Would fain go through thee.

An offspring of the bad dam of Mill River.
But no.

'Oh, never mind about that, General Toombs,' answered Grant, 'sit down. I am glad to see you at last, for I hunted very unangeessfully for you during the war.' It appears that Dr. Sangster's marriage was a most unhappy one. His wife liked the society of other men, better than that of her husband. The result was that by mutual consent a divorce was had. Not caring to pass through the ordeal of having this terrible case decided in the Canadian Parliament—which is our only divorce court—the parties went to Illinois, and were separated by the courts of that State. In Jan. 1871 the divorced wife married again, and in the same month Dr. Sangster married a Miss McCausland of Toronto—a former pupil of his—both marriages taking place in the States. Day after day the Globe has followed up its victim, publishing the most minute details, and painting the doctor's conduct in the blackest colors. The result has been to create a wide-spread sympathy for him, and if not elected, he will receive a very large vote from the teachers. His opponent is the Angio-American—Canadian—Republican—Imperial any—thing-you-please Goldwin Smith. As no one happens to know his private life, of course, he will escape the terrible sconrging which Dr. Sangster is receiving at the hardened hands of the merciless Globe. Such is life.
