions of some people that, for example, the National Guard be brought in to deal with the issue. I think that that kind of response would probably beget more violence and not bring about the kind of solution that we would like to see. I appreciate the Minister of State's approach, which is to bring the parties together to negotiate a resolution and then to see what can be done, respecting the views of all the parties involved, and also respecting the issue of Mohawk sovereignty over their lands which is an important issue.

I would like to discuss some of the broader issues relating to native justice in this country, not simply the Akwesasne issue or the issue of the justice inquiries that were brought up by the member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The problem of natives in conflict with the justice system, as offenders, is only the tip of the iceberg in this country. The evidence is overwhelming that natives are not well treated by the justice system in Canada. The member for Winnipeg North Centre mentioned the Donald Marshall inquiry and the statement in the Marshall inquiry that if it was not for his race, Donald Marshall would not have been considered the prime suspect in this case, and would not have gone to jail for years and years as a result of the ineffectiveness of the courts, the police and the whole justice system.

I am pleased to see that there are now inquiries taking place, in both Manitoba and Alberta, into instances that have emphasized how unjustly natives are treated in those provinces. It is a fact I think we are all aware of, that in Manitoba federal prisons, 39 per cent of the inmates are native, even though natives make up only about 2 per cent of the population. In Saskatchewan, 36 per cent of inmates are natives, although natives make up only about 2 per cent of the population. The provincial prisons in both of those provinces and across Canada show a disproportionate number of native inmates incarcerated in correctional institutions as a result of the problems that the justice system has in dealing with native people.

I think we should recognize the work of the Human Rights Commissioner over the last two years and the Canadian Bar Association and other authorities who have dealt with this issue and who have tried to work with the Canadian government to develop changes to the problems of native justice in this country. I think their work, hopefully, will lead to some resolution of this problem.

The government, at this point, seems to have taken the position that our justice system is fine but it needs a few refinements in order to accommodate native Indians in Canada. I do not think that that response or that reaction goes far enough. I think we have to look at the roots of this problem and that the solutions we come up with and that ultimately will be successful are going to be far more radical and more far-reaching than the solutions that seem to be acceptable to the government at this time.

Native injustice does not simply begin when native offenders come into conflict with the laws of the dominant society. The injustice has been present over the last 200 years. It begins with the status to which we assign native people in this country, through our laws, through the way we administer the Department of Indian Affairs, and, essentially, the role of native people in this country is the role of colonized people virtually anywhere in the world. They have been pushed to the margins of society, they are treated as colonized people and we, who supposedly represent the dominant society, are the colonizers. The problem with the relationship is that native society has been relegated to the margins and relegated to the status of lesser importance. The treatment, as far as I am concerned, of native people in this country is no different, except perhaps in terms of degree than the treatment of the Congolese during the colonial period in the Belgian Congo. The colonized people were marginalized, were seen as secondary people and in fact in many cases, non-people relative to the dominant colonizing society and I do not think that that is any different in Canada. When you start by looking at the references to native people in our fundamental constitutional documents, there is absolutely no way that our constitutional documents recognize the role that native people played in our country prior to the period of colonization when the European and other people came here.

• (1200)

Our constitutional documents do not give adequate mention to the role and the importance of native people in our society. I suppose, with the exceptions in the British North America Act that assigned jurisdiction of natives and lands reserved for natives to the federal government or some mention in the Constitution Act of 1982 that existing aboriginal rights and treaties will be respected, there is very little in the constitutional documents that recognize the importance of the role that native people have played and should be playing in our country today.

Today we seem to be locked in with the Meech Lake discussions in a discussion around who are the founding nations of this country, how they should be mentioned or displayed in our constitutional documents, and what rights and privileges should be assigned to them.

Yet it is strange that one of the fundamental characteristics of this country was that we as colonizers found people here when we arrived. These people had organized societies, they had their own governments, they had ways of managing the land, they had ways of allocating property, and they had the power in their governments to both make war and to make treaties of peace. In fact, every characteristic that is a fundamental characteristic of a nation was enjoyed by those nations of aboriginal people our forefathers and mothers found when they arrived on these shores hundreds of years ago. Those nations also had their economies and their trade relationships with other nations.

Any characteristic or right of a nation that would have the right to be a member of the United Nations today or the right to participate in national debates throughout the world were present in those nations that we found here in the beginning. Even the colonizers who came here took advantage of some of those characteristics by entering into treaties with those nations, as if they were sovereign people and recognizing that they were sovereign people in their own lands. They signed treaties of peace. They signed alliances in times of war when the European colonizers fought against each other. In fact, they were treated in the early history of our country as sovereign nations, but something has happened in the meantime. We have forgotten those treaties. We have forgotten the sovereignty that has to be recognized prior to entering into a treaty with the people we found here and we have now forced those people to the margins. In fact, we have begun to treat them as non-people.

It might be worth while, when talking about the injustice that is meted out to native Indian people by our country, to look at some of the fundamental documents of legislation by which this injustice is institutionalized in the way this Parliament operates and in the way the federal government administration operates.

One is the issue of the assignment of status as native Indians. One of the primary tenets of culture is that a culture recruits its own members and has the right to recruit its own members. Native Indians should be deciding who are Indians and who are not, and I think that they would find it relatively easy to do that.

Instead, we have arrogated that right to ourselves here in Parliament. For example, we had decided that if a native woman marries outside her race, then she loses her Indian status. We made that decision right here in this Parliament. We decided right here in this Parliament that if a native decided to join the Canadian Forces and fight for this country during the war, that in the very process of doing that, he lost his status as an Indian. What other group in this country loses their cultural status by joining the Canadian Armed Forces, and yet we forced native Indians to go through that process of being enfranchised in order to fight for this country.

Some months ago in the House I brought up the incident of the Stoney Point base in southern Ontario, where we had examples of the Canadian army seizing a native reserve as a military base and promising to return it after the war. Some of the men on that military base signed up in the Canadian army, lost their Indian status, and when they came home after the war they found that they had lost the homes for which they fought because the Canadian army seized them. It is now used as a summer resort for officers on the Great Lakes who go there and enjoy what was once an Indian reserve. The homes Indian soldiers fought for have now been lost because the Canadian government refuses to honour an agreement that it made with the people of Stoney Point during the war.

You could lose your Indian status simply by joining the army. You could lose your status by voting, as is the right of every Canadian citizen or every citizen in a province. In many cases, by signing up to vote you lost your Indian status. Who else in this country has to lose their status and their culture by signing up and exercising their right as a Canadian citizen or the citizen of any province to vote in an election? Yet this is the kind of thing that we did and continue to do to native people.

The Indian Act and the Indian administration in this country was designed to liquidate Indians as a separate culture in Canada and to assimilate those people into the dominant society. It was futile. It was fruitless. It could not be done.

A second thing that we did to native Indians when we found out that parents have a great deal of influence on their children in matters of education and matters of culture is that we decided to set up Indian residential schools. We would take those children away from the influence of their parents and their cultural influence. We would take them away from their roots and from their homes and we would put them in with other children from all over the country who, in many cases, spoke different languages, and we would educate them all together so that they would become more white than their parents were. That is how the residential school system operated. We put them under the control of religious communities that saw Indian religions and cultural beliefs as satanically inspired. In many of those schools, the children were brutalized. The revelations that have come out of Mount Cashel and other institutions recently would pale in comparison to some of the things that happened in Indian residential schools over the last 100 years.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know if you saw the film on CBC Where the Spirit Lives. I thought it was an excellent film, and based on the stories that I have heard from my native constituents and from natives across the country, it treated very lightly the kind of brutality both against culture and against individuals that took place in those schools. If we ever want to do an investigation of the residential school system, it would produce some stories that no Canadian would be proud of.

One of the things that happened out of the residential school system and one of the things that is being debated in Manitoba today where the member comes from, is the process whereby child welfare agencies in the province were permitted to seize Indian children from their parents, take those Indian children out of their families and to adopt them into white families, or non-Indian families, or even to adopt them into the United States and to other countries around the world.

The member for Winnipeg North Centre will know the story of the native women who was recently brought back from Holland by the native organizations in Manitoba. She had been adopted into a European family in The Netherlands. They had sexually and physically abused her. They had allowed her to be a prostitute on the streets of Amsterdam. When she got cancer, they brought her back home. Her people found her and brought her back home to die. There are thousands of children in Manitoba and in all the other provinces who have experienced that same adoption and have been taken out of their homes.

There are many ways in which this country treats its Indian people unjustly. As I said, not simply when they come into contact with the justice system, but this injustice is institutionalized in the way we deal with native people.

Look at what is happening in resource conflicts around the country, Mr. Speaker. Whether it is in the Innu lands in Labrador, or any province or any region of any province, you will find the same kind of thing happening. Essentially, when governments of provinces and the federal government look at native lands or lands claimed by native people, they consider those lands as empty or as lands populated by non-persons. That allows the government to contract with foreign governments to allow the low-level flying in the Innu areas of Labrador. They consider and treat the Innu people as essentially non-persons, and Innu lands as empty lands for the purpose of resource development.

• (1210)

The same thing is happening in James Bay with the expansion of the James Bay hydroelectric projects. The lands of the James Bay Cree are considered empty lands, populated by non-persons. Therefore, it is possible to expand hydro reservoirs, pouring mercury into those reservoirs which destroys the fisheries that are enjoyed by the James Bay Cree, the Inuit and Naskapi people in that area. It destroys their lands and their livelihoods and does not take their concerns into consideration at all.

I want to express some appreciation to the Government of Ontario for the recent settlement with the Temagami Anishinaabee in northern Ontario where they allowed the Anishinaabee the right to have a veto over timber allocations in certain areas that are of extreme importance to those people, and also to allow them a veto over the right to determine whether or not those trees would be cut. This is the kind of agreement and the kind of consultation process we should be looking for.

Yet the Government of Quebec, in the Barriere Lake wilderness area has refused to allow the Barriere Lake Algonquins to play a similar role in how timber is going to be allocated in that area and how resources are going to be protected, resources those native people need for their sustenance and livelihood. As a result, the Barriere Lake Algonquin people have had to take the Government of Quebec to court. The James Bay Cree are taking the Government of Quebec to court and the Innu people of Labrador are taking the Government of Canada to court. Why should this process go to court? Why should Canada not recognize its native people as important, as belonging to the land and the land belonging to them.

We need to do three things in order to right our relationship with the native people of this country. One, we have to recognize the role they have played in the founding of this country. We have to enshrine their right to self-government in the fundamental constitutional documents of Canada. We cannot wait until everybody else has been recognized. We have to recognize those who were here first, first. That is an important thing that we would have to do in order to right the relationships that we have with native people.

Second, we have to continue the lands claims process. I appreciate what has been done by the government in the Yukon and Northwest Territories with the signing of the comprehensive agreements in that area. One of the economic benefits is that will repatriate capital back into the regions, capital that has been bled out of those regions in the last little while by actions of this government that is totally market-oriented, which seems to strengthen the communities of Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver while bleeding resources and capital from the regions.

The tremendous advantage of land claims settlements is that it recapitalizes those regions in which the wealth of this country is located. It also puts that capital in the hands of people who have had a stake in that area for the last 13,000 years and are going to have a stake in that area, let us hope, for 13,000 years and more into the future. Recapitalizing those areas is a tremendous side advantage to the land claims issue.

Finally, the one that thing we have to do, as the member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested, is to strengthen our human rights legislation. The one problem with our human rights legislation now, whether you are talking about pay equity legislation or about the Canada Human Rights Act, is there is no teeth, there is no enforcement capability within that legislation. As a result, native people do not see the human rights legislation and the employment equity legislation as an opportunity to obtain justice in this country. In fact, in many cases they have to go to human rights authorities in the United Nations or overseas in order to obtain justice in this country.

Those are the three areas: constitutional recognition, land claims solutions, and stronger human rights legislation. If we get action on those, that will deal with the concerns brought up in this House today by the member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions or comments, the hon. parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there were so many things that I take exception to in the comments of the hon. gentleman that I do not know where to begin. One of the things that disappointed me most was he persistently referred to the present tense when he talked about some of the historic injustices that have been done to Canadian natives and aboriginal peoples.

For instance, his characterization of our native communities as non-persons is untrue. His statement that we have marginalized them is unfair. His comments comparing our treatment of Canada's native people to the colonial administration in the Belgian Congo is absolutely ridiculous.

The member spent much time talking about the historic injustices done to Canadian natives, which we agree with, but he spent almost no time whatsoever on all the historic changes that have taken place in recent years. He should have done that just to be fair. When talking about individuals losing the right to vote, he could have mentioned Mr. Diefenbaker's initiatives almost 30 years ago to quite properly enfranchise all native Canadians on reserves in Canada. He could have at least mentioned that.

He could have mentioned the changes that our Prime Minister and this House have undertaken to restore the native status to women who lost that through marriage. I did not hear that. I only heard one sentence toward the end of his 25-minute speech concerning the historic native land claim settlements that have been made. The whole world is looking on those. The member should be giving credit to the present Solicitor General and the new Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and congratulating them by saying: "You have put to rest to a large extent in Canada's northern territories these historic injustices that have been done". But there was only one line on that and then he immediately got into the usual NDP propaganda and condemnation of the free enterprise system. He immediately got into NDP dogma. The hon. member should have spent time on that.

I take exception not only to that, but to his characterization of the brutalization of native children. I will check the "blues" to see exactly what he had to say about Mount Cashel and the difficulties at the Mount Cashel orphanage. That is absolutely ridiculous. A characterization like that does not take into consideration the thousands of very dedicated men and women who sincerely tried to help native Canadians through education, who were not inspired to condemning their beliefs as being satanic, and who were not there to try and inculcate white or European values into them.

As the member was speaking, I thought of my own grand-aunt who spent almost 30 years teaching on a reserve outside of Baddeck, Nova Scotia. She was a very dedicated, responsible individual who was trying to help native Canadians, as many of us are today, and as many people from generations past in Canadian history have tried to help. But his generalizations would lead us to believe that what was taking place was just a complete brutalization of native children and I think that was quite unfair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There was not much of a question. There was a comment, but I will let the hon. member rebut.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I certainly noted a question there. I do not know if the member is denying the history of how this country has treated its native Indian people. On the issue of status, I would suggest that he look at the concerns that are being experienced today.

Up until a case was taken before the United Nations by Canadian native women about their loss of status, Canada essentially argued that they were not going to change the status issue until they changed the Indian Act. They argued that there was a process of consultation going on to change the Indian Act. That process has now collapsed. It collapsed a long time ago.

• (1220)

As a result, the House of Commons passed Bill C–31, over the objections of many native groups that wanted to see a more comprehensive change take place. As a result, some very serious problems have been created on many reserves across Canada. The Minister of State indicated that while the Indian Affairs budget has gone up by 8 per cent, the population of native people in this country is increasing at a far greater rate than virtually every other segment of the population. Therefore, the amount of money going to native Indians on a per capita basis is decreasing.

Sometimes the changes in status that are brought about in this House, without adequate consultation with the native people, have resulted in even more serious problems. What is going to happen on reserves when those people with their newly restored status ask for housing, for the right to education, or for the right to social services on reserves? Canada is not expanding the reserves as much as those reserves are requesting. We have created some serious problems as a result of our efforts to unilaterally reverse the position on status and assign it to what it was before. There has to be a much broader process of consultation.

I do not criticize everyone who has been involved in Indian education over the past years, nor the relatives of my questioner. In fact, many of those people contributed to the changes that took place and to doing away with the residential school system.

I have to point out to the member that when the people of Shuswap in British Columbia took a look at why their teenagers were committing suicide at such a high rate relative to the balance of the population, they took a look at what residential schools had done to the understanding of native families. By taking children away from their families, it destroyed the understanding of what the relationships were between father and son and father and daughter. It affected the understanding of the incest taboo and incest relationships.

It created family and social disintegration, and we are paying the price for that today. Even though the residential schools have been closed down, we are paying the price for those residential schools today and I think that it is worthwhile for us to take a look at exactly what price the native people are paying for that social experiment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I cannot entertain any more questions or comments. The time is flying and more members want to speak on this subject. On debate, the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, before I begin I would like to say that there are many government members who would like to participate in this debate. If it meets with your approval and the approval of the House, I would like to propose that, with the exception of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who will be speaking this afternoon, that all government members would be prepared to share their time equally, each speaking for ten minutes with a five minute question period.

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Will you be 20 minutes or will you be 10 minutes?

Mr. Nicholson: I would begin that process and I would like to share my time with the member for Verdun—Saint Paul.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Agreed. The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Nicholson: I would like to begin by repeating that the government is committed to the principle that all Canadians, without qualification, enjoy the protection of law and the right of fair treatment in all their dealings with the judicial system. Recognizing that these benefits are obtained and maintained only by virtue of the continuing efforts of all the individuals and institutions that comprise the Canadian system of justice and justice administration, the government has and will continue to work to see that that principle is upheld.

The Minister of Justice, under the authority of the Department of Justice Act, has the responsibility for "the superintendence of all matters connected with the administration of justice in Canada, not within the jurisdiction of the governments of the provinces". This mandate extends to criminal matters generally and, as the federal government has constitutional responsibility for "Indians and lands reserved for the Indians", the department, therefore, has a special interest in addressing the justice aspirations and needs of aboriginal peoples.

While many creative and innovative strategies have evolved over the course of time to address aboriginal justice problems, there remains a great deal to accomplish. The federal and provincial ministers responsible for justice have undertaken discussions with a view to better understanding the actions that will be required by each level of government in moving toward the resolution of the aboriginal justice concerns.

The Government of Canada is committed to developing a new relationship with aboriginal peoples. Since 1984, we have responded to aboriginal aspirations with a number of initiatives to increase self-reliance and autonomy. One of the most important, and one that I mentioned just recently, is the settlement of land claims and, of course, the subject of self-government.

The Prime Minister reaffirmed the government's commitment to resume discussions on aboriginal questions at a First Ministers Conference, as soon as there appears to be reasonable prospects for success. Indeed, he has expressed the view that Canada will not be complete until this outstanding historical question is resolved.

After the patriation of the Constitution in 1982, a series of First Ministers Conferences on aboriginal constitutional questions were held, in the words of the Prime Minister, "to make self-government a practical reality for Canada's aboriginal peoples". He envisioned, "a future in which aboriginal peoples assume even greater control over matters which directly affect them". He said as well that, "all Canadians have come to revere equality as fundamental to their birthright. The aboriginal peoples of Canada are entitled to no less". That commitment is ongoing and firm.

In the context of community negotiations with self-government on Indian reserves, negotiations that have been undertaken despite outstanding Constitutional discussions, the administration of justice has been identified as a matter that is open to discussion as one element of aboriginal self-government agreements.

While pursuing the means to meet the aspirations of aboriginal communities, it must, of course, be recognized that native men and women often face particular difficulties in their dealings with the justice system, whether the difficulties are described in terms of denial of justice, over-representation in our correctional facilities, discrimination, or in some other way. The reality of these problems has been drawn to the national attention in recent times, notably as a consequence of public inquiries. These concerns will continue to be brought to the national attention as the reports of the inquiries are released and the outcomes of the special consultations are made public.

There are now three judicial inquiries pertaining to aboriginal justice that have been undertaken in response to the treatment of individuals or more general conditions: The Alberta public enquiry into policing on the Blood Reserve; the recently completed Nova Scotia Royal Commission on the Donald Marshall prosecution; and the Manitoba Public Inquiry into the administration of justice and aboriginal peoples. There have been ongoing investigations supported in other provinces.

In responding to the concerns of aboriginal peoples and to the aspirations of aboriginal communities, the federal government has established a variety of programs. These programs have been developed in recognition of the special status of Indians and the particular needs of aboriginal peoples. The Department of Justice has programs, for instance, that seek to enhance the accessibility of the justice system to aboriginal people and to facilitate greater participation in the legal profession.

In northern Canada and other areas, federal legal aid funding has supported special efforts undertaken to respond to particular legal aid needs of aboriginal people and to involve communities more directly in the management of those services. Specially designed programs of this kind are important in ensuring the generally available services respond to the particular needs of communities whose circumstances are different than those generally found in Canada.

While access to legal services is crucial to ensuring that the rights of individuals and groups are fully recognized, other kinds of activities are important. The Department of Justice, for example, supports two such programs, native court workers and public legal education.

• (1230)

More must be done. I could talk more about initiatives that the Department of Justice and this government are involved with. They are all aimed at ensuring that our aboriginal people receive the kind of equal and fair treatment within the criminal justice system that they and all other Canadians deserve.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest as the parliamentary secretary reviewed the government's actions. I also listened earlier to his outburst at my colleague from the NDP. He said that perhaps we were too hard and did not put this into a historical context.

One of the concerns that we have on this side is that there is a lot of historic inertia in Canada. We turn to this government and ask what it is doing. I listened carefully when the parliamentary secretary read through his notes, and I did not hear what it was doing.

One of the problems in dealing with aboriginal issues is the reality that every day another incident happens and the government remains silent. Today, during the debate, I had a phone call from my constituency office about an aboriginal woman who was mistreated in the largest health facility in Manitoba. The stories repeat day after day.

Does the parliamentary secretary not think that the government has some obligation to recognize this problem, to deal with it honestly and to begin to take more of a promotional position rather than a defensive one in dealing with our aboriginal peoples?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is not taking a defensive position with respect to this. I wish I had had slightly more time. I might not have been as generous to the member for Verdun—Saint Paul had I known that I would not be able to elaborate on the different areas with which the Department of Justice and this government have been involved.

The member should be aware of the native court workers program. This is a program funded by the federal government in which we attempt to involve people who are familiar with the criminal justice system with people who have come into conflict with the law. We want them to feel comfortable. There are cultural differences. There are differences of interpretation. Sometimes the language of the court can be a problem. That particular program is one that I think is very helpful and positive.

As well, with regard to public legal information, there is no question that Canadian natives are over represented in our correctional facilities. One of the things that we are trying to do, as much as possible, not just within the territories but within the provinces across the country as a whole, is to get legal information into the hands of individuals so that they have a better understanding of the criminal justice system.

As well the hon. member should be aware of the legal aid program. It is a fundamental part of our concept of justice in this country that an individual be entitled to legal representation. No one involved in the criminal justice system in this country would be unaware of the fact that very often those who come into conflict with the law are often those who do not have the means to hire a lawyer. Therefore, we help fund legal aid programs in all provinces and in the territories as well. This is a positive and important component of ensuring that native Canadians, and other Canadians as well, receive fair treatment before the courts.

We as well, of course, are monitoring very carefully the judicial and public inquiries that I alluded to briefly. We are very concerned about those. When those inquiries identify areas in which the federal government can be helpful, of course we will look at those very carefully with a view to taking positive actions in this area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Before I recognize the next speaker, the hon. Solicitor General on a point of order.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that at approximately 7 a.m. today the RCMP in Cornwall was advised that Mr. Matthew Pyke was shot and was transported to the Malone, New York, hospital. I have also been informed that at approximately 10.57 a.m., Mr. Pyke succumbed to his injuries. Obviously we are very saddened by this and we regret this incident.

I am informed that the Sureté du Québec is investigating this unfortunate incident, and also that the New York police authorities are investigating this incident as we speak.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I will, by utilizing the means of a point of order as well, confirm to the House that I was informed of this approximately half an hour ago. As soon as I was told of the sad and tragic incident I immediately proceeded to inform the minister so that he could verify those facts prior to rising in the House to state that in fact Mr. Matthew Pyke, who I understand is a 20-year-old man, was killed. I believe that he died as a result of gunshot wounds received on the Mohawk community of Akwesasne.

This is a sad event which goes to show how urgent are the actions of our government, the government of the United States and all parties involved in finding a settlement to this most tragic issue unfolding right here, less than 50 miles from Parliament Hill.

I am going to take another moment or two and I beg your indulgence, Mr. Speaker. It does not seem possible that less than an hour's drive from here people are shooting at each other with machine guns, tossing hand grenades and so on. When we watch on television events such as that going on in lands far away, in Lebanon or elsewhere, we find it difficult to conceive. To think that it is happening right here on our doorstep is nothing short of mind-boggling.

I extend to the family of Mr. Pyke and his friends and relatives, and to the Mohawk community of Akwesasne, my condolences and those of my colleagues.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun—Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the subject before the House today. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Walker) has proposed a topic for debate which seems very appropriate in the present circumstances.

The relationship of aboriginal peoples with our justice system has been the focus of attention for a number of years. Recent studies have shown that all things being equal, aboriginal people are more likely to come into contact with the criminal justice system than the rest of the population.

Under our federal system, justice is an area of shared jurisdiction and its complexities are not always easy to grasp. In addition, the system is largely based on a culture and values that are foreign to the traditional aboriginal culture and values. It operates in an environment that is equally foreign, in languages that are not their own.

We have all at some time or other heard alarming statistics on the involvement of aboriginal people in the criminal justice system. I will not give any figures today. I merely wish to point out that the causes of the problem are complex and deep-seated, and that the justice system alone cannot be held responsible nor can it be expected to provide all the answers. However, some definite improvements are readed to make the system more receptive to the problems and aspirations of our aboriginal fellow citizens. Public inquiries in Nova Scotia, Manitoba and Alberta are examining the way the system treats aboriginal people. The government is taking the requisite steps to improve the way aboriginal people are treated by the system, and it intends to co-operate with them and do everything in its power to enable them to take their rightful place in Canadian society.

The government is aware that the legislation, the programs and the staff that implement them must reflect a better knowledge and understanding of aboriginal people, their customs and their way of life; that it is important that our Canadian laws be understood and observed by all Canadians; and that some of our laws are simply obsolete. It has undertaken a thorough review of federal legislation, and in recent years, a number of bills have been passed in this House to correct this problem.

• (1240)

This process is far from over, and the task that awaits us, as members of this House, is an impressive one. However, legislation alone is not enough. It must be understood and effectively enforced. Our justice system, the way it treats individuals and access to justice itself must be fair, open and dynamic.

To achieve these objectives, the government has decided to examine the needs, concerns and demands of aboriginal people. There have been consultations in various areas. For instance, a recent study looked at aboriginal people in the correctional system. It found that problems caused by the number of aboriginal people in the prison environment are aggravated by the fact that these individuals do not form an homogeneous group and that their needs and characteristics vary, depending on the cultural groups to which they belong and according to their rural or urban origins.

The consultations that took place during the study reflected a lack of understanding on the part of the justice system of aboriginal peoples and their cultures. One of the study's recommendations was to expand the use of elders as consultants in federal penitentiaries. It was found that the role of elders had increased spectacularly during the past ten years and that many of the people consulted were convinced that their involvement could be even more important at a crucial stage in the correctional process. It was recognized that the elder's point of view could provide insights into certain cases and thus simplify decision-making by the National Parole Board. It was also found that recruitement of native workers by the system would help establish better commmunications, since increasing the number of native workers would improve the system's general understanding of and sensitivity to the needs of native inmates.

Another study, this time on policing in the reserves, was ordered to ensure that reserves would have access to appropriate police services, commensured are level and quality with those provided in other communities in the same region. However, the study found that one could not expect the same results in communities where the circumstances were different. Services had to be adapted to the local culture and local needs.

The task force, however, recognized the fact that the federal government was under pressure to expand all major programs for Indians. They must realize that the federal government is less able to do so, for financial reasons, although the budgets have increased considerably in constant dollars in recent years, and that various federal policies to give Indian communities some real control have been developed, especially the policy of negotiating self-government with Indian groups.

Consultations are now in progress on the conclusions and recommendations of this study. The Canadian government favours native self-government and their increased participation in police services. The study concludes that for this purpose, and to better meet the aspirations and special needs of bands, steps should be taken so that Indians can begin to participate more in the major decisions on policing the reserves.

These findings apply to all aspects of the justice system. It is important for us to be as aware as possible of the needs, concerns and requirements of native people and of the obstacles we face. We must listen carefully to our native fellow citizens and understand them. We must work to ensure their representation in all institutions of the justice system at all levels. We must create institutions that can meet their needs.

Some programs are already in place to meet some of the identified needs. Consultations are going on with the native people to improve existing programs and to develop and implement new ones.

I said earlier that drafting legislation is not all; the law must also be understood. The Native Courtworker Program is probably the best-known federal native justice initiative. The services of native courtworkers to help accused natives understand and obtain legal and social services are available to any native charged with violating a federal or provincial law or municipal bylaw, including any young person within the meaning of the Young Offenders Act who is accused or suspected of breaking a federal or provincial law or a municipal bylaw. Eight provinces and territories participate with the federal government in this initiative.

Another program to make it easier to understand the system and the law and to promote access to justice is the funding, together with the provincial and territorial governments, of organizations that provide legal information services to Canadians. These agencies, located in every jurisdiction, can provide the target public with publications and documentation adapted to different communities in the language and at the level of understanding of the intended audience. Some programs offer evening courses for adults or open-line shows on the system and current legislation. For example, the Community Legal Education of Manitoba received financial assistance this year from the Canadian government for the "Feeling Yes, Feeling No" Project, which is intended to make native communities aware of sexual abuse of children and family violence. The purpose of this project is to help residents of rural areas, especially native people and their children, better understand the main points and the principles underlying amendments to the Criminal Code dealing with child sexual abuse.

What I have said so far only skims the surface. The government is determined to play a positive leading role in improving our justice system. In co-operation with the provincial and territorial governments, native leaders and communities and non-governmental organizations, the government has done a lot to identify our roles. The problems are manifold and complex, but there are also many signs that the will to deal with these issues exists more than ever before and that dialogue is open with all concerned. Everyone has shown a desire to take part in it.

The government is determined to continue dealing with these issues and to make major improvements in the field of justice for native people. This is a priority.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments? Resuming debate. The hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I must say that this is not the best time for me to be making a speech. I am sure the whole House would understand why, given the incident I was made aware of not that many moments ago.

Perhaps I should commence my remarks by wishing, praying, that there will be no more loss of life. I say this message not only to the members of this House but to anyone in and around Akwesasne who may be listening to this debate. I pray that cooler heads will prevail and that each and every one will understand that the violence has to come to an end. Needless to say, any further violence will not enhance that prospect.

Having said that, I would like to take a few moments to talk about the community of Akwesasne, to describe it a bit for some of our colleagues so that we can all understand what we are talking about. Perhaps that will assist us as well in understanding why we have some of the problems we have there now.

The Mohawk government paper on aboriginal rights and the Canadian Constitution, prepared for the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs in October 1985, described the community of Akwesasne in the following way:

> It is an understatement to say that Akwesasne is "unique". —We are the only community in North America to straddle two countries, two provinces and one state. Within Akwesasne there are three forms of government consisting of the Tribal Council, the Mohawk Council of Akwesasne and the Traditional Council. Each are very distinctive and serve to form a very dynamic and non-apathetic government system. The leadership of Akwesasne are faced with problems no other similar entity would dream of because of the geographic and jurisdictional boundaries of our community. The government of particularly the Canadian portion of the reserve is complicated by the jurisdictional horrors of inter-provincial politics and federal responsibility. The argument is always whether a question should be deferred to the province of Quebec or Ontario or to the federal government in Canada. Bureaucratic red tape and an antiquated Indian Act serve to inhibit change in the relations between the leaders of Akwesasne and the government of Canada.

• (1250)

Mr. Speaker, that short passage expresses to us some of the difficulties, some of the jurisdictional problems, of the Mohawk community of Akwesasne. Picture yourself for a moment, Mr. Speaker, as a resident of the village of St. Regis. Perhaps your brother or sister lives on another part of the same reserve, call it another part of the same town to use language that you and I are familiar with, and we call that part of town Cornwall Island.

You both get up at nine o'clock in the morning and decide that you are going to go over to the U.S. side of the reserve. A resident of St. Regis just walks across. It takes approximately 30 seconds. As a matter of fact, you may not even realize you are crossing the boundary between the two countries because some of those concrete monuments are missing and weeds and grass are growing around those that remain so you are not too sure where they are. There are no customs agents, immigration officials or anything like that.

Your brother or sister, whom I have fictitiously described, who lives in the other part of the same town, to use our language again, on Cornwall Island, crosses over to the U.S. side of the same reserve. Of course, he or she has to go through customs, is stopped there and perhaps searched, which is quite normal when you are dealing with boundaries. They can then go on their merry way to the American side of the reserve.

Think about it the following way, Mr. Speaker. If you are a resident of Cornwall Island and you want to visit your relative in the village of St. Regis, both of which are on the Canadian side, you have to go through U.S. customs to get to the United States because that is the only way of getting back into Canada on the other portion of the reserve.

One cannot help but scratch his head and ask why these laws are so crazy. I guess you just shrug your shoulders and say: "White man's rule, they do not really make much sense", and you continue doing what you are doing.

If it were that easy, Mr. Speaker, if you could just shrug your shoulders and go on your merry way, perhaps it would all be simple. But that is an example of the frustration people have with a set of rules which are applied totally arbitrarily because, of course, in two communities on the Canadian side on the same reserve they are not applied the same way.

Let us imagine ourselves in the shoes of a person like Grand Chief Mike Mitchell, who is an elected person, like you and I are, Mr. Speaker, doing his best to govern the Canadian side of the reserve. Grand Chief Mike Mitchell or his U.S. counterpart have no choice of whether they are the chief of one side or the other rather than the whole entity. The structure is that way. There is this artificial boundary right down the middle of the village. There is nothing they can do about it.

So there are two jurisdictions at the native level plus, of course, the historic traditions that fall in there as well. Of course, Mr. Mitchell is certainly not a perfect human being. Neither am I, Mr. Speaker, neither are most of us here, but he is there and elected, trying to govern as best he knows how the community of Akwesasne.

For the purpose of this discussion let us imagine there is an argument between an individual and the local police on the Canadian side. What do you do? You have to cross from St. Regis where the police force is to Cornwall Island where this problem is occurring. Of course, in order to do that you have to get the police cruiser on to the American side.

As you know, you cannot bring a gun into the United States legally. So you leave your gun in the police station since you cannot bring it in the car because your car has to go on the American side in order to come back to Canada to administer the police work.

Once you get back into Canada on Cornwall Island you are a policeman without a gun. That is fine if the other person does not have a gun either, I suppose, but what if he or she does? Then you are not equipped to handle the situation.

The same occurs, of course, if the residents of Snye on the Quebec portion of the reserve need services offered by the police force. The same potential situation occurs in the area of ambulances and all kinds of other services because of artificial boundaries placed there by our ancestors which fall right in the middle of that community.

The ancestors of the proud residents of Akwesasne have been living there for a very, very long time and it is a shame that we are unable to provide the mechanisms necessary to at least make Akwesasne a little bit easier to govern. Even if we are able to make the place a little bit easier to govern, that perhaps would not solve all the problems that we have there now.

In addition to the inter-jurisdictional difficulties that I have described, we also have to deal with those people who seize such opportunities as they see fit to establish places that they deem are appropriate to serve their own interests. I refer here to the establishment of casinos, bingo halls and so on. I understand that there are approximately half a dozen of them.

It should be remembered by us all that at Akwesasne all of those facilities, at least all the ones that I know of, are located on the U.S. side of the reserve. In a strange coincidence the U.S. side of the reserve has no police force at the present time. It was disbanded some time ago. My colleague from Stormont—Dundas is sitting beside me here. He lives only a few miles from Akwesasne and he will know, of course, that the American side of the reserve has no such thing, as we speak today, as a police force. There is no one on the American side who administers any kind of policing, save and except perhaps the so-called warrior society which has decided on its own that this is what it should be doing. On the Canadian side, of course, there are the police forces that I was describing awhile ago.

So when you have that situation of one-half of the reserve with almost total anarchy, it is fertile ground for the lawlessness that I was talking about before. So it is not a coincidence that that is where the casinos, the gambling halls and bingo halls and all those other things are located. It is not a coincidence either that they have not established themselves on the Canadian side where there exists Grand Chief Mitchell, his council, and all the other things that are there.

Now we have roughly the following situation. The residents of Akwesasne see those casinos. They see, of course—and I have to say it—the undesirable elements that sometimes seem to surround those establishments, and they decide that they want no part of this. That is understandable. I live in a small village. It is not, of course, a native village, but I would not want those casinos in my own village, which has its own unique little character.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I will draw your attention to the clock and continue immediately after Question Period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member will have seven minutes plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[Translation]

BILL C-21

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to rise in the House today and ask my colleagues in the other place to pass Bill C-21 without further delay.

We have a responsibility to improve our training and labour force adjustment programs, and that is what Bill C-21 is supposed to do.

The total cost of the amendments proposed by the Liberal senators is nearly $1.7 billion annually. We don't have that kind of money!

Mr. Speaker, how long will it take the Senate to release the funds that will enable all Canadians to have access to better training and better jobs?

* * *

[English]

PENSION REFORM

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, today, the board of directors of the federal Superannuates National Association is meeting in Ottawa to discuss pension reform. They are very concerned, so concerned in fact that today they are sending a telegram to the Prime Minister to ask him to finally bring legislation into the House to deal with this matter.

In 1986, the government introduced legislation to reform federal pensions, recognizing the need for pension reform. That legislation died when the 1988 election was called.

Since then, the President of the Treasury Board has declared on numerous occasions that he intends to introduce new superannuation reform legislation. To date, no such legislation has been introduced.

Federal superannuation funds are growing at a rate of approximately $5 billion per year. There is plenty of money for pension reform. There is plenty of need for pension reform. All that is lacking is the political will of this federal government and a commitment to pensioners across the country.

* * *

HARBOURS

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday evening in my riding part of the wharf at Stanley Bridge collapsed.

It collapsed because of a lack of funding from this government for wharf and harbour maintenance. Fortunately, no one was hurt.

It is the responsibility of this government to ensure that wharves and harbours do not reach life-threatening conditions.

I have toured the wharves and harbours in my riding, and I know that there are many places where poor wharf conditions demand the attention of this government. My colleagues and I have been asking for financial assistance since we were elected in 1988.

I urge the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to come to my province, to visit the harbours and witness the terrible wharf conditions fishermen must face.

This government must plan ahead and make wharf repair a priority. The fishermen of Prince Edward Island deserve safe facilities. The situation in Stanley Bridge needs immediate action.

* * *

NATIONAL MOTORCYCLE AWARENESS MONTH

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that the month of May has been designated as National Motorcycle Awareness Month by the Canada Safety Council.

The Hon. Doug Lewis, Minister of Transport, has endorsed this worthy, new safety endeavour which is aimed at reducing road accidents, injuries and deaths during the summer months.

The theme of the safety campaign "Roads are for Sharing" aims at fostering a strong, positive attitude among all road users to abide by the rules of the road.

Safety is a shared responsibility. Motorcyclists must drive responsibly and follow the rules of the road. Motorists need to be extra vigilant for motorcyclists and bicyclists who are sharing the road with them.

I particularly wish to acknowledge the Canada Safety Council's efforts in educating parents of young children about the importance of bicycle helmets. We must not forget that head injuries are by far the leading cause of traffic fatalities involving cyclists.

I invite all members of this House to support this latest road safety initiative.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, Canadians realize the hypocrisy of this government and the Governor of the Bank of Canada when they insist that Canadians restrain wage increases to control inflation, while at the same time they keep interest rates high and continue to raise taxes, and while employees of the Prime Minister's office and the Bank of Canada have received wage increases estimated by some at up to 20 per cent on an annual basis.

Nepean's Margaret Knight, a 35-hour weekly volunteer co-ordinator of a food shelter, serves breakfast and lunch daily to hundreds of women and children. Due to this government's cut-backs to the Canada Assistance Plan, the agency will face severe financial restrictions. The double standards of this government are becoming ever more frustrating.

In Ontario alone, CAP, which was instituted in 1966 to provide basic necessities to those in need, will see a revenue shortfall of approximately $90 million.

Are we really seeing the demise of a caring society as we have known it?

Canadians will not continue to be fooled by these drastic measures.

* * *

SKILLS CANADA

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to congratulate the winners of the first provincial competition of Skills Canada that took place April 21 in Hamilton.

Skills Canada is part of the Skills Initiative Program. Last year, Canadian students attended the competition in the United States as observers and guests. This year, 40 Ontario winners will compete with 7,000 other participants in the United States Skills Olympics to be held in Tulsa, Oklahoma in June.

It will be the first time Canada has been represented in this North American event.

The competitive categories cover a wide range of expertise. Here are a few examples: air-cooled gasoline engine repairs, architectural drafting, carpentry, woodworking, cosmetology, culinary arts, and the list goes on.

I congratulate them all on a job well done and wish them the best of luck in the upcoming event.

These are the varied sorts of skills training that stand to gain by the passage of Bill C-21. I would encourage all members to seriously consider what is at stake by obstructing the passage of Bill C-21.

* * *

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, yet another incident has called this government's low-level flying program into question. A British Tornado aircraft crashed yesterday near the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay. The aircraft was reportedly flying 10 to 20 miles outside the designated zone.

Why was the aircraft there?

This incident certainly casts even more doubt on the DND's claim that the Innu will not be over-flown if they simply tell the defence department where they will be.

What about safety? Tornado aircraft crash a lot in Britain, so you would think that our government would have assessed the risk of continuing to allow them to fly in Canadian airspace.

I again ask the government to stop low-level flights all together. This crash is another example of how these flights are not only a violation of Innu sovereignty and an impediment to peace, but they are also unnecessarily dangerous for people and the environment.

* * *

[Translation]

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, languages should unite people, not divide them.

The Meech Lake Accord is more than a question of language and culture: it is the gathering together of all the people of a great and diverse country, and it means accepting others in a spirit of generosity and tolerance.

Meech Lake also means uniting the strengths of ten provinces.

Meech Lake means understanding and accepting that Quebec is the wellspring of French Canada.

No province will be diminished by accepting the facts as they are. Should Canadians turn their backs and say no to part of their daily reality?

Quebec has been distinct for a century, Mr. Speaker. Why should it no longer be distinct in 1990?

I am a francophone, the member for Beauce in Quebec, and I belong to that great Canada my parents used to describe as a generous and tolerant country.

I say to the leaders of Manitoba and Newfoundland that wisdom lies in accepting the fact that one's neighbours may be different. This fact does not prevent the economy of your province from expanding or your people from participating in this vast country of ours, where anglophones, francophones and allophones accept and respect each other.

* * *

[English]

CHILD CARE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, during the 1984 election campaign the Prime Minister referred to the nation's child care crisis as an "urgent problem" and claimed "urgency here is of paramount concern".

That was over six years ago.

Just recently we heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare promise once again that by 1993 Canada will have a national child care strategy in place.

Canadians are tired of this old promise. By 1993—nine years after the 1984 election campaign promise—does the Minister of National Health and Welfare not realize that some of the kids who needed child care back in 1984 could possibly be driving their parents to the polls?

As usual, the minister's announcement lacks details on finances, quality, availability, accessibility and affordable child care for Canadian families.

There is a quote that describes what it is like for Canadians to have to deal with this kind of government.

> We the willing—led by the unknowing—are doing the impossible for the ungrateful. We have done so much for so long—with so little—we are now qualified to do anything with nothing.

* * *

• (1410)

LABOUR FORCE DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, roughly one month ago the task force reports of the Canadian Labour Market and Productivity Centre on the government's Labour Force Development Strategy was released.

In its entirety, the study asserts that Canada requires a new attitude and approach to labour force training so that our workforce can better meet the evolving demands posed by structural demographic and technological change.

Of particular interest and importance is the task force reports on human resource planning. Both the labour and business report press the need and requirement for basic skills training in literacy and numeracy.

These skills should be promoted on a universal basis since they form the foundation upon which higher development skills and retraining can be based.

I trust that our government will heed this advice and devote additional resources to basic skills training. The funds envisaged in Bill C-21, the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, could be instrumental in this regard. I urge our friends in the Senate to play a more constructive role in our pursuit of an effective national training effort.

* * *

[Translation]

TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Mr. Speaker, the present system of tax benefits for northern and isolated areas is unfair. Some communities qualify, while others right next door do not. There is not a single community in the riding of Restigouche—Chaleur that qualifies for these benefits. Northern Canadians and residents of isolated areas rejected the recommendations of the Task Force on Tax Benefits.

[English]

The people of my riding are entitled to this tax benefit since they have to incur the extra costs of living in an isolated area, which include travelling long distances to obtain specialized health care, post-secondary education and many other goods and services.

[Translation]

The federal government must introduce a new system that will give remote communities like those in Northern New Brunswick the same tax benefits that are available to residents of similar communities.

* * *

[English]

LABOUR

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, May 1 is a day often associated with the labour movement throughout the world.

Organized workers in Canada enjoy a standard of living excelled by few of their counterparts in other countries of the world. Collective bargaining rights in Canada are among the strongest in the world, and so they should be.

Canada is a strong, democratic country currently enjoying the dynamic leadership of a Prime Minister and government with the courage and the integrity to lead, and the ability to prepare this country for the 21st century.

The labour movement has an important role to play in preparing Canada for its place in the competitive world of the next century. I encourage all labour leaders to work with our government in its effort to ensure a prosperous future for all Canadians.

INTEREST RATES

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, interest rates are continuing to rise—21 times since this government was elected.

Not since the dying days of the previous Liberal government have interest rates been so high and so harmful to Canadians.

It is time this government recognized the harm that high interest rates are doing to farmers. Commodity prices remain too low to meet the cost of production. Farm debt has escalated beyond the $22 billion mark. In Saskatchewan, 1,000 farm families each year are leaving the land.

High interest rates are contributing to increased farm bankruptcies, foreclosures and forced sales. It is time for this to stop.

Governments can control and manage the levels and effects of interest rates. Canadian farm families should expect no less from their federal government.

I call on the government today to take the necessary steps to reduce interest rates so that Canadian farmers can begin to get control of their farm finances.

* * *

MENTAL HEALTH WEEK

Mr. John E. Cole (York—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to remind members of the House and the general public that this is Mental Health Week.

For the past 30 years the Canadian Mental Health Association has co-ordinated events to raise national public awareness aimed at reducing the stigma of mental illness and at encouraging community acceptance of those in need of mental health services.

The Department of National Health and Welfare is pleased to collaborate with the CMHA in this worthwhile event to draw attention to the importance of mental health issues.

This year's slogan for Mental Health Week is "Working Together for Mental Health". All Canadians are invited to give their full support to the Mental Health Week events that the local branches of the CMHA have planned in their communities.

PEACEKEEPING

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, Canada is involved in five peacekeeping operations around the world, including increasing its commitment to the UN forces in Central America and may become an important participant in a possible UN operation in Cambodia.

The demands for UN peacekeeping and Canada's participation will likely increase further given the upsurge in ethnic tensions in the developed and developing world, increasing disputes over ocean sovereignty and mounting trans-border environmental dangers.

The federal government has through budget cut-backs eliminated the acquisition of new communications equipment and new light observation helicopters, both important aspects of Canadian peacekeeping.

For example, Canadian peacekeepers face situations wherein they can barely supply cold weather gear for themselves, let alone to other participants involved in cold weather peacekeeping operations.

It is not enough that the government engage in internal reviews to reassess the new demands upon Canadian defence and foreign policy. We must allow the public to have input in these reassessments and be willing to provide the necessary financial support to ensure that its present and future commitments do not ring hollow.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, in response to my questions about the contraction of the Canadian economy in January and February, the minister said by way of reply:

> —I acknowledged in my last budget that we expected to have a slowdown in the economy this year. We expected that in the first half of this year. So there are no surprises here.

In his budget the minister also predicted that interest rates would average only 11.1 per cent this year.

I ask the minister this. How is he going to achieve this 11.1 per cent interest rate target when interest rates in Canada have already gone above the 13.8 per cent level? Is it not time for him to admit that his interest rate projections in his budget are now totally obsolete?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think if the Leader of the Opposition would notice the calendar he would see that we are one month into the fiscal year. We have 11 months to go before we have to review what the total impact of interest rates are.

Certainly, interest rates are high, and we are reviewing this on a regular basis. But let us not jump to conclusions too quickly before we see how things develop further.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, everybody else in this country has already reached the conclusion that interest rates should start coming down. For example, yesterday, Adam Zimmerman, President of Noranda Forests, speaking on behalf of the Business Council on National Issues, usually a strong supporter of this government's economic policy, said: "The BCNI's thinking is that high interest rates have gone too far, and it's time to bring them down."

The voice of the Business Council on National Issues has been added to the voices of major business organizations like the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Real Estate Association.

Why will the minister not listen to these major business organizations and agree that interest rates have already gone too far, that it is time to bring them down, and therefore start bringing them down today?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to what Mr. Zimmerman and other leading commentators in the business community have to say about these matters. Their views are important, obviously. They employ a lot of people.

I think what Mr. Zimmerman is pointing out is that there is a difference between the experiences that they are having in the goods sector—the manufacturing and resource sectors of the economy, which are very clearly feeling the effects of the monetary policy that we have been following—as compared to the service sector, or other levels of government, which are not responding in the normal ways to the interest rate policy that we have been following and are keeping their prices and wage settlements up to reasonably high levels.

It is that distinction, that difference between the goods sector on the one hand and the service sector on the other hand, which makes it particularly difficult to deal with at this point in time.

• (1420)

[Translation]

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there is only one interest rate in this country. The minister forgets we don't have a range of interest rates. We have only one, and Mr. Zimmerman and his colleagues have asked for an immediate reduction in this interest rate. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, Doug Peters, chief economist for the Toronto-Dominion Bank, commented on the policy of the Minister of Finance, saying that:

> The economy was idling, that after the brakes had been applied for two consecutive months, the machine had finally stopped.

I want to ask the minister why the government maintains a policy whose purpose is to stop the economic machinery completely. Why does the Minister of Finance want to drive the Canadian economy into a deep recession?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me correct a couple of things that the Leader of the Opposition said.

First, this policy is not designed, to use his words, to stop the economic machinery completely.

Second, it is not designed, again to use his words, to drive the economy into a deep recession.

What I have said on many occasions in the past is that we are trying to avoid that recession by slowing down the level of activity in the economy so that we can reduce and eliminate the inflationary pressures that are there. We are seeing some signs of inflationary pressures easing, using some measurements, but in using other measurements they are not easing. That is the problem that I referred to in my second answer to him.

If we are able to take these inflationary pressures out of the economy, then we can look forward with confidence to many more years of non-inflationary sustainable growth. That is the objective of this government.

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who just referred to the fact that it is early in the year and that the Leader of the Opposition in referring to the high interest rates should wait for awhile.

Why does the minister believe that Canadians should have confidence in his projections as they relate to the interest rate that he predicted would be at 11.1 per cent when last year in his budget he predicted that by the end of the year the average interest rate would be at 10 per cent? Why would he be right this year when he was so wrong last year?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me draw to my friend's attention the fact that the one-year deficit projection of this government in the five years that we have projected the deficit has been out an aggregate of something in the order of $2.5 billion. The previous five years under Liberal projection it was $26.5 billion. That is a factor of 10 to 1.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Surely, that should give Canadians a much better degree of confidence in our ability to project than was the case in previous years.

[Translation]

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Finance is quite simple. What we want to know is based on the projections in his Budget. Does he still maintain that his projections on the deficit, which was supposed to be $28 billion, will be borne out, and will the average interest rate for the current year still be 11.1 per cent? Does he maintain his position, as stated in the Budget, with respect to interest rates and the Canadian deficit?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I was pointing out in my first response to my hon. friend is that we on this side of the House do manage to keep to our projections. We have worked hard to manage through our projections in each year.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fontana: How about your promises?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I hear some catcalls from the other side. I do not think that those catcallers heard that the total deviation from our budget deficit projections is $2.5 billion—one-tenth the deviation under the Liberals in the previous five years.

I pointed out that we are one month into the fiscal year. There are things that will put upward pressure on the deficit, and that is what higher interest rates will do. But, also, the higher level of inflation increases revenues. So it is not all one way.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General.

As he will know, a 22-year old Mohawk resident of the Akwesasne reserve was fatally shot today, following what was described as a nine-hour gun battle. This is a situation which has been developing for many months, even many years.

I am informed that a week ago, the three councils from the reserve came to the federal government—in fact, they met with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—and specifically asked for the RCMP to intervene, to bring law and order to the reserve.

My question to the Solicitor General is this. Will the RCMP now intervene? What steps will the government take to deal with this tragic situation?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, ministers of the government and all members of this House are indeed saddened to learn of the tragic escalation of violence which occurred overnight at the Akwesasne Mohawk Reserve.

We extend our sympathies and those of all Canadians to the families and friends of the young Mohawk man who has lost his life as a result of the senseless violence that continues at Akwesasne.

Earlier this morning we were informed by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who learned from the Sûreté du Québec, that 22-year old Matthew Pyke died at 10.57 a.m. in hospital in New York State of gunshot wounds. Mr. Pyke, a resident of Hogansburg, New York, was shot at Snye, Quebec.

My colleagues and I are dismayed that the situation has deteriorated to this point. One death is one death too many. We have and will continue to strive to find a peaceful solution to this very serious and difficult problem.

As the hon. member and other members know, we were visited by the elected leadership, the traditional leadership, of the Mohawk communities last Wednesday, not a month ago as the member indicates, and have sought working with officials of various federal departments, officials of the two provincial governments of Ontario and Quebec, the State of New York and the United States government, to find a peaceful solution to this problem. Those efforts are continuing at an escalated pace today.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, in no way do I mean to diminish my respect for the government's concern for the death in this case. I must say that it is simply not enough to hear that the government is continuing discussions.

I ask the Solicitor General who is responsible for the RCMP if will he accede to the request that was made a week ago, as the minister has just confirmed in the House, that the RCMP move on to the reserve and establish law and order so that Canadian citizens on the reserve can be protected?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): As the hon. member would know, policing in Canada is firstly a matter of provincial jurisdiction.

Contacts were made with the Attorney General for Ontario and Solicitors General last week. They have taken actions to effect the patrols and disarmament, where possible, of those carrying arms on the Canadian side.

The member knows that the problem arises from a pro-gambling faction based in New York state.

Any activity to intervene from outside the Mohawk nation requires the full consent and co-operation of several law enforcement agencies, the state and the provincial governments, as well as the two national governments.

That kind of co-ordinated approach is being discussed at the highest level, with a view to seeking a peaceful solution to this very, very serious situation.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): It should be evident that the time for a peaceful solution has tragically passed.

First, the Minister of Indian Affairs has not indicated whether he ever spoke to the Solicitor General about this. My question again is to the Solicitor General.

Did he receive the request from the native groups involved?

Very particularly, did the Solicitor General, on behalf of the RCMP, seek the authority from the Ontario Provincial Police, the Quebec Police and the Americans to come on to that reserve?

He had the authority of the native people involved and of the leadership on that reserve. Did he seek the authority a week ago, before this tragedy happened?

• (1430)

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as has been indicated by my colleague, we have here a situation that involves various jurisdictions, beginning with American and Canadian, and provincial jurisdictions with respect to where the reserve is situated on the Canadian side.

With that comes policing jurisdiction and I can assure the House and my hon. colleague in particular that we have been co-ordinating policing efforts since the situation started and particularly since we were asked last week to intervene. There have been discussions between the Attorneys General and the Solicitors General from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec and between my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs, and myself.

It is a co-ordinated effort, and as was indicated this morning by my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, it has to be a co-ordinated effort involving also New York state before any physical intervention can occur. We have been co-ordinating this. We will continue to do so. We will act according to the circumstances.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could preamble my question by expressing on behalf of my colleagues and I, our sympathy and regret to the family of Mr. Matthew Pyke who so tragically passed away in this most unfortunate event, which hopefully will end very soon, namely the violence at Akwesasne.

My question is for the Solicitor General. I agree with him that the approaches that have to be taken in order to have a physical intervention at Akwesasne have to be taken together on both sides of the international border. Otherwise, let's face it, nothing at all is going to happen because the arms will simply move from one side of the border to the other.

Can he report to us now what progress has been achieved this morning in the meeting he and presumably others in his department have had with the Americans in regard to restoring law and order at Akwesasne, more particularly to disarm the community of Akwesasne?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has indicated there has been a continuing co-ordination of police forces in this matter. Yesterday morning five police forces, including the state, two provincial, and the national police forces, met and agreed that a co-ordinated effort is required to deal effectively with the violence in the Akwesasne community.

As well, the Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote to Mr. James Baker last Friday and there has been high level interventions at the state department. I understand that Canada's ambassador in Washington is again approaching the State Department with a strong message of concern this afternoon.

It is our desire to see the state of New York co-operate and assist in dealing with the elements on the New York state side which appear to be provoking this incident. To this point we are not satisfied that the state of New York is responding adequately.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a supplementary question to the same minister. It was only yesterday that Governor Mario Cuomo of New York finally admitted that there was a problem which necessitated an outside intervention. We all know that before that he was claiming that this was an internal matter to be settled by Mohawks. I am sure the minister will agree that that kind of action was totally inappropriate up to that point.

Can he tell us if he still believes that Governor Mario Cuomo takes the position that it is all right to have those gambling casinos on the U.S. side? I believe, and I believe the people of Akwesasne believe, that the first element to a solution is to close down those casinos, leave them closed, disarm the community and then worry about those other things afterwards.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member would agree that this is not the place to engage in a debate with Governor Cuomo, but it is in fact the case that in order to effect a peaceful solution of this serious and tragic occurrence the democratically elected leadership of the Mohawk nation in all of its parts, which represents the majority of the Mohawk people, must be respected. A way must be found through some form of diplomatic or mediated process to have the majority wishes of the Mohawk people respected.

* * *

CANADA CUSTOMS

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The staff of the Canada Customs office presently located in Cornwall are scheduled to be moved to Cornwall Island on the Akwesasne reserve on May 11.

Given the tragic event of earlier today would the minister accept my suggestion to postpone this move indefinitely?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, when conflict on the island began to escalate some time ago I immediately gave instructions to my officials to postpone any movement of additional staff to Cornwall Island.

May I point out as well, as I told his colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell last Friday, that we also entered into an agreement some months ago with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Ontario Provincial Police to protect customs facilities and officers and the travelling public on Cornwall Island.

We have further improved the facility from a standpoint of additional security, including the expansion and improvement of the building. I can assure the hon. member that as far as the customs officers and the travelling public is concerned, every step has been taken to protect them from any potential danger.

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the same minister. I wonder if he would commit today, to the House, a full review of the appropriateness moving any officials to the new location on Cornwall Island?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have just confirmed to this House that I have put a stop to any potential move of additional personnel to Cornwall Island until the situation on the island stabilizes.

The request at the beginning, prior to any concerns affecting anyone on the island, was to try to utilize expanded facilities and provide a greater service for the travelling public. While these conflicts continue to take place or even potentially exist on Cornwall Island, no movement of additional personnel is going to take place.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Canadian economy at this stage is already suffering serious problems. Yet yesterday, our ambassador to the United States made a public speech to U.S. businessmen and others, talking about threats to our unity and internal division here in Canada. This sort of alarmist talk in Washington hurts us economically.

Could he tell the House if this speech by Mr. Burney was fully discussed with the government and if not, why it was not discussed.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the speech by Ambassador Burney, what appeared to include a question and answer session, appeared to deal with some questions that had been raised in Washington a few days ago by Mr. Jacques Parizeau, the leader of the Parti Quebecois, who visited Washington and who proceeded to deliver himself of some views about how casual and how harmless the breakup of Canada might be.

Ambassador Burney proceeded yesterday to disabuse Americans and I hope, a few Canadians, of those notions and indicated that indeed if there were serious consequences in Canada they would manifest themselves in most unattractive and unhelpful ways. Ambassador Burney made a very strong and I thought persuasive statement in favour of the strength and the unity of this nation and that is what he is in Washington to do.

• (1440)

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

I have here not elements from a question and answer session, but notes for an address from Mr. Burney sent from the Embassy in the United States. We are not talking about something casual and off the top of his head.

I want to ask the Prime Minister if we are, as a country, simply some sort of banana republic that is supposed to talk about our constitutional issues in Washington.

[Translation]

Does the Prime Minister think it makes good sense to wash our dirty linen in Washington? Does that make sense, according to the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had no idea Ambassador Burney's speech would offend the sensibilities of the hon. member. President Bush was here a few weeks ago, and when asked what he thought of the debate on the Meech Lake Accord, he said he did not want to intervene in a domestic debate. However, if you want to know my opinion and that of my government, we are in favour of a united and prosperous Canada. That has been the strength of this nation for 125 years. I hope the hon. member has no objection to that.

I did not see the text of the Canadian ambassador's speech before he made it, but I trust him. He is old enough to know how to behave, and he is doing a very effective job in Washington. If, either in answer to a question or directly, he touched on any matter concerning the strength and unity of this nation, he was right to do so. Does the hon. member believe that when faced with this kind of situation, our ambassador should be less than forthright and tell the Americans that nothing is happening in Canada and, in any case, it is none of their business? Citizens of a the country with whom we trade goods for a total of $200 billion annually, as neighbours and allies have every right to put questions to our ambassador. We send an ambassador to Washington to answer all legitimate questions, not to become evasive when the going gets rough.

* * *

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the acting minister for employment.

Yesterday, the Valmet-Dominion Company announced the lay-off of 200 industrial workers at its plant in Montreal, and on the weekend, Pascals Hardware announced the lay-off another 180 workers in that city. This makes a total of over 9,000 lay-offs announced in Montreal during the past year, including VIA Rail, Vickers, Simpsons, General Electric, Gillette, Marconi, Cattelli and many others.

When is the government going to take the situation seriously and put forward a comprehensive program to re-establish the economy and employment in Montreal? When are we going to get some action and less words?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, we are aware that workers in Montreal and elsewhere in Canada are going through difficult times. That is why, as a responsible government, last April we tabled a labour force strategy with a policy for unemployment insurance reform, as a tool for this government to develop new policies and enhance our ability to compete in a globalized market. We say that this reform will help workers make up losses they would otherwise have incurred.

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, we have had nothing but band-aid solutions by the government.

In a report published last month, in April, by the regroupement des départements de santé communautaire du Montréal, it was stated that one out of four Montrealers now live in poverty. In 23 neighbourhoods of Montreal, the unemployment rate is over 15 per cent.

The fact that some of these people are working does not address the problem, because there are too many low paying, part time jobs and a lot of working poor. When is the government going to do something about this serious situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce is not telling the whole truth. He is telling his version.

The federal government has done a lot in the Montreal area. For example, he should consider the investments, particularly in the eastern part of Montreal, which he no longer talks about since the government has taken some worthwhile initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that the federal government has done its job. General Motors confirmed just last week that it was awarding the F series of cars, the Firebirds, to Montreal.

I personally went to Camco in eastern Montreal yesterday, Mr. Speaker, to confirm the maintaining of 700 jobs with the workers, who were extremely satisfied. Again, I think that when you talk about Montreal, you can give your version of the facts, but someone must tell the truth about Montreal.

* * *

LOBSTER INDUSTRY

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries.

The lobster crisis is worsening. Quebec fishermen are refusing to go out and fishermen from the Acadian peninsula will stay in port tomorrow. At $1.25 a pound, lobster does not pay enough to cover expenses.

The minister said in Caraquet last Sunday that he would consult with the interested parties. However, the government had been warned last September by all those concerned in the lobster industry.

So my question is quite simply this: Why did the minister drag his feet so much that he is still only at the consulting stage? How come he has no solution to offer these fishermen?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is easy for a Liberal member to get up and blame everyone for the prevailing conditions in the lobster market. Two months ago, I spoke with the fisheries ministers of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, for example, and at the time, I believe there was $17 million worth of lobster from last year in stock.

Inventories, I believe, still amount to about 20 per cent of 1989 production today. This is due to market conditions.

Now, I met the lobster fishermen on Sunday and I received a proposal from them that I intend to discuss with my provincial colleagues whom I am to meet next week.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same minister. Lobster fishermen and the whole industry are in this predicament precisely because the government has failed to protect them.

As a matter of fact, I understand that the Minister of Fisheries and the Prime Minister will meet with workers and fishermen tomorrow at Inkerman in the Acadian peninsula.

Will the minister and the Prime Minister take this opportunity to unveil a support program for that industry which the Prime Minister himself had promised to protect, something he has yet to do?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Sure enough, Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will be in the Acadian peninsula and we will take that opportunity to urge the people to tell the bunch of unelected senators to pass the unemployment insurance reform legislation so that we will be in a position to launch the programs which the Atlantic region needs to make sure that there are opportunities other than unemployment insurance benefits.

The hon. member never misses a chance to rise in the House on behalf of various causes, Mr. Speaker, but I am still waiting for a suggestion from the Liberal Party as to how the federal government might go about settling the issue of lobster prices on international markets.

Oral Questions

RIDING OF LAURIER—SAINTE-MARIE

Mr. Phillip Edmonston (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Five and a half months have now passed since the death of our colleague Jean-Claude Malépart. Members of all parties in this House have pointed out that Mr. Malépart was a great defender of Quebecers' interests.

The people of Laurier—Sainte-Marie have been without representation for five and a half months. My question for the Prime Minister is this: When will he give us and the people of Laurier—Sainte-Marie a precise date for the election of their representative? Is he afraid to see a Jean Chrétien or a second member of the NDP get elected in Quebec?

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, the government must follow a specific timetable in calling a by-election in Laurier—Sainte-Marie—

Mr. Prud'homme: And in Oshawa.

Mr. Mulroney: —and in Oshawa. It will be interesting to see the reaction of Oshawa people because the hon. member of the NDP has asked for a by-election in a Liberal riding but forgot to mention a Socialist riding.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

• (1450)

Mr. Phillip Edmonston (Chambly): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

First, I can tell you that I have not forgotten Oshawa, and I can tell you that the NDP is quite prepared in both ridings. There is no problem there.

Mr. Saint-Julien: Tell us about PCBs!

Mr. Edmonston: I am getting to my supplementary question. The unemployment level for the people of Laurier—Sainte-Marie is nearly 20 per cent. They have already been hit hard by free trade and they are being hit hard by the economic situation for which the federal government is responsible. If the people of Laurier—Sainte-Marie do not have a representative soon, could they at least have specific programs to help them?

Mr. Saint-Julien: Ask the senators that!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have the feeling that very shortly I will be able to set a date for a by-election or by-elections. If you feel at ease in Oshawa— Are you ready for Oshawa?

[English]

When I hear Simon de Jong say, "It's time to go", it's time to go.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

* * *

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Harry Chadwick (Brampton—Malton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I was most encouraged last year when the Department of Transport announced short and long-term initiatives intended to improve conditions at Pearson International Airport.

At that time we were informed that fines levied against airlines which violate flight path and flight time restrictions would be raised to $10,000. Could the minister tell the House when this important initiative will be implemented.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my hon. friend's continued interest in Pearson International Airport. In fact, we did announce that initiative last fall. In March we took additional steps vis-à-vis departure paths and changes to take-off and climbing procedures. The amendments which my hon. friend refers to will benefit the residents of Mississauga, Brampton and Etobicoke. They are presently in the drafting stage and I would hope to have them in the House very soon.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Employment and Immigration.

Many young people in my riding make every effort to acquire the skills and training they need to get properly launched in the labour market. Everyone here will know how great a challenge that can be. Governments can and do help with this but these kids need more help. Can the minister tell us what more the government is willing to provide?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, in our jobs strategy, we have programs especially for young workers. I am thinking, for example, of co-operative programs, of occupational training programs. These help young people find and, more important, keep a job.

What we as a government want to do to improve this situation, because there is room for improvement—we presented a new labour force strategy and a reform of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Using these additional funds, we can make the progress required to ensure that young people can find work and obtain the necessary training.

* * *

[English]

TRADE

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade, or in his absence the acting minister. A major portion of the jobs in the town of Kinsville have been lost, 429 workers are unemployed. They are unemployed because an auto parts manufacturer has decided to use the free trade agreement and relocate operations in the U.S. and Mexico. Sheller-Globe has effectively closed the Kinsville plant, opting for $5.75 an hour labour in Indiana, and $1.50 labour in Mexico.

Does the minister continue to support this deal that is driving industries out of Canada and encouraging companies to move to the U.S. and Mexico, costing constituents in my area jobs?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, we certainly do support the trade agreement. When you look at southern Ontario, we have had a major announcement made in Windsor, for example, of an aerospace company. We have had Freightliner of St. Thomas just announce over 1,200 jobs in St. Thomas alone, and at the end of the week we are going to be at a very important announcement by Cani in Woodstock where they are opening a new line and hiring hundreds of new employees.

The free trade agreement is great for southern Ontario. I wish the hon. member knew that.

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same minister. Just to point out the facts of free trade in our area, I mention the job closing today. Wayne Bus Manufacturing Company, located in Windsor, also has announced that as of June 15, 1990, 145 workers will lose their jobs.

The company has already moved half of its production to Richmond, Indiana. The company will open a Canadian sales office in the future. Within eight years the free trade agreement will allow all of this equipment to come across duty free.

How can the minister still support this agreement that is daily costing Canadians jobs?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I can support the agreement because 264,000 jobs have been created across Canada since the agreement has been put in place.

Mr. Hockin: I want to say to my hon. friend I represent the same constituency as the premier of Ontario. I received the other day through the mail a very interesting magazine Business Week, published in the United States, with a 12-page insert from the province of Ontario in which the premier of Ontario boasts about the dynamic economy of Ontario and how the free trade agreement is assisting it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for London East, a single question.

* * *

HOUSING

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, maybe the hon. member for London West should come back to his own community and see what is happening in London, Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. With the interest rates now hovering over 14 per cent, thousands of Canadians no longer can afford to own and buy a home. Canadians who are now renewing their mortgage will have less disposable income to spend on other necessities because of the high cost of shelter. Housing construction is now grinding to a halt, leaving thousands of construction workers without steady employment. This is one of the first industries to feel the brunt of this government's recessionary policies.

With an entire industry collapsing across the country why will the minister not admit that their interest rate policy must be changed and interest rates must be reduced now?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, for almost two years we have had the premiers of the country unanimously calling for a reduction in interest rates. At that time people were saying the housing market was going to go all to hell because of the high interest rate policy.

What has happened is that for two years we had housing starts well in excess of 200,000 every month throughout that period. So I caution the hon. member on drawing conclusions too quickly.

But I acknowledge that the housing starts in the province of Ontario have turned down. I say to my hon. friend that it is important that we do have some easing back here because of the very fast pace of activity over the course of the last five or six years. These inflationary pressures are leading to the high interest rates.

• (1500)

If we are able to cool the economy off somewhat now and get these inflationary pressures out of the system, we will be able to see a much healthier economy in the future and avoid the blow-up that we saw in 1981 which led to that huge recession.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley, a single question.

* * *

FORESTRY

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, officials from the Canadian Interagency Forest Fire Centre are expecting a fire season similar to last year when an area the size of New Brunswick was destroyed.

A report released in Winnipeg today stated that the problems that the department had in responding to it were the ones pointed out by the forestry minister.

Can the minister assure this House and the people of Manitoba the full support of federal agencies, including the Armed Forces, so that both governments are prepared for the fire season this year?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate my hon. friend's concern in this area. Forest fires are not only recognized as a major cause of CO2 emissions in the atmosphere, but annually they destroy as much fibre and timber as we are processing through our mills, a $40 billion industry.

I can give the hon. member the assurance that technical experts will be available as they have been in the past to the province of Manitoba and other provinces. We will continue with our major research effort, which has proven very effective and has had impressive results in the sense that we can now, through computer modelling, predict almost any fire in any area. Admittedly, there are costs associated with the pre-positioning of response equipment.

I cannot say that the Armed Forces will be called in to assist with that, but that is an interesting idea.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex—Windsor on a point of order.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, there was some disagreement which arose in Question Period about whether the comments of Ambassador Burney were in a question and answer session, or part of an address. I wonder if I could have the House permission to table—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite out of order. I am sorry, but that is a matter of debate and the hon. member knows that he will have to take it up somewhere else.

[Translation]

RIDING OF LAURIER—SAINTE-MARIE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to set the record straight about a point of order raised today concerning the riding of Laurier—Sainte-Marie which is temporarily without full-time representation in Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, you would know that the House of Commons does make provision for serving the people of a riding which is unrepresented or vacant as a result of death or resignation. The arrangement is simple enough: party whips, members of the opposition parties as well as government members take over the riding after the Clerk has written to the residents of the riding. Canadians ought to know that the House of commons serves the riding of Laurier—Sainte-Marie, as it does the riding of Oshawa I suppose, but I know that the constituents of Laurier—Sainte-Marie have not been left to fend for themselves. I was there last week to meet with some of the residents, Mr. Speaker. We did respond to their letters, we tried to help those who asked for assistance, and I must say that even the ministers have been co-operative in helping the citizens of Laurier—Sainte-Marie get from the government the services they need.

I think it is unfair to suggest that the riding is unrepresented or without assistance. Quite the contrary, we are doing our best to make sure these people get the services they need. It is not an easy task, granted, but we are glad to work for them.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I want to acknowledge that during this time service is provided by the House. I believe that my hon. friend from Chambly was saying that it was time that it has a member of Parliament in the House of Commons to represent the people of that area.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 81—ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Walker:

> That this House reaffirm that all persons are equal under the law and demand that the government (1) promote this fundamental human right for Canada's aboriginal peoples, (2) ensure that our system of justice is more responsive and suitable, (3) pursue alternative aboriginal justice initiatives, and (4) in cases of jurisdictional conflict, that the Government of Canada, in consultation with aboriginal leaders, ensure the protection of the life, liberty, and security of aboriginal people who are entitled to the status of Canadian citizens.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose, the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell had the floor. Since he is not in the House, I recognize the hon. member for Lotbinière on debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to take this opportunity to offer our condolences to the family of the deceased, after what happened this morning on the Akwesasne reserve.

Mr. Speaker, to many of us, the right of aboriginal people to life, liberty and security of the person has seemed very precarious during the past few days. The situation for residents on the Akwesasne reserve is alarming and dangerous. Most Canadians cannot imagine being in that kind of situation.

Mr. Speaker, it is a difficult matter, and there is also the problem of jurisdiction, since Akwesasne straddles the borders of two provinces and two countries. As you know, talks took place throughout the weekend and continued into the small hours, to try and find a peaceful solution to this problem within the Mohawk community.

For several years, the Canadian side of the Akwesasne reserve has had its own native police services, jointly financed by the federal and provincial governments. These special officers have served the community loyally and well.

Major changes led to a law enforcement system being established by the Akwesasne community, in consultation with the federal and provincial governments.

During the past decade, Indian communities have evolved considerably. Most exercise a greater degree of autonomy, while some operate under their own forms of administrative autonomy.

Today, a steadily increasing number of residents of Indian reserves across the country would like to have their own law enforcement services.

The aspirations of aboriginal people to play a greater role in law enforcement on Indian reserves were boosted by a recent report on this question. A federal interdepartmental task force recommended that the government should continue to support law enforcement services on Indian reserves.

This important document will help us prepare for the challenges of the 90s and represents a major step in developing a consistent federal policy.

After studying crime, incarceration, population growth and employment rates, as well as expenditures and previous policies of law enforcement agencies, the task force put forward a number of principles and findings laying the foundation for future discussions.

We must point out that in-depth consultations will be the key to finding long-term solutions in response to peace and safety concerns of Indian people. Only by meeting with the people who live there and who understand how complex the issue is can we expect to solve long-standing problems.

This consultation process has already started and involves the participation of Indian communities as well as the federal, provincial and territorial governments. These meetings will lead to the drafting of a final report making recommendations to the Cabinet later this year.

The task force report identifies a number of problems some government departments and native leaders are dealing with. One of the most important problems, as illustrated by the current situation in Akwesasne, is the need to clarify the responsibilities of the federal government and those of the provinces.

Our overlapping and sometimes incompatible roles are creating problems for native people who want greater control over their territory.

While recognizing that Indian reserves are entitled to the same quality of service as similar non-native communities, the report stresses that we share the responsibility of ensuring that law enforcement forces in reserves meet community needs.

• (1510)

The federal, provincial and aboriginal governments will have to cooperate and work closely together to find acceptable solutions to the present problems. The report also stressed the need to establish the cost sharing mecanisms to be used by those groups.

The Indians consider as particularly important the fact that the need for an increase in their participation in the process is recognized in the report. The consequences of self-government, service management by native people, training and operating standards as well as the hiring of native constables are among the issues examined.

We are confident that practical solutions will be found during the course of our discusions on their concerns. We believe we will soon be able to submit new options regarding the native law enforcement services in general.

The study on the law enforcement services on the reserves is not the only ongoing study relating to the peace and the safety of our native people. The Task Force on the criminal justice system and its consequences on the Indians and Métis in Alberta is also doing a very important job in an area inhabited by a large Indian population. The Task Force was struck under the auspices of the Government of Alberta and the Government of Canada. The announcement of its creation was made jointly by the honorable Pierre H. Cadieux, the then Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Attorney General of Alberta, Mr. Ken Rostad, the Solicitor General of Alberta, Mr. Dick Fowler, the president of the Indian Association of Alberta, Mr. Roy Louis, and the president of the Métis Association of Alberta, Mr. Larry Desmeules. The Task Force reflects a global and positive approach to the concerns of Indian and Métis groups in the province. It will examine issues affecting natives and the criminal justice system, including the disproportionately high number of natives in Alberta correctional institutions. It will also recommend solutions to problems identified in the current criminal justice process.

The study will also deal with provincial law enforcement services, legal aid, the courts, legal practices, correctional and native counselling services.

The task force, chaired by Judge Robert Allan Cawsey of the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench, will submit its report to the federal and provincial governments by December 31, 1990.

Control over justice and law enforcement services is an important step toward self-government, which has received the obvious support of many native groups.

Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that control over justice and law enforcement services in reserves is also favoured by most non-native Canadians. National polls conducted in the last two years show substantial support for a separate native justice system. This issue has clearly been brought to the fore by the Marshall inquiry, by the inquiry on native justice in Manitoba and by increased media coverage of other incidents suggesting that the criminal justice system discriminates against natives.

A 1989 Angus Reid poll indicated that 69 per cent of the population favour a separate justice system for natives, while a survey conducted by phone the same year put the level of support at 73 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to go back to the unique and frightening situation in Akwesasne. It is unique because the reserve geographic configuration is creating frustrating problems in terms of jurisdiction. Because of these problems, the crimes committed have greatly exceeded the capacities of a community police service. Such a unique situation obviously demands a unique response and we are trying to find appropriate and efficient solutions.

Mr. Speaker, all Canadians are praying for an end to the violence in Akwesasne. The process is already under way to ensure such a situation never happens again anywhere else.

We must learn from the events in Akwesasne and devote all our energies and all our support to solving justice and law enforcement problems throughout the country so that native people enjoy the same protection of life, liberty and security as all other Canadians.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions or comments, the hon. member for Broadview—Greenwood.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the member a short question.

One of the problems that we have when we are talking about native justice and reviewing the penal and correctional institutions is that we are basically not leaning to the strength of the native people. The native people of this country and all around the world have a very special skill in their ability and attitude toward the environment.

The member talks about these consultations that have been going on for some time now and will continue to go on, I am sure, for a lot longer. Would he not think it would be a productive exercise to include in those consultative groups people who are sensitive to environmental issues so that when the correctional institutions or the penal system is reformed, a more positive role could be given to rehabilitation in the native community by using their services, not only in their own community but all communities, by having them make a contribution to the environment by teaching others, by letting them work with reclaiming lands and rivers, et cetera? That, to me, would be a more uplifting way of rehabilitation rather than the current system where we tend to put them in confined quarters where we really do not rehabilitate but tend to put them back even further.

Since the Minister of the Environment is planning to develop, not just a conceptual approach but a very specific action plan in September, I wonder if the member thinks that this approach could be used in this consultative process, and if he could comment on that.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his question. I would like to make it clear to him that just because I did not mention the environmental aspect of the Indians' situation specifically does not necessarily mean that it should not be included.

When I spoke about the Akwesasne reserve in particular and more generally about the studies that are being produced or will be produced in Alberta and Manitoba, I am sure that the environmental issue will be raised by those concerned, namely the native people themselves. As you said so well, this issue not only affects them particularly but should also be part of the solution to problems like incarceration and self-government itself.

I would just ask the hon. member not to write to the Minister of the Environment or to make suggestions to him, because if I understand our institutions properly, it would be better to make the chairman of this study or the Solicitor General of Canada or even the Minister of Indian Affairs aware, so that this aspect and others that you and I do not have in mind now can be considered in the light of the problem and that hopefully, adequate solutions will be found.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the hon. member for Delta.

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this very important topic this afternoon. If it were not for the Meech Lake disagreement or agreement at this time, it would be one of the major points of discussion in Canada. What we are seeing in southern Ontario, Quebec and New York State at this time is a microcosm of the types of problems that we are indeed facing and as a government must deal with.

• (1520)

Canada's record on human rights is very good. People come from all over the world to live in this country because of the freedoms that we enjoy and we welcome others in order that they may also enjoy it. We also need to recognize that there are problems with our aboriginal population. In the past, they have not been dealt with fairly. Things are improving slowly perhaps in some areas, but more rapidly in others. Therefore, this is a good topic for discussion and for debate this afternoon.

We have made a great deal of progress. I can remember when I was a young lad that our aboriginal people were not allowed into beer parlours and could not live in certain areas, just as many of our friends from the Orient were also limited in that area. The recent inquiries that we have seen, such as the Marshall Inquiry and the Manitoba Justice Inquiry, have demonstrated very clearly that our native population has not always been dealt with fairly.

The fact has been mentioned a couple of times today that a disproportionate number of our native people find themselves in jail for offences which, if committed perhaps by a white person, would not have been as stiff. I believe that this is an example of the poverty and the disadvantage that many of our aboriginal people do face.

As a fair government and a fair country, we need to look at these problems and assist our aboriginal people in achieving the goals and aspirations to which each Canadian aspires.

One of the keys to this whole problem is the concept of self-government to which our native population has aspired. This, of course, includes increased responsibility for their educational, judicial, and social systems that they are working within, and the economic system which must be meshed with the rest of the economy of Canada which we all must deal with.

I believe that if this is carried out in consultation with our aboriginal leaders we will indeed see increased prosperity and increased self-reliance and independence. Already, we are seeing the emergence of strong, dynamic leaders in the aboriginal community. A few years ago this was unheard of and would never have been thought possible. Yet today we are meeting these people. Indeed, the aboriginal people should be very proud of the leaders they are electing and appointing to assist them in this very important area of self-government.

There are certain areas in which the government has been able to assist the aboriginal people in this quest for self-government. We think particularly today of the native justice system. One example where we have been able to do something is the on-reserve policing services. We have discovered, through errors that governments and others have committed in the past in trying to impose one culture on another, that many mistakes and problems have developed. Developing a proper justice system and policing system that takes into account those traditions and cultures is most vital and helpful.

The number of aboriginal people in jail has already been mentioned. Last September an Angus Reid poll revealed this concern. More than half of those polled believed that native people are not treated fairly by the courts; 70 percent of Canadians believe that native people have more difficulty getting hired for good jobs than do white Canadians; most also feel that aboriginal people deserve to be a lot better off financially than they are now. It also pointed out that Canadians are more likely to support than oppose aboriginal self-government. Over half of those surveyed agreed with the statement that the Canadian Constitution should specifically recognize the right of Indians to govern themselves on their own land without interference from white society.

These are very encouraging opinions and indicate to me a large body of goodwill among Canadian people to our native population. I only hope that it increases over the years. Canadians could not do anything else but to encourage policies and programs that would enhance that ideal and goal of self-government.

Another area in which the government is assisting aboriginal and native people to look after their own affairs is through a couple of very significant programs. One I would like to mention briefly is the Alternative Funding Arrangement or the AFA in which the government allows the individual tribal councils and bands to transfer funds from one program to another. We are all familiar with the complaint that they have made over the years that they are given money for a specific project and are unable to use it in another area where it may be of more value. This program assists those bands and councils to transfer funds without going through all of the annual budgetary changes that are necessary. This speeds up the whole process. Again, there is obviously room for improvement, but it is a step in the right direction that the Canadian government is taking.

The second program I would like to mention, again very briefly, is the Canadian Aboriginal Economic Development Strategy. This is designed to encourage economic development and decision-making at the local level with the recognition that the economic success rests with the aboriginal people themselves. Often we have taken a very paternalistic attitude toward our aboriginal people, that they could do nothing and it required a white man to run the show. More and more we are seeing the development of the native economic leaders themselves. This is a program that I support 100 per cent. It encourages them to move out into new areas of economic development. I think of the development in my own area of a significant tourist resort. They have some choice land and through this particular program they are discussing with the government the possibility of establishing a resort.

Another area that we should mention briefly concerns the Indian Act. So often in the past this has done nothing but impede the economic, political and social development of our aboriginal communities. Specifically, we are talking of the review of the lands and revenues, and trust review. This review is being used to examine the agreements between the various bands and councils so that they can be made more effective and utilized by our native populations for their own ends rather than having to depend on the bureaucracy in Ottawa or other major centres.

This produces an opportunity for a review in consultation with the bands and councils. This is an area which I feel could be expanded in the future and perhaps speeded up somewhat, so that the relationship between government and Indians could be redefined to truly reflect the needs of our native populations.

Our government is clearly committed to the eventual constitutional entrenchment of self-government. I mentioned in my opening remarks the prominence of the Meech Lake Accord at this particular time. Aboriginal rights are a key item for future meetings between the First Ministers and the government of this country.

While many problems must be addressed, there are optimistic signs for us. I feel quite optimistic that as we work together with our native population, we will bring about solutions to these problems.

In conclusion, let me say that human rights is not some abstract, theoretical concept to which lip-service must be paid. Rather, it is a real expression of the desire of people to be independent and in charge of their own lives and destinies. It is a wish to be treated with respect and fairness. The aboriginal people of Canada share these goals with us. They are something toward which we will work together.

• (1530)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There has been a request to allow the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, who has the reserve in his riding, to continue with his seven minutes. Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to finish his seven minutes?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before the hon. member speaks, are there any questions or comments for the hon. member for Delta? There being none, I will recognize the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell for the seven minutes then I will recognize the hon. member for Halifax.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank the Chair and hon. colleagues for allowing me to be able to make further remarks for the remaining seven minutes to which I was entitled. Unfortunately, after Question Period I could not be here to take advantage of the seven minutes that I had left to me.

This morning I reviewed with you, Mr. Speaker, some of the tragic and difficult situations that my constituents on Akwesasne have to live with in their everyday lives. I described the border issue.

Today during Question Period hon. colleagues were asking questions. One could tell that not everyone is familiar with the idea of how the border is situated and the difficulty in having access to Akwesasne and so on. That became obvious. It is a literal nightmare of jurisdiction.

I now want to turn to another subject, that being some of the difficulties that the people of Akwesasne have encountered in retaining their traditional way of life, or anything that resembles it.

First, the fact that they are partly in Ontario, partly in Quebec and partly in the New York state is difficult, at the best of times. Some years ago, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority constructed a bridge between Canada and the United States at Cornwall. It was felt that the appropriate location for the bridge would be across Cornwall Island, therefore on the reserve of Akwesasne.

Although that bridge has been there since I was a little boy, the natives inform me that there is still a dispute over the amount of moneys owed to them by the federal government for placing the bridge there. As a matter of fact, they claim that they have yet to be paid for the location of that bridge which has been there for 30 years or more.

The people of Akwesasne, particularly those on Cornwall Island, for many years were farmers. Many of them were fishing guides and they worked well in that environment. I use the word "environment" advisedly.

As a result of the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway, a number of factories established themselves in that area. On the American side there is a foundry known as General Foundry, which is a subsidiary of General Motors. Behind General Foundry, right on the banks of the St. Lawrence River, are these huge outdoor containers—they are actually large holes in the ground—in which there are toxic chemicals, right on the banks of the St. Lawrence River.

Immediately west of Akwesasne is the Alcoa plant, and right beside it is the Reynolds Aluminum plant. From the Reynolds plant, and possibly from the other one too, I am not sure, emissions of fluoride fall on the community of Akwesasne, particularly on Cornwall Island. It got so bad that approximately a decade ago the farmers of Cornwall Island had to get rid of their cattle. They were forced to slaughter the animals because the milk given by the cows was contaminated and not fit for human consumption. The teeth of the children of Akwesasne were in awful condition as a result of the over-exposure to fluoride and that situation still exists.

I have a report here entitled "Phytotoxicology Investigations in the Cornwall area of Ontario in the vicinity of the Reynolds Metal Company and the Aluminum Company of America, Massena, New York". That report of 1988 says that the fall-out from those plants is still dangerous for human health today. This is about a decade after we came to the very sad conclusion of how this was affecting the lives of the people.

I said that the people of Akwesasne were also fishing guides and had a traditional way of life in that regard as well. You can imagine what that pollution in the St. Lawrence River has done to the fish and what it has done, of course, to the potential of being a fishing guide. So all in all we have severely damaged their way of life. And when I say "we" I mean we as a society. I am not blaming any one singularly, but all of us collectively, for having damaged that lifestyle.

We have, of course, the crime rate and the other difficulties that I talked about earlier this morning which I will not repeat, and so on.

I would like to make the following point in conclusion. Outside the community of Akwesasne are all the good people who live around it. My constituents and others from the city of Cornwall, represented by my colleague from Stormont—Dundas, work in such positions as customs officers and so on. Canada Customs is located on Cornwall Island right in the middle of Akwesasne. Can you imagine having to work at that place today, Mr. Speaker, in the middle of this crisis that we are living through right now? This is a very difficult thing for the people of my constituency and those from Stormont—Dundas and elsewhere who work there.

My colleague from Stormont—Dundas today asked the Minister responsible for Customs and Immigration to get an undertaking, first, that the people would not be moved to the new office on Cornwall Island, because a whole new group was supposed to move there next week. We did get that assurance. However, my colleague was also asking the Minister of National Revenue for a commitment that there would be a complete review of that plan before anyone is moved, not just now but even later, after this dispute ends, and hopefully it will end soon. We have not yet had a positive reply to that and I hope that the minister will speak later and give us that assurance.

In conclusion, I want to thank the House for granting me these extra minutes to be able to conclude these remarks. I want to appeal to the residents of Akwesasne, particularly today. I want to appeal to their good senses and to their calm because there are going to be difficult hours and days ahead of them. I want to remind them, through you, Mr. Speaker, and through this House, that the violence will not end with more war, the violence will end if everyone keeps their senses and does their best to restore law and order in Akwesasne.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On debate, the hon. member for Halifax West—Halifax, sorry.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, just on that point I will say, before I begin my remarks, that the hon. member for Halifax West and I grew up on the same street, albeit a number of years apart. We are both Haligonians but as you, Mr. Speaker, are aware, we do have a different party affiliation.

I rise today to speak in strongest support of the motion moved by my colleague, the member for Winnipeg North Centre. I begin by quoting from that motion:

> That this House reaffirm that all persons are equal under the law and demand that the government (1) promote this fundamental human right for Canada's aboriginal peoples—

There is more in the motion, as you are aware, but I would like to begin my remarks in this debate on this particular area.

• (1540)

My colleague from North Delta made some very interesting comments a few moments ago. He talked about the fact that Canadians can be proud of their human rights record and that people come from all over the world to make Canada their home because of this record. With the greatest of respect to my colleague, I think this has become a myth that too many Canadians believe. It is a myth which examination of the facts in Canada show to be untrue.

We have perhaps a small problem in Canada in that we tend to be a little smug when we look at our neighbours to the south. We tend to think that because we are smaller, more spread out, because we have a history that has evolved into a democratic nation rather than being born through revolution, because we tend to be less violent, at least on the face of it, than our American cousins, that all of these things add up to a Canada that is somewhat better, more congenial to all peoples, less bigoted and less racist. The sad truth is that this is just not the case.

We do not have to look very far to see that this is not the case for people who are visible minorities. It is not the case for women. It is not the case for new Canadians in their first, second and even third generations. It is not the case at all and it is something about which Canadians have to do something.

I refer, first, to this year's report of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. That report states that in a year that witnessed the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the contrast between the ringing affirmation of human solidarity that that universal declaration gave and our common practice seems particularly harsh.

In relating it specifically to the question of Canada's first people, the report noted that the special committee of Parliament on Indian self-government recommended in 1983 that the federal government establish a new relationship with Indian first nations and that an essential element of this relationship be the recognition of Indian self-government.

This report was accepted by the government of the day in 1984. Later in that very year the new government agreed that aspects of self-government could and should be dealt with in the context of Indian land claim negotiations. Consequently, the report states that the issue today is not whether aboriginal people should have greater control over their own affairs, but the nature and the extent of that control.

We look at the problems besetting native Canadians and I think we have to hang our heads in shame. My province of Nova Scotia has been singled out, and to a degree rightly so, for its treatment of Donald Marshall Jr. After many years, long hearings, much soul-searching, the royal commission known as the Marshall Inquiry was published earlier this year. That commission made 82 recommendations. Those recommendations covered a gambit of areas from criminal trial procedures to police investigations.

For the purposes of this motion it is important to note that the commission found that the fact that Marshall was a native was a factor in his wrongful conviction and imprisonment, that the immediate response to the death of Sandy Seal was entirely inadequate, incompetent and unprofessional and that the fact that Donald Marshall was a Micmac was one of the reasons that the police identified him as a prime suspect.

A further finding of the commission was that racism played a part in a wrongful conviction and imprisonment. Further recommendations were that the Department of the Attorney General and Solicitor General in Nova Scotia adopt and publicize a policy on race relations; that the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia, as well as the Nova Scotia bar, financially support Dalhousie Law School's new special minority admissions program for Micmacs and indigenous blacks; that there be law school programs for visible minorities and that training for police officers include discussion of minority issues and encourage sensitivity to minority concerns.

I might add that this, too, is mentioned in the report of the Human Rights Commission and that the Human Rights Commission notes in particular that this kind of training is now taking place in the RCMP. But, Mr. Speaker, it must take in police forces nation-wide to prevent travesties of justice similar to that in the Donald Marshall case. Donald Marshall spent 11 years in penitentiary for a crime he did not commit. Nothing will give him back those 11 year. Nothing, except a completely new and fair attitude on the part of governments and on the part of people, will redress the wrong done to Canadian native peoples.

Further recommendations of the Marshall Inquiry are that a community controlled native criminal court be established in Nova Scotia; that a native justice institute be established with funding from both the federal and the provincial governments and that in Nova Scotia in particular Micmac interpreters be provided in all courts in the province.

One of the things noted in the report of the federal Human Rights Commission is that the evidence that native Canadians are over-represented in our prisons is inescapable. In a report prepared for the Canadian Bar Association in 1988 it was shown that 10 per cent of male inmates and 13 per cent of female inmates in Canadian federal penitentiaries are native, although native peoples make up only about 2 per cent of the general population.

The situation in provincial institutions is worse. In fact, it is a tragic but true situation that an Indian child born in this country has a far greater chance of going to penitentiary than he does of finishing university.

It was discovered in the course of the Marshall Inquiry that the lack of an interpreter for Donald Marshall at his initial trial, and even at his later hearing where he was finally cleared, was a major obstacle to his fair treatment by the court.

When I visited Yellowknife in the Northwest Territories some months ago I learned that one of the towns in the north—I am sorry, I forget which one—declared itself octolingual, to represent all of the languages spoken including, I might add, English and French, and six different native languages in that particular small town.

We can all learn from that kind of a gesture, particularly in the Canada of today, where so much tension, unhappiness and insensitivity is driving our nation to the brink of break-up because of a lack of a sensitivity by some of our people toward other of our people on the question of language.

If Donald Marshall had had an interpreter at his first trial in the early 1970s, I do not say that that would have made a major difference, given all the other problems, but it might have made his own time there a little easier. It might have turned up something that the courts would have had to listen to. It might have helped prevent the tragedy that then unfolded over the next 11 years.

• (1550)

The report also calls for public awareness programs. This, I think, is one of the areas of such great need, where all of us can lead, because the problem almost goes beyond that of ordinary racism and ordinary bigotry.

Too many Canadians, vis-à-vis our native peoples have, not even a paternalism, which would be hard enough to accept, but a total ignorance, a total obliviousness to the fact that these are the indigenous people of Canada, that they have a specific culture, lifestyle and way of life that they have right to see continued, that they have a spiritual element that may be different from various other groups in this country but that is part and parcel and an integral part of their lifestyle which must be continued and respected by other Canadian citizens.

Until we see that in our schools, universities and other cultural institutions and on our television programs that sensitivity will not be created.

Bear in mind that everything that is stated regarding the province of Nova Scotia is equally true for every other province in the country and for the national government as well. Further recommendations of the Marshall Inquiry were that the Chief Justices and Chief Judges of each court in Nova Scotia should exercise leadership to ensure fair treatment of minorities within the system, that provincial funding to legal aid be re-examined to better serve the needs of minority clients and that municipal police departments and the RCMP actively recruit minorities.

Again, as part of the sensitivity and the training of police forces natives must be hired in these police forces and have input into the manner in which their people and they themselves are dealt with by these forces. A further recommendation was that official policies on the elimination of racial stereotypes be developed by all levels of government.

Nobody would stand up in this House and deny the need for any of these things. Nobody would stand up and deny the need for any of these programs. Nobody would stand up in this House and suggest that the status of native people in this country is anything that we can be proud of, that the treatment of native people by newer Canadians such as ourselves is anything that we should be prepared to boast about.

The time has come for action, the time has come for specific programs, but that is not what we are seeing. What we have seen, on the other hand, is the cancellation of the native communication programs.

While Donald Marshall was languishing in the federal penitentiary in Dorchester, New Brunswick, there was one champion for his innocence, one champion that worked on and on all during his incarceration to see justice done. I refer, of course, to the Micmac News. The Micmac News has been published in Nova Scotia for over 20 years. It has a circulation among native people and others of over 4,800 and it has done a tremendous amount of good. It has been a source of communication and pride to the Micmac community in Atlantic Canada and it is the only major native newspaper in Atlantic Canada. Mr. Speaker, its federal funding has been cut.

This is a tragedy. It is more than just a tragedy in the sense of a loss of a communication instrument for native people. For native people in Atlantic Canada who know that the Micmac News was so much a first cause in the final freeing of Donald Marshall there is a fear that the reason it has been cut is a deliberate move—I do not suggest this, Mr. Speaker, but among native people the feeling is it is a deliberate move to silence a voice that has done some good for native people.

The attitude among young native people in my region is that the white man's government is not relevant to them, that the white man's government does not care about them and that empty promises, broken promises and paternalistic feeling do nothing but cause amusement and despair. The amusement we might be able to do something about, but the despair goes right to the root of the lives of desperation that people live because they do not have the wherewithal to make it in a society that forever shunts them to the side.

Donald Marshall is the example to which we can all point. We know about Donald Marshall, we know what has happened to him and we know what it has meant to his life to have 11 years taken away from him, 11 years from the age of 17 to 28 when he would have been being educated, learning a trade and starting his lifelong career.

Native Canadians right across the country are suffering every day. They are suffering because our society puts little or no value on their contribution, because our society refuses to understand that the way they live their lives is as important and as relevant to the great cultural fabric of this country as the way those of us of Irish, English, French or Polish descent live our lives. It has to stop. It has to stop by a concerted effort of government to follow the kinds of recommendations that the Marshall Inquiry has suggested.

As I already mentioned, we see in Canada today a disproportionate number of natives in prison. Interestingly enough, the figure is even more disproportionate for native women than for native men. We see a disproportionate alcoholism rate, a disproportionate unemployment rate and a disproportionate suicide rate. All of these things lead us to see that the overwhelming spirit in the native community, if we do not act to right these wrongs and redress these wrongs as soon as humanly possible, is despair.

Canada is not a country that should engender despair in any of its people. Canada is a country that should engender hope for the future with a pride in the past, a pride in the past from our native peoples who were here when we got here. If we do not take care of this country the way we should, they will still be here after we have gone.

I can only add my voice to that of my colleagues from Winnipeg North Centre, Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, Stormont—Dundas and others who have spoken and will speak today and say to this government and to all of us here in Canada: for God's sake do something, act on these recommendations, show that our government and our country is not callous and uncaring, show that our government and our country puts a premium on all its people wherever they live, whatever their background and, most particularly, on our native people.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I do not have a question for the hon. member but I would like to add my voice to the debate in this comment period.

I agree with the member's analysis that the fundamental problem is a complete lack of hope. I have long been interested in this. In fact I did an honours paper at university on the history of the Indian franchise in British Columbia so I have a demonstrated interest in that. Now that I am the member of Parliament for Saanich—Gulf Islands I have tried to reach out to the native communities in my district. I am finding that they feel very apart and outside of the mainstream of political activity.

• (1600)

There is a very real fundamental mistrust of federal or provincial politicians to in any way address their requirements. I think that that is an historical mistrust. We have never been able to give them the kind of representation that they feel they require. I think there is this fundamental mistrust because we do not understand and also because of the kind of hurts that have been generated over history. Many of the comments by my colleague from Comox—Alberni this morning speak to that fundamental mistrust and the reasons for it.

I would like to reiterate what he said about that. If we are going to get real treatment for native justice in Canada we have to focus on the fundamentals. They are three: The first is constitutional recognition. We now have a constitutional crisis in our country. It is because, I believe, of the lack of consultation with ordinary people. The politicians felt more able and adept at handling constitutional matters than ordinary people and this is what we have. got. We have a mess.

The second item in recognizing the fundamental problem of native people is land claims. How can we give people the kind of recognition and respect that they deserve if we do not even recognize that they were here first and have some sense of ownership and some sense of responsibility to their land. They did it a whole lot better than many of us. Sitting on the environment committee, I have listened to members of many tribes speak of the kind of reverence they have for their environment. We could learn from them, Mr. Speaker, and we are not doing a very good job of that.

Finally, as my colleague from Comox—Alberni has pointed out, what we should be doing is strengthening human rights legislation. As the member from Halifax points out, we have a reputation but sometimes one wonders whether that reputation is well deserved or not. They say you cannot legislate morality. You can make sure that cases such as Donald Marshall will never happen again. For those people crying out for the renewal of capital punishment, Donald Marshall is certainly a case in point where the fundamental inhumanity dealt to this person from a native community would not have occurred if he were not a native.

My task as a member of Parliament in trying to represent all of my constituents is to build those bridges of communication and to try to speak to people and get them to trust so that they can tell us what they want us to do as their representatives.

Ms. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague from Saanich—Gulf Islands for her comments. I would like to add to what she has said when she mentioned, in particular, the subject of human rights. There are two points, Mr. Speaker.

One is the need for promotion of human rights vehicles and the response through provincial and federal human rights commissions in native communities. There is very little awareness and it has certainly given the federal government responsibility for first people. I think it is a policy which could be acted upon and acted upon quickly to promote the use of human rights commissions through the native communities in this country.

The second comment I would like to make in response to my colleague's comments relates to a situation that arose again out of the Marshall case that I heard in Nova Scotia. There was a civil suit that arose from some of the goings on in the Marshall Inquiry. The lawyer involved told me that he had asked a young native Nova Scotian to testify. The young man said to him: "Why, what good will it do? It never works for us. The system does not work for us, it only works against us." My friend tried and tried to convince him that the system could work for him. This young man, who I think was every day of 22—tragically the same age as that young man who died today at Akwesasne—said: "No, I am sorry; I do not believe you. I have no faith in your system; it will never do me any good". We cannot continue to allow this to be the case in our country.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a couple of short comments. This is a subject that moves me a lot because I have had the opportunity, in the past, as a journalist and as a broadcaster to do several documentaries about the Indian community and the problems related to our aboriginals in this country. My friend, the hon. member for Saanich—Gulf Islands, talked about mistrust and misunderstanding, and it is the absolute truth.

One of the problems we have, and it is a very complex matter, is that we simply just do not know each other. We do not work with each other. There are a lot of middle-class, white Canadians in this country who will offer gratuituous comments about Indians and yet they have never worked with them, befriended them or been with them, or ever been on a reserve.

Actually—and it is unfortunate in many ways—it is not normal for a lot of Canadians to have native Indians come into their lives every day, every week, or every month. In fact, I suspect there are many, many, if not millions of Canadians who have never shaken hands with a native Indian and it would do them well to do it. They should visit Indian reserves in northern Manitoba, northwestern Ontario and Saskatchewan, as I have. It would be an eye-opener. They would realize that these are human beings who want to live in peace, who want to prosper, who want to get ahead, and who have feelings like the rest of us.

It is something that moves you and hurts you a lot when you visit a reserve and discover that perhaps, in the winter time, 95 per cent of the adults, men and women, are unemployed and perhaps in the summer time it may go down to 70 per cent or 80 percent. That is how shocking it is. The problem is enormous.

Yes, there is a constitutional crisis; yes, we have to deal with land claims; and yes, we have to deal with some of these issues that are in the news all the time, but I would suggest that at the root of it is this mistrust and this misunderstanding and all of us, including the government of the day, should do something to help us get to know each other better.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate, but before I recognize the hon. member for South Shore—

[Translation]

It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Chambly—Women's Centres; the hon. member for Okanagan—Shuswap—The Environment; the hon. member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon—Pearson International Airport.

[English]

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate this afternoon. I am particularly pleased to speak following my good friend, the hon. member for Halifax. I rarely follow my hon. friend but I am always pleased to speak after her in debate, and today is no exception to that.

I wish to begin by commending the hon. member for Winnipeg North for bringing forth this very important set of issues relating to human rights in Canada and, indeed, relating to native people.

It is curious that he mentioned privately to me, when we were speaking a few minutes ago, the coincidence that today should be the day for this debate when we have, in fact, seen such a tragic event in Canada and North America relating to native people and, indeed, to the administration of justice on both sides of the border. I wish to commend him for bringing this issue forth because what we are talking about here today is, fundamentally, human rights. Issues of human rights are really issues which are non-partisan. They are issues that are of concern to all members of this House, I am sure, and they are of concern to all Canadians because, as Canadians, we value very highly our concept of our country as a democratic country.

• (1610)

The equality of Canadians, which is so much a part of the ethic of Canadian society and indeed a part of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, is something that we must continuously pursue until such time as we can be satisfied that it exists in practice throughout our country before the courts, before the police and in terms of access as well as opportunity to participate fully in all aspects of Canadian life.

Increasingly over the next decade we are going to see issues such as the issues that we are dealing with today become more and more in the forefront of Canadian consideration. Our society is changing at a phenomenal rate, and it will continue to change at a phenomenal rate because of the immigration needs of Canada. It is inevitable that we will continue to see the development of our population as a multiracial population. Issues such as whether or not people who may be different by virtue of their skin colour, their culture, their language, their religion or other aspects of their cultural heritage may find themselves in the position where they are not treated equally as Canadians. That is something that we must all seek to eradicate in order that our country will live up to the principles articulated in our Constitution.

Native people in Canada are in a particularly unique position as compared to other persons who might be referred to as minorities in Canada. Quite simply, others who have come here as immigrants have chosen to come. They recognized when they left their homelands that they may face circumstances that are different, and that they may have challenges beyond those which they might face if they stayed at home. This is not the case with native people, because this is their ancestral home and the place where they should quite legitimately more than any other Canadians be able to call their homeland.

At the same time, when we talk about equality of Canadians sometimes I have had people say to me: "Why is it that native people have special status? Why is it that we talk about the equality of all Canadians, but yet native people have special privileges that other Canadians do not have, recognized in the Indian Act or elsewhere?" Quite simply, native people do not have special status in Canada. They are equal and pro-Canadians.

I noticed in my hon. friend's motion that there was something with which I wanted to take issue. In the motion he refers to the security of aboriginal people "who are entitled to the status of Canadian citizens". Native persons are Canadian citizens, full and equal with all other Canadians but they do enjoy benefits that other Canadians do not enjoy that relate to their special inheritance, in particular as status Indians as recognized through our law, Constitution and our traditions.

These special privileges that I often hear people criticize, one should remember, are no different than the inheritance that any other Canadian receives from his or her parents or ancestors, in the same way that my father may leave me certain of his property, rights or privileges when he passes on. Similarly, native people have legitimate right to receive from their ancestors certain rights and privileges that may accrue. Our goal must be to recognize all Canadians as equal under the law of Canada, and this is an aspiration that we must pursue.

My hon. friend from Halifax made reference to and spoke very sensitively on the subject of the recent Marshall inquiry in our province. There is no question that that was a landmark, a very important investigation in the history of this country, and in the history of the administration of justice. I read that report with fascination. It was one of the most interesting documents of its sort that I have read in a long time. It was absolutely captivating reading and made some very valuable and important recommendations for our society.

I have said previously on a Standing Order 31 in this House and would say again today that Canadians from other provinces should not be smug about the Marshall report. Perhaps my hon. friend from Halifax has had people say to her: "What's your problem there in Nova Scotia?" The fact is it is not our problem there in Nova Scotia. Inquiries could be held in other provinces that could reveal the same problems with respect to the administration of justice, or possibly the administration of other public institutions in our society.

We happen to be in a position in Nova Scotia where we have now had the definitive evidence of a problem that we have to come to grips with in Nova Scotia. I am pleased to see the quick response of the Government of Nova Scotia to that. I am also pleased to see that the Minister of Justice for Canada and her officials have been reviewing the recommendations of the Marshall report to see if there are implications for the Government of Canada, and if they would identify needs on our part to change the way things are done nationally.

I would expect, as well, that the forthcoming report of the Manitoba aboriginal justice inquiry will also give us an opportunity for further insights and understanding in this whole area. I think we can expect that the dialogue is only just beginning at a very serious level in Canada. I think people could argue quite legitimately that perhaps it is overdue. Nevertheless, the dialogue is well under way.

The motion by the hon. member for Winnipeg North demands that the government "pursue alternative aboriginal justice initiatives". I am pleased to say that this government is deeply concerned about the native justice issues and is engaged in a number of initiatives in this area, some of which I would like to mention briefly today. First, I would like to provide a context for the discussion before addressing the specific initiatives which the government has undertaken.

By its nature the justice system deals with conflicts between individuals, between individuals and the state, and between groups. Accordingly the issues discussed here tend to focus on problems, concerns about abuses and wrongs done. It is, however, necessary to approach the development of responses to these problems positively. It is necessary to focus on the evolution of a system of justice that is meaningful for all Canadians, to search for laws, procedures and institutions that exist through the free consent of all citizens regardless of culture or race.

One of the areas of concern to native people in Canada is the provision of policing services on reserves, something of which we have been very much aware in the last week or two in this country. The importance of policing services in the development of effective justice administration is reflected in the fact that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development undertook a review of Indian reserve policing to canvass the variety of present policing arrangements, examine the question of jurisdiction and assess alternative models.

These efforts which involve national consultations seek to ensure that Indian communities have access to appropriate kinds and levels of policing services. In January 1990 the final report on reserve policing was released publicly, and I understand consultations with interested parties are anticipated to be completed later this year.

As previously noted, aboriginal offenders are disproportionately represented in prisons. The ministry of the Solicitor General responsible for federal correctional services has taken special effort to identify programs and services that will ensure that programs and institutions are responsive to aboriginal concerns and needs. These efforts have often been undertaken in consultation with aboriginal organizations and groups, and encourage the active participation of native communities.

The correctional law review process and the task force report on the reintegration of the aboriginal offender both point to the commitment of developing programs in dialogue with aboriginal communities. The administration of justice is one of the matters that may be discussed in aboriginal self-government negotiations. In preparation, the Department of Justice led an interdepartmental committee to develop principles to guide the negotiations. This is part of the government's ongoing commitment to the concept of aboriginal self-government.

All members should be aware that the government and this minister are receptive to initiatives developed by the aboriginal communities themselves. I might say that for the first year and a half that I had the privilege to be a member of this place, I dealt a great deal with the minister who is now the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I found that as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans he was one of the most approachable ministers of the government, and I can see that he is off to an outstanding beginning as Minister of Indian Affairs in having concluded some absolutely landmark agreements in the history of this country. There is no doubt in my mind as to his receptiveness.

The Department of Justice provides funding in a variety of aboriginal justice areas. In addition to proposals for radical institutional reforms such as would be implied by proposals for separate tribal courts and similar mechanisms, aboriginal communities and organizations have proposed a wide array of alternative program models. Various other proposals have relied upon mediation and arbitration schemes which, being consentual in nature, only work if the parties voluntarily participate. These may offer wide scope for accommodating the particular values and traditions of the community.

• (1620)

In conclusion, it would be difficult, even inappropriate, to attempt to identify all the alternatives that might be available to Canadians in this area. At this time, we can only agree that alternatives to existing processes, as well as improvements to the existing ones, are at the heart of long-term solutions.

As the government explores new approaches, whether in the community self-government negotiations, the renewed constitutional discussions, law reform initiatives or elsewhere, the participation of aboriginal Canadians will ensure that appropriate alternatives are considered and the human rights principles that characterize our system of justice are advanced for all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate, the hon. member for Regina—Qu'Appelle. It is a 10-minute debate and five minutes for questions or comments. You are splitting it with the hon. member for Victoria?

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): I am, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me today to join in the debate on the motion of the Official Opposition regarding an Indian justice system. In my constituency of Regina—Qu'Appelle, I have over 11 Indian reserves. Most of them are Cree, although I do have some Sioux. As well, that part of Regina which I represent has a fair number of urban Indian people, not just treaty people, but also Métis and non-treaty people.

I have been a friend, an observer, and an associate of the native community back home for a number of years. As a new Canadian, a person whose family came to this country not too many years ago, I have to acknowledge the original people in this country, the Indian people. The fact that I now represent them in this House of Parliament, I feel, puts a special responsibility on my shoulders.

We have heard many members speak eloquently in this House today about the plight of the Indian people. We have heard about the statistics. Back in my own province of Saskatchewan, some 36 per cent of the inmates in the federal penitentiary are native people; in the provincial penitentiary, over 85 per cent of the inmates are of native ancestry. People of native ancestry only constitute 16 per cent of the Saskatchewan population.

When we consider the social statistics such as marriage breakdown, alcoholism, life expectancy, the rate of death by violent means, housing conditions on reserves, the unemployment rate, one has to come away with a sad heart and say that this is indeed the worst of Third World conditions.

Yet, I think it would be wrong for us not to also see some positive things. We can stand and lay blame that goes back many, many years, to the paternalistic attitude that previous governments have taken. It was not until toward the end of the 1950s that a band could sell a cow without having to receive the approval of the Indian, agent who had to get the approval from Ottawa.

If there was ever an indictment of over-welfare, certainly the Department of Indian Affairs and our treatment of Indian people is that example. We never gave them an opportunity to be responsible for their own lives. Some of that is beginning to change. We see positive developments in terms of developing educational institutions on the reserves, manned and operated by the bands. We are beginning to see some economic agreements between the bands and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that are beginning to allow for some economic development. We are beginning to see bands taking over the administration of social services, housing, and these other programs on the reserves themselves.

We, as members of parliament, should be encouraging these developments because, in the end, people having responsibility over their own lives is what it is really all about. Let the Indian people regain responsibility over their own lives. It is in this way that the Indian people will regain for themselves their own sense of pride. If there is one thing that the white civilization has done to our Indian brothers and sisters over the years is to take away their pride.

We almost destroyed them as a people, but as I mentioned earlier there are some hopeful signs that Indian pride is coming back. Every year I attend powwows on my reserves and in the 11 years that I have been a member of parliament I have seen these powwows grow not only in terms of numbers of people participating in them but also in the rebirth of Indian spiritualism that accompanies their renewed sense of pride. I see it in the faces of the young men and women going to the powwows on those reserves. I see that this Indian spiritualism is being used to combat problems like alcoholism on the reserve. They are beginning to get back their pride, which is essential if we really are concerned about the welfare of the Indian people.

The other area that needs serious attention is the native justice system. The opposition motion today deals with that question. Again we see some positive things. Toward the end of last year I had the honour and the privilege of participating in a ceremony in the town of Fort Qu'Appelle which started a training program for young Indian and Métis boys and girls who were going to enter the program to become Indian special constables in the RCMP.

I have to acknowledge the role that the RCMP has been taking. The RCMP is beginning to realize that they need native constables, especially if they are going to be dealing with the question of policing the reserves.

Much more needs to be done. All those programs are under-funded. There are more young Indian people wanting to apply to those programs than there are openings. I think about the Saskatchewan Indian Cultural College. Again we are seeing young Indian men and women wanting to advance their education and yet, unfortunately, the funding is being cut off to those important programs.

We have heard some of the possible solutions in speeches today. One of the most important ways to solve the problems that Indian people are facing is to resolve the land question. We have not lived up to commitments that previous governments have made to the Indian people. In fact in many instances we have stolen land from the Indian people. We have ignored legal agreements that we have made. In the past, crooked Indian agents have swindled Indian bands and Indian people out of their rightful land. This has got to be corrected.

Land settlements will begin to create an economic base that would allow the Indian people to develop a self-sustaining economy within their bands, thereby providing employment, and setting positive models for the Indian people.

The second area that I believe is important is education. We cannot and should not deny education opportunities to the young Indian men and women. People without pride lack positive role models. We are beginning to see positive role models developing in the Indian community. These are young men and women who have done exceptionally well at post-secondary education, very often against tremendous odds. Very often they do not have the white support or the family support in the urban setting.

Many of these young Indian men and women come from the reserves directly into an urban centre where they usually do not have the support system they need. They have to combat the temptation to become involved in the down side of urban Indian living is there. They have to combat the pressures and the newness of a white university system. Very often they are not adequately trained in terms of their past high school record so they need special help and attention as well.

• (1630)

Those young Indian men and women who have come through the system with their degrees are really people whom we should all admire. They are the positive role models. They are the future for the Indian people.

If there is anything I can do in this House in terms of my appeal to government members, it would be to ensure that funding for post-secondary education to native young men and women not be curtailed, that we give them every opportunity of availing themselves of post-secondary education, because that is where the future lies.

The third area which is important is the area that the Official Opposition has raised. We need a justice system that is sensitive to Indian needs and Indian values. To this end, I sincerely urge the government to give the matter serious consideration, not just lip-service, to ensure that a system will evolve that will indeed provide justice to our Indian brothers and sisters.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for his excellent comments and for contributing to this very important debate.

The final issue he raised is one which I think deserves to be elaborated on. In western Canada several organizations are thinking about alternative justice systems. There seems to be a reluctance on the part of the federal government to get involved in a debate on this issue. Yet we all know that tribal councils, provincial organizations and individual bands are seeking ways of increasing their participation rate and their control over these systems. In Manitoba the Aboriginal Justice Committee had a very important two-day conference on this issue, and Alberta is considering it in the course of its own investigations.

Perhaps the member from Regina could further contribute to the debate by elaborating on the need for alternative justice systems to be more responsive to the native communities that we find particularly in western Canada.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed, I agree. When we talk about a justice system, we should also talk about the need for more law enforcement officers of native ancestry. We need people of native ancestry to be judges and members of tribunals. We need Indian lawyers as well.

If, indeed, our system of justice is to meet the needs of the native community, then these things must be in place. Without them there will be discrimination and racism, either overt or not. Policemen and judges, because of their upbringing and their attitudes, may unconsciously be racist or prejudiced since they do not very often understand the forces involved in a native's life.

When I returned to Saskatchewan in the 1970s and worked in the office of the Minister of Social Services, there was an attempt by young natives in Regina to have a young native police force. The official establishment, the police department and the welfare agencies were quick to denounce this. Yet it had some merit.

They were proposing that when, for example, Indian people went on a binge, instead of picking them up and throwing them in jail they would exercise wisdom and just gently take them home. That, to me, was wisdom. That was dealing with a problem in a wise way, rather than the way the white society deals with them. That is to say, when they find people who are inebriated on the streets they throw them in the paddy wagon and throw them in the cell.

Mr. Althouse: If they are Indian.

Mr. de Jong: That is right, if they are Indians

There are other, more wise ways of dealing with these questions. They should come from the Indian community. I thank the hon. member for his question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the hon. member for Victoria. He also has 10 minutes of debate plus five minutes for questions and comments .

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in this important debate. To refresh the House as to the motion before it, it states:

> That this House reaffirm that all persons are equal under the law and demand that the government (1) promote this fundamental human right for Canada's aboriginal peoples, (2) ensure that our system of justice is more responsive and suitable, (3) pursue alternative aboriginal justice initiatives, and (4) in cases of jurisdictional conflict, that the Government of Canada, in consultation with aboriginal leaders, ensure the protection of the life, liberty, and security of aboriginal people who are entitled to the status of Canadian citizens.

This motion permits us to deal with a number of issues which are current in Canada, starting with the issue that is current today, that is, the tragedy at the Mohawk reserve on the Canadian border, where the Canadian government, having had representations from the responsible elected and traditional leaders, has failed to respond. As a result, a tragedy has ensued.

It is important that the Canadian government respond to the leadership of the native people, not only in that community but the national leadership who have joined in that request, and deal promptly and fairly with our citizens on the reserve in that tragedy.

The motion takes us beyond that particular issue into what is really one of the searing injustices in this country. That is an injustice which has its roots in our history. I found that for me it was a gradual process of beginning to understand the depths and nature of the tragedy which we see about us today.

Before the Europeans came aboriginal people had a society which, while it was different in different parts of the continent, was generally marked by cohesion, by political stability, by a spirituality and cultural integration with the community and with the environment that we would all be pleased to have today in North America.

The impact of European intervention in North America has proven to be a disaster for most aboriginal people. Lisa Hobbs Birnie, who has written a very recently published book on the life and work of the National Parole Board, and others have described the relationship today as that of a Third World country living in the midst of one of the richest societies that history has ever known.

It is that first point which needs to be understood by non-aboriginal Canadians. That is to say that the culture and life that was here when the Europeans first arrived still remains in some fashion, and has not been absorbed within the European culture. Thus, daily, we have a clash of cultures, of worlds, that are radically different. This is caught up and described in the statistics. Perhaps we non-aboriginal people need statistics to help us understand the nature of the problem.

Not only are living standards dramatically lower across this country for aboriginal people, but social problems that arise because of a constant bombardment of their culture create a horror story in many areas of the native community. That horror story gets itself acted out in a clash with our system of justice. That clash shows up at every point in the administration of justice. It shows up in tensions with the police, as we have seen in the evidence that has come out of the Manitoba inquiry, and in the Donald Marshall case where a police force which is essentially non-aboriginal and which struggles to try to understand the culture that it is dealing with is usually at a complete disadvantage.

Many of our police officers—the RCMP as an institution, and the provincial police forces—have learned more than most of us about the tragedies and how to deal with them. But one of the great problems is that their voices are not being listened to in the council of government.

• (1640)

Since I have been here, and I have been critic for the Solicitor General's department, I have been visited with more reports than one could imagine on this subject. I have in my hand a report on policing for aboriginal Canadians, and the RCMP role in it.

My friend from Regina outlined a number of steps that could be taken. Each page has a series of specific recommendations which the police would like to bring into practice across this country which would only begin to deal with part of the problem.

I also have a copy of the report of the Indian Policing Policy Review Task Force which involved a number of departments. Again, it contains a series of recommendations which would begin to deal with the difficulties of policing at that level, on the reserves and in our cities.

The next level of the system is the courts. There are very few lawyers who are native. There are very few lawyers who have even had any education or training in native or aboriginal culture. There are very few judges who have had such training.

When I was with the Attorney General's Department in British Columbia, we had a program which taught us a few things. We picked up something from Saskatchewan which I thought was very helpful and instructive. It is something that the lawyers, prosecutors and judges were put through. They put native people on the bench and in the role of lawyers. They put the lawyers and judges in the role of the accused and the witnesses. They conducted the whole trial in Cree, with translators. That gave to those people a sense of the dramatic cultural impact, confusion and difficulty that the court system has.

Again, the Marshall Inquiry has underlined how that kind of injustice can happen in this country. Donald Marshall is just one case in thousands upon thousands in the history of this country.

I now come to corrections. Again, we have a task force report on corrections which has everybody's name on it. It has page after page after page of recommendations. It came out in 1988.

We had the chairman of the Parole Board in front of the justice committee today. We had the commissioner of corrections there last week. The week before that we had the Solicitor General. However, these recommendations are being implemented at a snail's pace.

It is little wonder that native people and aboriginal people are now beginning to be angry at what is happening. Perhaps out of some of that anger will finally come a hearing for the native people.

This report reveals that aboriginal Canadians take longer to get parole than non-aboriginal Canadians. Their sentences are longer. Even when they do get parole they have spent more time in jail. Their recidivism rate is higher.

That is because our system has failed. We have almost no programs in our jails for drug addiction or for alcohol treatment. We have almost no programs sensitive to the cultural traditions of native people.

Last week we received a report on creating choices. It is a report of the Task Force on Federally Sentenced Women. If you think it is bad in this country for a federally sentenced woman, try being a federally sentenced native woman in our institutions.

This report speaks with the cry of pain that native women feel. Because we have only one institution in this country for women, they are dragged from their homes in the north, or in Saskatchewan or Alberta to a jail in Kingston, Ontario—a jail that was built in 1933 and condemned in 1938.

That is what we have been inflicting native women with. They commit suicide as a result. Just a few months ago there was yet another suicide in the prison for women.

Yet, when we ask the commissioner of corrections and the Solicitor General for a clear commitment to the principles of this report we get: "Well, we will have to think about it. We will have to look at our options. We have got all these other priorities. We will have to see".

The time has come for this House to speak with one voice on this issue. The voice must be that the time has come for action for our native people in the area of administrative justice. They need not look to this House further than today for a clear statement that we stand with them in their plea for justice.

We want to hear from the next speaker, the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development, that this government is finally going to deal in a clear, honest and upfront way with the cries of native people. We want to hear that, finally, the injustices that have been perpetrated on those people for too long are going to come to an end, and that we will together begin to address the issues that these reports speak of and that we in this House want dealt with now.

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague on his excellent dissertation on the effects of the justice system on our native population. I certainly think he has emphasized some of its shortcomings.

I do have a question for him. I was a little concerned with some of the things he was talking about when he spoke of sending in the RCMP to the Akwesasne reserve on a unilateral basis.

I wish to read from an article which appeared in this morning's The Globe and Mail. It quotes the Governor of New York State.

Again, we need to recognize that this is a multiple level problem with the Canadian and U.S. governments, as well as the governments of Quebec, Ontario and New York State. All of these jurisdictions are involved.

The article states that the Governor of New York State said: "there is a time for the use of military force" but only after all other avenues leading toward a peaceful resolution have been explored.

Mr. Clark is quoted as having said:

> Much of the source of the problem in our view is on the U.S. side. Our expectation is that the Americans on a state and a national level will also play an effective role to resolve this as quickly and peacefully as possible.

My question is this. Is it not rather dangerous to send our police into a situation where they could be fired at with impunity across the border? If we started to fire back at them, or if they were in any way to protect themselves, we would soon have an international incident.

I believe this is a time for all levels of government to get together and to come to a solution. It is not the time for Canada to take action unilaterally, as was indicated.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for the question.

We have an international incident on our hands right now. The issue is not whether the RCMP should go in unilaterally. The responsible elected and traditional leaders of the reserve have asked that the RCMP come in and bring law and order to that situation.

Frankly, we can all slip into something of a cultural response which says that only when the local police force is asked will we regard that as a legitimate request. But here we have the legitimate authority on the reserve asking that the RCMP come in.

I may add as well that the key issue is which police force is going to be responsible for dealing with it. I do not purport to advocate that the RCMP should necessarily take any particular steps to bring about law and order. That is a decision that it should make. But the RCMP should be put clearly in charge of the situation, and it should be up to it to decide what are the appropriate police steps to be taken.

A native person today described the situation to me like this. Quebec police are on the Quebec part of the reserve. Ontario police on the Ontario part of the reserve. The RCMP is going around in boats.

It seems to me that the time has come for our national police force to move into that situation and use its judgment as to the best policing methods.

Let me conclude by trading editorials. My friend referred to The Globe and Mail of Toronto. The Ottawa Sun, a journal of great wisdom and perception on occasions—perhaps rare—had it right on this occasion. It stated today in an editorial headed "Native land":

> North American Indians often accuse the white establishment of meddling in their affairs—except when the interference is really needed.
>
> On the basis of the uproar on the Akwesasne Reserve, no doubt about it, the Indians are right.

It goes on to state that the trouble is that there are too many officials.

> So far the best most of them have been able to do is dither. Meanwhile, the 9,000 members of the reserve are, in effect, being held hostage by the Warriors Society based—in the reserve's New York sector.
>
> New York State officials keep saying controversy over the half dozen casinos is entirely a Mohawk problem. This is the coward's approach.
>
> The attitude enrages Canadian Indian leader George Erasmus who says there's no other group in either country that authorities would leave in such a predicament. He adds: "Canada has got to act".
>
> As Joe Clark said yesterday, the situation is "near anarchy".

The editorial concludes:

> He's right. We must act. Indeed, the Mounties and FBI owe it to the Mohawks to help maintain the peace on their reserve. If they wait until lives are lost, they will share the guilt for the deaths.

• (1650)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the motion currently before the House in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

In doing so I know that there is a great sense of sadness, and certainly tremendous sympathy, for the family of the young Mohawk person who was this morning killed in a violent incident on the Akwesasne Reserve near Cornwall.

I want to begin by commending the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in his concern for the basic human rights of aboriginal peoples. The motion before us focuses on the importance of recognizing that all persons are equal under the law but, at the same time, the responsibility of this federal government and all institutions of Canada is to promote the fundamental human rights of Canada's aboriginal peoples.

The motion further focuses on the impact of our justice system on Canadian natives and calls for the government to ensure the protection, liberty and security of aboriginal people.

I want to assure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and others present in this House that I share his concerns, as do all members of the House. I am personally committed to pursuing initiatives in each of the areas covered in the motion.

I rather regret the focus of the remarks by the previous speaker from Victoria who has just resumed his seat. They were all in a relatively negative vein and did not recognize the very significant progress that this government has achieved since 1984 in the resolution of important aboriginal questions and a move toward greater self-reliance, the completion of comprehensive agreements and specific claims and the improvements, although totally inadequate, but nonetheless significant, in the living conditions our native people experience in the various regions of Canada.

I am personally committed to making significant further progress in these areas in the footsteps of my three predecessors in this government since 1984.

I want to thank my colleague, the hon. Minister of State and member of Parliament for Lincoln, for her part in supporting this work and in working to these same objectives with myself, but in particular for her leadership over the past few days in regard to the Akwesasne situation while I was away in Igloolik in the Northwest Territories for an historic and widely celebrated conclusion of the largest land claim in Canada's history. I will return to that very important occasion in a few moments.

The hon. member for Lincoln should be commended for her efforts over the past few days, as should the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and other members from surrounding constituencies. They should be commended for the leadership they have taken and for the calm and wise approach in judgment that they are bringing to bear as we seek a solution, now even more important, to this serious problem in the Akwesasne community.

My colleague from Lincoln yesterday visited the government training centre in Cornwall and spoke with many of the representatives of the Akwesasne community who voluntarily left the St. Regis community site on the south side of the St. Lawrence River, a small portion of peninsula on the south side of the St. Lawrence River, but nonetheless a part of Canada. These people left their community with the assistance of Canadian enforcement agencies to seek shelter from the violence that has been brought into their midst by an element emanating from the New York State side of the reservation which is associated with the pro-gambling forces in that area.

It has been a trying time for all concerned, particularly so in light of today's disturbing events. It is not merely I, but all members of the House and all Canadians who are disturbed and saddened by the events and the death this morning of a young man.

As I said earlier, we want to extend our sympathies and those of all Canadians to the family and friends of this young Mohawk man who lost his life as a result of the senseless violence that continues there.

I have been informed by the RCMP, who learned earlier today from the Quebec provincial police force that 22-year old Matthew Pyke died at 10.57 a.m. this morning in hospital as a result of gunshot wounds. Mr. Pyke, who is a resident of Hogansburg, New York, was shot on the Canadian side, in Quebec at Snye, and was taken to a hospital in upstate New York for treatment where we ultimately expired.

I am dismayed that the situation has deteriorated to this point. One death is one death too many. I am sure all members of the House knowing how potentially explosive this issue is would want the government and all agencies to react with good judgment so as to ensure there will be no further loss of life and that we contain the violence and seek a mediated peaceful process for reversing this unfortunate situation.

The event of this morning only reinforces the urgency for all jurisdictions to recognize their obligation to maintain peace and order in the Akwesasne community. I will return to Akwesasne a little later.

On another front I would like to report that we have been making outstanding progress in the area of land claims to the benefit of our aboriginal people these past several months. In fact I would hazard to suggest that in the last two months we have had more significant progress in magnitude and in impact in resolving long remaining injustices and a lack of proper legal settlement than we have seen in this entire century.

I have just returned in the early hours this morning from Igloolik, which is way up on the western limb of Hudson Bay in the Northwest Territories, near Baffin Island. I was there for the historic signing of the agreement in principle with the Tungavik Federation of the Nunavut, an agreement which has been sought now for some 14 years and on which significant progress has only been possible as a result of a new comprehensive claims policy introduced by my colleague, the now Minister of National Defence, in 1987.

It was a matter of great pride and personal satisfaction for me to be associated with this settlement. I want to personally compliment the Tungavik Federation of the Nunavut and its president for the vision, confidence, trust and generosity that they have shown toward Canada in agreeing to this settlement.

The settlement provides the 17,000 Inuit living in the region with $580 million in compensation funding over the next 15 years and confirms their title to over 350,000 square kilometres of land, an area of about half the size of Saskatchewan, and a portion of the larger Inuit domain of the eastern Arctic which represents some 20 per cent of the total land area of Canada.

It was a longstanding commitment I had made to be in Igloolik to mark this momentous occasion and to sign the agreement on behalf of the Government of Canada.

On a personal note, I want to thank the members of the community of Igloolik for their outstanding hospitality, for the warmth of the reception shown by the young children in the local school in Igloolik, the trappers who took me out on the ice floe, the hunters, the families, and especially the elders.

The hospitality and the warmth of that visit reflected joy in the face of very significant hardships and the optimism of the Inuit people of the eastern Arctic with respect to the ultimate successful implementation of this agreement and the benefits it will bring to their very remote, but very beautiful, part of Canada.

• (1700)

I say warmth although I must add there was no central heating in the igloo, which I had the privilege of helping to construct after midnight two nights ago and in which I slept during my stay. It was a marvellous experience that few Canadians will ever experience. I consider it a great privilege to have spent a short night sleeping in an igloo. Igloovigik they call it, an ice house.

Among the many achievements of this landmark document are the provisions for wildlife harvesting rights, participation in the management of lands and resources, and a variety of economic and cultural rights and benefits. All of these measures will ensure greater self-sufficiency for the Inuit people throughout central and eastern Arctic. This agreement will also enhance the climate in the Northwest Territories for economic and political development by removing legal uncertainty on land and resource use in the eastern Northwest Territories.

The land claims settlement will not in itself create Nunavut, which is the aspired homeland for the Inuit people, but commits the territorial government and Tungavik Federation of Nunavut to set up a mechanism for achieving a northern consensus on the division of the Northwest Territories outside the claims process. This agreement once again confirms the commitment of this government to settling comprehensive claims, to improving aboriginal relations with the federal government and building stronger native and northern economies.

I mentioned earlier that progress on this and other major claims has been achieved because of the comprehensive claims policy of this government, introduced a few years ago, and also the policy on northern political and economic development, again introduced by my predecessor who is now the Minister of National Defence. He and other ministers who preceded me laid the groundwork for the completion of historic agreements.

The agreement in principle was signed yesterday. The final agreement was signed with the Dene-Métis people three weeks ago in Yellowknife, which I had the privilege of presiding over, and four weeks ago, the historic settlement of the comprehensive claim with the Council of Yukon Indians was signed right here on Parliament Hill in Ottawa. That too, will bring great benefit to the people of Yukon.

All across northern Canada, from the sixtieth latitude upward we now have settlements in the form of final agreements or in the most recent case, an agreement in principle with the TFN.

In the case of the Yukon settlement, approximately 7,000 Indians of Yukon are provided with over 41,000 square kilometres of land or approximately 8.6 per cent of all the land area of Yukon. They will receive $248 million in financial compensation and a share of the Yukon government's resource revenues when and if they are transferred to the territory, that is the jurisdiction over resource development. The agreement provides guaranteed participation in the management of lands, resources, fish and wildlife.

A little further to the east in the western Northwest Territories we have concluded an agreement. It was a difficult conclusion but one which was celebrated with great joy in Yellowknife three weeks ago. This agreement involves the two peoples, the Dene Indian communities of the western Arctic and the Métis who live in corresponding communities together. The Dene and the Métis work together under the leadership of Mr. Bill Erasmus and Mr. Garry Bohnet with the territorial government and the federal government to affect a successful conclusion to the Dene-Métis final agreement.

Under that agreement, the Dene and Métis peoples will receive ownership of over 180,000 kilometres of land, $500 million in compensation and a share of any future resource royalties which the government of the Northwest Territories will collect in the settlement area. As members of this House know, there are vast resources, particularly hydrocarbon resources—the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is in the House today—and very exciting and major developments afoot which, as a result of this agreement, will now be made possible.

The Dene and Métis will play a very fundamental role in the management and decision-making of the companies of that resource development. They will share in significant ways in the economic benefits that flow therefrom. Her e again there will be majority participation by the Dene and Métis people on the management boards. They will ensure preferential hunting and fishing rights, and exclusive trapping rights for the Dene and Métis people in the region.

These comprehensive claims agreements continue a process that has been evolving for more than two centuries. These settlements are meant to clarify the rights of aboriginal and non-aboriginal peoples with respect to land and resources north of sixty. It is a way for aboriginal people to obtain lasting protection for their traditional land based interests while, at the same time, securing rights and benefits which will assist them into the next century. We will have a legal framework in which their participation in Canada and the unique recognition of their rights will be guaranteed for all time.

Above all, the settlement of these comprehensive claims lays the groundwork for new partnerships between aboriginal peoples and their non-aboriginal neighbours. Such partnerships will benefit all of Canadian society but bring special benefit to the people of the north. The traditional aboriginal respect for and understanding of the environment and its natural dynamics will be just one of the many valuable contributions they will make to Canada's future.

I want to indicate a sense of confidence in Canada and a willingness to agree, reflecting those traditional Canadian values of generosity, tolerance and respect for one another in our differences. We certainly want to see a successful conclusion to the Meech Lake Accord. It will be the conclusion of the Meech Lake Accord which allows us to move into the next and very important stage of constitutional definition involving aboriginal peoples, the stages involving the more thorough and legally binding definition of aboriginal rights and the development of structures and institutions of self-government for the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

It is the agreements which we have just concluded, and the successful conclusion of Meech Lake which will allow us to make further major and important steps toward the full delivery on the rights of native people, to have those aboriginal rights not merely named in a Constitution but become a living reality that all Canadians can better understand.

On another topic, as hon. members are aware, a number of inquiries have been held or are currently under way into the issue of aboriginal justice. A common thread that appears to be emerging from these inquiries is the necessity to adapt the justice system to the particular needs of Indian people. Such an approach has been proposed numerous times during the initial phases of a major review undertaken by my department called the Land Revenues and Trust Review.

This review is designed to find improved mechanisms to ensure the self-administration of lands, the revenues and the rights to property by native people through a means of self-administration. When this review is completed, we believe it will constitute an important step toward effective self-government, both in treaty settlement areas and in the areas which are the beneficiaries of the new comprehensive claims and further settlements to come, especially in the province of British Columbia.

Many people believe that the only acceptable solution to the administration of justice on our reserves is to establish a justice system that recognizes the significant cultural differences that exist between Indian and non-Indian communities. Each of these alternatives, from increased use of justices of the peace to a separate Indian justice system, are being fully explored with Indian communities. In this way, we will also ensure that any changes that are made reflect the concerns of Indian communities.

If I had more time, I would like to say more about the work we are making in the new aboriginal program known as CADES, jointly with several other departments, to assist entrepreneurial development and economic opportunity for our native communities across Canada. I could speak of the implementation of Bill C-31 which brought justice to many native women who had been denied their rights to full and equal partnership and participation in the status native communities of Canada and the study that we are doing and will report to Parliament on regarding how that implementation program is going.

• (1710)

In conclusion, I would like to say once again that the issue of the last few days, particularly at Akwesasne, and the opportunity to debate aboriginal issues in this House in the context of aboriginal rights and justice, I think has allowed us to reflect on the tremendous amount of work that must yet be done and the awesome responsibility we have. We are all concerned about the violence and tension that has compelled some 600 Mohawk Canadian people to evacuate the village of St. Regis. My department is assisting in the adjustment and the needs of these people. We want to see them returned quickly and in an orderly fashion to their communities where we will see peace restored.

I urge all members of the House to contribute to the wisdom and to help by suggestions of good advice as to how we might bring the parties together and involve the State of New York and the United States federal government in bringing an end to the lawlessness which has been the trigger for this very unfortunate situation.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by asking the minister, perhaps as a symbolic gesture, but one which I hope he will join with me over the next few hours and days, to call upon the community of Akwesasne for calm, for understanding and compassion in what would obviously be very difficult times for them. As darkness draws near today we know what darkness has done to the days at Akwesasne. I invite the minister to join me in this symbolic gesture of wishing and perhaps praying that the people of Akwesasne will do what is right and will ensure that there is no further violence because, obviously, further violence will not contribute to peace.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could ask another question of the minister and he may want to respond to everything at once. First of all, I would like to offer perhaps a bit of a tribute to my colleagues, the member for Stormont—Dundas and the member for Beauharnois—Salaberry for their assistance, as always. Akwesasne, on the Canadian side, is partially in the riding of the member for Beauharnois—Salaberry and partially in mine. Everything that happens in Akwesasne has an effect on the riding of Stormont—Dundas as well. It is, of course, because it is right there beside it and the people of Stormont—Dundas are helping out.

I invite the minister to join me in thanking the good people of Stormont—Dundas for their assistance with the residents of Akwesasne. I want to ask the minister if he could give us any further information that he might have received this afternoon on the tragic incident of today and as well, on any progress of those meetings that his officials are having with the United States government. In particular, I ask him quite bluntly if his official has convinced Governor Mario Cuomo and his group that this problem will not go away and that this business of pretending that it is an internal Mohawk issue and that it is for Mohawks to deal with themselves is simply an inadequate proposition for anyone to entertain. There has to be a co-ordinated approach to disarm the community of Akwesasne because there is no room in Canada or anywhere else for machine guns, AK-47s, M-16 rifles, grenades and all that other kind of thing that we see there.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the concerned and heartfelt spirit in which the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has addressed this tragic issue.

I too, want to compliment the hon. member for Beauharnois—Salaberry and the hon. member for Stormont—Dundas whose constituents are particularly affected by this matter. The hon. member for Beauharnois—Salaberry is, in particular, the member in whose riding this tragic accident occurred in Snye, in the province of Quebec.

Responding to the member's initial plea, it is for all members of Parliament to, in any way we can, have influence and to show sensitivity and wisdom, and to take recourse to our faith, because in the final analysis the resolution of this issue will only be found in the hearts of men and women who are prepared to make peace. We would all wish for a peaceful night and a peaceful few days as government officials work with the leadership of the Akwesasne Mohawk peoples to find a lasting resolution to this problem.

The problem is complicated by geographical matters relating to a border which is difficult to enforce, and jurisdictions of one state and two provincial governments. It has to do with some criminal activities which are not just restricted to organized gambling. The majority membership which elects the councils, both the Mohawk Council of Akwesasne and the St. Regis Tribal Council, as well as the traditional chiefs have tried to find a solution. In their view on behalf of the democratically elected majority, that solution would see an end to organized gambling.

The Governor of New York state, who spoke out yesterday on this issue, offered the observation that all parties should lay down their arms before some kind of mediated process could be commenced. He offered a suggestion involving one of his officials to some form of mediated process. I think it is time now to appeal to the leadership, particularly the Governor of New York, Governor Cuomo, and officials of the U.S. State Department, to work with us realizing the serious and immediate dangers of the situation, to realize that there are emotions.

There are factors relating to certain economic disparity, but also certain economic interests which go with the activities which have led to the arming of the element of the Mohawk Warriors Society, which is creating such a terrible and tragic situation. Whether realistic or not, I think it is important that another attempt be made to seek an accommodation in which the Mohawk Warriors Society is challenged to sit down, work this matter out and dispense with the violence and the use of sophisticated armaments which are merely taking their toll on people's emotions and peace of mind, and their right to security.

Just to conclude by responding to the hon. member's question, I have not had a thorough briefing as a result of the meeting that has gone on all day in the U.S. Embassy across the street between officials of the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs and my department, under the auspices of the Department of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the U.S. State Department.

I have been told, however, that the discussions have focused on the means of gaining the agreement of the American authorities, that the solution to the Akwesasne situation requires the co-operation of all levels of government, including the American and New York state governments, and that American officials have now accepted this position, their need to be part of the solution. Furthermore, agreement was reached that an urgent meeting be arranged involving representatives of all five jurisdictions, that is; Canada, Quebec, Ontario, the U.S.A. and the state of New York. This further urgent meeting is being set up under the leadership of the federal government. More information on this meeting will be provided as soon as possible. One might ask what good are more and more meetings but meetings are the right and proper course toward peaceful settlement.

• (1720)

Earlier today, as I indicated during Question Period, the Canadian Embassy in Washington, Ambassador Burney I believe, approached the American State Department with a strong message of urgency, expressing our lack of satisfaction with the progress made today, and in light of this morning's incident, the need for much more immediate, sensitive and effective action.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will entertain one more question. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, a very short comment please.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the minister for joining in on this debate. I do have one reservation with his comments in that I did not think he addressed the wider issue that we are facing right now. That is, that although we do have a particular crisis on one reserve, perhaps it points to the inadequacy of our judicial system relating to a lot of the native communities across this country, both urban and rural.

I wonder if the minister would like to indicate to the House to what extent that his department is willing to take the initiative in co-ordinating the Solicitor General's department and the Minister of Justice and his own department for seeing that alternative systems are developed across this country to respond more meaningfully to the problems being faced by Canadian aboriginal communities.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is speaking in the broader general spirit of his resolution so I will not link that to the Akwesasne situation which he understands is very unique and demands a very unique and special form of response.

As I tried to indicate in my broader remarks, we are seriously moving toward the development of effective forms of self- government in terms of the way in which funds are managed by native bands and by the way in which schools and services are administered and also, the way in which lands, revenues and property exchanges are administered by native leadership. We are also moving seriously in the area of forms of independent native justice systems and we have made a great deal of progress in supporting native policing.

All of this is in response to the realization by our aboriginal people that the treaties signed in the past century and in the early part of this century have not worked. We have created, through the dependency on the federal government and the provisions of the Indian Act, a situation in which they are not able to control and decide their own destiny. As a result of that we are trying to respect their desire for autonomy. That is why we do not move outside police forces or other agencies in until we are invited to. We realize the systems in place are imperfect and I call on all members of Parliament to help us to improve them.

In the spirit of giving effective recognition to the concept of self-government we really want to respect the homelands and the communities of our aboriginal people. It is only in the face of a tragic incident like that which we are experiencing today that we realize the inadequacies of a system which has not yet had enough opportunity to demonstrate its weaknesses. As we discover the weaknesses and as we better learn to co-ordinate the efforts of government agencies in support of the needs of aboriginal people, I am sure we are going to do a much better job. We have a long way to go yet and in that sense I respect the spirit of the motion that the hon. member has put forward today.

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in the House today on the motion put before us by my hon. colleague, the member for Winnipeg North Centre. I would like to add my words of condolences to the Pyke family and to the entire Akwesasne family who I am sure share in the loss of a brother.

The riding of Stormont—Dundas holds these people close at heart. We have been neighbours for hundreds of years and up until the last election they were members of the constituency of Stormont—Dundas. Certainly they are now ably represented by my colleague, the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. However, our ties still run very deep and very long.

It seems odd, however, that we in 1990 are debating in the House of Commons of Canada a motion which in part calls upon this House to reaffirm that all persons are equal under the law. Sadly, when it comes to the aboriginal peoples of Canada this fundamental legal right is sometimes seen, at best, as questionable and, at worst, horribly denied.

One can find several references in our country's history where aboriginal peoples have clearly not been afforded the security of Canadian law which other Canadian citizens enjoy. Moreover, there have been numerous injustices made in the past which illustrate the lack of resources and opportunities that native Canadians have within our legal system. The Donald Marshall case in Nova Scotia is but one sad example.

Canadians are concerned about the state of affairs regarding our native population. We all believe in equality and we all value the rights and privileges we have. Our standard of living in Canada is one which is seen by others as being quite decent. However, when we examine the avenues open to native Canadians we see a different society, one which is lacking in the comparative opportunities of Canadian life.

Indeed, beyond the inequality in law there is a range of problems concerning aboriginal Canadians. In terms of social conditions, post-secondary education, health matters, economic opportunities, constitutional and other political rights, the aboriginal peoples of Canada have not been on the same level as most Canadians.

We also have to realize of course that if aboriginal peoples are denied the full measure of human rights and justice it should not be too surprising to find these additional inequalities in native life.

The government has dragged its feet for some time on the issue of establishing an aboriginal justice system. The government appears to be uninterested in creating this justice system. It has virtually ignored the desire of aboriginal peoples across Canada to attain self-government. This is hard to accept given that several judicial inquiries into the treatment of aboriginal peoples have submitted reports calling for such a system to be implemented.

I cannot understand the reasoning behind the government's reluctance to grant native Canadians an aboriginal justice system. My colleague, the member for Kenora—Rainy River, represents a riding which has some 46 native communities. He has personally witnessed the success of aboriginal programs and services in a manner far more beneficial and productive than government-run programs.

Surely the government must understand that the operation of a justice system by aboriginal peoples is a natural extension and that they would be able to operate it in an effective manner.

The government is once again, in my estimation, out of touch with the views of the Canadian people. As far back as April, 1989, a telephone research survey asked the question: "Should the native people have the right to law enforcement, trial and punishment for offences committed, on native lands?" Nationally, 73 per cent of respondents said yes; in Ontario 89 per cent agreed likewise. In every province a majority of respondents were in favour of an aboriginal justice system.

Still the government of Canada has failed to move ahead and reflect the wishes of Canadians on this matter.

In a letter dated November 20, 1989, to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development Grand Chief, Michael Mitchell of the Mohawk Council of Akwesasne clearly outlined the need for an aboriginal justice system. In discussing the problems on the Akwesasne reserve, Chief Mitchell wrote: "In times of potential violence it is human nature for people to look for signs of continued stability and progress from their leaders. Therefore, it is crucial for the Mohawk Council to demonstrate this stability and progress. In order to do this we need the co-operation of the federal and provincial governments".

• (1730)

Chief Mitchell was simply pointing out an obvious fact, that it is sensible and reasonable to suggest that aboriginal leaders are best able to understand what is required for their particular communities.

Chief Mitchell made this point very clear to the minister in a brief accompanying his letter. In referring to the Akwesasne judicial system, Chief Mitchell wrote: "As the governing body, the Mohawk Council is answerable to the Mohawk people of Akwesasne for all decisions which affect their daily lives". That being the case, I certainly believe that no aboriginal council within any native community would take their responsibilities to their people lightly.

Aboriginal leaders would not make legal decisions affecting their people on their own. Chief Mitchell writes that their council is constantly receiving advice from their people on how to handle local matters. However, when the council acts on these recommendations they find they are up against a brick wall with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

According to Chief Mitchell, out of necessity and established procedure, an accepted law by his council is sent to Indian Affairs where it is usually rejected. The basis for this rejection is part of the over-all problem. In Chief Mitchell's assessment: "Government officials sitting at a desk far from Akwesasne cannot possibly know of the background information or circumstances prompting the passing of a law".

There are several circumstances for aboriginal leaders to invoke laws in their communities. It is impossible for bureaucrats who only look at the drafted law to see the reasons for such a law or the conditions which exist in the community. According to Chief Mitchell, these laws are usually rejected without consultation with his council. In the past four years, Chief Mitchell indicates that 14 council laws have been disallowed by the federal government. Most of these had to do with protecting the community from illegal activities brought into the reserve from the outside. These rejections do not help the relationship between the aboriginal leaders and Indian Affairs.

We have another problem here and that concerns the antiquated Indian Act. In a brief sent to all members of Parliament in April, the Native Women's Association of Canada states that the Act's very title "evokes feelings and actions that have caused anguish, pain and suffering to Indian people for well over 200 years and it continues".

The association points out that while the rest of the country takes pride in its growth and prosperity, the original peoples of this land continue to suffer needlessly as a result of legislation which affects aspects of native life from birth to death.

In terms of justice, the Mohawk Council of Akwesasne believes the interpretation of the Indian Act is so narrow in scope that the laws passed for Akwesasne cannot be sanctioned by the federal government. In the opinion of Chief Mitchell, such a situation limits the legal capacity of the Mohawk Council to regulate activities within Akwesasne and is contradictory to the process of self-government. Most would also come to the conclusion that the Indian Act is as bad for self-government and aboriginal justice as it is for the protection of aboriginal human rights.

It is clear that an aboriginal justice system would alleviate a good portion of the problems caused to some degree by the injustices of the Indian Act. Unfortunately, the present government does not see this. It seems more content to express vocal concern about native self-government and the ever-pressing need for an aboriginal justice system, but never seems to get around to implementing it.

Unfortunately, native Canadians continue to suffer. They are denied full access to human and legal rights and self-determination. The current state of native life in Canada does not present a vibrant, promising picture. Life on reserves is increasingly difficult. Native leaders and their councils are unable to adequately govern in their communities. They are restricted by an Indian Act which is badly in need of change while at the same time having to cope with a number of negative socio-economic issues.

It is also difficult to make do with the policies and programs thrown to them by a federal government which has no commitment and no vision for the future of aboriginal peoples.

I have no doubt at at all that the present crisis on the Akwesasne reserve may well have been avoided, if the Mohawk people on both sides of the border had the rights and opportunities as those afforded to most citizens in both countries.

It is important that this House reaffirm its support and commitment to aboriginal human rights and equality under the law. I know that members will indeed want to convey to our native population that they are willing to support a system of justice which is suited to their particular needs and aspirations. It is imperative, however, that the government start to show leadership in creating aboriginal justice initiatives and assist in the development of such a system in consultation with native leaders across the country. We have an opportunity to correct past wrongs and implement necessary changes which will create a better future for the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and speak to this motion introduced by my colleague for Winnipeg North Centre which is the adjacent constituency to my riding of Winnipeg North. I thank my colleague from Stormont—Dundas for sharing his time with me.

The motion states:

> That this House reaffirm that all persons are equal under the law and demand that the government (1) promote this fundamental human right for Canada's aboriginal peoples, (2) ensure that our system of justice is more responsive and suitable, (3) pursue alternative aboriginal justice initiatives, and (4) in cases of jurisdictional conflict, that the Government of Canada, in consultation with aboriginal leaders, ensure the protection of the life, liberty, and security of aboriginal people who are entitled to the status of Canadian citizens.

This motion sends twin messages from Parliament to the government that the government reaffirm equality under the law and demand that this equality be fulfilled; that the law should recognize no class, colour, creed or origin when it treats citizens and that, moreover, the law should recognize the inherent dignity of all human beings.

This principle is embodied in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Why then do we have to reaffirm it in the motion of today? Because we recognize that there is a threat to, a weakness in and, in some instances, actual failure of our Canadian justice system.

The evidence for this failure has been alluded to by my colleagues who have spoken earlier: the Betty Osborne murder in The Pas, Manitoba, that went unsolved for more than a decade; the J.J. Harper killing in Winnipeg as a consequence of prejudgment by our police department; and the Donald Marshall wrongful imprisonment in Nova Scotia. All these injustices reflect the continuing struggle that native people continually face in our country.

We have all heard of or seen the conditions endured by the great majority of Canada's native people. Most reserves in isolated communities have experienced great difficulties in developing an economy capable of sustaining their growing populations. The results are tragic. We have witnessed for them high levels of unemployment, welfare, violence, suicide and alcoholism.

It appears that political self-determination and economic self-sufficiency for them are almost unreachable goals. We have to understand that aboriginal peoples want their culture, traditions and pride back.

The situation of the First Nations' people has been likened to that of blacks in South Africa. I do not think the analogy is accurate or fair. The fact, however, that it is made at all speaks volumes about this aspect of Canada's international profile.

Let me quote from a letter dated March 28, 1990 from Phil Fontaine of the Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs to the Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission: He stated:

> The Canadian Government is perceived internationally, as a strong advocate of Human Rights, as is the case with its high profile role in support of the Black struggle for independence in South Africa. It is often a source of financial support to Third World Countries. It speaks out against Human Rights abuse in other countries. Through these gestures, Canada has gained a strong international reputation as a staunch defender of human rights. This is in sharp contrast domestically with its relationship with First Nations people.

That is the assessment by the Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs.

Even the United Nations Human Rights Commission has examined the allegations of treaty violations in Canada. How can we respond to such a situation? One way is to re-examine certain aspects of these relations. For example, the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs is just beginning a review of the government's comprehensive claims policy. Yet this review alone is not enough. This policy is only one aspect of the complex relationship between Canada and some native peoples. Many government services to native people are not even addressed by these claims; Métis and non-status Indians are not even addressed by that policy. There is considerable disillusion with the claims themselves. For example, the Cree of northern Quebec are arguing that the claim they negotiated should be declared null and void due to non-compliance by the federal government.

• (1740)

Let me quote from the 1988 report of the Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. He said:

> Surely, one supposes, in a country like Canada, it is not possible that an entire group of people should, in the 1990s, be so remote from sharing in the benefits that others take for granted. Surely, with all the money and effort that are lavished on the problem, it ought to be amenable to solution. Once again, however, the unpleasant fact of the matter is that it has not been, and that it still shows only rudimentary signs of being resolved.

The time for piecemeal approaches to such a complex situation of the first peoples of our country has passed. In fact, when you look at the 1990 report, Unfinished Agenda for all Canadians in the 1990s, of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs, it has addressed 30 issues, from land claims to literacy.

The time has come for the Government of Canada to establish a national royal commission on aboriginal peoples, to consolidate all previous reports on this issue, to examine the remaining relevant issues on a broader perspective, and to offer realistic solutions—to correct the tragic and the continuing tragic situations for our aboriginal people.

About a year ago, I put on the Order Paper a resolution to this effect. Of course, it has not yet had a chance to be put forward for debate. I thought I should seize this opportunity to speak about the need to establish a royal commission on this issue. This has been echoed by the major media, like The Globe and Mail, in our country. This royal commission should examine all aspects of the relationship between the Government of Canada and the native peoples of this land. It should recognize the many strengths of native communities and successes of government policy as well as the weaknesses and failures. It should look to the future as well as acknowledge the past and, above all, it should hear the thoughts and aspirations of the native peoples themselves.

In 1987, on the occasion of the visit to Canada of His Holiness Pope Paul II, a headline in the Toronto Star, September 21, 1987, read: "Let Canada be a model to the world for the rights of native people", and he continued, "For a just and equitable degree of self-governing, with the land base and adequate resources necessary for the development of a viable economy for present and future generations". He called on Canada to ensure the basic aboriginal rights, including self-government.

My former leader, the Right Hon. John Turner, as quoted in the Toronto Star the following day stated:

> MPs should act on the Pope's message by amending the Meech Lake accord to include regularly scheduled constitutional conferences on native self-determination.
>
> "Aboriginal peoples cannot wait indefinitely".

The royal commission can serve as an instrument for national self re-examination, reconciliation and unity. It could serve as a tool for achieving consensus, to raise the profile of the issues to the Canadian consciousness and thereby achieve the desired changes. This royal commission may well serve as the milestone in the rebirth of native peoples in Canada, as a cornerstone of new relationships between the aboriginal and non-aboriginal peoples of our country.

In conclusion, I would like to quote briefly from the report of the Standing Committee of our Parliament in March this year, An Unfinished Agenda for all Canadians in the 1990s which stated:

The circle of Confederation will not be complete until the social, the economic and political marginalization of Canada's aboriginal people is reversed.

The report of the Canadian Human Rights Commission indicated that a national Royal commission could play a useful role in achieving consensus without being used as an excuse for delaying important practical developments.

In the years ahead, our success in forging a new association between the aboriginal and the non-aboriginal Canadians will be the prime nature of our commitment to equality and our skill in nation building and, at the very end, we can relive the message of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of 200 years ago: "All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights". Let us make our native people equal with all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we have 15 minutes left. I therefore would like to ask the unanimous consent of the House for sharing my speaking time with my colleague here behind me, who would like to speak to the same subject. If you agree, I will take four or five minutes.

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Hudon: I want to thank the House for its understanding at this tragic moment.

First of all, I would like to join the entire community on the Akwesasne reserve in offering my sincere condolences to the family of Matthew Pyke who died this morning. When I say family, I am aware that on reserves, the meaning of the word family differs from my own because it also includes Grand Chief Mike Mitchell with whom I often had the honour and the privilege of working, and I realize how deeply affected they must be at this moment on the reserve.

Mr. Speaker, this morning's casualty occurred in my riding. I should explain that the Akwesasne Indian Reserve is divided into three parts: one part is in Quebec, in my riding; one part is in the riding of my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, and the third part is in the United States. I cannot remain unmoved by these events, because I have often acted to defend the rights of people who asked for help on the reserve, and I think it is often brought home more strikingly when we have tragic events such as those occurring today.

From my riding of Beauharnois—Salaberry, if I want to visit people in the reserve that is located in my riding, I have to go through the United States and come back via Ontario to finally get there. Mr. Speaker, there are personal problems and physical problems on the reserve. There are physical problems that once solved could probably help us deal with the human problems, because considering what is happening along the border, we could probably have organized an effective patrol if we had a land link that would have allowed us to go directly from our side to the territory that is on the Canadian side of the border.

Mr. Speaker, at the end of March, I found it very moving—my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell was also invited but he could not attend that morning—when I went to St. Lawrence College in Cornwall where a program was launched in which the federal government invested about $600,000, which came from the budgets of the Department of Employment and Immigration and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I am referring to the Mohawk Law and Security Program. I saw about thirty students who said they were ready to continue their education and were in fact taking courses in communications, defence, law, American law and Canadian law. I saw a chief, Mike Mitchell, and at the time it surprised me to see a chief who was broken, not morally, but a man who was getting a lot of threats and who told me that morning, in public: This may be my last public appearance as chief.

• (1750)

Fortunately, he changed his mind, but this man is now under terrific pressure and is receiving a lot of threats.

I think Chief Mike Mitchell, like Jean-Guy Hudon or anyone else in this House, has a right to want to live in peace and develop his community on the basis of principles he holds dear, principles that run very deep among the first inhabitants of this riding.

Do I have the right to intervene, Mr. Speaker? I certainly do. And I have that right because these are people from my riding, people whom I have never denied assistance, whom I have never turned down. Personally, I think this is a tragedy, and I would urge the departments to co-ordinate their operations and especially to show our U.S. neighbours that there are problems in this respect and that we must find a solution. What is happening to Mike Mitchell, to the people in my community and to those in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell is probably due to the fact that government authorities cannot agree on what to do and are afraid to intervene.

The other day I had an unfortunate experience because people wanted to establish a nuclear waste site right near the Canada—U.S. border. I intervened, and people said: "You know, you don't put a nuclear waste site in a national park. But it isn't dangerous. You don't put it in a reserve. It isn't dangerous".

It's funny how careful people are when a reserve is concerned. when we should intervene, we are excessively prudent, and when a chief like Mike Mitchell asks for help, we may be in less of a hurry to do so because there is the human factor. And there are some very serious examples of this at work right now.

I strongly urge this government and this House to intervene as quickly as possible and explain to our neighbours to the south that any intervention should be co-ordinated, effective and respect the values dear to our friends living on the reserve, and ensure that these people will be able to live and prosper within their own territory.

Mr. Speaker, I yield immediately to my colleague who certainly has a few things to add on the subject.

[English]

Mr. Willie Littlechild (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to rise in the House today to speak to the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

In the last few months that I have been in the House, I have had the privilege of serving on the justice committee and also on the aboriginal affairs committee. In view of what is happening in the last few months with respect to the justice inquiries that have been held, I think it is particularly timely today to be talking on this issue.

The fundamental freedoms of our aboriginal peoples, and other members of Canadian society, are protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The charter clearly identifies and guarantees basic human rights, and provides a means of redress to the courts should these rights be denied or infringed by governments.

Among the rights enshrined by the charter that may be considered of particular importance to our native peoples are the right to worship in a manner, place and time that one chooses, and the freedom to pursue activities and goals in association with others.

Another key protection enshrined in the charter is the right to be equal before and under the law and the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination on any ground, including race, national or ethnic origin, and colour.

Moreover, the equality guarantee in the charter is expressly phrased so as not to preclude laws or programs designed to favour individuals or groups who may be at a disadvantage in society. Such laws or programs could, of course, include native people and numerous government programs are structured to provide affirmative action for aboriginal peoples.

The charter has also been successfully employed to protect the livelihood of native people who rely on hunting as a way of life. For example, in the Chief case, a mandatory five-year prohibition on possession of firearms for conviction of a weapons offence was held by the Yukon Territory Court of Appeal to be cruel and unusual punishment, contrary to the charter, in the case of aboriginal people. The court recognized that the effect of the mandatory prohibition on possession of firearms for an aboriginal person who relied on trapping could result in the deprivation of that person's livelihood and lifestyle. Accordingly, in light of the totally debilitating effect that the prescribed punishment would have had on the aboriginal accused, the court altered the sentence.

Mention must also be made of Section 25 of the Charter, which specifically protects aboriginal concerns. This section makes clear that no other provision of the Charter can be used in a way that will interfere with any special rights that the native people have now or may acquire.

For example, any new benefits aboriginal people may gain from a settlement of land claims would not run afoul of the general equality rights as set out in the Charter. As well, Section 35 of the Constitution Act 1982, states that the existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are recognized and affirmed.

Both of these sections were possible only after very considerable work by aboriginal people like those of the Four Nations of Hobbema. These provisions, and others, were written into the Canadian Constitution specifically at their request and of other native organizations. Representatives of these groups argued forcibly for recognition that would help their people preserve their culture and identity, customs, traditions, languages and treaty rights.

Rights without any means of redress would be empty, so the Charter provides that any person whose rights or freedoms have been infringed or denied may obtain a remedy from the courts. The federal government, recognizing that without financial assistance, deserving individuals or groups may not be able to challenge federal legislation or practices in the courts, has established a special fund to assist litigation of important equality issues. The Court Challenges Program has a budget for litigation and legal research, plus administration funds over five years, and is administered by a private non-profit organization. To date native groups have benefited from this fund.

In summation, I think it should be clear that the Charter offers protection to aboriginal groups. These groups have used the Charter to challenge government policies and to enforce native rights. This is the way it should be. The Charter is a document that we, as Canadians, should be proud of. It reflects our heritage as a just society, as well as our continued respect for fundamental human values.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being awfully close to 6 o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 81(17) proceedings on the motion have expired.

* * *

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill S-15, an act to amend the Act of incorporation of Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 is deemed to have been moved.

WOMEN'S CENTRES

Mr. Phillip Edmonston (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I rose in the House some time ago to protest the cuts affecting women's centres. I put a number of questions to the Secretary of State, and I am not very satisfied with the answers, because it seems that whenever we ask him why he cut subsidies for women's centres, he always says he increased the subsidies. Actually, it seems we have a communications problem and I will explain why.

First of all, we know that in some programs, money is always available for women to set up certain projects. We are not challenging the funding for various projects but the way women's centres are being attached by cutting core funding, in other words, money for ongoing activities. This is a very serious problem because when groups such as women's centres, consumer associations or any other non-profit association have ongoing activities and funding is cut for those activities, the government is actually controlling these organizations, Mr. Speaker.

Personally, as a former president of an association that was often obliged to ask the government for subsidies, I was often in a situation where governments said: Listen, we can't give you the money for hydro and rent and basic needs, but we can give you all kinds of subsidies for small projects. All kinds of small projects. Meaning that we, the government, can give you the money for any project we are willing to approve.

I imagine that in the case of a women's centre, this has a destabilizing and even destructive impact because you spend all your time trying to get subsidies for various projects. This means you have keep justifying the fact that you need money. You are leading a hand-to-mouth existence. And the people you hire will only be there for the duration of the project. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, if you, as Speaker of the House, were given a contract for three months. Would you have agreed to be here for just three months? Of course not. I think that, like any reasonable and intelligent person, you would have sought longer-term employment. At least, I think so.

That is the problem with the cuts to the women's centres. It is demoralizing for the women's centres, as for any group, and it forces them to always ask the governments for money; they are even forced to offer programs or projects that suit the governments but that may not be so suitable for the community or be in tune with its needs.

So, Mr. Speaker, I hope that this time the government will understand me. It will also understand, I hope, why the women are fighting. The 75 women's centres across the country, and especially the 39 women's centres in Quebec, are not just protesting the cuts. It is not just that.

Please do not say that you gave a lot of money yesterday. Yes, you gave some, you made a lot of money available to them for projects. But I am not talking about that.

I am talking about core funding, the grants for ongoing activities.

And now I will ask you to be a little more sensitive to our requests. I am new here in the House of Commons and I always believed that people on both sides, in the government and the opposition, were reasonable.

So I appeal to your reasonableness and if you want proof that what I am saying to you is correct, before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I will quote you an excerpt from a letter by someone who sits for the government, who is even a minister of the government. I am talking about the hon. Minister for International Trade, that great defender of women's rights, that great friend of the member for Hamilton East. He himself said—he even wrote a letter—

[English]

I want to say what the minister wrote in English. It is very short, Mr. Speaker, and I will conclude with that because I find it tells the government, from a member of the government, what the position is.

The minister wrote to the Secretary of State complaining about the decision to cut funding for 75 women's centres across the country and asked that every possible effort be made to keep the centres open. He said specifically: "I can assure you that the women of Newfoundland and Labrador will suffer desperately without these centres and since the cut to core funding for women's centres in Newfoundland is only $240,000 and the national figure amounts to only $1.6 million, it is hard to believe that money is the real issue here".

• (1805)

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his question. I believe it was on April 10 that he put his question to the Secretary of State. At that time he was referring mainly to the women's centres in his own home province so the answer that I have prepared is more specifically related to his home province than to the total question on which he has elaborated tonight.

In his own home province the Quebec provincial government has committed to improving the social welfare of women in the province and that government must be commended for the action that it has taken.

The budget for women's centres of the provincial Ministry of Health and Social Affairs was more than $800,000 in 1988–89. Last August the Quebec government increased the funding for women's centres to $2.7 million by the end of the 1992 fiscal year.

This is a fine example of a provincial government taking on its responsibilities. That is the point. The core funding for the centres are a provincial responsibility and that is why the minister is working with regard to the project funding. This is a fine example of how a provincial government can work with the federal government during a time of economic restraint to sustain programs that are vital to the health of our country.

The government is well aware of the excellent work carried out in women's centres. Along with the support provided by the Quebec government and other provincial governments through their funding for services, the Department of the Secretary of State is making project funding available to centres that previously had received core funding to carry out education activities.

Project funding can be used to address issues such as family violence, pornography, sexual assault, employment equity and other concerns. Along with provincial funding, the Secretary of State has assured women's centres that they will be eligible for funding for the administrative costs related to the project activities.

So, Mr. Speaker, the Government of Quebec has recognized the absolute necessity of having strong women's centres in that province. I hasten to add that Manitoba has also shown provincial leadership in this area. There are four women's centres in that province and each receives approximately $115,000 of annual funding from the provincial government.

This government is living up to its fiscal responsibilities, not only for Canadians today but for the future generations as well. Financial responsibility does not mean that essential services must disappear. With the co-operation of the provinces all of us, as a nation, can work together to ensure that women's centres are able to continue to play their important role in Canadian society.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, on March 26 I asked the Minister of the Environment to explain why this government has failed to involve itself in the fight to eradicate aquatic milfoil weed in the interior lakes of southern British Columbia. I did not get a very satisfactory answer at that point, Mr. Speaker, and that is why I am back here at this time.

The Eurasian milfoil weed, scientifically called Myriphyuum Spicatum, is a very rapidly growing aquatic weed species that has infested many of the lakes and rivers in the interior of the province of B.C. It is because of its growth rate and its ability to actually regenerate when it has been fragmented, for example, by boat propellers, that it has proliferated to such an extent and has choked off many recreational areas and now, in fact, threatens to invade many of our salmon bearing streams and rivers.

I will read a very brief excerpt from the October 1989 edition of the British Columbia Report. It says:

> The province's latest battle with milfoil has forced its small army of milfoil combatants into retreat and has prompted local governments in the Shuswap area to admit defeat. All this despite a—campaign to stomp out the proliferate water weed. Two regional districts and the provincial government were involved in the fight, but even their best efforts weren't enough to root out the spindly foe.

• (1810)

This uncontrolled growth of the milfoil weed poses a serious environmental threat as well as a serious economic threat. The Okanagan and the Shuswap Lakes watersheds rely very heavily on clean lakes for their tourism industry. The overgrowth of this particular weed is already costing the local tourist industry in the Okanagan and Shuswap area valuable business as tourists go elsewhere rather than deal with the clogged propellers and the beaches that have been strewn with rotting weeds.

In 1985 tourists brought over $287 million to the Okanagan region and spent about 80 per cent of their time on the beaches. Recent market studies have shown that a growing number of these tourists are in fact going elsewhere, having become very concerned because of the deteriorating quality of the lakes.

Swimming, boating and fishing certainly are not the only things that are affected by the proliferation of this weed. The thick weed carpet acts as a filter and traps garbage and sediment which settles on the lake bottom and interferes with normal water flows and the ecological balance of those lakes.

Despite their years of effort, the North Okanagan Regional District, as well as the Columbia Shuswap Regional District, have been fighting essentially a losing battle with this nuisance weed.

At this point nature has, at least for now, conquered man in the Shuswap and she holds the upper hand in the South Okanagan where the weed has virtually taken over the Okanagan River. It has threatened Kokanee salmon and is running rampant in Vaseaux Lake near Oliver where it first appeared in 1981.

In Shuswap Lake to the north there is great concern that commercial houseboats may in fact be carrying the weed into nearby lakes and rivers. In Woods Lake, Kalamalka Lake, Skaha Lake and Okanagan Lake, all throughout the interior, thousands of hectares of waterfront have been spoiled with the growth of this weed.

In 1989 a survey of Shuswap Lake showed a 20 per cent increase in the weed growth from the previous year, even with the control efforts, with new infestations appearing on Seymour Arm and right in the main body of Shuswap Lake.

The regional districts and the provincial governments are losing ground in the milfoil battle. The Columbia–Shuswap Regional District has recently passed a resolution requesting federal assistance in this battle to control this aquatic weed species. I think I can safely say that the resolution has the full support of the North Okanagan Regional District as well as the Okanagan Basin Water Water Board and local councils.

The fact of the matter is that the time has come for federal involvement in this environmental and economic crisis. The 1987 federal water policy, I might remind you, commits this government to a co-operative approach to water management problems with the various provinces. The policy emphasizes an integrated approach to water management that can only be construed as a direct involvement in such environmental issues in concert with the provinces and the regions of those provinces.

The Minister of the Environment, while expressing interest in the milfoil problem when I brought it up on March 26, was characteristically vague in what action he would take. In talking to the minister after the debate in the Chamber here, he indicated that after his Green Plan was announced he would like his advisers to meet with me on that very issue. Well that was over a month ago and I am still waiting.

I would like to ask the minister's representative who is going to be answering shortly whether the Minister of the Environment at this time, or in the immediate future, will meet with myself and my colleagues, the hon. member for Kamloops and the hon. member for Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt. All three of our ridings are directly involved with this very critical issue. Would he meet with us as a delegation to discuss specifically what actions he and his ministry are prepared to take regarding this very, very serious environmental concern that essentially affects the entire interior portion of British Columbia?

• (1815)

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member opposite for clearly stating the problem in our British Columbia lake system. I am quite familiar with it because it is my home province as well.

He quite correctly stated that we did put a water policy out in 1987 which stated that the federal government would co-operate with provincial governments in co-operative management of water resources. He knows, too, that under the Constitution Act, the provinces exercise direct control over many aspects of water management. As the overview to the federal water policy states, the federal government intends to work in conjunction with the provinces and territories to encourage the provision of safe and sufficient water supplies for Canadians in areas of federal and shared responsibilities.

The federal government policy incorporates two main goals. The first is to protect and enhance the quality of the water resource. This means that the federal government will work to anticipate and prevent contamination of Canadian water supplies by harmful substances introduced through pollution and to encourage the restoration of waters that are already contaminated. We are realizing this goal by developing and, as in the case of the British Columbia, implementing such programs as joint water monitoring agreements. The second goal is to promote the wise and efficient management and use of water, meaning that new ground rules must be established that respect the value of water to all sectors of society and to the environment.

The infestation of which the member opposite speaks in the interior of British Columbia lakes by Eurasian water milfoil as with lakes in other parts of Canada, has been of concern since the early 1970s. The federal government has devoted considerable time, effort and money to try and solve the problems generated by this weed. Its propogation is not brought about by increased water pollution or the deterioration of water quality, but by the aggressive way it grows once it enters a lake. The problems caused by this weed are primarily related to recreation and tourism, to aesthetics and to access to swimming beaches, rather than to the quality of the water itself.

The responsibility for actual weed control operations rests with provincial and local governments. There are existing cost-shared programs for aquatic weed control between the B.C. Ministry of Environment and local authorities such as the Columbia-Shuswap Regional District and the Okanagan Basin Water Board. This mechanism—

Mr. MacWilliam: They don't have enough money to do the job.

Mr. Belsher: I hear the hon. member. Everybody wants more money and the federal government is not what you would call flush with money.

I think that what is taking place has been working quite well as far as the money goes. Relief is provided at the highest priority for the recreational areas.

The federal government continues to play an important role in both liaison and technology transfer with the province of British Columbia by its participation on the federal-provincial B.C. Aquatic Weed Advisory Committee. As well as Environment Canada, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is also active on that committee. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans has funded and undertaken research studies in Cultus Lake, B.C.—which is in my riding—to assess the value of Eurasian milfoil as habitat for juvenile fish. By contrast, the effect that infestations of this weed have on fish habitat is not yet known.

The infestation in the lakes of the interior of British Columbia by Eurasian milfoil, as with the lakes in other parts of Canada, has been of real concern and continues to be of real concern.

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me this opportunity this afternoon to seek clarification from the Minister of Transport with respect to a question I asked him some weeks ago in this House.

On April 2 I questioned the minister about the inefficient and unsafe conditions at Pearson International Airport. More specifically, asked about the relationship between the statements he had made in several instances to this House and how they did not confirm the report of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board that was issued on the date that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board was disbanded.

The question was not a difficult one. It dealt with several of those recommendations. I asked the minister specifically what he intended to do with respect to the 48 recommendations that were made by the Canadian Aviation Safety Board that date and what type of timeframe the minister was proposing with respect to their implementation. I asked that mainly because some of the recommendations of the very thorough, in depth study made by the safety board required some immediate implementation.

• (1820)

What I received was, in essence, almost no reply. I would almost think that the minister did not not want to reply because of the very unsafe and inefficient conditions that exist at Pearson International Airport at the present time.

The questions I asked were confirmed by the report to which I have been referring. Simply, why was there, in the year just ended, a 66 per cent increase in the number of near-misses in the southern Ontario airspace from the previous year? That is a pretty simple question. Why are we having more near-misses in the airspace around Pearson today than we had a year ago?

What is really happening at Pearson Airport with respect to the efficiency of that airport? Why is there such a slowdown in the operations and services they are providing?

More important, we have heard in this House on many instances reference to the air traffic controllers. Why is the morale among the air traffic controllers at Pearson International Airport so low? What is happening with those people in that position of such great responsibility? Why are they not more enthused about doing the job? Thank goodness they are dedicated people in that profession who have mainly the safety of the travelling public as their goal.

Why do different departments, airside and groundside, not appear to operate co-operatively and effectively in the administration of the Pearson Airport?

The Speaker of the House and I were both in Pearson airport. He was coming from Vancouver and I was coming from Thunder Bay and we were both sitting in the airport waiting for the plane to Ottawa when there was a security breach and one of the alarms went off. The question I asked, which has still not been answered, and which I will continue to ask in this House, is why it took 15 and a half minutes for the RCMP to respond to that breach of security at Canada's largest airport. When they did respond they could not give any logical reason, and I explored it in full detail, why it took them 15 and a half minutes to respond.

I am trying to ask the Minister of Transport, through you Mr. Speaker and through the House, for the benefit of all Canadians who use our airspaces, why these conditions are allowed to exist at Pearson International Airport.

In essence those are the questions I would like my friend across to answer this afternoon. I know that we are under some time restraints. If I could get some assurance that those questions would be answered this afternoon, I would be prepared to sit down right now and rely on his answers. Let me conclude and give him the opportunity to answer those questions. I hope he will take all of the time that is still available to me and the time that is available to him to respond.

I am not catching him off guard. My hon. friend was at a transport committee meeting with me just a short while ago and I told him I was going to use some comparisons as I was asking this question this afternoon. As he said to the previous speaker, he is from the Province of British Columbia. We know that the airport in Vancouver is perhaps one of the most efficient airports in the whole of Canada and it faces much the same problems as Pearson faces on a day-to-day basis. It has almost as many flights. In fact, propeller driven aircraft and helicopters at Vancouver airport far exceed those at Pearson.

For the benefit of all Canadians who use these airports, why do we not adopt at Pearson the good management philosophies that we are using at the Vancouver airport in his province? That is fairly simple and it would solve the problems that we are experiencing at Pearson.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity of asking those questions.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman opposite makes it all sound so very simple. I wish it were. However, the member opposite has a continuing interest in what is happening at Pearson airport because he has a vital interest in air safety and air traffic in Ontario.

The report that he talked about, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board's report on air traffic, which did make 48 recommendations for improving the Canadian system, should not be interpreted as 48 deficiencies within the system at Lester B. Pearson International Airport.

As mentioned, the recommendations made by the CASB pertain to the entire system, some of which are related to technology now in the research and development stage, while others require international agreement and participation in the area providing control over the high seas.

The CASB recommendations can be implemented quickly. Indeed, the majority already have been. I can assure the hon. member that all recommendations have been given the utmost attention.

As part of that, as an ongoing procedure, the minister did put together a task force on aviation matters. In fact, it was such an important matter that my colleague, the Minister of Transport, established a task force in order to seek the expertise of the private sector, the industry and the government. The aim of that task force was to ensure that we have the right resources and that they are used in the right way in order to meet the changing needs of the future.

Speaking more specifically of Toronto, as we all know, Toronto is our busiest airport in Canada. The air traffic controllers have a difficult job which they do well. As the member knows very well, we are working to improve the situation at Toronto. We have hired former American controllers. We have increased the number of training seats available. There has been a cap on airline movements per hour at Toronto which will not be removed until the minister is satisfied that traffic can be handled safely and efficiently.

I can assure the hon. member that Toronto is still being actively studied to make sure that it is able to fill its role in the airline and transportation industry of this country.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion that the House do now adjourn is deemed to have been adopted. The House therefore stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.28 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 2, 1990

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

MENTAL HEALTH WEEK

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, four and a half million Canadians suffer from emotional disorders that exact great personal and financial grief. It is thus fitting that May 1 to 7 is designated National Mental Health Week to ensure that mental health remains a priority of every Canadian, indigenous and new.

New Canadians face additional risk factors insofar as threat to their mental health is concerned. Negative public attitudes, separation from family and community, inability to speak the language fluently, and difficulty in finding suitable employment are known causes of emotional distress among the newcomers to Canada. Indeed, mental health involves every aspect of our lives.

This year's focus, mental health in the workplace, reinforces a universal belief that a sound mind is needed for efficiency in the working environment. The Canadian Medical Association is to be commended for holding week-long events to increase national awareness of mental health.

National leadership is challenged once more to control the forces that increase risk of mental ill health, to eliminate the stigma attached to it and to increase resources for treatment approaches.

I ask the Department of Health and Welfare to accept the challenge. I ask the government to make mental health one of its continuing priorities. A sound mind and a sound body make every Canadian prepared to meet the challenges of our country today and tomorrow.

[Translation]

ADMAIL

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, most of Quebec's regional weeklies are distributed free of charge and depend on advertising to make up their costs.

Outside major urban centres, they reach nearly three-quarters of the population. By carrying flyers, they can afford to set aside more space for local news that is not picked up by the larger media.

By creating Admail, the Canada Post Corporation is taking a slice of the market and threatening the very survival of the weekly press in Quebec. Furthermore, the Corporation is abusing its privileges, thus the consumer and business.

At a time when our government is trying to create a French news channel that stresses local news, it would hardly be appropriate to undermine another channel for local news that is also directed mainly to Francophones across Canada.

In concluding, I want to ask the minister to demand the dismantling of Admail.

* * *

[English]

FISHERIES

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, the 1990 groundfish plan introduced a cap on the participation of fishing vessels from west of Halifax in the 4VSW fishery. This has caused considerable hardship to many fishermen, particularly those from Halifax, Lunenburg and Queens Counties.

With the beginning of the second trimester and with the Haché recommendations not yet in place, I urge the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to immediately lift the cap and allow boats from southern Nova Scotia to participate fully in their historic fishing grounds.

S. O. 31

POVERTY

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, a spokesperson for the police force last weekend stated that people on social assistance should be forced to practice birth control because their "limited genetic pool" results in welfare breeding welfare.

From one end of this country to the other, Canadians living in poverty are under attack.

From opinion leaders and authority figures we hear that it is the poor who are to blame for their poverty. We hear that crime, drug and alcohol abuse, and family violence are the fault of the poor. Now we are hearing that to be poor means that you are to be denied the comfort, the support and the love of a family.

To be poor means to be stripped of your dignity and treated differently. It means to be treated by some Orwellian notion of population control.

[Translation]

Yesterday in Montreal, 3,500 people demonstrated against poverty. At Point St. Charles and Saint-Henri, nearly one-third of the population lives in poverty. Unfortunately, this kind of situation is spreading across the country.

[English]

These towns are at Third World levels. We need action from this government and we need it now.

* * *

• (1410)

[Translation]

HYDRO-QUEBEC

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my attention was drawn to an article: "GST reduces Hydro's expenses, but consumers will not benefit", that appeared today in La Presse.

According to several of accounting experts, Hydro-Quebec deliberately neglected to subtract from its projections the cost reduction that will take place next year when the federal sales tax is abolished.

In its draft development plan, Hydro-Quebec established its cost projections as though there would be no federal tax reform next year. Furthermore, Hydro-Quebec neglected to inform consumers of the amount it will save in federal tax.

Mr. Speaker, although when the new tax becomes effective, the old tax will automatically disappear, it seems like Hydro-Quebec residential customers will have to pay both the old and new tax.

* * *

ALCAN

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, at their shareholders' meeting, Alcan management again said no to Jonquière about installing electrostatic precipitators for the Soderberg cell rooms.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why Alcan is treating the community of Jonquière like this. How can they close the Soderberg cell rooms, bring in bulldozers and make a nice lawn, without having any plans for a replacement project for Jonquière?

Building new factories in Laterrière, Alma and possibly Shawinigan is all very well, but what are you doing for Jonquière?

Mr. Speaker, let me direct a few words to these authorities. I am sorry but it is your responsibility to provide a replacement factory or some substantial project for the Jonquière area.

You are supposed to make the decisions, but it makes no sense to invest all around Jonquière, and ignore Jonquière itself! As a result, property values in this town will go down substantially and many jobs will be lost.

Through me, the people of Jonquière ask you to revise your investment plan to include Jonquière.

* * *

[English]

AGRICULTURE

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to reflect for a moment on the words of the member from Lisgar—Marquette who, during a supply debate on his own motion in 1984, called upon the government of the day to resist the downward adjustment of initial payments for western grain.

The member, now Minister of Grains and Oilseeds, was incensed in 1984, stating: "I see no reason why the government should not have shown a little bit of faith in Canadian agriculture. It could have said we are going to guarantee that prices are the same as they were last year".

What was that decline in initial payments that so incensed the member? Let me quote again his own words: "We see grain prices reduced substantially—on a percentage basis 5 per cent or 6 per cent. That is significant".

Yet yesterday the same member announced initial payments for grain dropping 18 per cent for spring wheat, 16 per cent for Durum wheat and 26 per cent for malting barley. These are decreases of about $25 per tonne from last year, decreases of $35 per tonne from 1984, decreases that spell disaster for Canadian grain farmers.

This government's policies are destroying Canadian agriculture. This government is kissing off the Canadian family farm.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the government announced yesterday that the initial price for wheat this year would drop by $30 per tonne to $135. This is one of the lowest prices for wheat in history in real dollar terms, almost approaching the values of the 1930s.

On Monday of this week the Minister of Agriculture increased the Farm Credit Corporation lending rate to almost 15 per cent interest per annum. How does the Canadian government expect Canadian farmers to survive when American farmers will be receiving almost 50 per cent more for their wheat this year and be guaranteed that price at the time of planting?

This Tory government guarantees our farmers nothing, only more debt and higher interest rates. Surely it is almost criminal to be increasing the Farm Credit Corporation interest rate to 15 per cent while cutting the price of wheat by almost 20 per cent.

I call on the government to roll back these high interest rates on Farm Credit Corporation mortgages.

CORPORATE TAXATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the nominees for the corporate welfare bum of the week did not pay any federal income taxes in 1988.

The first nominee is Algoma Steel which had tax-free profits of $80 million.

Edper Enterprises, with profits of $52 million, is the second nominee.

The third nominee is Hemlo Gold Mines.

The envelope, please.

The winner is Hemlo Gold Mines, which really struck it rich in 1988, getting a $2.7 million tax credit on profits of $43 million. This golden performance earns Hemlo Gold Mines the title of corporate welfare bum of the week.

* * *

BILL C-21

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, training and adjustment programs were a major part of what the government promised Canadians during the last federal election. The government has proposed it through the Labour Force Development Strategy and Bill C-21. This House approved it as long ago as November 6 of last year.

Canadian workers need such help. They expect such help. They await such help.

More money for apprenticeship level training, more for co-op education and more for older workers and many others—$800 million all told is ready to go to meet the needs of workers across the country.

I urge all hon. members, particularly those across the way, to do their utmost to persuade the Senate to see the light and pass Bill C-21.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General.

Last night, after the tragic deaths of two young Mohawk men near Snye, Quebec, the police forces of the United States and Canada finally entered the Akwesasne Reserve where they are now on patrol.

Does the Solicitor General have a firm commitment from the federal government of the United States, the government of the State of New York, the two provincial governments, and from his own government that the police forces will remain on patrol on the Akwesasne Reserve until law and order is restored on a truly permanent basis?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member indicated, and as all hon. members in the House know, last night there was a co-ordinated effort by all police forces involved to enter Akwesasne in order to ensure peace and order, and also to continue the investigation by the Sûreté du Québec and the New York police force of the two homicides.

As I indicated yesterday, we were looking for a co-ordinated effort. A co-ordinated effort took place, and a co-ordinated effort will continue to take place.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think there is still a question in the minds of many people as to why this effort on the part of the police forces did not take place until after the tragic deaths in question. However, I want to move on to another point.

We have all seen on television the extent of military type weaponry in circulation on the reserve. Will the Solicitor General tell us what is being done to eliminate this type of weaponry from the reserve? Surely there is no place for weapons of this nature in a free, peaceful and democratic community.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. colleague is referring to military equipment, I indicated in a statement earlier today that I have asked the military for some equipment and engineering support. That has been provided at my request.

With respect to other armament to which the hon. member may also be referring, the police forces, as I have indicated, are on the reserve as police officers and obviously will be administering the laws of Canada and the laws of the various provinces.

• (1420)

[Translation]

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, there is no place for a machine gun, for example, in a peaceful community. Since the Akwesasne reserve is located on American as well as Canadian territory, and part of the Canadian territory is in Quebec and part in Ontario, what is the government doing in this emergency to find a long-term solution whereby all the people of Akwesasne could live in peace and dignity and really unafraid?

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker as my colleague the Solicitor General has reported, the short-term objective of the joint action last evening was to secure peace and order and to restore a sense of calm to the Akwesasne community on both sides of the border and in both provinces.

As part of the search for a long-term and permanent solution to the problem, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is leading a meeting of the five jurisdictions tomorrow morning in Montreal. This is part of ongoing discussions which have occurred among those jurisdictions in some form for several months now.

This is in particular to search for a lasting and democratically achieved solution acceptable to, and with the guidance of, the Mohawk leadership within the communities.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, let me first offer my condolences as local member of Parliament to the family of Wilbur Edwards, the second victim of the sorry violence in Akwesasne.

I would like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether he can assure this House that help will continue to be given to the Mohawk families who have now sought refuge in Cornwall, Ontario, and that this assistance will continue until they can return home in safety, without fear of further attacks?

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Of course, Mr. Speaker, the government and all members of this House share the member's sense of grief and sympathy. We extend to the families of the two unfortunate victims our condolences in these tragic circumstances.

We are aware of the high level of tension and anxiety of the residents who have left their community and are temporarily housed in Cornwall at the government training institute.

Our officials have been on site continuously from the time that evacuation occurred last weekend and senior officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are providing assistance and counsel where required.

We are remaining in contact with the elected and traditional leadership of the community of Akwesasne.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister. Perhaps I could turn to the Solicitor General and ask him a question in relation to what was asked by the hon. Leader of the Opposition a few moments ago.

Can he provide us with some information now as to whether or not his department and U.S. authorities are utilizing a co-ordinated effort, not just to parole the reserve but to remove the unauthorized, illegal heavy weaponry that is on the Akwesasne reserve such as machine guns, rifles, hand grenades and all those other unacceptable objects which are there and which are obviously killing people?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated a little earlier, the effort that was made was a co-ordinated effort by all police forces to go on Akwesasne in order to ensure peace and order, and obviously the application of the respective laws.

[Translation]

Mr. John F. Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. We are glad to hear that the Quebec Police Force is in St. Regis, on the Akwesasne reserve, and that order has been restored on the reserve for the time being.

Mr. Speaker, my question is the following: Can the government assure the House and the residents of the reserve that the police will remain on the reserve as long as their services are required by the authorities of the reserve?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, that is the same question in French as the one that was asked in English a few minutes ago. As I said a few minutes ago, and as I said yesterday, we were seeking joint action by all the police forces concerned, and it is as a result of joint action that the police forces went to the Akwesasne reserve to restore law and order. Of course, this concerted effort will continue.

[English]

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, there have been persistent reports over some period of time which suggest an involvement of U.S. organized crime with the gambling facilities and casinos operated by the Warrior Society on the reserve.

Can the minister tell the House whether the RCMP has confirmed or is in a position to confirm those reports and that it is that involvement which is the long-term cause of the violence that is happening on the reserve?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, considering that the operation of the activities to which my hon. colleague is referring are occurring in United States territory, I think it would be inappropriate for me to comment.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He referred to a meeting which is to take place tomorrow involving the various government authorities. The long-term solution here, as he indicated, would ultimately go to the local leadership of the reserve.

Will the national native leadership and the elected native leadership from the reserve be invited to participate at the beginning of this process of seeking a long-term solution and, in particular, will they be invited to the meeting tomorrow?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the hon. member for Victoria and other members of the House that the wishes of the elected and traditional leadership have been taken into account and respected throughout the piece now for many weeks prior to the unfortunate events of the last couple of days.

Their input will continue to be sought on a regular and daily basis.

My officials are in continuing contact with the presidents of the two tribal councils. I cannot commit that they will be at a meeting of government officials tomorrow morning, but after the officials of the five jurisdictions, that is, the two provinces, the State of New York, the U.S. State Department and the Bureau of Indian Affairs, as well as our department, have met, there will certainly be immediate and ongoing discussions with the leadership of the Mohawk Akwesasne Tribal Council and the St. Regis Tribal Council.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): I have a question for the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds. This government has slashed agricultural support programs with a vengeance. The Canadian family farm is under siege. In the past year or so this government has announced drastic cuts in crop insurance, grain and flour, grain and crop advance payments, dairy exports and the Canadian Dairy Commission, just to name a few, for a total in cuts of about $400 million.

Yesterday we got the shocking news of a dramatic drop in the initial wheat prices. Farmers are stunned. How does the minister responsible for grains expect farmers to stay on the land if this persists? How much more does he think farmers can take?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that while it is not good news, and we readily admit that and I know that myself as a farmer, the initial payments we announced yesterday for barley are actually increased over a year ago. They are down from what they are presently because we adjusted them during the year.

I would point out to him that these are initial payments set three months before the beginning of the selling of the crop which we have not even seeded, let alone harvested. Bearing that in mind, we are making sure that we are setting initial payments at a level when we can fully anticipate a final payment.

Having said that, the hon.member should also know that the projections in farm income fully took into account these kinds of numbers. We had circulated to farmers right across the country our anticipation of these kind of prices back in the early part of March.

So, if the hon. member is surprised today, he should not be because this is information that has been readily available to the farm community for almost two months.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the minister has been listening to what farmers are saying today. They are expressing deep, deep shock.

I want to remind members of this House what this minister said before he was in government, way back in April 1984. This is what he told the House:

> I see no reason why the government should not have shown a little bit of faith in Canadian agriculture. It could have said we are going to guarantee that prices are the same as they were last year— We see grain prices reduced substantially—on a percentage basis 5 per cent or 6 per cent.

• (1430)

That is what the minister said six years ago. Why did the minister announce these initial payments yesterday that amount to a drop of 18 per cent? Does this indicate that the minister no longer has faith in Canadian agriculture?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, above all I think farmers expect this government to be honest and straightforward with them and this is exactly what we have done in letting them know what we anticipate final realized prices to be.

If he wants to quote from farmers let me quote from a farmer from the province he and I both come from, from Oak River, Manitoba, who says: "I do not think anyone should get too excited—" and he is referring to the prices I announced yesterday. "I don't ever remember the initial price as staying at the same level as the current price," said Tom Smart of Oak River.

So if he wants to talk about farmers, they understand what is going on. They understand the kind of support that this government has provided. We have stood by the Canadian Wheat Board and kept them selling in a deficit position as compared to the party he supports which took us right out of the world market in the LIP in the early 1970s and saw our exports drop by over 50 per cent from one year to the next. We have not done that.

We stood by our farmers in the past in the international market where we have kept them selling. We have stood by them in international discussions as far as GATT is concerned and we are going to make some progress. We have stood by farmers in the past, we are doing it today, and we are going to do it in the future.

* * *

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, Mr. David Dodge, the senior Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance said: "Nobody believes that the goods and services tax will add only 1.25 per cent to inflation". The Assistant Deputy Minister also said: "The GST is going to contribute to a much tougher labour relations climate".

Why is the minister persisting with a tax that even his own officials admit will lead to a tougher labour relations climate?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that my hon. friend should read the whole of the quote rather than just the part she is referring to. The point Mr. Dodge was making to a Canadian Press organization and the people in attendance was that he thought it would be helpful if they would encourage a greater understanding of the 1.25 per cent cost of living increase.

Mr. Dodge went on to point out that there were people on one side who were feeling that the price increase would be greater than 1.25 per cent. He also made the point that there were people in the business community who felt they would not be able to hold their prices, and that was going to contribute to the more difficult labour negotiation environment this year. I think that is a balanced approach he is taking which he hopes will be presented through the media to the general public as well.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, is the minister saying we should not worry about the GST's impact on inflation? I think the experts disagree. Maureen Farrow, chief economist with Coopers & Lybrand said yesterday: "I don't trust the business sector not to mark up or round up prices. That has been the temptation in every other jurisdiction that has gone to a value-added tax".

So I ask the minister why he will not admit today that benefits will not necessarily be passed on to consumers. Why will he not admit that it will increase the cost of living for all Canadians and dramatically fuel inflation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the statements by the hon. member are just the things that Mr. Dodge was referring to when he was talking about the misinformation that is conveyed by people who should be taking a more responsible point of view, such as the hon. member.

I have never said we should not worry about this. I said we should be concerned about the inflationary impact and that is why it is important for people to understand that it is very important for businesses to pass on those savings. Just yesterday Richard Sharpe, the chairman of Sears Canada, made the statement that he was pledging on behalf of his organization—one of the largest retailing organizations in the country—to pass on to consumers any tax savings related to the GST. We heard that same thing from other large organizations like General Motors, Ford, and Dupont. I think if other members of the business community get behind the same sentiment and tell their customers that they are going to pass on these savings, then there will be no grounds for the statement that has just been made by my hon. friend.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Yesterday, farmers received one more piece of bad news with the announcement of the Canadian Wheat Board initial prices. They are down substantially.

This announcement comes on the heels of increases to farm credit interest rates which are, for the first time, above the Bank of Canada prime rate. It comes at a time when the Economic Council of Canada has already announced that farm income will drop this year by as much as 87 per cent. It also comes at a time when the government is sitting on $500 million which it won't release despite the fact that many farmers are being denied loans for seeding.

Given this situation, what incentive is there for farmers to even plant a crop this year?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, let me say again that the initial payments that we announced yesterday for barley actually increased from over a year ago. It went from $85 to $90 a tonne which is about a 6 per cent increase. Unfortunately, hard red spring prices went down about 12 per cent, not 18 per cent.

Let me say this very slowly. We have got to be honest with farmers and we don't want to alarm them any more than they are. All of the prices—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mayer: I don't hear a farmer over there yelling, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: All of the income projections that were put out last November were based on the prices that I announced yesterday. We sent out price information to every farmer in the country indicating that these were the kind of prices that could be expected. Having said that, we are having ongoing discussions with the provinces that are concerned about income. We had a meeting with our Minister of Agriculture and two ministers from the provincial government and myself on Sunday. There are ongoing discussions with the province of Saskatchewan and Alberta and Quebec and Ontario. Those discussions are under way with regard to how they best use the $500 million that the hon. member refers to.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, what rural Canada needs is not rhetoric but stability. My supplementary question is to the Minister of Agriculture.

While the minister is playing ping-pong with Grant Devine, farmers are not able to get seed money to put their crop in the ground. All the while the minister is sitting on his $500 million. Why doesn't the minister get off his seat, get up in the House and make a commitment to the Canadian farmers that he is going to help them put in their crop this year.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what this government did. It did it back on March 30. The $500 million is there, as my colleague, the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds, indicated. We had a meeting with Manitoba on Sunday. I talked to the Minister of Agriculture as late as this morning.

The discussions are going on with Ontario. There have been discussions with Alberta. All we are trying to do is to co-operate with the provinces and try to design a program that would be effective and that would serve the needs of the farmers to help them get their crops in. We are there and we are asking the provinces to get on board.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday, Ontario introduced guidelines to address the immediate need for action on the dreaded zebra mussel which is infecting the Great Lakes.

Ontario is asking all fishermen to transport live fish in well water or treated water. Fishing equipment is to be sterilized with chlorine or be sun dried. Boaters are to remove mussels from the hulls of their boats before transporting the boats to inland lakes to try and contain the infestation.

Will the minister follow the lead shown by Ontario and do four things; first, allocate funds today for research and control? Second, instruct all users of the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence Seaway to respect the Ontario guidelines. Third, join with Ontario to strengthen these guidelines and, fourth, to advise our American friends of what we are doing with respect to zebra mussels and ask them to join us in this crusade.

• (1440)

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, while we appreciate what Ontario is doing, we have not waited for the province to act. The Department of the Environment has devoted money to research projects related to this very important phenomenon for which we have great concern. We know that the zebra mussels were introduced to our waters by foreign ships dumping water ballast after entering our ports. My colleague, the Minister of Transport has issued guidelines to control this water dumping.

There are no less than 26 research projects ongoing on this matter. Steps are being taken to inform the public of the means that can be taken to limit the movement and proliferation of zebra mussels from one lake to another. We agree that Ontario is doing a good job on this problem and we are working very closely with the province.

We would like to commend the fact that Hydro Ontario is devoting $10 million a year in research funding for this project.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): A supplementary to the same minister. The voluntary guidelines introduced by the federal government only address ships in the St. Lawrence Seaway by asking them to change their ballast water on the high seas rather than in the seaway.

As of today all of Lake Erie and Lake St. Clair and half of Lake Ontario are totally infested with the zebra mussel. There were reports over the weekend that Lake Huron and Lake Superior now have the first indications of the terrible zebra mussel being there. Will the minister do something constructive today to stop the infestation in the Great Lakes, particularly Lakes Huron and Superior where the zebra mussel do not yet have a foothold?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, apart from what I have just said, my department is currently completing consultations for new legislation to control wild animal and plant transportation into Canada. This will be the way to stop the introduction of zebra mussels into Canada.

The main thing we must do is identify ways in which to fight proliferation in our waters. The research projects under way are directly related to that.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Associate Minister of National Defence.

The Canadian Armed Forces have always served Canadians well on the premise that we tell them clearly what we want them to do and then give them the right tools to do the job.

The CF-18 aircraft has an air speed envelope that may be too high for some of our air sovereignty functions, especially drug interdiction operations. Will the minister tell us how the government can fulfil its aircraft drug interdiction role using the CF-18 without endangering the safety of our pilots, and whether it will need to secure other aircraft for this purpose?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member may know, following an agreement with NORAD last year, we are now using our assets to assist with the interdiction of aircraft, if necessary, under NORAD agreements. We also require that slow-flying and unidentified aircraft identify themselves. If they do not, we are able to use our own capability to track them until they land.

When the CF-18s are on their regular missions, they can be involved in this kind of exercise and can be used, as can our other resources such as the Aurora aircraft, or other facilities. In this way we are entering into the fight on drugs and, as has been shown already, we have been successful in several ventures.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, what I am really asking is whether we have the equipment to do the job. Yesterday the Minister of National Defence announced the implementation of a directed landings policy which will require all aircraft flying into Canadian air space without a filed flight plan to force land at a port of entry.

Will the minister confirm to the House that this new policy has been made necessary by the inability of the government to carry out effective and comprehensive air sovereignty surveillance, including drug interdiction?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, no, certainly I would not agree with that.

The policy of requiring unidentified aircraft to land is part of trying to ensure that aircraft smuggling drugs cannot get into Canadian airspace. It is one of the mechanisms by which we can have greater assurance of that.

In addition, the aircraft resources of our department and others, are involved in tracking, in trying to identify aircraft and ensuring that unidentified aircraft do not enter Canadian air space.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of the Environment.

As the minister knows, the Saskatchewan government has announced it will resume construction on the Rafferty–Alameda dam. Even before the review panel has had a chance to meet, the government is proceeding with the project. The Government of Saskatchewan is thumbing its nose at the federal government and at the laws of the land.

Does the minister not agree that not only is this decision a violation of his agreement with Saskatchewan but also a violation of the spirit of the federal court order of last December?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we have been informed of certain activities that the Government of Saskatchewan would like to do, relating to the Rafferty–Alameda dam project.

We are in the process of checking out what those activities are. If we find out that they are not justified by safety reasons and not identified as such by the Independent Design Board which has been set up for that purpose by the terms in the agreement, we will step in and take the proper decision. We will not accept that the spirit of the agreement be violated.

I am sending a letter today to my colleague, the Minister of the Environment of Saskatchewan. I intend to speak with him on the phone today also. I would like to know what kind of work is being done. It might be that there is no problem. Maybe they are justified by safety reasons. If not, we will have to go back to the agreement and make sure it is respected.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, this is becoming a farce.

It is estimated that around 80 per cent of the construction will be completed by the end of the summer. Already we have reports from Saskatchewan today that some panel members are considering resigning, because it is a farce.

Why will the minister not act? Why will he not stand up in his place and state that he is revoking the licence until there is a proper environmental review and he can say to the Province of Saskatchewan: "Yes, you can proceed." or, "No, you cannot proceed." First, let's revoke the licence and have a proper environmental review.

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we know that we have to verify the kind of work that is being contemplated now.

That being said, we should believe that this issue has been dealt with very well by the Saskatchewan authorities. They are being very responsible. They have accepted an agreement without any precedent in the world. We have agreed to stop the work on this dam.

There is a full-blown assessment going on, and we will soon know when the work can be resumed. In the meantime, I intend to talk with my fellow minister to make sure that the agreement will be respected.

* * *

[Translation]

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Like many other Canadians, the people in the riding of Jonquière wonder whether companies will really pass on to consumers the difference between the present tax, which is 13.5 per cent, and the new, lower 7 per cent goods and services tax.

How does the minister intend to ensure that companies will actually pass on the benefits of this tax reduction to consumers? Will there be a special mechanism or a review board to ensure that companies reduce their prices?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, of course, as the hon. member pointed out, the government will take all necessary steps to ensure that businesses that benefit directly from a 13.5 per cent reduction in inputs will pass on to consumers the difference between 13.5 per cent and 7 per cent. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, mentioned earlier that a number of large corporations have already done so: GM, Ford and, more recently, Sears. We intend to set up a mechanism, and I intend to make an announcement within the next few weeks, that will provide for price monitoring. The information will be collected, and we will ensure that the difference between 13.5 per cent and 7 per cent is actually passed on to the consumer. It is our responsibility as a government, and we will do everything in our power to ensure this is done.

* * *

• (1450)

CANADA POST

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation.

Canada Post recently established Admail, a private flyer distribution service that undercuts collective agreements and competes directly with Quebec's regional weeklies in this area.

Could the minister promise the House today that he will put an end to this unfair competition by Canada Post which is a threat to the survival of the weekly press in Quebec and French Canada?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post has been involved in the business of distributing advertising material for over 100 years, this is not a new activity. It is a highly competitive activity. There are several organizations involved in distributing advertising mail, including newspapers, door-to-door.

I am told that in Quebec, Canada Post represents about 19 per cent of the market, so 81 per cent of the market is handled by private distributors. Were Canada Post to quit the business, it would not necessarily end competition.

I do not feel it would be advisable to ask Canada Post to quit, since this House has asked them to go out and operate in a businesslike fashion in the business of distributing hard copy, if you will, and this is part of it.

* * *

ENERGY

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it concerns the activities of Petro-Canada in Myanmar.

As the minister knows, Petro-Canada International, the development arm of Petro-Canada, has withdrawn from this country because of human rights violations but Petro-Canada itself continues to operate a $22 million oil drilling contract. Given the contradiction between having one agency withdraw because of human rights violations and the other agency, the parent company, continue, will the minister undertake to tell the House whether or not he will instruct Petro-Canada itself to withdraw from this project?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. As he knows, the present agreement was signed between Petro-Canada International and now Myanmar, in 1988, prior to the present military government coming into power. Only recently did the contract reach the implementation stage.

I have been informed that for the present, Petro-Canada International has decided to suspend the program. The government supports that decision. In fact, I want to tell the hon. member and the House that we have urged the company to review its activities there, in light of the deteriorating human rights and political situation that is now evident.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same minister and I appreciate his response on this issue.

Given that this Crown corporation is involved in several parts of the world, can the minister assure us that he will undertake a review of several programs to make sure that these human rights violations, and the countries where we are concerned about this, are related to our External Affairs policy, to make sure that we do not get involved with countries where we are concerned about human rights?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer fully for the hon. member. He is well aware that Petro-Canada International gets its funding through External Affairs. It receives about $50 million presently. As a contractor, Petro-Canada then does the work in particular countries. I think we all recognize this is part of External Affairs policy and is our contribution as Canadians to the development of some of these energy sources.

In terms of the specific question that the member asked, will this be reconciled with human rights violations in possibly other countries, I know the Secretary of State for External Affairs is aware of the implications of that question. He and I will continue to look at the role Canada plays. I think we have to balance what was done, for example, in Myanmar, and the ability of Canada to contribute internationally to further development as well.

* * *

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, at a time when the government has withdrawn national unity from the CBC's mandate, the polls show that national unity has become a top priority for Canadians.

My question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Considering that broadcasting is a powerful force that contributes to the understanding, tolerance and generosity of Canadians from coast to coast in these unstable times, will the minister take this opportunity to put national unity back into the mandate of the CBC?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I do not find it surprising that in a country, people should be in favour of national unity. We have a problem when the opposite is true. I think everyone in this House should be delighted when the polls say that a majority of Canadians favour national unity in this country.

Second, the question is whether the Union nationale—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

An hon. member: That was 20 years ago!

Mr. Masse: My political roots are showing, Madam.

We must determine whether national unity is something to be inflicted or to be experienced. We believe that the Union nationale—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Masse: —that national unity should not be the result of force-fed propaganda but of a positive will.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, for the minister's information, national unity is something that is built.

[English]

It is not a propaganda tool to find a vehicle across this land that will let Canadians know one another from coast to coast. If that is propaganda, I feel sorry for the minister's vision.

I feel very passionately about Canada. There seems to be a difference in viewpoints in this House as to how it should be expressed. Last week the Prime Minister was passionate when he said to the Council for Canadian Unity, and I quote: "Everything we have accomplished as a country can be traced to our sense of national purpose, to our national unity".

If the Prime Minister speaks for the Government of Canada, will the Minister of Communications today undertake to reinstate the national unity mandate to Radio-Canada, to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have the impression that——the member is building her attack for next week when the bill will be before the House.

[English]

First, I have to tell the hon. member something. We ask the CBC to reflect what is Canada. What was done in 1968 was to put the question of national unity. What type of country have you left to us in 1982? Something without Quebec. So, we prefer our approach to your approach.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Finestone: That's right, because you have been unconscionable.

[Translation]

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, Mr. Dodge said that the unions do not believe companies will reduce their prices after the sales tax is abolished. According to today's La Presse, Hydro-Quebec ignored these tax reductions when it applied for rate increases for next year. Isn't that an indication that the unions are right?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I also read that article and found it very interesting. I can't go into any detail about the facts mentioned in the article or the accuracy of its information. As I said in my answer to a previous question, I can give Canadians and especially Quebecers the assurance that this particular point is a matter of concern for the government. Our objective, and this is very important, is to ensure that when there are benefits to be passed on with respect to the goods and services tax, when the hidden tax of 13.5 per cent is replaced by a 7 per cent tax, that companies, in fact, that everyone passes the benefits on to the consumer. We and the companies have that responsibility. I can assure the hon. member that we will be most vigilant, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that this happens.

• (1500)

[English]

I mentioned earlier that some big businesses such as Sears, GM and Ford have already stated that they are going to pass the benefits on to consumers.

What we want are commitments from other companies and businesses that they will pass the benefits on to consumers.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I say to the minister that here he has an example of not a promise, but a reality that Hydro Quebec, and the same is true for Ontario Hydro, have not taken into account in their requests for increases in the rates for next year the fact that there will be reductions in the sales tax.

Let me ask this government not for empty promises, but what precisely will it do in the face of these problems that actually exist?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, we must be accurate. I do not think that Ontario Hydro has set its rates for next year.

On the other hand, I want to emphasize that Hydro Quebec is under provincial jurisdiction. I do not think the hon. member is asking us to intervene on provincial jurisdiction.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I already said that we would look into the facts that were brought to our attention this morning. It is quite obvious that we will urge all Canadians at all levels so that all consumers can benefit from the reduction from 13.5 to 7 per cent.

However, my colleague should raise specific questions, as I just said, and he did not in the case of Ontario. We will wait and see whether the Government of Ontario will at least mention these matters and we are not going to anticipate what will be said in the coming weeks.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT OF COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY PERMANENT ENGINEERING BOARD

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 32(2), I am pleased to table in both official languages the annual report of a project which I know you had a lot of intimate dealings with, namely, the Columbia River Treaty Permanent Engineering Board to the Government of the United States and Canada for the period October 1, 1988, to September 30, 1989.

Mr. Speaker, I know you will be pleased to note that the objectives of the treaty are being fully met by the board's reports.

Routine Proceedings

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY AND REGIONAL AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—AUTHORIZATION FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I believe that you will find unanimous consent for the following motion:

That further to the order made on April 11, 1990, the Standing Committee on Industry, Science and Technology and Regional and Northern Development be authorized to travel to Edmonton during its western investigations.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. parliamentary secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

PETITIONS

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, it is my honour to present a petition on behalf of a large number of Canadians who are opposing the goods and services tax. The petitioners feel that this is an unjust and unfair tax which discriminates against those Canadians who live outside the central corridor of Ontario and Quebec and are asking the government and the Parliament of Canada to do whatever they can to curtail this tax.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, on another topic, the petitioners point out the government's intention to dismantle passenger rail service in Canada. The petitioners, primarily from western Canada, go to some length pointing out all the reasons why Canada should have a comprehensive VIA Rail service across the country, particularly because of its environmentally friendly nature. They ask that the government not only stop the dismantling of VIA Rail but in fact invest in a rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient passenger rail system.

CHILDREN'S BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, on a different topic, the petitioners are pointing out to the House of Commons that the number of children living in poverty is actually increasing in Canada. They feel, and I certainly support them, that this is something that we ought not to tolerate for a moment. They have asked the government to rethink its position of voting against a comprehensive bill of rights for children and are asking the Parliament of Canada to reintroduce it at some time in the future.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, on another topic it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of people from Kamloops, British Columbia who are distraught with the fact that the government has seen fit to tax magazines, books and newspapers at a time when we are concerned about the increasing levels of illiteracy. I think that this is the only country in the world that will be actually taxing reading. Therefore, the petitioners are asking the government to please come to its senses and back off again from the GST legislation.

COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the honour to present two petitions. The first petition calls upon Parliament to prevail upon the Secretary of State to restore the funding for the native communications program and for the northern native broadcast access program which were cut in the recent budget of the Secretary of State.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the second petition, also certified under Standing Order 36, calls on the government to reject the current proposals for a goods and services tax and to reform the taxation system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations.

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to table a petition certified correct as to form and content from over 700 residents of the constituency of Etobicoke North.

The residents express their deep concern at the proposed expansion of Pearson International Airport, bearing in mind the deleterious effects on the quality of life in the constituency of Etobicoke North and other surrounding areas of the airport from previous expansion. They also express their concern about the impact that the proposed extension and addition of runways at Pearson International Airport will have on the environment, on their health and on their ability to pursue an active life in the area surrounding the airport. To that end, the petitioners offer some proposals to the government about how such unwanted and unwarranted impact of airport expansion may be avoided.

• (1510)

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present to this House a petition certified correct by the clerk of petitions. It contains the signatures of many Canadians from the great riding of Hamilton West.

In part, it states that the Liberals, on behalf of Canadians, strongly oppose this new goods and services tax which is an unprecedented tax grab from the pockets of Canadians and will hit them not only with higher taxes but higher inflation, higher interest rates and higher unemployment. Therefore, we the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, on a different matter, I also have a duty to present to this House another petition certified correct by the clerk of petitions. In part, it states that the Government of Canada has introduced charges that will reduce home-keeping services to veterans and substantially increase the cost of long-term care, and whereas the veterans have already given service to this country and should not be targeted by these measures, the petitioners call upon Parliament to reject those budget measures that deprive veterans of proper services and increase their financial hardship.

[Translation]

REQUEST TO END PROMOTION OF VIOLENCE

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present today a petition with regard to violence signed by 1,736 people mostly from Beauharnois, St-Etienne, Maple Grove and Melocheville in my riding. What is interesting to see in this petition sponsored by Christiane and Gérald Gatien is how they succeeded in identifying incentives to violence such as violent movies shown on television, a problem aggravated by videos, electronic games where players try to kill animated characters such as animals and people, deadly gun licences as demonstrated recently at the École polytechnique in Montreal, and freedom of the press. If, on the same day, we hear a great speech on Canadian unity and we see someone trampling on the Quebec flag, we can be sure that tonight most media reports will focus on the latter.

So all this publicity, this incitement to violence attracted the attention of my fellow citizens, and I am honoured to table this petition on their behalf.

[English]

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents in my riding and in ridings abutting the Pearson International Airport. They are concerned with the viability of their neighbourhoods.

Acknowledging the fact that the airport is here to stay and that planes are a popular mode of transport, there has to be some concern and sensitivity given to trying to enforce restrictions for late night and early morning travel over these communities, that there be a fair alternating between runways so that one community is not over-burdened by one particular popular travel course where planes land and take off and, finally, that there is some concern with respect to building an additional north-south runway.

It is hoped that the very energetic, the very popular and knowledgeable new Minister of Transport, is certainly going to be more progressive than some of his predecessors. I have every confidence that this minister will listen to the concerns, not only of the travelling public but of the public who live near these airports.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and pleasure to table a petition under Standing Order 36, which has been duly certified, on behalf of a number of residents of Ontario who are concerned about the government's continuing policy of low-level flights in Nitassinan and continuing policy of trying to bring a NATO base into Labrador.

They urge this House to join the Assembly of First Nations, the Innu of Labrador, and other aboriginal peoples in opposing the use of their lands for NATO and NORAD attack training; to demand that the government end all NATO and NORAD low-level flight training anywhere in Canada; and to oppose the establishment of NATO operations in Canada. By that they have in mind particularly the proposed tactical fighter and weapons-training centre for Goose Bay.

In summary, they ask that this House direct Canada's NATO/NORAD funding in a different direction to enable Canada's aboriginal peoples to regain control of their lands and their livelihood and to promote sustainable development for all Canadians.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by 2,921 Canadians, almost all of whom are resident in Edmonton, which calls upon the House to reject the proposal for a goods and services tax, to reform the taxation system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations, to ensure that if and when there is a broad public consensus on a sales tax measure to replace the manufacturers' sales tax that this reform not be an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab and, lastly, cause the government to cease with the proposal which will shift the tax burden onto ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of through real tax reform.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): While I have the doubtless riveted attention of the House, I would also like to present a petition from several residents of Edmonton and, oddly, of Agassiz, Abbotsford, Aldergrove and other lower mainland communities in B.C. I do not understand the conjunction, but it is here, Mr. Speaker.

All of these fine Canadians call on the Parliament of Canada to maintain VIA Rail Canada and to give VIA Rail a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate for passenger service. Wise counsel. It is to be hoped the government pays attention in both instances.

Mr. Speaker: I must say that the Chair is so impressed with the enthusiasm of the hon. member for Edmonton East that I think, with his permission, I shall send to him all the petitions that come to me to be presented to the House.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I would consider it a singular honour, Mr. Speaker.

CANADA POST

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure today, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present petitions to the House that were gathered in Halifax, Nova Scotia, signed by some 1,500 residents of Halifax, Dartmouth and Sackville, Nova Scotia, all of whom are protesting the closure of the corporate postal outlet at the Halifax shopping centre in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The petitioners state that the closure means a major disruption and inconvenience to large numbers of senior citizens, families and other individuals in the neighbourhood of the shopping centre who depend on the products and services of Canada Post and that the closure inconveniences others, who may from time to time use the largest shopping centre in Nova Scotia.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that Canada Post reverses the short-sighted plans that have closed the corporate postal outlet, and call on Canada Post to keep a full-service Canada Post corporate outlet operating in the Halifax shopping centre.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present two petitions. The first petition is with respect to the goods and services tax and it is signed by 100 residents of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, only 100 of many thousands of people in the city of Moose Jaw who are opposed to the goods and services tax.

The petitioners call upon this government to address the unfair tax system that is currently in place which permits wealthy individuals and corporations to pay little or no federal tax, while forcing lower and middle-income taxpayers to bear more of the national tax burden. They are upset that the government is now going to be taxing haircuts, diapers, coffins and home heating fuels.

They call upon this government to reject the goods and services tax. They call on the government to reform the taxation system so that there is a more effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations and to ensure that if and when there is a broad public consensus on tax measures to replace the manufacturers' sales tax, this reform will not be an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): I also have a petition from a number of farmers from Saskatchewan who are very concerned about the future of the Canadian Wheat Board. They call upon this government to reinstate oats under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and to provide the wheat board with the necessary mandate it needs to provide good service to producers in western Canada.

• (1520)

GUN CONTROL

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present four certified petitions with 1,428 signatures from people in my riding and Metropolitan Toronto and region.

People throughout Canada do not want a proliferation of powerful weapons capable of firing bullets in rapid succession for extended periods of time. They do want a system established which ensures that people who do own guns are competent, careful and respectful of the rights of others.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present this petition on behalf of the people of Prince Edward Island.

Whereas the undersigned reject the decision of Canada Employment and Immigration to close and relocate the unemployment insurance office in Trail, British Columbia, it is perceived that similar action would take place across the country. This action in Prince Edward Island would result in the closure of all UI offices except in Charlottetown.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reverse this decision to close the Trail, B.C. office, and to direct that no similar closures take place now or in the future anywhere within the province of Prince Edward Island.

BILL C-43

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present a petition from several hundred constituents in the riding of Prince Edward—Hastings who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to remove the word "health" from Bill C-43 so that the bill reads as follows: "Anyone who induces an abortion is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment". The exception is when a medical practitioner believes that the life of the mother is threatened.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 52

FARM INCOME

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of an urgent nature to rural Canada and particularly to people in the prairie provinces.

Earlier today I sent you a letter and stated that I would be rising under this Standing Order to request a debate on a matter of urgent and pressing concern.

A series of recent events, culminating in an announcement late yesterday of a drop in the initial payment of wheat and barley prices that are guaranteed by the government of Canada through the Canadian Wheat Board, have brought this matter to a head.

Recently, the government announced increases to Farm Credit Corporation loan rates, bringing them to levels above the Bank of Canada prime, which is unprecedented in the history of the Farm Credit Corporation.

The billion dollar aid program which the government said was required to help offset the effects of the international grain war is still pending.

The Economic Council of Canada recently predicted that farm income across the Prairies will drop significantly, by as much as 87 per cent in some regions.

As well, the Farm Debt Review Board recently reported that more than one-third of western farmers are in a severe financial crisis. A high percentage of these will be unable to obtain the necessary funds to plant their crops without government assistance. The fact is that seeding has now actually begun in some regions.

I submit that a debate is necessary to bring to the government's attention the need for its intervention and support. I request that this House adjourn to debate the crisis facing Canadian farmers.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the hon. member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre for giving me notice. I hope other members will take notice of my comments that the hon. member has put his case succinctly and without delving into argument and debate. That is appreciated by the Chair.

I have given this very careful consideration. It is a matter of very great concern, I am sure, all across the country, but especially to our farming communities. While it is a serious problem, I do not think it is appropriate at this time to adjourn the business of the day to go ahead with an emergency debate. That does not mean that the situation might not warrant a debate at some point, but not for today.

I also point out to hon. members and to the public that the hon. member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre and others have been very diligent in their representations on behalf of their constituents in this Chamber on this matter. I am sure that they will continue to be as diligent as they have been.

As I say, not today, but we will watch events.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

DEPARTMENT OF MULTICULTURALISM AND CITIZENSHIP ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to consider Bill C-18, an Act to establish the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto, as reported with amendments by a legislative committee.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: There are five motions in amendment on the Notice Paper for the report stage of Bill C-18, an Act to establish the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto.

[English]

The first motion in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver East, although causing the Chair some procedural difficulty because it seeks to add a definition to a bill which contained none when the bill received second reading in this House, will be given the benefit of the doubt, will be allowed, and I can say to the hon. member that it will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 are all out of order and as a consequence will not be received.

[Translation]

Motion No. 2 by the hon. member for Vancouver East is out of order because it introduces a new concept into the bill by making it mandatory for the minister to "activate" departmental multicultural policies. This is contrary to our practice as will be found in Beauchesne's 5th edition, citation 773, subsection (1).

[English]

Motion No. 3 also in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver East attempts to introduce official languages into the bill, a proposition which was not contemplated when the bill was read a second time. This has caused the Chair serious concern. After careful review, the Chair must rule Motion No. 3 out of order and in support of this position I would refer all hon. members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773.

[Translation]

Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the hon. member for Saint-Laurent—Cartierville raises procedural difficulties because it introduces into the legislation a Commissioner of Multiculturalism. The subject matter of this motion was generally considered in committee and it will not be selected for this reason as well as the fact that it goes beyond the scope of the bill as agreed to at second reading.

Citation 773, subsection (1) of Beauchesne's 5th Edition stipulates that "An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the bill, beyond its scope or governed by or dependent upon amendments already negatived."

[English]

In addition Motion No. 4 appears to infringe the Royal Recommendation which accompanied this bill on its introduction, contrary to Citation 540 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition.

For these reasons, it is with regret that I must inform the House that Motion No. 4 will not be put to the House for debate.

[Translation]

Motion No. 5 is also attempting to introduce a new concept into this bill by having the Canadian Human Rights Commission "monitor the implementation of multiculturalism" among other things. This is completely foreign to the bill as it was given second reading and approval in principle. In support of my view that this is not acceptable, I would refer hon. members to Beauchesne's 5th edition, citation 773.

[English]

I would like to thank all hon. members for their co-operation as always.

I will now propose Motion No. 1 to the House.

• (1530)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kamloops on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, now that we have heard the ruling by Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that the first motion to be debated is in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver East who, unfortunately, is unable to be here today as a result of constituency work.

There have been some discussions among the parties, Mr. Speaker, and I think you would find unanimous consent to allow me to put the motion so that debate can commence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there consent?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Nelson Riis (for Ms. Mitchell) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-18 be amended by adding immediately after line 6 at page 1 the following new clause:

"2. In this Act

"multiculturalism" means that fundamental characteristic of Canadian society which recognizes the diversity and equality of all Canadians as regards race, national or ethnic origin, colour and religion".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to participate in the report stage of Bill C-18, and in particular to have an opportunity to say a few words on behalf of the hon. member for Vancouver East who has worked so hard during the process of this bill on behalf of the ethnocultural communities of the country.

The hon. member regrets that she is unable to be here but it is as a result of constituency business. In my discussions on this bill I have not felt very good having to deal with this piece of legislation today.

As the hon. minister will know, when Bill C-18, an act to establish the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship, was first introduced, by and large it was seen as a housekeeping bill. It appeared that the government had made a commitment to multiculturalism in the country and had encouraged the enhancement of citizenship organizations. This bill was seen as very much an appropriate step for the government to be taking.

That was what we found at second reading. If you were to look back at Hansard, Mr. Speaker, you would see that the speeches actually reflect that. There was a great deal of enthusiasm in the House—not quite unanimous, but virtually unanimous—in terms of what appeared to be the general thrust that the government was taking with regard to Bill C-18, in response, I might add, to some good, positive lobbying by the Canadian Ethnocultural Council.

After second reading the bill went to committee. At that time a whole set of concerns which were raised were simply not met. I hesitate to do so but perhaps it would be appropriate to refer to a letter that a number of members received not many weeks ago from the Canadian Ethnocultural Council.

The author of the letter points out that the council is very concerned with this piece of legislation. To use his words, "to accept a half-baked bill and department would be to ignore the trust of our membership in advocating for meaningful policy". The letter was signed by Mr. Lewis Chan, the President of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council. This is an individual representing an organization, which in turn represents the ethnocultural fabric of the country, which is calling the legislation and the department half-baked.

I think it might be worthwhile to take a moment or two to explain why people are beginning to refer to the department in such a negative way before it is even created. This does not bode well for the future.

I can use my own constituency as an example. We have an immigrant services organization whose job it is to provide all sorts of supportive infrastructure for new Canadians. It bases its operations largely on volunteer work. This is a group of many Canadian citizens who are prepared to spend their talents, energy, time and, in some cases, their own money to assist new Canadians. They have had a paltry budget to operate a centre which provides a central focus for these people to come to participate in various programs. Yet their funding has been reduced at a time when we are seeing the numbers of people coming to Canada increase.

Money set aside for language training has also been reduced. This group is rather exasperated because people are trying to serve, if you like, the minister and the federal government in providing a welcome to new Canadians, yet they are unable to do so at what you would have to call any reasonable level.

Just the other day I received a note from representatives of the Sikh community in Kamloops who were complaining about the fact that for a number of years they have been educating their young people in their own language. The funding has now been cut. The traditional programs that they were able to produce are no longer there. There was a great deal of anguish felt in that community because they are unable to provide this very important service, as they saw it, which would allow their community to maintain its cultural vibrancy in the community.

I think we all appreciate, particularly during these times, how important language is. If the language of a group dies, its ability to carry on in any meaningful cultural way is essentially eliminated, something which we have seen, much to our disappointment, with a number of native languages in our country. Hopefully, we are seeing a bit of a comeback in that regard.

It seems to me that if the government was really supportive of the concept of multiculturalism, then that is one of the areas of funding it would be expanding. Alas, such is not the case.

We have seen a 15 per cent cut to advocacy groups. I thought the point of this whole initiative was to encourage the multicultural diversity in the country. At a time like this one does not cut funding to the advocacy groups that represent these particular communities.

We have also seen that cuts were made to citizenship instruction and language training which was a cost-sharing agreement with the provinces to fund part-time ESL/FSL and citizenship training for immigrants.

I do not have to say that in this year's budget the funding for heritage languages was cut by over $4 million. Essentially, this eliminated the subsidy for heritage language classes across the board.

I could go on at some length. I have all kinds of notes that various organizations have provided with respect to where the government has reduced, cut, curtailed and eliminated support for the various aspects of Canada's ethnocultural community.

That is why we are rather perplexed that we are proceeding with this particular piece of legislation at this time and in this way. That is why my hon. colleague from Vancouver East moved a motion that would very clearly define what multiculturalism means in this legislation.

She suggests it means "that fundamental characteristic of Canadian society which recognizes the diversity and equality of all Canadians as regards race, national or ethnic origin, colour and religion."

Therein lies the challenge that we ought to have in terms of supporting the notion and concept of multiculturalism. But when we look at the record we see that that is not occurring. As a result of having supported this legislation at the second reading stage and after having seen how callously the government ignored the set of recommendations that came forward during the committee stage, naturally, we are having a great deal of reluctance now to continue that support. As a matter of fact, unless I hear some very encouraging remarks and total policy changes from the minister later on in this discussion, I am afraid that we will not be able to support this bill when it comes to the third reading stage.

Thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to say a few words on this most important initiative.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I too am very happy to have the opportunity to speak on this important amendment. I salute the member for Vancouver East who tried for a long time to get a definition of multiculturalism into this bill. I think she has come up with one that is very good. It is one which we support.

Although we support this amendment, as the hon. member for Kamloops said, we do have some concerns with the activity of late in regard to this department, and I will come to them.

• (1540)

First, I would like to read the hon. member's definition of multiculturalism. In light of the constitutional debate that is going on today I think it is very important that when we talk about multiculturalism our definitions be very specific.

In her amendment the hon. member proposes that:

> "multiculturalism" means that fundamental characteristic of Canadian society which recognizes the diversity and equality of all Canadians as regards race, national or ethnic origin, colour and religion.

It is so important that we have that definition because in the past the ministry of multiculturalism has been perceived as a service of government that was there for people from all cultures who required service, with the exception of English or French.

Initially, I supported this bill. Yet, as I said when I first spoke on it, it was with qualifications because I had some nervousness about it. I was nervous that the department might become a department which provides token activity.

What I am concerned about is that as this bill has been put through the various phases we have been seeing activity that has not been working in favour of its support. As I mentioned in my first speech, and I repeat it today, we are at a period of time when the Minister of Finance is always talking about national productivity and global competitiveness. I support that. But it seems to me that one of the distinct trading advantages that we have in this country is our multicultural reality.

I have had personal experiences myself in that regard. If we were in Japan dealing with Toyota, it was great to have someone along who could speak and understand the language. Last January, in Moscow, it was great to have someone there who could speak and understand Russian. When we can understand each other, that accelerates business opportunity. It promotes exchange between Canada and other countries around the world.

The thing that gave me great hope about this full department was that I could see that it would not be used just for cultural events, but that it would be used as an instrument to promote global economic activity, heritage languages and studies, as well as the institute, et cetera. Then, in the last few months, we have seen massive cutbacks.

What concerns me about the cutbacks to the proposed department of multiculturalism is the fact that when the Minister for International Trade wanted $14 million to promote languages in the Pacific Rim he got it. Once again, I go back to my old nervousness which tells me that this department of multiculturalism is being treated in a way that is tokenism.

In other words, when the minister responsible for multiculturalism went to the cabinet table and said: "Here are my requirements," it seems that he really did not fare well. Obviously, every department had to be cut, but when a new department is just trying to get on its feet that is not a good signal to send to the rest of the country.

On top of that, when the Minister for International Trade can get $14 million for one section of the world, for Pacific Rim languages, I find that confusing.

I, too, have my doubts about the commitment to a full department. As I said before, if multiculturalism means being Canadian, then why does the department not get the full resources to look after protocol for the country? Why does the department not get to look after special events such as Canada Day, et cetera? When I see the department being stripped like this I think of it as a shell company and I get nervous.

This is a very sensitive issue. It concerns each and every one of us, especially the people in my own riding. My riding has constituents from all over the world. We must be responsible on this bill. But I, too, put up the flags of caution because the action—not the words—of the government over the last four months and its commitment to this bill have been lacking.

I want to go back once again to the amendment of the member for Vancouver East who wants to define the word "multiculturalism". I must repeat that I like the definition that sets out diversity and equality. I say that because right now we are going through a period in our country when people are having doubts about whether there is equality at certain times and in certain regions. As we know, this promotes racial tension and everything else.

I think anything that can be put into a bill like this that reminds people not only of our diversity and our equality is good. After all, we have been saying for many years in this House that no culture is less than or greater than another.

I salute the hon. member for her definition. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for having the opportunity to speak on this bill.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am rising today to consider the motion presented by the hon. member for Vancouver East, and addressed by the hon. members for Kamloops and Broadview—Greenwood.

The motion is to add to Clause 2 of Bill C-18 a definition of multiculturalism. I do not wish to take a great deal of the time of the House to review this motion at report stage, but I feel that it is very important that we not just vote on this motion but that we actually consider it here.

I understand the concerns of those who would wish to see Bill C-18, which is an act to establish the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship, as in some way a repeat of the Multiculturalism Act which Parliament debated and passed in the spring and summer of 1988.

I want to make it very clear that Bill C-18 is an administrative piece of legislation designed only to formalize the establishment of the department of multiculturalism and citizenship. It is not a policy bill. It is not a regulatory bill. It is merely a simple and straightforward administrative bill.

I have reviewed carefully the work of the legislative committee which examined Bill C-18 and was astonished by the degree to which witnesses appearing before the committee, and some committee members, attempted to reopen substantive policy questions.

The motion before the House today by the hon. member for Vancouver East and introduced by the member for Kamloops falls into that category. It is a motion which is designed in essence to reopen the debate on multiculturalism. We are establishing a department of multiculturalism and citizenship, not debating policy issues.

Simply put, there is no need for a definition of multiculturalism in Bill C-18.

I would urge the hon. members for Vancouver East, Kamloops and Broadview—Greenwood to examine other departmental acts to see if they contain the sort of elaborate definition which this motion is proposing.

I also urge the hon. members for Vancouver East, Kamloops and Broadview—Greenwood to review carefully the preamble to Section 3 of the Multiculturalism Act. It contains clear, concise statements as to the nature of multiculturalism. I would remind hon. members that it was adopted unanimously by this House.

• (1550)

On an equally substantive basis, I am concerned that the hon. members for Vancouver East deemed it necessary to define multiculturalism, but did not at the same time deem it necessary to define citizenship. I would like to repeat that. The hon. member deems it necessary to have in this bill, Bill C-18, a definition of multiculturalism but does not deem it necessary to define Canadian citizenship.

For these reasons I would urge hon. members to reject this motion presented by the hon. member for Vancouver East and introduced by the hon. member for Kamloops.

I would urge hon. members today to rapidly conclude our deliberations on Bill C-18 and proceed to third reading.

I would also urge members of the other place to do likewise, because, as I said, this is strictly an administrative procedure to allow the government to formalize the formation of the department of multiculturalism and citizenship.

I speak on behalf of hundreds of thousands of Canadians who want to see the formalization of the department of multiculturalism and citizenship. I hope that this afternoon we will conclude our deliberations and move this bill forward in the spirit of co-operation and pride in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity you provided for me to make my observations.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise in support of Motion No. 1. I find the rationale just offered to the House by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State somewhat convoluted.

I think it is very clear that any piece of legislation that is tabled in the House of Commons becomes a policy exercise. I do not think you can divorce yourself from what should be policy and what should not be policy. There should not be legislation that would have members simply talking on its technicalities without there being definitions and clarity.

The fact that a new department is being created lends itself to a greater rationale for defining the department, its spirit, values and goals that it will embody. Clearly, we have a Canadian Multiculturalism Act which has gone to some lengths to define "multiculturalism" in terms of a fundamental characteristic. Therefore it should not be a problem for the government to extend that logic, one would think, to the creation of a new department. For the sake of consistency and clarification the term "multiculturalism", which has been abstract from time to time, should be defined. I do not see why this should be a the problem for the government.

If we were to take the time to better define the term "multiculturalism", then the parliamentary secretary would find that it would define what it means to be a citizen of this country. I think the key words in the definition proposed in the amendment are: "a fundamental characteristic of Canada".

I think it is very significant that we are debating this motion this afternoon while at the same time we are debating the Meech Lake constitutional amendments, together with the Frank McKenna proposals which are currently before a committee of the House of Commons. It was the Liberal party in the last Parliament that suggested in this House a key amendment to that Meech Lake document that should be adopted by this House and this government should be the recognition of those Canadians who are neither English nor French in the Constitution. They, too, should be able to see themselves in that constitutional document. They, too, should be able to hold it up and say: "My aspirations and my dreams as a Canadian are right there on page 1 of my Constitution".

Something that I think is missing from the Meech Lake document—and one hopes that we can redress that situation together—concerns the definition of Canada and Canadians in the opening paragraph. So far there is a very inaccurate and incomplete definition by virtue of the fact that it only talks about two of what I believe to be four fundamental characteristics of this country and its citizenship, namely, the French fact, the English fact, the aboriginal fact and the fact that there are eight or nine million Canadians who are not of English, French or aboriginal extraction.

When the opening lines of Meech Lake suggest that the fundamental characteristics are only composed of two of those four facts, namely, the English and the French, then there is an incomplete definition. Therefore, it is the aspiration of millions of Canadians whenever the opportunity arises, whether it is in the Meech Lake document or in a document to establish a department of multiculturalism, to have their trials, contributions and fierce loyalties to this soil called Canada reflected in the major document that this House is to promote and defend five days of the week, 52 weeks of the year.

Therefore, we must ask why the government objects to putting into this legislation confirmation of the facts that you, Mr. Speaker, and I know are alive on the streets of Edmonton, Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver—on Main Street, Canada.

If it is already in the Multiculturalism Act, and if the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, which was before the parliamentary committee looking at the McKenna proposals last Saturday, and which reflected the aspirations of millions of Canadians who want to see that aspect of Canadian society recognized as a fundamental characteristic, then what is the fear of the government to recognize that as a fundamental characteristic in an act that establishes a new department of multiculturalism? It would be solidifying, confirming and celebrating what they recognize as being enshrined in the Multiculturalism Act which was passed in the last Parliament. What has changed?

I appeal to the good sense and the good judgment of my colleagues on the other side.

One hopes that this new department will be a transition point, a transition point from a junior ministry or an appendix of the Secretary of State where it has been for a number of years under successive and different governments and administrations, to one department, a department of culture.

I recognize that in politics and with reality being what it is that you cannot make one giant leap all of a sudden overnight. Therefore, if this motion provides a transition between that junior ministry to a ministry of multiculturalism and eventually to a ministry of culture, then that will harness the support of most of my colleagues in this House of Commons, irrespective of the political allegiances that they may have. A powerful ministry of culture, something which we advocated in the last Parliament, as you no doubt recall, Mr. Speaker, leaves behind the feeling of tokenism, the feeling that somehow there is a department of culture and communications on the one hand and a department of multiculturalism on the other.

What is our official culture? Our official culture is multiculturalism. We are proud to have two official languages, English and French. Our official culture is defined and expressed by multiculturalism.

Therefore one would hope that eventually we will arrive at the stage where our structural expressions to departments will in fact reflect the reality that we find on Main Street, Canada.

• (1600)

My final and concluding remarks would be—

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend across the way keeps referring to the act to establish a department of multiculturalism. He should make it very clear that it is an act to establish a department of multiculturalism and citizenship. I think that should be made very clear in his remarks.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the last remarks would be—and my colleague from Broadview—Greenwood should be commended as one of our two co-critics on the issue of multiculturalism and citizenship—that there seems to be two agendas; one agenda before a national election on multiculturalism and another following an election.

If we cast our minds back to the days prior to the last election, we had a flurry of activity and announcements, be they for the Japanese-Canadian redress, increased grants, increased advertisements to third language media, an introduction of a multiculturalism act, or an introduction of the heritage languages institute. These were introduced within days and weeks of the election. After a general election you have the stripping of dollars and cents that gives expression and life to the principles adopted before the election. This builds cynicism and abstraction in terms of what this government believes when it speaks about multiculturalism. That is why we are after clarity, precision and commitment in terms of defining multiculturalism, not just when we speak in Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver at various picnics and gatherings of Canadians, but that we make them equally high priorities in the corridors of power in this city and namely on the floor of the House of Commons. We think it is a small price to pay to send out a strong symbol that this country and Canadians, who are neither English nor French, are not renters in this country, but that they, too, are owners and are prepared to give to build a bigger and better Canada for ourselves and for generations to come.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to join in the debate on Bill C-18 and the amendment introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East in whose name the member for Kamloops moved the amendment today.

As my colleague mentioned, when Bill C-18 was introduced there was a general agreement by all parties in this House to help matters along. I believe it is fair to say that there was a sense of hope, optimism and co-operation to bring into force this new department of multiculturalism and citizenship. I think we all thought on all sides of the House that this was a good move and I believe everyone was prepared to give co-operation.

It was at the committee stage that the spirit of co-operation broke down. Hon. members attempted to introduce motions that would have strengthened the bill, added to it, and would certainly not have detracted from it, but these were met with resistance. We see that type of resistance today. The spokesperson from the Liberal Party has said that we do not understand why the government is so opposed to a definition of multiculturalism in this bill.

This definition helps to define and clarify the bill. It adds to it. It was introduced in the spirit of co-operation and to help make better legislation. Yet, for some obscure reason the government says "No, we will not consider this".

I listened to the parliamentary secretary give his reasoning. I am afraid I do not follow his reasoning. He mentioned there was a definition of multiculturalism but not a definition of citizenship. Is the parliamentary secretary playing games with us? He knows there will be a citizenship act introduced and in that act there will be a definition of citizenship. Why is he suggesting to the House today that because there is not a definition of citizenship in this amendment we should turn down the amendment that defines multiculturalism? I am afraid that the spirit of co-operation and helping to get good legislation is suddenly breaking down with the attitude of the government.

When the budget came down, we began to dream. I said: "Well, Bill C-18 might just be window dressing and lip service." We saw the cut-backs to essential programs. We saw cut-backs to programs that would help in terms of heritage language, that would help new immigrants to learn the English language and adjust to the Canadian culture.

Since that time, I met with various ethnic groups in my community of Regina—Qu'Appelle, particularly with the German community. They have registered to me their own and protest to the cut-backs to the grants that that community will get to allow young men and women, kids in my constituency, to received education and to receive language training in their former language, German. That is not true just for the German community, but it is true for many other communities as well.

I think the cut-backs to language training for new immigrants is terrible. We all recognize that the Canadian society is undergoing some tremendous strains and stresses. We see the beginning of racism in many quarters. All members of this House recognize that we need new immigrants in this country; otherwise our population will continue to decline. We need new immigrants.

It is important that, when new immigrants come, they are able to have some opportunity of learning the language so that they can integrate themselves into the economic life of this community, and not be thrown on the welfare, recipient-type line which will only breed further racism and resentment. These programs are essential for the social well-being of our country. Yet, the government cuts them and cuts them and cuts them.

One of the tenets of Canadian society is that we are a multicultural society. It is a goal. It is an ideal that this country has built on as opposed to the American ideal of the melting pot. We believe that when people come from different cultures, they have something unique to contribute to add to our mosaic. Indeed, they have. I think of the many contributions that the immigrant community has made to the economic, cultural and social well-being of Canada. We are what we are today is because of these many contributions.

Canada is unique, and I am proud of it. I am one of the members, but not the only member in this House, who was not born in this country. I was born in Indonesia.

There are members in this House who were born in Africa, in Asia and in Europe. This Parliament, and this country, one of the very few countries in the world is where we have this opportunity, privilege and this honour. It is a privilege and an honour for me, a person who was not born in this country, to be elected to represent my fellow citizens and fellow Canadians in this, the Parliament of Canada.

This is our strength as a country. This is the strength of our society. Yet, what we find in this government is a downsizing, a downgrading and the dismantling of things that have built Canada and made it strong. We see the dismantling of VIA Rail, we see the dismantling and the destruction of our cultural institutions like the CBC and the Canada Council. We see the destruction and the dismantling of Canada by the cut-backs to regional economic development, as well as by cut-backs of these great Canadian institutions in what we have in front of us today, the cut-backs to this important department and program, multiculturalism.

We see that our goals as a country are being diminished, downsized and downgraded. I ask this government: What are you going to leave us? What is your vision of Canada? What in heaven's name are you doing to our Canada? You are dismantling it, you are destroying it. What in heaven's name are you going to replace it with? What is going to be left when you are finished? Are we, indeed, going to have a country? What is going to happen to the rich resources, the human resources that we have built up over the years?

• (1610)

Bill C-18 could have been an important piece of legislation that all members of this House wanted to participate in and help strengthen because we recognize it is so important to our country. Yet, unfortunately, the attitude of the parliamentary secretary as he represented the government's attitude today is one of non-co-operation and in this I find it sad and unfortunate. I do hope that other government members will not heed the official line of the government and that they will vote with us on these important amendments.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this important debate this afternoon. First of all, I wish to say that I also support Motion No. 1 which defines multiculturalism. In different circumstances, perhaps I would have considered what the parliamentary secretary said earlier. However, after giving the matter some thought and if we consider the government's record in this respect, I think we must insist on having a definition of multiculturalism. When the government introduced the bill to establish the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship, I was delighted because at last there was some recognition of the facts. In Canada today, there is no majority. One could say we are all equal, in the sense that one-third of our citizens are English in background, one-third French and another third have other cultural backgrounds.

So there is not one single cultural group that could be said to have a majority. When this Department was established, I thought we were finally giving recognition to those millions of Canadians who have made a major contribution to this country. Today, however, I am not so sure. I have the impression that the government merely wants to establish this department so that it can say during the next election campaign—I speak for the Montreal area. I come from that area, and we know how the government tries to make people believe it is aware of the problems of our cultural communities and that it is doing something about them. However, Mr. Speaker, when we look at the facts, this new department will be just another "monument", just so they can say: We have established a department of multiculturalism, just as they bragged during the last election campaign that they had finally drafted legislation on multiculturalism. When we read the legislation, it contained no specifics, nothing concrete at all. Sure, the government may, if it wants to, but there was nothing specific. The government must do that, the government should do that. It was always conditional, Mr. Speaker, and I see that nothing has changed.

If we look at this issue, the parliamentary secretary says that multiculturalism is defined in the Canadian Multiculturalism Act. However, when the Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship) had to make cuts in his budget, why were programs to assist heritage language teaching the first items to be cut? How can we say we want to promote multiculturalism in Canada when the first thing the government does is withdraw the help that is needed to teach heritage languages? That is the very basis of multiculturalism. How can we say our children are maintaining their cultural heritage, the culture of their parents, if they cannot learn the language of that culture? That is important. It is the very basis of any society that calls itself multicultural, as we want ours to be, Mr. Speaker.

So that is why it is important, even in an administrative act like this one which creates a department, to define it. When it is not defined, either they do nothing or they completely alter the approach to the situation. If it is defined, at least they must take it into account. And every time, the minister responsible for this department can at least look at the definition of what multiculturalism is and ensure that this priority, his definition is respected.

I have seen the Secretary of State here in this House answer questions about the funds that he eliminated, not reduced. I understand that we are in a period of budgetary restraint, so one must make some sacrifices, cut a little here and there. But he completely—with a stroke of the pen, he said, "Not a cent. It's over. This program no longer exists." That is what I was just talking about—the funds for teaching heritage languages. He answered some questions from my colleagues and clearly said, "I did not cut because the Minister of Finance cut my budget; I cut because I decided to use that money for other priorities in my department." So what is the priority? Does the minister believe in multiculturalism or is it only rhetoric? Does the government believe in multiculturalism? If so, it should maintain the programs needed to promote multiculturalism, to ensure that Canada remains a multicultural country. I think that Motion No. 1 defines it in a bill creating the department. The preamble defines exactly what multiculturalism is. I think it is important that not only the present minister and the present government but also all ministers and governments that come after take account of it. If they do not agree with the definition, at least they will have to come before the Parliament of Canada to change it.

But if it is there and as long as it remains unchanged they will have to respect it. I am sure that had we had that kind of definition the federal government assistance to heritage language instruction would not have been completely slashed as it has been this time around.

Mr. Speaker, I know that groups have come from Montreal, and I meet some of them. A petition is being circulated in my riding and I intend to present it in the House to urge the government to reconsider its decision and to provide financial assistance to heritage language instruction. That is the very foundation of our multicultural system and I want to encourage the government to make sure that Canada remains a multicultural country because otherwise, without that program. Of course the federal government participated in that program, as did the provincial government. I might add that I know what I am talking about, for in the case of the Italian community, for example, the Italian government also takes part in this program.

But now that the Canadian government has chosen to withdraw from the program, I would not be surprised to hear that the government of Quebec will do the same and, of course, there is no reason why the Italian government would not follow suit so that the program will simply disappear. Italy does not stand to lose, Canada will lose that cultural heritage which made it possible for our children to be good Canadians and to be proud of their own culture. Together we make Canada a special country, unique in the world. I am sure you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that the moment Canada loses its multicultural identity it will no longer be the Canada we know, the Canada we want to promote. Consequently, I intend to support the motion and I hope the minister, who is here, will look favourably on this motion to define multiculturalism, reconsider his decision and re-allocate the funds required for heritage language instruction.

[English]

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this legislation.

I think we should take a look at the proposed definition that has been suggested in the amendment where it says that multiculturalism means: "the fundamental characteristic of Canadian society which recognizes the diversity and equality of all Canadians as regards race, national or ethnic origin, colour and religion."

• (1620)

I think there are two or three very key words in that. One is diversity. It means that we honour and treasure our differences. Another is equality. These differences do not make us unequal, there equality is in spite of differences. It talks about all Canadians. It does not talk about immigrants, or first generation, or fifth generation, or native people. It talks about all Canadians.

The fundamental concept of multiculturalism in Canada is quite different than other countries, particularly the United States. They have emphasized the idea of the melting pot, where religious, ethnic, and cultural values are left behind for those of the new country. Canada has done the opposite. It has said: "Bring us your culture, your religious differences. We honour them. We treasure them. They enrich our community". One does not have to look far in any community in Canada to see how much this diversity enriches our own community.

In my own riding of Surrey North we are very fortunate to have a large Sikh population. Some of them are new Canadians who have been here only months or relatively few years. Others are in Canada for generations. They have enriched our community tremendously because they have maintained their cultural and religious identity.

The Sikh religion, of course, is the focal point of their lives. They are devout. There is total community involvement in their religion. One of the many tremendous aspects of their faith is the concept of equality among people. This is symbolized at their services, when everyone, regardless of their status, or social economic base, participate in meals in the temple. It is a symbol of equality.

Their religion is important to them. That is why the whole issue of wearing turbans within the RCMP was so significant to that community. I am sure they feel much better about Canada now, being accepted after a hard fight.

The Sikhs have brought us other aspects of their culture, including their music, dances, and food. All of these things we treasure. That is what enriches us. We can participate in cultural activities that are reflective of the diversity of Canada.

Sikhs have a very strong commitment to their family which is exemplary to the rest of Canadians. Their families are very close-knit, and they believe in the extended family. They help one another. They start businesses together, and often they are multigenerational. I think it has set an example for the rest of Canadian society. They are involved in their community which focuses on their temple. They are developing cultural activities, seniors' activities, and are involved in assisting their total community.

The Sikh population has contributed immensely to the community in Surrey as a whole.

There have been many leadership people in all sorts of community activities from provision of resources to providing recreational facilities, in being instrumental in forming the unions, including the Farm Workers' Union, in developing educational services for the community not just for their own population but for the total community.

They have been social activists in dealing with issues of racism, social intolerance, poverty and housing, all the kinds of issues faced by Canadian families. This is why my community has been so enriched by the presence of the Sikh population.

They have contributed economically to this country. They are hard working people, innovative and involved in the business of creating jobs through the creation of small business. We all know it is the small business person who is the creator of jobs and because of that they have contributed to the economic vitality of this community. In Canada we owe ethnic communities like the Sikh community a great debt.

I am troubled about what is happening in Canada and the implications in what the government is doing. There is a growing sense of intolerance. We only have to look at the issue of wearing turbans in the RCMP. Members on the government side and, unfortunately, some Liberals strongly opposed the idea of a group being allowed to wear a different uniform because of their religion.

We had cuts to the heritage language program and other multicultural programs, including cuts to native cultural and language support services. This means we are saying to one very significant group in our society that we are not prepared to support the continued uniqueness and diversity that allows it to pass on its language, culture, customs and values to the next generation. Unless these are supported and passed on they will die. That is the melting pot. With their disappearance, not only do ethnic or native groups lose, all Canadian society loses.

How dull Canadians would be if their backgrounds were all similar to mine and there was no diversity. I am a person who unfortunately lost the cultural component and language skills of my father. That has not been of benefit to me and certainly is not beneficial on a Canadian scale.

In conclusion, I think Canadians value cultural diversity. Canadians want this government to support all sorts of programs, including legislation which will ensure that this diversity continues.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to rise to speak to these amendments which would define multiculturalism in the act to mean fundamental characteristics of Canadian society which recognizes the diversity and equality of all Canadians as regards to race, national or ethnic origin, colour and religion, as initially proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver East and today proposed by the hon. member for Kamloops.

• (1630)

As indicated earlier, if we are to recognize and truly accept diversity as a Canadian value, and only then will multiculturalism assume meaning, we have to recognize immediately that there ought to be equality among the diverse cultures and people in Canada.

For the government side to argue, through the parliamentary secretary, that the amendment ought to be rejected because this bill is merely administrative, and not a policy document, is an exercise of a vacuum in logic. Why? Well, if the government were paying attention to its own bill, Bill C-18, it indicates in clause 4, under "Powers, duties and functions of the Minister" the following:

> 4. The powers, duties and functions of the Minister extend to and include all matters over which Parliament has jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, board or agency of the Government of Canada, relating to
>
> (a) multiculturalism; and
>
> (b) citizenship.

I underscore:

> —not by law assigned to any other department.

Clause 5 states the specific duties, and I quote:

> 5. In exercising the powers and performing the duties and functions assigned to the Minister by section 4, the Minister shall
>
> (a) initiate, recommend, coordinate, implement and promote national policies and programs with respect to multiculturalism and citizenship;

For the government to argue that because the bill merely deals with the establishment of a department, that it is merely administrative, and that it is not a policy document, technically the minister may be right. However in substance, the department will initiate, formulate and implement policies. Therefore we cannot divorce policies from the very structure itself. I call the argument and the submission by the government, through the parliamentary secretary, an exercise of a vacuum in logic.

As the member for Winnipeg North, a constituency where 50 per cent are English, the vast majority, and Francophone, a very small minority; and the other 50 per cent represents Canadians of Ukrainian, Filipino, Jewish, German, Portuguese, Polish, East Indian and many other origins, it is natural that I support this amendment to define the meaning of multiculturalism in this bill.

Why will the government surrender clarity for confusion? No Canadian can accept that. Incidentally, citizenship is well known to Canadians since January 1947, when the Citizenship Act has told who and how we become Canadians, either by birth or by choice.

At this juncture, let me remind the government that the Canadian Ethnocultural Council is a non-profit, non-partisan coalition of national ethnocultural organizations, dedicated to working together for the purpose of furthering the multicultural reality of Canada. I remind the government about this because the very essence of this organization is to ensure equality of all Canadians in one united country.

This organization represents the interests and aspirations of some nine million Canadians and the major objective is most laudable, because it is to ensure the equality of opportunity, rights and dignity among all Canadians. Why, then, do I quote and remind the government about the Canadian Ethnocultural Council? It is because this council that has been in the forefront in the establishment of this department. It is this council that recommends to this government that multiculturalism, defined as the fundamental characteristic of our country, be included in the bill.

This council is most knowledgeable and must be listened to. I support its recommendation. Incidentally, this council also has major concerns about the whole thrust of the government's policy and programs for multiculturalism.

On December 20, 1989, in a letter addressed to the Secretary of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship and signed by the President of that Council, Mr. Lewis Chan, the Council indicated to the government that it can support Bill C-18 only if substantive amendments are made to it and if assurances are given in the budget that the multiculturalism program will be maintained and strengthened.

Unfortunately, the serious amendments that the hon. member for Vancouver East proposed have been ruled out of order. Therefore we could not debate the substance of the very amendments that the Council would like included in the bill. If the government is truly serious about substance, then it can do the honourable thing: withdraw the bill and start anew so that we will have a bill that is meaningful for all Canadians.

On the second point, in 1988 during the election, the Tory government promised many things to the multicultural community in an obvious attempt to win votes. When it again formed the government, it reneged on its promises. What it means is that either the government has no credibility at all, or it has no credibility in its policy on multiculturalism. I will submit it has neither.

Also, the Council has recommended—I would like the government to listen, Mr. Speaker, through you—that the creation of a ministerial advisory committee be delayed, because this advisory committee will cause the government about $500,000 a year. That money can be reallocated to fund community programs that will mean programs for the communities that the whole policy ought to serve. The Minister for Multiculturalism apparently failed to heed the submissions of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council

On February 21, 1990, a letter again addressed to the same minister and signed by the President of the Council indicates that the Council remains "alarmed" that $23 million were cut from the yearly budget of the Secretary of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship. What this means is that there will be a decrease in the effectiveness of programming for multiculturalism. Second, the credibility of the policy of this government is thrown into question; and third, the very commitment of this government to multiculturalism seems to have no meaning at all.

The same Council is equally "dismayed" that the government's support for heritage languages schools has been eliminated. When I spoke on this bill when it was debated on first reading, I said that we must enshrine the principles that all our ethnic groups are equal, that all our cultures deserve respect and dignity and that cultural pluralism must receive official support. I indicated as well during that debate that the establishment of a department of multiculturalism and citizenship is an important step in the right direction.

The events that have since then transpired make me question now whether I can continue to give my support to this bill. When a national organization committed to multiculturalism, committed to recognition of diversity in the country and committed to equality for all Canadians makes substantive proposals that this government refuses to accept, even for the amendment on the definition of multiculturalism itself, then I must say that I would find it difficult to continue to support this bill.

I urge, during this period of need for co-operation and national unity, the top-notch issue across the country today, that we accept this amendment so that we can continue to step forward and together, call ourselves Canadians and equal.

• (1640)

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed feelings that I rise to speak on Bill C-18, an act to establish the department of multiculturalism and citizenship.

In the beginning, I believe there was a possibility that it could be a useful act creating a useful department. When we were debating it at second reading, I pointed out at the time that there were serious weaknesses. I hoped that the government would pay some heed to members on this side of the House. I hoped even more that the government would pay some heed to the most interested public groups such as those represented in the Canada Ethnocultural Council, which took the trouble to give its views in a constructive way to the government at the end of last year. However, it seems that the government has decided not to listen to anybody. We hear that the government lead speaker opposes even the idea of putting in a definition of multiculturalism. The amendment that we are discussing would add these words:

"multiculturalism" means that fundamental characteristic of Canadian society which recognizes the diversity and equality of all Canadians as regards race, national or ethnic origin, colour and religion.

This is the amendment proposed by the member for Vancouver East.

The government has said they reject it and if all the government members follow their bidding then, of course, this amendment will be defeated. I think it is very unfortunate that this government does not want to say that it recognizes the diversity and equality of all Canadians with regards to race, national or ethnic origin, colour or religion. I do not know what their objection is to saying that, but we were given some procedural hair-splitting arguments. I do not know what their real objection is to stating that as the definition of the purpose of this department.

There was no definition in the original bill, which I think was unfortunate. There would be no objection if the government wanted to reiterate the existing definition of citizenship which I think is well established in our legislation. But it does object, and therefore the bill has no basis in definition to which the public can refer. There may be some private meaning that the government will interpret or re-interpret from time to time, but no public meaning to the definition or basis of this department.

It means that the public will not have the opportunity to evaluate whether the department and the minister are doing their job and perhaps to criticize or make constructive suggestions if they are not doing their job. That will not be possible because it is impossible for the public to know, in law, what the job of this department and this minister is.

The idea of a multicultural department could be important. The riding of Trinity—Spadina includes a great many people born in other countries. To name a few of the groups, there are significant numbers of Chinese, Portuguese, Italians, blacks—some born in Canada and some born in other countries— Ukrainians, Lithuanians, Latin Americans and so on. These groups are strongly interested in being regarded on a basis of cultural equality with other Canadians. These groups are becoming very well organized and have been for a long time. Many of them are reflected in the Canada Ethnocultural Council. There is potentially strong and democratic support in these groups and in the council, support for a real program of multiculturalism. That is, if multiculturalism means equal recognition of peoples of different cultures. We do not know what the government means by it although there are some clues that are a little bit disturbing.

Events in the last few months have indicated what the government does not want this department to be concerned with. When there was an attempt to point to the need to refer to racism, that was refused. Somehow or other multiculturalism is to be treated without serious regard to race, and yet the racial disputes in Canada are far more deadly than the disputes among people of the same race but differing in language or religion.

The killings that go on are more with regard to race. The starvation and the poverty enforced on Canada's first nations are according to race, not primarily according to some vague multicultural concept. But the government does not want racism specified.

It also refused the possibility of a monitoring entity, a commissioner. If the government means that it should be judge and jury in its own case, then it still has to answer to the kind of embarrassment that it fell into in the case of the Canadian Indian woman who had to complain to the Human Rights Commission about being mistreated by the Department of the Secretary of State. It would be far better if the Department of the Secretary of State would allow a commissioner of multiculturalism to examine these things directly instead of making it a more arduous sort of appeal.

However, we do get a few clues as to what it is about. According to Section 5 this will provide services for the acquisition and proof of citizenship. That means transferring citizenship from one administrative group to another—no particular gain but there will be an extra public expense because there will be more senior officials required.

It will promote among all members of Canadian society an understanding of the values inherent in Canadian citizenship and encourage participation in the social, cultural, political and economic life of Canada. Again, this is nothing new. It has been a function of the Secretary of State for years. We do not really need another department to do it.

It will promote among all members of Canadian society a greater awareness of their multicultural heritage and a greater understanding of human rights, fundamental freedoms and related values. Now they are getting close to the point but they do not really state the equality of these cultures and races.

Then in Section 5(2)—and perhaps we have come to the point—the minister may, in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the Treasury Board, make grants and contributions in support of programs and projects undertaken by the minister. There it is, Mr. Speaker, pork-barrelling.

With no criteria, no definition, no standard of judgment to which the public can appeal, the minister can hand out the taxpayers' money to whomever he likes among the so-called multicultural groups. If he says it is multicultural, it is multicultural. There is no definition.

That seems to be what the deal is about, Mr. Speaker, another opening for government patronage. Just to make that clear, there has been a cut of over $4 million in the programs provided for heritage language, one of the most important developments of the last decade or so in many of Canada's cities. That is to be cut back.

Last year 15 per cent was cut from the advocacy groups, including the Canada Ethnocultural Council. The government feels there is an excess of democracy there. The program for citizenship instruction and language training which co-operated with the provinces in providing English and French as second languages and citizenship training has been ended.

Instead we are going to have $1,300,000 for a Heritage Language Institute, and $24 million for a Race Relations Foundation. What will they do? We do not know. Who will direct them and with what principles? We do not know. Who controls them? Who advises them? We do not know.

I am strongly persuaded that the Canada Ethnocultural Council has it right when the president, Lewis Chan, says in his letter:

> I strongly believe that government can get the best advice from democratically elected community groups rather than from persons appointed by a Minister.

• (1650)

It seems that the minister and the government may be afraid of that much democracy. It appears that the whole exercise is not intended to enable minority groups in Canada, first nations, or recent immigrants, to exercise democratic power, nor to assist them. Rather, it is to control them. Father knows best, and multiculturalism will be enforced on the multicultural people to the extent that the government provides money for these top-down programs.

This is all in line with the recent budget which, apart from its very shameful cuts to groups like first nations and to women's organizations, also made some extraordinary increases. It gave a 21 per cent increase to the budget of the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service—$33 million. More than all this multicultural stuff, more than the women's programs, $33 million to CSIS—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the hon. member's time has expired. The hon. member for South Shore.

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to join the discussion, but I must say in some respects I am not pleased to be speaking in what seems to me to be an excessively lengthy debate over an amendment. Much of the discussion that I have heard does not seem to bear any relationship whatsoever to the amendment on the floor which has to do with the inclusion of a definition in the bill that is before us.

I am really disappointed that it has taken as long as it has to get this bill through the House. We are not talking about a bill that is momentous in its implications for Canada. That was done when this government, showing the leadership that it has, brought in the Canadian Multiculturalism Act two years ago, setting forth the concept of multiculturalism in Canada, a framework for the basis of a multicultural policy that reflects Canada as it is now and as it has been historically, and a fabric and an ethic for what kind of Canada we are looking towards in the 21st century.

The notion that we should include a definition of multiculturalism in an act which is merely a technical piece of legislation establishing a department, that it can provide a firmer basis for the delivery of that program as set forth in the Canadian Multiculturalism Act, and that we should have nearly a year's delay in the passage of technical legislation of this sort, seems to me to not speak well for those who have caused this delay and who purport to have an interest in the manifestation of the Canadian Multiculturalism Act as a reality within Canada.

I do not think it necessary at this time to go into detail in describing what multiculturalism is in Canada. That has been done in the bill. Indeed, I look forward to eventually getting to third reading so that I might properly speak to that issue and to the role of multiculturalism.

My point in rising at this time is to encourage all members of the House to recognize that we have a job to do here for Canadians. We have to prepare the structures of the Government of Canada to properly fulfil the terms, reference and intentions not only of the Canadian Multiculturalism Act but, indeed, the intent and implications of Section 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Therefore, I will not speak at great length at this time. I look forward to coming back at third reading. I would encourage all members of the House to allow this legislation to proceed in order that we may get on in serving the interests of a diverse multicultural Canadian society that will benefit all Canadians and prepare this country for the 21st century.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this very important issue of multiculturalism, and to support the amendment of my colleague for Vancouver East. The amendment does clarify the definition of what constitutes multiculturalism and citizenship.

As the government members who have spoken have indicated, their party will not be supporting this motion. However, it is curious that during the previous speaker's condemnation of this side of the House, we were accused of impeding this bill. As my colleague, the hon. member for Kamloops indicated, when he led off this debate this afternoon, there was enthusiasm at the beginning of the debate for the general thrust of Bill C-18.

It seemed to be sort of a motherhood issue and it recognizes that Canada is a multicultural society. But at the committee stage there were very real concerns raised, and the enthusiasm at the second reading stage waned. At that stage we had the opportunity to consult with ethnocultural groups that work in the community and they put on the warning lights, the amber lights were definitely flashing.

This motion does clarify the intent of the multiculturalism program, it defines what multiculturalism is and, if I can just read once again the language of the amendments of my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East:

> "Multiculturalism" means the fundamental characteristic of Canadian society which recognizes the diversity and equality of all Canadians, as regards race, national or ethnic origin, colour and religion.

What we have seen over the past months really speaks of the requirement for clarification on definition of multiculturalism. What we are seeing now is an historic reality that has proceeded over time. I can remember, as a student of Canadian history, that racism always seems to go up when the economy goes down.

There are many academic studies that have confirmed that dynamic. It is called "nativism", and it is a sort of turning in on ourselves and blaming the most newly arrived for all problems has proceeded through time in Canadian history. I do not need to remind you, Mr. Speaker, of the kind of racist comments that met the Irish immigrants in the last century or, at the turn of the century, the Ukrainian immigrants who came to Canada and now, most recently, the Sikh and Hindu immigrants who have come to enrich our country. We need a definition of what constitutes multiculturalism and the recognition also of the importance of the words equality and diversity and of why we are what we are in this country.

I have had the opportunity of consulting those people who deal with the multicultural groups in my community, both the director of intercultural association in Victoria and also the immigrant and refugee centre. I think that what we have to look for in Bill C-18 is beyond the rhetoric. It is a nice bunch of words but we can see that the budget gives the real picture of this government's commitment to multiculturalism, and the budget has been cut. It has been confirmed by those people who are working in my community that those budget cuts will affect the work that they are able to do. Therefore, there is an increase in racism. If you marginalize these people, if you isolate them in their homes, if you reduce funds for language training, then these people do not have a voice. They have no ability to get out into the community, to be effective, to get the kinds of jobs, the kind of economic clout that they are striving for, and which this government gives lip service to supporting. It takes more than lip service, it takes dollars, it takes support. The very devoted individuals in my community are having a great deal of difficulty.

Last year the immigrant and refugee centre in Victoria serviced 350 to 400 families and individuals and tried to incorporate them into the greater Victoria community. These are people who are frightened because they do not understand the language, they do not even understand how to go grocery shopping. Yet these are the people who are affected by these budget cuts. At the same time, it gives the encouragement for those elements in our society to say: "Oh, they are just as bunch of lazy dogs, they do not want to participate in our community". Well, we have to support them if they are going to participate. We have to give them that initial support so they can be full participants in our society.

• (1700)

The racism evidenced by the racist knick-knacks that have been for sale in our country is a result of the budget cuts. This government's lack of commitment to funding for multiculturalism encourages that. We in this House of Commons have to say that we are not standing for that, that we are committed to multiculturalism in Canada, that we applaud the diversity, that that is what has made Canada great. We do not want to go back to the kind of racist history that we have had in our country. We want to go forward.

All members of Parliament have the great privilege of attending citizenship ceremonies. That is one of my pleasures as a member of Parliament. I try to attend as many as I can. As a fourth generation Canadian I took my citizenship for granted until, as an adult, I had the opportunity to travel elsewhere in the world. It was only when I came back to Canada, having been in Africa and Central America, that I realized what a wonderful country we have, what a gift it was to have been born here. Reverence for citizenship is often stronger in the multicultural communities than it is in native born people. I count myself as a native born Canadian. I do not refer to native born in the sense of our Indian people.

That is the kind of program that we have to support. This amendment that my colleague for Vancouver East has put forth really speaks to the need for definition. I wonder why the government is frightened of this definition. Why it is not willing to support what seems to be a very supportable motion which clarifies what multiculturalism is? Is it because there is a lack of commitment to multiculturalism?

Mr. Shields: No.

Ms. Hunter: Is it because the rhetoric is not matched by the real commitment?

Mr. Shields: No.

Ms. Hunter: The government member says no. Well then I challenge the government member and his colleagues to support this motion to give real commitment to Bill C-18. The member says that we have a job to do. Yes, we have a job to do and it is more than speaking a lot of empty words with no action. We need to have action behind our words, otherwise the lack of confidence in the political process that we are witness to now in our country will only increase.

I urge the government members to support this amendment. This is an important amendment. It gives a little more teeth to Bill C-18, and I support it.

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to comment on this bill because the multicultural identity of many people in this country is one of the most important aspects of the make-up of Canada and something that we all too often do not adequately focus on in our debates and thinking about this country.

I rise specifically to support the amendment by the member for Vancouver East which says that multiculturalism means that fundamental characteristic of Canadian society which recognizes the diversity and equality of all Canadians as regards race, national or ethnic origin, colour and religion.

Members opposite say that we are dealing here only with a housekeeping kind of bill, that it is an administrative bill which does not require these kind of definitions, that these things have all been dealt with elsewhere and so on.

To me that is a somewhat spurious argument. We are trying to give some substance to a large number of election promises, to commitments that have been made, to an evolution of policy that has been developed over the years. A lot of people had very high expectations about what would happen when this particular department was established.

It is impossible to separate the kind of definition we are trying to put in place here from the administrative and technical details. Surely, a new department needs a positive statement of its values, its vision, its role and, in fact, of where it tries to take Canadian society. When using a word like "multiculturalism", which may means different things to different people, it is very important to define it.

Second, it is very important in the context of the national debate about what this country really means to us. It is no secret to anybody that we are embroiled with trying to give serious thought to the ongoing nature of our country, to what kind of a country Canada is going to be, to what we want Canada to become, how all Canadians can feel comfortable in this country. We have a committee travelling from coast to coast hearing opinions on what kind of a country we want to have.

Some of the points that were mentioned earlier bear repeating. Surely it is a flawed vision of this country to speak only about French and English Canadians as being the fundamental peoples of this country. Surely the aboriginal peoples of this country deserve recognition constitutionally and in all other ways with regard to our national character. I would hasten to add that the aboriginal peoples feel that they deserve a unique role and a unique voice in Canadian society and are not properly lumped in with the multicultural framework that some people would include them in. I have to say that I agree with that particular point of view. I think they are another distinct group of Canadians that is often neglected.

The whole multicultural aspect of our country bears recognition because it is fundamentally alienating to people who have come from places other than the British Isles or French speaking countries to be talked about in terms of English and French. A lot of the resistance to the constitutional discussions that we undertake in this country comes, in fact, from Canadians whose origins are neither English nor French. It is important to include definitions like this one in the legislation, perhaps in a symbolic way, to give those Canadians the recognition that their very significant role in Canadian society that has not been forgotten and will not be neglected.

I have found that as the whole debate over multiculturalism has evolved over the years we have made progress. I guess that is why I am in some ways disappointed that we seem to be so tentative about the step that we are taking now.

I have spoken to many immigrant people. My own mother emigrated from the Soviet Union at the age of 10. The original immigrants of many communities in Saskatchewan are still there to communicate with. Saskatchewan is the one province where people who are of neither French nor English ancestry are a majority.

There was a real problem in years past in that we did adopt too much of a melting pot kind of philosophy. The cultures, languages and customs that people brought with them from places like Poland, Ukraine, Germany and Scandinavia tended to be scoffed at and scorned, very much in the same way that more recent immigrants experience racism and so on. In those days, however, it seemed to be an official policy of governments to assimilate people and to wipe out the differences of people as rapidly as possible. I think our society lost a lot during that process.

In my own community of Prince Albert the ethnic and immigrant communities have made our life a lot richer. There are 32 groups that belong to the Prince Albert Multicultural Council. They add a tremendous amount to our community. They put on a show called Tapistrama which 6,000 people attended last year. They teach functional English to immigrants to help people deal with the anxieties they experience in trying to come to terms with life in a new country. They lead racial discrimination workshops, work with the citizenship court and sponsor celebrations like Flag Day, Canada Day, Citizenship Week and so on.

• (1710)

It always strikes me as quite remarkable that these more recent Canadians are the ones who remind those of us who have been Canadians much longer about what it means to be a Canadian. They often seem to show a lot more enthusiasm for Canadian life and the meaning of Canadian identity than do some of us.

A lot of the enthusiasm for Bill C-18 has dissipated. We are looking for progress but where is the progress? Last year there was a 15 per cent cut to the advocacy groups for different multicultural organizations. This has meant a serious loss in capacity for those organizations to plan and to support their volunteers with things like phone banks, transportation and carrying on many of the volunteer activities on which a lot of these organizations are based.

Our organization in Prince Albert was cut from $32,000 to $26,000, a very significant cut. The citizens' instruction and language training program was cut completely. It taught English as a second language on a part-time basis which made it accessible to mothers, people in the labour force and so on. It was a very valuable program. This year $4.1 million was cut from the heritage languages program. Although we now have a heritage languages institute being proposed and a race relations foundation, we see a consolidation of what might be termed bureaucratic institutions, empires if you will, centralized institutions in any event, and a significant cut in activities that give meaning to multiculturalism at the local level. In Ottawa, and perhaps in Edmonton and one or two other locations, we see an increase in activity but in thousands of other communities we see a cut.

When the opposition made constructive proposals in committee, those proposals were ignored. The people who came to the committee, the Ethnocultural Council and so on, to try to give more meaning to this whole exercise were ignored.

This leads me to ask some fundamental questions about where the election promises and the rhetoric are going. Is this government in fact serious about multiculturalism or not?

I believe that this represents a definite lack of vision when it comes to four basic points. One is the demographic challenge that we face in this country. We need more immigrants, as we have been told by many experts, to maintain our economic well-being, our standard of living and so on. Our population is aging and we need more people. We need to participate in the global village. We need to counter racism. We need to give meaning to the constitutional make-up of the country.

Instead, we get a very shrivelled and inadequate version of what people originally expected from this particular bill. Therefore, I urge the government to take seriously this amendment to give some definition to this, to give some meaning to multiculturalism in this country, and basically to put its money where its mouth is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 1. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 251)

YEAS

Members

Althouse	Angus
Assad	Bélair
Bellemare	Berger
Bevilacqua	Black
Boudria	Brewin
Butland	Callbeck
Campbell (South West Nova)	Comuzzi
de Jong	Ferguson
Fisher	Fontana
Foster	Funk
Gaffney	Gagliano
Gardiner	Harvard
Harvey (Edmonton East)	Heap
Hunter	Jordan
Kaplan	Karpoff
Keyes	Kristiansen
Laporte	LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
Lee	MacAulay
MacLellan	MacWilliam
Manley	Marleau
McGuire	Mills
Nault	Pagtakhan
Parker	Pickard
Proud	Riis
Robichaud	Simmons
Skelly (North Island—Powell River)	Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Speller	Stupich
Taylor	Vanclief
Walker	Whittaker—58

NAYS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Atkinson	Beatty
Belsher	Bertrand
Blackburn (Jonquière)	Blais
Blenkarn	Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Boyer	Brightwell
Cadieux	Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Cardiff	Casey
Champagne (Champlain)	Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Cole	Collins
Cooper	Corbeil
Côté	Couture
Darling	de Cotret
Della Noce	Domm
Dorin	Duplessis
Epp	Fee
Ferland	Fontaine
Friesen	Gérin
Greene	Halliday
Harvey (Chicoutimi)	Hawkes
Hicks	Holtmann
Horner	Hudon
Hughes	Jelinek
Joncas	Jourdenais
Kempling	Koury
Langlois	Larrivée
Layton	Lewis
Littlechild	Loiselle
Lopez	MacKay
Marin	Martin (Lincoln)
Masse	Mayer
Mazankowski	Mitges
Monteith	Moore
Nicholson	Oberle
Plamondon	Porter
Redway	Ricard
Richardson	Robitaille
Roy-Arcelin	Saint-Julien
Schneider	Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)	Shields
Siddon	Sobeski
Soetens	Stevenson
Tétreault	Thacker
Thompson	Thorkelson
Tremblay (Lotbinière)	Turner (Halton—Peel)
Van de Walle	Vincent
Weiner	Wenman
White	Wilbee
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)	Winegard
Worthy—100

• (1750)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (for the Prime Minister) moved that the bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On division?

Some hon. members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 6 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 5.56 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 3, 1990

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table in both official languages, the government's response to 35 petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

HOUSING

PUBLIC HOUSING PROGRAMS

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, between 1949 and 1985 the federal government developed a supply of over 205,000 public housing units which form an important part of our social safety net. Public housing provides low-income individuals and families with decent, safe and affordable shelter. The average family income of residents in this kind of housing is about $11,000 a year.

The federal housing agency, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in co-operation with the provincial-territorial housing agencies, has recently completed an evaluation of our public housing portfolio. For the first time we have detailed, accurate assessment of the conditions of Canada's public housing stock and the conclusion is that over all this stock is in good condition.

Perhaps more important the evaluation report indicates that the vast majority of the tenants in public housing are generally satisfied with their residences and that their housing conditions have improved since moving into their current dwellings.

[Translation]

Nevertheless, there is room for improvement in some areas and we must see to it. The public housing stock is a very valuable asset for the country and must be preserved.

[English]

The 4,800 projects completed under the public housing program over the past 40 years are home to almost a half million low-income Canadians. Federal and provincial governments currently spend over $800 million a year in subsidies on this important program.

[Translation]

The evaluation report concludes that the housing stock is generally in good condition, but repairs must still be made where necessary.

[English]

Some of the projects could benefit from redesign and redevelopment. As well, there is room for improvement in some property management practices to better meet the challenges of an aging portfolio and, finally, the report notes the potential for promoting a greater resident involvement in management of their own housing.

In the months ahead, I will be discussing these and other issues with our provincial and territorial colleagues and other interested parties as part of this consultation process.

This program evaluation is an important tool. It is important to take a step back and take a hard look at the performance of our programs from time to time.

The release of this evaluation report sets the stage for future policy consultation with public housing residents, provincial and territorial housing agencies, municipal and regional housing officials and the public in general.

[Translation]

This consultation process will bring out a whole range of opinions and viewpoints and will help ensure that the public housing program continues to meet the needs of low-income people.

• (1110)

[English]

The publication of this report is a further example of the federal government's commitment to providing effective management of our resources and ensuring that Canadians are well housed.

We are working to meet the challenges not only of today but that of the 1990s and beyond. Out of this process, I hope that not only will we be able to improve the public housing that we now have, but perhaps, and hopefully, we will be able to utilize these resources to increase the total stock of housing perhaps in some co-operative and joint ventures with the private sector.

I am looking forward to great things from this consultation process. I am sure that all Canadians are as well.

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his statement, but it is becoming quite clear and, frankly, quite boring to listen to this minister make all kinds of flowery pronouncements about housing with absolutely no substance, answers or action.

It is clear that when a government lacks initiative, interest, commitment and vision, it calls for more surveys, studies and evaluation. In short, it wants to consult more. What this country really needs are answers, not more questions.

While an evaluation of this kind is valuable because it examines the concerns and the opinions of the people who use the public housing programs, it is always necessary for the government to listen to feedback from the very people the government is trying to help. An evaluation of the quality of the housing stock is also necessary to know if the program is meeting the needs of Canadians by providing adequate shelter.

What this evaluation lacks, however, is an evaluation of the adequacy of the public housing program itself. For the past year, Canadians have been inundated with information about the spiralling costs of housing and rents and the appalling lack of affordable housing.

Provincial and municipal governments, public housing authorities, non-profit and co-operative groups, the private sector, not to mention the thousands of Canadians in waiting lines, want action, not more studies.

We have heard the minister's sob stories before about how the finance department and the finance minister have cut his budget and the housing programs. The end result is that we are getting less action on housing today, not more.

What has the government's action been thus far? The elimination of the RRAP program, that very program which assisted our aging stock of housing; less social housing units; less co-operative housing units; a cap on the multiple unit construction prices; and, finally, higher interest rates which will be the death-knell to housing construction totally.

When is this minister and his government going to get off their duffs and stop talking about the housing problems and start acting to solve these problems? Why will the minister not convene a national housing action conference involving all sectors and all governments to deal with this crisis in housing? How can we all work together to solve and meet the challenges of housing for our people today and tomorrow?

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I find myself almost becoming embarrassed for the Minister of Housing. Canada has a growing crisis in affordable housing and the minister is giving hollow, inane platitudes of self-congratulation about what this government has done.

He talks with pride about the development of 205,000 social housing units in nearly 40 years. That amounts to 5,000 units a year. He does not even have the nerve to talk about what has happened since 1985 when this government abandoned its commitment to social housing.

Most industrial countries have 25 per cent of their housing stock in non-market housing. Canada has 4 per cent. Even Hong Kong has 40 per cent. He brags about a family income of $11,000. He brags that this is the family income of people in public housing. He should be ashamed.

He talks about promoting greater resident involvement in the management of their own housing. The best way to promote management in housing is make it possible for people to own their own homes. Restore the co-op housing program that has been slashed from 5,000 units down to 17. That is how people would be involved. They would be involved, if they could afford to buy a house or live in a co-op.

The minister states that this report is going to ensure that Canadians are well housed. What garbage. This report is going to do nothing. Unless this minister is willing to stand up and do something about high interest rates which have brought housing construction to a crashing halt in this country, unless he is willing to do something about providing adequate housing on government lands instead of talking about affordability as $175,000, unless he is willing to do something about the speculators in the housing market, which he talked about when he was a back-bencher and has abandoned, and unless he is willing to restore the social housing programs and particularly the co-op housing programs, his statements are totally hollow.

What I think is necessary is the evaluation of this government's commitment to housing Canadians. I think it would be frightened to undertake that kind of an evaluation because I am sure it would show it wanting.

* * *

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATIONS

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF CANADA-JAPAN INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 32(1), I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the first report of the Canada-Japan Interparliamentary Group.

This is a report of a working visit to Tokyo, Japan, April 8 to April 14, 1990.

[Editor's Note: see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE—THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 108(2), I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the third report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

STRIKING—THIRTY-EIGHTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the thirty-eighth report of the Striking Committee. If the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence in the report later this day.

[Editor's note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY FROM ELGIN TO ELGIN—NORFOLK

Mr. Ken Monteith (Elgin) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-298, an act to change the name of the electoral district of Elgin.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House today to introduce a private member's bill. The purpose of this bill is to change the name of the Electoral District of Elgin to Elgin—Norfolk.

Should this bill pass, the change would better reflect the make-up of my electoral district, which includes Elgin County and the Township of Norfolk.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

STRIKING COMMITTEE

ADOPTION OF 38TH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, if the House agrees, I move the adoption of the 38th report of the Striking Committee, which was presented earlier today.

Motion agreed to.

• (1120)

PETITIONS

TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I am tabling petitions from Lebel-sur-Quévillon and Chibougamau, further to the recommendations of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas.

The signers ask the government to maintain the tax benefits for isolated communities north of the 49th parallel.

[English]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have two tax related petitions that I would like to table with the House. They are both certified correct. One concerns the goods and services tax, the grief and suffering tax. Petitioners from all parts of Canada call upon the government to reject this most regressive tax and bring in a fair tax system.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that members of this House were presented with a report last October on the Northern Tax Allowance. These petitioners from the Robson Valley in my part of British Columbia, call upon the government to reject that most unfair report and to bring in positive recommendations regarding a northern and remote tax allowance.

RIGHT TO LIFE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Bruce—Grey): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present petitions with the signatures of 3,236 nurses, doctors, medical staff and concerned citizens from across Canada, united in their belief that nurses should have the right to choose not to participate in abortion for reasons of conscience or religion.

All the petitioners oppose the taking of precious human life through abortion and call upon Parliament to enact legislation prohibiting discrimination in employment, disqualification or coercion of nurses who refuse to participate in abortion for reasons of conscience.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the pleasure to present a number of petitions relating to the government's unfair tax system. The petitioners state that the government has not addressed the unfair tax system currently in place which permits wealthy individuals and corporations to pay little or no federal tax, while forcing lower and middle-income taxpayers to bear more of the national tax burden. They call upon this government to abandon its current goods and services tax proposal and bring in tax reform.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition today, pursuant to Standing Order 36, the subject of which is VIA Rail cut-backs. The petition is signed by a number of Canadians. They call upon Parliament to urge the government of Canada not to cancel, in whole or in part, rail passenger services in Canada, and they cite a number of reasons for that.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have several petitions relating to the implementation of the goods and services tax from people all the way from Ottawa, Hull, Gloucester, London, Brantford and Kamloops, pointing out that this goods and services tax does not relate to people's ability to pay, that it is regressive, that it has not addressed the unfairness in the present tax system and implies that if that unfairness was addressed the present tax system would go a long way toward curing the financial ills of the government.

The petitioners decry the fact that the government is going to be taxing reading, haircuts, diapers, home heating fuels, many of those things which ordinary Canadians simply are not able to sustain because of their lack of high income. They call upon the government to bring in a tax system that is fair, progressive and not regressive, as the GST is.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 247, 258 and 264.

[Text]

OPEN SKIES CONFERENCE

Question No. 247—Mr. Boudria:

1. Were there any costs to the government arising from the Open Skies conference held in Ottawa in February, 1990 and, if so, including preparatory costs, in total, what were they?

2. Were any vehicles bought by the government for the conference and, if so (a) what number (b) at what cost (c) from whom (d) what process was used to choose a supplier (e) are they being used now and, if so (i) for what purpose (ii) by whom?

3. Were parkas purchased for the conference and, if so (a) what number (b) from whom (c) at what cost (d) in what way was a supplier chosen (e) were any parkas purchased but not given to foreign dignitaries and, if so, were they given to anyone else and, if so, to whom?

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport), Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons and Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of the Whole House): I am informed by the Department of External Affairs and the Secretary of State as follows:

1. An amount of $5,240,00 was allocated for the Open Skies conference. Invoice are still being received and the final total of expenditures will not be known until all financial transactions are processed.

2. No vehicles were bought by the Government for the conference. Please refer to reply to question No. 241 answered March 7, 1990.

3. Parkas were purchased for the conference (31 parkas @ $397.00). They were purchased from Polar Parkas (P.O. Box 1385, Yellowknife, N.W.T.) since they were the only supplier that could promise to meet our delivery deadline. Parkas were given only to foreign ministers (and their accompanying spouses). The SSEA bought and paid for a parka for his personal use.

ISLAND OF ST. VINCENT—PROJECTS

Question No. 258—Mr. Laporte:

Since 1975, has the government provided funding to any projects on the island of St. Vincent and, if so (a) which projects (b) in each case, at what expense to the government?

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport), Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons and Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of the Whole House): Yes. I am informed by the International Development Research Centre and the Canadian International Development Agency as follows:

Since 1975, the International Development Research Centre has financed two research projects on the island of St. Vincent.

a) The first project was funded in 1982 for a period of 9 months. Its objective was to analyze the determinants of migration from St. Vincent, and to assess its social and economic impact at the household level in St. Vincent. The second was funded in 1983 for a period of 24 months. Its objective was to strengthen the socioeconomic information system and documentation centre of the island's Ministry of Finance, Planning and Development, as a member of CARISPLAN. The project's grant was shared between St. Vincent and the Grenadines.

b) Each project amounted to $39,000 and $81,430 respectively.

Yes, the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) has provided funding to projects on the island of St–Vincent.

(A) PROJECT TITLE	DATE	(B) CIDA BUDGET ($)
Kingstown Port Master Plan	1989	50,000
Diamond Industrial Estate	1988	3,636,400
Fisheries Development—Phase I	1987	4,975,000
Forestry Development	1986	4,520,000
St. Vincent Forestry—Special Administrative Expenses (SEA)	1985	10,633
St. Vincent Fisheries Feasibility—SEA	1985	106,281
St. Vincent Canada Fund 89 / 90	1989	125,000
St. Vincent Canada Fund 88 / 89	1988	275,558
St. Vincent—Mission Administrated Funds (MAF) 87 / 88	1987	299,999

(A) PROJECT TITLE	DATE	(B) CIDA BUDGET ($)
St. Vincent MAF 86 / 87	1986	249,631
St. Vincent MAF 85 / 86	1985	189,368
MAF 84 / 85	1984	217,409
MAF 83 / 84 & Prior Years	1983	957,020
Industrial Estates Feasibility Study	1984	164,000
Cumberland Hydro	1984	11,400,000
Road Materials	1980	249,000
Agriculture Revolving Fund Study	1980	11,500
Arnos Vale Air Terminal Bldg.	1974	698,408
Water Spare Parts	1973	61,700
Water Development—Phase II	1973	2,400,600
Line of Credit—Equipment	1971*	358,000
Teachers Education	1971*	193,500
Training—Engineering Tech.	1971*	87,000
Training—Economics	1971*	87,300
Technical / Vocational Education	1971*	217,500
	Total :	31,540,807

* Projects started before 1975 but ended after that time.

N.B. : Funding of activities in the Special Programs Branch is more and more of the "core funding" variety, ie., that the destination of the monies is recorded in the name of the various organisations and institutions, not individual projects. The same is true for funding to the Multilateral organizations.

JOSEPH ELIE LTÉE

Question No. 264—Mr. Edmonston:

Is the government aware of a sale by Petro-Canada of a division of the company in Montreal, called "Joseph Ellie" and, if so (a) to whom is the division being sold (b) what is the purchase price (c) is the sale on (i) a cash basis (ii) a debt basis (iii) some combination of the two (d) are any other terms and conditions associated with the sale and, if so, what are they (e) has Petro-Canada required any guarantees of the purchasers with regard to job security, benefits and other terms of employment of the employees at Joseph Ellie and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada reports as follows:

The sale of 50.1 per cent of the shares in Joseph Elie Ltee was announced to all Joseph Elie employees on December 29, 1989 and concluded on January 1, 1990.

(a) The purchasers were ex-employees of Petro-Canada Inc. An appraisal was made of the management capabilities of these individuals.

(b)-(d) Information concerning the purchase price is private to the parties involved in the transaction. The purchase was not financed by the Government of Canada nor by Petro-Canada. Normal commercial financing was arranged independently by the purchasers.

(e) Employees have kept their jobs, have continued at the same salary levels and enjoy a similar benefits package to the one in which they previously participated. The only exceptions to this were three existing employees, two of whom accepted positions in Petro-Canada and the third who elected to accept an early retirement arrangement.

[English]

* * *

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 196 could be made an Order for Return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 196 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[Text]

NATIONAL ACTION COMMITTEE ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

Question No. 196—Ms. Mitchell:

For each year since 1975, has the government provided grants or contributions to the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and, if so, in each case (a) what amount (b) under which programs (c) what proportion of that year's annual operating budget of the committee did the sum represent?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[Translation]

PRIVILEGE

PROPER DRESS CODE AND MEMBER FOR DAVENPORT—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On Monday, February 19, the hon. member for Davenport raised a question of privilege because he had not been recognized in debate the previous Thursday, February 15, when the House was considering the motion of the government on language rights. At the time, the Acting Speaker declined to recognize the hon. member for Davenport because he was not properly dressed.

[English]

The hon. member has asked the Chair to reconsider its reliance on the traditional interpretation of the practice of the House that required male members be dressed with jacket and tie. In making his case, the hon. member pointed to the latitude accorded women members who can dress, as he put it, "in a variety of ways according to fashions and changing trends".

The hon. member also quoted the Deputy Speaker who, last December 14, referred to Beauchesne and the practice that members are expected to respect in terms of their appearance. The hon. member stressed, however, that this is a practice and not a rule. This is certainly true, but it is a practice that is well established.

Exceptions have been allowed from time to time, but always within the context of the accepted practice. Clergymen members have requested the right to wear their distinctive collar instead of a tie and members who have sustained an injury have asked to be excused from the wearing of a jacket or a tie for short periods of time when it was not possible because of the injury. In this connection I would point to the recent cases involving the hon. members for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte and for Trois-Rivières.

Such exceptions, as I have said, have proved the practice. There have been statements from the Chair supporting the usual practice for more than 60 years and I do not feel that as Speaker, I can disregard this practice.

[Translation]

If the practice is to be changed and if the hon. member for Davenport wants to see it changed, I would urge him to press his case with the Standing Committee on Elections and Privileges. That committee has the power to inquire into the rules and pratices of the House and can make recommendations to change the rules and practices as they think fit. The House can then determine whether or not such recommendations should be adopted. The hon. member may wish to consider this approach.

[English]

I regret that I am unable to find that the hon. member has a valid question of privilege.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wish to inform the House that because of the minister's statement, the time allowed for Government Orders will be extended by 10 minutes beginning at one o'clock this afternoon.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-15, an act respecting plant breeders' rights, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to rise again to speak to this bill. Plant breeders' rights in Canada has received a lengthy and detailed study by the legislative committee. I understand that the committee has met at least 15 times, talked with representatives of 16 organizations, and received more than 100 written submissions. I believe that the committee has heard all of the significant arguments for and against the legislation.

It is important to note that the organizations which represent the vast majority of those who will be directly affected by plant breeders' rights support this bill. These include the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, one of Canada's largest farm organizations, and the Canadian Horticultural Council. Several helpful suggestions were made and incorporated into the bill to improve this legislation which already enjoyed wide support. As a result, we feel that Bill C-15 is even more beneficial for Canada.

• (1130)

During second reading it was pointed out that this bill was drafted to conform to the international convention for the protection of new varieties of plants. As amended, the bill still conforms with the convention. Also, at second reading, reference was made to the 18 members of the International Union for the Protection of New Varieties of Plants. While our consideration of this bill continued, Poland has joined and I hope this bill will become law soon so that Canada may become the twentieth member of this union.

The committee hearings re-emphasized the anticipated benefits from this legislation. One important benefit is the stimulation of plant breeding efforts in the public sector which include Agriculture Canada and the universities. As we have heard, this is a high priority for crop and seed producers. It is also important that we encourage the private sector to invest in plant breeding. By allowing reasonable royalties we will give the private breeders incentive to invest in this kind of work.

The Canadian agriculture industry is also expected to benefit from this bill through improved access to foreign varieties. The producers of strawberry plants, seed potatoes and numerous other crops will also be able to choose from these many new varieties. In addition, this legislation will help Canada control the use of our new varieties abroad, generate royalties and increase export opportunities.

There were concerns expressed at the committee hearings that this legislation could have adverse effects. It was suggested that plant breeders' rights could encourage monopoly control of the seed industry and that it would remove or promote the use of chemicals in production, that it would have an adverse effect on the Third World and that it would open the door to patents on life.

I should like to respond to each of these points. As far as monopoly control is concerned, there is already provision in the Competition Act to prevent monopolies. Within the plant breeders' rights bill the compulsory licence provision will prevent restrictive distribution practices. However, there are other major factors that will work against monopoly control in the Canadian seed industry. For one thing, there is the supply of varieties from public plant breeding programs, and there is the production and marketing of seed by farmer co-operatives and hundreds of seed growers.

On the second point, this legislation has no direct impact on agri-chemicals. The trend today is to only use chemicals in specialized situations where there are no alternative production techniques. The move to sustainable agriculture will also encourage the development of varieties which will resist pests and the breeders of such varieties will be rewarded under this legislation.

As to the effects on the Third World, plant breeders' rights in Canada will only impact on our foreign trade with other countries with similar legislation. This does not include Third World countries and furthermore, very few varieties adapted for Canadian conditions would prove useful in Third World countries.

Finally, by choosing to introduce this legislation specially designed for plant varieties, rather than amending the Patent Act, it can be argued that we are actually moving away from life patenting. Future developments in the patents are a separate issue and it has taken many years for plant breeders' rights legislation to come this far. I might say that many other governments have introduced legislation very similar to what we are proposing today.

The legislative committee has studied the technical details of the bill in great depth. They have reviewed the wording and have made some amendments which improve and clarify how the Canadian plant breeders' rights system should function. I congratulate the legislative committee on the thoroughness of its work.

We have heard from producers and their organizations. We feel that they need this legislation and they need it now. I am very hopeful that this House will pass this legislation very quickly and that it will become law in the very near future.

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise today and speak on Bill C-15, an act respecting plant breeders' rights.

As many of us know this is a bill that has been in and out of this House in different stages and different times for close to 15 years. I think it is time that it has finally reached third reading stage and I would like to make a few comments on that.

It has been a controversial bill and still is in many peoples' mind. However, as the previous speaker has said, the legislative committee had lengthy discussions. Many groups and individuals appeared before us. We had a good study but, like any bill, even though it is at its final stage, there could be further improvements in order to dispel some concerns that some people might have.

However, as one who has been very actively involved in the agri-food industry at a different level than at the present time, I feel very strongly that this bill is needed by the industry.

We had a good study in committee. I feel we strengthened the bill. We got further interpretation and definition of such terms as reasonable price and distribution. At report stage, we got agreement on the fact that there shall be an advisory committee. Previous to that there was a concern that it should only be may, and some of us felt very strongly about that. We were pleased that the amendment put forward by my colleague from Algoma, that there shall be an advisory committee, was adopted in order to keep the commissioner and the minister up to date on concerns.

Other worth-while information that came out in committee in order to dispel concerns of some people was a memorandum of understanding between Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Agriculture Canada. I would like to read from one part of that memorandum as follows:

> 1. Ag Can will consult with CCA on all matters related to the administration of the Act which may be of concern to CCA. More particularly, with respect to the regulations and procedures to be approved under the Act, Ag Can will consult with the Bureau of Policy Coordination to ensure consistency with other intellectual property legislation and will consult with the Office of the Director of Investigation and Research under the Competition Act on issues related to competition policy.

There are more sections along the same line that I feel will go a long way toward comforting people with concerns.

A concern related to by the previous speaker was the concern that this may narrow the control of plant genetic material to multinational organizations or firms. I would like to make the House aware that the plant gene resources centre under Agriculture Canada has some 90,000 assessions which are genetic pieces of material, plants, varieties, et cetera, that are totally available to anyone in the world at no cost so they can use them if and when they wish in order to develop a new plant variety. There is no possibility of this being withheld from anyone who wishes to use the genetic material for further plant breeding. This is only one in the chain of these types of facilities that are available throughout the world.

While there are some groups and individuals who oppose this bill, there is a long list of supporters. They include the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Horticultural Council, the Canadian Ornamental Plant Foundation, the Ontario Agricultural Commodity Council which represents some 20 commodity groups in the province of Ontario, Potatoes Canada, the pulse growers' association, SeCan, the United Grain Growers and the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association. Some of these organizations have some qualified concerns and most were looked after in committee. The university institutions are in favour of this as well.

When we look at global trade today there is one important way in which we can take part in that trade to the best of our ability, and that is to be competitive. I feel that the passing of this bill will put our primary producers and the total agri-food industry in a much better position to be more competitive throughout the world.

• (1140)

Farmers are concerned that it may increase the cost of seed to individual producers, because of the royalties they might have to pay. I can tell you from experience that, if a certain seed company comes out with a new seed, a hybrid or a variety of horticultural trees or plants, that the bottom right-hand corner of my balance sheet as a producer may not be everything, although in reality, it goes a long way.

If this new variety will allow me to produce more food at a cheaper price per unit so that the consumers, not only in Canada but throughout the world can have a safe, healthy food product at a lower cost I, and other producers, are prepared to pay a little bit more for that root stock, seed or plant in order to propagate further plants of that variety.

A few years ago, I would have had more concern about the passing of this bill. Today, with the concern being voiced in the agricultural community and in our society in general about the environment, food safety and all these things, I feel that this bill is probably needed more than ever because we must realize how and why plant breeding is done. It is done not only to produce increased yields, but in order to produce safer products, and a more financially sustainable industry as far as the environment is concerned.

Now the market is being driven, and producers are looking for varieties of crops, trees and plants that do not require the use of pesticides as they did in the past. Producers are the first group of people who want to get away from that type of thing. We must have the legislation in place that will encourage plant breeders to develop those types of varieties and species. They need that encouragement. It is not a process that goes through without the expenditure of large amounts of money, and there must be a way for producers to recover at least part of the expenditure. I am not as worried about it as I was in the past. I think it is necessary in order to encourage this type of activity at the present time.

In closing, I believe very firmly that in Canada we want to help other countries of the world so that they can become more self-sufficient in food. We must encourage them to produce for their own people a safe, sufficient quality of food. We cannot do that unless our own agri-food industry is sound environmentally and economically. I feel that this bill definitely will help our agri-food industry to go in that direction, and that, even though there may be a few concerns about something that hypothetically may happen as a result of Bill C-15, the advantages of this bill far outweigh any possible disadvantage that there may be.

I encourage the House, as the previous speaker did, to pass this bill as soon as possible. After 15 years in the House of Commons at one stage or another, at one time or another, I think it is time for us to complete the work that we have to do on this bill.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak at third reading of Bill C-15, an act to introduce a form of plant breeders' rights to Canada.

The previous two speakers have indicated that this proposal has come about after a fair length of time, however, I would argue that, just because the proposal has been on the block for 15 years and has been rejected for 15 years, by age alone that does not suddenly make it a good proposition.

I think there are a number of technical, ethical, moral and international considerations to be dealt with here but, for some simplicity, let me simply constrict my remarks today to what I see this bill doing.

To me and I think to a lot of other analysts, it does change the power structure that exists in the market. It is a fairly fundamental shift. The seed industry across the globe is becoming controlled more and more by a very few multinational corporations. The seed industry is fairly big business, even in this country. More than $400 million annually is expended by farmers for seed, seed stock and nursery stock to get the crops that we eat and produce fibre with, and also those crops that we look at and enjoy, such as flowers and shrubs.

There is over $400 million a year expended in our country alone, a very large market. The trade in new varieties has gone on between Canada and the developed world in the past by a simple expedient of contract law. A seed company or an individual in this country would sign a contract with a developer outside of the country, and agree to pay them for the use of their seeds. There is nothing particularly wrong with that system, except that a lot of the other developed countries have an even better deal going. Within their law, they have developed plant breeders' rights or plant patenting in some countries which permits the developer to have a much cheaper way of enforcing the contract.

Essentially, with this particular law coming into effect in Canada, a foreign developer of a seed makes a contract with a seed producer or a seed seller in this country. If the contract is broken and the royalties for the use of the seed are not forwarded out of the country, he does not face an expensive legal process under contract law to collect those fees.

This proposal changes that quite considerably in favour of the developer in that he simply has to go to the court and ask that the payments be made. The law is much strengthened on his or her behalf and on behalf of the company, and the extraction process is much cheaper from a legal viewpoint. If that was the end of it, the debate would probably have petered out fairly quickly.

However, when we look at other developed countries in western Europe and south of our border in the United States, which has been going this route much further and much faster over a much longer period of time, we find that that is not the end of it. There is always more being demanded, and we are getting very close on the U.S. side to slipping into the whole process of patenting life.

Much has been made by the previous two speakers of the alleged support of the various farm groups and farm organizations. The hon. member for Prince Edward—Hastings pointed out that a lot of those supporters had conditions on the support. I just want to take the most moderate of the various groups that were mentioned, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and go through for just a moment, the conditions that they posed on this legislation to show that the committee met virtually none of their conditions. Yet we are hearing that it was support from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that led to the caving in on the Liberal benches of some, what I perceive to be, anti-C-15 speeches at second reading.

• (1150)

The CFA, I recognize and they recognize, have some problems. The view of plant breeders' rights legislation varies throughout the farming community. The nursery and horticultural side of the industry that is producing flowering plants and items and have to respond very quickly to new colours and new shapes would like to have a freer exchange and access to material from Holland, Europe, and the United States, where a lot of money is expended on this kind of horticulture.

For the reasons I outlined at the beginning of my remarks, there is some hesitancy and reticence on the part of those countries to put material into Canada without having an easy way of collecting the royalties because the user in Canada might not live up to the contractual agreement.

Canada is simply not permitted to have those new varieties which are propagated by Americans and Europeans. They are shipped into Canada for purchase by the consumer who is particularly interested in having the very absolute latest rose and tulip.

There was an effort in the committee to separate those kinds of needs from the food needs of the agricultural industry because there is some hazard in permitting food crops to become subject to a monopoly or patent right under this type of legislation. We are already seeing a tendency to monopolies in the seeds industry and this simply allows large multinational corporations to extract larger and larger profits from the industry.

The CFA provided as one of its conditions that Bill C-15 must continue to exempt farm-saved seed from royalty payments. It is crucial to farmers that this exemption be retained so that they will have secure access to an alternate source of low-cost seed. There was no change to the way the legislation is written. As I recall, it is left to the discretion of the commissioner who administers the bill, but what creates some concern was reiterated by the farmers' union in their brief, and that is seed costs at the farm. They note that there has to be some choice permitted to farmers to use their own farm-saved seed.

I point out two instances where other countries' experience gives them some reason for a certain amount of alarm. In Great Britain, for instance, we were told that such farm-saved seed is exempt as long as it is cleaned on the farm. However, if the cleaning at the farm level is done by a portable seed-cleaning plant—which are used in this country as well—there would have to be another payment of royalties for the cleaning of the particular variety of seed even though it was produced on the farm and was going to be reused on the farm.

There was some hesitancy on the part of farmers to get started in this particular process, knowing that once begun, Great Britain began to put further conditions on their farmers.

I point out that as we move to the goods and services tax, grain cleaning charges for custom use will be something on which we will have to pay GST. There will be bookkeeping done. It will be very easy to monitor those items so the administrative framework for permitting the companies to collect royalties on farm reused seed will be there.

As well, I point out a quotation from Dr. Hans Leenders, the Secretary General of the International Seed Trade Federation based in Switzerland, who in a speech in May of 1986, quoted in Seedman's Digest a U.S. publication, stated that he was taking the point of view of a seed developer, being a third generation owner of a seed business.

He was pointing out the need by the seed trade to be able to collect royalties on seeds that were grown on the farm and were going to be reseeded on the farm. This is part of what he had to say:

> As a matter of fact the freedom to do in one's own house/company is not absolute. Clandestine alcohol, fire arms, drugs production even for one's own need and quite some other things are in most countries prohibited.
>
> Plant reproductive material has increasingly become a technical product in which money has been invested. Even though it has been a tradition in most countries that a farmer can save seed from his own crop, it is under the changing circumstances not equitable that farmers can use this seed and grow a commercial crop out of it without payment of a royalty.

I think it is fairly clear where the international seeds industry is trying to carry us. While this legislation and this commissioner tell us there is no intention of permitting royalties on seeds that are grown on the farm and reused on the farm, the seeds industry is pushing beyond that.

I submit and remind you that it was the seeds industry that pushed Canada and the Department of Agriculture into adopting a plant breeders' rights mode in the past 15 years and are succeeding here today.

This should not in any way be construed to be the final step. It is only the very first of many steps that the seed industry has in mind to take Canada's legal system and its ability to extract royalties and profits from the $400 million worth of seeds that are used in this country.

I said I was going to be going through some of the conditions that the CFA laid down. I pointed out that the first one was that seed saved by farmers must continue to be exempt from royalty payments.

The second condition was that the bill also make provision for compulsory licensing, with the objective of ensuring that a protected variety is made available to the public at reasonable prices. That reasonable price protection is left completely to the judgment of the commissioner. There is no protection in this legislation other than the good judgment of the current and future commissioners, so that can change at any time at the whim of the commissioner and the sitting minister of agriculture. There is no guarantee that compulsory licensing will be available so that producers of basic food will have available varieties at reasonable prices.

Another condition that the Federation of Agriculture had as a requirement of its support was a sunset clause after 5 or 10 years. This is not particularly radical. It is the kind of thing we see in the Canadian Bank Act. We have given the banks an extreme privilege to run the banking system in our country with very little supervision. They have very near monopoly control of the financial institutions. In return this House, and this and all future and past governments, have reviewed the act and privileges granted to financial institutions every 10 years. One of the reviews is to be done this year for the past decade.

• (1200)

Third, the privilege proposed for seed development companies is very similar in that it is a monopoly kind of power granted for up to 17 years. The CFA is well within its rights to suggest that a sunset clause be included so that after 10 years a full review of the activities of seed companies under this act could be conducted by the House of Commons and the Senate and a decision made as to whether to continue those powers, to restrict them, or perhaps to extend them. It was turned down by the government, yet it was one of the requirements of the CFA on its conditional acceptance of Bill C-15.

The fourth condition supported for plant breeders' rights, provided there will be proper examination under the provisions of the Competition Act, is to look at mergers and acquisitions to determine what effect the mergers would have on competition in the seeds industry. We did not get a response to that. What we got was a letter from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to the Department of Agriculture which indicated that they would have an interest in that sort of thing and an apparent agreement that the Department of Agriculture would keep them informed to the best of its ability as to mergers and expansion in the seed industry.

The final condition the CFA placed on conditional support for Bill C-15 was that it wanted a clear expansion of public research into plant breeding programs which would result in an increase in publicly bred varieties available to farmers and in the number of person years and amount of financing in those programs.

This legislation contains no such guarantee. We have no such guarantee required from this minister or any future minister of agriculture, or this government or any future government.

The public breeding program of this country has been extremely useful and helpful in keeping Canadian farmers competitive. In fact, it was the public plant breeding system that made western Canadian agriculture competitive at the turn of the century. It was the central breeding program of the Department of Agriculture at its station in Ottawa that produced the wheat varieties which permitted Canada to become competitive on a quality and quantity basis in world markets.

It is the same public breeding program, through the Department of Agriculture and through assistance from various universities, that keeps us competitive and ahead of the game. I would point out something that I raised in the House a few months ago to show that we are competitive.

In trials in North Dakota, publicly bred varieties from Canada topped all of the test trials. The private plant breeding companies from the United States and Europe could not, and did not, produce varieties that could compete effectively against our own. We will not see a huge improvement to the Canadian plant breeding industry as a result of this legislation. What we will see is some breeders of plants who propagate material either as registered seed growers or as horticulturalists having easier access, they think and hope, to some European and American varieties. I think that contract law would have looked after that quite well and I regret that the government has caved in to international pressure, a form of hijacking by international seed corporations, to propose this law when the existing law protected the producers, the farmers, and consumers much better than this one will.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the hon. member who just spoke that he was referring to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. At report stage I read into the record a letter to the Minister of Agriculture dated April 23. I am quoting from the letter again: "We should point out that many of the caveats which our organization has had with respect to plant breeders' rights have already been addressed directly in the bill by the committee amendments or by other means, example Treasury Board, Agriculture Canada agreements".

So those concerns of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture have been taken care of.

I would also like to point out that farm-saved seed is not protected under this legislation if it is to be used on the farm. The legislation only applies to seed that is sold, and the farmer can save his own seed without payment of royalty.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I know that. I pointed out in my speech that in both the British and European cases farm-saved seed was exempt and now the seed industry is trying to get it included. In fact Great Britain is moving in that direction. I point out to the minister that once you begin caving in to these series of demands you will never meet all the requirements of the international seed industry. They will ultimately end up continuing to get their way. We have begun a process here that can only be more expensive for farmers and can only reduce the number of choices they have available at the farm level.

I also want to point out that I was very careful in going through the original requirements that the CFA had in its brief to the committee and I think I did a fair and objective analysis. If they changed their mind in a letter afterward that is their business, but I reiterate that the bill and the committee did not meet those five conditions.

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member for Mackenzie did an excellent job of outlining some of the technical impacts of the bill. I wonder if he might expand on his concerns with regard to the monopoly control by seed and chemical companies that might well flow from this particular legislation.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, some of these concerns are not just the United Church and NFU myth that the hon. member for Kindersley—Lloydminster points out, but are also concerns of the Canadian Environmental Law Association and a number of private analysts who look at the way corporate power in the world operates. The way multinational corporations function, including multinational seed corporations, is to gain full control and reduce the surprises in other national markets. That is what they are trying to do, and succeeding to do, in this country with plant breeders' rights. They are establishing the same kinds of rules that they have in most western European countries and in the United States. Our law to this point in time is not quite as broad as the access in some countries, but it is getting there. They know that once they start, they can broaden it. They have got the door open and now it is just a matter of pushing it all the way.

• (1210)

The way for seed companies to achieve profits has been to be acquired by either pharmaceutical companies or oil and chemical companies. If you do an analysis of the largest seed companies in the world, you will find that they all have those kinds of connecting interlinks and connections. Those are the companies that provide the pesticides and fertilizers for our crops. It is generally seen that the kinds of programs that they are embarked upon for looking for new varieties tend to search for varieties that will tie in the use of their chemicals or their fertilizers as well.

You see a big expenditure in looking for atrazine resistant crops. You see programs to utilize the chemicals that they have so that the farmer is not only going to want to buy the seed, but he will be forced to buy the chemical because the seed will not work without the chemical. There is an interdependency link there. It is simply a good economic and business kind of linkage that is now being reinforced by the laws of this country.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, as you will probably recall, at second reading I made an intervention on this bill quite at length. Today, I will limit my remarks to a brief intervention.

First I would like to explain to those who are watching this debate on TV that what we are debating here today is in essence the rights respecting breeding plants on the part of those who are interested in this particular human activity. Basically, we are discussing whether these rights should remain in the public sector where they have mainly been in the past or whether these rights should be circumscribed, restricted and be given in the form of a monopoly to mostly multinational companies that have a particular interest in this matter.

We are dealing here with something that nature has given to humanity to deal with and how these plants, which have become the object of economic activities, mostly for the production of food throughout the world, ought to be managed. The meaning of the bill, although "plant breeders' rights" sounds very technical, is one that addresses a very broad, human activity in all parts of the world and which so far has been the domain of mixed enterprise activities, both in the public and private sectors.

It is regrettable that the number of those supporting this bill is increasing between second and third readings. It is regrettable also that this is taking place within the context of a broader debate, namely that of sustainable development which is now more and more at the centre of policy discussions throughout the world, particularly in the northern hemisphere. This government has, theoretically at least, embraced the notion of sustainable development by way of high sounding declarations. When it comes to the crunch and the practical application of sustainable development, it falls flat and regresses to a role of preaching highly, but acting with no regard to its own preaching. That is unfortunate and highly regrettable.

I must say that the Minister of Agriculture is a great disappointment in this respect. He has in a number of statements expressed himself in favour of sustainable agriculture but when it comes to the crunch, as in the case of Bill C-15, he was not able to deliver. On the contrary, he is now embracing an activity and moving a measure through this House which will contribute to corporate concentration in agriculture which is opposed by most, if not all, NGOs active in international development aid. It is a measure which would also contribute to the gradual increase in seed prices and possibly eliminate certain breeders on a small scale. It would increase the profits on the part of multinational corporations, particularly those interested in pesticides, and I will come to that in a moment. It is a measure that is likely to give, but we do not know yet, a monopoly for certain forms of genetic life.

This is a trend that I must object to once again and express regret that this measure will go through this House. I had hoped that the government would reconsider. While regrettable, it is no wonder that the Conservative Party supports this measure. It believes in reducing the public sector interest, it believes in increasing private sector activities and it does not seem to be worried in the least about further concentration of multinational corporate power. It seems to be blissfully oblivious of that very important aspect in contemporary economic trends.

The bill, as I mentioned already, goes to the heart of the concept of sustainable development. It is a bill that probably can be defended on the terms of enhancing agri-business but it certainly does not enhance the activity of farmers, particularly the small ones, when it comes to their specific interest in relation to their agricultural life. I will be more specific on that in a moment.

I must stress the fact that from my understanding of the world picture, genetic resources essential to world agriculture are increasingly controlled by multinational corporations and new crops are being developed for economic reasons. This includes higher yields, uniformity, stability and needs of transportation. This includes Third World development which is interested in the protection and preservation of smaller-scale farming and becomes shifted as a background or as a secondary preoccupation.

What this bill does is reinforce the trend in favour of monocultures with all the inherent consequences in terms of insect devastation which accompany intensified monocultures. It will reinforce chemical agriculture and will reinforce private control of this precious and, I would think, very public resource which is called the seed or which is called the plant for purely economic and profit reasons. With this legislation, the knowledge shifts to become an industrial secret and the research then no longer becomes accountable to the public but to corporate interests and to considerations related to profit making. The Economist, which cannot be accused of being a socialist, wide-eyed publication states: "Chemical companies have spent $10 billion or so in as many years buying up seed companies world-wide."

• (1220)

The companies listed in that 1988 issue of The Economist are, Pioneer Hi-Bred, Sandoz, Dekalb-Pfizer, Upjohn, Limagrain, Shell Oil, ICI, Ciba-Geigy, Orson and Cargill, to mention the world's largest companies in the business of seeds. Seven of these 10 companies, it must be stressed, are also involved in crop chemicals. That is an important linkage and it must be seen, if the government is there to protect the public interest. It is a linkage which must be kept in mind to understand the implication of this measure that privatizes plant breeders' views and rights.

With this measure, the trend in privatization will escalate because I am told that more than 50 per cent of seed research and development, within private industry, is focused on building the tolerance of new seed varieties to higher and higher concentrations of agricultural chemicals, produced by the very same companies and that is where the link emerges. Canadian farmers, most likely, in the long term will be asked to pay the cost of these royalties which they do not pay right now.

The second impact of this legislation is that it would have the impact of limiting sustainable agriculture. Here I am referring to the fact that, increasingly, organic farming is being seen as one way to reduce the effects of the current financial and environmental crisis in agriculture. Farmers feel, and the public also shares this view, that the health of consumers, the environment, the health of livestock and the family farm members is better protected through organic rather than through chemical farming.

Once this bill becomes accepted and, unfortunately, I can see now that this is going to be inevitable, organic farmers and converting farmers will not be able to get the seed varieties they need because these varieties are likely to be reduced by the decisions made by this monopoly that will emerge in the long term. We have no assurance and no guarantee at all that the varieties will not be reduced. What will be the determining factor will be the resistance and the capacity of seeds to thrive and produce on the basis of pesticides and chemical fertilizers.

Another important argument which must be stressed again is that of equity for the developing world. With this measure, we notice that the Third World will have to buy seeds from the north. A number of countries have already adopted this type of legislation, so we are just following, at the tail end, a trend which is regrettable.

The Third World consumer of seed will buy seeds from the north since the genetic resources on which the seeds are based have been taken, for the most part, from the Third World without compensation. That trend flies in the face of what sustainable development also implies, namely, introducing some basic fundamental and major elements of equity between the north and the south.

These are the main reasons on which the arguments rest in opposing this particular measure. It is regrettable that it has been brought so far. Yes, there were amendments in committee; there were also five motions, at the report stage, of which one was adopted. But, these changes did not change the main thrust of the bill itself.

They were marginal and of very limited consequence and impact. For these reasons I indicate my opposition to this measure because the committee process did not come to grips with the main thrust, particularly the one that will give to large monopolies and multinational corporations a much greater power on this natural resource than has been had so far.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment about sustainable agriculture and the hon. member's remarks toward the Minister of Agriculture.

I want to remind the hon. member that in his government in 1982 the Hon. Eugene Whelan introduced legislation almost the same as what we are dealing with today. I know he supported the legislation and it was unfortunate that it did not pass at that time because we would have been much further ahead today.

I want to point out that Bill C-15 supports sustainable agriculture. For example, I refer back to the speech I gave about breeding programs on about the last sitting day of the House last June. I was very involved in this because I was chairman of a marketing board at that time dealing with the matter.

There was an outbreak of anthracnose in white beans in 1977. You can control anthracnose but there are many, many strains. This was a delta strain that we happened to get. Where it came from, I do not know, but we had it. You can breed resistance to these different strains.

There are up to 24 different strains of anthracnose in white beans. It can be controlled with a chemical. At that time we worked together with Agriculture Canada and were able to use a chemical in the interim to keep seed production and export markets which were very, very necessary. We used the chemical for two years so we would have seed to plant. We could not obtain seed which was clear and free from the delta strain of anthracnose.

Within two years of working with the public and private sector and the plant breeding programs we developed a strain resistant to the delta strain of anthracnose. That has happened many times in the white bean industry.

I believe that Bill C-15 does support sustainable agriculture. I give that example because it has worked extremely well in the past and I am sure will work well in the future.

Something similar has happened to canuck wheat where resistance has been developed in breeding programs rather than using chemicals. The mood in the agricultural community is to move away from the use of chemicals as much as possible. I do not believe it is something which can be legislated totally, but we have to reduce the amount of chemicals in use. The will is there for that to happen.

We talk as well about the developing world and Third World countries. Many seeds produced in this country would not be available or would not grow in Third World countries. We can still assist them in many other ways with available programs.

I would love to take the member to visit the gene resource centre in Ottawa, not only to look at the seeds stored there but to meet with the people who operate the centre. I am sure he would feel differently about what we are doing for Third World development and the storage and preservation of seeds from all over the world. We store them here and in other places. I have visited the centre and it certainly gave me the assurance that we can do more for Third World countries by doing things like that. I invite the member to visit that gene resource centre and would be very happy to go there with him if he would care to do so.

We also hear about increased cost. Since 1953 the cost of living index in West Germany has risen by 122 per cent. The wheat seed in that country and for the same time has risen 29 per cent. That is not inflationary. Why should it be any different here?

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, the hon. member invites me to visit the gene resource centre. I would be glad to do that but this is exactly the point that concerns me, because the passage of this legislation and the role of the public sector through Agriculture Canada will be limited and eroded over time.

• (1230)

It will be this type of activity to maintain the gene pool that will become more and more the domain of the private sector.

The hon. member is basing his argument on the reassurance that he gets from visiting this centre, and I am glad that he does, but he does not seem to look at the future and as to what will happen once this legislation is in place and becomes implemented over time. It will mean a reduction of the public sector and the promotion of the interest from a public perspective, rather than from the perspective of multinationals.

Coming to the other point the hon. member made, it is distressing to learn that most of the multinationals which will benefit from this measure are in the chemical fertilizing business. I recited their names to him. I would like him to focus on the fact that that is the major activity of some of these multinationals today.

Why would they be interested in the seed business, if not for the promotion of products which they are manufacturing at the present time? Evidently, there is an obvious link. That cannot be denied. I wish that the hon. member would have addressed that particular linkage.

As to the legislation introduced by a former Minister of Agriculture, what the hon. members says is true. Nobody claims that governments are perfect. It was a measure that was introduced long before—and this is my main point—sustainable development became an agreed upon policy focus for the global community. To be precise, it dates back to April, 1987. It was only thereafter that the concerns of sustainable development and how to apply the concept—not just to agriculture, but also to energy, and not just to waste management, but to broader environmental issues—has become in some cases, as in the case of the Government of Canada, the embraced theology.

We are not the ones who have embraced sustainable development. It is the government to which the hon. member belongs that has embraced that theme, and quite rightly so. But it does so only in theoretical terms. When it comes to the crunch and to the practice on energy measures, it ignores sustainable development and efficiency. When it comes to agriculture, as in the case of this bill, it ignores its own declarations.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to what my colleague from the Liberal party said.

I am sure he is aware that with this legislation 60 per cent of the royalties that are collected will be returned to the public research domain for agriculture. It is a very unique step taken on behalf of this government, and supported by Treasury Board, to allow that form of return to take place in public research and development. I think he would probably like to applaud the government for that.

His concern about sustainable development is well understood. With this legislation, those varieties and those seeds that will allow agricultural development to take place without the use of agricultural chemicals will be further enhanced. But this myth about a chemical company or a seed company that is continually referred to by the hon. member and his colleagues in the New Democratic Party and some outside sources has yet to be proved as fact.

Mr. Althouse: No.

Mr. McKnight: It has yet to be proved as a fact that there is a commercial product available which, when combined with the seed, is the only way that the product will grow, or the only gene variety that can be assumed to be used by a chemical. That is a myth. It has not been done by research yet.

The second myth has to do with there being a correlation between plant breeders' rights and monopoly control. If the hon. member and members of the House will look to the Netherlands, which has had plant breeders' rights since 1941—almost 50 years—they will see that there are 983 companies in the Netherlands involved in seed trade and research and development. That could hardly be called a monopoly after 50 years.

The other thing that the hon. member should be aware of is that in the United States, after 50 years, over 40 per cent of the seed trade is done by small independent businesses. It is not done by the large multinationals which purportedly have a monopoly, but by small independent businesses. Again, the multinationals are in competition with one another after 50 years. There is not one that has taken over, or two. There are still seven or eight involved. I do not understand this fear.

Mr. Althouse: Read a paper on monopoly sometime.

Mr. McKnight: The hon. member refers to reading a paper. His source is a weed farmer by the name of Moody who has been around this since 1979—

Mr. Althouse: Go to any economics library and read about oligopoly.

Mr. McKnight: Prior to 1979 when the Hon. Eugene Whelan brought forward, on behalf of the Liberal government of the day, plant breeders' legislation. The Hon. John Wise in 1979 brought it forward. Now we have it here, finally. I am very pleased to have it finally concluded for the benefit of agriculture, for the benefit of the environment and for the benefit of the people of Canada.

Mr. Caccia: I would applaud the government on the question of royalties if the percentage were 95 per cent. That would show real concern for the public interest. When it is divided in the manner that the Minister of National Defence just outlined, it reinforces the notion that something is happening here at the expense of the public interest. Otherwise, the public interest would be better reflected in the distribution of royalties.

As to the frequent reference on our part to multinationals which are in the area of chemical fertilizers, something the minister calls a myth, The Economist analysed the situation in an article printed in one of its publication. The source is a pretty solid one. It is where the names of these companies were brought to the attention of the public. I am sure this does not come as a surprise to the minister. I am sure that he knows that in the past so many years chemical companies have spent $10 billion, as reported by The Economist, in buying up seed companies world-wide.

Therefore, I would ask him to give us a better explanation of that trend. Are they doing it because all of a sudden they have become benefactors of humanity?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I see the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands is rising. The time for questions and comments has expired.

I realize that both sides are now engaged in quite an interesting debate, which is what debate should always be in this House. I am quite prepared to let it go sometime longer, if I have unanimous consent.

I saw that the minister was rising and was prepared to answer. I am also prepared to recognize the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, if the hon. member for Davenport agrees as well.

An hon. member: No!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the hon. member for Prince Albert—Churchill River.

• (1240)

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to participate in this debate at the third reading stage having participated in it at second reading.

I realize that there have been a few changes made to the proposed legislation as a result of the committee study. Essentially, we are still talking about the same fundamental issues that we were involved in then. That has really not changed.

I find it somewhat ironic, however, that something that has changed is the position of the Liberal party. That is not surprising since it was the original intention of the Liberal party to introduce this legislation under the Hon. Eugene Whelan about 10 years ago. At second reading we had the distinct impression that speakers for the Liberal party were in fact opposing this legislation for some very good reasons. Then, in committee, there seemed to be a softening of that position. Today, we have had speakers from the Liberal party speak on both sides of the issue.

Therefore it is somewhat confusing for the public and hon. members to determine what in fact the position of the Liberal party might be on some of these very fundamental questions.

I think it is impossible to separate the question of plant breeders' rights from the general trends which we see in agriculture, in rural Canada and in this government's approach to those issues.

Over the last number of years—certainly since the election of this government—we have seen a strong tilting away from involvement of the public sector in all aspects of the economy. Certainly, agriculture has not escaped that trend.

We saw it in large measure in large initiatives such as the free trade agreement, which represents a massive retreat on many fronts from public sector involvement. We also saw it in smaller instances, for example, the removal of oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. We saw a backing away from support for rural communities through the cuts of the government to the branch-line abandonment program. There are many other kinds of initiatives which this government has taken which really represent a fundamental shift away from public involvement in the economy.

In fact, that was a stated goal of this government when it was elected. In spite of its attempt to make it look like an incremental kind of movement it has been a steady movement, one which I think has started to present us with some trends that are clearly identifiable, trends which I think all Canadians can recognize.

I think part of those trends has been to make us more subject to pressure from international corporations, the whole multinational corporation structure that is more and more dominating the economy of the world. It is certainly dominating the agricultural economy.

Where have we seen that lead us in the province of Saskatchewan, my home province? We have seen an agriculture economy that has literally dived into the tank in the last number of years. We see farm foreclosures in record numbers. We see despair in the farm community, something that in my years of experience in the farm community I certainly have never seen before.

I had the opportunity to visit a farm community in southern Saskatchewan over the weekend. The people there were telling me that in the whole trading area for a town of about 500 people there were only three young families that have taken over farms in the last five or six years in that community. There is no way that three families on farms will be able to support a rural population in a community like that.

Right now we have seen a triple whammy, if you will, that has been directed at the farm community in Saskatchewan and, indeed, western Canada. We have seen the initial prices for grain come out at a drop of 12 per cent over what were already unacceptably low price. These are prices at which farmers can no longer afford to produce grain. These prices are no accident. They are part of the same trend that we see here in the plant breeders' rights legislation. They are part of the abandonment of the farm sector to control by corporations like Cargill and its equivalents around the world.

The second aspect of what has hit the farm community in the last very short period of time has been the rise in interest rates. In conjunction with that, the government has used its own lending agency, the Farm Credit Corporation, to inflict those same unacceptably high interest rates on farm families. It is ironical that an arm of the government that was originally intended, as I understand it, to provide long-term financial security to the farm sector by allowing farmers to borrow money at rates that could be sustained by farm operations should itself become a leader in increasing interest costs to farmers. This is making it more and more impossible for them to conceive of any future for themselves. It certainly discourages any young families from starting farming.

There is a story going around the farm community about a farm family being convicted of child abuse because it turned over the family farm to its children.

The third in this series of blows that has been inflicted on the farm community is the ping-pong game, the game of chicken that is being played between the federal government and provincial governments with respect to the payment which was promised to farmers to help them with their spring seeding. Clearly, we in the House have heard a whole series of announcements, a whole series of commitments and promises.

First, we were told by the Minister of Agriculture that there would be money in the hands of farmers before seeding time. As we got through January and February there was some backing away from that position. Then there was a definite promise that there would be a formal announcement of what kind of a program there would be, including who would get money and so on, before seeding time, certainly by the middle of April. Then we got into a very unseemly pushing match between the federal and the provincial governments. In spite of all those commitments we still do not have an announcement.

Piled on top of the high interest rates and the lower initial prices, we have federal and provincial governments still at odds over who shall pick up the cost of this program. This leaves farmers in the same vulnerable position vis-à-vis their financial situation as they were before. In fact, it might be even worse because with the passage of time decisions that need to be made are being increasingly delayed. The longer those decisions are delayed, of course, the harder it is to plan a farming operation for the future.

In this context I might add that the federal government says it cannot afford to compete with the treasuries of Europe and the United States. The provincial governments say they cannot afford to compete with the treasuries of Europe and the United States. Who is left competing with the treasuries of Europe and the United States? The farm families of Canada. Surely, their depleted bank accounts are the last place we can expect to find the financial muscle to compete with the treasuries of Europe and the United States.

Turning to the legislation before us, what is clearly at issue is that this particular legislation continues a trend that we have seen toward increasing control of the agriculture sector through the corporatization of the agriculture sector both now and into the future. There is a rapid increase in that kind of trend. I think we are on an exponential kind of curve where things that might now look fairly innocuous could very rapidly turn into much larger problems in the near future.

Some of the fundamental issues that remain at stake when we look at plant breeders' rights involve the concentration of corporate power and the relationship of that corporate power to the seed breeding and seed production industry.

We have heard about how seven out of ten of the major companies that are producing seed in the world are pharmaceutical and chemical companies. This is no accident. It is clear that these companies see a link between the chemical business and the seed production business. There is no reason for those links to develop without some expectation that they will be profitable to these companies.

• (1250)

We have seen a rapidly increasing concentration of power among those chemical and pharmaceutical companies. In the 1970s, there used to be 30 companies in the business of producing crop chemicals. We are now down to 12. The industry itself expects that by the turn of the century there will be only six of those kinds of companies left.

As the Minister of National Defence indicated, six or seven companies in a business does not represent a monopoly. Surely, that represents an oligopoly which amounts to much the same thing. It makes them vulnerable to the same kind of activities we see in the oil and gas business where there are regularly allegations of price fixing and so on.

Having only six or seven companies in a particular type of enterprise, especially when they are operating world-wide, leaves the whole business open to abuse, price-fixing and the development of trends which clearly will not benefit the thousands and thousands of small producers, especially the seed distribution companies that are relying on those companies for plant breeding.

Another issue is the access to seed varieties and the cost of seed to farmers. The hon. member pointed out that the pressure for this particular development has come from the large seed companies. Certainly, part of the agenda of those seed companies is to gain a larger share of control of the seed business. It is not hard to extrapolate that the day is rapidly coming when they will want to extend the need to pay royalties for the grain that farmers raise on their own farms which they hope to use for seed.

Those kinds of trends are already evident, for example, in Great Britain and other countries that have brought in this type of legislation. That would take away a very important source of seed for farmers across this country.

When it comes to cost, it erodes the contribution of the public at large to the costs of breeding and developing seeds in this country. The Minister of National Defence pointed out that as part of this legislation 60 per cent of the royalty payments will be returned to public plant breeding. However, it should be noted that that 60 per cent will no doubt replace money that is then cut in subsequent budgets from the general revenues of the government.

What will end up happening is that the rapidly diminishing number of farmers in this country will bear more and more of the cost of seed breeding and genetic development, while the public carries less of the burden. Surely, if we look at the income projections for farmers and farm families in this country, there is no good reason why those costs should be shifted so massively from the public sector to that very narrow base of financing which they provide. After all, the public at large benefits from the ongoing development of a healthy agricultural economy.

A second point that should be made with respect to plant breeding in this country is to remind the government of the old adage that if it ain't broke, why fix it?. We have had a very successful record of plant breeding. Plant breeding in Canada is held up world-wide as one of the most successful plant breeding systems in the world. The wheat and canola varieties that we have developed over the years have been world leaders in productivity and resistance to disease. It is clear that public plant breeding has more than demonstrated its worth. I found it interesting that the parliamentary secretary, who I believe is from Huron—Bruce, pointed out an example of successful plant breeding with regard to beans. That breeding was carried out under a public plant breeding program, which demonstrates again the relevance and the utility of a public plant breeding program in this country.

I think it is interesting to note as well that when major trials were undertaken in the state of North Dakota, whose growing, soil and economic conditions are very similar to the province of Saskatchewan, the publicly-bred varieties from Canada consistently out-performed those bred by private breeders from south of the border and from Europe. What we should be doing is giving a strong endorsement to that public plant breeding system, rather than undermining it by introducing this legislation at this time.

The whole concern about where we are heading in the area of sustainable development is intensely relevant when it comes to this debate. We have seen the number of varieties of many types of crops around the world shrinking consistently. I refer to varieties that have been used on a large scale commercial basis. Corn and barley varieties are much smaller in number than they used to be.

It is quite clear that a healthy ecosystem requires many varieties of seeds to be used that are relevant to particular areas of the world and particular areas of the country. If we do not have that, we can become much more susceptible to different types of diseases and insect infestations and so on, which can wipe out large areas of our agriculture. This could have a large scale impact on major crops. The only way to avoid that is to ensure that there are large numbers of varieties that keep on being bred for particular conditions.

Placing more and more control in the hands of large multinational corporations which have only an interest in cutting down dramatically on the number of varieties is not good. The efficiencies of scale which make it possible for those companies to operate and which give them any kind of advantage at all requires that we limit the number of varieties that are available to as small a number as possible.

I would like to conclude by saying that I am concerned about the fundamental issues involved here. This legislation is another step on the road to corporate concentration in the whole agricultural field. The fundamental issues as I see them include the access and cost of seed to farmers, the impact on sustainable development and the undermining of the public sector involvement in the whole field of agriculture.

We in this party certainly believe that a modern, efficient farm sector based on the family farm model requires that we support public sector involvement, especially in an area as sensitive as the genetic strains that produce our seeds, which in turn produces our food—the life forms that we have in this country.

Therefore I urge the government to reconsider this legislation, even at this late stage. I urge Canadians to recognize the impact and to turn back the clock to a time when we were looking at agriculture as something that required a significant commitment from the public sector. We must not abandon the family farm and the future of agriculture to the private sector and large multinational corporations.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments? The hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I note that the cost of enforcement of this particular piece of legislation has been raised once or twice today, rather obliquely. It occurs to me that perhaps the hon. member for Prince Albert—Churchill River might want to comment on the assertion from the government benches that this is a much more equitable way and that there was no other means of permitting the trade of plant varieties from one country to the other.

• (1300)

I point out to him something that I am sure he realizes. About two-thirds of the field crops which are sold in this country are sold as certified seed. Under our Seeds Act this requires that they be field inspected and subjected to an inspection at cleaning and bagging when they have a seal put on them. For most of the field crops that were grown in this country, there was really no big problem in getting contractual arrangements to test American or European-developed seeds. He has already pointed out that they do not do particularly well in western Canada, at least with his reference to the results in North Dakota.

Perhaps he could expand on his comments about the nature of international oligopolies where only a few very large firms control the trade from one country to another. They did not seem to think that this sort of contractual arrangement which, because of the power and requirement of the Seeds Act to have field and seed plant inspections, verifying how much seed of a variety was grown, made it very easy for the original developer to collect its royalty. Why are we abandoning that perfectly workable system for international purposes to go beyond? Does he think that these companies have much more at stake than just making it easier to shift varieties from one country to the other?

Mr. Funk: Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. He points out an element of this whole question of "If it ain't broke, why fix it?" The person here is only speculating, but I think that one of the reasons is that we are looking at trends here and so on.

The companies that are now pushing us down this road of plant breeders' rights and taking control of the seed industry also see some profitable aspects for themselves in controlling the inspection and contracting the inspection process. It makes it much easier for them to do some of this on an internal basis than it would otherwise be.

As we move farther down the road, the cost will increase rapidly for the kind of inspection and monitoring processes that we are going to have to put in place. As there becomes a larger and larger financial stake which these companies have in what particular seed is grown on what particular kind of farm, we will have to look at new compliance kinds of measures because the pressure will increase to implement measures that will ensure that every last dollar is wrung from the farmers when it comes to production of their crops and the provision of that seed.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would care to comment on some testimony that was presented at committee stage from the Canadian Council for International Co-operation in a brief prepared on their behalf. They point out on page 2 of that brief dealing with plant patenting that in a few decades we have moved from intellectual property over plants to the patenting of micro-organisms and animals. Human cell lines and foetal tissue are not patentable in some countries. Recent European Economic Community and U.S. proposals either propose no upper limit to the patenting of life forms or draw the line only at the point of slavery. He spoke a little bit about trends. Some of those countries have moved very strongly in that direction.

I would close my comments by pointing out that in 1987 this particular group stated in its brief: "The U.S. and Japan proposed in 1987 that failure to provide patents be regarded as a non-tariff barrier to trade in the GATT round." This is the GATT round that we are currently in. "The U.S. went so far as to call upon countries to patent everything, including food, in their diplomatic note on this issue."

I wonder if he would care to comment on the assertions from other corners of this House that such things are simply guesses at the future when we have these kinds of proposals before international bodies by countries at the international fora.

Mr. Funk: Madam Speaker, I would like to again thank the hon. member for his question.

As I said in the summation of my speech, what should concern us more than any other aspect of the legislation before us is the whole trend toward the patenting of life forms and the type of road that that takes us down. Surely there has to be some line drawn between where the community and public interests are clearly dominant, and not to be tampered with, and where activities that are carried on for private profit and private decision are made.

When we start extending those kinds of lines farther and farther in the patenting of different kinds of life forms, genes and so on, we are on a very slippery slope. The member is quite right to point out just how far on that slope we are has been clearly demonstrated at the GATT negotiations where the United States and Japan tried to lump in the patenting of life forms, food and so on with things like copyrights, television shows, intellectual property, the patenting of bicycles and automobile parts.

There is a line that needs to be drawn between life forms that we all depend on that are part of our ongoing existence and what is engaged in for private gain. The kinds of demands that have been made at the GATT negotiations are an indication of how far some countries have gone down this path. With the introduction of this legislation here and the closeness to which we are at passing it, we are just capitulating to a trend that we should be most actively resisting. The trend raises all kinds of moral and ethical questions besides the ones that we have raised in the context of agriculture and so on.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 1.10 p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1.10 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

S. O. 31

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate today to speak of schizophrenia during National Mental Health Week. Schizophrenia strikes 1 per cent of the population and is a major illness in Canada. It takes up 6 per cent of hospital beds and costs over $3 billion annually in health care costs. Federal funds for research for this dreadful disease are less than $3 million annually.

Recent research in Canada has shown that schizophrenia is a biochemical brain disease in part caused by a genetic disorder. The quality of the research in Canada is outstanding, in spite of the low funding. Based on the progress that has been made in recent years, the chances of breakthrough are very good.

Because there is such a stigma attached to this illness, relatives and friends have provided support mostly in silence, hoping that a cure could be found. Now that this possibility appears achievable in our lifetime, this government should begin to make more of a commitment to research of this terrible disease.

* * *

[Translation]

COLLÈGE MONTMORENCY IN LAVAL

Mr. Jacques Tétreault (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, ten years ago, a group of students at the Collège Montmorency, which is in my riding, were made aware by their teacher, Serge Masse, of the widespread poverty in Haiti, aggravated by the aftermath of Hurricane Allen.

The students spontaneously took up an initial collection, followed by several more, which finally led to the students Haiti project. As part of this project, a group of students from the college went to Port-au-Prince, to work in two aid centres in 1982 and 1984-85, for periods of respectively three and four weeks.

In 1986, three students founded the organization Jeunes sans frontières.

This year, thanks to substantial assistance from CIDA and the participants' own financial contribution, eight students will spend eight weeks in Burkina Faso, in Africa, to become familiar with social, cultural, political and economical realities in developing countries in the Third World.

Mr. Speaker, I say three cheers for the students at Collège Montmorency in Laval!

* * *

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, largely because of this government's mean-spirited and persistent refusal to deal justly and fairly with a small Cree community in a remote settlement in northwestern Alberta, Canada now stands dishonoured before the world.

For more than 50 years the Lubicon Cree have been seeking a treaty settlement from the Canadian government sufficient simply to allow them, to the degree possible, to continue with their traditional way of life and, to the degree necessary, to build the required community infrastructure that may enable them to cope with technological culture we have thrust upon them.

For more than 50 years they have received nothing but delay, denial, deceit, and destruction.

Now the Human Rights Committee of the United Nations has determined the Canadian government's treatment of this small, embattled band to be unacceptable.

There is only one solution: the government must immediately resume negotiations with the Lubicon people, in good faith and without preconditions. Only the conclusion of a fair and just settlement will end this sordid chapter in our history and restore Canada's good name.

* * *

DUCK LAKE MUSEUM

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, the people of Duck Lake, Saskatchewan, have been keeping the history of the Northwest Rebellion alive for decades. In 1959, the Duck Lake Museum was founded to preserve the historical record of the events of 1885. It is only the dedication and the commitment of the people of Duck Lake that has allowed this important heritage to be saved.

Now, with the help of the Western Diversification Fund, a new interpretive centre will be built. This will allow the people of Duck Lake to showcase an important part of Canadian history to many more people.

I think all Canadians owe the people of Duck Lake, Saskatchewan, a debt of gratitude for their efforts in protecting and giving new life to our Canadian past.

* * *

SOVIET JEWRY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, Saturday, May 5, is a very difficult date for Soviet Jews in Leningrad. The ultra-nationalist group Pamyat is threatening a pogrom against the Jews of this city on Saturday.

As we know from the famous musical "Fiddler on the Roof" such threats have materialized in the past. This is a very frightening situation for the Jewish residents of Leningrad, as well as for their friends and relatives in Canada.

The Government of Canada has a moral responsibility to come to the aid of all Soviet Jews. We must use all diplomatic powers at our disposal to pressure President Gorbachev to control Pamyat and its anti-Semitic activities.

This government has a moral responsibility and indeed an administrative responsibility to process as quickly as possible all the immigration requests from the Soviet Union. I would ask this government not to wait to see what happens, but to do what it can while it can.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, unlike the Government of Canada, the Dutch government has tackled the environment head on. The Dutch environmental plan sets out targets and schedules, as well as the funds needed to achieve these goals.

The plan includes large reductions in pollution, be it sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxides or carbon dioxide; energy conservation; efficiency in residential heating and appliances; funds for energy efficiency and conservation; incentives for renewable energy generation; shifts to less polluting transportation modes; significant reductions in pesticides and fertilizers used in agriculture; and recycling of ozone-depleting gases.

In The Netherlands, there is political will to act. They did not stall, they did not shy away. They did not say, as Canada's energy minister did, that theirs is a small part of the global problem. The Dutch are giving leadership. When will the Government of Canada muster enough courage to at least emulate The Netherlands?

* * *

[Translation]

ROYAL PARDON

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, today, Annette Proulx is 75 years old. Mrs. Proulx is an elderly lady who has been an inmate of Maison Gomin, a prison in my riding, for eleven years.

Once again, I want to ask all members of this House, irrespective of their political affiliation, to give their support for a royal pardon to be granted by members of the Privy Council.

Both the trial judge and Crown counsel agree that she has paid her debt to society, is unlikely to repeat her offence and, because of her advanced age, deserves to be released on compassionate grounds.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that with the help of all members of this House, Mrs. Proulx will be able to celebrate subsequent birthdays outside prison walls.

* * *

[English]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Willie Littlechild (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to compliment this government for its ongoing efforts on behalf of farmers in Canada.

With the implementation of the goods and services tax, farmers across Canada will benefit significantly. Under the current federal sales tax, farmers pay $240 million of hidden federal sales tax on their farm inputs each year.

S. O. 31

Under the GST, the vast majority of farm products will be completely free of tax. This includes farm livestock, cash crops, seed, hay and straw, among others. Farmers will neither pay GST on their purchases nor charge GST on sales of these items.

With savings to farmers of up to $240 million under the GST, I would like to take this opportunity to salute the efforts of this government on behalf of Canada's farmers.

* * *

• (1410)

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of 1,400 students at Vancouver Community College who have had their unemployment insurance training benefits cut off by this government.

These students, including those who are paying their own fees, are caught in a labour dispute which has interrupted their training. This dispute could be settled at any time, but these students are being forced to abandon their training right now.

Why is this government unilaterally punishing students for attempting to improve their skills and qualifications? It is the same government which has cut transfer payments to the province for higher education which is preventing Vancouver Community College from offering a reasonable settlement to employees. It is the same government which has cut the summer employment program for students which has cost another 17,000 students a chance to work. It is the same government which keeps cutting back on the disadvantaged, the poor, the unemployed and students.

These Canadians deserve more than a policy of "buts" and "cuts".

* * *

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the opposition is deceiving Canadians about the GST. It wants them to believe it is a new tax, not a tax that will replace another tax that has been hidden for 60 years.

It is false to claim that the GST will hurt the poor, since they will actually be better off with the GST credit.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Nobody believes you!

Mr. Saint-Julien (Abitibi): The opposition says that all prices will increase 7 per cent. However, the average increase will be 1.25 per cent, and many prices will go down.

The opposition says the GST will be hidden, when in fact it will be far more visible than the present tax.

Mr. Speaker, maybe the opposition prefers to keep the present hidden tax so it can later secretly raise it to 15, 16 or 17 per cent.

* * *

[English]

AKWESASNE MOHAWK RESERVE

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, the evacuation of women, children and elderly from the Akwesasne reserve to Cornwall involved over 500 people. I wish to take this opportunity to thank Mayor Poirier and the various municipal officials and agencies in Cornwall, including the many local businesses and volunteers who came forward to assist those people who had to leave their homes as a result of the situation on the reserve.

As a resident of Cornwall, I saw first hand the amount of work and co-operation required. The project demanded considerable effort and resources. I was heartened by the willingness to help that was demonstrated by all parties. Grand Chief Mike Mitchell has already expressed his deep appreciation to the people of Cornwall.

I also wish to thank officials from Indian and Northern Affairs for their work and the management of the Transport Canada Training Institute in Cornwall for their part in the housing and feeding of the evacuees.

We all hope a permanent solution to the problem will be found soon and that this will enable the community of Akwesasne to live in peace.

* * *

GLOBAL ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon the Interparliamentary Conference on the Global Environment concluded four days of deliberations. It was organized by members of the United States, including Senator Albert Gore.

There were interparliamentary delegations from 42 nations representing all continents and we adopted this marvellous report by consensus. It makes a number of important and internationally recognized recommendations.

On global climate change, there must be an immediate call to action for a 50 per cent reduction in greenhouse gases. We must reduce the deforestation of the planet, including all countries such as Canada, by 50 per cent. We must carry this message to our constituents and to our provinces. We must start replanting more than 30 million acres a year by the year 2000. There must be a total elimination of CFCs, methyl chloroform, carbon tetrachloride and halons. The ozone layer is getting severely debilitated, as we learned at the conference.

Before the environment committee here in Canada this morning we heard from Dr. Bill Rees of the University of British Columbia that there are steps that we can take in terms of energy and reforestation that are practical and available now.

The DPA report pointed out that for a $74 billion investment there are $150 billion in net energy savings to be had. We can have our cake and eat it too.

* * *

WESTERN PREMIERS

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, next week the premiers of the four western provinces will meet for two days in my constituency in Portage La Prairie.

It will interest this House to learn that the two-day agenda has been set by the federal government. How can this be, you ask?

According to the agenda as released by Chairman Filmon of Manitoba, the issues to be raised at the meeting are all knee-jerk reactionary responses to the federal government's policies and positions varying from offered federal farm aid, the GST, interest rates, and a described federal budget off-loading.

Shame on the premiers for showing no leadership in policy-making for their own provinces. Shame on the premiers for ignoring positive co-operative development and opting instead to gang up on the federal government. Shame on the premiers for abdicating their duty to deliver good government to their own provinces.

The premiers of western Canada who are seeking re-election will get elected on positive action they have delivered instead of crying at the federal government.

* * *

TRADE

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Tory free trade deal has brought about another tragedy in Kingston and the Islands. A small family firm, K.D. Manufacturing, owned by one Kingston family for over 60 years, has closed and moved to the United States; 70 people have lost their jobs, many of them long-time employees.

Why has the government pursued a policy that encourages these businesses to relocate elsewhere? Why has the government traded away Canada's future? What steps will the government take to help the employees who have lost their jobs, who cannot support their families and will have to retrain in order to find alternative employment after so many years?

The indifference of this government is appalling.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, I will address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Deputy Prime Minister will know that exporters across the country of agricultural products, fishing products, the mining sector and the pulp and paper industry are suggesting that they are going to have a very hard time with exports through the rest of this year, if the high interest rate policy and the high dollar is maintained.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, when is it the intention of the government to indicate clearly to the export sector of our economy that the Canadian dollar will be allowed to fall and that something is going to be done about the high interest rate policy?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the hon. member that we share his concern about high interest rates and their effects. We have to understand at the same time why these interest rates are there.

We are at the end of a long cycle of six years of growth. There are pressures in our economy which are very real and which are creating inflation. If we do not deal with that, interest rates will keep going higher all the time. We need to tackle inflation, and this is what the monetary policy is all about.

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to the minister. The Minister of Finance and now the Minister of State for Finance have both talked about the business cycle and that it is important to recognize that we are at the end of the business cycle.

My question to the minister is very plain. When is the cycle going to end for high interest rates and a highly valued Canadian dollar so that both domestic products as well as products made for export are going to be able to move on the domestic market as well as the international market? When is this cycle of high interest rates and a highly valued Canadian dollar going to come to an end? That is the question.

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): I can underline the the fact that we are as concerned and as interested as the hon. member in seeing this cycle come to an end. We are doing what needs to be done to make sure that it comes to an end.

Were we not to accept our responsibility now, we would get involved in the cycle that the Liberal Party took this country some 10 years ago where we had interest rates above 20 per cent and a high inflation rate. This we will not allow to happen.

[Translation]

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of State (Finance). Since he prefers not to talk about the problems of Canada's exporters, I will ask him a question about the number of bankruptcies in his own province of Quebec. Does the Minister believe it is acceptable to maintain the government's monetary policy keeping of very high interest rates high and the Canadian dollar at 86 or 87 cents? Will his government pursue this policy which has caused a dramatic increase in bankruptcies in Quebec?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is of course tragic and unfortunate whenever a business closes its doors and jobs are lost. Because of the reasons I mentioned earlier, there has lately been an increase in the number of bankruptcies. I may point out to the hon. member, however, that since 1982, the number of businesses has doubled and that we are still experiencing only half of what the situation was when the government, under the Liberal Party, let inflation get out of control. Of course, we must continue to be watchful and do whatever is necessary, and at the same time act on our tax policy. However, whenever we we want to reduce spending and reduce the deficit, every spending cut is challenged by an opposition that wants us to spend more and more, thus preventing us from attaining the very objectives we all support.

* * *

• (1420)

[English]

AGRICULTURE

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, last February, I called on this government to acknowledge the disaster unfolding in rural Canada. To date, Saskatchewan and Manitoba have not been able to match funds announced recently by this government to enable farmers to plant their crops.

Yesterday, the Saskatchewan legislature passed a resolution condemning the government of Canada for failing to provide adequate financial assistance for Saskatchewan farmers and asking for cash immediately to help plant their crops. Copies of this resolution were sent to the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture.

Will this government proceed now to break this impasse and make these funds available so that planting can proceed?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to tell the hon. member the discussions are ongoing. I discussed this issue with Premier Devine, who is the Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Saskatchewan. I have also had further discussions with the Minister of Agriculture for Manitoba. I can advise the member that progress is being made. Hopefully, we will be able to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion with at least those two provinces in the very near future.

As I indicated before committee yesterday, it is clearly our desire to be as flexible and as accommodating as we possibly can. However, we are also asking the provinces to become involved. The federal government has been sharing the largest burden and, because of the fiscal constraints that we have imposed upon us, we are asking them to assist in this time of need.

The bottom line is to get as much money into the hands of the farmers as we possibly can as soon as we can.

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, extremely low initial payments for western grain were announced this week by the Minister of State for Grain and Oilseeds, in spite of low world grain supplies. In fact, world wheat prices have risen since the announcements.

Will the Minister of State for Grain and Oilseeds inform this House and the farmers of Canada what mechanisms are used to determine these lower initial payments for wheat? When he believes that world wheat prices will decline, why is he dragging his heels to give assistance to Canadian agriculture to compete for these world markets?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, we are not dragging our heels. What we are trying to do is be realistic to assess the market as it presently exists.

As I told the hon. member this morning at committee, we review initial payments on a regular basis and our record of adjusting them in the past has been pretty good. In fact, last year we made the first ever adjustment in a price after the pooling period had closed, the whole purpose being to get as much money into producers' hands as we possibly can as quickly as we can.

I want to assure the member and farmers who rely on these prices that we monitor them on a regular basis and we look at everything. However, I ask the member to understand that the price we set on Tuesday was an initial payment against a final realized price for a crop that has not yet been seeded, harvested or begun to be marketed.

Therefore, bear in mind that these are minimum prices that we expect, and we set these prices fully expecting there will be a final payment. Producers should understand that we will be looking at them very carefully as the year goes on to do whatever we can to adjust them upward just as quickly as we see signals there that enable us to do that.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada keep claiming that they will do nothing about interest rates until inflation is under control. If one looks at the research and we look at Statistics Canada, for 16 months since 1988, Statistics Canada reports that in fact high mortgage costs have fuelled the consumer price index and are contributing to inflation.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister, will he not admit that the government's high interest rate is directly contributing to inflation, and in this case the medicine is worse than the disease?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): I would like to tell the hon. Leader of the NDP that there are, of course, various measures that a government can take to deal with high inflation rates which are destructive to wage earners because their salaries stop meaning anything, and they are destructive to our economy which becomes uncompetitive.

One of the central actions that the government can take is to put order in its own finances by reducing the use it makes of the capital which is not available for other industries. This is what we have been doing. In so doing, we have been opposed every step of the way by the opposition. We will continue to do this.

The intervention of the Bank of Canada, which is fully supported by this government, is based on the need to remove this threat to the performance of the Canadian economy. This threat is very real and is not only, as some have said, in southern Ontario but spread all over.

Within the system, there are presently very great pressures for wage settlements in the public sector in certain provinces, which is worrying. If we let this run away, we will be running after our tail. There is no way one can artificially act on this without accepting the reality. There are inflationary pressures. They are slowing beginning to come down.

[Translation]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

I would remind the hon. minister that it is small business, farmers and economists who are saying that it is the inflation rate that is bringing this economy down.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the government is contributing to inflation not only through high mortgage rates. John Crow says so himself in the latest Bank of Canada annual report, and I quote: "The indirect tax increases imposed by the federal and provincial governments contributed again this year to higher consumer prices."

Will the government finally admit that it, and not working people, is responsible for inflation?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): The hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party was no doubt mistaken when she said that all companies and small businesses blame interest rates for high inflation. I suppose that she was referring to interest rates.

She talks about mortgage rates and capital which is scarce for small businesses that need access to it. That is exactly it. The government must put its own finances in order and withdraw from the capital market, which it has taken over. Next year, we will pay $41 billion in interest on our debt. That gives an idea of how much space we take and we must get out of the way so that our people and companies can grow because they will have to compete with a government that looms less large and does not occupy the whole field.

[English]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the minister knows full well that, as the interest rate increases, so does the debt, and that increasing the interest rate is increasing the debt. It is the economic policies of this government that are bringing this economy down.

I would suggest to the minister that he look at the facts and listen to Statistics Canada and to economists in this country.

Yesterday, the Canadian Labour Congress reported that 105,000 jobs have been lost because of free trade.

Now another company, Croydon Furniture of Cambridge, Ontario has stated that free trade and high interest rates are forcing it to close, putting another 360 Canadians out of work.

Will the minister admit that the economic policies of his government, free trade and high interest rates are not working, and neither are Canadians under this policy.

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think this government is very proud of its performance as far as job creation goes.

It is true that high interest rates are not making the management of public finance easier. I would fully agree with that. That is why we need to bring them down, and bring them down in a way that will cause them to stay down and not go up after a few months so that we will not have solved anything.

As far as job creation and the free trade agreement is concerned, the hon. member fails to quote statistics from Statistics Canada which indicate that there has been an increase of 413,000 full time jobs since the trade deal came into effect. What about that?

* * *

• (1430)

[Translation]

FISHERIES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. During his visit to the Acadian peninsula yesterday, the Prime Minister was met by hundreds of fishermen and plant workers who were very upset about the government's failure to act.

Once again, the Prime Minister failed to understand the situation. With incredible arrogance, he made jokes at the expense of these people when he said: "They look pretty happy everybody seems to be doing fine".

Do these rude comments mean the Prime Minister still thinks there is no crisis in the fisheries?

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's comments were arrogant in the extreme, and people find it very difficult to accept that. My question is this: Does the Prime Minister's arrogant statement that people looked happy and seemed to be doing fine, in the present circumstances, that the Prime Minister is going back on the promise made by his ministers that there would be a billion-dollar support program for the fisheries? And will the program to be announced next week be new money or just money from existing programs?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, if I might answer my colleague opposite, with respect, he is placing a very biased interpretation on the reaction.

I have not spoken to the Prime Minister, but I would suggest that he was simply reflecting the cordial reception that he and his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, received from the people.

In terms of what is happening in Atlantic Canada, the recognition that this government has placed on the need to find a solution for the fisheries crisis will be more fully realized early next week, when a comprehensive announcement will be made. Already, $130 million has been allocated to the problem, a good percentage of what the previous government spent on economic development for all of Atlantic Canada.

Furthermore, I would suggest to my colleague opposite that in the province of New Brunswick generally, there are 40,000 more New Brunswickers working than there were when this government came into office.

The Prime Minister went to New Brunswick with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to emphasize the concern that our government has with the very real problems in the Atlantic fishery. When the announcement is made early next week, my colleague will see the nature and extent of the assistance offered. I am sure he will be very well satisfied with it.

Oral Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General and it concerns the Mohawk community of Akwesasne.

According to a wire service report, three chiefs at Akwesasne have now released a list that they believe to be a hit list of anti-gambling members of the reserve on which the name of Mr. Matthew Pyke appears. Has the minister been made aware of this allegation, and can he apprise the House as to what action he intends to take?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question about the list, I was made aware that there was a statement made by three chiefs earlier today.

I have requested a copy of the list which apparently was made public with their statement. I will, of course, refer that list to the appropriate police forces for investigation. I assume they already have it, but I will personally transmit that with respect to the list, and also draw their attention to more specifically the fact that the name of one of the deceased persons was on that list.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, needless to say, despite these recent developments, we all hope for a lasting peace in Akwesasne.

I would like to ask the Solicitor General about the following: Earlier this morning, the New York State Troopers announced they had no intention of disarming the Akwesasne community on the U.S. side. Considering what the U.S. state troopers said, could the minister tell the House how this statement will affect the way he intends to make Akwesasne a more peaceful community, and how are we going to try and collect the weapons without their co-operation?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, personally, I was not aware of this statement. Obviously, it may not be very helpful in the circumstances. However, as I said before, we are now proceeding to take concerted action. This has consisted in entering the Indian reserve to restore peace and order and to enforce the law according to the jurisdiction where the police forces happen to be. On the Canadian side, Canadian law will prevail. I assume the same policy will apply on the U.S. side.

As for disarming the entire reserve, I am sure that is one of the issues being discussed right now in Montreal by the various authorities, an issue that concerns the entire reserve and all the jurisdictions involved.

[English]

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Solicitor General. Information has been available to the Solicitor General and to the RCMP for a number of years now that gambling and organized crime are behind the violence, not only on the Akwesasne Reserve, but also on the Kahnawake Reserve, south of Montreal, which is entirely within Canadian territory.

Has the minister any specific proposals which he is willing to share with the House that he and his department is putting to this meeting in Montreal. Will he continue to press, not only in Canada but with the American government, to deal with the organized crime and gambling as part of this endemic violence or is he going to continue to maintain that this is simply an American problem?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House perhaps to the last part of the question or statement of my hon. colleague, that I pretend that it is strictly an American problem. I believe that my colleague is referring to what I have said today in answer to a question from my hon. colleague when he was referring to the operation of the gambling casinos on the American side, so I think this has to be put back into context.

The entire question of Akwesasne, the violence and perhaps the causes that have brought about this violence is exactly what is being discussed at that committee in Montreal right now.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question deals with the alternatives to gambling. The national native leadership, as well as the leadership from the reserve, have come to the government repeatedly and asked for assistance to develop economic alternatives to gambling on the reserve as a way of earning a living.

Is the government, at its meeting in Montreal, putting forward specific proposals in this regard to provide assistance, not just Canadian assistance but urging the Americans as well, so that a long-term solution can be found and the people on the reserves are not simply going to be left at the mercy of organized crime.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member and other members of this House understand the unique circumstances of the situation at the Akwesasne Mohawk Indian Reserve involving five government jurisdictions.

The meetings in Montreal this morning and continuing at the present time are designed to co-ordinate the approaches of these five government jurisdictions with a view to seeking a lasting way of bringing peace to the Akwesasne people. I am sure they are exploring a wide range of alternatives. It is not the place of this House to begin to anticipate matters which will first be discussed with the leadership of the Mohawk people before they are discussed with anyone else.

* * *

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and concerns the Hibernia oil field development.

All Canadians and in particular, Canadians in Newfoundland who are currently suffering from a collapse of the east coast cod stocks, are anxious to see this project start without delay. Two weeks ago, the vice-president of Petro-Canada, Mr. Jim Stanford said and I quote: "I believe we are very close to finalizing agreements with Ottawa and Newfoundland."

Will the minister indicate to the House today whether or not a formal signing leading to a start-up of this project is going to occur in the weeks ahead and whether or not Canadians can expect to see a start-up of construction during 1990.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member's question he will recall to mind the date of June 30 that we are working toward. What we are negotiating and what Mr. Stanford probably was referring to as a member of the consortia is on the matter of industrial benefits. The hon. member will know that I refer to industrial benefits. There was a change from the manner in which the top sides were going to be configured and how that would affect work in Newfoundland and possibly other eastern Canadian yards. That work is almost complete.

• (1440)

We still have financial issues to deal with which are known as the LRS, the lender risk sharing, as well as completion of the operating agreements within the consortia. Those are the issues being discussed now and my mandate has been to move toward the June 30 date.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his very thorough answer. It is clear from the sentiments he expressed—from the sentiments of representatives of the government of Newfoundland, and from the views of members of the consortia—that this project is progressing quite well.

I think what Canadians residing in Newfoundland want to hear today from the minister is an assurance that there is absolutely no linkage between the negotiations and discussions on this important Canadian energy project, other affiliated offshore energy projects off the east coast, and any other unrelated—maybe important but unrelated—outstanding issues with which Ottawa and Newfoundland or other provinces may have disagreements.

Can the minister give the House that assurance to Newfoundland and I suggest to Manitoba, the minister's own province, and to New Brunswick?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with respect to my responsibilities relating to the Hibernia project, the Prime Minister has been a proponent of the Hibernia agreement.

It was the Prime Minister who came forward with the Atlantic Accord. It was the Prime Minister who gave a mandate to my predecessors to complete the Atlantic Accord. I simply recall to mind for the hon. member that the premier of Newfoundland at one time was a constitutional lawyer who argued that Newfoundland should not have rights of offshore development and royalties which are part of the Hibernia development.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: If the member wants to drag in some other issues they can be, but I do not think that is helpful. The point I am making with respect to Hibernia is very clear. My mandate is the one I described in the first answer and that is the mandate the Prime Minister has given me.

* * *

ENERGY

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday the minister told the House that Petro-Canada International withdrew from Myanmar because of "deteriorating human rights".

If that is the case, why does the minister not cancel Petro-Canada's $22 million deal with the same dictatorship?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct with reference to the work that Petro-Canada International has with Myanmar.

There is a second issue relating to Petro-Canada and the work that they have in Myanmar. I have not asked Petro-Canada to withdraw from that contract.

We have very clearly told Petro-Canada to operate both in the domestic and the international market. I appreciate that it is difficult in view of the changes that have taken place in the government in Myanmar, but I think we also have to keep in mind that those agreements were signed with previous governments.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the minister. No answer represents better the hypocrisy of this government than this one.

It is quite clear the government can instruct Petro-Canada, according to Mr. Hopper, the chairman of the board. I quote what he said when he came to the House of Commons committee in 1986: "Controlling interest is clearly with the shareholder" and that is the government, "and she can order me to do what the government wishes me to do by Order in Council any time she wishes".

Therefore, will the minister do the right thing and bring forth today an Order in Council instructing Petro-Canada to suspend its activity with this dictatorship?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is very helpful when the hon. member uses the word hypocrisy concerning these kinds of issues.

Mr. Kaplan: It is the right word.

Mr. Epp: No, it is not the right word. I have been very up front, with him on this issue, both in the House and in private conversations. I think members opposite also have been supporting energy and development projects for governments whose lack of democratic and human rights we do not support.

To answer the hon. member, I have not given that order and at the moment have not considered the matter of removing the order as he says I should. I think the point has to be made very clearly that we have asked Petro-Canada to function in that market.

In terms of the hon. member's representation, this matter will be examined jointly by a number of my colleagues and myself but I will not go any further today.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, of which I have given him notice.

On March 13, I wrote to the government about the safety of the new open border system for meat imports into Canada. Now an incident has occurred which underlines my concerns.

Would the Minister of Agriculture confirm that on April 26 a truckload of 29,000 pounds of dried meat products already approved by the United States Department of Agriculture had to be turned back at the border crossing at Windsor. Would he also give us the results of tests on that product which has taken place since?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice. I can confirm that there were defective meat product packages found in the shipment to which the hon. member has referred. The shipment has been held and samples have been sent to the Guelph laboratory for analysis. The results are pending. I can also advise the hon. member that the importer refused to accept the shipment and consequently it has been shipped back to the exporter.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have certainly heard some preliminary reports on the consequences of this testing from those people who carried out the testing. These tests suggest that we may have a serious problem.

I want to ask the minister if this incident, which involves one of the larger and more important companies in the country, does not demonstrate clearly that we should step up and improve our border inspection process for meat instead of increasing the gaps in the process as in the new system?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member and other members of his party may want to get their position straight, because just a couple or three months ago a member of his party raised that very issue in the opposite context. He said there was harassment as a result of the inspection practices which affected the operation of a plant in the hon. member's riding. I believe it was the hon. member for Moose Jaw.

I say to the hon. member and to you, Mr. Speaker, that the systems for inspection of meat are virtually identical in the United States and Canada. Once a shipment crosses our border we treat it as a domestic product. We can inspect it at any time as the Americans do our shipments. The fact of the matter is that the system has worked very well in the past and continues to work well. There will always be occasions like this. The shipment was caught, it is being dealt with, and I think it simply demonstrates that the process works very well.

• (1450)

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance.

6 Quebecers are wondering whether Hydro-Québec, a Crown corporation, will really shift to consumers the difference between the currently hidden 13.5 per cent tax and the future 7 per cent GST.

My question is this: Can the Minister tell Quebecers whether or not this 6.5 per cent reduction from the current hidden tax will have a real impact on Hydro-Quebec bills as of January 1, 1991?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his question. Obviously, the sales tax reform will translate into a substantial reduction in Hydro-Québec's operating costs.

I was reassured to read this morning that Hydro-Québec was reviewing its figures in order to assess exactly what this positive impact would be. I am confident that Hydro-Québec and all other businesses, will work with unions to ensure a responsible transition in everybody's best interest.

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORT

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Transport. Northumberland Ferries Limited is impatiently waiting for the much-needed ferry for the Wood's Island—Cariboo ferry service. The design for the new ferry was to have been chosen by March, 1990. It is now May and there still no design has been chosen. Will the minister indicate to the people of Prince Edward Island why this design has not been chosen?

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the hon. member that everything is being considered, but the decisions have not been made as yet. The minister is well aware of the hon. member's concern about this ferry.

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same parliamentary secretary.

Will he give the House an assurance that the ferry service between Wood's Island and Cariboo will not be negatively affected by the fixed link? Any decision to build a fixed link does not take away the need for a ferry service between Wood's Island and Cariboo.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, all I can say to the hon. member is that each of the matters he has brought forward will be considered. The fixed link is also an ongoing consideration in the transportation issues raised by the hon. member.

* * *

JUSTICE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. On April 27, I asked the government for some assurances about a secret hearing and judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada last February. I asked if the government was party to the proceeding. The Solicitor General replied that the government had no knowledge of the matter.

An Ottawa Citizen report suggests that this answer was wrong and the government was a party to the proceeding. The minister will understand that such a proceeding may be justified but it is contrary to our tradition. Is the government a party to the proceeding and does the government agree with the need for secrecy in this matter?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member will know, the proceeding before the Supreme Court of Canada has a press ban on it. I will neither confirm nor deny whether the government is involved. I do not believe in the face of that press ban it is appropriate to disclose any information relating to the case.

The Supreme Court of Canada has indicated that it will make the dossier public. I think the date is May 11. It is subject to representations made by parties in the case. I think it is appropriate under those circumstances not to say anything about it in this House and to await the decision of the court on whether they will or will not release the case.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, without knowing the nature of the proceeding before the Supreme Court of Canada, it is impossible and I would not presume to take a position that secrecy is not justified.

I want to ask the minister if the proceeding develops in such a way that there is no disclosure on May 11, will she undertake to keep an eye on the matter and disclose to the House and to the Canadian people as she can and as soon as she can?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member's question is asked in all sincerity. Certainly, as Minister of Justice, I have a strong interest in ensuring that Canadians have confidence in the judicial process. I believe that members of this House have confidence in the integrity of the Supreme Court of Canada which has a process under way to determine whether this case should continue to be kept in camera. If a decision is made to keep the information in camera, I will make a decision at that time as to what is the appropriate role of myself in the context of Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada.

* * *

CANADA POST

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Canada Post announced a plan to change significantly the national mail sorting system which is expected to cost the jobs of close to 1,000 postal workers and, I suspect, continue the decline in services.

My question is directed to the minister responsible for the Canada Post, who I assume is responsible for this latest drive to increase profits at the expense of service. Was this decision, which includes putting two collection boxes on every street corner in Canada, his idea and how many more stupid ideas will Canadians have to endure before this government decides that we have to have service instead of profit?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Stupid is a pretty good adjective for the question.

Mr. Speaker, the changes announced yesterday were part of a continuing program of changes under way for several years now which have resulted in the postal service of Canada being among the best in the world.

An hon. member: It used to be, Harvie.

Mr. Andre: It means the mail will be delivered faster, more efficiently and cheaper. It will enable the post office to keep the cost of first class stamps lower. The dual postal pick-up boxes are being put only in those communities where it is appropriate, so the local mail can be sorted locally and the other mail sent to where it can be sorted mechanically and automatically. It is through the use of this modern equipment that the people of Canada are better served.

The New Democratic Party continues to think that if it was good enough 50 years ago, it is good enough today. Well, things are changing.

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same minister who continues to claim that Canada Post is meeting the delivery standards they set for themselves.

How can the minister justify the reduction of another 1,000 jobs from this Crown Corporation, when mail volumes are continuing to increase across the country? When will he listen to the wishes of the Canadian people and set up a full time postal commission to keep Canada Post in check?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, there is no loss of 1,000 jobs that the hon. member is talking about. That is why I did not answer the question in the first instance.

There is a continued improvement in the efficiency of the Post Office—

An hon. member: Get serious.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): When are you going to sell it, John?

Mr. Andre: —through the continued use of modern computer sorting equipment. It is necessary to deploy this modern equipment to meet the standards Canadians expect. It is regrettable that the New Democratic Party feels that if it was good enough for their great grandfathers it is good enough for them. We have to change with the times.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Willie Littlechild (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

As members will know, the Lubicon Band has had a case in front of the United Nations Human Rights Committee for several years. Can the minister now inform the House as to the decision, and more importantly what is the government planning to do in view of the decision?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that the Human Rights Committee of the United Nations has rendered a decision in the matter of the grievance raised by the Lubicon Lake Band of northern Alberta under the human rights provisions of the covenant. That decision acknowledges that an injustice to the Lubicon Lake Band must be remedied. That is the basis on which this government has proceeded with negotiations for some years—

An hon. member: Nonsense!

Mr. Siddon: —to find a just, fair and comprehensive settlement of this claim. On the basis of that, we have offered a $45 million settlement package which will affect some 400 residents on a 95 square mile reservation.

• (1500)

If I might just quote from the United Nations Human Rights Commission report. I hope the opposition members would be interested in this finding. On page 29 of the report the committee found that "sweeping allegations made by the Lubicon Lake band have not been substantiated to the extent that they would deserve serious consideration." Furthermore, the committee found that "the state party", that is Canada, "proposes to rectify the situation by a remedy that the committee deems appropriate within the meaning of Article 2 of the covenant."

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader if he could share with us his plans for the coming days in terms of House business and what he has for us tomorrow, Monday, Tuesday and possibly Wednesday.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, it is the intention to continue this afternoon with Bill C-15 which is third reading for the plant breeders' rights.

Tomorrow, it would be my intention to call for report stage and, if possible, third reading of Bill C-53 dealing with arson, Bill C-59 dealing with B.C. courts, Bill C-60 with the Ontario courts and Bill C-61 dealing with the matter of divorce.

On Monday, it would be my intention to call consideration of a motion for a message back to the other place in respect of Bill C-21, the unemployment insurance amendments, for which the country is waiting so anxiously. It would be my intention to continue that on Tuesday. I will have to get back to the hon. member and the member for the New Democratic Party in terms of the rest of next week.

Mr. Speaker: Further question. I see the hon. member and I will come to him in a moment. The hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: On the matters before the House, the minister has given notice that on Monday we will be taking up the message from the Senate. That message usually requires a motion to be put before the House in answer to the message but no notice is given to members prior to the speech of the minister. I asked the last time that notice be given, but did not get it. I wonder if the minister could co-operate with us this time, in the interest of brevity of debate and possibly more camaraderie and congeniality, and if he would be ready to give us the motion that he intends to put on Monday in relation to the message so that we can prepare for the debate.

Mr. Andre: As I say to my six-year old son, he didn't say the magic word: "please."

Mr. Speaker, I will be providing a copy of the message just as soon as it is finished the final editing, which should be later this afternoon, and certainly tomorrow morning if not this afternoon.

Mr. Gauthier: I would like to say "please" this time, Mr. Speaker. We are getting somewhere in this place.

Relating to Private Members' Hour and relating to the fact that we have no items in the order of precedence presently on notice on the Order Paper but we do have a motion to deal with a reorganization of that hour, I wonder if the minister could give us his plans or his undertakings to deal with this matter in the very near future since, at this time, all members of this House, on all sides of the House, are indeed being, how will I say—

Mr. Tobin: Disadvantaged.

Mr. Gauthier: —disadvantaged to a certain extent in not having their motions and their bills discussed in Private Members' Hour and the government gets that time. We would rather have Private Members' Hour for the members of this House than give it to the government.

Mr. Andre: Judging by the statistics the government is getting substantially less than the Chair on time now anyway. As the hon. member knows, there has been much discussion on the proposed change in the Standing Orders in terms of how we treat private members' bills and resolutions. It is, of course, the tradition around here that this has worked out among the parties and two out of three of us agree. The third is perhaps in need of a little persuasion. If both of us say please, maybe we will get the third group to co-operate.

At some point in time, we will have to take action. I am still hopeful that friendly persuasion of the hon. member and myself, and with use of the magic word, we may be able to do this by consent rather than through a full blown debate, and all that that involves in terms of government time.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order I have another magic word on that last point. It is "sorry".

I have a point flowing from the normal question on Thursday. I wonder if the government House leader can indicate, since it is National Forestry Week next week, whether or not we can expect a statement on that from the Minister of Forestry.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should ask the minister about that.

Certainly I have no objections to such a move. It would seem that the hon. member from the New Democratic Party has a speech he is anxious to give, and we will see if the Minister of Forestry can accommodate it.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. It may be that you can answer this or that the government House leader can.

More than a month ago I raised a question of privilege regarding the possible abuse of the privileges of all members of this House and possibly of the procedures of the House. I provided, because of the delicate nature of some of the documents, copies of those to both the government and opposition House leader so that they could review them and see whether or not they wanted to come back either with more material or whatever.

Since more than a month has passed, I understand some decision has been made by the government side which does not involve either the documents or further debate, I would like to know when the privilege might be proceeded with. In my view, it has very serious ramifications for all members in this House, not just myself.

Mr. Speaker: Without getting into any particular detail, I want to assure members in the House that the matter is under consideration in my office at the present time.

There will be, of necessity, some extra conversations needed with representatives of the government. Some things were discussed earlier this morning and that will continue. I will try to report back to the hon. member as soon as possible.

Mr. Willie Littlechild (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order a few moments ago when I was asking the Minister of Indian Affairs a question, he was referring to and reading from a document.

I am wondering if you might ask the minister if he will table that document as the rules provide.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am in possession of a copy of the decision of the Human Rights committee on the matter of the Lubicon Lake Band and their grievance under the International Convention on Civil and Political Rights. It is footnoted: "Made public by decision of the Human Rights Committee".

This is a personal, marked copy. I could have a clean copy available and presented to the House later today or first thing tomorrow morning, if that is acceptable to members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked that the document be tabled. Under the rules, it should be.

I think the minister's request is reasonable, and I would expect him to table a copy at his earliest convenience.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, since I was the member who stood on the point of order originally, resulting from the fact that there is now no private members' business on the order of precedence, and suggested the order that was made on Wednesday, January 30, 1990. I felt, in light of the question posed by my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier, that I should indicate to the government House leader our willingness to co-operate with the resolution now before the House. Also, I would like to indicate our view that the New Democratic Party is handing over time to the government by refusing its consent to this motion on private members' business.

It is simply giving the time up for no good reason. Instead of proceeding with legitimate bills and motions that we and they have put on the order paper, they are refusing to honour this and proceed with this motion.

I suggest that, under the circumstances, since there was agreement between the government and opposition, with which the NDP agreed to suspend the operation of the draw, we now have a resolution for it. I would hope that the government could work with the members of the New Democratic Party to achieve agreement so that this resolution could be dealt with in the House in an expeditious way. Surely a reasonable solution might be for the government to use the time that is otherwise devoted to private members' business for this purpose.

• (1510)

I note that on Friday last the House adjourned early rather than continue to deal with government business until three o'clock as it could have done. It could have dealt with this motion then. I noticed also that on Monday afternoon, the House suspended its sitting from about five-thirty until seven o'clock when again this motion could have been called and dealt with.

If members of the New Democratic Party had concerns about the motion, I am sure they would have put those points before the House during those times. We might then have usefully dealt with the matter and wrapped it up. I know that we on this side are happy to vote for it, and I am sure that many of the members in the New Democratic Party are also happy to vote for it.

If we can just get a discussion going, we would probably wrap it up in no time. I invite the government House leader to do so.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, that was certainly an eloquent representation that will not go unheeded.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-15, an act respecting plant breeders' rights, be read the third time and passed.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to participate in this third reading debate on Bill C-15 respecting plant breeders' rights.

I know that some members of the public are a bit puzzled by the name of this bill and some find it quite humorous. When you actually see the intent of this bill, Madam Speaker, you find that there is very little humour involved.

The reason I am so pleased to rise today is to once again express our unabated opposition to Bill C-15 and give a little history behind this. At the legislative committee stage, my colleague from Mackenzie tried to amend the legislation to be certain that there would be a check to ensure that all stakeholders in the plant breeders industry be consulted by the minister. We wanted reports each year so that the plant breeding community in Canada, which is a large industry, would have some sort of government monitoring.

Curiously, the Liberals would not support our amendment so we in the New Democratic Party are alone in this. The Liberals have consented to go along with the government in support of Bill C-15 and we in the New Democratic Party are alone in our opposition. Our reasons for doing so are numerous.

Several developments have occurred in the plant breeders' rights area. A research study by North Dakota State University found that Canadian commercial varieties of grain tended to out-perform most American varieties across the state. My colleague from Mackenzie spoke about this in February in a statement in the House. According to the study, Canadian commercial varieties of wheat, oats, durum, rye, barley and flax tended to out-perform most American varieties across that state.

My colleague's analysis is that Bill C-15, introduced by this government and now supported by the Liberals, will mean that Canadian farmers who farm under unique soil conditions in the north will lose the advantage they now enjoy with public plant breeding. They will now be forced to depend on the same so-called world scale profit-oriented research that was proven so inadequate in the Dakotas. Our hesitation about supporting this bill has already been proven to have great credibility. That is on the domestic market.

We also have reasons on the international scene to oppose this bill. I would like to focus on those. I would like to outline the four principal reasons why we are opposing this bill. They are: one, the intellectual property rights question; two, the concern for the community of intellectual property rights, otherwise known as the informal innovation system, a north-south question; three, the whole trade question; and four, the concept of genetic erosion. In the time that is left to me I would like to expand on those four categories that outline our concern.

On the intellectual property rights, that is a very insidious element to this bill and although plant breeders' rights sounds like a science fiction creation, perhaps an "R" rated one, we see that it is in that whole domain. While it may still seem like science fiction, we are moving rapidly into a world where transgenetic species are becoming common. That is that you cannot distinguish between what is a plant and what is an animal. The technical or scientific distinctions between plants and animals have always been blurry. UPOV, the Union for the Protection of New Varieties of Plants, has conceded this point. There is no clear, well-defined borderline between plants and animals so there is an economic hesitation about getting involved with patenting life forms. There is also a moral consideration, and it is this moral consideration that leads the number of church organizations to withhold their approval of such initiatives.

The second of my principal reasons for opposing this bill is the concern for the community, the concern for the Third World farmer. This is the north-south argument against Bill C-15. The intellectual property rights which we see intrinsic in this bill are of the philosophical framework of the north. This bill does not recognize that southern farmers—those plant geneticists I met with when I went to Africa and Eritrea in northern Ethiopia, the bread basket of the world, where a number of life forms which we have benefited from in the developing world, but they were developed there—those farmers should be paid in some way for their resources, their centuries of developing the plant species. We just come in, pillage what they have, bring it back and make a profit from it. It does not hold true, if we are going to use our philosophical framework, that it should be a market organization that should be determining that we have a responsibility to reimburse those farmers for all those centuries of labour and skill in developing those plant species. In effect, what we should be doing is demanding that the north recognize farmers' rights through a tax-based payment to the FAO international fund for plant genetic resources.

Bill C-15 does nothing to do that. My colleague, the hon. member for Mackenzie, tried very hard to bring about an amendment at the committee stage on this very issue. Our concern is about the plundering of Third World germ plasm and the possibility, as was raised by Patrick Mooney, one of the world-recognized experts in this field, that the union for the protection of new varieties convention should render germ plasm subject to biotechnology patents in the north. That is the second major area of our concern.

The third area of concern is under a heading that is very familiar to this House as it is very much within our own philosophical framework and will be recurring over and over again in the days to come and that is international trade.

• (1520)

We have many reservations about becoming involved in this global economy because we feel it is not to our advantage. Nowhere is that more evident than in this bill. We are not the big players. We are the ones that are being made the Third World.

Bill C-15 is the first step toward full compliance with the proposed system of international trade under the GATT. What Canada decides to do with this bill will influence how developing countries judge their legal options. So, as the critic for international development, I can see that Canada is capitulating to the dominant economic forces.

We have given away our moral leadership in defending the developing countries and we are going along with those countries that really believe that the more money you have, the more power you have, the better you are. I had hoped that Canada would resist that dynamic.

The final area of opposition is one that I hold very close to me and that is the whole area of genetic erosion. As a member of this Parliament's Environment Committee we are constantly being given evidence of the kind of global environmental crisis which we face. Bill C-15 is only just going along with that trend and not addressing it in any way that helps us toward a solution.

Our farmers are being pushed very, very hard by economic circumstance to make choices they would otherwise not like to make. Those problems are all the more dramatic in the developing world. We are being pushed, both here and internationally, to erode our environmental capital.

We are being pushed by the dynamics that I cited in previous portions of this address to do mono-cropping, to do cash cropping, to get involved in the global economy, and we are using up our environmental capital.

The genetic erosion that is of concern to me is no more evident than in Africa. The people who I saw in northern Africa managed quite well over the centuries until we got our sticky fingers in there and decided that they should grow cash crops. We now see the kind of social erosion which results in war, which causes more social erosion, which runs into "Well, you have to get into the global economy; you are going to have to put in structural adjustment; we are going to help you poor folks but you are going to be playing by our rules". The result is mono-cropping and the deterioration of the genetic resource.

One of the most passionate opponents to plant breeders' rights legislation has been Sir Otto Frankel of Australia, a scientist long involved in genetic conservation. He has decried the genetic provisions in this bill. Just as I have said, it is the commercial, hence the biological monopolies, which stifle genetic diversity. By encouraging the developing world to buy into the market system, we are encouraging them to use their environmental capital.

We have done it to our own native peoples here in Canada. We have somehow come with a great deal of ego, thinking that we know best how the native people of our land should be running their economies. Only now are we adopted some humility, to admit we have really messed up. I think that same degree of humility should be adopted with regard to the Third World because we are messing up there too with mono-cropping and the elimination of biological diversity.

We believe that the passage of plant breeders' rights legislation contributes directly to genetic erosion.

Of course, I care what is happening on the the farms of Canada. I am concerned about the farmers who feel that their options are limited by the economic circumstance in which they find themselves and by the trade policies which this government has imposed on them by adoption of the free trade deal.

I am also concerned about our world. It is not just Canada that we should be worried about. I have said repeatedly that we are seeing the very beginnings of a global consciousness environmentally, but we have not quite reached that consciousness politically and socially.

If this government adopts this Bill C-15 then I think it will only make the lives of Third World farmers more miserable. It will only increase the devastation to the environment of the developing countries. How can we expect the Third World to participate as equal partners in the crisis that is facing us if we do not give them the assistance to become that full partner. The adoption of this bill would be a repudiation of the Third World. It would mean that we are willing to go along with the process and many other such initiatives of this government.

Our opposition is firm. It is with extreme disappointment that I see that the Liberal party has capitulated to the market philosophy that this bill is necessary. Even if Third World countries do not have plant breeders' rights legislation, they are not immune from the pressures our Canadian farmers have felt. Dr. James Thomas, formerly with Agriculture Canada and now with a consortium for international development notes that Bolivia is already feeling the effects of reduced source of seed competition because the multinationals have already purchased a number of smaller suppliers and then only provide one most profitable line from among those purchased.

This bill is just a blank cheque to the multinationals to come in and take the resources and make lots of money without giving any to the people who developed those resources originally. It is very much, as my colleague, the member for Mackenzie has pointed out, the plundering of Third World resources.

In conclusion I would like to reiterate that we in the New Democratic Party are strongly opposed to this bill for economic reasons, moral reasons and international development reasons.

The four points I have made throughout this address were: first, intellectual property; second, the farmer's rights in the developing world to have recompense for their development of seed varieties that we have used to our profit; third, the whole trade dynamic and the globalization of trade; and fourth, the genetic erosion.

Madam Speaker, this will be a sad day if Bill C-15 is passed. I know that the amount of mail that I have received on this issue has been disproportionate to the amount of knowledge that exists out there in the community. The people who know about this know the consequences of this legislation, and the are very active in their communities. They will continue to make the Liberal party very uncomfortable in supporting this legislation. Our position in our party is clear. We think this is a bad bill. It is a bad bill for Canada and it is a bad bill for the world.

• (1530)

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Madam Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for an excellent speech on a subject that is not only of grave importance to this country, but to the world as well, as she so ably pointed out.

I was wondering if the hon. member could pursue how deeply we are indebted to the agriculturalists of the Third World for having protected over the centuries, quite literally, the gene pool?

Ms. Hunter: Madam Speaker, I am only too pleased to speak from personal experience on that question.

When I was in Africa in 1986 working for OXFAM Canada, I went to northern Ethiopia, to what Ethiopians call the country of Eritrea. It was a country at war, a country devastated by famine. What I saw there in a number of places were agricultural experimental farms doing miraculous things under very, very hard circumstances.

Madam Speaker, you have seen the television images of that country that has been devastated by famine. I am sure that your imagination can go on from there.

Those agricultural experimental farms were the product of centuries of knowledge. The people of Eritrea in northern Ethiopia have, through their skill and through their knowledge, developed seed varieties that are particularly successful in that area. It was like a garden of Eden in northern Ethiopia. Those people are the ones to whom we should be very grateful.

Ethiopia was the breadbasket of the world, as I said in my address. Now that we are encouraging the developing world to become part of the global economy, we are forcing that knowledge away from them. We are taking it. We are stealing it. We are using it and not paying for it.

As I said, this plant breeders' rights legislation forces the Third World into a weakened position. Hundreds and thousands of people were dependent upon the seed varieties that were used at the little experimental farm I saw in northern Ethiopia.

This is where the morality of this bill comes in. If we are willing not to pay them for their resources, then we have a responsibility to assist them with food aid, with increased development assistance and other options. We are doing none of that, because we do not want to get involved with the political complications of that country.

When we try to get the interlink going, as I have done in both the external affairs committee and the environment committee, it is met with a great deal of frustration.

I thank the member for his question. It is a very good one. We always feel very good about the kind of assistance we give overseas, but we have to look at the big picture. We have done very well from their resources. We have profited from them, and we are not paying for them.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I would like to pursue this matter further with the hon. member for Saanich—Gulf Islands. She made it very clear where the varieties of wheat, in particular, originated, as well as some of the other cereals. Northern Ethiopia and the general area of northeast Africa is the centre for much of the genetic diversity in those cereals, particularly wheat.

Just as an aside, the opening of western Canada was made possible by the introduction of a variety from northern Kenya, not too far from that area. It has been fairly successfully economically in turning that area into a breadbasket as well.

She made it quite clear how the farmers through selective breeding have continued to keep a wide diversity of varieties and a big genetic pool of material available for everyone on the globe to use.

I did not finish hearing the story about how the northern countries are now changing the law so that they can patent the plants that they develop from these varieties and then force the Ethiopians and Eritreans to pay a royalty if they decide to use the results from those plants for their commercial farms. The same thing is happening in Peru and Bolivia, which is also a centre for diversity for other types of plants.

This is the point that we have been trying to make, and the hon. member has made it very well. Would she tell us what she thinks of making the north-south split even stronger by changing the rules for the northern countries, giving them a very big advantage economically over those countries that have been so forthcoming and giving of their thousands of years of looking after those plants and that genetic material?

Ms. Hunter: Madam Speaker, I thank the member for Mackenzie for that question. He was very forceful in the legislative committee to try to get accepted an amendment that would have prevented this from happening, an amendment that would have recognized the very large gift that we have received, or that there is a reciprocal arrangement. It is a gift, if we pay for it. It is theft if we do not. That is exactly what is happening.

Dr. Otto Frankel, the Australian geneticist, has been, as I said in my address, very passionate in his opposition to this legislation for that very reason.

Environment Canada says a lot of nice words about genetic diversity. Why can Agriculture Canada not see the same thing? There is a sort of contradiction here. One wonders whether the left hand knows what the right hand is doing.

If we are going to be environmentally sensitive we have to understand that that must extend beyond our borders, and that the kind of economic advantage that we have in Canada carries with it a large degree of responsibility. The adoption of this bill is the abrogation of that responsibility.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Madam Speaker, it seems to make very little difference what government bill we rise to speak on in this House. The reasons given by the government for having to bring them in essentially boil down to a matter of economics. In many instances that is one of the major rationales that the government has mentioned for bringing forward legislation.

The plant breeders' rights bill is no different. I would suggest that in addition to the pleas for fiscal responsibility that it is also merely a way of furthering the Conservative agenda which is a matter of privatization. Bill C-15, if nothing else, is precisely that. It is the privatization of the genetic furtherance of plants in this country. Of course the government is so fond of saying that it goes beyond that, as it does with the GST. It says: "There are 40 countries that have brought in a GST so we have to do it".

It is not able to say that there are that many countries around the world which have brought in plant breeders' rights legislation. There are 18. Even so, the small number of 18 is a sufficient number for the government to use as the reason for bringing in plant breeders' rights. I would say that the me, too, issue is just another part of the smoke and mirrors which is an excuse for the government to do what it wants to do, which is to privatize and deregulate. Certainly, deregulation is part of it as well.

• (1540)

If this government thinks that it is going to be able to have as much control over the breeding, proliferation and even the transportation of plants, cereal grains and so on across the border as it has now, then it is certainly very much mistaken.

As has already been mentioned by other hon. members, it was shown by the United States agricultural people that plants and cereal grains developed in the United States under this privatized system of raising plants in trying to help cereal grain growers come to grips with problems, whether environmental or bacterial, is not as efficient. The United States agriculturalists found that Canadian-bred cereals were superior to those which were developed in the United States. My party and I have maintained, and a good many other organizations which I shall mention subsequently have verified, that cereal grains developed in Canada are superior.

During the course of some of the speeches by government members at a previous debate in the House, I was not surprised that the idea of the budget was mentioned. As I said, there does not seem to be any area where they do not seem to be able to work in the need to cut costs. I would suggest that this is one more case where it can be demonstrably shown that this government is penny wise and pound foolish, as the saying goes, and I will get to that a little bit later.

There is ample evidence to show that the way plants have been developed is cost-effective for Canada, as well as for other people around the world, whether it is matter of being able to grow the crops, or because Canada is a rather large supplier of cereals to the world.

I suggest that there are other instances where the government has demonstrated that it is penny wise and pound foolish. One such instance relates primarily to the concept of research. In spite of all the fine-sounding rhetoric that we have heard from the government in relation to scientific development, and in particular, references to its Centres of Excellence, it really does not have much of an idea what really constitutes research. It certainly does not recognize it when it occurs.

I would like to refer quickly to something all together out of the field of agriculture, for a moment. In retrospect, I do not see how Canadians can help but realize—although this government does not—that what really occurred with the aircraft companies Canadair and de Havilland was really investment in research by the people of Canada. For the government to have sold off and privatized the production of aircraft in Canada was nothing more than the giving away of a tremendous amount of research done and paid for by Canadians. It was done with the marvellous expertise that we have developed. I cite those as examples to show that this government really does not know what on earth research is.

However, there is an even better example of this, which illustrates that the whole concept is endemic within the Conservative party and that it goes back a long way. That is precisely what happened to the Arrow aircraft. A previous Conservative government did pretty much the same thing with it as it did with Canadair and de Havilland. It gave away Canadian expertise. Actually, in that case it did not give it away, it burned it and cut it up with a cutting torch. Those very expert Canadians who had developed that magnificent flying machine then went to the United States and, in good measure, assisted in putting the Americans on the moon.

I will get into some of the specifics of what I see has happened with respect to research in agriculture in Canada in a moment in a context similar to the one I just referred to involving the aircraft industry.

We have predictions that this measure is going to be a panacea for Canadian agriculture. It is going to make Canadian agriculture more efficient and more productive. We have heard these kind of predictions before. We have heard these kind of predictions in relation to our forestry, and look what is happening there. Our forests are being depleted at a rate from which it will be impossible to recover.

Even more obviously—and in relation to incidents which happened in the maritimes as recently as yesterday—we are hearing the same kinds of glowing predictions in relation to the fishery. These are predictions which we have received from this government in previous years—certainly ever since it came to power in 1984 and while the Conservatives sat in opposition. We heard all the things that they would be doing if they were in government.

We have seen as a result of government actions that it has devastated the forestries and the fisheries. I would suggest that there is no reason in the world why we should in any way assume that its predictions in so far as what will happen if plant breeders' rights are instituted in this country that the results will be any different.

The assurances that we are going to become productive and efficient are just not anything that we can take any stock in at all, as was the case with other programs which the government brought in since the last election. I have a particular specific interest in unemployment insurance. We have seen, again, that the government claims in the most glowing of terms that Canadian workers are going to benefit enormously because of the changes to the unemployment insurance program. The results are precisely the opposite. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians are not going to be eligible to receive unemployment insurance at all. Thousands and thousands more than that are going to find that their benefits will be reduced as a result of this government's changes.

This brings me back again to the idea of cuts, cuts, cuts. Considering all the references to the budgetary problems of the government in relation to this particular debate which have been made, one of the main reasons that it is bringing in plant breeders' rights legislation at this time is that it does not like to see public money going into a marvellous Canadian government department, that of Agriculture Canada.

Something that we western Canadians appreciate is that 88 per cent of the grain and oilseed stocks in western Canada are a result of the development of those stocks within Agriculture Canada. I come from Saskatoon. I know very well that the past history of the development of these varieties and the diversification of varieties in Canada is in no small measure a direct result of the research which has gone on at the University of Saskatchewan which is in the city, part of which I represent.

I would like to point out in another context how enormously beneficial for all of Canada is public participation in the furtherance of scientific development in our community. We are all very well aware—and sometimes we have slightly differing views—of the oil sands projects in Alberta. Should we develop megaprojects or should we not? Most Canadians are probably not aware that the technology for the extraction of oil from the tar sands was not developed by Shell Oil, or Imperial Oil, and certainly not by Petro-Canada, which was not in existence at the time, or by Sun Oil, which is one of the major operators in northern Alberta around the city of McMurray, but by the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology. Public money is what developed the ability of the Canadian oil industry to be doing what it is in the tar sands of northern Alberta.

• (1550)

We have a similar example in the Department of Agriculture. It was the Canadian public agricultural research institutions in Canada which led to the world-wide use of canola as feed and as an oil product. The crop now known as canola, and formerly called rape, was used for its oil. That oil was poisonous and was used as an industrial lubricant particularly during the war when there were problems with the availability of petrochemical substances usually used for lubrication.

It was technology from these public research institutions that led to the modification of that crop from the point where it was poisonous as an oil to people and livestock, as was the meal, to the point where it is now sought as both a meal and as a consumable oil for livestock and people on a world-wide basis.

What the government is proposing through this legislation is a move away from that concept. I would not say that it is a uniquely Canadian concept. I would say that it is a concept within our country solely consistent with our nature as Canadians to develop these kinds of things not only for our own benefit—and certainly not with the prime requisite that it be profitable—but for the benefit of the community in which the research is done, and that it serve the world-wide community. That has been demonstrably the case whether we are talking about the development of insulin or about the modification of rape into canola, from a poisonous substance into an entirely edible substance by animals and humans in the form of oil or meal.

As well the evidence is that multinational corporations are not something with which we as Canadians have had a tremendous amount of positive experience. The fact of the matter is that when this bill goes through, what we are going to be looking at is a concentration in the hands of multinational corporations whose primary interest is the development of seeds and crops, along with the development of fertilizers and pesticides to go along with them. It comes down to a question of why would we turn our source of food supply over to some organizations over whom we have so little control?

There is no evidence that the multinational corporations which are so involved in the grain industry and in the chemical and pesticide industry have the interests of the Canadian public as their primary interest. In fact, there is evidence which will indicate—and we will get closer and closer to the threshold—that even human genes are being introduced into some plant and animal varieties.

This morning I heard some questioning from the government side with respect to the veracity of this type of scenario. If there is anyone on either side of the House who thinks that the introduction of cereal grains, oilseeds and other plants as well into our agricultural industry, whereby the companies will not be able to breed them in such way that they are specifically resistant to only their chemicals—whether they be fertilizers, pesticides, or herbicides—then I suggest that such a person certainly does not have a very good grasp of the kinds of mentality, the kinds of thinking, the kinds of imagination, if you will, within the laboratories of the companies involved in pesticides, plant breeding and fertilizing within this nation.

I would like to refer to some of the organizations. This morning one of the members opposite disparaged the remarks of a Mr. Mooney. Mr. Mooney was speaking on behalf of several organizations. I would just like to read off a few of them, if I may. The inference was that he was only one person speaking for one person. This is who Mr. Mooney was speaking for.

He was speaking for the National Farmers' Union, the Canadian Catholic Organization for Development and Peace, the Canadian Environmental Law Association, the Canadian Labour Congress, the Council of Canadians, Ecology Action Centre, Friends of the Earth, Friends of the Rainforest, GATT-Fly, Inter Pares, the Manitoba Council for International Co-operation, the Marquis Project, Mouvement Agriculture Biologique au Quebec, Ecological Agriculture Projects of MacDonald College, McGill University, One Sky, Oxfam-Canada, Saskatchewan Council for International Co-operation, Ten Days for World Development, the United Church of Canada, Wild West Organic Harvest Co-op and World Inter-Action.

My concern is the same as the concern of those people. I thank you very much for your attention, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, I know very little about plant breeders' rights, just as my hon. colleague knows nothing about lamprey eels. So we are on a similar plane.

I am certainly glad that I spent the 20 minutes here to listen to his speech, because I have learned a great deal. I think that the members across the way have also learned a great deal. My hon. colleague is very convincing and persuasive. I am just wondering why we are alone in opposing this particular bill and why the Liberals are not with us. It is very mindful of the GST.

What is the rationale for the government putting forward this bill? Why are they for it? In just a few words, tell us why it is for this bill?

Mr. Fisher: Madam Speaker, the answer is rather obvious. We come back to the same motivation which fuels the engine of the government opposite, privatize. A good portion of development has been exemplary worldwide by Canadians in many different fields.

• (1600)

The reason I went far afield from agriculture was to emphasize the contribution that Canadians have made, sometimes a little more specifically to our own society, in relation to some of the smaller aircraft companies which I did not mention. We did just toss them away for a pittance, after having spent enormous sums of money on them. It is a matter of privatization. This government cannot stand the public sector being so obviously successful as it has been in the development of agricultural crops and so on within this country.

I really have no explanation why the government cannot stand this, except that I suppose it sees a potential for profit because it is obvious that once this bill passes, the profit motive will become the engine which fuels the development of agricultural crops within this country. The fact that Agriculture Canada will receive 60 per cent royalty on crops which it develops does not come anywhere near to ameliorating the devastation that is going to occur as a result of this deregulation. This is another reason for the government doing this. It is not only privatization, it is deregulation.

Then you get companies such as Cargill. It is unbelievable the amount of money the government of Saskatchewan is guaranteeing to this company, a company which last year made a $35 billion profit. I would suggest, Madam Speaker, that this is about seven times larger than the provincial debt and is sufficient to be able to buy out the province of Saskatchewan along with its debt.

Not coincidentally, the money going to the Cargill corporation is for the development of a fertilizer plant. Although if you were to simply look at the commodity markets around the world, you would think it was a mere trader in grain. Of course, it goes far beyond that. It is a matter of privatization and deregulation and getting the government out of involvement in this. Profit for the private sector, that is what it is all about.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Madam Speaker, when the history of this Parliament is written, I would not be surprised if this bill that the House is poised to adopt today will prove to be one of the most important pieces of legislation and one which stands to its great discredit.

The fact is it is going to be adopted because both the Conservative government and the Liberals are determined that it should go through. It is only the New Democratic Party that is standing in this House to oppose this Draconian piece of legislation. It is very interesting to me that, perhaps because of all the furore over issues like the GST, free trade, UI, and Meech Lake which have dominated the news, it is a bill like this which may, in the end, have the most profound effect on the lives of future generations of Canadians and of millions of people around the world.

Bill C-15 has the effect of causing Canada to join with other predominantly western countries to privatize a very key area of life on the planet, the development and control of seed and plant genes. If this bill passes it will set conditions on the sale of what is bred and of what is discovered. It will provide an effective subsidy to transnational corporations and it will apply effectively an industrial patent system to living things.

It has been interesting to me that the bill, notwithstanding the lack of general attention given, has nonetheless generated very considerable concern across the country. From my own constituency of Victoria, I have received many, many letters from people expressing their grave concern about this bill and I would like to put some of them on the record. I hope I am not embarrassing anyone by including them in the record of Hansard. I have a letter from Mary Lanceley who writes:

> I understand that Bill C-15, which relates to the patenting of seeds is about to be pushed through the Commons while nobody is looking. It will put the control of the sale and the development of seeds into the hands of a few large companies. Most of these companies also are related to petrochemical and pharmaceutical branches. It stands to reason that the seeds developed and sold by these companies will be those which require increased use of fertilizers and pesticides. Old reliable seeds will no longer be available. This poses an increased threat of chemical pollution in our environment and further toxicity of the food we eat.

The letter concludes:

> Many people are alarmed, and rightly so, at the threat of extinction of various kinds of animals; we should be equally concerned about seeds. We will lose some irreplaceable plant stock if this horrendously wrong bill is allowed to pass.

I have a letter from Richard Johnston and Esther Muirhead from Victoria which reads:

> I strongly oppose Bill C-15 and I want you to stop its passage.
>
> The Plant Breeders' Rights Bill will allow a few international corporations involved in plant breeding to control privately, research and decision-making regarding the genetic material upon which we all rely. These corporations are closely linked to the petrochemical fertilizer industry.
>
> The Third World is at risk of losing ancient seed strains in the push toward cash production of food crops for urban populations. Locally rich and diverse and often undocumented varieties of seeds that resist certain local pests and diseases will be threatened by the freedom of corporations to patent new seed varieties they develop or discover.

And, in effect, I may add, to control the release of those varieties. The writers go on:

> The extinction of genetic material on this planet is increasing daily; control of the preservation of genetic diversity needs to remain in the hands of public institutions.

One more letter from M. Johnson who writes:

> I have just heard about a disturbing bill and am told it is rapidly approaching its third and final reading while most Canadians remain ignorant of it. I wish to direct your attention to Bill C-15 and express concern about the failure to inform Canadians about this bill. It has enormous ramifications for us all in terms of health and environmental concerns both locally and globally. As such it deserves a fair and public hearing across Canada. This bill, although it seems non-threatening on the surface is a very dangerous one in reality. As it will only be a benefit financially to a small number of chemically based multinational corporations it clearly is not in the best interests of the Canadian public. I do not understand how a government that openly declares a genuine concern for the fate of our environment can then offer this invitation to chemically based corporations to further monopoly of our food supply.

I want to deal with a number of specific concerns about the plant breeders' rights bill. The first is the effect of the patent on life forms. I simply cannot believe that the government and the Liberals understand the precedent that this bill creates. We are told there is no scientifically detectable difference between the genetic material of plants and those of animals. Transgenetic technologies are already in place and already being used. The legal definition of plants will begin to blur into the legal definition of life forms. The precedent which this bill creates imposes a challenge and a threat in the long run to the very existence of life itself because it offers the first legal step toward the ownership of a key form of life, a form of life which is not distinguishable from that of animals.

• (1610)

I put the question to the House: the world's plant resources are a common heritage; should one segment of our society have private control over this precious and vital resource through the use of patents? That is the issue in this bill and that is why we are opposing it with all the force that we can muster in this House.

A second concern is that of corporate concentration which this bill encourages and on which Canada has now folded in front of a multinational corporate drive to control plants and seeds on the planet. Of 10 major international seed companies, eight are incorporated with transnational petrochemical and pharmaceutical companies. They are the Royal Dutch Shell, Union Carbide, Monsanto, Ciba-Geigy, Upjohn and other big business conglomerates which have been acquiring hundreds of seed companies over the past 20 years. When they get the power in Canada that this bill gives them, they will join that with the power they have acquired in other countries to completely control the development of seed life in the planet.

Conglomerate food processing corporations are already dabbling in the seed business indicating the push toward corporate control from seed to table. In 1970 in Britain when they adopted the equivalent of this legislation, within a week 84 small seed companies were bought out by one multinational giant.

The European Economic Community, which has similar legislation, recently issued a catalogue of what was permitted in terms of seeds. The effect of that catalogue was to make illegal over 2,000 vegetable varieties in England and Europe. To sell them would be violating a patent owned by one of the corporate seed merchants.

The Liberals and Conservatives who are supporting this bill simply cannot understand the impact it will have on the environment and the effect on the extinction of genetic material. Already the diversity of crops on this planet is threatened in the same way that other industrial developments are threatening animal and bird life on the planet.

This bill is a companion to the impact of the industrial revolution on the global planet. If we step back from the monster that science has created and ask what we are doing to control those developments, we find that with this bill we are not only accelerating the development of the control and reduction of seed and plant variety, we are turning it over to private multinational conglomerates. We are taking out of democratic public control the need to ensure a diversity of genetic pool on the planet.

In 1978 Great Britain lost 700 non-traditional synonyms, which are varieties very much alike. Since then Britain has lost 874 varieties which prior to the adoption of their legislation were distinct, stable and uniform and had a quality of value to gardeners in Britain. Erna Bennett, a former staff member of the Food and Agricultural Organization in the United States, estimates that 75 per cent of vegetable varieties currently planted in Europe will be extinct by 1991 if current policy is continued.

By the year 2000, which is only a decade away, the FAO estimates that two-thirds of all plant seeds planted in the Third World will be of uniform strains. We are losing our genetic reservoirs which are our built-in production against changes in climate or the ecology of the world's food-growing lands. We have already heard in this debate the connection that this bill sets up with the chemical industry and the direction that this goes. Presently there are 4,000 registered pesticides in Canada. With this bill we will add to the danger that by some chemical fluke we will suddenly wipe out a whole food strain or a whole plant strain. The sale of chemicals to control pests and disease has increased 32-fold in 35 years and is now a major threat to the plant life in North America.

My colleague from Saanich—Gulf Islands added yet another point which was critical to the consideration in this debate, and that is the effect on people in the Third World. We are really joining a consortium of already rich countries to further choke off the potential for self-sustainable agricultural development in the Third World and to further build a monopoly that will cause increased poverty and economic degradation in the Third World. Ninety-five percent of all global human nutrition is derived from only 30 plants, all of which originate in the Third World.

Over the century, the knowledge and skill needed to carefully select individual seeds for the next planting have been the specialized domain of subsistence farmers—mostly women, I may say. This heritage is simply not recognized by this bill and its companion pieces in other countries. It is the heritage that has given the world its basic genetic material for most of the food which is grown around the world today.

Bill C-15 would give the right to private companies to patent, not only seeds which they develop, but the seeds which they discover. If this bill is allowed, the valuable natural resources located in the world's poorer nations will become wide open for exploitation by these private multinational corporations, based primarily in the rich north. Most of the fruits, vegetables, crop plants grown in the world have come to us from hundreds of generations of careful selection and cultivation which has been carried on by agriculturalists all around the world. This bill seeks to use the sovereign power of this legislature to turn over into private hands the control of that development in the generations ahead.

There is little wonder that this bill has generated opposition, not only in Canada, but from around the world. Organizations within the UN system, the UNEP, FEW, UNESCO, UNCTAD, WHO, the World Food Council and the Brundtland Commission, all of these international organizations oppose this development. This House should listen to the agricultural organizations throughout Canada and around the world.

My friend from Saskatoon—Dundurn outlined the number of international development organizations in Canada, including OXFAM Canada, that have opposed this bill. It is opposed by universities, and by individuals who have been reading the provisions of this bill, listening to the discussion, and understanding that this bill must not pass this Parliament. It has not received the attention it deserves across this country.

In conclusion, I say that when the history of this Parliament is written, it will be the vote of those members who support this bill who will be remembered by future generations as one of the great mistakes they have made in this Parliament.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: It is a bad bill. It ought not to be passed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Before proceeding with questions and comments, I would like to make the usual statement. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for New Westminster—Burnaby (Ms. Black)—REAL Women; the hon. member for Burin—St. George's (Mr. Simmons)—Air Canada; the hon. member for Restigouche—Chaleur (Mr. Arseneault)—Forestry development.

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Madam Speaker, I was amazed at some of the information that the hon. member from Victoria included in his remarks.

The information regarding the number of varieties that have literally been declared illegal in countries where similar legislation was introduced previously is very useful. Many varieties of vegetables and so on were simply no longer available to people because, presumably, the companies that held the patents for these seeds decided that they would no longer be on the market.

I am wondering if the member could expand on the process that is in place in those countries that would literally take existing plant varieties off the market. Would he remind the House of the dangers of that kind of activity happening here?

Mr. Brewin: Madam Speaker, I am pleased that the member asked me the question, but I have to confess a certain nervousness as he begins to plumb the depths of my knowledge of some of the details of this bill.

I will take a shot at it. I am learning that in this place—particularly associated, as I am, with members from Saskatchewan—that it is possible to talk for at least 20 minutes on a subject that one does not know as much about as one might like. I am fully persuaded of the importance of this bill, and that represents my independent judgment. I certainly do not back off any of the remarks that I made in my speech.

As well, the process that has been operating here and that gives effect to the development to which my hon. friend refers is very clear. Quite simply, when a bill like this passes, the large multinational corporations that are already in the field, particularly the seed companies, get the advantage of this, acquire a patent and ownership of the particular seed and its relatives, and then control the market. These are primarily seed companies but also other companies that are getting into the business and that are part of the consumer food chain, or in the business of selling fertilizers and related products. These corporations control the market. It is only these seeds which can be legally sold under European law.

When this kind of legislation was adopted in every country in Europe, only a relatively few seeds could be legally sold. All the rest were effectively banned by the impact of the patents acquired by the multinationals.

The particular risk that we now face is that not only will the patents be made available effectively into private hands, the number of companies operating will decline. The companies get bigger and bigger, and are harder to control by national legislatures and parliaments. This results in increasing narrow control of this very vital area of human existence.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Victoria opened a new element in this debate with his closing remarks just now.

I wonder if he, who is learned in the law, could explain to me and to this House how it is that a government that claims that it is trying to open the world to freer trade, access to business, individual enterprise and so on, could possibly put forward a bill like this? It closed off access to plant genetic material and permits it to be monopolized by a few multinational corporations. How is the government's philosophy of free enterprise consistent with a bill that, in fact, restricts the ownership and control of most of the globe's genetic resources to a few multinational corporations, resident in the developed countries?

Mr. Brewin: Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Mackenzie. It almost invites me to launch into a discussion of how we got into free trade, into the GST and all the other issues which this government has foisted upon the Canadian people.

Let me, without extending this discussion too far off the subject, just simply say that this bill is entirely consistent with the philosophy of this government, that is to say, it will serve, in the final analysis, the interests of big business and of the large corporate power in this country and in other countries, particularly the United States.

When the crunch comes, that is the way this government operates on every single issue that comes before it. This is not a free enterprise government, this is a capitalist government. This is a government that responds to power in our society, power that is primarily resident in large corporations. When the big corporations came forward and said they wanted this bill, they got it. That is what has happened.

Mr. Gustafson: The hon. member, speaking on plant breeders' rights, in my opinion has misrepresented the bill in the sense that this bill does not preclude the government or any organization from competing in plant breeding.

In fact, this bill will enhance and encourage this. If one wants to talk about the political philosophy of the NDP, we can look at some examples of 75 years of socialism in eastern Europe which has fallen flat and which is an example of the kind of thing that the NDP is recommending here in the House.

This does not preclude, in any way, the government from competing, whether it is at Swift Current, Saskatchewan, or whether it is at Indian Head or any of the areas where plant breeding takes place and from where we have received some of our varieties.

Also, there is misrepresentation on the European situation. Some of these varieties were catalogued and, in fact, duplicated, as was raised earlier. We are really talking here about the NDP philosophy versus any private opportunity to enhance plant breeders' rights for the farmers and for better varieties of grain of which we have seen example after example.

Mr. Brewin: Madam Speaker, before this bill goes through, the current situation is that anyone who wants to get into the business of breeding plants can do so. What they cannot do now is control, for commercial purposes, and sell the effect of their discovery in the same fashion that will be possible after this bill. On the surface it seems that after this bill passes everybody will think they can develop a new plant and become rich. The fact is, if I put the hon. member for Souris—Moose Mountain on the same rink with Wayne Gretzky, I do not think the comparison would be very easy.

You are putting everyone who is in the business of breeding plants in the same field with huge multinational corporations who will quickly buy up the developments that have taken place. My friend may think that that is a good system but I can assure him that the effect of that system will be that the economy, and particularly the economy in this area, will be increasingly controlled by the few at the expense of the people as a whole.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

TABLING OF REPORT OF HUMAN RIGHTS COMMITTEE OF THE UNITED NATIONS

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I would like to deposit the report of the Human Rights Committee of the United Nations, as was promised during Question Period today.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

• (1630)

[English]

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-15, an act respecting plant breeders' rights, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments is over. Resuming debate with the hon. member for Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Madam Speaker, since I was elected to this place I have watched the plant breeders' rights legislation go through its various stages, first and second reading, report stage and now into third reading. I am from an agricultural area that deals in ground crops and fruits. I have received substantial correspondence from various constituents, and I can say that all of the correspondence was against the plant breeders' rights. They set out a number of reasons why. I would like to bring to the attention of the House some of what was said in some of those letters and petitions that were presented to me.

I became curious about the contents of this bill, exactly why my party opposes it, and why it was so upsetting to so many people within the riding of Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt. Why is there a a diversity of views from one area to the other?

Let us review the legislation in simple terms. First, the legislation governs only the varieties produced after the passage of the Plant Breeders' Rights Bill and the breeder of any new variety will hold exclusive rights to sell reproductive material of the variety for up to 18 years. On the surface, that appears to be desirable for an individual who establishes or breeds a new variety to get some benefit from that. If that was the purpose of this bill, perhaps it would be a laudable and agreeable piece of legislation.

However, if we look at what has happened in all of the other countries that have plant breeders' rights legislation, unfortunately that does not appear to be the case, as has been set out time and again by many of the debaters here today. It will increase the control of larger corporations in the area of plant breeding, seed stock et cetera. This, I would suggest, is not a desirable thing for Canada or for the world market, for that matter.

If someone wishes to sell a variety, they must have the breeder's permission and the breeder will have the right to receive royalties. As I said, this would not be so bad if it was the individual who was going to profit by it without being hurt.

Further, anyone can use a protected variety for plant breeding. To be granted a right, a variety must be new, distinct, uniform and stable. To protect the public interest, the breeder will not be able to restrict the supply of the variety to boost prices.

It has been suggested that a advisory committee with representatives from all sectors, including farmers, seed growers, plant breeders and seed merchants will be established to advise in the administration of the legislation.

It will be several years before all major Canadian crops are covered since each species will be researched before regulations are established for it. What are the objectives and expected benefits of this? We are told the legislation will stimulate investment in plant breeding in Canada. It is further argued that more improved varieties, both domestic and foreign, will be available for Canadian producers.

We are told the bill will permit the collection of royalties on Canadian varieties sold both in Canada and abroad, and the production in regions such as the maritimes will benefit from access to European cereal and potato varieties, that export sales will increase because of increased promotion of proprietary varieties, and that Canada will have a system compatible with other countries that have similar legislation, increasing the opportunity for export of Canadian varieties.

There are, admittedly, some major supporters of plant breeders' rights within Canada. In my mind, looking at the background and what has happened in other countries, the crux of the whole argument is who will control the seed stocks for our various plant varieties and how it will affect the majority of us as Canadians.

In researching this issue, it has been predicted that price of seed stocks will increase substantially. In one study in Manitoba, the prediction was that seed stocks would increase some three times. That causes some difficulty for farmers who already have their backs against the wall.

The major concern is the monopoly control that is apparent when we look at the history of plant breeders' rights throughout the world. There have been over 1,000 corporate takeovers of seed companies since 1969. There is a tie-in with the seed companies and the fertilizer and chemical companies. It appears that one ensures that there is control over the other. Many of the purchasers of these companies sell fertilizers and chemicals. In the 1970's, there were 30 companies that produced crop chemicals. Now there are about a dozen. Within a decade, the industry itself says that only six will remain.

It is interesting to note that under the European and United States plant breeders' rights legislation, 90 per cent of all seed patents are held by a handful of multinationals. That is the key, they are held by a handful of multinationals. It has been predicted that after the year 2000, 10 to 20 major corporations will dominate the seed market.

For myself and many of my constituents, this causes a major problem. The control of our basic food stocks by a few large multinational corporations sends shudders through me when I look at what is necessary for our very life on this planet. All of us need food to exist. If food is controlled, prices can be altered and increased or supplies can be held back for the increase in profits by multinationals. That is not something that I would like to see happen here in Canada, in particular, but I would not like to see it happen anywhere.

Let me turn now to some of the things that people in my riding have brought to my attention. I was presented with a petition which, unfortunately, is not in a form that is presentable to the House. Thirty-two people in the riding have sent it in to me to indicate their unhappiness with Bill C-15. They all feel that this gives the large conglomerates too much control of seeds. They are asking me personally to strongly oppose the bill. The petition simply states: "We, the undersigned, are against private ownership of genetic information and thusly we oppose Bill C-15". It is signed by constituents throughout my riding in Penticton and in Naramata.

• (1640)

I also received a number of letters and I would like to share with the House one that was written to the Minister of Agriculture by Sharon Rempel of Keremeos in June, 1989. In part, she states:

> This bill should be scrapped, and funding and research directed towards provincial plant breeding programs. Adequate gene bank facilities should be made available in all areas of the country, and continued free exchange of materials with other countries encouraged.
>
> As a heritage seed saver I have heard from growers in countries with plant breeders' rights that access to old varieties becomes difficult, or even illegal. I do not want that in Canada. This aspect of a free market system is free only to the breeders, not to the rest of the population.
>
> Please stop this bill before it is given final reading. I urge you to do so for the sake of sustainable agriculture, and the survival of genetic diversity in this country, and globally. Preservation of the plants should be done in the fields, not in the courts.

That letter was from Keremeos in the Similkameen Valley. I have a further letter from Naramata in the Okanagan in a similar vein from Daryl O'Neill who states:

> I am writing to you to voice my strong opposition to C-15, the Plant Breeders' Rights Act. There is nothing more crucial to the welfare of a nation than its ability to feed itself, and I see that this bill, C-15, seriously compromises Canada's ability to do that, for the sake of multinational profits. Genetic diversity is threatened by the increasing reliance on over-developed, highly specialized hybrids, and the resultant loss of older standard varieties of plants. This could have disastrous consequences, as the 1970 corn blight in the U.S. indicates.
>
> To conclude, I cannot express my extreme disappointment that your government would once again try to foist this odious piece of legislation upon us, for the benefit of corporate shareholders, to the detriment of Canadian citizens.

That letter was sent to the Minister of Agriculture on July 10, 1989.

Harry Nagel from Penticton writes:

> Farming, especially smaller operations, is a marginal business. Keeping costs down is very important for growers. Is it not obvious that when the company that provides the seed also provides the agri-chemicals it is more likely to impact negatively on growers?
>
> Although there are many other very good reasons for scrapping Bill C-15, my main concern is the promotion of chemical-dependent plant varieties and their apparent and hidden costs.
>
> I encourage you to consider the impact on the smaller players by this legislation.

That is a sample of some of the opposition in the riding of Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt. It puts this legislation in a broader perspective and outside of the area of plant breeders' rights. There must be a harmonization of the plant breeders and the plant breeders' rights with other countries, and particularly with the United States. I would like to digress for a moment and discuss the area in the Okanagan and Similkameen valleys that I come from and some of the difficulties we are already having.

As Mr. Nagel stated in his letter, farming is a marginal business, at best. Certainly, that appears to be the case throughout the Okanagan and Similkameen valleys, where more and more through the attempts at harmonization, through the free trade agreement and GATT, the farmers in my area have been hurt and this bill simply adds to that.

What we have now as a result of the free trade agreement and GATT are thousands of acres of empty lands where grapes used to be grown. Throughout the Okanagan and Similkameen valleys we now have acreage where soft fruits were previously grown which have been pulled out. Again, it is a matter of harmonization with the United States, doing what they see as necessary in order to make us more like our brothers, sisters and relatives across the border.

We are not like people in the United States. Certainly, we are related often by blood and otherwise, as I am myself. But we have a country of which we are proud. We have a country that has grown up through time and history with a proud heritage. The people of this country want to be able to viably produce the majority of our own food stocks, so that we can be somewhat independent of the rest of the world and assist other countries within the world.

What we see within my area is a breaking down of this ability. There is pressure on farmers to sell off their lands, whether it be for development, for housing, or for recreational areas, before they go broke. It is a moving away from the basic belief in the land. They cannot make a living. We are making it harder and harder for them by forcing them away from areas that they know well, whether it be soft fruit growing, farming, or the growing of cucumbers and tomatoes.

How do you take a 40 or 50 year old man or woman who has farmed one particular commodity all his or her life and tell them to strip the land and plant something else? You cannot do it, Madam Speaker. Since they were children, they have been growing that particular product and now they have to switch and look at the world market. It is very difficult for these people who have looked toward their retirement with very marginal profits throughout their lifetime and are looking forward to sitting back and relaxing a little bit in their retirement years. We have made it very difficult for them.

Farmers in the Okanagan, in the Fraser valley in British Columbia, Saanich in the lower island area of Vancouver Island, across the prairies, or Annapolis valley, it does not matter where, are running into the same problems time and time again. It is a problem of keeping up, making a living, and trying to overcome what nature throws at them. Now they have to struggle against a government that states that it is for farmers and is trying to help them. I would suggest that this is one more nail in the coffin of the farming community, one more put-down of the farmer. The potential of increasing the price of seeds for grain farmers, three times, ten times, or whatever in a marginal operation makes it very difficult for the farmer to make a living.

In conclusion, in the educational process of looking at this legislation, it is clear that although there are some who support this bill, it is not one that is of benefit to the individual farmer and therefore I speak against it today.

• (1650)

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): I listened attentively to my friend and I was impressed with his background, depth, knowledge and the insight he brings to this whole question of plant breeders' rights.

There is one area that rather puzzles me. I am a member of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and one of the areas that really interests me is this whole question of monopoly practices. In fact, statistics show that there have been 1,008 corporate take-overs of seed companies since 1969. Many of the purchasers also sell fertilizers and chemicals. In the 1970s, there were 30 companies that produced crop chemicals and today there is only a dozen. The industry itself states that within a decade there will probably only be about six remaining.

The minute we get this plant breeders' rights legislation passed, there are certain implications in terms of monopoly control of the seed companies and the seed business. In light of the fact that even this namby-pamby corporate take-over legislation that we have got has been ruled unconstitutional and now it is going to be appealed to the Supreme Court, I want to ask my colleague if he sees any significant problems for the people who depend on these various varieties of seeds to continue to get seed at a price that they can afford? Can he see a problem with the trend toward monopoly take-overs?

Mr. Whittaker: It is obvious that the member for Nickel Belt, being from a good agricultural area, has some of the education of the member from the Okanagan. The in depth knowledge that I have unfortunately simply scratches the surface of some of the speakers that we have had before us.

However, he turns to an area that is near and dear to our hearts and to the hearts of Canadians, which is the whole aspect of where this government is going and where it has gone in the past. For example, is this privatization for the sake of privatization. There is a whole public area here.

We have research stations and seed research funded publicly. We have scientists who now work for the federal government in various research areas, who are world renowned and are happy working within the system for the Canadian government, establishing new strains. That is one of the things I think there is a move toward, the ultimate privatization of that total area. I simply throw that out as a caution that there is that possibility.

What we have seen, and what I think the member for Nickel Belt has alluded to, is the monopolies that have been created. I sat as a substitute on his committee on the odd occasion and saw some of the mergers that have occurred over the last little while in many areas.

I also sat on the finance committee last fall and heard some of the confection manufacturers and others talk about being forced into mergers by legislation before the House of Commons, whether it is goods and service tax legislation or whether it is legislation on the free trade agreement. These large companies are becoming mega-companies.

More and more the control of our economy is falling into fewer and fewer hands. This is what the people of my riding are frightened by this particular legislation. What has alarmed me are the predictions that I heard throughout some of these hearings that I have been on, and now hearing it again in relation to this particular legislation. The control of our food stocks is falling into the hands of only a very few major corporations, and that has created problems. We have seen in the past that as we fall into the area of monopolies and do not have a competitive edge, prices have a tendency to go up. We have seen the prices of feed stocks go up for the farmers. I have stated that they will triple, but I understand that there are studies that show it to be substantially higher than that.

I believe that when monopolies or control falls into very few hands, there will be major problems not only for farmers, but for the people of Canada in not only growing their food but obtaining their food at a reasonable price.

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Madam Speaker, I appreciated and enjoyed the remarks of the hon. member for Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt. I hope that his constituents are aware of the very active role he plays in this House in speaking on behalf of soft fruit and grape growers who have been hard hit by free trade.

Whenever there is a promotion of Canadian wines the member is on the front lines urging his colleagues to, in all moderation, enjoy the benefits of the production of his constituency. However, I would not want to over-extend his knowledge of the agricultural field. I would, however, like to pursue some of the legal abilities which he does so obviously have.

One of the principal rationales that the government has presented as to why we have to adopt this legislation is that countries like the United States, Japan and others are pushing us internationally, particularly at the GATT negotiations, to adopt this legislation because of an argument that is being made in some parts of the world that things like genetic materials and life forms should be treated no differently in terms of international trade than things like the better mouse trap and intellectual property of different types such as movies.

I was wondering if the hon. member, as a lawyer or legislator, believes that there is some distinction that needs to be made between the normal commerce that might go on in international trade and things that are so vital to our survival like genetic materials and the various life forms? Should a line be drawn? In fact, should we as the Canadian Parliament be drawing it by rejecting this whole trend?

Mr. Whittaker: It is clear that there is a major difference between some intellectual property rights, patents and copyrights that do not affect the very life blood of the people of Canada, or anywhere else in the world, for that matter. It is important to distinguish between the two. With this legislation we are working toward that very basis of life for people, our food stocks. When you start playing with food stocks, and you start playing with the patenting of our staff of life, then you are into a far different area in every way than you are with other intellectual property.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, I join in debate of the Plant Breeders' Rights Act in opposition to its passage. I share the views of many in my province who are opposed to the introduction of plant breeders' rights in circumstances in which breeders of new crop varieties would enjoy exclusive rights in the commercial exportation of varieties of crops for a period of up to 18 years.

• (1700)

They oppose the notion that a holder of plant breeders' rights would be able to collect royalties on the sale of seed of the protected variety. They are also opposed to the concept of plant breeders' rights as they are so closely related to the patenting of industrial inventions, and legislation which covers plant breeders' rights in many other industrialized nations.

The notion that plants and seeds should be controlled and owned in the same way as industrial patents is not one which finds favour with many of those farmers in my riding. My riding comprises about 75 per cent of the dairy industry in Saskatchewan.

This legislation has been controversial and that is why its introduction has been delayed. It was a promise of the Conservative party in 1984, and it has taken until now before it has been introduced into this House. It is also well known that the Liberal party introduced legislation of a similar sort, but did not get very far with it either. We have seen that the Liberals, after committee hearings on the bill, are now supporting this piece of government legislation.

The similarities between plant breeders' rights legislation and the drug patent legislation are quite clear to see. Once the Drug Patent Act was passed, the path was clear for the introduction of this legislation. Control of drugs which are necessary for the health of Canadians went into private hands. The government has now gone on to enable private interests to control the rights to make profits on plants, seeds and so on.

The drug patent legislation troubled many Canadians who use drugs and the consumer groups who represent them. It did so because of the fear of increased costs, and it did so because of the fear that if a drug manufacturer could control its interests in a particular drug that it invented, its long term control over that drug would preclude generic manufacturers in Canada from producing the same drug at a cheaper price. This would cut down on availability perhaps, but certainly on the opportunity for Canadians to pay less for those drugs.

Just as those who might potentially use drugs were concerned about the drug patent legislation and the potential price increase that that would give rise to, we have seen a reinforcement of the concerns raised by my party and other groups since the passage of the Drug Patent Act. For the same reason farmers, farm groups in Saskatchewan and those who are concerned about ownership of important natural resources in the world are concerned about the passage of plant breeders' rights legislation.

The issues are not only economic, although the government would prefer that we treat them in that way. They are also ethical, social and political, moral and ecological. The questions include: Who will do our research? Who will control the fruits of that research? Who will control our genetic resources, and are the resources of the world to be used by everyone or only by private corporations for their own benefit?

A question we sometimes do not ask enough is: What about those plant resources of the Third World which may be exploited by this practice? After all, most of the plant resources we use at the present time for our farming activities were originally found in the Third World. We took them without those Third World countries and farmers being paid for them. Now we are going to put the rights in the hands of private businesses to sell those seeds and plants back to those Third World countries from where we took them without payment in the first place.

There is concern from a broad range of individuals and groups, from genetic resources of our world, a coalition of church, farm labour, consumer groups, and non-government organizations. Membership includes the National Farmers' Union, OXFAM, the CLC, the Consumers' Association and the United Church of Canada. Many groups have been opposed to the passage of the plant breeders' rights legislation giving private interests control over something that was previously in the public domain.

In my province, as I mentioned, there are many who are opposed. Included is the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool which is opposed to the plant breeders' rights as they apply to major grains and oilseeds in western Canada. That organization, as you know, is the largest farm organization in the country. It represents farmers and attempts to ensure that they can obtain a living in spite of the federal government's agricultural policies. The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool is opposed to the passage of this legislation as it applies to major grains and oilseeds for the reasons which I have generally indicated. I will now give more reasons in specific detail.

There are concerns about seed costs. At the moment, as we all know, farmers are very concerned about the input costs. They are at the present time trying to obtain financial assistance from the federal government to help plant their crop for the coming year. They are faced with high interest rates and they are faced with a low price for their product when completed. They are also concerned about reducing their cost of input as much as possible.

Seed costs at the moment represent about 4 per cent, for example, of Canadian wheat farmers' production costs. Europeans spend five times as much as this. There are suggestions, or predictions, by those in the seed industry that the farmers' share of costs will, in fact, rise to over 50 per cent in the next few years in Europe. A former minister of agriculture in Manitoba has suggested that with the passage of plant breeders' rights in Canada, seed costs in Manitoba could triple over the next decade as a result of this legislation.

Rather than attempting to address input costs for farmers, we have legislation from the government protecting private interests, ensuring that private interests control more of what was previously in the public domain, and in the process adding to the costs in quite a considerable level to farmers' input costs.

Allusion has been made to the problem of control of seeds. It has been indicated that some 1,000 corporate takeovers of seed companies have taken place since 1969. This indicates a considerable centralization and concentration of control by those who are in the business of selling seeds to our farmers.

Many of the purchasers of these seed companies also sell fertilizers and chemicals. Indeed, many of the developments that these companies are pursuing with regard to seeds are not to make them pest resistant as one would have hoped, but indeed pesticide or chemical resistant. We have those producers of fertilizers and chemicals buying companies which sell seeds and then ensuring that the development of those seeds is somehow compatible with their chemicals, rather than attempting to build into the seeds qualities which can resist the pests that we are concerned about. It is not a very ecological development in terms of how we develop our seed genetics.

In the 1970s there were 30 companies that produced farm chemicals, just as an example of increased concentration, and now there are about a dozen and perhaps within a decade the industry itself suggests that there might only be six. We will see a further concentration of those private organizations providing inputs to farmers.

As no doubt the government would be only too prepared to admit, increased concentration and lack of competition is likely to increase the price to farmers, making it ever more difficult for farmers to make a living and stay on the farm in Canada, making it more difficult for them to provide the food products that we so badly need.

• (1710)

If we wanted any more information or any more evidence of the concentration of control and the negative implications that that could have, we only need look to European and American jurisdictions where there is plant breeders' rights legislation. In those areas 90 per cent of all seed patents are held by a handful of multinational corporations. It has been forecast that by the beginning of the next century, perhaps 10 to 20 major corporations in the world will dominate seed markets. It is only to the detriment of farmers and surely not to the benefit of farmers that lack of competition and the control over seed genetics cannot serve the Canadian farmers or the Canadian public.

In addition, seed and fertilizer companies are continuing to buy up and hold patents on seeds which make it hard for farmers in the Third World to get the seeds they want. It is harder to ensure that both in the Third World and in the prairies that farmers obtain the sorts of seeds that are suitable for the growing and soil conditions available to them. We are not seeing, in the concentration of ownership in seed corporations and we will not see it as a result of further concentration through the plant breeders' rights legislation, a development of seeds and products which will be suitable for Canadian farmers.

Many studies have been conducted, including a 1960 royal commission, which suggests it is not worth the economic benefits which might flow from plant breeders' rights legislation to have the legislation itself. Primarily, that is a result of criticisms of the industry because of the potential, as I have indicated, for massive concentration of the plant breeding industry by international corporations and primarily international chemical corporations.

We also have to be concerned about, as we are so often reminded, the diminution in our genetic base in the world. We often hear of the number of species which are lost to the world. It is important for us to maintain that genetic bank. In Canada we have a gene bank which protects many species which are important to us, in particular barley. There is considerable concern for the safety or the security of those genes. It is certainly the case that Canada's gene bank has been cited as one which does not provide the sort of security necessary to make sure that our genetic base in the world is maintained.

Even in a country such as ours, we are not able to protect the gene bank that we are responsible for. One other point which should be made strenuously and has been made before is that again we are bowing to pressure from Americans to do what their private corporations want. We are also bowing to pressure from the Japanese corporations and from other private interests around the world. It is one more push by the United States to have Canadians harmonize our standards and our approaches with the standards of the United States. This is not to the benefit, of course, of Canadian farmers and Canadian consumers. It is time that we stood up to those pressures from American private corporations and governments acting on their behalf and take into account the interests of Canadian farmers and Canadian consumers. In coming to my final comments, I would like to point out the main drawbacks with this legislation and point out why the government should not be pursuing it in the way in which it is.

A great deal of research and activity in the plant breeding area is done in Canada by Agriculture Canada. There is a genuine fear that public sector plant breeding in Canada will decrease as governments reduce program funding in deference to increases in public sector investment and pushes more and more onto the private market.

There is also concern that the nature of public sector research will change with increased concentration on basic research and a decrease in actual variety development, in particular for crops such as wheat and canola. As a result of shifting the ownership of products onto private industry, as it is able to persuade Agriculture Canada to do, basic research rather than applied research will be done by private industry.

There is real concern that seed prices will rise considerably. There is concern that there will be restriction in the exchange of genetic stocks between breeders as competition increases. We have seen examples of that already where work is being done on particular plants and large corporations pressuring their friends in other large corporations to concentrate on some other development rather than the one of concern to the corporation in question.

We are concerned about the loss of the world's plant gene resources and that it will be accelerated as private industry promotes the cultivation of protected varieties in Third World countries. We are concerned as are many that a small number of multinational companies will dominate the Canadian seed industry as they have been doing through corporate take-overs, that they will integrate seed and farm chemical activities and develop and promote varieties whose performance is dependent upon the use of specific chemicals in which they specialize themselves and varieties whose performance is dependent upon various herbicides and fertilizers which are called into question and, as suggested by many, should be used less and less if we are really seriously concerned about the ecology of our planet.

Last, and perhaps more serious is the major criticism that Canada's food system will, as a result of plant breeders' rights legislation and following what we have seen in other countries, come more and more under the control of a small number of multinational corporations.

For example, in eastern Europe we have an example in which we see a society striving for more and more information and receiving more information, whereas in Canada we seem to have a government looking to concentrate ownership and information in such things as plants and seeds and in other areas as well.

This legislation, rather than opening up ownership and information, proposes to provide monopoly control which will limit access to information on genetic material. I think that is the wrong direction in which to go. We should be more concerned with making more available things such things as seeds and plants, which we have tended to do in the past, rather than making them more restrictive and in the ownership of a small number of corporations which then have to be purchased by farmers. We have seen increases in input costs. It will be to the detriment of farmers, Canadian consumers and indeed consumers of Canadian food products all over the world.

It seems to me it is the opposite direction in which we should be following. We should not be concentrating ownership and control of what had previously been public property. We should be making sure that access is more widely available. We might be able to manipulate genetic material, but we did not create it. Humans did not create it, and we should not receive compensation for something in which we have a minor role in assisting. There are interests for everyone all over the world in making sure that ownership of seeds and plants are more widely owned, and not more closely owned. Quite clearly, this legislation is a move in the wrong direction.

• (1720)

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, in a publication called GROW, Genetic Resources for Our World, Volume II 1989, I would like to bring to the member's attention a couple of quotes, and ask him for comments and expansion with respect to the plant breeders' rights.

On the front page of that magazine, there is a quote: "If we believe in the right to a clean environment and that food is to share, then we cannot create a system which encourages ownership of life form, the most basic which is seed, by corporations whose primary motive is profit." I would like the member to comment on that.

There is a further quote on the last page of the article called "PBR, The Thin Edge of the Wedge, The Rationalization of Life Patenting". It indicates some excerpts from a book From Land to Mouth: Understanding the Food System by Brewster Kneen, Economist and Theologian. In one of these it states as follows: "It is then but a short step to the patenting, claiming the property rights of the modified human embryo, one that has been subject to gene therapy on the basis of need established as a result of amniocentesis on the embryo utero.

In other words, once the principle of intellectual property rights is accepted, there is no natural or inherent limit to the claims that can be made. Human characteristics could be patented and licensed for production just the way a McDonald's hamburger or a new lettuce plant could be".

Would the member like to comment on those two with respect to his impressions of where we are being led by the plant breeders' rights legislation?

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to respond to those two questions.

Let me take the last one first, the dangers of patents on life forms. Experts agree that it is very difficult to accurately define genetic substances in a way that effectively ensures that we do not move along a slippery slope towards patenting life forms, something which we would all be quite concerned about. I would agree with the member and the quote that he referred to. The plant breeders' rights legislation is something that we should be really quite concerned about, if we are concerned about the dangers of patenting life forms. I think we all are.

In terms of ownership of life forms being handed over to private corporations, we might refer to an example which has been in the public eye a great deal lately, and represents a tragedy for Atlantic Canada. We can look at the developments which essentially placed the control of the fish stocks on the east coast in the hands of two large private corporations and observe what has happened to them. Those fish stocks were previously regarded as essentially public property which fishing people went to catch, and then to process.

By handing over the quotas to large corporations, those stocks became owned by those corporations. We have seen that stock, with the help of mismanagement by the federal governments over the last decade, fold to such an extent that we are now hearing from those in the fishing industry, including those whose lives depend almost totally on the fishing industry, that we should stop fishing. If we do not, we will end up by having no fish left there at all. Indeed, there are many examples of areas where there was previously a good deal of fish, and where now there are none.

We can look within our own country at what has happened when we have given private ownership over a life form to large corporations, and watched the way in which they have abused it. There is no doubt that we need to be very careful when we give large corporate interests—as we are going to do—control over plants and seeds. As experience in other countries which have with the plant breeders' rights legislation has shown, if we give ownership to large corporations they will use it only to ensure that they make profit and will not make sure that it is used to the best advantage of all Canadians and to all those who might otherwise have access to that resource.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the members.

[Translation]

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The government whip has asked the Chair to have the division deferred until Monday at 7 p.m.

[English]

Ms. Langan: Madam Speaker, May I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member suggested that the Chair seek unanimous consent to call it six o'clock.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do not have unanimous consent.

Hon. Frank Oberle (for the Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons) moved:

That the Standing Orders of the House of Commons be amended in the following manner:

1. By adding the following new section to Standing Order 30:

"(7)(a) Notwithstanding Standing Order 24(3), if Private Members' Business is to be taken up on a day, other than a Monday, appointed for the consideration of the business of supply, the time provided therefor shall be delayed by one hour; provided that it shall be further delayed by the time required for the completion of any division arising out of the business of supply or any deferred division set down for that day. Upon the completion of Private Members' Business, the Speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

(b) Any recorded division demanded during the time provided for Private Members' Business pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall be deferred in the manner set down in Standing Order 45(6) for proceedings on a Friday."

2. By deleting sections (1) and (2) of Standing Order 87 and substituting the following therefor:

"87. (1)(a) At the beginning of a session, the Clerk of the House, acting on behalf of the Speaker, shall, within two sitting days of the placing on the Order Paper of separate items of Private Members' Business from at least twenty Members, notify the Members involved of the time, date and place of a random draw of twenty Members' names to establish the order of precedence for twenty separate items.

(b) To the extent that there is a sufficient number of eligible motions and bills, the draw shall be conducted so that there shall be in the order of precedence an equal number of motions and public bills originating in the House of Commons.

(c) The names of Members with bills and those of Members with motions shall be drawn separately to produce the appropriate number of bills and motions. The names first drawn separately shall then be drawn again together to determine the order of precedence for those items.

(d) Not later than 6.00 o'clock p.m. (7.00 o'clock p.m. on a Monday and 3.00 o'clock p.m. on a Friday) on the second sitting day after the day on which the draw is conducted, each Member whose name has been drawn, and who has given notice of more than one motion, shall file with the Clerk an indication as to which motion is to be placed in the order of precedence. If a Member does not file such an indication within the time specified, the motion first placed by the Member on the Order Paper under Private Members' Business will be included in the order of precedence. This requirement applies equally to each Member whose name has been drawn for a public bill.

(2) The Clerk of the House, acting on behalf of the Speaker, shall, when necessary during a Session, conduct a random draw to establish an order of precedence for not more than ten additional items of Private Members' Business, in the manner set down in section (1). No Member having an item listed in the order of precedence at the time of the draw shall be eligible to have his or her name chosen. Not later than two sitting days prior to the conduct of the draw, the Clerk shall inform the Members involved of the time, date and place of the said draw."

3. By deleting section (1) of Standing Order 92 and substituting the following therefor:

"92.(1) The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections shall meet as soon as practicable after the order of precedence has been established pursuant to sections (1) and (2) of Standing Order 87, and from time to time thereafter, and may select after consultation with, among others, the Members proposing the items, not more than three motions and three bills from among the twenty items in the order of precedence and an appropriate number from among any subsequent items for which the order of precedence is established and such selected items shall be designated as "votable items". In making its selection, the Committee shall not take into account the number of Members jointly seconding an item, but shall allow the merits of the items alone to determine the selection and shall report thereon, from time to time. At no time shall there be more than three motions and three bills among the selected items on the order of precedence."

4. By deleting Standing Order 93 and substituting the following therefor:

"93. Unless previously disposed of, selected public bills at the second reading stage or selected motions shall receive not more than three hours of consideration and, unless previously disposed of, an item having been once considered, shall be dropped to the bottom of the order of precedence and again considered only when it reaches the top of the said order.

Provided that, unless otherwise disposed of, at not later than fifteen minutes before the end of the time provided for the consideration of the said item, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted and every question necessary to dispose of the selected motion or of the selected bill at the second reading stage, shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment."

5. By deleting Standing Order 99 and substituting the following therefor:

"99. The proceedings on Private Members' Business shall not be suspended except as provided for in Standing Orders 30(4), 50(4), 52(14), 91 and 94(1)(b) or as otherwise specified by Special Order of this House. No Private Members' Business shall be taken up on days appointed for the consideration of business pursuant to Standing Orders 53 and 84(2) nor on days, other than Mondays, appointed for the consideration of business pursuant to Standing Order 81(16)."

That, notwithstanding Standing Order 93 as amended, any selected item which is now on the order of precedence and has received more that two hours and forty-five minutes of consideration receive not more that an additional forty-five minutes of consideration following which every question necessary to dispose of the said selected item shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment;

That the Clerk of the House, on behalf of the Speaker, conduct as soon as practicable a random draw of a sufficient number of names, notwithstanding Standing Order 87(2) as amended, to establish the order of precedence for ten motions and ten public bills originating in the House of Commons;

And that motion No. 3, dated March 6, 1990, appearing in the Order Paper under "Government Business" be deemed withdrawn.

And on the motion of Mr. Milliken, seconded by Mrs. Finestone,—That this question be now put.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, I do not wish to take much time in this debate but I do wish to signal to the House of Commons that this Motion No. 6 is the result of the work of the Committee on Privileges, Elections and Procedure that have studied the issue of Private Members' Business. This is largely the recommendation that they had put forward.

I want to say that the significant part of this particular amendment is one that allows an opportunity to treat all back-benchers of this House equally. The basic thrust of this particular amendment, among other things, is that now in Private Members' Business, the member's name would be drawn rather than the item. Therefore, each member would have one opportunity to have his or her name drawn and it would then mean that all members of the House who are private members would be treated equally.

I also want to signal that we on this side of the House, the government, are very much in favour of this particular amendment and are quite happy to lend our support to it.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, we, in the Official Opposition, concur. I was a member of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges, Procedure and Private Members' Business as it then was, which drafted the resolution upon which this one is founded. It is to be found in the report of the committee that was tabled in this House in December but no action was taken on that report. As a result of that inaction, the government has seen fit to bring forward this motion to amend the Standing Orders, to permit, as the parliamentary secretary has indicated, permit private members of this House to bring forward their bills in an orderly way and have them debated with a fair chance of being drawn.

It takes away an advantage given to members who have filed dozens of bills or resolutions so that members who choose to proceed on only one or two items will have an equal chance in the draw with all others. I think that that is a fair method of proceeding. I think anybody looking at this objectively would agree that it is fair. Therefore, we are happy to support this. Indeed, I have assisted the government in ensuring that the wording of this resolution is correct. The first one is to be withdrawn as part of this resolution No. 6 because it was not quite correct.

I would like to say that the resolution constitutes a package and it is a package that I believe is reasonable. Accordingly, I move:

That the question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the motion as put by the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: No.

• (1740)

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair would appreciate it if the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands would put his motion in writing. I will wait to see the motion as written. If I understand correctly this is a debatable motion.

Is there debate? The hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, as the House well knows, all along the New Democratic Party has not been in favour of the changes being suggested. Therefore, I will speak against the motion to have the vote put.

The changes that are being suggested are clearly to the greater advantage of the larger parties. As a result, this generates some disadvantage to the smaller parties. Indeed, in terms of whether or not those back-benchers who put forward motions for discussion should be rewarded for their work and their contribution, it clearly undermines the effort that they have shown in this past session. I do not think there have been any major problems with regard to private members' business, anything that would give rise to the need to change the present rules.

It is certainly true that the members of my party have put forward many motions for discussion, motions that have been referred to them by their constituents and by interest groups in their critic areas. They have been called upon by those individuals and groups to put forward these motions so that their interests can be presented to Parliament and be the subject of debate by all members of the House. Those individuals and groups should know the points of view of each of the political parties and many of the members who wish to participate in the debate.

The restriction of the opportunity of members of my party to present questions and matters for discussion to the House is a mechanism whereby those constituents and those groups are precluded from having their points of view discussed.

If you look at the list of questions and motions put forward over the last while, you will see that primarily the work done to bring these issues to the House is done by members of the New Democratic Party.

There are members of the Liberal party who also put forward a good number of motions, but proportionately there are not as many motions put forward by members of the Conservative party. If they wish to put forward motions, there is absolutely no reason why they could not do so, on a continual basis, to ensure that they have as much chance to have issues discussed in the House as members of any other party.

I suggest to the members opposite that, if they have some concern with not having enough opportunity to discuss motions, then they should put forward those concerns. They will have the opportunity to be drawn and to have those issues discussed. If they are dealing with the interests of their constituents and groups that appeal to them on a regular basis, they are doing their job adequately and they should be putting forward those motions for discussion.

I do not think we have a problem. If there is envisaged to be a problem by the members opposite, or indeed by the members of the Liberal party, then I suggest that they respond to the demands and pressures of groups and individuals who might come to them with suggestions, make their cases and have the issues discussed.

There is a point which we should not let go by. It is quite clear that we have a situation here in the House over the last little while. We saw it with regard to some of the procedural discussion on the goods and services tax, when the Liberals found it convenient to support the government in opposition to some of the efforts made by the New Democratic party to represent the 80 per cent of Canadians who are opposed to the tax.

We have seen a number of manoeuvres as the members from the government, the Liberal party and the NDP know, to ensure that any procedural roadblocks placed in the way of passage of the goods and services tax by the New Democratic Party on behalf of 80 per cent of Canadians, would not be successful. We have seen collusion on the part of the two establishment, old line parties in Canada working together to ensure that the New Democratic Party, acting as I say on behalf of 80 per cent of Canadians, would not have their views heard.

This is another example of that collusion. The whole House knows that the New Democratic Party has, for some of the reasons I mentioned, not been in favour of changes to Standing Orders to deal with Private Members' Business. The parties know that it would have been more fruitful—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I have a point of order, the hon. member for Burin—St. George's.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I have been listening with great interest as always, to my good friend from Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing.

I am sure he would not want to mislead the House or to be using the kind of provocative—I suggest unparliamentary—language he is using. First, he is talking about collusion. I can give him a dictionary definition, but I am sure what he wanted to come out is, apart from being cowardly, not parliamentary.

The other point, while I have the floor, is that he talks about what the Liberal opposition is doing. That is not a matter of a difference of opinion or debate at all. He is misrepresenting a very important position, the position of my caucus that has fought vociferously to oppose the goods and services tax while they played catch up.

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, I am glad that I raised some excitement on the part of the Official Opposition. It would have been helpful if we had had that sometime during those procedural wranglings over the goods and services tax. Perhaps we could have carried on in a more effective way.

What we could have had through the process dealing with changes to the Standing Orders with regard to Private Members' Business is, rather than for the matter to be presented at this late stage on a Thursday, after discussion of a bill which—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Point of order, the hon. member for Burin—St. George's.

• (1750)

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, perhaps I was not specific enough and for that I apologize to you. I submit to you that the word collusion, when applied to the actions of members of this House, is clearly unparliamentary because in the process the member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing assigns motives, and the rules are very specific on that point. You cannot assign motives to members of this House other than which they themselves assign. The use of the term collusion, apart from being cowardly and beneath the member, I submit, is clearly unparliamentary. I believe, Madam Speaker, that you owe me at least the courtesy of a ruling on that very point. I submit it is unparliamentary, in that it does assign motives to members of this Chamber.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is certain that hon. members should not impugn motives to other members. I would be at a loss at this time to tell you whether or not the word collusion is, or is not, officially unparliamentary but certainly impugning motives would be. I would appreciate if the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing would act accordingly.

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, of course I would apologize if I did impugn any motives to the Liberal party. I might point out that you can collude for a good reason as well as a bad reason. At any rate, perhaps I can say that the two parties are working together. Maybe that would satisfy the member.

We have another example of that this evening. It is not co-operation because had the two House leaders pursued the matter in the normal course of things, through the normal mechanisms for negotiation and discussion—

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member who is speaking at this moment is aware of the negotiations that have gone on between the three House leaders in an attempt to try and bring this matter to a resolution that is satisfactory to all three parties. I think what we are dealing with is a problem where you have the clear majority of the House very much in favour of a motion, and the NDP being a minority, do not want it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member has spoken in debate before and may have wanted to point out that very question earlier. At this point it is not a point of order.

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, when I was referring to the normal method for dealing with these matters through the normal co-operative procedures, the deputy House leader for the government knows very well that most matters that are referred to the House leaders of the three parties are resolved quite amicably after a process of discussion and negotiation. Not very often are matters left in a situation in which there is no resolution possible and indeed I would assure the government deputy House leader that this is also not a matter which is entirely at a deadlock. Negotiations can continue and I am sure they will continue. There is no reason to suggest that we proceed in the way which is being proposed. As I say, not only the Government House Leader and the deputy House leader but also the deputy House leader for the Official Opposition and the House leader for the Official Opposition knows that those procedures could continue and that discussions could have continued. We could have made sure that an amicable and useful solution was resolved for everyone. Instead of that, they proceeded in the way in which they have, knowing that members who have been involved in the discussions in an intimate way over the last many weeks are not in the House and would have, as I am sure they would understand, valuable contributions to make to debate of this sort.

Rather than wait until the members were present, we have the situation in which the deputy House leader for the Official Opposition is moving a motion, which is something the government also wants passed, rather than waiting until, as I say, the members involved in the discussions are here to present their arguments.

I want to stress that this is not a situation, not an issue in which discussions have broken down, not a matter in which there is no headway to be made. It is clearly an issue, as has been indicated by my party's House leader, the hon. member for Kamloops, with aspects in it which are worth considering and worth pursuing.

He has also indicated, as the House leaders and deputy House leaders for the government and the Official Opposition know, that there are concerns that we have with regard to it and in particular those concerns which revolve around the work that individual members can do in bringing matters to the attention of the House. These are matters which they feel and others feel should be brought to the attention of the House.

As a result of recognizing and indicating that there are positive matters with regards to the changes suggested, but also negative matters, it would surely have been the most useful way to continue to discuss the issues among the House leaders and to continue to do that until there clearly was a deadlock in the situation. We are not at a period of deadlock, we are at a period in which negotiation and discussion would be useful.

It is not likely to bode well if motions of this sort are moved under these circumstances while discussions among the House Leaders could be continuing. It seems to me that the hon. member for Kamloops, the House leader of the New Democratic Party, does a sterling job of ensuring not only that our party's interests are well respresented but also does everything that he possibly can to ensure that legitimate concerns about the government side and the Official Opposition are paid attention to and are given due merit.

I think the government House leader, the deputy House leader, the Official Opposition House leader and the deputy House leader recognize the contributions that the member for Kamloops has made in many debates and in many discussions surrounding matters of procedure. This is with regards to changing not only Standing Orders but ensuring that the business of the House is facilitated in a constructive and useful way.

Madam Speaker, I think that this is not an appropriate way to continue. It is not useful in the long term to present motions of this sort at this time towards the end of the day when those who have been involved in discussions are not present. It is not useful for the Official Opposition and for—Madam Speaker, all the screaming and shouting made me lose the thread of my tenuous argument—but those who were involved not being—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Agreed.

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): That is right, Madam Speaker, I am reminded I was talking about those who were involved in the discussions not being here while this motion is—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie on a point of privilege.

Mr. Butland: Madam Speaker, the member for Kingston and The Islands has used my name, I think, in a derogatory fashion. He was insinuating that I was involved in these negotiations all along and I must admit that I was for a time. Being a country bumpkin from northern Ontario these Tories and these Liberals took advantage of my naivety. Some people might construe it as bullying, but I would not make any of those allegations toward them as they have done toward me.

With that point of privilege—

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

• (1800)

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

AIR CANADA

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Madam Speaker, it is nearly 11 months ago now that I raised during Question Period the issue of the sale of Air Canada shares to foreign investors.

I want to make a point to House leaders on both sides of the House that it has been an unconscionably long time since I asked my questions. However, I am delighted to have the opportunity to rise in the late show, although this event arises out of my question 11 months ago. I was put on a list, together with many other people, and of course my number came up today, something for which I am very grateful.

I say to the deputy government House Leader that I spent a little time in the Newfoundland House, and there we used to do it a little differently. There, anybody who was dissatisfied with a question had to give notice that day by four o'clock, and then was on the late show that day, if he or she was one of three. If there were more than three, the Speaker made a choice and the matter ended that particular day.

The advantage of that, of course, is that the subject being discussed has some relevance and currency, much more than it does right now, 11 months later. I say that because much of the issue that I raised that particular day, on June 12 last year, has since become ancient history.

The Air Canada deal is over and done with. The government has had its way. Anything I can say on that particular subject, the sale of shares to foreigners, is of course locking the barn door long after the horse has gone.

Although this is not my purpose in rising, I would suggest in passing that the House leaders on both sides might want to look at finding a way to make the late show a little more current than they have had the tendency of being because of the circumstance that I have just described.

However, since I have the floor, and on a subject that is broadly related to the issue at hand, you will recall, Madam Speaker, that my particular interest in the matter of Air Canada flowed particularly from the awful and wrong decision by Air Canada to pull its jet service out of Stephenville as of last June.

Once that deed was done—and done in a not very commendable manner—I said to the president and to some of the senior officers of Air Canada on at least three occasions in their boardroom in Montreal, and in letters, that the way they did it is not a model way to conduct relations with people who have stood by them for 40 years, as is the case with the town of Stephenville in the Bay of St. George area of Newfoundland.

To add insult to injury, when the opportunity came for the airport of Stephenville to get a new jet service through a proposal by First Air of Ottawa, Air Canada also blocked that particular initiative, and focused on a particular issue in so doing. It focused on the question of whether or not so-called airline deregulation has not, in effect, created a duopoly situation in air transportation of this country where the two airlines, Canadian and of course Air Canada, can not only decide where they are not going to fly, but can also effectively decide that nobody else is going to fly there.

Through the mechanism of joint fare arrangements which all airlines have with each other, a company, in this case Air Canada, by refusing a joint fare arrangement with a particular carrier can effectively prevent that carrier from going into an airport. That is precisely what it did in the case of First Air and Stephenville.

• (1805)

Stephenville is a town that is far from beaten. Let me tell you, Madam Speaker, two things have flowed from that particular obnoxious act by Air Canada.

First, an initiative has been launched through the Competition Bureau which in time will bear fruit. The Competition Bureau right now is looking at the issue of whether Air Canada is in violation of the Competition Act by virtue of its action with respect to Stephenville, the action I have just described in effectively preventing another airline from going in and providing jet service.

That is in the process, and I will let the House know more about it later.

The second thing that is happening is much happier. Thanks to the efforts of the town of Stephenville, the Chamber of Commerce, the whole leadership in the Bay of St. George area and southwestern Newfoundland generally—thanks to a massive effort—I am delighted to inform you, Madam Speaker, that as of last Sunday another airline, Air Atlantic, a connector airline of Canadian using the BAE-146, 70-passenger jet has begun jet service between Stephenville and Ottawa. On Monday of this week, 50 of my constituents from Stephenville who came on the inaugural flight were here in the gallery to witness the proceedings in this House and to say thank you to people, including people in government.

In particular I want to mention my good friend the now Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who was then the Minister of State for Transport at the time when she took an initiative. I will submit that the initiative she was able to take was partly because of her knowledge, coming from an airport area, Hamilton South. We thanked her at a function the other night. I just want to say in passing that through her efforts and the efforts of many others, Stephenville is back on the map again in terms of jet service. These people came to thank her.

In conclusion, my purpose in giving notice 11 months ago has long since slipped away, like so many other things 11 months later. I make two points.

First, we ought to look at a rule change which would make this whole debate much more current.

Second, I rise because I want to send a signal to Air Canada that the fight is far from over. The fight will not be over until we get the assistance of this government to ensure that deregulation, whatever its good purpose is, should not be manipulated to serve the negative purpose of preventing small communities such as Stephenville from having a jet service through the duopoly that I have described.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, as you may have noticed and as the hon. member for Burin—St. George's (Mr. Simmons) pointed out, and rightly so, his question goes back to June 1989. Since then the government has given its response, and the Air Canada share issue was carried out in accordance with the legislation on public ownership of Air Canada shares. The hon. member went on to talk about an airport. As a matter of fact, I wouldn't mind talking about one in my own riding—Mirabel—but I simply wish to repeat, in line with the question put by the hon. member in June 1989, that the government's purpose, when Air Canada launched its public share issue in October 1988, was to give all Canadians a chance to own part of this major air carrier. The government was successful, since the issue attracted over 130,000 new buyers from all provinces and territories in this country.

I believe the hon. member also realizes, and I am sure he agrees, that since Air Canada was sold to Canadians, the airline has been upgraded and service has vastly improved, as has the quality of their flights, and so forth. Anyone who travels will realize that, and now that we have Canadian Airlines as well, it is even more apparent.

I just want to repeat, for the benefit of our listeners, that 8 million of the 41.1 million shares sold by the government were offered on international markets. However, the hon. member knows perfectly well there was a 25 per cent restriction on those shares, which we enforced.

• (1810)

Madam Speaker, I think the answer is obvious, and in turn I too would ask him do his share to ensure that questions are more current and that it doesn't take a year for questions to be answered in the House.

FORESTRY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Madam Speaker, during Question Period on March 14, I asked the Minister of State (Forestry) about forestry development agreements that had expired.

My questions were as follows, and I quote at page 9278 of Hansard:

> Does the minister intend to renew these agreements? Where will he find the money, and how much does he intend to spend on these agreements?

Another question:

> Where is the $1.1 billion promised by the Prime Minister and when will the new forestry agreements be renewed?

Madam Speaker, I was not satisfied with the answers given by the minister acting for the Minister of State (Forestry) on that particualar day.

[English]

As I mentioned, not being very satisfied with the answers I received, I decided to try to get more answers this evening.

Since coming to power in 1984, the government has claimed that it would create a forestry department, which it did. I must congratulate the government for that initiative. I think it was a step in the right direction.

The only problem with the forestry department, as I see it now, is that the government actually reduced the power of the forestry department across Canada. It reduced it by reducing the budget and by reducing personnel.

This is the week before National Forestry Week. When we talk about current topics this is a very current topic.

Last year, the year that the department received its full status, it suffered an 11.9 per cent budget cut and a personnel reduction of 3.5 per cent, roughly a reduction of $28 million.

If we look at this year's budget, we find another reduction of 31 per cent over last year's reduction, basically a reduction of $47.6 million.

Further, if we look in other departmental budgets we find further cuts. These are budgets, supposedly, from which funding for forestry agreements is supposed to come, the funding for co-operative agreements.

The new Department of Forestry Act does not provide the forestry minister with any clout. If we look at the act that was passed last year instituting this new department, we find that the forestry minister must go to other departments to get funding for those forestry agreements. Certainly he does not have much clout when it comes to forestry agreements.

When we discuss the forestry agreements, we can say that we have consensus here in the House. All my hon. colleagues in all three parties have reached a consensus on this one issue. The forestry Resource Development Agreements have been very beneficial right across Canada. There is no doubt about it. There are some negative things about them. Some things just do not work right. But, in general, the forestry agreements have been a success across Canada, and there is a need for more.

Last year, six of those agreements expired. Those in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta were terminated last year, supposedly at the end of the year. We asked the minister at that time to renew them as soon as possible. A couple were renewed. The ones with Nova Scotia and my home province of New Brunswick were renewed. In fact I am very proud to say that New Brunswick received a little more money than we expected. I am sure it will go to good use.

This year on March 31 we see three more major agreements have expired, especially the ones with the province of Quebec and the province of British Columbia. We know that the province of British Columbia has now committed funding to renew those agreements. So this is certainly a concern.

When we look a year later down the road, we see that seven of those agreements have not been renewed, which is cause for concern.

That brings me back to the questions that I asked on March 14, not too long ago, the questions I have asked in committee and the questions we asked last year when those earlier agreements had expired. We have asked the minister when he intends to renew the forestry agreements. We have asked him where he would find the money for their renewal and how much he intended to spend on them.

As well as asking those questions the other day, we also asked where was the $1.1 billion that the Prime Minister seems to have committed at a meeting not too long ago in Montreal with the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, as was reported in the media.

• (1815)

The response given by the minister was vague and did not provide a clear indication of the government's intentions with respect to the renewal of these agreements.

However, in all honesty, Madam Speaker, I must make sure that the people who are listening, as well as my hon. colleagues, that the Minister of Forestry was not in the House that day. With all justice to him, he was on government business. The answer I was hoping to get may not have been forthcoming because he was not available to give us all the details.

This is why I more or less was hoping that we would have more details this evening, which is why I have asked for this opportunity this evening.

Our country suffers from a backlog of unsatisfactory but restocked forest land, as was indicated in the estimates provided to the forestry subcommittee by the minister's own officials. That backlog consists of around 200,000 hectares every year. Those are the estimates this year.

It is imperative, it is very important—it is urgent—that the government get on with the job of renewing these agreements. It is these very agreements which have helped promote the forest sector right across the country. It is not enough, but without these forestry agreements in place it is certainly a negative step, especially this week being the week just before forestry week.

Given the forestry department's budget reductions and given the reductions in funding for all Economic Regional Development Agreements, what we want to know as members on the opposition side is this. Does the government intend to renew the forestry agreements which have expired? When will it do so? How much money does it intend to spend and from which budgets?

For instance not too long ago in the forestry subcommittee the minister mentioned to us that the B.C. funding would be available before seeding commenced. Well, seeding has commenced.

I also recognize the fact that if an agreement is signed it would probably be retroactive anyway. That is something that has happened in the past, and I recognize that.

I would ask that the government give us an indication tonight about those Forest Resource Development Agreements.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, unlike the previous question, this one is very apt since this happens to be national tree and forest week. So it is entirely apt and appropriate.

Madam Speaker, as you know, federal and provincial governments have spent over $1 billion on forestry resources in recent years. Canadians will also find it reassuring to know that the number of trees planted represents a value of over $1 billion and that this is an investment for their future.

We should remember that over 1.5 million hectares have been sprayed, twice the area of Prince Edward Island, and that $80 million has been invested in forestry research and technology. We have also worked with 40,000 owners of private wood lots in Canada's rural areas.

Madam Speaker, it was a Conservative Prime Minister, the hon. John Diefenbaker, who gave particular recognition to the role played by our forests, and it was Mr. Diefenbaker who created the first Department of Forestry in 1960. The hon. member knows perfectly well that during the years before we came to power, the department was neglected, and we are trying to restore the department according to the vision held by John Diefenbaker at the time.

Now that forestry is the responsibility of a new, full-gledged department, the government is busy negotiating a new series of agreements that will guarantee continued federal leadership by channelling funds toward sustainable development, integrated management, applied research and technology development.

Madam Speaker, the hon. member would like to know how much money will be spent on this department. I can inform the hon. member that the government will spend more money on forestry in the next five years than it has allocated during the past five. That should give him some idea of the amount involved. He is of course aware, as are all members of this House, of the serious financial constraints under which this government must operate.

• (1820)

Madam Speaker, as you know, we as members from Quebec have a particular interest in the renewal of the Canada-Quebec agreement on forestry development. We have worked on this issue since we were re-elected and we shall continue to do so. Of course, the provinces also have financial problems, as we saw in the latest budget brought down by Mr. Lévesque in Quebec City. So we are working on it. We are doing our best, and one of the government's top priorities is to ensure that our forests, which are a national resource, will continue as such.

Madam Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me a chance to tell him that he will get some very satisfying answers within the next five years.

[English]

REAL WOMEN

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise in the House this evening because I was dissatisfied with the response I received from the minister responsible for the status of women on the issue of funding for REAL Women.

I asked her about the government's impending funding decision for that organization in light of a recent very offensive newsletter that had been issued by that group.

The Conservative government seems to have found ways to undermine the women's movement, and to undermine equality for women. One way it has done that was through having funded REAL Woman last year. Another way is that it has cut the funding for equality-seeking groups in our society. In fact, the decision to fund REAL Women last year came just before last year's budget decision to cut 15 per cent off the women's program.

I had to apply last year under the Access to Information Act about the government's decision to fund REAL Women. I could not get any information from the Secretary of State's office about that funding proposal.

This year another 15 per cent is gone from the women's program. This time the grassroots was attacked. Seventy-five women's centres across this country lost 100 per cent of their core funding.

This year REAL Women's funding application is still sitting somewhere in the Secretary of State's office. Does this mean that the diminishing amount of money that is there in women's programming will be going again to an anti-equality group?

In my question to the minister I spoke of the appalling REAL Women's newsletter. Some people have said it was hate literature. It spoke of the Montreal massacre and killer Marc Lépine. I will quote what was said in this newsletter:

> Who knows why he did it? The thought immediately occurred to me that he just might have been a man whose child had been aborted by a feminist and that had been enough to trigger a terrible response to the abuse of his childhood.

The Social Credit government in British Columbia, headed by Premier Vander Zalm, mailed out this newsletter, at taxpayers' expense. Even a few members of that government have tried, after the fact, to distance themselves from this organization.

Last weekend REAL Women had its national conference in British Columbia. They were given the opportunity to renounce the contents of that newsletter. But a resounding "no" came back from the audience there. At one point it was said at their conference that the sexual abuse kit that is used in our schools was nothing but licensed porno for five-year olds. When we know what a terrible problem child sexual abuse is in this country, that is the attitude that this organization takes.

Equality-seeking women's groups have been scrutinized and threatened if they are pro-choice or if they mention the word "lesbian". Yet REAL Women's newsletter talks about being "homo nauseated". It talks about Vancouver as "sodom north", and says that homosexual AIDS patients simply reap what they sow.

One of this group's main reasons for being—and it is part of its acronym—is that it is anti-choice on the matter of reproductive rights for women.

Groups that are primarily active around the pro-choice side of this issue are not funded by the government. REAL Women even went so far as to blame the Montreal massacre on some hypothetical feminist—again blaming the victim.

These attitudes should not be any real surprise to this government. REAL Women has spouted this kind of stuff before. They have spouted it for a long time.

• (1825)

They are opposed to women's inclusion in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. A much earlier document from this organization claimed a victory at the defeat of several female members of Parliament in the last election—female members of Parliament from different parties.

This group never did meet the equality criteria set out in the women's program funding. But the Secretary of State somehow justified his decision last year on that basis.

I was a guest on an open-line talk show in Vancouver on Monday and the topic was REAL Women and violence against women. At the end of the program the host said something about "the two extremes on this issue—REAL on one side and the feminist movement on the other side". But I said to him, and I say in this House, women working for women's equality are not extremists. The women's movement is simply asking for—demanding—economic and social justice for women. It is demanding true equality in our society for women.

When women, only a few decades ago, were fighting for the vote they were called all kinds of unsavoury names too. There was a movement of women against the suffragettes. There were women who did not want the vote and wanted to deprive other women of it too. There will always be a backlash against positive social change. The government is under no obligation to fund both the progressive and the regressive elements in our society.

In light of its own commitments to the international treaties it has signed, the government has an obligation to promote equality. That is what the women's program should do. That is why full funding for women's programs should be reinstated. Groups like REAL Women should never, never again be funded by any level of government.

I am very concerned about the disproportionate amount of influence that this organization appears to have, both within the federal level of government here and the provincial government of B.C. We know that they speak for very few people. People in Canada do not support those attitudes.

I ask again: Will the government guarantee that this anti-equality, anti-feminist, hate-mongering organization will never again receive government funding?

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, first I want to congratulate the hon. member for Westminster—Burnaby who examined this question and produced, I would say, a pretty fair analysis.

I may recall, and I think she will understand from my reply that we are also very concerned, the operating criteria of the Women's Program of the Department of the Secretary of State.

To be eligible, women's volunteer organizations must have as their principal goal to promote the equality of women in Canadian society.

These organizations must respond to a need in the community, approach issues that are eligible for financial assistance under the Women's Program, demonstrate their ability to plan projects and bring them to fruition, have a good financial management system, involve their members in developing policy and use funds only for non-partisan activities.

In accordance with these criteria, the Department of the Secretary of State has set three priorities: economic equality, social justice and access and participation.

Last year, REAL Women obtained funding under those criteria. Until we have seen, after one year, whether the program for which funding was requested was in fact carried out as described, we will not know whether the criteria were net. Officers at the department are now analyzing the application, and based on the criteria and on what happened last year, Madam Speaker, they will decide whether the application for funding meets those criteria.

I can assure the hon. member for New Westminster—Burnaby (Ms. Black) that I will personally see to it that these criteria are enforced, and that the analyses made by departmental staff are reliable, so that we can find out whether or not this group deserves to be subsidized.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion that the House do now adjourn is now deemed to have been adopted. The House therefore stands adjourned until 10 a.m. tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 4, 1990

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

• (1010)

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-53, an act to amend the Criminal Code (arson), as reported (with an amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: There is one motion on the notice paper offered in amendment to the report stage of Bill C-53, an act to amend the Criminal Code (arson), standing in the name of the hon. member for Scarborough—Rouge River.

[Translation]

The House will now proceed with motion numbered 1.

[English]

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River) moved:

That Bill C-53 be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 26 to 45 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"436. Every person who owns, in whole or in part, or controls property is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years where

(a) that person wilfully or recklessly disregards the life or safety of another person or the security of property by failing to comply with any law respecting the prevention of fires or explosions in the property; and

(b) the failure to comply with a law mentioned in paragraph (a) is a cause of a fire or an explosion in the property which causes bodily harm to another person or damage to property."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise at this time to speak to my amendment to Bill C-53, a bill providing for reform of the arson legislation.

Section 436 as it is proposed now in the government's Bill C-53 purports to create a new offence which has been generally called "arson by negligence" where fire results from a degree of negligence. The key words and thrust of the new section are that a person would be guilty of an offence under that section if the person is a cause of a fire—and that does not mean the cause but a cause, among others—and where the fire is the result of a marked departure from a standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would use.

The issue that that raises is this. What is a marked departure from that standard of care? Here we are forced to use some hypotheticals. It could be a careless or a stupid act like leaving an open can of gasoline next to a furnace burner in a basement, or it could simply be an omission.

Here I would use a hypothetical something like a senior citizen of advanced years living in his or her home who fails to correct substandard wiring in their home. That is assuming that the wiring as it exists now does not comply with existing municipal by-law standards.

The proposed Section 436 does not leave us without any help as to what a marked departure from that standard is.

Subsection (2) of the proposed section permits a court to infer a marked departure from a standard of care where there is a failure to comply with any law respecting the prevention of fires. In this case of a by-law governing an electrical wiring, I think I could reasonably infer that that was the purpose of such a by-law.

In this particular hypothetical we have a situation where this person, perhaps of advanced years, and perhaps not as mindful of things as he or she might have been in their youth, fails to comply with the municipal by-law, whether or not they knew it, because the section does not require the person who breaches the municipal by-law to know that they breached it. Nor does it require a conviction. Whether or not they knew they were in breach of the by-law, it permits a court to infer that there was a marked departure.

In that hypothetical we have created a situation where a person has become criminally liable, someone who did not intend to become criminally liable and who did not know that they were criminally liable.

In our criminal law we have certain safeguards which have been with us for years—almost for centuries, I could say. We go back to the Magna Carta for that purpose.

To be guilty of a criminal act, there must be an act or an omission of some sort, and there must be an element accompanying that which manifests an intention to do the act or to fail to act, in the case of an omission.

However, in this case we have a person who, in my view, never had the intention to be a criminal and did not know an offence was committed until afterward when the Crown Attorney becomes the lightning rod for all the anger and frustration that usually accompanies a tragic fire of this sort.

That is not how our criminal law is supposed to work. How can we deter citizens from committing offences if they do not know they are committing them as they go about their lives? In this case the person really would not know they had been guilty of an offence until afterward when a charge was laid and they were convicted.

There are three problems that have been cited in connection with this section dealing with arson by negligence. The first is that it creates a fuzzy standard, one that has not been used before. The standard of a marked departure from a standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would use is a standard that is used in the civil law, but not the criminal law.

Second, the section purports to impose what lawyers and law professors call an "objective standard" relative to the mental element or intention of the criminal offence I referred to earlier. The Supreme Court has divided on a couple of occasions on the issue of whether it will permit the criminal law to use an objective standard. There is a continuing sense that we must have a subjective standard, a subjective reference point when dealing with the intention of an alleged criminal.

Third, there is some consensus in some quarters that this provision as it is may bump up against and fail because of the Section 7 guarantees of fundamental justice in our Charter.

What this section really does is permit a Crown attorney to say to the court: "Your Honour, here are the facts. Here is the tragic result. You decide whether this person was a good guy or a bad guy, and if you want to convict him, go ahead". Meanwhile, this good guy or bad guy never knew that he or she was a good guy or a bad guy in the hypothetical I presented, and that is not right.

The amendment I propose targets those who advertently, wilfully and recklessly endanger life or safety by failing to comply with any law with respect to the prevention of fires or explosions.

The concept of criminal negligence which I would use is already incorporated in our Criminal Code. The provisions of wilfulness, recklessness and disregard for life are elements that deal with the intention or mental element I referred to earlier. The section is viable under the Charter. It has been tested and we currently use it, for example, in criminal negligence cases causing loss of life and in motor vehicle cases involving negligence.

If we pass the government's proposed Section 436, we leave open the possibility of a court challenge. The Department of Justice knows that it is breaking new ground with this section, new ground that presents risks to our civil liberties vis-à-vis the protections we have in our criminal law. If this section does not survive a court challenge, then we have succeeded in creating a new section of the Criminal Code that is just as clumsy and unworkable as those old outmoded clumsy sections we have been trying to replace through reform. That is the risk which I submit the government is taking at this time.

• (1020)

The Canadian Bar Association supports this amendment. In fact, it has drafted it. I will not take credit for its drafting. I am pleased to present this amendment to the House.

I challenge the government not to gamble with these uncertain standards and not to permit a court challenge dealing with validity involving the Criminal Code standards or Section 7 of the Charter.

I urge the government not to permit the Department of Justice to continue to live life in the fast lane like this and to support my amendment.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on this bill to amend the arson legislation. These measures will, as we know, result in tougher criminal sanctions for arson, particularly in cases resulting in bodily harm or in arson involving homes or other residences. Those tougher criminal sanctions are to be welcomed.

It is to be noted, too, that this is the first major change to the Criminal Code provisions on arson in this century since 1892. We are dealing with an area which we have not rushed into in the past, but it is an important area to which we should pay careful attention.

With regard to Section 436 and the amendment proposed by the member for Scarborough—Rouge River, we have some major concerns with the terminology used in the government's version of the section to which the hon. member has referred.

He quite rightly pointed out that a person could be charged with a criminal offence for not being the cause of a fire but for being a cause of a fire. It is not that I have so many concerns about that if one or a number of people are engaged in ensuring that arson takes place. The more important concern is with regard to the standard or to the test which will be applied as to whether or not a person will be found guilty of the offence.

At best, it is a nebulous charge. It may be, as has been pointed out, that it will be rendered unconstitutional.

I would like to read the proposed terminology in the government's bill. It states that a person would be liable "where, as a result of a marked departure from the standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would use to prevent fires or explosions, that person is a cause of a fire or explosion in that property that causes bodily harm to another person or damage to property".

We would, of course, always have some concerns and some uncertainties as to what is meant by a marked departure, although some statements by the Supreme Court of Canada certainly suggest that that is a reasonable guideline. I will come back to that.

There is clearly some uncertainty about what will be meant by "a marked departure". That would leave Canadians uncertain as to the behaviour expected of them, leading up to any potential criminal offence. Indeed, leading up to and after a case of arson, they would not know, nor would they be able to know, what standard of care was expected of them, what would be a marked departure from that standard of care and what would not be.

We also have difficult problems of predictability when we use a standard of care that is expected of a reasonably prudent person. It is, as has been pointed out, the standard used in assessing civil actions, for instance, whether or not in a motor vehicle accident somebody has acted in a way which would not meet the standard of care expected of a reasonably prudent driver of a motor vehicle.

We have not explored the opportunities for using those sorts of standards in the Criminal Code. I think it unwise to suggest to Canadians that they will be treated as criminals and, indeed, will be punished as criminals when the activity that they pursue is not deliberate activity but is activity which is negligent, and not of any particular level of negligence either. In the terminology of "marked departure" there is some lesser degree of negligence than, for example, there is with gross negligence.

It is not generally expected by Canadians that they will be treated as criminals unless they have the intention to be criminals. There are some exceptions, but I think in the case of arson, and in this case, we do not need to go as far as to make negligent Canadians criminals in this regard. That is not to say that we should not be tightening the rules with regard to arson. As I said, my party and I welcome that.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Scarborough—Rouge River is to make the provisions clearly more certain for those who might be involved, and also to ensure that those who are treated as criminals are people who have done something deliberately or sufficiently recklessly as to almost make it deliberate in the activity involved.

As he points out the test that he and the Canadian Bar Association are suggesting is that a person would be responsible for a criminal offence if that person wilfully or recklessly disregards the life or safety of another person or the security of property by failing to comply with any law respecting the prevention of fires or explosions in the property.

That would make a person who on purpose or recklessly disregards the fact that regulations might be in place, and does not find out because essentially he does not want to find out, responsible for a criminal offence. That test I think is a better one. It is a clearer one. It is one which will stand up against constitutional challenge, whereas I think there are some serious difficulties with regard to the government's test in Section 436. I do not think it would be wise to be courting a constitutional problem on this particular matter.

I make two points. First, the standard proposed by the government in Section 436 is one which flows out of a Supreme Court of Canada decision, but a decision which was really evenly divided on this particular point. What that does is put forward the possibility that with changes to the Supreme Court, which of course are presently under way, and certainly differences from the court in 1987, a different opinion might be voiced on the acceptability of the test proposed in Section 436. I think it would not be wise for the government to put forward a test which was not overwhelmingly adopted by the Supreme Court of Canada, but which was only adopted by some of the members of that court.

Second, with regard to the constitutionality, there are at least strong indications that this proposal in Section 436 would be rendered unconstitutional because of contravening Section 7 of the Charter. If that were the case, we would then be left with essentially an unworkable section, a section which does not serve either the government's purpose or any public purpose to control arson. Consequently, we would be worse off than we are now.

For those reasons I think there is real concern with the formulation of Section 436 as proposed by the government. I suggest that the amendment creates more certainty and will stand up in any challenge. Consequently, it is a better route to follow.

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this bill, Bill C–53, has received wide support.

• (1030)

[Translation]

The only provision on which there is a difference of opinion is that contained in the definition of negligent arson. The government accepted the suggestion made by the Canadian Bar Association concerning the area covered by this offence.

[English]

However, there still remains a difference of opinion as to which definition of negligence should be adopted.

The hon. member for Scarborough—Rouge River in his Notice of Motion has advanced the definition proposed by the Canadian Bar Association. The government, having been urged by a number of persons to retain an offence of arson by negligence, in this bill has favoured the test for negligence proposed by the Law Reform Commission of Canada in its report 31.

Although, in most cases the two tests would produce the same result, they would lead to a different result where, on the evidence, it is clear that a property owner or manager neglected to maintain his or her property and the neglect was a cause of a fire or explosion in that property which caused bodily harm to another or damaged a property.

Under the formulation of the hon. member for Scarborough—Rouge River, the issue before the court would be whether the owner or manager had been reckless in that he or she had been aware of the risk of fire or explosions. Such an owner could argue that he or she was never consciously aware of a risk of fire, but just neglected the premises. In effect, the owner would be permitted to turn a blind eye to the risk of fire, and if believed would be acquitted.

I could go further and say that the amendment as proposed by the hon. member for Scarborough—Rouge River requires, as a preliminary threshold for establishing an offence under this section, that a person has failed to comply with any law because wilful or reckless regard for the life or safety of another person is defined as failing to comply with any law respecting the prevention of fires or explosions in the property. There is an initial threshold that has to be overcome to establish that there is a law in place, whether that would be a provincial law or a municipal bylaw, that that law has been breached by the person in question and then criminal liability results from that.

I believe the formulation which the government favours is one that is a little broader and which takes into account the inherent nature of the behaviour of the person who is accused irrespective of whether that behaviour can be found to come within an existing legal framework; in other words, whether a law has been breached. The preliminary threshold of establishing the existence of a law and its breach prior to establishing the mens rea sufficient to convict under this section is not a barrier which is in the government's formulation.

I think it is very important because the whole notion of the law of negligence is that there are obligations and duties in society that may not be statutory but that are nonetheless obligations and duties that individuals can be bound by in their responsibility to their fellow man, and that is the duty of care as we discuss in the law of negligence.

Under the government's formulation, the issue before the court would be whether the accused's conduct constituted a marked departure from the standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would use. Under the government's formulation, the property owner or manager would not be allowed to turn a blind eye to the deterioration of the premises as a result of his or her neglect and would be convicted irrespective of whether a law relating to the premises had been breached.

As between the two tests, the government's formulation would place an unmistakable onus on those who own or operate multiple-unit dwellings, especially rooming houses, to not neglect their properties to the point that they become fire traps.

We have chosen to proceed with the government's formulation because we have an obligation to do all the law can to ensure the safety of those who live in these units, many of whom have no other place to go.

With respect to the comments of my colleague from Scarborough—Rouge River and further to what was indicated by the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing, on the terminology "marked departure", that test was taken from the judgment of Mr. Justice McIntyre, as he then was in the Supreme Court of Canada in its decision in the Tutton case. The marked departure will be a question of fact in every case. In the scenario described by my colleague from Scarborough—Rouge River, I believe marked departure is a high threshold which has to be established before liability can attach. The examples the hon. member used would not likely constitute marked departure.

I would argue that the government's formulation which is taken from the recommendation of the Law Reform Commission is better in that it reduces the two-stage threshold; the need to establish the existence of a law that has not been complied with before criminal liability can be found under this act, that criminal liability relates directly to the actual behaviour of the person who is accused and whether that behaviour is a marked departure from the standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would be found to be obliged to observe.

On that basis, I wish to indicate my support for the government's formulation of this clause in the bill. I intend to speak against the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Amendment (Mr. Lee) negatived.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre) moved that the bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre) moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Government Orders

BRITISH COLUMBIA COURTS AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-59, an act to amend various acts to give effect to the reconstitution of the courts in British Columbia, as reported (without amendment) from a Legislative Committee.

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that the bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam.

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I think both the Liberal member and myself rose to speak on the bill that we were just discussing. Could you clarify what happened? Have you moved on without giving us an opportunity to speak?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Bill C-59 has been concurred in, and now we are at third reading.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre) moved that the bill be read a third time and passed.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say I favour there being a tightening of legislation with regard to arson.

I feel somewhat disappointed that I did not have the opportunity to speak to the amendment. What we have had in this Chamber today is presentation on all sides regarding the amendment, and the main motion put forward by people with a legal background. One of the things I would like to discuss is this motion.

• (1040)

The difficulty I feel we have is in putting forward legislation that is not understandable by the average Canadian. It seems to me that as legislators we have been discussing putting forward legislation in this House that is understandable, that is not cloaked in legalese, not cloaked in the kind of language that creates, if you like, a new industry of interpretation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Bill C-53 which the hon. member is debating now has been adopted. I am afraid that what we are talking about now is C-59. We cannot go back to C-53. It has been adopted and carried.

I regret that the hon. member did not rise in order to speak on C-53. I cannot do anything unless members rise and say they want to speak. The procedure is the mover of the motion and usually somebody from the NDP and then the minister winds up. If the hon. member had risen I would have recognized her.

Now we are on C-59. If you wish to speak on this bill I will hear you. It has to do with the reconstitution of the courts of British Columbia.

The hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam.

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I had risen and that is why I asked for clarification. I would like at this time to move:

That this House do now adjourn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Negatived? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 252)

YEAS

Members

Black	Butland
Fisher	Fulton
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)—5

NAYS

Members

Atkinson	Campbell (South West Nova)
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)	Cole
Cooper	Domm
Epp	Finestone
Friesen	Gauthier
Greene	Harb
Hawkes	Horner
Lee	Littlechild
McKnight	Moore
Nicholson	Phinney
Pronovost	Redway
Robitaille	Rocheleau
Thacker	Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Volpe	Wenman—28

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Resuming debate on Bill C-59, the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, we are debating an act to reconstitute the courts in British Columbia.

This bill is not a controversial piece of legislation, but it is important to recognize that the business of the House does not work very effectively if members are not able to present their positions on bills like this. On the bill that was of some importance today, the bill dealing with arson, there were members who wanted to speak, but unfortunately they were not given the opportunity to do so. Two speakers stood but they were not recognized, and consequently things happened then which nobody particularly wanted to happen.

We are now dealing with legislation to merge the county courts in British Columbia with the Supreme Court, a move which has been taking place across the country. The opportunity is for courts to be more as one court, rather than a range of courts, still under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

The provinces are supportive of the measure, and it certainly seems desired by the province of British Columbia. Once we have dealt with Ontario, this would leave only the Nova Scotia court system with a divided trial court jurisdiction.

• (1050)

We are seeing movements across the country to bring federal courts together under one aegis, if you like. We have supported this merger and will continue to support it. It should result in a more effective court system across British Columbia and the other provinces where it has been adopted.

There are some matters with judges and the courts which we might want to refer to in dealing with this piece of legislation. We have, over the last while, seen comments made by judges on a range of activities which should give concern to the federal government. One matter in particular is giving concern to the members in the New Democratic Party, and that is the independence of the judiciary.

There is a case in Quebec of a family court judge speaking out against inadequate services for the protection of children. She now finds herself being accused of improper conduct for not following the normal procedures expected of judges. Surely, we do not expect our judges to close their minds to the things going on around them. We should expect them to take a leadership role in pointing out matters which they feel concerning our society, and in particular, those which they encounter as a result of the activities they pursue on a regular basis. If they do recognize that services are inadequate and they cannot do their job effectively because of, for example, inadequate social services, then it is important that they be able to speak out against them.

I think it is important for all of us to recognize and support judges who do speak out against injustices in our society. We know of other judges faced with that problem. A former leader in British Columbia, Mr. Justice Berger, was faced with some of those concerns as well. He felt that he was unable to speak out on important constitutional matters and found it no longer possible to stay on the bench as a result of those restrictions.

While discussing the proposals to put county courts and the Supreme Court of British Columbia under one organization, it is important to recognize that not all is well with the way in which our judges are treated and the way in which we, as a society, can make use of judges both on and off the bench.

We have concerns, as we have all heard, over the recent while of male judges in particular, not speaking in favourable terms towards women and indeed being insulting toward women from the bench. We know that that does not help the public view the courts with the appropriate level of respect that is needed in the circumstances.

We have concerns about the way in which the courts operate. We think it is important that the courts be streamlined so they will become more efficient and effective. We have to bear in mind that not everything that judges do is well regarded, especially when they attack and insult Canadians. We hope these concerns will be treated in the appropriate way. It is important that judges who do make attacks on women that have been the victims of various sorts of abuse, are chastised and not permitted to carry on in the way in which they have done in the past. It is important for all of us to speak out against that.

The NDP is in favour of this bill, and we are supporting the merger of the courts in British Columbia, the county courts with the Supreme Court.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C–59. I hope we have an opportunity to hear from the Minister of Justice on a couple of points that I am going to raise.

The concept of the merging of courts is something that has been going on for a long period of time, not just in Canada and British Columbia but in many areas of the world. This is in part because of the duplication of some services and the more appropriate delivery of services that one gets with a more streamlined system.

British Columbia is a case in point where we have the former Chief Justice of the British Columbia Supreme Court, now the Chief Justice of the British Columbia Court of Appeal, Mr. McEachern. At this time, rather than being seized with mostly Court of Appeal actions, Mr. Justice McEachern is seized with one of the most important matters ever to come before the Supreme Court of British Columbia, that is the Gitksan–Wet'Suwet'en trial that is presently in its final stages in Smithers, in northwestern British Columbia.

After many years of having worked in all levels of the courts in British Columbia as an officer of the court, in many cases that might go to the Supreme Court or to the Court of Appeal, they will be better dealt with by having, what might be described as the umbrella approach in relation to cases that are on appeal. Also, this happens where various kinds of injunctive actions are being sought, such as those that have been sought in relation to many First Nations cases and so on.

We on this side would like to hear from the Minister of Justice about that part of the bill which deals with money matters, and clause 25 is obviously the part that relates to salaries of judges. One of the great problems being faced in British Columbia is having access to funds to take various matters to the court, which is something that has been raised many times in this House.

This is not only in relation to charter and constitutional matters, but to one of the most serious problems that we have in British Columbia at the moment. It is one that is continuing to accelerate on both the legal and political scale, and that is in relation to matters facing First Nations. Since the Minister of Justice has chosen to use this B.C. court amendment to deal with money matters, we on this side, following Question Period, very much look forward to hearing from the minister.

We want to know why, if some money matters were chosen to be dealt with in relation to salaries, the same kind of opportunity was not chosen to introduce into the bill, a somewhat more compassionate and realistic reflection of the needs in British Columbia for access. They need access until this bill is passed by Governor in Council, for matters that either end up in the Supreme Court of British Columbia, such as the Gitksan–Wet'Suwet'en trial and others, or matters that end up at the B.C. Court of Appeal.

There are matters such as the Meares Island case and others, where there are groups whose rights are being abridged and violated. In a province like British Columbia there is a great need for access to funds. They need it not just for legal counsel but also to prepare cases that are becoming increasingly complex. In relation to recent rulings of the Supreme Court of Canada, we know of the need for small groups to have access to funds to protect their rights.

In a province like British Columbia, access to funds is needed so aboriginal peoples, in particular, can properly prepare themselves in relation to historic treaties and in relations with the provincial or federal legislatures. I look forward to hearing the Minister of Justice who, perhaps has plans to attach to this other financial proposals, of which I think funding access to the courts would be the most important.

At the beginning of the bill, it would be interesting to hear from the Minister of Justice—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 35, the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 31.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, the goods and services tax, Canada's answer to the European Community's value added tax, is an excellent target for the opposition to hone its expertise for scaring and misinforming Canadians, a talent they developed during the last election.

People are worried, but they are slowly becoming angry. They are no longer satisfied with the hollow opposition rhetoric and are demanding information. In my office, we have responded to hundreds and hundreds of requests for information about the goods and services tax.

I have received outright support and qualified acceptance for the GST and, of course, some people remain to be convinced. I am sure time will show Canadians that this tough political decision will create a fairer tax system and a stronger country. The Liberal members of the other place know this, which is why they have already begun to stall passage of the bill. There is more concern for the welfare of the Liberal party in the other place than there is for the welfare of Canadians.

* * *

[Translation]

LINGUISTIC MINORITIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, after two years of gradually losing his patience, the commissioner of Official Languages has repeated his threat to resign because of the government's failure to table its draft regulations arising from the Official Languages Act.

The Fédération des francophones hors Québec, the national organization which represents francophone minorities in Canada, has now withdrawn from consultations with Treasury Board.

Mr. Speaker, the FFHQ refuses to be a party to this government's manoeuvring to delay indefinitely the implementation of the Official Languages Act. The government's reluctance to implement a policy it has been bragging about for two years is both incomprehensible and unacceptable. The time for consultation is over. Language minorities want action. If the Prime Minister is at all serious about this matter, he will accept my invitation to appear before the committee on Official Languages and explain his government's inability to table in the House the regulations arising from this legislation.

* * *

[English]

MONEY LAUNDERING

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham—Whitchurch—Stouffville): Mr. Speaker, there is increased concern over the growth in drug trafficking in Canada and the laundering of illegal drug money into the global financial system.

Today, I want to commend Donald Fullerton, the head of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce for his "get tough" recommendation. Mr. Fullerton said: "Banks that knowingly launder money by electronic transactions should be barred from the system that makes those transactions possible".

Money laundering involves about $85 billion U.S. a year in Europe and North America, according to a task force report. "We need to put teeth into the codes of conduct governing our members", said Mr. Fullerton, "and we need the courage to be ruthless with those who break the rules".

I call upon this government to initiate the brutal action required.

* * *

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are well aware of the Prime Minister's fetish for Guccis and Perrier. Today, we read in La Presse newspaper that two food tasters accompanied him on his recent trip to the Atlantic provinces. This raises many interesting questions.

Are these the first food tasters to travel with him? If not, what happened to the previous ones? Have these jobs been given a high risk factor, given that the PM has broken all records for unpopularity?

We also read that the Tories are having a special caucus meeting this weekend. Rumours persist that two former caucus members from Alberta were recently spied in the cookbook section of Coles bookstore and could be masquerading as chefs at Mont Tremblant this weekend.

I would suggest to the PM that, in the event that the GST is on his political menu, perhaps he should pass on the beef cordon bleu and pears flambé this weekend, and opt instead for brown bag "baloney" sandwiches, a meat delicacy we know he must love because Canadians are constantly telling us he is full of it.

* * *

VIA RAIL

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, VIA Rail's 1989 annual report is out and it reveals a very different picture from that given by the Conservatives.

The Tories claimed that Canadians were giving up on the trains. In fact, ridership was up and trains were more full. The Tories claimed the revenue was down and costs were up. In fact, VIA was costing less and making more. The first six months of 1989 showed a 4 per cent increase over the same period of 1988. It was only after a 10 per cent fare increase was forced on VIA by the Conservatives that the corporation's progress faltered. The crippling of VIA by the Conservatives through arbitrary cuts, uncertainty and privatization of popular routes such as the Rocky Mountaineer reveal a group of politicians determined to destroy a transportation service popular and needed among Canadians.

More cuts are now proposed and the target is the remote lines which VIA operates as a mandatory part of the network. To those who understand the environmental and the economic value of passenger trains in Canada, these cuts reveal Conservative policy as dangerously ignorant and biased against the west, biased against rural Canada, and biased against common sense.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister yesterday brought good news to Atlantic Canada by announcing that the data processing centre that will administer the goods and services tax will be established in Summerside, Prince Edward Island.

This new centre will create 400 direct full and part-time jobs for the people of Summerside, in addition to 100 indirect jobs and is further evidence of this government's commitment to generate economic growth in the regions of the country.

As Premier Ghiz so aptly stated: "This announcement is a fulfilment of the Prime Minister's personal leadership and a symbol of the kind of reconciliation and fairness that Canadian federalism is all about. I applaud the Prime Minister's initiative on behalf of the people of Summerside and look forward to more good news for Atlantic Canada".

* * *

INTEREST RATES

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, the current government has systematically brought Canadian businessmen to their knees with its unrelenting policy of high interest rates. With the bank prime set in excess of 14.25 per cent, which means that many businesses pay 1 to 2 per cent higher than that, small businesses are now on the brink of financial disaster.

As well, it is throwing all of the government's claims of deficit reduction and on-track budgeting of federal finances out of reach. A 1 per cent increase in the central bank's interest rate hikes the deficit by $1.7 billion. How can their claims to being fiscally responsible be considered as credible? More appropriately, I would call those claims by the government incredible.

* * *

[Translation]

TREE AND FOREST WEEK

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to tree and forest week, from May 6 to May 12. This year's theme is: Our forests as a resource. The purpose of this theme is to make us think about the ways in which our forest resources affect our lives.

Each one of us must do his or her share to ensure that future generations will also have the privilege of living in a country blessed with the kind of forests we have today. Our forests are without a doubt our most important resource, and they have enabled Canada to create its own identity. For centuries, our forests have inspired and influenced our literature, music and art. Our increased environmental awareness will ensure that our forests will continue to inspire and influence future generations of Canadians.

The proclamation of Bill C–29 this year gave Forestry Canada a mandate to promote the sound use and management of our forest resources, in the economic, social and environmental interests of all Canadians, today and in the years to come.

* * *

[English]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Canadians are now witnessing the obvious signs of a threatened economy. Interest rates are at their highest level in eight years, bankruptcies are 30 per cent higher than they were at this time last year, and for the first time since the recession in 1982, our gross domestic product has dropped for two months in a row.

The government has told Canadians that it is maintaining its high interest rate policy to fight inflation, but indications show that this policy is not working. To add insult to injury, the implementation of the goods and services tax will add at least another 2 per cent to the inflation rate. Obviously, the goods and services tax will ensure that inflation and high interest rates will continue for at least another two or three years and Canadians will have to pay the price.

If this government is sincere in its wish to halt inflation and prevent real damage to our economy, it must put a moratorium on its plans to proceed with the goods and services tax.

* * *

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, those of us from Manitoba pricked up our ears at the news that Summerside, P.E.I., has been declared the future headquarters for the collection and administration of the goods and services tax. We congratulate Summerside, P.E.I. What a dubious honour.

Maybe now the people of Summerside will forgive the Prime Minister for closing down the Canadian Forces Base and bringing in the goods and services tax. Maybe they will do that, but I doubt it. They will still be out 1,300 jobs, and they will still have to pay the goods and services tax like the rest of Canadians.

Meanwhile, I can guarantee that the people of Manitoba are not going to forgive and forget. Our forces base at Portage La Prairie was closed last year and we are still waiting to see how the Conservatives are going to try and appease us. If Summerside, with an opposition member representing it, can get a GST headquarters, why has the government member for Portage—Interlake not been able to swing a deal for Portage? After all, he did not vote against the budget that closed the base, despite the fact that he told his constituents that he would.

• (1110)

Let me assure both the hon. member for Portage and the Prime Minister that the people of Manitoba have not forgotten. We are still watching and we are still waiting. We want to see what kind of national headquarters the Prime Minister is going to dream up for Portage La Prairie, Manitoba.

* * *

[Translation]

MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS SOCIETY OF CANADA

Mr. Jean–Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, May is the month when we focus special attention on multiple sclerosis, a disease of the central nervous system which affects about 50,000 Canadians.

Thanks to the initiative and constant efforts of thousands of volunteers and the work of dedicated staff workers, the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada was able to set a record for donations received last year. One particular event was very successful. I am referring to the first 150 kilometre bicycle tour which attracted 600 cyclists and raised $433,000.

The organization, with 160 local sections, has over the years provided information, offered services to people stricken by this disease and to their families, and created a research foundation whose goal is to discover the cause of the disease and how it affects the central nervous system.

Hats off to the Multiple Sclerosis Society for its great work!

* * *

[English]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, Canadians were once again treated to the icy hand of Tory manipulation yesterday as the Prime Minister promised a GST data processing centre in Summerside, P.E.I.

One year ago, the Tories took 1,300 jobs out of this community by summarily closing down a military air base, one that still had a legitimate and useful function. Now, in cynical response to overwhelming public condemnation in both P.E.I. and nationally, the government is offering up a poor alternative by engaging the residents in the processing of the most unpopular tax in recent history.

The GST is opposed by 80 per cent of all Canadians and must still be passed before this government will provide such a centre to Summerside. The implication is that the residents must swallow their principles and their pride and coerce Liberal members and Senators to engage them in passing this evil tax.

The Liberal Party had presented a viable self-financing alternative for peacekeeping for the area—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for St. Catharines.

* * *

MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS SOCIETY OF CANADA

Mr. Ken Atkinson (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, multiple sclerosis is the most common disease of the central nervous system which usually strikes young adults in the prime of their life.

To call attention to this disease and those who must live with it, the month of May has been designated multiple sclerosis month by the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada. It is devoted to the carnation fund raising and public education campaign and I therefore take this opportunity to recognize the work of the society's many volunteers.

Some volunteers provide direct services to patients and their families through 160 local chapters. Others assist in the campaign to raise much needed research funds. All contribute to making our communities compassionate and caring places to live.

Like all voluntary health organizations, the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada is relentless in pursuit of its goals to find the cause and cure of the disease and, in the meantime, to find even more effective ways to assist those who are affected directly.

I wish to express the gratitude of all Canadians to the members and volunteers of the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada.

* * *

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, once again the ruthlessness of this government has been revealed for all to see.

In a difficult political climate with regional and language tensions rising, the Conservative government has resorted to economic blackmail to force passage of the Meech Lake Accord. Today, the Newfoundland Minister of Social Services reports that the Minister of Employment and Immigration told him that federal help for Newfoundland's fisheries and immigration problems would be forthcoming, if they were more co-operative on the Meech Lake Accord.

This confirms the pattern of bullying by this government in an attempt to throw its weight around against all those who dare to defy its wishes. Surely the Constitution of Canada and the future prosperity and stability of our country are too important to warrant such strong-arm tactics.

I call on the Minister of Employment and Immigration to stand in her place at the first opportunity and clarify this accusation. Did she, on behalf of the federal government, issue such a threat, veiled or otherwise?

I urge the Government of Canada to maintain a reasonable and flexible process of negotiation with all provinces. Now is not the time to bring out knuckledusters.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Finance.

We know that the government's economic policies have been undermining consumer and business confidence in this country. We know that bankruptcies are up 29 per cent. We have had two consecutive months of negative economic growth, house sales are down, and today we learn that domestic car sales are down by 34 per cent.

The president of Ford Motor Company (Canada) said: "It seems that the Governor of the Bank of Canada is determined to achieve zero inflation, even if the attempt to do so triggers a recession and a sharp increase in unemployment".

What has become clear is that the biggest bankrupt in this country is the Minister of Finance whose policies are bankrupt.

When is the minister going to recognize that the government's policies are killing confidence, killing jobs and killing consumers and see the light?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I found the statistics that the hon. member quotes rather interesting. What he forgot to say about the auto industry, as a spokesman for the industry said: "The latest figures were bound to look bad in comparison with last April when car sales peaked after a long and steady climb out of the recession years of 1982 and 1983".

It is easy to compare the figures now with the figures of last April when car sales were at their absolute peak. The statistics that the hon. member presents, although being accurate, do not reflect very fairly on what is going on in the economy.

The hon. member knows full well that there are still signs of inflationary pressures in this country. Until those are brought under control, we must maintain the current high interest rates. The Minister of Finance has made it very clear that if we can wring inflation out of the economy, then interest rates will come down and will stay down. That is the goal of this government and we are going to succeed.

[Translation]

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, my second question is directed to the same minister. In his budget, the minister projected interest rates of up to 11.1 per cent for 1990.

Since interest rates are now over 13 per cent 13.8 per cent today and a 1 per cent increase in the interest rate adds another $1.75 billion to the deficit, what measures does the minister intend to take to meet this year's objective with respect to the deficit?

[English]

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, we are now just one month into the fiscal year. Those interest rates are the average for the entire year. We are one month into the fiscal year, so it is a little early to be adjusting anything at this particular time.

The Minister of Finance explained very clearly in the House the other day that there is a watching brief that goes on all the time and that the government can take different directions, if it is found necessary. It is far too early at this point in time to be making unnecessary adjustments.

We are attempting to get interest rates down on a permanent basis, so we do not have what we had in 1982 and 1983 where families were just walking away from homes because they had to take a 12 per cent mortgage rate under the old system and refinance at 24 per cent, which amounted to 10 per cent more than they were paying before. We do not want that to happen this time, that is why we are taking this action.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, the incompetence of this government is staggering. The minister does not even know that his interest rate projections in the budget are on a calendar year basis. We are in the fifth month of a year in which an 11.1 per cent rate of interest is projected.

Now, is the minister going to stand up in his place and promise the Canadian people that interest rates for the balance of calendar year 1990 are going to average 8.5 per cent, because that is what his budget is saying.

Canadians all over Canada are having to redo their budgets because of the policies of this government. Maybe it is time they redid their budget.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Well, I am not sure if there was a question there or not, but a sign of outrage coming from that particular party after what they put this country through in 1981 and 1982 rings hollow.

* * *

• (1120)

GUN CONTROL

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice and it relates to proposals to amend the Criminal Code relative to firearm legislation.

Press reports today indicate that the focus of the government's proposed reform will be on the size of the bullet or magazine clip.

Given that we are dealing with an onslaught of military-style automatics and semi-automatics with immense killing power, will the minister not concede that simply dealing with the size of the gun clip is a flimsy and cosmetic substitute for real reform that Canadians will feel comfortable with?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable that the opposition relies for their research on newspaper reports because they are not the most helpful sources of information.

The recent newspaper articles were interesting in their imagination, because I made it clear that there were a number of issues that the government was looking at, but at no time did I state what would be in the proposal before the House because the legislation has not been deposited before the House, nor is there a firm proposal on it.

What I said to the reporter from the Montreal Gazette, whose article was picked up in the Ottawa Citizen, was that that was one of a number of areas that we were looking at. I am looking forward, before the House rises in this session, to depositing a more comprehensive approach in legislation before this House.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could deal with the gun clip issue then. One of the difficulties faced by Canadians in improving gun control is the ease with which semi-automatics can be converted to fully automatic weapons. In fact, there are situations where guns manufactured as automatics are intended to be modified to semi-automatic and then back to automatic by the owner.

If the minister is going to propose restricting the size of a gun clip as one of her answers to gun control, will she not admit that it is even easier for an irresponsible gun owner to throw away a small gun clip and replace it with a larger gun clip which gunsmiths will undoubtedly make available to them?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, that may or may not be the case, but I am not sure that the ease with which people violate the law is necessarily a reason not to have particular laws. I hope the hon. member will give due consideration to the package which is deposited in the House on this issue when it is done.

* * *

WOMEN'S CENTRES

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Supreme Court of Canada recognized that the law and our society have discriminated against battered women and that attitudes about violence against women must change.

At a time when the courts and our society are realizing the importance of pro-active measures to protect battered women, this government is cutting back on services to women.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister use the occasion of this landmark Supreme Court decision to restore full funding to the women's centres and the women's organizations that have been cut back in the last two budgets?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in applauding the Supreme Court decision in the Lavallée case. I think it will be a landmark in the recognition of battered women.

I am also pleased to say that my colleague, the Secretary of State, and myself have met with representatives of women's centres over the past six weeks. I have visited a number of centres and have taken back those concerns to my cabinet colleagues.

Recognizing the important role that those centres play in assisting women to access federal programs, I and my colleague, the Secretary of State, will be announcing today that transitional funding will be provided for the coming year for the 74 women's centres affected. Where provincial governments are prepared to enter into agreements, we will extend that funding for a second year.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised and I am pleased that the government has recognized, finally, the importance of women's centres.

I did not hear the Minister responsible for the Status of Women indicate that core funding was going to be reinstituted. I did not hear the minister say anything about the organizations that have been cut back. The magazine Women's Health Sharing lost all its funding and other organizations lost all their funding.

Is the Minister responsible for the Status of Women indicating that all of the funding that has been cut back for the last two budgets has been reinstituted? Is that core funding, or is it project funding?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise my colleague that the funding that will be provided for the women's centres, based on last year's rate, will provide operational funding. It will not come from the Women's Program, but instead will be found out of other existing bases of government departments.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): I would like to hear that this is new money and not coming from another area of Secretary of State where other people will be losing. I am sorry that the Minister responsible for the Status of Women has not been able to reinstate the funding for the past two years.

The Supreme Court has indicated what a serious problem this is. The government's own documents indicate what a severe problem this is. Will you please guarantee that you will follow the funding proposals submitted to you by the women's organizations and reinstitute full funding to address these dreadful problems in our society?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should not be surprised by the response of my colleague. I am sure that she would want to join me in congratulating my colleagues who have taken this issue so seriously.

Recognizing the important role that women's centres play in this country, and many of my colleagues from Newfoundland and Nova Scotia have been involved, we have agreed that we will provide that funding to the women's centres so they can continue.

We will enter into a process of reviewing the funding, along with our provincial colleagues and with representatives of women's centres to ensure that the services women's centres provide can be maintained on an ongoing basis.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and it concerns the Mohawk community of Akwesasne.

Now that a semblance of peace, at least, has been achieved at Akwesasne, some of the evacuees are proposing to return home. As a matter of fact, some of them have already returned.

Can the Minister tell this House if there will be financial assistance for the economy of Akwesasne, primarily, and also more urgently for the rebuilding of destroyed homes and other property as a result of the violence of recent days?

