Poetry.

HEAVIER THE CROSS.

Heavier the cross, the nearer heaven;
No cross without, no God within,
Death, judgment, from the heart are driven
Amid the world's false glare and din.
O happy he with all his loss,
Whom God hath set beneath the cross.

Heavier the cross, the better Christian;
This is the touchstone God applies.
How many a garden would be wasting,
Unwet by showers from weeping eyes
The gold by fire is purified;
The Christian is by trouble tried.

Heavier the cross, the stronger faith,
The loaded palm strikes deeper root,
The vine-juice sweeter is with
When men have pressed the clustered fruit;
And courage grows where dangers come,
Like pearls beneath the salt sea foam.

Heavier the cross, the heartier prayer;
The bruised heels more fragrant are,
If sky and wind were always fair,
The sailor would not watch the star;
And David's Psalms had ne'er been sung
If grief his heart had never wrung.

Heavier the cross, the more aspiring;
From vales we climb to mountain crest;
The pilgrim of the desert tiring,
Longs for the Canaan of his rest.
The dove has here no rest in sight,
And to the ark she wings her flight.

Heavier the cross, the easier dying,
Death is a friendlier face to see;
To life's decay one bids defy,
From life's distress one then is free,
The cross sublimely lifts our faith
To him who triumphed over death.

Thou Crucified! the cross I carry,
The longer, may it dearer be;
And let I faint while here I tarry,
Implant thou such a heart in me;
That faith, hope, love, may flourish there;
Till for the cross my crown I wear.

Interesting Tale.

THE ASSASSIN.

A Tale in Five Chapters.

[CONCLUDED.]

CHAPTER III.

Perhaps, said Madame de Morency, with a charming grace, M. Chambel would prefer to meet the Abbe at our house, than to call upon him in a formal manner. We shall have a few friends this evening, and amongst them will be the Abbe; if M. Chambel would do us the honor to favor us with his company, he can meet M. Norton as it were accidentally.

And the honor will be the greater, added M. de Morency, if M. Chambel will undertake to bring Madame Chambel with him.

Pierre was radiant with joy as he accepted these invitations; and he returned home in a humor which, by the frankness of its delight, reassured Laura.

That evening the families of Chambel and Morency became acquainted with each other, and Laura and Madame Morency soon grew intimate; and Pierre was presented to M. Norton. These two gentlemen conversed together for a considerable time; and at the end of their discourse, the Abbe said, then I may understand, M. Chambel, that you accept my proposal, and will become the editor of the literary department of my journal, with a salary of ten thousand francs a year.

The young poet assented; and thus the objects of the Abbe Norton were accomplished.

The two drawing-rooms on the first floor opened into each other by means of large folding doors, which were thrown back on this occasion. Pierre was sitting in the back room, talking to Madame Morency; Laura was in another part of the same room, conversing with some ladies. The remainder of the guests were also dispersed in groups about the two rooms. Suddenly a servant entered the front drawing-room and announced the Abbe Fortin.

M. Norton hastily approached Madame de Morency, and said, The Abbe Fortin is just come up from the country, and had occasion to call upon me on particular business; I took the liberty of inviting him hither this evening.

The friends of M. Norton are also our friends, said Madame de Morency; and the Abbe hastened to receive M. Fortin, who now entered the room.

The Abbe Fortin was a venerable man, of advanced age, and with a benign though firm expression of countenance. His demeanor was imposing, his address affable, and his voice mild and agreeable. He was attired in plain black, and seemed to be unassuming and even retiring, although his appearance in reality was full of dignity.

The moment this priest entered the room a sort of stifled cry escaped the lips of Pierre Chambel; and he precipitately left the apartment by a side door communication with the passage. For some minutes his absence was not perceived, the entrance of the Abbe Fortin and the ceremonies of introduction having naturally attracted attention. But after a short interval Madame de Morency looked around in vain for her handsome companion, and Laura's eyes equally fruitlessly sought her husband amidst the gay throng.

Where is M. Chambel? asked Madame de Morency.

I am at a loss to conceive, replied Laura, feeling alarmed.

Half an hour passed away, and still he did not return. Madame Chambel hastened home to ascertain if he was unwell, and had been compelled to leave the party abruptly.

She found Chambel in his study—pale, haggard and terrified. He was pacing the room with rapid steps in an agitated manner—as if he were laboring under violent emotions.

Pierre, what in the name of heaven is the matter? demanded his wife, hastening towards him. Nothing—nothing—a sudden indisposition—it is nearly over.

Illness does not prolong such effects as this. You are alarmed—you are shocked! Tell me what has happened!

Nothing, I repeat—nothing, answered Chambel, endeavoring by a desperate effort to recover an air of composure.

The wife was compelled to be satisfied with this reply; but she could not avoid entertaining a suspicion that her husband had concealed from her the true cause of his emotions—for he had appeared to be suffering rather from mental than physical anguish.

On the following morning Chambel proceeded to the office of the journal with which he now functioned. The Abbe Norton was already there.

You disappeared most strangely last night, M. Chambel, said the Abbe, with a smile.

A sudden indisposition—an acute pain—without raising his eyes to the young man; then, after a moment, he observed, Had you remained, you would have enjoyed the conversation of a very intelligent man—the Abbe Fortin.

Ah, the Abbe Fortin! said Chambel. Yes; do you know him? He resides in the country; and he returns home this evening.

Ah, indeed, said Chambel. I suppose he travels by diligence?

What a strange question! exclaimed the Abbe, bursting out into a hearty laugh. No; since you are so curious to ascertain that point, I can inform you that the Abbe Fortin will travel by post—that he will leave Paris at eight this evening, and that he proceeds by the Faubourg Montmartre towards St. Dennis.

Chambel made no reply, but seated himself at the table and turned over a file of papers.

For a few moments the Abbe Norton regarded him in silence; then, with a smile, he said, Really, M. Chambel, one would think from your manner that you had lost your heart last evening; and that your thoughts were playing the unfaithful towards Madame Chambel. But enough of pleasant—there are these books to review; you can let me have the articles this evening.

Chambel rose, received his books, and took his departure.

Ah, Madame de Morency—Madame de Morency, said the Abbe Norton aloud, as soon as he was alone, how many more victims will you add to the list of those who have already been dragged in triumph after your chariot?

Meantime Chambel proceeded homewards; and on his arrival at his own abode he hastened to his study. There he sat down to write the reviews required; but the judge of the difficulty which he experienced in composing them, and even in settling his mind to the subject, it was to be presumed that deep emotions agitated him within.

The evening came; Chambel despatched his manuscripts to the office of the journal, and then sat down to dinner with his wife. He endeavored to appear more gay and in better spirits than usual; but the keen eye of woman penetrated through his flimsy disguise, assumed to conceal a self-distrust of mind. She did not, however, appear to suspect him; but endeavored to sustain the gay tone which he had given to the conversation, to the utmost of her power.

At seven o'clock Chambel rose from the table, and observed that he was obliged to go out for a few hours upon business connected with the journal.

You need not sit up for me, Laura, he said to his wife, as it is possible I may not return till a late hour.

You are going to the office of the journal? remarked his wife, interrogatively.

Yes, certainly, replied Pierre. You need not therefore, alarm yourself, he added, with a smile. And having embraced his wife affectionately, he hurried from the door.

But before he left the house, he proceeded to his study, and secreted a pair of pistols and a dagger about his person.

About an hour after his departure, a letter addressed to him, and marked 'Private' in the corner, was left at the house. The hand was neat, but somewhat formal, as if it were that of a woman endeavoring to imitate the writing of a man.

Laura hesitated for one moment whether she should open it—there was a suspicion in her mind which required elucidation; but she triumphed over the desire to violate her husband's correspondence; and accordingly despatched the letter to the office of the Abbe Norton's journal.

In half an hour the servant came back, and returned the letter to Madame Chambel, saying, M. Chambel has not been at the office this evening, neither is he expected there.

The domestic withdrew; and Laura, throwing herself back in the chair, burst into a flood of tears, exclaiming, He is deceiving me! he loves me no longer!

CHAPTER IV.

THE RECOGNITION.

It was not until six o'clock in the morning that Pierre Chambel returned home. He was then ghastly pale, disordered in attire, and bewildered. His wife had been sitting up for him. She was alarmed at his appearance; but he comforted her, or endeavored to do so, by a variety of frivolous excuses.

And you have been at the office of the journal? said Laura, surveying him attentively.

Certainly! Where else could I have been? And yet when I forwarded this letter to you last evening, the servant returned with the information that you had not been to the office, neither were you expected.

Ah! a letter! said Chambel, without noticing the other portion of his wife's observations; and, taking the document in his hands, he tore it open and read it hastily. Oh, it is nothing; merely an invitation to dinner from a friend, he exclaimed, crushing it in his hand, and throwing it in the fire.

Then, being anxious to avoid any further explanation as to questions from his wife, he hurried from the room. The moment the door closed behind him, Laura rushed to the grate, and drew the only half-consumed bit of still burning paper from the fire. The bottom portion of the written page was still left entire. Laura cast her eyes upon it, and read the following words:

...and if my proof had been not deceived me—if your looks and mute signs of months past, and your words of to-night, have not misled me—oh! then I shall be happy in your love; and the world will contain no being more truly joyous than

Your ever sincere and devoted
EMILIE DE MORENCY.

Emilie de Morency! ejaculated Laura, consigning the remainder of the letter to the flames in a paroxysm of rage; oh, now all my worst fears are confirmed; my husband no longer loves me—he loves another!—and the unhappy lady covered her face with her hands, while her tears and sobs gave evidence of the powerful emotions that filled her breast.

Meantime Pierre Chambel had retired to his couch; and though his mind was also a prey to the most painful reflections, he sank into slumber through sheer exhaustion.

Two hours passed away, and at the expiration of that time, a messenger arrived from the Abbe Norton, requesting that M. Chambel would immediately repair to the office of the journal.

Laura hastened to her husband's room, and was hesitating whether she should awake him, when he started up from his sleep uttering an ejaculation of horror.

Heavens! Pierre, exclaimed Laura; what means this mental agony? I know—I feel convinced that you are laboring under some misfortune which you conceal from me?

No, dearest, he said, assuming a sudden air of composure; it was a dream a fearful dream, nothing more.

God grant that it may be so! said Laura; and she then delivered the Abbe Norton's message.

Chambel hastily dressed himself and repaired to this office, where he found the Abbe and M. de Morency.

My dear sir, said M. Norton, we have sent for you on a most important matter. The truth is that the Abbe Fortin, whom you saw the night before last, is one of the richest members of the Society of Jesus—that society whose interest we have the honor to support by means of our journal. The consequence is that the Abbe has many enemies; and we have every reason to believe that those enemies are not inactive. In a word, the Abbe was attacked in his carriage, on the northern road, last night, by an individual wearing a black mask and had it not been for the courage of the postillion, at whom the desperado vainly discharged a pistol—

At that moment the door opened, and M. de Morency exclaimed, Here comes M. Fortin to tell his own tale; so that M. Chambel may draw it up with all its details for our journal.

But an extraordinary scene then took place. The Abbe Fortin started when he beheld Chambel; and the young man uttered an ejaculation of horror as his eyes fell on the countenance of the Jesuit.

Miscreant! cried the Abbe Fortin, rushing forward and seizing Chambel by the collar! Justice will at length have its due.

What do you mean? exclaimed the Abbe Norton; this gentleman is one of the editors of my journal.

He is the wretch who assassinated my friend Durandal, exclaimed the Abbe Fortin. Call the gendarmes!

Mercy, mercy! ejaculated Chambel; do not ruin me—do not expose me—do not hand me over to the executioner! Pity for my poor wife, if not for me!

Pity, vile wretch! said the ecclesiastic; had you any pity for Jacques Durandal?

And the Abbe rang the bell violently.—The summons was immediately answered by a domestic.

Procure the attendance of a guard to arrest a murderer, said the Abbe Fortin, while the Abbe Norton and M. de Morency exchanged looks of the deepest horror and dismay.

The command was obeyed; and in a few minutes Pierre Chambel was in the custody of the officers.

CHAPTER V.
THE CATASTROPHE.

Six weeks after the events which are detailed in the preceding chapter, the following scene took place at the residence of the Chambels:

Laura was lying upon her deathbed; and by the side of that couch sat the Abbe Norton and Madame de Morency.

My dear madame, said the Abbe, console yourself. M. Fortin is exercising all his influence—and it is great—to obtain a commutation of the fearful sentence; but I dare not tell you to hope. The deed for which M. Chambel is condemned—coupled with the murder—traced upon the Abbe—that attack was so singularly proved to have been committed by your unhappy husband—

Alas! I know that there is no hope, murmured Laura faintly. But let me exert myself to speak the few words which I desire you, Madame de Morency to hear—and to hear which I requested you this morning to come hither.

Shall I retire? demanded the Abbe Norton.

No, sir, exclaimed Laura; you are a friend of Madame de Morency and her husband, and it will be as well for you to hear what I have now to say. Madame, she continued, turning towards the lady who sat by her bed-side, you love my husband! Nay, deny it not, I have positive proof that you, the woman of mature age, dared address a confession of tenderness to my husband, a young man whose passions unfortunately have not been curbed by the experience of years.

Ah! exclaimed the lady, take care of what you say! Why assail my character at a moment when—

When I am to appear before my Judge!—aloud Laura, solemnly; and therefore is my assertion more worthy of belief. Yes, madame, I read a portion of your letter—the one which you addressed to the unfortunate young man who owed so deep a debt of gratitude, if not of love, to me! You should know that I sacrificed everything for that young man, and that my affection for him led to the fatal crime for which he is about to suffer! He was obscure—and I raised him up; he was poor, and I made him comparatively wealthy; he had talent, and I encouraged him to cultivate it! He had no place, no rank, no name in society, until I gave him all! An orphan—raised in charity—he owed everything to me! Ah! madame, it was cutting to my soul to see him inveigled into your meshes! You weep, madame, but you would appreciate all my feelings had you seen that young man as I first saw him—in an obscure state—dwelling in a miserable hut on Vans-la-pavee Common—

Vans la pavee Common! ejaculated Madame de Morency, with horror depicted on her countenance.

Vans la pavee Common! proceeded Laura, surprised at this interruption; and that hut was the residence of him who is now my husband!

And the names of these peasants who brought him up? Cried Madame de Morency with singular wildness of manner,—speak!

Lemoine! answered Laura.

And the christian name of your husband? Oh! we disguised our real names when we came to live in Paris, said Laura. My husband was known in his childhood as Auguste.

Heavens, it is the same! cried

Madame de Morency. Then turning to the Abbe Norton, she said in a hoarse and hollow tone, He whom we have known as Pierre Chambel is our son—our child—the fruit of our love in my early youth! Heaven have mercy upon me!

Our son! What mean you, wretched woman, man cried the Abbe. Was the story that you told me of his death, ere I left the army and entered the church—

That story was false, I entrusted the innocent little being to those peasants, and promised to provide for its maintenance. But I left the neighborhood with my family, as you well know, and—

My husband your son, cried Laura. Oh, madame, now all earthly influence must be used to save him! Tell me, madame—tell me—you will do all you can to save your son?

I will, I will Laura, said Madame de Morency, sobbing violently; then, turning towards the Abbe Norton, she said, You possess the power to save him; the Archbishop of Paris is your patron—you have only to ask, and he will accede. His influence with the Court can secure the royal mercy. Go—lose not a moment!

Yes, cried the Abbe, I will save my son! And the priest rushed from the room in a state of mind more readily imagined than described.

Pierre Chambel's life was saved, but upon condition that he should remain for a period of ten years in a gloomy prison.

On the same day that this commutation of his original sentence was made known to the heart broken wife, the hand of death closed her eyes forever. But she died with a smile upon her lips; for she reflected that the unhappy young man had now ample time for repentance; and that in another clime, at the expiration of his term of imprisonment, he might yet atone for the errors and crimes of his earlier days.

This hope has been fulfilled; but it was only when Madame de Morency was upon her death bed seven years ago, that Pierre Chambel became acquainted with the names of the authors of his being.

A young lady said to her beau, after fifteen years' courtship: "Charles, I am going out of town to-morrow."

"Where?"

"I don't know."

"When are you coming back?"

"I am going to look for something which you have not, never had, and yet can give me without loss to yourself."

"You are welcome to it, I am sure. But what is it?"

"A husband."

"Why, you might have had that fifteen years ago, if you had only said the word; but I was afraid to ask you the question."

A Country Girl once went to the city to pay a visit to one of her old and best friends. This friend was married to a rich city merchant, and was a leader of fashion. In city etiquette, of course, the visitor was venal, and made numerous mistakes. Her friends wished to initiate her fully into the "mysteries," and as they were going to a large ball, gave her the following instructions—viz.: Eat only one small cake and one saucer of ice cream, and when your attendant presses you to take more, answer that you have mistaken a sufficiency, and more would be a superfluity."

Things went on smoothly until her attendant asked her to partake of more refreshments, when, to the horror of her friend and the amusement of the company, she answered in a loud voice: "I have evaporated insufficiently; any more would go flippity-flippity."

"Women," says Charlotte Bronte, "are supposed to be very calm, generally, but they feel as men feel; they need exercise for the faculties, and a field for their efforts, as much as their brothers do, and it is narrow-minded in their more privileged fellow-creatures to say that they ought to confine themselves to making puddings and knitting stocks, to playing on the piano and embroidering bags."

AN ANCIENT CEMETERY.—In the village of Idalion, in Cyprus, the cemetery of a former town has been discovered. Some excavations have brought to light several tombs in perfect preservation, from which have been taken a large quantity of precious stones, jewels, coins and vessels of gold and silver.

Employment so certainly produces cheerfulness," says Bishop Hall, "that I have known a man come home in high spirits from a funeral, because he had the management of it."

A Western mother is said to have thus maternally addressed her eldest jewel: "My daughter, you are now fifteen years of age, engaged to be married, and without a freckle on your face. I have done my duty."

The Free Press says Mr. Macgregor, Lieut. Governor of British Columbia, intends leaving that country about 20th or 25th July.

From the fact that no Canadian has as yet been named to succeed him under the new order of things which commences on the 20th proximo, it is altogether probable that the eldest member of Legislative Council of British Columbia will be called upon to act as Administrator of the Government for some time after Union takes place.

The Royal Commission of Earl Macgregor provides for this taking place in case he leaves the Colony before a successor arrives.

When first Canadian Governor will be appointed is not yet determined.

Now that the Treaty has been ratified in England, on receipt of formal news from Earl de Grey, Sir John A. Macdonald will be free to act and speak as he pleases, and will visit Toronto next week to explain his position.

French Annexation—what Canada thinks of it.

The following article has the true ring of pure patriotic feeling, and expresses the sentiments of the people of the Dominion:

From the Toronto Telegraph.

Some of the American journals are falling loudly over the Clat Unioiste Canadian, now in session in the Union Hall, New York. The object of the society is, of course, the annexation of Canada to the United States, and to unite the French Canadians in the cause. Canada has a terrible fascination for covetous although the people of the Dominion, daisy tell them by words, and proclaim to them by actions that annexation stinks in their nostrils, they cannot dislodge their minds of the erroneous impression that we are hankering for admission into the Union, and that we would go down on our marrow bones to be covered by the stars and stripes. Who and what are the members of the Unioiste Canadian we neither know nor care; but we do know, if they say they represent the views of this country—that they are liars and that—if they claim that we think as they do—the truth is not so. The manner in which the Treaty of Washington was received by a large portion of the press of this country—might have taught our too sanguine cousins, that we do not envy their lot nor admire their constitution to distraction. They have some advantages which we do not possess, and vice versa; but we think that the balance of advantages are in our favor, and that we can pass through this life about as comfortably, and as prosperously, and as pleasantly as any other people in the world. We suspect that the organizers of the Unioiste Canadian are vent more upon living off the credulity of our cousins than on the annexation of Canada. If they are Canadian and not Bovey French, they must be well aware that the Dominion is loyal to the Empire, true to the Queen, and perfectly satisfied with the measure of pres-perity meted out to it. The trade returns bear convincing testimony to the fact that if our cousins are able to live without us, we are just as competent to live without them; and the census will testify that the Dominion is recognized among the nations of the earth as a pleasant place, where good homes are had for the asking, and where strangers are welcomed, taken in and hospitably done for. We are not bowed down with taxation; we are not surfeited with immorality and corruption; we have no Southern States to keep us in continual fear, nor hostile Indians to keep us in perpetual war. Order and authority are respected among us; we work and grow rich, and progress without "blowing;" and we have few vexing questions to mar our contentment. For these reasons we prefer to be Canadians rather than citizens of the United States—to live as we are, rather than to amalgamate with any nation under the sun.

The Standard.

SAINT ANDREWS, JULY 5, 1871.

THE WASHINGTON TREATY still engages the serious attention of journalists in Great Britain, the United States and the Dominion. It is strongly hinted that the British Government will use its influence with the Dominion Ministry, to obtain its consent and that of Parliament to the provisions with reference to the Fisheries. Well, it may or may not attempt this semi-coercion, but the Dominion Government have expressed their disapproval of the Fishery Sections; and we believe, that unless the United States offers better terms, or in other words, renews the Reciprocity Treaty, the Dominion authorities will respectfully but firmly decline to pass laws, to render the Treaty operative.

The High Joint Commission members, in Parliament may appeal to the Dominion to pass laws to make the Fishery portion of the Treaty, effective—assurances may be given to the Federal Secretary of State, that the American fishermen will enjoy during the present year all the privileges of our own fishermen, and Imperial Despatches may be written with a view to urge the Dominion Government's consent, but we still believe that the Ministry will not yield. The British war vessels may be removed and the Dominion cruisers ordered to remain passive—but the Imperial Government has a dear bought experience with reference to their American Colonists, and it would be wisdom to profit by it. A more loyal and independent people than those of the Dominion do not exist; they are the best judges of their own interests, and it would be folly to attempt to coerce them into measures which they believe would be injurious to their best interests.

The following intimation of a painful occurrence, is copied from the "Globe" of Monday last, and confirms the telegram received by us. It is scarcely necessary to add, that Mr. Smith is a younger brother of the Editor of this paper.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—On Saturday evening, Mr. Geo. H. Smith, after retiring to his room in his boarding house on Hornfield Street, went to bed, leaving the lamp burning on the window sill, while he read himself to sleep. By some means the lamp was upset and the room immediately caught fire. In his attempts to put out the flames Mr. Smith's night shirt caught fire, and when assistance arrived, he was very badly burned on the back and arms and a portion of his breast. In order to have constant attendance he was removed to the Public Hospital. This morning he is not considered out of danger, although it is hoped that he may survive his injuries.

DOMINION DAY.—A salute was fired by the Battery on Saturday last, and flags floated from several buildings. A large number of persons went to Woodstock by the Excursion Train on the N. B. & C. Railway, and returned about eleven o'clock, pleased with their trip.

St. John papers state that the Rev. Geo. J. Caie, has been the recipient of a purse of one hundred sovereigns, by his congregation, as a token of their respect and appreciation of his pastoral labors. They also state that the Rev. gentleman leaves to-day for Great Britain via New York, to be absent for eight or ten weeks. The STANDARD mentioned on the 7th June last, that Mr. Caie would leave St. John to be present at the centenary of Sir Walter Scott, at Edinburgh, and would be the honored guest of the Marquis of Lorne.

TIMELY.—Refreshing showers fell between three and six o'clock this morning. The growing crops look well and were greatly benefited by the rain. The earth was so dry for the past week, that fears were entertained the crops would be destroyed, but the timely rain this morning has saved them.

The Postmaster General and Minister of Marine arrived at Chatham last week, and were entertained at lunch. Their speeches are reported in the "Newcastle Advocate," but are purely diplomatic in expression. Their references to the sections of the Washington Treaty on the Fishery question, have only "darkened counsel," signifying nothing.

McADAM.—The "Pioneer" says:—The accommodations at McAdam Junction are improving. In addition to the two places where dinner has heretofore been served to passengers, a large refreshment saloon has been fitted up in the centre of the depot building.

A NEW LOGBOAT and TENDER has arrived in the brig "Florence." It is named the "St. Andrews," and was built at the celebrated Portland Locomotive Works. It will be placed on the Line this week. Success to the Pioneer Railway of the Dominion; it will not be long ere we shall have direct communication with Canada.

Launched on Saturday last at Indian Point, a beautifully modeled and thoroughly finished pleasure yacht, built by Mr. James Starkey, for R. Robinson, Esq. She is lying at Ross's wharf, receiving her rigging.

THE FIRE-SIDE FRIEND for July, is replete with interesting and instructive articles. The various departments, viz.—Health and Scientific, Editorial, Housekeeping, Masonic, Temperance, Children's and Publisher—contain information in each number worth the amount of subscription. The editor, J. W. Vanosange is a writer of note. Published by R. Louis Hamilton, New York.

THE CIRCUS and Menagerie which will be here tomorrow is described in the Maine papers as a very good one, and presents many attractions. The programme of performances is attractive. A grand balloon ascension by Professor Remo, will take place prior to the Arctic exhibition. The process of inflation is novel, but air being used instead of gas. The artists connected with the exhibition are familiar to the people, and they perform all that is stated in the bills. The collection of Wild Animals forms one of the great attractions of this mammoth establishment; Mr. H. Minnie Williams, who was so severely mangled by a lion at the Bovey Theatre, a year ago, will feed the ferocious beasts, with raw meat from her own lips.

A report published by us some three weeks ago, that Sir John and Lady Macdonald, would be the guests of the Minister of Customs, here, during the season, is now published we observe as a new matter by a few of our contemporaries.

The Steamer "City of St. John," will leave St. John on Tuesday instead of Wednesday for St. Andrews and St. Stephens. Her first trip under the new arrangement was made yesterday, and this morning she left for Grand Manan.

A tremendous hail-storm appears to have swept over parts of Westmorland and Kent on Saturday last, causing much destruction. The "Telegraph and Journal" says:—

"The Mohas River, however, a branch of the Richmond, appears to have received the heaviest visitation. Here over about three miles of country, the storm raged with extreme fury. The thunder and sheet lightning were sufficiently terrifying, but such a fall of half-stones had not been witnessed before by the 'boldest inhabitant.' On numerous instances they were found to be an inch and a half in thickness; they lay on the ground immediately after the storm to the depth of several inches, and even after a heavy rain storm, piles of hail stones several inches in height, still lay scattered over the earth. The stones, in their descent penetrated into the ground to the depth of two, three, and four inches; the new growth of spruce, fir, etc., were cut off; fruit trees were stripped of their leaves; hens were killed; windows were broken, in some cases all the glass in the windward side of houses being shattered. Strange to say the country three or four miles higher up the Richmond river knew nothing either of the hail-storm or the drenching rain which followed it."

THE CAMP.—On Thursday morning several Companies of the 71st Battalion proceeded to their camping ground on the grounds of the York County Agricultural Society, where they immediately proceeded to erect tents not only for themselves, but also for the accommodation of the various other companies of the different Battalions that were expected to arrive in the course of the day and the following day. At half-past five o'clock, p. m., the railway train, consisting of twelve cars, arrived, filled with volunteers from Carleton, Charlotte and Sunbury; they were in all about five hundred, and were accompanied by the Volunteer Band from Woodstock. Somewhere between nine and ten o'clock in the evening, another batch of Volunteers, including a troop of Cavalry from Queen's and King's arrived, and a further instalment of Cavalry came in on Friday. CAVING IN OF AN EMBANKMENT.

NEWBURYPORT, Mass., July 1.—This forenoon while men were at work in the cut at March's Hill, on the new city railroad, the banking suddenly caved in, burying eleven men beneath an immense mass of earth. The alarm was immediately given and the excitement was intense as hundreds of men threw out the earth. Eight men were soon rescued, comparatively but little injured; two others, John Tuohy and James Cushman, were dead when reached, and a third, John Clifford, is badly if not seriously injured. Cushman and Tuohy each leave a widow and six children. The cut where the accident occurred is about thirty feet deep, and the men had come to a more gravelly soil which, having no clay in it, caved in and brought down the whole mass.

THE POPE.—A letter from Rome says:—"It appears that the health of the Pope is extremely disquieting, as his legs have begun to swell. The disease is described as flying dropsy, but is considered most dangerous. An impression prevails that the Holy Father may die and his successor be elected without any one being informed of the fact. Prince Sigismund Chigi, brother of the Nunci at Paris, and conservator or official guardian of the conclave, is understood to have been summoned to the palace and installed there."

Prince Arthur—Duke of Ulster.

From a recent Cable despatch we learn that it is the intention of the Queen and Her Majesty's Government to create Prince Arthur Duke of Ulster, and with the consent of Parliament to purchase for him an estate in Ireland. About the wisdom of such a course there can be no two opinions. If Ireland is to remain an integral part of the Queen's dominions, the Irish people must be conciliated by every reasonable means; and if there is anything in the smiles of Royalty to make glad the hearts of a people, the Irish are as fairly entitled to these smiles as are the Scotch or the English. During the reign of Queen Victoria, Scotland has been highly honored by the Royal House. Balmoral is the Queen's favorite residence, after Windsor. The Prince Alfred is Duke of Edinburgh. This honor is not all. The recent marriage of the Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne forms another bond of union between the reigning family and Scotland. We don't think that Scotland is honored beyond her deserts. As little do we think that she has been spoiled by Royal attention. Ireland, however, has not been so honored. Whether Ireland has had herself to blame for this neglect hitherto, we do not care to inquire. It is enough for us to know—and we rejoice to know it—that there is a disposition on the part of the Queen and the Government so to act by Ireland as that the Irish people will feel that they are equally with the Scotch and the English the objects of Imperial attention.

With all their peculiarities the Irish are not devoid of a fine sense of honor. Little attentions please them; and ingratitude cannot be said to be a striking feature of their character. If Prince Arthur, made Duke of Ulster, and through the generosity of Parliament, provided with a suitable residence and estate in Ireland, lives among the Irish people, we have no doubt from what we know of his character, that his popularity will be great and his influence healing. With a Royal Duke of Dublin, himself the heir to the throne, and with a Royal Duke of Ulster, resident among them, the Irish people will have no reason to complain of inattention. [Scottish Am. Journal.]

SUMMARY.

The "Globe" says the Corner Stone of the New Calvin Church, St. John, was laid on Saturday afternoon last with appropriate ceremonies.

The "Courier" learns that Mr. G. Wilson, of Hamilton, had two fingers of his left hand taken off by a sawing machine, at Catorville's siding. The same paper states that Mr. Blackin left there on Thursday last for England via St. John, to join the Winstleton Rifle team from Canada.

We regret to notice that Mr. Johnston, foreman of the machinery in the "Daily News" office, had one of his hands severely injured in one of the machines on Monday morning last.

The St. John Rowing Crew are established at their training quarters on the Kennebecasis, about half a mile up-river from Riverside Station. The Rowing Crew that are to be matched against Saint John, are also in course of training, and are expected to leave England early this month for New Brunswick.

The Synod of the Presbyterian Church of the Maritime Provinces in connection with the Church of Scotland, met at St. Andrews Church, St. John, on Wednesday evening last, and the Synod of the Lower Provinces met at St. David's Church, in said City, on the same evening.

The "Courier" is to have a new dress and to be enlarged.

The publisher of the Houlton "Times" is going to have a new power press to print his paper on.

Since the war, the public debt of the United States has been reduced as much as the debt of England was reduced in fifty-five years. This is a good showing for young America.

The long and hardly-fought battle in New Hampshire is over, and the republicans have been worsted on every hand. The democrats have filled the two vacancies in the senate by democrats, and have elected their governor by seven majority.

George Francis Train is off for Europe again, crazier than ever.

India has 4581 miles of railway. Last year there were 69 collisions, and 238 cases of running off the track. The whole number of persons killed was 13, and 63 were injured. A buffalo on the track caused the death of 11 passengers and the injury of 7.

California has 2267 miles of railway, far more than some of the older States. The State with the greatest railroad mileage is Illinois, which has 718 miles.

On sixteen of the leading railway lines in England and Scotland there are 7925 locomotives, 19,630 passenger cars, 135,990 freight cars, 8575 cattle cars and 73,750 coal cars.

A son of Lord Brougham is about to settle on a Virginia farm.

R. R. ACCIDENT.—A collision occurred on the Portland and Kennebec railroad, last Tuesday, below Hillowell, between a mixed freight train and the dummy train which runs between Augusta and Gardiner. A despatch to the "Whig" says "both engines were smashed."

THE NEW DOMINION MONTHLY for July, has been received, and is well filled with interesting articles. The following is the table of contents:

Tenders for Iron Bridge Superstruc-tures.

The Commissioners for the construction of the Intercolonial Railway are prepared to receive
Tenders for TWENTY ONE SPANS OF IRON BRIDGE SUPERSTRUCTURE, of one hundred feet for each span, and also for sixteen spans of two hundred feet for each span.

Printed specifications showing the tests which each span will be required to bear, information as to the location of the different bridges; and forms of tender, can be obtained at the Chief Engineer's Office, at Ottawa, Canada; or at the Banking House of Messrs. Morton, Rose & Co., Bankers, new Lane, E. C. London, England.

Parties tendering must submit their own plans of the mode in which they propose to construct the bridges, and must state the price of each span, f. o. b., at the place of shipment; and also the price of each span completed in place.

Tenders for additional spans of one hundred feet, and for spans of eighty feet will also be received at the same time. Specifications are being prepared and can be had within a few days on application at the places above named.

Tenders marked "Tenders for Bridges" and addressed to the Commissioners, at Ottawa, will be received up to 6 o'clock, p. m., of THURSDAY, the 6th day of April, 1871.

The Commissioners will not be bound to accept the lowest or any tender.

Now for sale by the undersigned.

These are a 30-year sinking fund bond issued only upon a completed road, and bear eight per cent interest in gold, payable on the 15th August and 15th February, in New York,

London, or Bank of Montreal, and are free from tax—

These bonds are in denominations of $1,000 and $500, coupons registered, and secured by an absolute and only mortgage upon the entire line, including all description of Rolling Stock and Equipment. This road is 111 miles in length, the largest portion of which is completed and successfully operated in the daily running of regular trains, the earnings of which are now in excess of the interest liabilities on the issue of bonds; over
