DEMANDS OF THE EMPLOYES.

General Manager Considering the

The Men Are Orderly-All Montreal, May 23.—It was almost a surprise yesterday when a strike of the trackmen of the Grand Trunk Railway was ordered. The men say they do not want to put the company to trouble, but they want the same pay as the men working for the Canadian Paolife Company. General Superintenden McGuigan had left for St. Louis, Mo., but he will probably return.

Mr. Hays, the general manager, said yesterday that the only remark he had to make in connection with the case of the trackmen was that he had seen the representatives of the men, and was considertions at issue.

The following is the schedule the company are asked to adopt:

1. Increase of 25 cents per day on pres motion by seniority, where mer o annual convention.

7. That no trackmen be discriminated gainst for belonging to the Order of failway Trackmen, and leave of absence o be given to serve on the executive committee, but only when applied for by the hairman of the executive committee. It is claimed that some 1,800 men ar ut, but the company claims that al rains are running on time.

The committee representing the 1,80 rackmen in the employment of the irand Trunk, and which is at presence det the St. James Hotel, ordere a general strike yesterday over the whole

"Well, that has been their argument, but how would outside men do the work? Would the public be safe? Would the engineers like the idea of running on a system negl-ted by the regular trackmen, whose duty it is to see to their respective sections of road twice every day—there being three—men to every five miles of road—too few. In our opinion?"
"Do you expect the men can hold out?"
"Well, the men are poor, but surely they will have the sympathy of the public; they wanted a living wage, and they are treated with neglect."
"Does the committee realize the responsibility resting upon it in ordering a strike?"

The Unexpected in Toronto.

The Unexpected in Teronte.

Toronto, May 23.—In this city the strike came as a big surprise to the local officials, who were not expecting such a move. The announcement was not altogether expected by the men themselves, although it was known that something would be done this week. The committee have been in Montreal for the past three days endeavoring to arrive at an amicable arrangement with General Manager Hays, but never were the prospects bright for a speedy settlement.

Prior to meeting Mr. Hays, the committee some time ago conferred with General Superintendent McGuigan, but that official, so the men say, only "jollied" them along. When it was seen that no requests would be recognized by Mr. McGuigan, the committee resolved to wait on Mr. Hays. The interviews with the general manager were not satisfactory, and the committee deemed it advisable to call the men out. The men in Toronto are confident of success, and do not express any regret at the step they have taken.

Strikers May Be Discharged.

afternoon. He said that a circular had been issued by the management at Montreal to the effect that if the men did not return this morning they could consider themselves discharged.

"We will experience no trouble in filling their places," continued Mr. Ferguson, "and the strike could not have come at a better time for the company. The spring repairs have been made, and new tracks laid, and the roadbed is in an excellent condition."

cation saying he could supply all the men the company wanted.

It was the opinion of Mr. Walter White, representing Mr. Jones, that the company could do without the trackmen for at least two months. In case of wrecks or mishaps on the line, the foremen could be sent to do the work, which they are quite capable of doing. In Toronto only a few trackmen could be seen working yesterday, and they are not members of the Brotherhood. Is the Situation Dangerous

Buffalo, N.T., May 28.—Indications continue to point to an early settlement of the dock troubles. Yesterday all of the men employed inside the elevators, who struck out of sympathy for the grain shovellers, returned to work and more work was done in the elevators than on any day since the strike began. A resolution was unanimously adopted calling upon the Government to construct these works before the opening of navigation next season. It was pointed out that there must be every facility here for the prompt discharge of vessels, or the big freighters would not come, and so the money spent on the canals would be wasted. Several speakers expressed their gratification at the way in which the subject has been taken up recently in Parliament, and especially at the speeches made by the members for Ontario to the effect that Montreal is a national port and should be equipped as such. She had but to turn those mischievous, pleading eyes upon you and you became a fool at once. Yet her was sad, ma'am; too sad, when remember that she died at the very beight of her beauty alone and in a for-eign land. But I have not answered your question. Were she and the judge happy together? I have never heard to nappy together? I have never heard to the contrary, ma'am. I'm sure he monrned her faithfully enough. Some think that her loss killed him. He did not survive her more than three years."

"He seems to lack heart," said I, "as well as brains. I marvel that his sisters put up with him as well as they do."

"They cannot help it. He is not a fellow to be fooled with. Besides, he holds third share in the house. If they could sell it! Mr. Trohm did not disappoint my expectations. In another moment I saw him standing in the open doorway with the most genial smile on his lips.

"Miss Butterworth," said he, "I feel too honored." If you will deign to accept a seat in my buggy, I shall only be too happy to drive you to the Knoller gate."

"And William?" I suggested. "What do you think of William?" Slowly he straightened himself. Slowly he dropped the whip back into its

I have always liked the manners of sountry gentlemen. There is just a south of formality in their bearing which has been quite eliminated from that of their brothers in the city. trees. Here it was the gradual melting of a village street into a narrow and less frequented road, which only after passing Deacon Spear's house assumed that aspect of wildness which a quarter of a mile farther on deepened into something positively somber and repellent.

I speak of Deacon Spear because he was sitting on his front doorstep when we rode by. Being Deacon Spear and one of the residents on this road, I did not fail to take notice of him, though guardedly and with such restraint as a knowledge of his widowed condition rendered both wise and proper.

He was not an agreeable looking person, at least not so to me. His hair was sleek, his beard well cared for, his whole person in good if not prosperous condi-

Perhaps he envied Mr. Trohm. If so, he may have had reason—it is not for me to judge.

There had been up to now only a few scrub bushes at the side of the road, with here and there a solitary poplar to soliven the dead level of the grass grown road, but after we had ridden by the fence which sets the boundary to the good deacon's land I noticed such a the neighboring windows warned us to haste on our route. Mr. Trohm, with a snap of his whip, quite youthful and gallant, touched up his horse, and we rode in dignified calm eway from the hotel steps into the wide village street known as the main road. The fact that Mr. Gryce had told me that this was the one man I could trust, joined to my own excellent knowledge of human as there and the persons in whome explicit confidence can be put, made the moment one of great satisfaction to me. I was about to make my appearance as the Knollys mansion two hours before I was expected, and I was thus enabled to outwit Lucetts by means of the one man whom I would have chosen out of what I have every reason to believe was a highly successful effort, to hide my confusion, "if I express too much admiration for what I see before me. I have always had a great leaning toward well ordered walks and trimly kept flower beda—a leaning, alsa, which I have found myself unable to gratify."

"Do not apologize," he hastened to say. "You but redouble my own pleasons in thus knowing my poor efforts

"Do not apologize," he hastened to say. "You but redouble my own pleasure in thus honoring my poor efforts with your regard. I have spared no pains, madam, I have spared no pains, madam, I have spared no pains, and most of it, I am proud to say, has been accomplished by my own hands." "Indeed!" I cried in some surprise, letting my eye rest with satisfaction on the top of a long well sweep that to me was one of the picturesque features of the place.

was one of the picturesque features of the place.

"It may have been folly," he remarked, with a gloating sweep of his eye over the velvet lawn and flowering shrubs—a peculiar look that seemed to Express something more than the mere delight of possession, "but I seemed to begrudge any hired assistance in the tending of plants every one of which seems to me like a personal friend."
"I understand," was my somewhat un-Butterworthian reply. I really did not quite know myself. "What a contrast to the dismal grounds at the other trast to the dismal grounds at the other and of the lane!"

end of the lane!"

This was more in my usual vein even in its tone. He seemed to feel the difference, for his expression changed also.

"Oh, that den!" he exclaimed bitterly; then, seeing me look a little shocked, he added, with an admirable return to his old manner, "I call any place a den where flowers do not grow." And jump-ing from the buggy he gathered an ex-quisite bunch of heliotrope, which he pressed upon me. "I like sunshine, beds of roses, fountains and a sweep of lawn

"The children do not favor her much," said I, "but I see an expression now and then in Lucetta which recalls her mother faintly."

"They are pure Knollys' blood," said she. "It have bestowed unremitting attention to them for years. It is my hobby, madam. There is not a tree you see that has not received my careful attention. "You act as if both were unreal to you," said I. "The contrast between your appearance and that of some other members of the lane is quite marked." "You refer"—he seemed to hate to speak—"to the Knollys, I presume."

I endeavored to treat the subject when in a heat, as at present, at which he looked disappointed and came some-what reluctantly back to the buggy. He brightened up, however, the moment he was again at my side.

"Now for the woods," said he, with what was undoubtedly a forced laugh.
I thought the opportunity one I ought not to slight.
"Do you think," said I, "that it is in those woods the disappearances take place that Miss Knollys has told me about?"

about?"

He showed the same hesitancy to talk

I had seen in him before.

"I think the less you let your mind dwell on them the better," said he dwell on them the better," said he—
"that is, if you are going to remain long in this lane. I do not expend any more thought upon them than is barely necessary, or I should have to leave my roses and my fruits. And that—Miss Butterworth, they are all that keep me in this neighborhood. I wonder—pardon me the indiscretion—that you could don me the indiscretion—that you could bring yourself to enter it. You must be a very brave woman."

"I thought I had a duty"—I began.
"Althea Knollys was my friend, and I felt I owed a duty toward her children.
Besides"—Should I tell Mr. Trohm my real errand in this place? Mr. Gryce had intimated that he was in the confidence of the police, and if so his assistance in case of necessity might be of spectimable value to me. Yet if no such sistance in case of necessity might be of sestimable value to me. Yet if no such necessity should arise would I want this man to know that Amelia Butterworth— No, I would not take him into my confidence—not yet. I would only try to get at his idea of where the blame lay—that is, if he had any.

"Besides"— He smiled after waiting a minute or two for me to continue.

"Did I say besides?" was my innocent rejoinder. "I think I meant that after seeing them my sense of the importance of that duty had increased. William expecially seems to be a young man of very depublical amiability."

Immediately the noncommittal look returned to Mr. Trehm's face.

"I have no fault to find with William," said he. "He's net the most agreeable companion in the world perhaps, but he has a pretty fancy for fruit — a very pretty fancy."

"One can hardly wonder at that in a neighbor of Mr. Trohm," said I, watching his look, which was fixed somewhat gloomily upon the forest of trees now

The sight of a full bunch of honeysuckle hanging from an arbor such as runs slong my south walls is a great stimulant to one's taste, madam, I'll not deny that."
"But, William," I repeated, determined not to let the subject go, "have you never thought he was a little indifferent to his sisters?"
"A little, madam."
"And a triffa want to accepting but

"And a trifle rough to everything but A trifle, madam."

"The girls"—I was almost angry—"on the contrary, seem devoted to him?"
"Women have that weakness."
"And sot as if they would do—whas would they not do for him?"
"Miss Butterworth, I have never seen a more amiable woman than yourself. Will you promise me one thing?"
His manner was respect itself, his smile ganial and highly contagious. I could not help responding to it in the way he expected.

could not help responding to it in the way he expected.

"Do not talk to me about the Kheliya. It is a painful subject to me. Lucetingou know the girl, and I shall not be able to prejudice you against her—has conceived the idea that I encourage william in an intimacy of which are does not approve. She does not want him to talk to me. William has a loose tongue in his head and sometimes drops unguarded words about their doings up there, which if any but William spoke—But there, I am forgotting one of the most important rules of my own life, which is to keep my mouth from babbling and my tongue from guile. Influence of a congenial companion, madam to a man living so much alone as myself."

I thought his fault very pardonable, but did not express it lest I should frighten his confidences away.

"I thought there was something," I said. "Lucetta acted almost straid of you this morning. I should think she would be glad of the friendship of se good a neighbor."

His face took on a very somber look,
"She is atraid of me," he admitted,
"afraid of what I may see or have seen —of their poverty," he added, with as odd emphasis. I scarcely think he exsected to deceive me.

I did not push the subject an inch further. I saw it had gone as far as he would allow it at this time.

We were by this time in the heart of the forest and rapidly approaching the Knollys house. As the tops of its great chimneys rose above the foliage I saw his aspect suddenly change.

"I don't know why," said he, "but I hate unaccountably to leave you here."

I thought the prospect somewhat uninviting myself after the pleasant ride
I had had and the glimpse which had been given me of a really cheery home and pleasant surroundings.

"This morning I looked upon you as a somewhat daring woman, the progress of whose stay here would be watched

"This morning I looked upon you as a somewhat daring woman, the progress of whose stay here would be watched by me with interest, but after the companionship of the last half hour I am conscious of an anxiety in your regard which makes me doubly wish that Miss Knollys had not shut me out from her Knollys had not shut me out from her home. Are yet sure you wish to enter this house again, madam?" I was surprised—really surprised—at the feeling he showed. If my well dis-ciplined heart had known how to flutciplined hears had known how to flutter, it would probably have fluttered then, but happily the restraint of years did not fail me in this emergency. Taking advantage of the emotion which had betrayed him into an acknowledgment of his real feelings regarding the dangers lurking in this home, despite the check he had endeavored to put upon his lips, I said, with an attempt at naivete only to be excused by the exigencies of the occasion:

"Why, I thought you considered this domicile as being perfectly harmless. You like the girls and have no fault to find with William. Can it be that this great building has another occupant? I de not allude to ghosts. Of them neither you nor I can think it worth while to talk."

"Miss Butterworth, you have me in a corner. I do not know of any other coupant which the house can hold save the three young people you have mentioned. If I seem to feel any doubt of them—but I don't feel any doubt. I only dread any place for you which is not watched over by some one intereste in your defense. The danger threatening the inhabitants of this lane is such a veiled one. If we knew where it lurked, we would no longer call it danger. Sometimes I think the ghosts you allude to are not as innocent as mere speclude to are not as innocent as mere spec-ters usually are. But don't let me frighten you. Don't— Ah, William, I have brought back your guest, you see! I couldn't let her sit out the noon hour in old Carter's parlor. That would be too much for even so amiable a person as Miss Butterworth to endure.  I had hardly realized we were so neas the gate and certainly was surprised te find William anywhere within hearing. That his appearance at this moment was anything but welcome, at least to me, must be evident to any one. The sen-tence which is interrupted might have contained the most important advice or at the least a warning I would be the

at the least a warning I would be the better prepared for having. But destiny, which was against me, said no, and be ing one who accepts the inevitable with good grace I prepared myself to alight, with Mr. Trohm's assistance.

The bunch of heliotrope I held was s little in my way or I should have managed the jump with confidence and dignified agility. As it was, I tripped slightly, which brought out a chuckle from William that at the moment seemed more wicked to me than any crime. Meanwhile he had not let mat ters proceed thus far without putting ters proceed thus far without putting more than one question.

"And where's Simsbury? And why did Miss Butterworth think she had go!

miss Butterworth think she had got to sit in Carter's parlor?"

"Mr. Simsbury," said I as soon as I could recover from the mingled exertion and embarrassment of my descent terra firma, "felt it necessary to take the horse to the shoer's. That is a half day's work, as you know, and I knew that he and expectably you would be that he and especially you would be escaping so dreary a waiting."
The grunt he uttered was eloquent of anything but satisfaction.
"I'll go tell the girls," he said. But he didn't go till he had seen Mr. Trohm enter his buggy and drive slowly off. That this did not add to my liking for William goes without saying.

CHAPTER XV.

A PARTING.

It was not till Mr. Trohm had drives It was not till Mr. Trohm had drives away that I noticed in the shadow of the trees on the opposite side of the road a horse tied up, whose empty sad die spoke of a visitor within. At any other gate and on any other road this would not have struck me as worthy of notice, much less comment. But here and after all that I had heard during this eventful morning the circumstance was so unexpected I could not help feeling astonishment and showing it.

"A visitor?" I asked.
"Some one to see Lucetta."

"Some one to see Lucetta. William had no sconer said this that I saw he was in a state of high excitement. He had probably been in this condition when we drove up, but no condition when we drove up, but not having my attention directed to him! had not noticed it. Now, however, it was perfectly plain to me, and it did not seem quite the excitement of displeasure, though hardly that of joy.

"She doesn't expect you yet," he went on to remark as I turned sharply toward the house, "and if you interrup her." D.—n it, if I thought you would interrupt her."

I thought it time to teach him a lesson in manners.

I thought it time to teach him a lesson in manners.

"Mr. Knollys," I interposed some what severely, "I am a lady. Why should I interrupt your sister or give her or you a moment of pain?"

"I don't know," he muttered. "You are so very quick I was afraid you migh think it necessary to join her in the parlor. She is perfectly able to take care of herself. Miss Butterworth, and will defeated the sound will be sound with the sound will be sound with steps had failed to do. With a stark Lucetta turned and, meeting my eye, turned scarlet and drew back a step. The years man fellowed her hastily.

"Is it goodby, Lucetta?" he asked, with a fine, manly ignoring of our presence that roused my admiration.

She did not answer. Her look was enough. William, seeing it, turned furious at once, and, bounding by me, faced the young man with an eath.

"You're a fool," said he, "to take ne from a silly chit like that. If I loved a girl as you say you love Lucetta, I'd have her if I had to carry her away by force. She'd stop screaming before you'd got well out of the lane. I know women. While you listen to them they'll talk, but once take matters into your own hands and"— A snap of his fingers finished the sentence. I thought the fellow brutal, but scarcely so stupid as I had heretofore censidered him. His awords, however, might just as

His reply, in manner if not in matter, proclaimed him the lover of whom I had so lately heard.

A rude hand on my shoulder distracted my attention. William stood lowering behind me and as I turned whispered in my ear:

"You must come round the other way. Lucetta is so touchy the sight of you will drive every sensible idea out of her head."

His blundering whisper did what my presence and by no means light footsteps had failed to do. With a start Lucetta turned and, meeting my eye, turned soarlest and drew back a stan. The

ALREADY EVEN WITH HIS HONOR. Lawyer's Confession to a Judge

Judgo J. M. Hurt tells a story on a couple of members of the Dallas legal profession which goes in this wise:

They were on a hunting and fishing expedition to Wynne's lake. On the day of their arrival one of the heroes of the story.

ad upon me.

"It's your fault," he cried. "You would come in"—

But at this Lucetta, recovering her poise in a moment, oried out shrilly:

"For shame, William. What has Miss Butterworth to do with this? You are not helping me with your roughness. God knows this hour is hard enough for me without this show on your part of your desire to get rid of me."

"There's woman's gratitude for you," was his growling reply. "Loffer to take all her responsibilities on my own shoulders and make it right with—with her sister and all that, and she calls it desire to get rid of her. Well, have your own way," he cried out, storming down the hall; "I'm done with it for one."

The young man, whose attitude of reserve, mixed with a strange and lingering tenderness for this girl whom he evidently loved, without fully understanding her, was every minute winning more and more of my admiration, had meanwhile raised her trembling hand to his lips in what was, as we sall oould see, a last farewell.

In another moment he was walking by us, giving me as he passed a low bow that for all its grace did not succeed in hiding from me the deep and heartfelt disappointment with which hereited this howard as helse flavore needs the busyer in aptyling but young out of its wallow, and heartfelt disappointment with which hereited this howard as helse flavore needs the busyer in aptyling but young out of its wallow, and heartfelt disappointment with which he with the latter that he deep and heartfelt disappointment with which he with the server was a low to the server was a low the will be a succeeded the bank he delivered his opinion of the lawyer in aptyling but young with him to the water was about six inches deep and the mud about four feet.

As his figure passed through the door, hiding for one more ment the sunshine, I felt an oppression such as has not often visited my healthy nature, and when it passed and disappeared something like the good spirit of the place seemed to go with it, leaving behind doubt, gloom and a morbid appeared something like the good spirit of the place seemed to go with it, leaving behind doubt, gloom and a morbid appeared something which had in Lucetta's eyes rendered his dismissal a necessity.

"Where's Saracen? I declare I'm nothing but a fool without that dog," shouted William. "If he has to be tied up another day"— But even he has some sense of shame in his breast, for at Lucetta's reproachful "William!" he dropped his head sheepishly on his breast and strode out, muttering some words I was fain to accept as an apology.

I had expected to encounter a wreck in Lucetta. As this episode in her life closed she turned toward me. But I did not yet know this girl whose frailty seemed to lie mostly in her physique.

THE FEARFUL EXPERIENCE OF A MAN

UNDER ITS SPELL

It Feels to Be Fasc the Hypnotic Influence of a Ser-pent-Pacing Certain Death and Yet Unable to Move a Limb.

Unable to Move a Limb.

I hate snakes with a holy hatred; but, not being afflicted with "nerves" in any great nheasure, am not atraid of them under ordinary circumstances, and even in the somewhat out of the way position in which I found myself on Saturday, the 17th of April, 1897, I can hardly say now whether it is to fear or fascination, as entirely distinct from terror, that my feelings on that particular occasion are to be ascribed.

Accompanied by my friend, Mr. Lindsay Turner, I went to spend the holidays on a shooting trip in the Blue mountains, New South Wales.

On that memorable Saturday we had done some hard climbing amid beautiful scenery and around a great gap when

On that memorable Saturday we had done some hard climbing amid beautiful scenery and around a great gap when we came out on a high level which ran back the way we had come. We decided to return, Turner keeping to the higher level and I by the route we had traversed, but with the understanding that we were not to lose sight of one another.

On the return I had very little difficulty in regaining the former level, for the gap ran many yards back, and I had only to follow it, holding by the projections of the ledge, until a firmly rooted shrub assisted me.

ledge, until a firmly rooted shrub assisted me.

I had negotiated the narrow, broken ledges and was about to enter comparative safety when, without any warning, my friend, the snake, came slipping leisurely along through the ferns and sorub within a few feet of where I stood at the extreme end of the terrace, upon a four inch ledge, holding on with the fingers of both hands stuck in a shoulder high crevice. Both the reptile and I came to a sudden halt upon seeing each other, the snake's black, forked tongue flickering in and out as it raised its head threateningly.

I wondered what on earth the brute could be doing in that spot, but supposed it had got out of its course when making for the low ground and presumed that, after the nature of its kind, it would souttle back again as I advanced. I was on

I wondered what on earth the brite could be doing in that spot, but supposed it had got out of its course when making for the low ground and presumed that, after the nature of its kind, it would scuttle back again as I advanced. I was on the point of moving forward when, to my utter horror, instead of retreating, it began to sway its head gently to and fro horizontally, at the same time coming toward me by imperceptible degrees until it lay with its round nose within striking distance of my leggings.

I cannot account for the feelings which took possession of me. I tried to retreat—I had only to go back a pace or two, and I would be in absolute security—but for the life of me I could not do so. Let it not be thought that at this time I had the slightest fear, notwithstanding the fact that a bite from the snake meant certain death. My only sensation was that of wonder both at the serpent's behavior and the consciousness of my inability to move. After remaining thus for some time the reptile drew its length by slow degrees into coil, the trafsverse belly scales making a gritty, hissing rustle as they dragged over the rock. Then it gradually raised its head a foot above the center coil, and I have an indistinct recollection that I tried to cry to Mr. Turner to "look at the black snake," while a cold sweat broke out in the palms of my hands.

The beauty of the snake excited an overpowering sense of admiration in me—tepolished, jet black skin, its diamond eyes, the lovely tints of its belly, that flushed and glowed from bright crimson to rosy pink, and above all the eternal licking and flickering of the long forked tongue quivering back and forth. After a time my attention was fixed on the tongue alone, and as I watched its incessant movement I felt so utterly helpless, yet so conscious of, that helplesesness, without, I maintain, the slightest approach of fear, that I wondered how it was I continued to keep my hold.

The head wayed more rapidly now, and maintain, the sugarest that I wondered how it was I continued to keep my hold.

The head swayed more rapidly now, and a low humming murmur throbbed through my brain, drumming, drumming in my ears and keeping time to the sway, till the eyes and tongue seemed a flashing, glittering band of light across my sight.

till the eyes and tongue seemed a flashing glittering band of light across my sight. Suddenly the movement ceased. My senses returned instantly with a great contraction of the heart, like one who is suddenly awakened to terrible danger. I trembled in every limb; the sweat was pouring down my temples and along my spine, for my danger was imminent; the snake's neck was drawn back in a curve sideways ready to strike; it shot forward. I felt the slight blow as it struck my legging, and with a shriek of desperate terror I leaped backward off the cliff. Down, down, down I went, struck something—and came to myself again, to desperate ten's recovered from my dazed condition and after searching country screen my dazed to the date of the day of t

For fully five minutes I stood perfectly still, at intervals calling out, "Snake, snake!" until suddenly I sprang backward off, the cliff. For 50 feet I fell sheer, and, my spring having carried me clear of the rock, I landed in a sitting posture upon the top of a tall mountain ash tree, crashed through the small branches and so reached the ground.

After resting and smoking for half an hour I felt entirely recovered and determined to revisit the terrace, in the hope of finding the snake and paying off old scores.

COUNTY ROAD BUILDING.

Among the steps which suggest themselves is the adoption of a county road system, under which the leading roads of a county are taken over, constructed, and maintained ou of the county funds. That such a course will, in every case, materially improve the condition of the roads throughout the province there can be little doubt. Of this we have the best example in Of this we have, the best example in the county of Hastings—an example which, at present, it would appear is to be followed by others.

GOT HIS SOAP FREE.

Story of a Smart Young Man Who Read the Advertisements. Story of a Smirt Young Man Who Read the Advertisements.

One day recently a young man had oc casion to make a business journey into Kansas. The business finished, he had more than enough leisure while he awaited the evening train back to town. He bought several magazines to while away the time. After he had read all of the letterpress that interested him he turned to the advertisements and noticed that a very large number of them related to tollet soap. Each firm that advertised its soap offered, for the small sum of 9 cents in stamps, to send to any one a sample cake of soap.

The young man is not averse to turning an honest penny even in his leisure, so he sat down and wrote a leiter to every soapmaker and inclosed 9 cents for a sample. He went through all the magazines and sighed because there were not more. When he got home, he hunted up all the found them he sent 2 cents for a little bar of soap.

"upon the waters," so to speak, began to return. One day the postman stopped at his desk and, grinning, dropped thereon a half dozen little packagos, each of which contained a small cake of soap, scented, unscented and rancid. The day following more soap came in and again on the next day and for many days following. Some of the soapmakers continued to send him soap from day to day, each time a new brand, everything from laundry for the shirt to tar soap for the soalp. The postman soon ceased to see the fun in it, and to his office companions the fun grew more furious with each consignment of How Lincoln Swayed Men.

"He is the ablest diplomatist and the strewdest politician I ever knew," said the Hon. Robert J. Walker on coming from an interview with President Lincoln. Mr. J. R. Gilmore, to whom the remark was made, reports in his "Personal Recollections" several remarks of Horace Greeley which illustrate how much Mr. Lincoln's diplomatic and political power was due to his wonderful personal magnetism.

power was due to his workers progression.

President Lincoln, having been often and severely arraigned in The Tribune for what Mr. Greeley considered his slowness in prosecuting the war, had said: "If he [Greeley] objects to my policy, I shall be glad to have him state to me his views frankly and fully. I shall adopt his if I can. If I cannot, I will at least tell him why. He and I should stand together."

"If I were to go," said Greeley when the words were repeated to him, "he would stonyly twist me around his fingers, as he

"If I were to go," said Greeley when the words were repeated to him, "he would simply twist me around his fingers, as he always does."
"Lincoln's smile would wilt me in half a minute," he said on another occasion when again urged to see the president and have a talk with him. "He is a wonderful man—wonderful! I never can harbor a thought against him except when I keep away from him."

A True Highlander. The local or national titles attributed to British regiments are not much guide to their actual composition. This was illustrated the other day by a speaker in the house of commons in the following aneodote: When Lord Spencer was lord lieutenant of Ireland, he inspected the Scots Grays in the Phoenix park. He stopped before the tallest man in the regiment and said, "My good man, what nationality do you belong to?" "Scotch, yer hanner," was the reply. Lord "Spencer further asked, "What part of Scotland do you come from?" "Tipperary," was the answer—Household Words The local or national titles attri
