Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): So that we may have the matter clear, may I ask this question. Is it understood that the secretary general, in the note which he has sent to countries whose troops are in the United Nations force in the Congo, has not actually requested a further bolstering of that force by such member states?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker. The request would not be made in general terms of that kind. The request would be made to specific nations and, as has been pointed out, there has been no request that Canada should supply further troops. Canada actually has done very well when you compare her effort with the contributions made by most of the other member states of the United Nations.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGES IN TAX SHARING ARRANGEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether any changes whatever are in contemplation with respect to the tax sharing arrangements with the provinces for the fiscal year 1961-62.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker the ambit of discussion at the dominion-provincial conferences on fiscal questions has been confined to measures in the period commencing April 1, 1962. There were two matters that I recall in particular that could have a bearing on the period prior to April 1, 1962, but broadly the discussions have been directed toward new arrangements to follow the conclusion of the present five-year period.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a reported statement by Mr. Frost to the effect that it would be impossible to present a budget, that is in Toronto, until the federal government position is known in this matter?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My attention has not been called to this statement. I heard a reference to it on the radio this morning. Obviously this is a budget matter, and it would not be proper for me to comment on the plans of the Ontario government in relation to budget matters. Naturally I am not acquainted with the budget plans of that government, but it is conceivable that whatever fiscal arrangements may be arrived at in respect of the period commencing April 1, 1962, might well have a bearing on the budget plans of that government for the present year. I just do not know.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister is not suggesting is he, that he is not on talking terms with the premier of Ontario?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, no, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that thought would not have crossed the mind of any hon. member but the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Hellyer: He just would not allow the premier of Ontario to get a word in edgewise.

Mr. Pickersgill: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think I ought to hear the supplementary question of the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister can inform the house whether a date has been set for a federal-provincial conference involving the provincial premiers in order to deal with fiscal matters.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Argue: Can the minister say whether a conference will be held within the next month or two?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would not expect one would be held within the next short period.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if I may ask a supplementary question, is the government contemplating sending any communication on this matter to the provincial governments in the next month?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

IMPORTATION OF FRUIT AND VEGETABLES FROM CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Fort William drew my attention to an article in the Globe and Mail concerning the importation of Cuban tomatoes into Canada and asked this question:

Can the minister inform the house in what form the Cuban deal has been subsidized by the Canadian government?

In reply I wish to state there is no Canadian government subsidy involved in the importation of tomatoes or any other products from Cuba.

RED CHINA—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS FOR SALE OF WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the reported important success of the Australian wheat board in selling 300,000 tons of wheat to China and the report that further sales of Australian wheat are being negotiated, can the minister say what efforts are being made by the Canadian wheat board and the Department of Trade and Commerce to sell Canadian wheat to China at this time?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): As the hon. member has been told in the house twice already, discussions between the Canadian wheat board and the China Resources Company are going on at the present time, and it would not be in the public interest to divulge any of these discussions until an announcement can be made. All I will say is that we shall not have to hold a candle to anyone when the discussions are over.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR DATE OF MEETING WITH PREMIER BENNETT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has yet arranged his visit to Victoria to discuss the Columbia project with the premier of British Columbia, which he announced to the press on January 6, I think it was.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Arrangements have not been made in a precise sense for the visit, but I hope it may be possible to arrange it relatively soon, Mr. Speaker. The federal government attaches very great importance, as hon. members are aware, to the development of the Columbia river, and has done all that lies within its power to assist and expedite the undertaking of the project. This still remains the very firm and urgent desire of the federal government.

So far as the proposed meeting with Premier Bennett is concerned, the premier indicated that it would not be convenient for him to come to Ottawa as he was busy with his plans for the session and his plans for his own budget. It was evidently thought I had nothing much to occupy my time in this respect, and it was suggested that I should go to Victoria. A visit to Victoria is always a very pleasant experience, and I am looking forward to that experience soon if the house will excuse me for the time necessary.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister a supplementary question. If the minister succeeds in finding the premier of British Columbia when he gets there, does he intend to sweeten the offer he made in his letter?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am sure there will be no difficulty about finding the premier. He has indicated that he hopes the meeting will take place in Victoria. So far as the second part of the hon. member's question is concerned, I cannot imagine the offer would need any more sweetening. It is such a good, generous offer on the part of the federal government that I should think it would be irresistible.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that press reports indicate that the energy board of British Columbia is not likely to make its final report prior to August 1, does the government expect to sign an agreement with British Columbia before that date?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It takes two parties to enter into an agreement, let alone sign it. On the part of the federal government there is at all times a willingness to enter into an agreement along the lines indicated in my letter to the premier of British Columbia, in which this extraordinarily generous offer on the part of the federal government was put forward.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder whether the minister would like me to intercede on his behalf with Mr. Bennett, as I expect to be in British Columbia next week.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): All I can say is that I hope the Leader of the Opposition will not muddy the waters. I am not going to ask him to do anything except to keep out of this.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Translation):

TRANSPORT

SOULANGES CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL DISPOSAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Bourbonnais (Vaudreuil-Soulanges): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could he inform the house whether he has received recently a bona fide offer or an official request on the part of some minister of the Quebec government with regard to the purchase of the Soulanges canal for the establishment of a fish-breeding centre?

Does the minister feel it would be advisable to hand over to the provincial government, under present conditions, the entire property of the Soulanges canal for the amount of $1, as the minister of youth in the Lesage cabinet has expressed the wish in his newspaper?

Does the minister believe—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is customary to ask only one question at a time. Perhaps the hon. member would allow his first two questions to be dealt with.

(Translation):

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, the Quebec minister of youth and welfare wrote me, on behalf of his colleague, the minister of game and fisheries, to inform us of the province's intention to acquire the federal property along the Soulanges canal in order to set up a park and a fish breeding station. I have also had a visit from the minister of youth who gave me some details on the intentions of the provincial authorities.

Since then, Mr. Speaker, I had occasion to visit the spot, and I found that the local people have expressed a wish that part of this property be reserved for development and industrial building. Many municipalities on the banks of the Soulanges canal have also made known their intention to approach the government to obtain certain pieces of land which they deem essential to their expansion.

Mr. Speaker, I should tell the house that this is a very important property. I believe it is possible to meet the needs of the riparian municipalities as well as those of the people concerned and the provincial government.

As far as the proposed setting up of a fish-cultural station is concerned, I can assure my hon. friend that our only aim in that transaction will be to help the public in general and the riparian population of the Soulanges canal.

Mr. Bourbonnais: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Does the minister think it would be better for the Soulanges area to establish a bird sanctuary, as suggested by the minister of game and fisheries, rather than promote the establishment of industries which would give employment to the people of Vaudreuil-Soulanges?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we want this property to become a sanctuary for human beings, and there is room both for industrial development and a fish-cultural station or a bird sanctuary.

Above all, we want to make sure that the interests of the people will be preserved, and that will be our first consideration.

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question to clarify the situation.

Since the Soulanges canal will no longer be under the Department of Transport jurisdiction, is it not true that it will be declared a surplus asset and transferred to the Department of Defence Production?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the provincial government's proposal included an offer to buy the whole property for the sum of $1, regardless of the needs of industry or of the various municipalities. Following my visit there, and following various representations made to me by residents of the area, we had to reconsider the whole matter, and I think we can now submit to the provincial government a concrete proposal that will meet all the wishes of the population.

Mr. Bourget: Another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I believe—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this matter has been pursued with four supplementary questions. If it is not sufficiently clear I could perhaps permit another question, but it seems to me that the matter has been fairly well canvassed.

Mr. Bourget: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, may I say I was just trying to clarify the situation. Here we have a situation where a certain property or installation is not presently used by the Department of Transport; therefore it should be transferred to another department for disposal. That is the situation that I should like to clear up.

Mr. Hees: That is debate.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is perhaps interested in presenting a point of view, but this is not the proper time at which to do so. This is a time in which to get information. It seems to me that the answers have been clear and that they have been sufficiently elucidated by supplementary questions.

METROPOLITAN TORONTO—REPORTED REQUEST FOR SUBWAY LOAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a request to meet with a Toronto metro committee in order to discuss their request for a $58 million subway loan? If so, is it his intention to comply with this request?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am unable to say without having looked into the file directly, but there certainly have been discussions in this regard. As always, the government is prepared to listen to representations and it will continue to follow that course.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPAIR OF FLOOD DAMAGE IN FRASER CANYON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Hicks (Fraser Valley): I have a question I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works. Whose responsibility is it to repair the trans-Canada highway flood damage in the Fraser canyon of British Columbia?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): The question of the repair of the trans-Canada highway in the Fraser Valley is under investigation at the present time. We have engineers out there at the site to determine that matter, and on receipt of the necessary information I shall be very happy to answer the question asked by the hon. member.

QUEBEC—STATEMENT ON REPORTED CHANGE OF ROUTE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Perhaps I might take this opportunity to answer the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges concerning the contents of the telegram I sent in reply to the request of the Quebec government for the consent of the federal government to their proposed change in the route of the trans-Canada highway through Vaudreuil. The following is the text of the telegram dated January 20:

> Reurtel even date regarding route trans-Canada on basis of information you have given our officials to effect that proposed route is 2.3 miles shorter and will decrease cost to federal government of some $500,000 am prepared to authorize new route through Isle aux Tourtres instead of Ile Perrot.

MONTREAL—POSSIBLE CONSTRUCTION OF TUNNEL RATHER THAN BRIDGE

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Perhaps I might also take this opportunity to answer a further question, this time one asked by the hon. member for St. Mary on January 26, in which the possibility of building a tunnel was referred to. The answer is as follows. The route of the highway, as provided for in the trans-Canada highway agreement, crosses the St. Lawrence over the west end of Boucherville islands which is east of the Jacques Cartier bridge. The initiative as to the type of structure required at this location rests with the recommendation by the province. Any provincial proposal will be carefully considered.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO FILLING OF VACANCIES IN REPRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether the government expects soon to take steps to make sure that the electors in some parts of Canada will not be denied representation in this house for the whole of this session.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I am always glad to notice the reformation which has taken place in the hon. gentleman. When the former government was in power—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —it failed to accept the admonitions of the hon. member who now presses for action. This government will see that in the proper course of events an opportunity will be provided for the various vacancies to be filled in the constitutional manner.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a question of personal privilege. The Prime Minister saw fit gratuitously to make a personal reference to me not founded on fact in any respect whatsoever. If the right hon. gentleman will search the whole of the record of the St. Laurent government he will find no evidence of delays such as are taking place now in the calling of by-elections.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAOS—REASSEMBLING OF SUPERVISORY COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister in a position to say whether any progress has been made respecting the proposal for the reactivation of the truce supervisory commission in Laos in the light of the statement made by the President of the United States a day and a half ago.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The situation at the present time with regard to Laos is that the United Kingdom, as one of the two co-chairmen of the Geneva conference of 1954, submitted to the Soviet union just the other day a draft letter to India as chairman of the international supervisory commission. This was done some days ago, but as yet the Soviet union has not said whether this letter is satisfactory.

If agreement should be reached between these two co-chairmen on the letter to be dispatched to the government of India I am very hopeful there would be some quick action. The proposal is that India send a representative to interview the king of Laos, and if consent could be obtained from the constitutional authorities of Laos to the commission coming into the country, then Canada, for her part, would at once name a commissioner and I think the commission would begin to function.

BROADCASTING

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE ON RADIO AND TELEVISION

The house resumed from Wednesday, January 18, consideration of the motion by the Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue):

That a special committee be appointed on broadcasting to consider radio and television broadcasting with power to examine and inquire into the matters herein referred to and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon and to send for persons, papers and records;

That the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable or necessary;

That the committee shall consist of 35 members;

That standing orders 66 and 67 be suspended in relation thereto.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, at the time of adjournment when this motion was previously before the house I was stressing my sincere hope that when this committee meets it will give very serious consideration to the interpretation which is being placed by the board of broadcast governors on that section of the regulations which deals with controversial broadcasts. It is only in this past year that I have heard any criticism of previous interpretations of this regulation, but from my own knowledge I am convinced that the interpretation presently being placed on this rule concerning controversial broadcasts is of such a nature as to be in danger of wrecking some of the finest radio programs in this country.

All I want to do this morning is to give one illustration, because I feel this matter is of such importance that it should receive the earnest attention of the committee. I intend to make reference only to the program which is known as "Town Meeting in Canada". This program was founded on November 5, 1943, and originates from station CJOR in Vancouver. It was begun as a radio program of the discussion type, and its declared purpose was to promote justice, tolerance and reason through an informed public.

Since this program was founded nearly 17 years ago many prominent Canadians, many of whom are in this house at the present time, in the realms of politics, education, economics, religion, industry, trade unions and agriculture, as well as internationalists and ex-ambassadors, have appeared on it. I believe I am right in saying that up to the present time there have been approximately 880 continuous weekly programs extending over a period of approximately sixteen and one half years. For that length of time the program was free from interference or criticism regarding the policy of providing an opportunity for the expression of major points of view on controversial issues. However, since February 14 last the board of broadcast governors on two occasions have prohibited the right of broadcast.

With respect to one program dealing with a trade union jurisdictional dispute, they prohibited the right to broadcast not because it was a controversial matter but because at the last moment one party failed to appear when the program was about to be taped to go on the air. At that time the debate was on the question, what is the international issue involved in this dispute?

On a second occasion the subject of the broadcast was, what are the national issues between the Conservatives and Liberals? The program was accepted by both parties, but at the last moment one of the parties failed to turn up and of course the broadcast had to proceed. The board of broadcast governors immediately stepped in and took it off the air not only in Vancouver, where it originates, but in all private stations that carry the program across Canada.

"Town Meeting in Canada" has attained such a reputation that on two occasions it was carried over the entire N.B.C. network in the United States. On two outstanding occasions it received the Columbus award at the international institute for education by radio of Ohio state university of Columbus, Ohio.

The basis of the cancellation was that one party that agreed to appear did not turn up and therefore there could not be a public airing of the issue involved. I maintain that this is basically a denial of free speech. This serious matter means that one party can kill this type of program by agreeing to participate and then at the last moment failing to appear. The interpretation placed last year by the board of broadcast governors on the regulations concerning controversial broadcasts is such that it now denies the right of the public to have any public airing of important issues. This is a serious problem of vital concern to us all.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Is the hon. gentleman aware that the cancellation was made by the radio station itself and by neither of the political parties? Is the hon. member also aware that in another broadcast when another political party representative did not appear, the moderator of the program decided on his own initiative not to put the broadcast forward?

Mr. Winch: I am aware of all of that. I have all the details in front of me at the present time. Every statement I have made is accurate and is supported by a statutory declaration sent to the board of broadcast governors giving complete information as to what transpired hour by hour and day by day, and even noting the exact time at which it became known that one party would not turn up.

The radio station did raise this matter. They would be responsible if they had not drawn the matter to the attention of the board. However, it is the interpretation of the board and its action in which I am most interested. All the supporters of this program that I know in British Columbia feel that if this interpretation is maintained it will wreck what I maintain is a marvellous and remarkable broadcast.

In order to indicate that I am not merely expressing my own opinion with respect to this program I will read portions of a letter sent to the board of broadcast governors under date of October 24, 1960.

Mr. Drysdale: Who wrote the letter?

Mr. Winch: I will give the hon. member that. I will read only the important passages of this letter:

> We should also make it clear that it is our opinion, as it is also the considered opinion of the management of "Town Meeting in Canada", that the program cannot survive if the present construction which the board has evidently placed on the doctrine of equal opportunity is to prevail.
> The real issue is the interpretation to be placed on the meaning of "equal opportunity", or as regulation 6 (1) which you quote in your letter of October 4th, 1960 expresses it "on an equitable basis to all parties and rival candidates." Assuming for the moment that this regulation was intended for application to the public discussion or forum type of radio program not directly connected with political campaigns, we submit that on the facts relevant to the September 30 incident, "equal opportunity" was provided to both sides. The situation there was that the one party did not take the opportunity which was offered to them. Surely the doctrine of equal opportunity cannot be carried so far as to cover a situation where the opportunity is provided but not used.
> If this construction is to be followed it must have the necessary consequence of allowing any party to a controversial topic to stifle discussion and kill debate through the simple expedient of declining the opportunity to participate. Surely this is the direction from which the real threat to free speech and discussion would arise.
> The undersigned are requesting from the board a clarification of the construction and interpretation they are going to place on this rule in the future. If the program cannot be broadcast because one side of the issue is not represented by reason of their refusal to avail themselves of the opportunity, then clearly the program cannot survive.
> We shall be looking forward to receiving your reply.

Who wrote that letter? The representatives in British Columbia of the four political parties interested in this program.

Mr. Drysdale: Would the hon. member provide us with the names of those persons?

Mr. Winch: Their names are as follows: D. A. S. Lanskail, Liberal; Bert Price, Social Credit; William Dennison, C.C.F.; and Raymond Hull, Conservative. These people are all interested in the broadcast. They represent four different political parties. Although they hold differing political views they have maintained a long and lively interest in this program.

Mr. Drysdale: Will the hon. member permit a question? I appreciate the point of view he has taken with respect to those particular circumstances and, as I emphasized earlier, the objection did not come from any of the political parties. Does he feel that the moderator should have the discretion to decide whether a particular program should be withdrawn because he did so in another program in the absence of one of the members of another political party?

Mr. Winch: That is hardly a question.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me the hon. member is dealing with a matter which might properly be raised before the committee. In regard to the relevance of what has been said by the hon. member who has the floor, it is simply that here is a matter which might well be reviewed by the committee in its investigation of radio and television broadcasting, the subject matter proposed to be referred to it.

As I have said earlier in this debate and on previous occasions, and this was also said by my predecessors, the discussion of matters which will properly come before the committee is relevant only by way of illustration of the need for the committee, or the desirability or otherwise of proceeding with the committee. It can be argued either way. The motion is to set up a committee to review radio and television broadcasting.

I am not going to read the citations, but hon. members will find support for this view of the proper course of debate on a motion which is simply to set up a committee for a specific purpose in May's 16th edition at page 452; and instances where my predecessors in the chair have pointed out the desirability of hon. members restricting their examples as much as possible, and also the desirability of not attempting to do the work of the committee by roaming over the whole field, will be found in Hansard of 1955 for May 28, at pages 2441 and following pages, Hansard for January 27, 1953, at page 1366, Hansard for May 10, 1954, at page 4558, as well as the references I have made myself to the proper practice, as I see it, on a motion of this kind.

Mr. Drysdale: May I just speak on the point of order?

Mr. Winch: If it is a question; otherwise I have the floor.

Mr. Drysdale: I should like to speak to the point of order. I think the hon. member for Vancouver East is very fairly putting forth an important point and an important principle regarding freedom of speech. I think in essence the question is whether the board of broadcast governors is to rule on the matter of freedom of speech, or whether the program moderator is to do that. What I was seeking to bring to the attention of the hon. member for Vancouver East was another situation, which he has not drawn to the attention of the house, where the moderator himself withdrew one of the broadcasts. I wanted to obtain his comments on that particular proposition.

[Mr. Drysdale.]

Mr. Speaker: Yes. Well, the point I was making was that to debate the merits of the illustration, which has been chosen by the hon. member for Vancouver East was going beyond the scope of the debate. That is why I intervened.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I was nearly at the end of my remarks. It was because of what was said the other day that I realized there were other examples, and I thought I was correct in giving only one example as to why I felt this matter was of such importance that it should be dealt with. The hon. member who has been asking a couple of questions undoubtedly can see, or has already accepted, the importance of this matter and the fact that I have tried to put it in a fair way. I therefore feel absolutely certain that he will support my contention with respect to the seriousness of the situation and the need for clarification of the matter before this committee, and the best possible guarantee given that a program, which has been on the air for 16 or 17 years without criticism, will not be taken off without the fullest investigation and a guarantee given of the maintenance of free speech and of public discussion of matters of concern of that nature.

(Translation):

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of this resolution providing for the setting up of a committee to deal with that corporation which, after having done so much for our country, will continue, I hope, its good work.

At the beginning of my remarks, I should like to stress the fact that having taken the floor is no indication that I intend to deliver a speech against or in favour of the C.B.C. I should like simply, Mr. Speaker, to discuss objectively a few particularly important aspects of the situation before the setting up of such a committee.

(Text):

I understand that under the rules, Mr. Speaker, when we speak on resolutions of this kind we should speak in general terms and, as you have just said, stick to the criterion of what constitutes the desirability of setting up such a committee.

This morning I want to speak very briefly on two main topics. The first topic I will discuss is simply the general desirability of examining crown corporations in committee. Second, I shall speak in very general and objective terms, and this is where I want to underline the fact that when I speak under the second heading my speech will not be anti anything or for anything. I simply want to make some general, objective observations. I want to discuss that general phrase "political interference".

All of us in the House of Commons, and the Canadian people, believe that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—and I am not for one moment suggesting that I am going to cover all its powers which it derives from its original charter—has shown great leadership in the development of our country. It has played a very great role. Many loyal and great Canadians form its working force. I think in most instances we are all proud of it as a corporation. If we think it is desirable, and I believe most of us do, to have a distinctive Canadianism going from coast to coast in this country, perhaps we are also equally agreed that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has played a very important role in this respect. This was the original intention in the setting up of the corporation.

Whether we refer to television or radio broadcasting, I am sure we will all agree that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has done a good job in certain areas of this country which for the time being could not be served by private enterprise in a practical way. If it was not for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation many areas of this great country of ours would have no radio or television services at all.

Now, sir, I want very briefly to discuss the desirability of examining the corporation in committee. After all, it is one of the most pertinent parts of this resolution that we are discussing this morning. I think we should pay much more attention to this general subject because it involves a very great principle. Canada is a young country. Confederation dates from 1867. We have gone through two great world wars and many emergency periods. At the same time, by the natural evolution of things government has become bigger and bigger. Thus many crown corporations have come into existence, for good or for bad. Therefore I think it is most important that as members of parliament we make sure they receive careful scrutiny at all times; because while it is very necessary at times to create crown corporations, we must make sure exactly how, why and if they fit into the democratic scheme of things as we see it under a parliamentary system of government.

I think that very often people err when they try to compare the C.B.C. with the B.B.C. to too great an extent. The experience of the B.B.C. in the United Kingdom is much different from that of the C.B.C. in Canada. First of all, their experience is longer; and second, the B.B.C. is superimposed on a unilateral state whereas the C.B.C. is working in conjunction with a parliamentary system and a federal state. These are general principles that I think should be outlined when we are trying to compare the two corporations.

Again I reiterate and emphasize the necessity, especially in peacetime, of members of parliament through our parliamentary institutions always exercising eternal vigilance in scrutinizing the activities of crown corporations. We all know that the C.B.C. reports to parliament through the Minister of National Revenue and at this point I should like to emphasize the fact that parliament is made up in large measure of people who are proud to call themselves politicians. Therefore we must be very careful in giving consideration to that very loose expression, "political interference". I would warn all members that when people confuse the idea of political interference with the voice of the people; when people confuse the idea of political interference with the true and rightful duties of a member of parliament; when irresponsible pronouncements are made regarding these two things, political interference on the one hand and the rightful duties of a member of parliament on the other hand, nothing is being done to serve the true principles of democracy as I am sure all broadminded members of the House of Commons understand them.

Therefore I am sure this committee is going to start its work in a sober and sensible way; I have heard someone suggest in a "serene" way. That is a very good word, but I think it was Haldane who said that justice must not only be just but must also seem to be just. So I think these are general principles that should be understood before the committee starts its work.

Just because a member of parliament wants to know how much a cultural program costs or is going to cost, be it on television or radio; just because he wants to know what the price tag of that cultural program is, let us not smear that parliamentarian and say that he is anti-culture. In the past I have done a little church work, and we had a minister who was a great sky pilot but did not occupy himself too much with the books of the church. He was a wonderful minister, but a few people had to get together to make sure that church affairs and the church in general were going to be kept solvent. So I think it is extremely important that just because members of parliament and representatives in legislatures ask what something is going to cost, we do not as a result label them as anti-cultural.

As I have said before and I repeat it now, the C.B.C. is doing a wonderful job in providing cultural programs, programs which in many instances private enterprise cannot really afford. I hope the day will perhaps come when private enterprise will be able to do so, but today we have this situation and I think it is only right that members of parliament should ask about the cost. After all, the Canadian people are paying for these programs.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I have heard it said by many Canadians that they hope to see the day, perhaps in the not too distant future, when private radio and television stations will become so financially sound that they will be able to undertake in a responsible way under the board of broadcast governors some of the cultural programming that the C.B.C. is doing today. In a very objective way many people are seriously asking themselves about the advisability of too much state radio and television in a democratic society under a parliamentary system. In a very sensible and serene way many people are asking this question, which makes it even more desirable that in a common sense manner a corporation of this nature be examined as this resolution proposes.

I know that it perhaps embarrasses a lot of people to talk too openly about political interference, and that it is something we should all admit that we talk about too much privately and not often enough in public. I am a politician, Mr. Speaker, and I am proud to be a politician. I fight hard and I am partisan, but suppose I am looking at the television news one night, before New Year's, for instance, and suppose various Canadians are wishing the people of the country a happy New Year and the Leader of the Opposition appears on television and the Prime Minister does not. Of course I would squawk. I am a human being. But let us not call that political interference. I am naturally going to ask somebody, whether in the C.B.C. or outside the C.B.C., why the Leader of the Opposition appeared on television and the Prime Minister did not. If the official opposition had a convention and the C.B.C. did not cover it at all on television I am sure their party frontbenchers would also say: "My goodness, something is going wrong", and they would squawk too.

We just heard an hon. member of the C.C.F. party speak, and he suggested that something constituted political interference. As long as there are politicians and as long as we have state owned radio and television there are going to be charges and countercharges involving what we call political interference. But let us be very sensible about the whole matter, Mr. Speaker. Let us analyse it in a cool-headed and serene way. Members of parliament often receive letters complaining about certain programs. The Minister of National Revenue perhaps knows that better than anyone else. But when we bring these matters to the attention of officials we are only expressing the voice of the people. When a member of parliament makes known the views of his constituents regarding various programs, at no time is he doing anything that constitutes political interference.

I know this is a very delicate subject, but it is one that is often on the minds of all of us and I think it should be analysed in a cool-headed and sensible way. At the same time I think the individuals who work for this wonderful corporation must realize that public funds are involved, that the voice of the people does means something, and that while cultural leadership is most important sometimes the desires of the people are important too.

I think, sir, that nothing is to be gained when ill-considered attacks regarding political interference are levelled against the C.B.C. I also believe that nothing is to be gained when people are criticized because they have, either before a committee or outside a committee, levelled objective and constructive criticism against the corporation. I do not believe this criticism should be brushed aside on the ground that it is anti-cultural or that these legislators do not know what they are talking about. I think the whole thing should be brought into balance. I am sure, sir, this committee, in a cool-headed, sensible way, is going to do just that.

I have, therefore, brought before the house today what I consider are two important points which underline the desirability of setting up this committee. Point No. 1 is the desirability, in a free society like Canada, of examining crown agencies. We have a great many of them already in this young country which has gone through emergency periods and two world wars. I am not very clear in my thinking here, but I am sure of one thing. These crown agencies must be examined very carefully in a free democratic society; otherwise the true principles of democracy as we understand them, both inside and outside of parliament, will be tampered with. The price of democracy is eternal vigilance, and that is what this committee is going to do.

I have not done a very good job this morning of explaining the other point, but I do hope this committee, in a very gradual, common sense way, is going to do something to show us the real difference between political interference on the one hand, as so many people irresponsibly call it, and on the other hand what I believe to be the true voice of the people. For these reasons, sir, and in a very general way as I have explained today, I support most wholeheartedly this resolution.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words, not in response to the very interesting declaration of political faith we have just heard from the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, but to talk about another matter which I believe should be considered by the committee when it is convened. I would say to the hon. member who has just spoken—I do not know whether he is a member of this committee—that now that he has avowed what we all knew, that he is a politician, I hope he will grace that committee and give it the benefit of his great experience and his solemn consideration.

The matter I wish to raise, Mr. Speaker, is one which I certainly would raise in the committee if I were a member. However, since I am not, I should like to do so in this way during the discussion of this resolution. On January 3 last we were informed by Mr. C. R. Delafield of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the international service of the corporation was to be considerably curtailed. Canada's shortwave radio service, of course, has been in existence now for some 16 years with programs beamed to listeners in Europe, Latin America, the Caribbean and Australasia. I have no quarrel with the decision to extend the international service to Africa, to provide programs in English and in French, as is now being done as a result of the changes announced by Mr. Delafield.

However, I do question the wisdom of the international service being discontinued to some of our north Atlantic treaty partners, Norway, Sweden, Belgium, The Netherlands and Italy. I understand that not only are these programs being eliminated or curtailed, but those to the United Kingdom and France as well are being considerably reduced. I do not know what the government had in mind in connection with this matter, and in this instance I say "the government" advisedly because I believe the decision was made by treasury board. It seems rather unusual that there should have been intervention by treasury board in a matter of this sort, particularly when it involves a service provided by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The explanation may be that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation international service has a budget that is entirely separate from the corporation's domestic budget.

Mr. Nowlan: External affairs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister points out that it is external affairs. I thought that was possibly the situation. In any event, when the minister speaks he will explain the situation in greater detail and justify the decision that has been made on the merits.

Now, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation international service, which was started in wartime, has been a post-war information and publicity arm of the Canadian government for about 16 or 17 years. For many years most of the government's Canadian overseas broadcasts have been to western Europe. In addition to direct broadcasting, Canadians have also recorded special program material here at the request of various European broadcasting bodies for use overseas. In recent years a portion of the transmission schedule has been devoted to propaganda broadcasts to countries behind the iron curtain. I understand that the change that has been made does not include curtailment of what are called propaganda broadcasts to the iron curtain countries. If that is the case, of course, I am in full support of the maintenance of that policy.

However, I question very much whether the saving, which I believe is estimated to be in the neighbourhood of some $400,000, is warranted when we consider the great disadvantages which I suspect will flow from this curtailment of service. It seems to me that the abandonment of broadcasts to countries like Norway, Sweden, Belgium, The Netherlands and Italy, and the cut-back in broadcasting to the United Kingdom and France, comes at a very bad time. This decision has been taken at a time when Canada is seeking to expand its export trade and to maintain existing markets, particularly in the light of the formation of new economic blocs in Europe such as the common market and the European free trade association. It seems to me that if the apprehensions of the Minister of Finance about these blocs are to be taken seriously—and I do not fully agree with the Minister of Finance—the government is placed in an embarrassing position by the decision which has been taken.

It seems to me that these broadcasts, apart from the other advantages that flowed from them, provided an excellent advertising medium that is now being scrapped. This will interfere with the possibility of getting further trade with Europe and maintaining existing trade benefits. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation international service is being forced to terminate a service that has been in existence for over a decade, and completely disrupt its working relationships with various European radio broadcasting organizations. This is being done at a time when the Canadian need for exports virtually demands aggressive use of every publicity medium available.

Working relationships with broadcasting organizations in NATO partner countries are being eliminated arbitrarily, it seems to me, while jammed broadcasts to only hypothetical audiences behind the iron curtain are being continued. I do not quarrel with that procedure. In spite of our inability to determine exactly the nature of the reception of and the reaction to these broadcasts in iron curtain countries, I think it is important that this service should be maintained. This I have already insisted on.

However, it seems to me that there are two sides to the coin. The Soviet union is encouraging a program of careful broadcasting to the Scandinavian countries. For instance, I am advised that quite recently the Soviet union began a series of broadcasts, very cleverly concealed, to some of these Scandinavian countries, namely Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Holland. While these broadcasts have been going on for years in some form, they have now taken on a new form. They offer well edited propaganda material addressed to the appetite for local news on the part of the people in Scandinavia. This propaganda is aimed particularly at these countries and is addressed to them by giving these people not news of events of an international character but news of local events in Norway and the other Scandinavian countries, and associating with this local news extremely sinister propaganda. This expansion is being carefully followed by the foreign offices, I am sure, of many countries.

It seems to me that a country like Canada, whose international service has been so widely appreciated in Scandinavia as well as in other nations of western Europe, should think carefully before dispensing with its service at a time when the Soviet union has increased and accelerated its broadcasts to the same European area.

My views on these matters may not be based on a full appreciation of all the factors involved. I can only state my point of view as I see it in the light of information that is made available to me. I hope that either the minister will deal with this situation directly or that the matter will be carefully gone into when the committee is established and there will be an opportunity of examining the officials of the corporation. However, as the minister has indicated that the decision is one for the Department of External Affairs itself and not for the corporation, perhaps he would think that the desirable moment to deal with it would be before the house had actually dealt with and passed the motion.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few rather brief comments on this question.

First, I should like to say how fully I agree with what was said by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi as to what we owe to the C.B.C. and as to the importance of this committee dealing carefully and wisely with the subject. I should also like to say that I think the hon. member for Essex East has raised a question which is well worth our most serious consideration.

As to the remainder of my short speech, Mr. Speaker, I am going to take a rather cowardly course; I am going to quote, as far as you will allow me to do so, an extract from the speech made last July by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan). It is so good that I should like to think I had written it myself; if I work hard enough at it I may be able to persuade myself that I did so.

The minister was talking about the position of the corporation and he has this to say, as reported at page 6193 of Hansard of July 13, 1960. He speaks of those who—

> —from time to time approach me asking why I permitted this or that to happen, or why I did or did not take action of a particular kind—

He describes the function of the minister as follows:

> —the minister is here only to report to parliament for the C.B.C., and that he has no power whatsoever to exercise control over that corporation. That is a matter of law, that is a matter of statute, and that is a matter of public policy.

Then he goes on to refer to the fact that we in this party should be especially interested because it was R. B. Bennett who set up the corporation. May I digress for one moment in order to say that I think up to the moment history has dealt rather shabbily with that great man who founded many things that have been useful, including the C.B.C. and the Bank of Canada. The Minister of National Revenue pointed out that we in this party should be especially interested in the C.B.C. for that reason. I should like to think that we would be interested. Then the minister, speaking on the principle of the independence of the C.B.C., goes on to say this:

> That principle has been continued, and that has been the finding of every royal commission since which has made recommendations on the subject, in addition to about every parliamentary committee, and there have been around 20 of them since the corporation was established.
> It is embarrassing at times. There are times when I should like to be able to exercise some control and power, but if there is sometimes embarrassment and frustration on the one side there is, on the other side, the obvious danger of having a public service such as the C.B.C. brought under political control.

Then the minister goes on to refer to those who think it might be a good thing to sell the C.B.C., and he says this:

> Such suggestions have sometimes been specifically associated with this party.

Then with that frankness and directness that we all like in the Minister of National Revenue he states:

> Undoubtedly that is true; there are a few of them. There are a few also, I think, in other parties from time to time. The Conservative party has no monopoly of that viewpoint by a long shot. There are people who have been hauled screaming and protesting into the twentieth century and still think they live in the eighteenth.

I like that reference. It seems to me to be right on the target. I should like to quote further:

> We respect their views—

That is to say, the views of these eighteenth century people.

> —but certainly as far as this government is concerned I want to say again what has been said from time to time, namely that we believe in the C.B.C.; we support the corporation, and as long as this government is in power—and, I hope, as long as any government is in power—that policy will be maintained; because I am quite certain that if any government attempted to destroy that principle they would be heaved out of office so rapidly that they would never know what struck them.

I am glad to read those words. I believe them. As I take my seat I should just like to say this. While we shall be sometimes irritated and while we shall often feel that somebody is gunning at us, we had better remember that we are party politicians and that we are not as independent as all that in our judgment. Furthermore, we had better remember that the nation is poor indeed that has not some organization—we have churches, universities and now the C.B.C.—which is trying to bring to the public the things by which, after all, life is dignified. I refer to the things of the intellect and the things of the spirit. Anyone who listens to the Wednesday evening C.B.C. broadcasts knows that what I say is true. We may not always approve of these programs. We may sometimes think there are on the programs nothing but eggheads. Nevertheless they are holding up an ideal which none of us can afford to disregard.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of the three speakers who have preceded me. This does not mean that I have not appreciated the remarks of the hon. member who spoke initially in this debate, namely the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who perhaps spoke most closely to the motion and raised a point on which I hope we shall hear from the minister, namely the vagueness of the motion.

I have been reading it over and over again. I suppose the committee could proceed in spite of the vagueness of the motion. I do not know whether I agree with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in his contention that the motion might spell out in more particular terms exactly what the committee is going to deal with. I have been a member of the broadcasting committee and I suppose I have been at as many of its meetings in the past as anyone but the chairman of the committee. I am not very sanguine about spelling out beforehand the chores the committee should do, because so much will depend upon the wisdom of the members themselves and the pace they set. I would be tempted to think that we could define a number of problems which the committee could approach on an ad hoc basis. That might be more effective than what the hon. member suggested.

It seems to me we should begin with the Broadcasting Act itself. I agree with the hon. member that we have had what amounts to an undertaking from the minister that this act should be reviewed as soon as possible, that this review should have taken place last year, and that, consequently we might expect it this session. The advantage of reviewing the Broadcasting Act at the beginning of the committee's work would seem to me to be this; that it would familiarize us all with details we tend to forget concerning the various rights and duties of the board of broadcast governors and of the C.B.C.

We expected that last session the committee would deal with the brief and the views of the Canadian association of broadcasters, that is, with the private interests. I know this group is anxious to come before the committee. Whether we should start there or with the board of broadcast governors or with some other problem is, I suggest, a matter which can be left to the wisdom of the committee.

I would be much more appreciative of the attitude of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate if I could feel that on this committee he had been one of the more constructive members. He has taken an active part, and we all have great respect for his intelligence and industry, but it seems to me he has a greater capacity for drawing red herrings in front of the committee's nose than any other member in the house. These herrings usually consist of charges connected with political advantage on the lines of "I suppose this is only what one might expect from the Tories" and everything explodes.

I do not want to suggest that I have a great deal more faith in these wicked Tories than the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, but I do wonder whether a committee which should move along calmly from point to point in order to cover the whole subject is the place to be continually jabbing and prodding with the kind of political charges which cause the meetings to flare up, send the newsmen scurrying for telephones and, in effect, interrupt the smooth progress of the committee's work.

I hope that this session the committee will have a new chairman because of the elevation to ministerial level of the hon. member for London (Mr. Halpenny), and that we shall now have a chairman who will be able to direct the committee in a smooth and cool manner.

In terms of ad hoc problems with which the committee might deal—if the minister is not prepared to give an undertaking that the government wishes the committee, and will so direct the chairman, to review the Broadcasting Act—the hon. member who spoke for the Liberal party stressed the question of the principle of licensing, and reiterated his doubts about the television licence which was awarded in Toronto. I know I heard a story the other day about one of the producers of this new concern who was told by the management that he must remember this was "a Conservative television station".

I do not attach too much credit to that particular story, but I do think this system of awarding television licences, as we see it in operation in the Toronto area, raises problems for the C.B.C. itself. I look at the Toronto stations, particularly the one which is now providing television as it ought to be, and I see a close connection with a newspaper, the Telegram, which I think openly supports, editorially, the present government. I do not complain about that as such, but when I look at the C.B.C. I get more and more the impression that it is the extension of another Toronto newspaper, the Toronto Star. Perhaps I should not put it as blatantly as that, but I know that a number of the headliners who work for C.B.C. television also work for the Star and made their reputations on the C.B.C. before they became what could be called valuable properties and were hired by the Star. Five or six of the great hired by the channel 6 happen to be employed by that newspaper.

If I have any preference it would be for the Star as compared with the Telegram, because I think it is the more interesting newspaper, but it seems to me we have created a situation where the two evening newspapers in the city, each of them somewhat given to sensationalism, have definite links with the two television stations in Toronto. I do not know how a parliamentary committee can apply its wisdom to this situation, but it does seem to me that our licensing system has got us into what could be quite a competitive log jam. I suppose the people in Toronto area will be the final judges, but the question of the principle behind the T.V. licence awards to newspaper owners is certainly something we should know more about.

There is a case, and I should like to see the committee deal with it, relating to the Prince George television station. I have had communications from that area both of a general and of a particular nature which would indicate that here, perhaps more clearly than elsewhere, political influence has been at work, but again I do not know whether this is the kind of thing which should be investigated in detail before a parliamentary committee. Certainly the people who write to members of this house think it should. I have also received a letter or two from the Halifax area indicating that political influences have been at work there as well.

I mention these things to show that the committee could spend its whole career dealing with charges of political favouritism in connection with licensing. I think the best way to approach the licensing problem would be to get the head of the board of broadcast governors before us, forget about other witnesses, and keep pressing and questioning him, perhaps in continuous session for two or three days, in order to get the whole thing cleared up through his point of view. I suggest that cross-examination of Dr. Stewart might in the long run tell us more, if we persisted, than an attempt to investigate charges of political favouritism in all parts of the country where licences have been awarded.

At the same time, I know that such cross-examination would be difficult. As I think anyone who has tried to examine Dr. Stewart will realize, he is very quick on his feet and is a master at shifting his ground. I do not mean by this that he is Machiavellian, but he is extremely careful. I think that should be the challenge to the committee, and we will see what we can do.

Another point which it seems to me the committee might examine, both with the head of the C.B.C., Mr. Ouimet, and Dr. Stewart, is the effect of what might be called the C.B.C.'s new policy of commercialism. I know this is a reflection of the ukase or the request or the suggestion contained in both the Fowler report and the report of the broadcasting committee of two years ago that the corporation should go out after more advertising revenue, but in the process this has raised in the minds of many of its supporters the question whether it might not have lost the role it used to play.

The suggestion is that the effective commercial competition which the corporation is now carrying out with the private stations must mean, to some degree, a lessening of the corporation's old role as a leader in education and public affairs because it has had to move in the direction of more popular programs—variety shows, western stories, and so on—as a result of which the corporation has lost something of its reputation as a cultural dike. This whole cultural question is something that is almost in the realm of philosophy. It seems to me the only way the committee can handle it sensibly is to seek evidence from the heads of the C.B.C., the B.B.G. and the C.A.B.

There was some laughter in the chamber when the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi made the common error of appearing to confuse the C.B.C. with the C.C.F. I have felt the ramifications of this type of error. I have expressed criticism and C.C.F. supporters have asked, "What are you trying to do? This is really our organization." This does not mean they feel it is a C.C.F. agency but that it is almost completely what the C.C.F. felt a crown corporation should be and do in this field. It almost completely reflects our approach to crown corporations in the field of public affairs and culture.

I think we should look again at the C.B.C. because of the extent of its commercialism and the coming on the scene of private television stations. I believe we are in a period of great change and transition. No one really knows what is going to be the final squaring away, especially in terms of income, of this competition and the whole future of private networks.

In its approach this year I think the committee should be tentative in its appraisal. We should think more in terms of scrutiny than in terms of a report that would try to direct or influence. It is certainly apparent that the financing of the C.B.C. in its present form leaves the corporation open to a more direct form of pressure than was recommended by the Fowler commission, and more than was previously the case.

I know there has been great exception taken across the country by certain people and certain newspaper editorialists to the C.B.C.'s annual report and its suggestion that you are a shareholder in the C.B.C. and that for so much expenditure per head you get this wonderful programming. It has been pointed out that in this sense the C.B.C. is not really a company in which each listener is a shareholder, that this is a confusion you might say of the advertising men. The point is, however, that the C.B.C. does cost us a lot of money, and as politicians we all hear pragmatic arguments in this regard.

For example, the maritimes have set up a hoot and a holler. They want the entire national hockey league game televised Saturday night. That is not the only part of the country that will express that desire. The argument is put to us at home that hockey is a Canadian game and extremely popular; therefore why should we not have it televised from start to finish. I know the minister will be well aware that such matters as the questions of cost and sponsors and arranging clear time in an evening are not arguments to which the people care to listen.

On the question of financing, the views we express and the recommendations we put forward in the committee could be related to what we think of the increased commercialism of the C.B.C. There is one point on which it seems to me the committee might spend some time and to which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate could make a great contribution, because I know he was on the committee that reviewed the Canada Elections Act and discussed the broadcasting situation to a degree in so far as it affects politics. In essence, the political aspect of broadcasting in Canada was determined by that committee rather than by the one now under discussion. It is still an issue in my mind, however. It came closely home to me the other day in watching the complete, almost hour-long telecast of the press conference of the new President of the United States which came from a United States station and had a tremendous impact in Canada.

I think this will be the forerunner of a tradition that is going to make us again very vulnerable to United States influence. Because of its newsworthiness and importance, even in Canadian terms, there will be strong demand to have these news conferences of the President televised regularly and carried trans-Canada. I think it is the kind of program that would have vast appeal.

As a result of this I think the following question will be raised. What are we going to do about our own political figures, such as the Prime Minister, in presenting them to Canadian audiences? It may well be that if J.F.K. is the great president he seems to be in embryo, we could have the same kind of love affair take place between him and the Canadian people that took place between Canadians and F.D.R. If that should be the case it will mean that Canadians will come under the influence of a political figure who is not operating on the Canadian scene but who is the man next door. There is nothing tremendously bad about that, but it is a problem in that once again we will be looking to an influence other than Canadian to crystallize our identity and give us leadership. It raises the question of what balance we can put forward within our own broadcasting framework to offset this kind of development and illuminate our own leaders.

I can speculate that it would be impossible for the Prime Minister of Canada to have this kind of conference because of our different constitutional framework. Both the limitations and the advantages under which our Prime Minister operates are different from those affecting the United States president. I suggest, however, that our committee should be in a position to consider some of the developments opening up in the political field, such as the president's press conference, which was televised.

Another point comes to mind. I imagine that every hon. member from the Toronto area is wondering what is going to be the position of the new station in Toronto as election time comes near, in the amount of free time it will clear for election purposes. Is it going to carry the same broadcasts the C.B.C. carries? Will this be required? A second thing about this station comes to my mind. How will they sell their time to political parties, if they have time for sale? What is going to be the principle upon which this will be established? As the regulations now stand, I think there are a few loopholes that may need correcting.

We have had a situation in my own area where time has been available for sale to all political parties, and while it has not resulted in ructions bursting out, it could have done so. On one occasion during an election campaign I reserved some time. I got there first, so I was able to secure the last half hour of the campaign. Someone else with great influence came along later, and it turned out that I did not have the last half hour. I did not complain about it at the time; I felt that overexposure of my rival was perhaps to my advantage, and let it go at that. However, in another situation I think we would need a more hard and fast rule, and it seems to me the committee might explore this question.

I have a hunch that an election is not too far away. It may not be this year, but certainly if the committee is going to recommend anything in this field it is likely that it will have only this session to consider the matter; because I am sure that next session, if we have one, the orientation will be all to the hustings, and away we will go.

The hon. member for Essex East raised a question about the international service and its cut-down. This is the kind of issue that, speaking for our party, we regret very much; but speaking as an individual representing a constituency in the centre of the country this does not arouse much interest. I know that the people in my area would not be particularly interested in this. I have to force myself to be interested because, in the centre of a continental nation, it is difficult to get concerned about the particular image of Canada that might be going abroad through something like shortwave radio services.

It is, however, a question with various sides to it. I suggest that in an ad hoc way officials of the Department of External Affairs appear before the committee and give us some kind of assessment of the impact of the programs as they have gone on, and in essence what their impact signifies in the impression Canada makes abroad.

The question of the cultural role of the C.B.C. and of private stations in the next year will probably hinge closely upon the 55 per cent Canadian content rule. It is awfully tempting to laugh at or become satirical about this 55 per cent of Canadian content. It reminds me of the beer labels that we used to have in Ontario showing the alcoholic content ranging from 5 per cent to 12 per cent. When you take a drink of whisky from something sold by the Ontario liquor control board you wonder just how much of it is water. There is something almost silly, when you look at it, about the rule that we are going to have 55 per cent of Canadian content.

Someone pointed out in a newspaper today, that if you listen to "Critically Speaking" you find that it may be a Canadian program, originated for Canadians, but most of the time the accent of the speaker tends to be English. We have had a great deal of difficulty with the census form in determining just what is Canadian. It seems "Canadian" means that you are a whole host of other things, depending on what your father once happened to be. This could go all the way back to Adam, I suppose, if you are a fundamentalist, and could raise tremendous difficulties. The same thing is going to apply in so far as the 55 per cent Canadian content is concerned. Our party's view is that this is a good rule, but its application will require not only fairness but, it seems to me, a certain sense of humour.

The orientation of so much programming in Canada tends toward metropolitan areas such as Toronto. Here again is something that a member from, let us say, a distant part of the country that is not within the sway of that particular metropolitan influence hears a lot of, and on which many complaints seem to centre. I am sure that the complaints with respect to the private stations and the private networks, the same as the C.B.C., will centre on the fact that we always seem to be seeing the same faces; that there is not enough variety; that we have too few hosts in T.V. for too many parasites in terms of programs.

The viewers are always complaining that they get sick and tired of seeing the same characters: Charles Templeton, Pierre Berton, Lister Sinclair, Dr. Blatz, Nathan Cohen, Gordon Sinclair and so on, all very much Toronto oriented.

Well, it is one of my contentions, and I think it would be the contention of many other members in this house, that Toronto does not contain all the finest attributes, and is not the sole reservoir of talent. I would point out to the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee), who is laughing, that even the fact that some of us appear here as members of parliament is an indication that there is talent outside of Toronto. I would really like to see the committee give some consideration at first to this question of talent in relation to the 55 per cent rule and a bit of investigation as to why more of it is not combed out of, let us say, the brakes and the bushes of the country, and why so much of it is the same, all or nearly all from Toronto.

In the past the committee has been a lively one. I would hope that it will continue to be lively but in a bit more constructive way. I make my reservations because I see the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is going to be a member of that committee. I can see where there will be storm and stress. Again I am trying to speculate as to who would be the ideal committee chairman.

An hon. Member: Will you be available?

Mr. Fisher: Yes, with pleasure; but I am thinking of the hon. member from Calgary South, who has proved himself so invaluable down at the United Nations. I am just hoping that he will almost preach for a call during this debate.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps you should elect the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate chairman, and then your fears would be over.

Mr. Fisher: That is a suggestion I would be only too willing to accept. I would like to see him in the role of chairman. I think that as an editor he has done a remarkable disservice to one of the great Liberal prime ministers of Canada, and if he can do as well in his role of chairman it would be intriguing to us, his rivals. I want to go on and suggest that the hon. member for Calgary South ought to come in and preach for the call. I am suggesting to him that he would make as competent a chairman of the broadcasting committee as he did of other committees.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased at this time to see that the government is again taking steps to set up a special committee on broadcasting. I am sure that all members of the house are well aware of the importance of this committee. In my view there are many very important aspects of the operations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation with which the committee undoubtedly will be dealing. Some of them are extensions of the services of the C.B.C., programming, private stations, Canadian content, the financial structure of the C.B.C. and many other subjects. As hon. members may have noticed, in mentioning these different subjects which I sincerely hope the committee will deal with I placed extension of services in the top position. Despite the fact that these other aspects of C.B.C. operations are of great importance, I believe personally that the extension of television services and the improvement of radio reception in some parts of Canada should be given top priority.

I have listened with interest to the remarks of various members who have spoken on the resolution before the house, and I wish to concur in particular with some of the remarks made, such as the statement that we must keep watch at all times to prevent political interference with the C.B.C. or any crown corporation. In this regard, however, I feel that the committee has special duties and functions to perform. I listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). He brought out some very good points and in relating his impression of what this committee should do he said, if I heard him correctly, that the committee should scrutinize but that it should not put itself in the position of influencing or directing in any way the operations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I cannot quite bring myself to agree wholeheartedly with that statement because in my view the committee can do a very worthwhile job after scrutinizing the operations of the C.B.C. by bringing in recommendations as to what the members of the committee believe should be done to improve the operations of this crown corporation. If those members who are fortunate enough to sit on this committee are merely to scrutinize the evidence presented to them and not suggest recommendations or give leadership as to what members of the house believe should be done, then I cannot see the point in a committee of this nature convening. Therefore

I must disagree with that portion of the remarks of the member for Port Arthur.

I believe that any time the house is confronted with expenditures in the neighbourhood of some $80 million by a crown corporation and we have the estimates before us involving the approval or otherwise by the house of such an amount of money, neither the house nor the committee on broadcasting should in any way, shape or form rubber-stamp estimates of this nature. I agree that there should not be political interference but I also believe that in many respects direction should be given by the house through the broadcasting committee as to what the house believes should be done. Whether or not these recommendations are carried out is in my opinion a matter for the house to deal with.

I should like to speak very briefly on a subject which I mentioned and which I hope will be gone into very thoroughly by the members of the broadcasting committee. I refer to the extension of services which I regard as a most important subject. To the best of my knowledge at this time I believe that from 82 to 86 per cent of the population of Canada are now serviced by C.B.C. television. My interest at this time mainly concerns that portion of the population of Canada which still remains to be serviced.

As the house well knows, I have made representations over the past three years with respect to the area I represent for consideration to be given to the provision of network television services in northern Manitoba. These representations have the full support of every resident of that area. I should like to take hon. members back a bit in the history of these representations just to put before the house a point with which I believe the committee should deal. Over the years we have requested the C.B.C. to provide network service to the areas of Dauphin, Swan River, The Pas and Flin Flon.

We made these representations to the very best of our ability. We made them in every quarter we thought would receive them. We have received very good co-operation from the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), the minister responsible for the C.B.C. We have received excellent co-operation from the officials of the C.B.C. We have even taken up the question with the Manitoba government and have received excellent co-operation from the Manitoba cabinet ministers concerned. However, we are not yet receiving the network facilities of the C.B.C. I am given to understand that it may be some time before we can expect to receive those services.

Hon. members may be aware of the fact that some time ago we had planned to have the C.B.C. investigate the possibility of servicing this area consisting of Dauphin, Swan River, The Pas and Flin Flon. A private television station at Yorkton, Saskatchewan, was interested at that time in extending its coverage and made application to the board of broadcast governors for permission to construct a satellite station in Manitoba which would increase the coverage of the Yorkton station and provide service for Dauphin and Swan River. The board of broadcast governors accepted this application and studied it very carefully. They dealt with it on two different occasions, and on each occasion they deferred it. Finally there was really no justification for deferring the matter further and, it is my understanding, the board of broadcast governors communicated with the C.B.C. to ascertain if its corporation had any immediate plans to service northern Manitoba with network facilities. The board received an answer to that specific question, and I understand they were informed the C.B.C. had no immediate plans. The board of broadcast governors therefore authorized the application of the Yorkton television station for the construction of this satellite station. At the moment the areas of Dauphin and Swan River are receiving television programs through this satellite station.

Immediately after that we made further representations to the C.B.C. but we were told that we had a good case when we had Dauphin and Swan River along with us. Those areas are serviced now. We are faced with the problem of jumping this gap and trying to get service into The Pas and Flin Flon. I think these are some of the things with which the committee should deal. I do not believe there was a sufficiently thorough study made by the board of broadcast governors and the C.B.C. in relation to this situation. I believe that if these two bodies had discussed the matter fully the C.B.C. would be planning now to provide network facilities for these areas in Manitoba. This result might have worked to the detriment of the Yorkton station, because I do not believe it would have been given a licence for that satellite. I say that a big mistake was made at that time. I am not being critical of the Yorkton television station, because I believe it is doing its best to provide adequate service. However, I have been in both of these areas and, despite the fact Yorkton is doing its utmost to give them the best service, the people in those areas generally are not satisfied.

In some areas the service provided by Yorkton is good, possibly as good as they would receive on the A contour of any station. However, in other areas the reception is certainly not adequate. I believe, therefore, the C.B.C. should take another look at that situation and get away from this idea that if they provided network facilities through Manitoba they would be duplicating the service. I think they would be improving the service greatly, and I think they should be directed to take a look at the situation.

I think the members of the house are well aware of the fact that some time ago, during the hearings on the station at Edmonton in which the C.B.C. received permission to operate a station there, the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Mr. Ouimet, made a public announcement to the effect it was the intention of the corporation to provide sufficient funds in this year's estimates for a kinescope service for The Pas and Flin Flon. Everyone interested in television realizes what a kinescope service is, possibly realizes it better than I do. My understanding is that this is strictly a canned service and that programs which are generally well received in Canada such as sporting events, the news and programs of that nature are not included in this service. I must admit that this type of service is much better than nothing at all, but I have a feeling that if this kinescope service is established it may be many years before another look is taken at these areas.

The frustrating part of the whole thing so far as I am concerned is the fact that during the study of this problem the C.B.C. was dealing with the Manitoba telephone system, the Manitoba government and various other people. The point which seemed to defeat the idea of putting live television into that area was the cost of renting the microwave facilities. The C.B.C. advises me that they do not construct these microwave facilities, but rent them from other carrying agencies in Canada. The cost of renting these services was the difficulty the C.B.C. could not surmount. I might say that I have been told a figure of $289,000 was the annual rental quoted to the C.B.C. for these facilities. This is a large amount of money, and I realize the C.B.C. would have to take a very serious look at that.

However, since that time various negotiations have been conducted and different types of service have been suggested, services without all the protective features of the service that goes across the main microwave system. Negotiations have reduced the gap to the point where there is only—I realize even this is a large figure—$100,000 annually separating the cost of providing kinescope and the cost of providing network facilities on the C.B.C. One hundred thousand dollars is a great deal of money. However, if they are going to put this kinescope service into northern Manitoba and are possibly not going to look at the situation again for another seven or eight years, I believe it will be a shame if this $100,000 annual charge is going to prevent these people in northern Manitoba from receiving network service for the next eight or ten years.

Those are some of the things that I think the committee should look at very carefully. I think they should look at them because I firmly believe that if they had been looked at and studied carefully by both the B.B.G. and the C.B.C. in the first place a network service would be going into that area at this time.

I also say that, as northern Manitoba is developing rapidly, if we put a kinescope service into Flin Flon and The Pas it will probably be not more than a year or two until the mining areas of Snow Lake and Thompson and Lynn Lake are going to be clamouring—and justifiably so—for the television service of the C.B.C.; and here again we are going to be confronted with the question, is it going to be kinescope or is it going to be live network? If it is going to be live network, then at that time it still has to be put through all the way to Flin Flon and further north. I think the committee should take a firm look at this matter and make a recommendation to both the C.B.C. and the B.B.G. to the effect that when any extension of services is contemplated the proper planning should be done so that duplication will not be necessary in the future. I sincerely hope that I shall have the opportunity of again being a member of the committee.

Before resuming my seat I should like to say that I am still of the opinion that this committee must come up with some recommendations and that it is up to this committee to see that those recommendations are carried out. That procedure, in my opinion, is not political interference. If a recommendation or a directive from a committee is going to be considered political interference, we have two alternatives. We have the alternative of rubber-stamping estimates in the neighbourhood of $80 million or there is no necessity for the committee to sit in the first place.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I was glad to hear the minister, when he introduced this resolution, say that it had been drawn in wide terms in order to provide a full and complete investigation of all matters respecting broadcasting and telecasting, both public and private. The act under which our system of combined public and private broadcasting was set up defines the functions and powers of the public corporation; but apart from mentioning the development of Canadian talent I could not find in it anything about the role which radio and television programs should play in serving the national interest.

We all know that radio and television facilities are powerful agencies for providing entertainment, information and enlightenment to our people. Present day realities, however, are far different from those of 40 years ago or even those of 1936 when the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was brought into existence. In those days perhaps it was not necessary to think beyond the three objectives I have just mentioned. Today, however, we are engaged in a war of ideologies, a deadly life and death struggle from which only one side can emerge victorious. Under these present day conditions we must keep in mind then the fact that radio and television facilities are not only the means of providing entertainment, information and enlightenment but are also the most powerful and useful weapons available in this battle for the minds and souls of men.

It is therefore evident that the role of our broadcasting service is an important matter. In right hands it can be a strong shield against subversion and a powerful offensive weapon in the cause of freedom. In wrong hands it can be used against us to destroy our freedom and to bring about our destruction. As the C.B.C. is a publicly-owned corporation, the management is charged with the tremendous responsibility of seeing to it that our public radio and television programs are of such a nature and are provided by such means and in such a manner that the national interest is at all times fully safeguarded.

In view of this change in conditions that has taken place over the past 30 years I feel that it would be helpful to the management of the C.B.C. if, in addition to defining the powers and the functions of the corporation, the Broadcasting Act contained some guide and direction as to the responsibilities of the corporation in safeguarding our national interest and as to the role the broadcasting service should play in achieving this result.

The C.B.C. can do much to strengthen Canada by helping to build a sound national character which is the real strength of every nation and by helping to build unity between our various groups and regions which have conflicting interests. The C.B.C. can do this by clarifying the moral issues involved and by helping us to unite on the basis of what is morally right.

The C.B.C. can strengthen democracy by defining and propagating the values and principles essential to the development of a free society. It can protect and strengthen Canada against the penetration of foreign ideologies by broadcasting to the four corners of our nation the answer to division, disunity and subversion. It can alert us to the danger of ideological factors and it can bring an answering ideology to our people. It can do all this by utilizing programs which at the same time will provide entertainment of the very highest quality.

From personal knowledge I know that such programs are available for I have seen them. For this reason I feel that specific objectives of the role of the broadcasting service should be written into the act as a directive by parliament in the interest of national security and I ask that the committee consider this suggestion.

A moment ago I said that in wrong hands or in the hands of people not fully alive to the realities of the present day ideological conflict the C.B.C. could be used against us to destroy our freedom and bring about our destruction. It can do this by weakening and undermining our national character and in particular by weakening our loyalties and our will to resist aggression and by fostering division and disunity through keeping alive our old hates, fears and prejudices. It can weaken Canada by propagating a foreign ideology and this is done by emphasizing false ideas such as the idea of peaceful coexistence and the idea that democracy does not need any ideology. It can do so also by emphasizing false issues and alternatives such as "Better red than dead" or "Accomodation or annihilation". Those of us who have seen what has happened in Hungary, Cuba and other countries taken over by the communists know that being red is synonymous with being dead as far as fighters for freedom are concerned.

I would be the first to admit that the C.B.C. has provided some excellent programs both from the technical and from the artistic viewpoint, but as a member of parliament who is concerned about the security of Canada and the threat to our freedom, I must say I am a little frightened at the amount of brainwashing and subversive propaganda which goes out over the C.B.C. day after day at the taxpayers' expense. Even many of the high quality programs to which I have referred contain subtle, ideological messages which serve the interest of those who are dedicated to destroying us instead of serving the true interests of Canada. In addition to these programs, I am also appalled at the extent to which the C.B.C. provides a national platform for subversives, some well known and others not so well known, a platform from which issues a barrage of ideas and points of view which have their origin in the Kremlin.

There are many indications of a growing disquietude among the Canadian people with regard to this aspect of the C.B.C.'s operations. In the little time I have to watch and listen to the programs put out by the C.B.C., I have seen and heard enough personally to be able to give positive evidence to the committee in support of the statements I have just made. Letters which I receive, together with personal contacts, convince me that an ever widening circle of thoughtful people share my concern about the way the Canadian public is being brainwashed without realizing it.

This resolution gives the committee power to send for people and papers. In the past it has been the practice to send mainly for officials of the C.B.C. and representatives of the private broadcasting organizations. I think it is important that the committee should hear not only the views of the producers but also of the consumers of these programs. I suggest that the committee should provide an opportunity for representatives of organizations, such as the Canadian Legion, parent-teacher associations, religious bodies, and others to present their views. Representatives of the various ethnic groups and organizations representing our new Canadians might be asked to appear. All could make valuable suggestions and I hope, therefore, that the committee will make a special effort to provide these various groups with an opportunity to put forward their points of view.

Mr. McGrath: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would the hon. member identify the document from which he was reading?

Mr. Carter: Yes. It was Routine Proceedings and Orders of the Day.

Mr. Arthur Smith (Calgary South): I want to say a few words at this point. Having listened to some of the previous speakers give their views of the various problems which they suggest could be examined in the special committee on broadcasting it has occurred to me that we should perhaps first decide in our minds what exactly our responsibility is as parliamentarians to broadcasting, not just to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation but to the independent broadcasters and, of course, to the board of broadcast governors.

I say this in all seriousness because it seems to me that the line of demarcation between the direction or the persuasion that we might give is, indeed, very thin, but I think it is very important that we should have this line, thin though it be, very clearly defined. Each of us has the right to express his own views and I intend, before going into the area of examination, to give my interpretation of that responsibility. This does not apply only to the committee on broadcasting. It applies to many of the committees which this house sets up from time to time. I suggest, though, that broadcasting does have some very special significance because those who are engaged in public communication of this type have for the most part a very exclusive licence, one which is largely created because, there are only so many available channels and consequently so many available licences.

Obviously, then, those who hold the licences, whether for television or radio broadcasting, have a responsibility to parliament which, in the final analysis, decides through its agencies who should receive permission to carry out their functions.

I suggest our responsibility is just this: that as a committee we are expected to give the most searching analysis to every facet of broadcasting, whether it be the Broadcasting Act, whether it be the public corporation, the private broadcasters or the board of broadcast governors. We would then proceed, as we have done in the past to prepare a report for submission to parliament. Such a report is not necessarily binding, either on the corporation or on the private broadcasters. If it were binding we should have to ask ourselves why we had set up the board of broadcast governors and why the corporation had a board of directors to govern its affairs. Indeed, we should have to ask ourselves why we had given regulatory officials responsibility to carry out the duties which they have.

That does not mean parliament has not still a very important responsibility. If at any time we are unhappy about the principle of the regulations which are being provided, or the way in which these regulations are being carried out, we have, of course, every authority and responsibility as a parliament to change the rules or the principles governing these particular agencies, or the officials concerned. But I think it is important before we go into committee to remind ourselves that we have only the right and the authority to produce a report and make recommendations and not at this stage to direct or legislate. We are not dictating to any of these boards or telling them how to carry out their responsibilities. I fall back on the argument that if this were the case there would be no purpose in setting up these responsible bodies.

I have suggested that the corporation should come back before the committee. Having made an examination some two years ago and produced a report I think it is important for us to analyse what has happened to our recommendations. I emphasize again that the bodies concerned are not bound to accept these recommendations, but they certainly have the responsibility to indicate what action they have taken or if they have ignored the recommendations, to indicate on what basis they have done so.

On the question of the corporation's whole financial structure I think the committee should be given some indication of whether there has been any attempt made to more efficiently commercialize the corporation and, if so, to what extent this has succeeded. I realize that for years to come the C.B.C. under its present structure, will have to be subsidized to a considerable degree. I have never disputed this fact.

But having said that, and as one who took part in an analysis of the financial structure, and because of the geography of Canada and the importance and necessity of the C.B.C., Canadian taxpayers of course, would have to subsidize much of the programming. My examination was based on this question: Is there any real effort made to recover any portion of the funds which the commercial operator is expected to recover as a private broadcaster? I will expect to receive an answer to this question.

I have one actual example of the C.B.C. taking to heart our recommendation. I refer to the Rose Bowl game. In my own city I raised a complaint that the Rose Bowl game was not televised throughout Canada. I received the highly logical reply that only a few stations had asked for it, that no sponsor could be found for the program and if it were carried it would represent a substantial cost that would have to come from the public treasury. That is an example drawn from my personal experience which indicates that the corporation has become conscious of the need to meet the cost of unsponsored programs, unless there is an overwhelming demand for them as a public service. I believe this is an indication that the committee's report last year has had some influence.

In fact, while this committee was severely criticized by some of the press in Canada it has had many beneficial influences. I agree with those who said that in some respects the committee was conducted rather like a circus. I am not of course speaking of the conduct of the chairman but of the committee members themselves and the behaviour of the committee to which, of course, I contributed. Nevertheless, I think it was an excellent committee in that it did produce satisfactory results in many respects. I think it would be wrong to discredit the work of the committee simply because there were unfortunate events which transpired in one or two of its sittings.

Turning to another aspect of the corporation, I think it should be asked to consider whether in its desire to be competitive, the corporation has perhaps gone to the opposite extreme in lowering its rate structure unduly. I am not sitting in judgment of the corporation at this point but I do think this relationship with private broadcasting should be closely examined.

Let us move on from the corporation to the responsibilities we expect to be met by the private broadcaster in view of the fact that he has this rather exclusive licence to communicate to the public. I think we should ask him whether in some instances he is really running a commercial or advertising vehicle and if he is living up to the principles enunciated by the board of broadcast governors. In our examination of the role of the private broadcaster we should make it clear that we, as representatives of the people, as parliamentarians, demand of him the same standards and integrity in broadcasting that we ask of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

What, then, of the board of broadcast governors? They have now had an opportunity to function for over a year. They have established certain principles governing the conduct of all broadcasting in Canada. I, like many other Canadians, am a little suspicious that perhaps some of the rules are not sufficiently flexible and I wonder if they have attempted to blanket the industry with certain fixed requirements such as the 55 per cent Canadian content regulation and, having applied it, said, "This is something to which all must adhere without regard to the quality of programming." We have the responsibility of making an assessment of the new regulations to see if they are beneficial to the broadcasting industry as such and to ensure that the individual consumer is receiving the standard of broadcasting to which he is entitled.

I return to my earlier point that even after conducting this examination committee members have the individual responsibility to report their considered views to parliament. We are not, however, in the committee stage dictating what must take place following the filing of the report.

I turn now to an area of this field where I have the most difficulty defining for myself where our responsibility lies. When the committee was set up two years ago I said I felt it would be difficult for us to attempt to define what was a good or bad radio or television program. Like most viewers we are laymen in the field even though we had on the committee in the last two years many professionals with much experience. However, we will never have two similar views concerning the value of one program as compared with another.

We have the responsibility, first of all, to examine the chain of authority within the corporation. Our second responsibility is to examine its financial structure to see if the Canadian viewer receives a full measure of value for his broadcasting dollar without our deciding whether program A is as good as or better than program B. I would suggest that our third responsibility is to examine general policy and to attempt to answer the question: Where are we going in broadcasting as a whole in Canada? What is the current trend and direction? I think those are our basic responsibilities.

I do not agree with those who castigate the corporation by saying that it is not fulfilling its responsibilities. It has shortcomings, of course, but by and large I believe it is performing a satisfactory service. That does not mean, however, that we do not have a large area of examination and of possible constructive criticism.

Another part of our responsibility is that of making an assessment of those programs which have a vital influence on communities all across Canada. I can think of many in this category. It may be considered that I am contradicting my former statement that we should not evaluate one program as against another but I feel this is a different area in which we do have responsibility.

In my hand I hold a newspaper clipping dealing with a broadcast which I believe illustrates my point. The author of the editorial complains about television cameras invading Springhill and presenting what he considered to be a warped version of the disaster that occurred there. I saw that program and I considered that it was somewhat overdone. I can think of others as well including the well-known program "Background". On one occasion it attempted to explore the question of Canadian and United States relations. It started out on the faulty premise that relationships were not good and in support of the argument produced opinions garnered from the man on the street, so-called. To me the whole tenor of the program created an allusion and then set out to prove it with unsubstantiated facts.

Why is this matter important enough for consideration by the committee? Does it not fall into the category of personal criticism of a program? Have I not contradicted an earlier statement I made when I suggested it was not our responsibility to evaluate one program as compared with another? I suggest it is something more basic than that. In questions of vast national importance and widespread influence we have a responsibility to criticize the approach taken. In a televised discussion of the problem of unemployment, for instance, a subject of extreme importance, we as parliamentarians in my opinion have to assume some responsibility for examining and, if necessary, criticizing the approach taken.

I am not comparing "Hopalong Cassidy" with "Have Gun Will Travel" but I suggest that programs of the type to which I refer have an influence not only national but international and we have a real responsibility in this area. This is the general area of broadcasting I believe the committee should examine and the course I feel it should follow.

As has been suggested by other hon. members we should also examine the question of political relationships not only of the parties but of individuals. I confess that at this time I have no solution but I am confident that in our discussions we can arrive at methods by which we can make fair assessments. There will always be criticism on one side or the other but the corporation has the responsibility of reflecting the political aspect and environment of the country. What concerns me is that on some occasions they attempt to even things up by overdoing it with one party one day and then by going to the other extreme with another party the following day which is not a satisfactory way of carrying out that function.

In many of these areas of responsibility I shall attempt to do what I did last year. I shall attempt by analysis to come to some basic conclusions. As committee members we cannot ask more of one another. I agree with those who have said that this committee gives us an opportunity to attempt to achieve a constructive approach not only to small, isolated issues but also with respect to the future of broadcasting in exploring the question of what direction radio and television are following in the country.

In the meetings of the committee I will attempt as I am sure my colleagues on all sides of the house will, to see to it that the committee conducts itself in a manner that is a credit to parliament. It is my hope that the committee can return with recommendations that will win wide approval, not just on the basis of individual conviction but on the basis of sheer logic and which will be creative, constructive and beneficial to the broadcaster and public alike.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the views of this group in general were very ably put forward this morning by that provocative, political parliamentary prophet and philosopher, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). I say "provocative" purposely because he is a man of ideas. He does not worship at the altar of fixed dogma, whether it is related to personalities, philosophy or ideas.

In reading my correspondence, Mr. Speaker, I find it very interesting to learn that people do not all agree with the hon. member. I do not always necessarily agree in detail with the hon. member for Port Arthur, but at least he causes those people to think and that is a very important function of any agency or any member of parliament in our society.

Mr. McCleave: He is a great help to your party.

Mr. Herridge: In our opinion, Mr. Speaker, this committee could perform a very useful purpose—it does perform a useful purpose particularly in the changing conditions and circumstances that exist today with respect to radio and television—in an annual review of the circumstances with respect to the C.B.C., the public sector of broadcasting and the private stations.

The hon. member for Port Arthur suggested that there be recommendations, and if I heard him correctly one member rather criticized the suggestion that the committee should make recommendations. Let me say on behalf of this group that when the hon. member for Port Arthur mentioned a review and recommendations he did so in the same spirit as that mentioned by the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith), that is, in the fashion of an opposition member moving a motion urging the government to give consideration to so and so. They are simply suggestions made in accordance with the opinion of the members of the committee and public opinion; they are offered to the administration of the C.B.C. or the private stations in Canada in a helpful spirit.

I am not going to repeat the excellent analysis of the situation made by the hon. member or deal in detail with his suggestions or criticisms; I am simply going to emphasize one or two points which he made and which I think were warranted. First of all let me say that without a doubt there is a great support in Canada for the C.B.C., and when we offer some criticism, or make some suggestion, we do so in the same spirit as you would correct a child in the family of whom you are very fond, but who you want to see take the right direction and the right course of action. I hope that is clearly understood.

I think the hon. member made the point that there should be some clarification of the standard—and we agree it is necessary to set a standard—that the program content should be 55 per cent Canadian. I think he was on very sound ground. I think 55 per cent is good; you must have some goal to strive for. I do feel that what is meant by 55 per cent content of the program should be, as a result of the experience of the C.B.C. and the listening public in Canada, shall I say, more understandably and clearly defined.

The hon. member made some criticism of the fact that there was a tendency in the C.B.C. to confine the choosing of talent on radio and television to the Toronto area. I support him most heartily in that respect. Possibly it is not any individual's fault. Through some cultural inbreeding in the Toronto area I do think there has been a tendency on the part of those people to consider that creative activities are confined to small groups in the Toronto area and only a limited number of persons in Canada have the capacity to come up with new ideas. I am very pleased that the hon. member suggested that the C.B.C. should carry out a wider search for talent, I think he said in the bracken and the bush, if I heard him correctly. It did my heart good because I live in an area where there is a lot of bracken and bush.

Mr. Pickersgill: It must be a Conservative area.

Mr. Herridge: I do not live in an area of swamps and muskeg where 55 per cent of the population is supposed to be drawing welfare payments.

Mr. Pickersgill: That will get a lot of votes for your party.

Mr. Herridge: I am quoting the premier of Newfoundland.

Mr. Pickersgill: Read the Toronto Globe and Mail of this morning and you will find that that is an error.

Mr. Herridge: I want to make reference to some remarks made by the hon. member for Port Arthur and one or two other members, and some slight reference to the hour long television program with respect to President Kennedy's press conference. I am sure it was very informative, but we have to keep these things in balance. We in this group are doing the best we can, with the co-operation we receive, to put the present government out of power but at the same time we recognize that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) is the Prime Minister of Canada and we believe that more time should be provided for the Prime Minister of Canada, for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and for the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) who is the leader of this group in this house—

Mr. Pickersgill: Or the premier of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Herridge: —to bring before the people of Canada the important things which are being discussed and considered in this parliament and which are very directly related to their daily lives and the future of their children. I do urge that some consideration be given to that so that there is left on the public mind and on the young people's minds of this country the correct impression as to the importance of the parliament of Canada in relation to other governments and parliaments on the North American continent.

Having said that, I must say that I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) and his remarks about the C.B.C. brainwashing the Canadian public and suggesting some sort of, shall I say, code as to what they could do with respect to the presentation of ideas in this country. I think to most this is a new brand of Liberalism. I was thinking of some of the Gladstone speeches that I have read, and the speeches of Asquith, of Campbell Bannerman, of Lloyd George, and of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I am sure that not one of those great past leaders of the Liberal party would ever have suggested that there should be, shall I say, a control of thought on the national radio system of this country. We fought for freedom and freedom of expression, and every person in this country who obeys the law of this land and acts as a good citizen is entitled to that freedom of thought and that freedom of expression whether we disagree with it or not. I am one who believes that given freedom of thought and freedom of expression, in the clash of ideas truth will prevail. If we think otherwise, Mr. Speaker, we underestimate the common sense, the sanity, and the understanding of our democratic institutions on the part of the Canadian people.

I am now going to divert the direction of my thought from the general to the particular, and when I talk of particulars, Mr. Speaker, you will find me well within the confines of Kootenay West. Let me say that the people of the Rossland-Trail area and the Nelson area are very pleased indeed that finally the C.B.C. has erected a satellite station on Red mountain and also a satellite near Beasley bluffs in Nelson. Persons who are receiving C.B.C. programs now write me in numbers and express their pleasure at this opportunity to receive and hear the programs of our national broadcasting system. But when you do that you create an even greater demand on the part of people in the smaller communities who are denied this opportunity to hear C.B.C. programs in the same way as their neighbours in other communities.

I believe it was the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) who referred to the 18 or 20 per cent of Canadians who are still denied C.B.C. television programs. In my district, Mr. Speaker, there are some 5,000 or more people who to this date are denied the opportunity to hear C.B.C. radio programs while other places have had television service for years. I have had letters from these various places and I urge the minister to bring to the attention of the C.B.C. the great desire of these smaller communities to be served by C.B.C. programs, both radio and television. I have written letters on a number of occasions and have raised the question in the house year after year.

I was informed last year that the C.B.C. was reviewing the question. I realize all the difficulties. These are persons living in smaller communities of a thousand or less who are making a contribution to the wealth of this country, and I think persons living in the smaller communities are, if anything, entitled to receive special consideration because of the particular advantages that television and radio have given to those who are not denied the cultural activities that prevail in the larger centres. Therefore I do urge that this matter be given some consideration.

For years I have made representations in the house and to the appropriate ministers and officials about the need for some sort of satellite community television broadcasting stations, and I am not talking about cable stations at the present time but about those that simply receive the signal and rebroadcast it and which operate on batteries or some other motive power. I was very glad that the department under the former minister of transport gave consideration to this question, recognized the need and drew up a set of rules and regulations. I am very pleased to know that only two days ago the cabinet passed an order in council authorizing temporary licences for the Saddle mountain broadcasting station and the Mount Sentinel broadcasting station. These are temporary licences granted until these communities can in some way obtain C.B.C. programs.

All these stations pick up United States programs and in the first instance the people are pleased to receive them. But in conversation with hundreds of people and in letters I have received from my constituents they tell me that they want to receive the C.B.C. both on television and on radio.

I realize the difficulties. They are small communities and you cannot expect the public authority to maintain a staff in a small area. I suggest that these co-operative community owned stations are a good solution of the problem but in order that these smaller groups who are doing something for themselves will not waste their limited funds and will take the right course of action I suggest that the Department of Transport, the other departments concerned and the board of broadcast governors should extend further co-operation by providing technical advice through sending engineers there to advise these people as to how they can proceed. I hope that this matter will be given consideration so that the co-operative groups who are operating these satellite television stations may be advised as to how they can now proceed to improve or extend their equipment in order to receive C.B.C. programs.

What I have in mind is this. There is a station now on Saddle mountain which picks up Spokane on one or two channels. Kelowna some 60 miles to the west has C.B.C. programs and I understand from the engineers that by installing another satellite station on a mountain of the range in between it would be possible for the C.B.C. programs from Kelowna to be received and rebroadcast in the Arrow lakes area. I use that as an illustration. Such a project requires technical advice and some investigation, and I urge that the C.B.C. give consideration to assisting these community groups to help themselves to receive the programs of the C.B.C.

There is one other question of local importance. Over the years I have been urging the need for low power relay transmitters and according to the annoucement of the minister I understand that authority was granted the C.B.C. and funds were made available for the establishment of several of these low power relay transmitters in British Columbia. Three of these were to be established in Kootenay West no doubt because the need was the greatest there, one at Nakusp, one in the Balfour-Procter area and one in the Salmo area. Because these people are denied the opportunity to listen to Canadian programs there is growing impatience over the delay that has gone on for years.

I have made some inquiries of the C.B.C. engineers in Vancouver and of Captain Briggs, the vice chairman of the C.B.C. in Ottawa. I am informed that the delay has been occasioned by reason of negotiations between the C.B.C. and the C.P.R. as to the line service to be provided and so on. I have discussed this matter with local officials of the C.P.R. and I am informed that the C.P.R. is the prime contractor in the provision of line service for the C.B.C. in Canada, that even the C.N.R. has to subcontract from the C.P.R., and that this is the cause of the delay in our district.

For instance, the C.P.R. provides line service for a low power relay transmitter at a place called Slocan on Slocan lake. That line service is provided over their lines from Nelson to Slocan lake. The line service from Slocan lake or Slocan city as we used to call it—it is not a city now—to New Denver is sublet to the B.C. Telephone Company. Then the line service to serve Nakusp will be provided by the C.P.R. Because it is an old telegraph line requiring parallel copper wires, I understand, and a lot of renewals as far as poles are concerned, there has been some hesitation on the part of the C.P.R. to do this. This means that not only does the C.P.R. deny us our steamer service and our passenger service but they are actually denying the opportunity to thousands of people to listen to the C.B.C. over low power relay transmitters.

I have had a lot of letters about this matter, Mr. Speaker, and a good many of them from Conservatives who are, I might say, very disturbed about the government's actions in other directions, but I shall not go into that this afternoon. I urge the minister to bring this matter to the attention of the C.B.C. and see if something cannot be done to speed up the provision of Canadian low power relay transmitters to serve these small communities which even to this day are denied the opportunity to listen to Canadian radio in spite of the fact that we have had radio service in Canada for many years now.

The final matter I wish to bring to the attention of the minister has to do with a private station. We have a private radio station at Trail and one at Nelson and on the whole these stations are performing a good community service. A few years ago I used to receive a lot of criticisms but I find that the criticisms are becoming less from year to year. They are performing a good community service, and in that regard I think our system is excellent with its combination of publicly and privately owned stations, the one type serving the nation on networks and the other serving local communities. I believe a local station can provide the local colour and interest that it is not possible to provide from a central point in Ottawa. However, I do have a complaint to make with respect to station CKLN in Nelson.

Let me explain that the Nelson News and CKLN, the radio station in Nelson, are both owned by the News Publishing Company. The Nelson News is an advocate of free enterprise. During the last provincial election this newspaper urged the people to support the principle of free enterprise, the spirit of competition, and keep them alive. This is what I am trying to do today, Mr. Speaker. This incident relates to the practice of this principle, and it is the one unfortunate slip in principle they have made to date. I have told them I am very seriously concerned about it as are large numbers of persons in that area.

Another newspaper has started in this area and it publishes bi-weekly. It is taking advertising away from the Nelson News. The publisher of the weekly made a contract with CKLN to advertise over the station by means of these flash broadcasts. The day before his newspaper comes out he advertises that it is coming out and mentions the topical issues he will be discussing, as well as the places in which the newspaper can be purchased. This is the letter he received from the manager of this private radio station:

Dear Mr. Carlton:

We seem to be on the horns of a dilemma these days, a dilemma which must be obvious to everyone.

Now that your paper is establishing itself as a regular advertising medium, seeking its business from the same customers as ourselves, it is not reasonable that we should be defeating ourselves by building up in any way the success of a business competitor. We, therefore, are invoking section 7 of our contract. As of today's date we are serving you with 10 days notice of cancellation of your advertising contract No. 726.

I would further bring to your attention items 4 and 6 of the conditions of contract.

Yours sincerely,

A. R. Ramsden,
Manager.

Naturally the owner of this newspaper was indignant, as were a number of the businessmen who advertise in this newspaper. The point is that there is only so much advertising to go round and the Nelson News wishes to keep that advertising for itself. This radio station is a public utility operating under a licence given by the people of Canada. I have had a good number of businessmen speak to me about this.

In any event, I brought the matter to the attention of the chairman of the board of broadcast governors, and he had his legal advisers review the situation. In their opinion, there was no provision in the act to deal with the situation. The matter was considered also, under the direction of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton), by the officers of the combines investigation branch, but it was not considered they could take any action. I consider this is a matter which should be discussed by the committee. Here was the only radio station over which this newspaper could advertise, and the newspaper was denied those facilities by a station which received a licence to operate what is, in effect, a public utility.

I have introduced a private bill dealing with this question after receiving advice on the matter. We approached this question from the point of view of the Canadian bill of rights which was passed by this house last session. I should like to read one paragraph from the explanatory notes contained in the bill.

The Canadian parliament, for public convenience, interest and necessity, has by the Radio Act allowed the crown to grant monopolies by licence to individuals and corporations to operate broadcasting stations for private gain. Under the common law and civil law, therefore, such stations must sell advertising time without discrimination. In 1960, parliament confirmed this law by statute. Section 2 of the Canadian bill of rights applies to provide that the Radio Act and the Broadcasting Act shall not be so used as to violate the rights or freedoms of any citizen: e.g., freedom of speech or freedom of the press. Presumably, the governor in council might make regulations to control such excesses or the minister of transport arbitrarily remedy violations by revocation or suspension of licence.

I do suggest that these are questions which should be considered by a committee. I understand that rarely in Canadian history has it been found that a radio station turned down advertising. I believe there is a principle involved. I am sure the owner does not agree with this action because I know him personally. He served in the same battalion as I did in the war. However, things are a bit tough and there is a struggle for advertising. I think the people involved have forgotten their principle for a moment, and I do suggest this question be given consideration by the committee on broadcasting.

Now Mr. Speaker, that concludes my remarks in general and my remarks in particular as they apply to Kootenay West. I shall now give the floor to one of these gentlemen who appear to have been listening to me with great interest.

(Translation):

Mr. J. J. Martel (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say only a few words on this resolution and start by giving a short historical account of the situation. I have no intention, of course, of stating the same arguments put forward by previous speakers on the matter, but I should like to acquaint the house with some representations that were made to me and which, in my opinion, are of general interest. Those representations should be carefully considered by this proposed committee which will look into matters of broadcasting in our country. Besides, as was stated earlier, a similar committee was established a few years ago. So it is only a matter of resuming the work, of pursuing it and seeing whether some of the recommendations made at that time have been put into effect and whether some improvement has been noted in that field.

Radio broadcasting started in 1922 in this country and has known a remarkable development since then.

Only a short time ago, the future of broadcasting could seem doubtful. In some cases, radio broadcasting was not understood. Its potential commercial value was being overlooked.

In the beginning radio broadcasting had two main features that it has retained since then, namely that its development is due to the capital and labour of Canadians.

In addition, in former years as well as today, private radio stations were often a one-man or a family enterprise.

From 1922 to 1929, Canadian funds made possible the operation of radio. That same financial support is also responsible for other broadcasting mediums, such as television, which has expanded not only in Canada but throughout America in the last few years, that is, since the war.

I have here a brief submitted in 1956 to the Fowler commission, more precisely the royal commission on broadcasting set up by the former government. That brief was submitted by the Canadian Association of Radio and T.V. Broadcasters in March 1956.

Summing it up would take too long, of course, but I should like however to underline the general ideas or suggestions contained therein. Quite a few of these suggestions have since been adopted either by the former government or by the present government, after 1957.

The government had been requested at the time to set up an independent commission on broadcasting. Such a commission would have made it possible to correct the existing situation where a state agency was at the same time an operator, a competitor and a regulatory body.

Such a commission would also have made it possible to apply to television and radio, regulations similar to those which operate in other free countries, and also to develop a control structure based on democratic principles.

Such were on the whole the suggestions submitted to the royal commission on broadcasting.

We know now that the independent body requested at that time has since come to life. It is known as the board of broadcast governors, which is distinct from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Reference has been made in the past—and it is a point worth mentioning, I think, since it should be carefully examined—to leftist and communist influences and infiltrations which have been at work in the C.B.C. for a number of years and which at times were increasing.

A moment ago, the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) referred to that situation. A few details have been given on that score. I think the committee should gather more information on the matter.

I would refer the committee to Hansard of July 25, 1955, where names of commentators on the English and French networks of the C.B.C. were mentioned.

I did not get a chance to ascertain all those assertions myself. However, I think that a detailed scrutiny of the charges laid against those people would be welcome and would at least give satisfaction to the public as well as result in a better opinion of the C.B.C. if those charges are not well founded.

If they are not true, let us give precise information, let us prove the contrary; in short, let us inform the public, and the C.B.C.'s reputation will but be improved.

I also have here an editorial written in 1957 about that famous communist infiltration which is reportedly based on information supplied by the trans-Canada anticommunist league. I never had the opportunity to check on that information, but I think the committee would be well advised to get in touch with the members of that anticommunist league, or to request further evidence or specific information with regard to those charges. If they are unfounded, I feel that the C.B.C. and the committee would do a service to the general public by putting the facts in their true light or by pointing out weaknesses that could have existed in the past, so as to prevent a recurrence of such mistakes or irregularities.

I also find in it some findings that impressed me and which were put forward over a year ago following the famous C.B.C. producers' strike.

Those findings are set out in a rather comprehensive article published in the periodical entitled Relations. I should like to emphasize one of its points in order to shed light on the situation. I do not intend to read out the whole article, but only part of it, if you allow me Mr. Speaker.

That article was published in April 1959 in the periodical Relations. I shall not read all of the article because at one particular point, it does not seem quite exact. I quote:

The C.B.C. has lost the strike. Did not the C.B.C., publish in the Star March 7, on the very day the official agreement was signed, an advertisement which was no doubt sent before a final decision had been reached, clamouring its opposition to all forms of trade union activity on the part of administrative personnel?

A comment in English is added here in brackets, about that article.

I quote:

(Text):

The C.B.C. has not changed its position of being against any form of management union.

After closing the brackets, the article continues as follows:

It can be surmised that on this point the government-owned organization had been under pressure by big business and had undoubtedly been "advised" by the political counsellors of the cabinet having connections with the magnates of industry and finance. If a C.B.C. representative can still maintain that a "professional union" of television producers, considered as being part of the managing staff, negotiating a collective bargaining agreement, and in a position to resort, if need be, to unbiased arbitration, does not constitute a management union, he should be returned to school.

To me this is nothing less than a charge, insinuating that there had been undue influence or pressure on the part of the political advisers of the cabinet alleged to have connections with industrial and financial magnates.

Mr. Speaker, I think the committee would do well to check up on this. I, for one, do not believe that any political influence was exerted during the strike either on C.B.C. or on the producers themselves. Of course, there was a march on Ottawa. At that moment, some pressure was brought to bear on the members, asking them to intervene, but I believe that, finally, everything was settled by the force of circumstances and by public opinion which, contrary to what might have been expected, I dare say, took little interest in the strike.

Mr. Speaker, let me again emphasize the absolute non-interference of the government which, to my mind, refutes and denies the charge laid in this article of the magazine Relations.

In that famous article I find another idea which I would like to bring to the attention of the committee. This part of the article reads as follows:

What is less known, but should be made known, is the shameful complicity of the Canadian Labor Congress in taking no effective means to see that justice be done, and that the C.B.C. recognize the right to establish unions. What was the reason for this? Many of its officials, being members of the C.C.F. party, felt that a government agency should not be made to lose face. Already political requirements are stifling union basic principles.

I will go further than the article. According to information I was able to obtain, I would say that the strike might have been secretly instigated by the labour movement just mentioned as a means of determining to what extent the government would intervene.

Possibly C.C.F. members within the labour movement did not wish the strike to spread across the country. But I think they made use of the strike by employees on the French network as a test, with the intention of organizing producers into a management union, as it was called then. I would like the committee to go closely into that matter also. Naturally, much was said about the strike at the time, but I think it would be good to investigate that angle.

Resolutions or suggestions have been sent to us concerning some inquiries that should be carried out by the C.B.C. or perhaps by the B.B.G. In any case, the committee to be set up could look into that.

Then, I suggest that the brief presented last July by the Canadian home and school and parent-teacher federation should be considered. Since one of these questions is of special interest to me, and in order not to take the time of the house, I shall read a passage entitled:

(Text):

Re Television Research.

Be it resolved that the Canadian home and school and parent-teacher federation strongly urge the board of broadcast governors to undertake comprehensive research into the effect of T.V. upon the minds and personalities of boys and girls.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, this question might be studied during the sittings of the proposed committee. It is not a matter of dictating its course of action but by going to the core of this question, possibly supplementary information can be found in that area.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal with questions which may be of local interest or with cases picked at random which were brought to my attention and which deserve to be mentioned here, even though they may concern my region more particularly.

Before going into those cases, I should like to go back to an answer given to me by the C.B.C. about a news bulletin broadcast at nine o'clock p.m., May 15, 1959, concerning the Unemployment Insurance Act. I asked for a copy of that bulletin and I will tell you later for what reason. This news bulletin reads as follows:

> Last night the House of Commons gave second reading to the bill which will increase by 30 per cent the unemployment insurance contributions.
> 133 members voted for and 34 members of the opposition opposed the measure.
> The bill does not make provision for an increase in unemployment benefits but provides for an extension of payment.

As soon as I heard this news, of course, I asked for a copy of it so that I could check it myself because I was under the impression that this bill, when it was adopted, provided not only for an extension of the period of the benefits but also for an increase in the amount of unemployment insurance benefits. It is true that in some cases, the rate of the unemployment insurance benefits might have become lower but on the whole there was a marked increase. I give this example to show that some news bulletins must be checked. And it is desirable that such things be revealed.

As far as I am concerned, I can say that there has been considerable improvement in the C.B.C. since the separation took place and since it has ceased to be the only judge in the awarding of permits; nevertheless, I feel there is room for further improvement.

Mr. Speaker, this is meant as a constructive criticism, and I hope it will be considered as such.

There is another suggestion I want to submit, in addition to those which might be considered by the committee. It is about a particular case which, in my opinion indicates that at times the C.B.C.—and possibly not C.B.C. top officials—does not care about public opinion and does not even care about the opinion of those who take part in some programs. I would like to give a factual example of that.

This year a very interesting T.V. series was started. It goes on at nine o'clock Sunday nights. It is called "Passe d'armes" and is produced with the co-operation of the junior chambers of commerce of the province of Quebec.

I have it from reliable sources that, during its negotiations with the C.B.C., the federation of junior chambers of commerce of the province of Quebec rejected the idea of having a lady on each of the teams invited to face each other on that series, because the junior chambers in general are comprised exclusively of men. To be sure, there are a few groups of ladies auxiliaries called "Jaycettes", affiliated with the Jaycees—in fact there is one of them in Montreal—but usually the Jaycees admit only men, even though wives or girl friends of members are often invited to help in social activities.

In the first telecast of "Passe d'armes" two teams of male Jaycee's were representing their respective districts.

However, for the second program, the C.B.C. took upon itself to invite a lady to sit with each team and stated that this policy would apply to all programs until the end of the play-offs which will oppose teams from different areas in the province of Quebec.

Thus faced with an accomplished fact, leaders of the jaycee movement, who had participated in the first two programs of the series, could hardly withdraw their co-operation.

I realize that the presence of a lady on each team adds charm to the program. But that is not the point—for there is no doubt in my mind about that—but why did not the C.B.C. try to obtain, through the moderator of the series or the producer, the approval of the junior chamber of commerce. It might have been because of a specific requirement of the sponsor, I would not know. However, one thing is sure, and it is that the C.B.C. has little regard for the opinion of others, and that the co-operation asked of the chambers of commerce does not seem to have received C.B.C. support. In other words, it was a one-way decision.

In my opinion, it goes further than that, since in fact the C.B.C., after making changes or inviting a lady of its choice on each team for a particular program, imposed its will on the junior chambers of commerce.

I may be accused of personalities, but I only want to give an example. On the January 8 program—

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I have been listening very carefully to the hon. member. I think Mr. Speaker made it quite plain when the committee started that while it would be in order to discuss things which could be brought before the committee it would not be in order to go into details such as might be presented before the committee itself. The hon. member is now going into specific details of a particular matter which is one which would, perhaps, be better taken up before the committee.

(Translation):

Mr. Martel: Thank you Mr. Speaker.

Of course, I do not think I will be appointed to the committee that will be established this year. I was not on the committee last year. That is why I saw fit to point out some particular cases which should be considered in the light of facts. In any case, if the committee wishes to consider the question, I will be delighted to provide it with the information I have on hand.

Mr. Speaker, I will abide by your decision and continue with the few remarks I have to make.

There is another somewhat peculiar case. I will not go into details, but it concerns representations made to me by the director of the operations of Radio Nord Incorporée, a radio and television station that may not be located in my riding but whose television programs reach us, as do radio programs of stations affiliated with that network.

I am referring to a program given on December 9, 1960, when all the private networks telecast the conference of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Station CKRN-TV did not have the privilege of telecasting that program, whereas the stations of the province of Quebec, Jonquiere, Rimouski, Matane, Three Rivers and Quebec—in a word all private stations in the province of Quebec—were able to do so.

I want to mention a complaint addressed to me, and on which I might give more ample information to the committee if the matter was found to be of interest.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that, in the northern areas, as the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) indicated earlier, there are vast stretches of land, and a member who spoke after the representative for Churchill seemed to want to make fun of the great empty spaces and swampy areas, but I must say that in those isolated districts, there are citizens without any means of communication, who can hardly get any news. In short, they are almost cut off from the rest of the country. Yet, those people are entitled to better treatment.

I am thinking of some districts in my constituency, such as Parent, Clova and Senneterre. With regard to Senneterre, I know that its request for a low frequency station was accepted by the B.B.G. and that it is now only a question of time. I think that people in the Abitibi region, and more particularly the people of Senneterre, will enthusiastically welcome the opening of that station.

But as they also would like to have television, various ways of going about it have been suggested to them. A collective tower or antenna, for instance, was mentioned, or the setting up of a satellite station. Those requests are being analysed at this time because some centres are sufficiently populated to warrant a serious study of a network that would reach them.

I want to point out that the mining population of the Chapais and Chibougamau districts has been established there for several years and has contributed not only in pushing the frontier further north, but also in helping the advance of civilization.

Mr. Speaker, I shall now end my remarks and I hope that the committee will study the responsibilities of the C.B.C. in detail and submit suggestions and recommendations to this house, in order to improve the present service as much as possible.

Moreover, I hope that the committee will voice some constructive criticism when necessary, in order to give people in the remote areas more consideration. These people are not second class citizens, but Canadian citizens and proud of it; consequently, they deserve to be treated with the greatest consideration, like all other Canadians. They also pay taxes, and as the population in the remote areas is gradually becoming more numerous, it is time that they get the C.B.C. services.

For all these reasons, I shall vote in favour of the motion to set up this committee.

(Text):

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has served the Canadian people well for many years. The corporation, under successive governments, has been necessary to the development of the Canadian nation and to the development of the bilingual nature of its culture.

There has been evidence in recent years that the government has been prepared to remove some of the powers of the corporation and has been interested in having the C.B.C. develop its commercial revenues to a much wider extent. In my judgment this has weakened the corporation and has called into question the standards of the broadcasts it has been able to deliver.

Because of the size of our country and its bilingual nature it has been deemed necessary to have a national broadcasting system not dependent in its entirety on revenues obtained in a commercial way. Therefore governments and the Canadian people have been prepared to support by way of public vote these important services. In our judgment it is essential that the corporation should be independent of political interference. To this end I would suggest that moneys for this service should be provided by statute over a period of five years so that the independence of the corporation will be all the better assured.

I believe that the C.B.C. as a national broadcasting system has the overwhelming support of the majority of Canadians. Many organizations across the country which take an interest in broadcasting have come to the defence and support of the corporation whenever they felt it was necessary. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture is one of the great organizations that has taken much interest in the C.B.C. and has presented briefs to the government and the committee on broadcasting in support of this system of broadcasting and has made recommendations as to its improvement. I should like to quote a short paragraph found at page 12 of the submission of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to the committee on broadcasting under date of July 29, 1960. At page 12 of the brief we find these words which set out very well the purposes of a national broadcasting system and the issues involved:

> The issue here is basic. Is the content and quality of our national broadcasting service to be guided by commercial interest and necessity, or is it to be guided by the goal of a varied broadcasting service of a high standard which will make its maximum contribution to Canadian life and Canadian culture, and which will be used commercially only to the extent possible without endangering this goal. The proof of the pudding is in the eating, and it has been the opinion of many that the quality of television broadcast fare in Canada was and is not good enough, and that moreover this inadequacy could be attributed in considerable part to increasing pressure to meet commercial standards and requirements and to be commercially successful.

Any of us who has the opportunity to watch television has noted the increasing number of commercials that appear on our screens, I think to our own distraction. I feel they make little or no contribution to the cultural life of the Canadian people. I think advertising in this field is being overdone. I suggest the committee should inquire into the ethics of the whole advertising business. I feel there should be a thorough inquiry into the type of advertising used in the sale of drugs and a careful selection made of the kind of advertisements that should appear on our television screens and on the radio. I think the policy has gone overboard in demanding increased revenues from advertising at the expense of the listening public and the standards of programs.

There have been some interesting comments made in the debate today. I have been in the house almost all the time. There have been fewer attacks on and less criticism of the corporation in this debate than on previous occasions. I welcome that indication of greater support.

Reference has been made to some of the programs that appear in Canada. The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) referred to the telecast of Mr. Kennedy's press conference and the great interest this type of program undoubtedly creates. I suggest that the United States in the field of press conferences and national political coverage have given us splendid examples of programs which examples should be adapted to use in Canada.

I have been asked on occasion whether the C.C.F. would support a national televised debate participated in by all political parties and I have answered strongly in the affirmative. I believe such televised debates would create much public interest, would be a good political education to Canadians and would lead to an increased interest in the democratic process.

However, in our country we seem to be going in the other direction. President Kennedy has had a press conference of a particular kind, a genuine press conference. We used to have a program on television called "Press Conference", and on this conference a person connected with the public life of this country would be questioned by a number of members of the press gallery. I am certain this program created a great deal of interest across the nation. The people interested in public affairs enjoyed the programs, and they learned a good deal not only of public policies but of the personalities in the nation who are directing those public policies. We all know the program "Press Conference" has gone by the board. I am not certain in my own mind of all the factors contributing to this decision, but I should like to know whether the Conservative members in this house had come to the conclusion that their cabinet ministers had better stay off "Press Conference" and that this was a very poor medium for them to use.

Mr. Morris: Nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member who has the floor has strayed a bit away from the subject that is before the house at the present time, namely the setting up of a committee. This may be a matter of general interest, but it relates rather to the conduct of political leaders.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, there have been references to a type of press conference that might be used on television. I think it is in order. The fact that it might be a bit controversial does not lead me to think that that would make it improper to mention it in the House of Commons. However, on that particular point—

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member would agree with me that it is not a matter for decision by the house now. What we are deciding is whether to set up the committee. In so far as it is a matter that might be discussed in the setting up of the committee, the hon. member will be within his rights in raising it by way of indicating the desirability of the committee, but I would hope he would not pursue it too far.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, along with the hon. member for Port Arthur, I think this is certainly an area to which the committee might direct some attention. I should like the committee also to make some inquiries as to what happened to the program which was being prepared into the workings of the political parties in the country. I might tell you, sir, that I had a very interesting interview with one of the members of the press gallery, which was directed to this program. The information I have is that somewhere along the line the Tories would not show up and the program was then dropped. They did not want to be on the program and the Liberals said, "If they do not want to go on, we do not want a Liberal-C.C.F. affair, so we will not have anything to do with it, either."

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, I think the hon. member is speculating now on matters for which, if he is serious, I am sure he has no basis in reality whatsoever. If he has not, he should sit down and let someone else rise and we will get this committee appointed and then we will deal with the truth of these fictions that he is creating.

Mr. Argue: The minister has no point of order; he is taking part in the debate. I suggest that this is not a fiction at all. If there is an inquiry made into this it will be shown that at the Conservative headquarters someone representing the Conservative party said, "We do not want to take part in this particular program that is being undertaken—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is introducing a subject which, if it is pursued, will of course give the right to other hon. members to deal with it. Maybe this is something the committee will be well advised to take cognizance of, but I think it should not be pursued here in the form of debate other than to refer to it, as the hon. member has already done. I would hope he would pass to some other matters.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to do that with this concluding sentence on this particular matter. It is perfectly within the right of hon. members opposite or their organizations to say that they will not go on the program. I am not saying that they have not that right; but I would suggest the committee should look into this whole question of setting up such programs. I think the practice might be considered that if one party will not show up the program should be continued with those who are prepared to take part.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to another area of C.B.C. activities of great importance to Canada and to a great many of the people whom I represent. I refer to the question of an increase in the number of French television outlets in Canada. The C.B.C. has been active in the creation of French radio and television facilities, and I congratulate the corporation on the progress it has made in this direction; but I have felt that parliament itself and the committee should give consideration to providing the necessary funds to speed up the acceleration of this development.

Last fall I had the experience of speaking in one community in my riding which is largely a French speaking community; I refer to the town of Willow Bunch. I endeavoured to say a few words in the French language and made a short reference to the need for French television facilities in the province of Saskatchewan. I indicated that I would support and was supporting this extension of C.B.C. facilities. I was absolutely amazed at the tremendous response that this very short reference has received. I can think of no other item that I have raised in recent months on which I have received more correspondence. I must have had 150 letters or more. I sent out to my mailbox a few moments ago and I now have another letter on this subject. As I say, I have received, I estimate, 150 letters, all of them in support of French television facilities for the province of Saskatchewan and the extension of those facilities to French speaking communities where facilities do not exist at the present time.

I raise this matter in the house at this time to impress upon hon. members the desirability of increasing those facilities within Canada. We in this group feel that those facilities are desirable to emphasize the bilingual and bicultural nature of this country, to give to French speaking Canadians the opportunity to watch and hear programs on television in the French language and to give to our French speaking colleagues all across the nation the chance to educate their children in the atmosphere and traditions of their own culture.

I realize that there are certain economic difficulties, since sums of moneys are needed to provide those facilities. I hope the government will give sympathetic consideration to increasing the appropriation in this regard, and I believe they will receive the support and the congratulations not only of the French speaking parts of our nation but of all Canadians who are interested in the development of a distinctive nationhood, and a nation based on the traditional cultures from which this great land has arisen.

Mr. McCleave: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Argue: Yes.

Mr. McCleave: The hon. member referred to commercials on the C.B.C. Would he do away with them completely?

Mr. Argue: No. If I left that impression I should like to correct it. I think that people who have much more knowledge of these affairs than I would suggest that there is a place for commercial advertising but it is being overdone. There are too many commercials and too much emphasis is being given to obtaining greater and greater revenues from advertising.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker I should like to put forward one point. I hope that the committee will consider increasing the number of low power transmitter stations. I come from a mountainous constituency with numerous valleys and most of these areas are very well served indeed by the C.B.C. or private local stations. The quality of the transmission is excellent and most people are able to receive it. But there are one or two places, and I have one in mind particularly, which are shut off entirely so far as reception is concerned except during certain hours in the evening. They are not able to receive Canadian programs either through the C.B.C. or private stations. To my mind this is a mistake. Their only source of culture or whatever you like to call it, in any event radio reception in all its phases, is the United States, and I think this is a mistake. It is true that the community is not very large but it is actually within two miles, I would say, of the Canadian Pacific railway whose telegraph lines serve low power transmitter stations efficiently within 30 or 40 miles on either side.

To me it seems to be wrong that there are growing communities in Canada which are not served by the C.B.C. or private Canadian stations. Certainly as far as the smaller communities are concerned it is not fair to say that they should have only a privately owned station and I believe that where feasible such communities should be served by the C.B.C.

I have one point in mind that I think is important. In British Columbia the regular transmission of school programs is now being undertaken and this community is cut off from receiving them. I do not know the exact number of children there but the community has its schools and they should have this facility.

I was quite interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) who mentioned that possibly the difficulty had something to do with the availability of lines. I suggest that the broadcasting committee should look into this matter. For the record, the community to which I have been referring is Christina Lake in the boundary country of my constituency of Okanagan Boundary.

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) and other hon. members who have made a plea for more consideration of remote areas. I hope the committee will find it possible to make a practical suggestion so that the C.B.C. television and radio stations at Goose Bay, Labrador, can give greater coverage in that remote area. I think it might be in order for me to mention that the C.B.C. radio station at Goose Bay does not reach the northern settlements along the coast of Labrador but the Eskimos there listen to programs in Eskimo broadcast from Greenland. Russian radio broadcasts also come in very well farther north while the C.B.C. does not. I thought I should leave this thought with the committee and perhaps I might also express a word of appreciation for the educational programs which fairly recently were included in the C.B.C. programs broadcast from Goose Bay.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, there are four or five matters which I think the committee on broadcasting, to be formed I presume when this debate ends, should consider. The first one is the fact that we are faced with a rather monumental increase in the amount of money that is to be voted by parliament for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, an increase somewhere in the neighbourhood of 15 per cent. Therefore I think it becomes our duty on behalf of the owners of the C.B.C., the people of Canada, to examine not only the efforts toward economy within the corporation itself but its efforts to find new revenue.

At one time I worked for the C.B.C. in a summertime capacity and I have also worked in private broadcasting so that, so to speak, I have been on both sides of the fence. I know it is fashionable among some people in the industry to speak of peaceful co-existence with each other but for my part I decry that notion. There has to be co-existence of course, but I would hope that it would be competitive and that the C.B.C. would have no reluctance in getting into the fray and fighting for the advertisers' dollar. In an organization where so much emphasis is placed upon the development of native artistic talents there is always, I suppose, horror at the idea of having an aggressive sales force, but I think that can be done. There is no reason why the cash register and the grand piano should not, as it were, exist in the same room.

In debates of this kind previously I have mentioned the question of advertising salesmanship on the part of the C.B.C. and I also took it up with the officers of the corporation two years ago when they appeared before the broadcasting committee. I understand, though only from a chance remark that Mr. Ouimet made to me one day in the hall in passing, that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation now has some "super-duper" salesmen employed. I would certainly want to find out in the broadcasting committee or have somebody find out what they are achieving and whether it is possible to obtain more of them.

In short, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the C.B.C. will not be shy in the matter of obtaining commercial revenue. I agree to a certain extent with the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) that it can be overdone. I think in the course of a week one gets a complete range of all the soap products that are manufactured in Canada through sponsorship of various programs by the manufacturers of such products. Maybe some other advertiser could be given a better break with regard to sponsoring some of these programs.

The second point that I think should be studied by the committee has to do with the new areas which have been opened up or may be opened up by second stations in different parts of Canada. This is a rather live issue in Nova Scotia where the people in the eastern part of Halifax county, Musquodoboit valley and along the shore from Musquodoboit harbour have complained for some time about not receiving satisfactory television service. There is a second Halifax station in operation now and I understand it will be at full power in two months' time. Again, another station farther east will shortly be in operation. This may solve the problem.

However, I think we should have some indication from the board of broadcast governors as to the new areas that are being opened up by the development of second stations because I think second stations not only have a responsibility within the competitive market when they start to operate in competition with the C.B.C. but they should also try to beam their signals in such a way as to give coverage to some people in outlying areas who do not now receive satisfactory television service.

The third point in which I would be interested, and this may be for the broadcasting committee or for the committee on external affairs, deals with the recent curtailment of the budget of the international service of the C.B.C. The result has been to cut the C.B.C. out of several areas in Europe, including Italy I believe where a rather enthusiastic fan club had developed for the C.B.C. international service, one member of which had even sent the head of the government of Canada a cake on behalf of this fan club.

Another point which I believe should be studied relates to the operations of the board of broadcast governors. I say this because there are those who, for political purposes, have been somewhat braver outside the House of Commons than they have inside during this debate in making rather loose allegations against the operations of this board. Knowing the men involved I would say that any scrutiny by the committee—this is my forecast based on the information I have—would result in a decision that the operations of the board of broadcast governors were above reproach. I believe, however, we have to make that examination in view of the remarks made concerning the award of some of the licences in Canada.

If I may take my own area as an example, there have been suggestions that one station manager, a successful applicant, made remarks beforehand that he had the licence in the bag. I believe this remark was made. I know also that remarks were made by the unsuccessful applicant to similar effect. This suggests to me that those who apply for T.V. licences are like the people who fight for the heavyweight championship of the world, and who claim their victory in advance. None the less, remarks like these are presented at political meetings out of context, and they make some people suspicious of the operations of the board of broadcast governors. I hope we will be given the opportunity to expose such remarks for the tripe they are. I have every confidence in the integrity of Dr. Stewart and the other members of that particular board.

Another matter which I think should be studied by the broadcasting committee deals with the somewhat thorny subject of comment on the publicly owned broadcasting system. At the first meeting of the broadcasting committee I think we were successful in persuading the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to change its previous policy and to take the step of appointing a full time man in Ottawa. We who have watched Mr. Norman DePoe on his television broadcasts know that an outstanding and impartial choice is made. He praises or damns without partiality at all. I hope the C.B.C. will give more thought—this can be examined by the broadcasting committee—to the appointment of similar commentators elsewhere. I believe this is the practice of the British Broadcasting Corporation, and it is something the C.B.C. could usefully study for Canada and give the broadcasting committee their opinions, pro and con.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I think that the committee might—I am not so sure about this point—study the costs of microwave transmissions in Canada with relationship to the second network problem. This may be an unfair thing to ask of the committee in the light of the fact the C.B.C., in maintaining its competitive position, might wish to keep this information confidential. If they do, then I would not favour public exposure of it as it might hurt their competitive position. However, there is this massive and expensive system, and I feel something could be worked out so that the public corporation and private stations might use it, each bearing a fair and proper share of the costs. These points and others I feel should be developed in the committee. I hope I am lucky enough to be a member of that committee because it is a very enjoyable one.

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay the passage of this resolution, but I should like to say one or two words. I believe that in a large country like Canada broadcasting in all its forms is very important. When we consider the impact and the influence of broadcasting in Canada and also the amount of money which the federal government now spends on all forms of broadcasting, we come to the realization that broadcasting is a very important operation in our country and one deserving the attention which a parliamentary committee can give. It is for this reason, sir, I would support the establishment of this committee.

I know that in this committee there will be a good deal of talk about programs, the type of program and the timing of programs. I should like to make some comments on these subjects, too, but I am not going to do so at this moment. I would think the main purpose of the committee would be to improve, where possible, the reception in all parts of Canada. If broadcasting is going to be improved—I am including in "broadcasting" radio and television—then it must not only be improved where programs are being received but provision must be made for the reception of programs where no programs are now being received. I would hope that when the committee meets it will not only give consideration to the programs that are received in the various centres all across Canada but will give some consideration to the possibility of providing both radio and television service to those areas which are not now served.

I should like to give one or two examples, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to go into detail as this is not the place to do so. However, I should like to mention one or two points that have a relationship to my own constituency in order to explain the point I am trying to make. On a number of occasions I have brought up the question of the radio station at Corner Brook, CBY. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) will recall the fact that I have referred to this question on a number of occasions. At that time I wanted this radio station to increase its power, change the ground pattern or change the frequency, so that the people who have received this radio station for a number of years, even before Newfoundland came into confederation and who are not now receiving it because of interference from CHEY, Newcastle, which operates on the same frequency, could receive it again. Apparently it was impossible to get this done.

A new station was licensed within the last two or three months, and that station is now covering the whole area which CBY was not willing to serve. Now after the new station is providing the service which these people require the C.B.C. decides that they are going to increase the power. Those are things of the type that I think the committee should consider if they are going to talk about improving radio and television services in areas where they are not received.

I am thinking of another case. We have had within the last two years or so a new television station at Corner Brook. May I say to the minister now that it is doing an excellent job. The only difficulty is that the station has a radius of only about 17 miles. Then 30 miles away from that city of Corner Brook is the large town of Deer Lake—that is to say, large by Newfoundland standards—one of 5,000 people who are not able to receive this station. They are getting no television reception at all.

Another case I have in mind is that of a radio station at Harmon Field where the equipment is owned by the United States authorities and where the station is managed by the C.B.C. with the help of United States personnel. When this station was first built it was to provide television coverage for the United States nationals at Harmon Field and those who happened to be on the outskirts of that air force base. Since the time when the station was built electricity has been provided to a much larger area than that to which is was provided at that time. It is possible now for people to receive television broadcasts if the power of the station were sufficiently strong to provide them. I believe it is possible for the Canadian government to come to some agreement with the United States government whereby the power of this station can be increased.

These are some examples of the type of problems to which I would think the committee, some time during its deliberations, would give some attention, so that they will be talking not only about the programs that are received in the larger centres across Canada but wil also be inquiring into the efficiency of C.B.C. operations in some of the fringe areas. I know that many persons believe that the committee will have much to say about the type of program that is received. They will be talking about commercials and all that sort of thing. These, of course, are legitimate items to be discussed in the committee. However, I would hope that they would broaden their activities and make some inquiries as to those areas in which television and radio reception is not being provided and not being distributed fairly so that if this is a national service, all parts of this country, where possible, will be able to receive the benefits of that national service.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am am glad to have the opportunity of speaking on this occasion. I do not propose to deal with all the matters which have been raised in the two-day debate we have had. It has been a good debate, I would think. Most of the arguments which have been brought forward have been of a constructive nature, and I appreciate the attitude shown by practically all the members who have taken part in this debate. At the moment I am going to deal only with one or two matters which were raised by the hon. member who spoke first in the debate, namely the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), who spoke immediately after I had made the motion.

The hon. member was critical of the contents of the motion. He suggested that it was vague and in fact he thought if possible that something had been left out. Actually, Mr. Speaker, nothing was left out. The resolution was that of the law officers of the House of Commons. I checked with them again afterward as whether this was their drafting and the fact is that it was not only their drafting but nothing had been left out. It was drafted in that way for one good reason.

I wanted the committee to have full scope in dealing with any phase of broadcasting with which the committee wished to deal. Last year we were criticized because the committee was set up at too late a date to conduct, as the committee finally decided, any sittings whatsoever. Two years ago the committee was set up fairly early in the session but even then it was under pressure. I wanted the committee this time to be set up as early in the session as possible and I wanted it to have full scope to deal with any point or any matter with which it wished to deal.

It is not for the minister or for the government to instruct the committee as to what matters should come before it. The C.B.C. is not a creature of the government. It is a creation of parliament. It is under the control of parliament. I wanted the parliamentary committee to have absolute control with regard to any aspect of any investigation which it wished to make. Therefore the wording of the motion is such that this control will be permitted.

The hon. member also referred to a statement which he attributed to me—I have not checked the record but I assume he is probably right—to the effect that an opportunity should be given—I may say this was two years ago—at a subsequent session to review the act under which the board of broadcast governors and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation were operating. I hope the committe will decide to make such a review. I should like very much to see them do that. I would hope that in the very early part of their deliberations they would go over the act with the officials and would get the opinion of the officials as to how it is working.

The hon. member—and I will say this before I close this debate this afternoon—said that he also wanted to see an investigation as to the basis on which television licences are granted by the board of broadcast governors. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no matter which in the opinion of the members of the board is more important than that one. They want an investigation. They resent the imputations and the snide suggestions which have been made in connection with their actions in considering this matter. I personally have a great deal of pride in the record which has been established by the board and I know that Dr. Stewart and the other members of the board, full-time and part-time, are looking forward to appearing before this committee and answering any questions and dealing with criticisms.

I believe it is now five o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and that under the rules we must proceed to the consideration of public and private bills. I would therefore move the adjournment of this debate.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of public and private bills, the former having precedence pursuant to the standing order in that behalf.

INDUSTRY

PROVISION FOR CANADIAN PREFERENCE IN GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-4, to provide for a Canadian preference in government construction, purchase and service contracts.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving second reading of Bill No. C-4, an act to provide for a Canadian preference in government construction, purchase and service contracts, I think I should first of all set out the reasons why I believe this bill is necessary. It is a well known fact that the policy of this government, as well as of previous governments, is to buy Canadian products wherever possible. It is only right that public funds raised from the people of Canada should be spent as far as possible in Canada.

According to an article in the Financial Post of December 31, 1960 the federal government spent in 1959 a total of $1,362 million for goods and services, apart from wages, salaries and military pay. Government spending, therefore, is of major significance to our economy, and any increase in government spending in Canada which might be brought about by this bill will undoubtedly have a beneficial effect on the Canadian economy in increasing employment and also in the way of being returned to the public treasury in part in increased income and corporation taxes.

As long ago as July 23, 1921 order in council P.C. 2648 directed that all departments —make purchase of goods of Canadian manufacture only for departmental and other requirements, except in cases where such action would result in the purchase of articles or goods of so inferior a quality as to make this action undesirable.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

This particular order in council is certainly not being followed today and, in fact, the vagueness of its wording is such that it would be almost impossible to implement.

Individual purchase orders or contracts in excess of $15,000 are reviewed by treasury board, and it is a well known fact that treasury board does give a preference to Canadian products. This preference is approximately 10 per cent. Therefore, in this area of government purchasing the present practice follows the principle embodied in this bill.

Under very special circumstances, the cabinet has occasionally ruled on Canadian preference. For instance, at a cabinet meeting on March 8, 1955 the coal situation was considered and it was decided that Canadian coal would be used in all government coal burning installations where the laid-down cost of such coal did not exceed the competitive cost of other coals by more than 10 per cent. This decision was reviewed at a cabinet meeting on February 18, 1958, and because of the difficulties facing the Canadian coal industry this price preference, on the recommendation of the dominion coal board, was increased to 20 per cent of the laid-down cost. The government annually buys about a million tons of coal, nearly all of it for building heating, and this increase in price preference was of major importance to our depressed coal industry.

Contracts for the building of ships for the navy and the Department of Transport are negotiated by the government or else, if competitive tenders are called, only Canadian yards are allowed to bid. We have shipbuilding yards on both the east and west coasts and on the great lakes, and government shipbuilding contracts are divided between these three regions.

It is certainly in the national interest to maintain ship construction and repair facilities in these three areas and to maintain the highly technical and skilled staffs necessary for this type of work. Therefore, I think it can fairly be assumed that the government has had in the past, and has now, a policy of "Buy Canadian" and extends a price preference to Canadian manufacturers. I think it can also be assumed that where government purchasing will help a depressed area with chronic unemployment problems, this preference can go as high as 20 per cent, as in the example concerning the purchase of coal I have just referred to.

Another example of how the government can take special measures to help a particular industry or company is the case of the subsidy given to Britannia Mines in British Columbia a few years ago. If this subsidy had not been given a whole community on Howe sound would have had to move in the depth of winter because even the supply of heat and power for the miners' homes depended upon the operation of the mine's power plant.

Nevertheless, there are wide areas of government purchasing which have no clearly defined directive setting out a policy of Canadian preference. I refer to the thousands of purchase orders and contracts under $15,000 which are placed by scores of purchasing agents in the various departments of government. There may be individual departmental directives according to the thinking of the individual minister responsible for the department, but there is no clear-cut over-all policy applied uniformly to all departments. The one rule which does apply to all departments is that the lowest tender meeting specifications is to be given first consideration. On contracts over $15,000, treasury board does have the authority to take into account whether the lowest tender is the proper tender to accept, having due regard for the interest of the taxpayer and the well-being of the Canadian economy as well. In other words, treasury board can and does approve a higher tender if in its opinion the beneficial effect in terms of employment outweighs the increase in cost. Treasury board can do this because it has cabinet representation and is in a sense a policy setting board. The individual departmental purchasing agent does not have this authority and must go by the general rule in regard to the lowest tender being accepted as long as the tender meets all requirements.

There is another area of government purchasing which is not subject to any control at the present time in this regard. I refer to crown corporations such as the Canadian National Railways, Trans-Canada Air Lines, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and other government boards and commissions which report to and are responsible to parliament but which are not direct government departments under the immediate control and direction of a minister of the crown.

Crown corporations have multiplied in the past few years and have increased in importance to the point where their purchasing impact on the Canadian economy has become of major importance. These crown companies need pay no attention to the policy of the government but can set their own policy, and in many cases this policy does not conform to either the policy of this government or of previous governments in regard to a Canadian preference.

Government departments have from time to time been given directives to "Buy Canadian" but crown corporations have never been given any such instructions. In fact, in several instances at least, Canadian companies have not even been given equal consideration with foreign suppliers.

For instance, all of the engineering services for the building of the C.N.R. multi-million dollar Place Ville Marie project in Montreal were contracted to engineering firms in New York city, although we had equally competent engineering firms in Montreal, Toronto and, I might add, Vancouver. It is safe to say that literally hundreds of engineers, draftsmen and technicians were employed in New York on a Canadian job though these same skills may have been unemployed in Montreal or Toronto.

The C.N.R. would say in advance that this is the responsibility of their agents, but I do not think it would have been too difficult for them when they were negotiating this contract to have given instructions to have written into the contract that Canadian engineering services, Canadian products and Canadian materials were to be used in carrying out this project.

The same instructions could have been given to R.C.A., the C.N.R. agents who are now building a microwave system in northern British Columbia and the Yukon. If this instruction had been given I know of several contracts, now gone out of the country, which could have been retained in Canada. I know of one project which would have resulted in approximately 100,000 man hours of labour in Vancouver which was, in fact, lost to this country as a result of the operations of the present system.

I wish to repeat the statement I have already made, namely that there are wide areas of government spending which are not covered by present government directives. An act of parliament would cover all these areas as they exist today and as they may exist in time to come. An act of parliament would give legal sanction to a Canadian preference and an act of parliament could declare this preference in wide terms which would be a guide to officials of government departments and agencies subordinate to this house who have the responsibility of spending public moneys in the purchase of goods and services. Government policy would be set by this house rather than being left to the discretion of scores of purchasing agents in government departments and crown companies who now have no clear rule to guide them. I believe the adoption of this bill will be equally beneficial to the Canadian economy by giving leadership to the various provincial governments.

Provincial purchasing policies usually favour local products, and in certain provinces local products have price preference over products from other provinces. I have pointed out that the federal government does try in certain ways to give a Canadian preference but I know of no province which does this. The provinces tend to think of 10 Canadas rather than one and I know of instances where foreign goods have been purchased instead of Canadian goods when the price difference was as little as 2 per cent or 3 per cent.

The provinces pay lip service to the purchase of Canadian goods by saying that Canadian goods shall be purchased, all other things being equal. This is no preference at all. The only preference which has any validity is a price preference.

We cannot have regional prosperity in Canada if we do not have national prosperity. This house can give leadership to all governments in Canada, provincial and municipal, by adopting the principle of this bill.

No discussion of this bill would be complete if we ignored the possibility that it might jeopardize our trading relations with other countries. Prosperity in British Columbia is dependent upon a healthy export trade as is indeed prosperity in most of western Canada. We want a continuing export trade pattern. We know that trade is not a one-way street. If we wish to sell we must also be prepared to buy. We are extremely proud of the fact that since this government took office each year has seen an increase in our export trade and also a healthy diversification in our trade pattern with record sales to the United Kingdom and commonwealth markets, and to Europe as well.

In spite of these substantial increases the United States still remains our most important market. The United States could not take exception to the provisions embodied in this bill because their own laws extend a preference in United States government purchasing two or three times greater than that set out in this bill. In fact, all western industrial nations through either formal laws of their parliament or by government directives give a preference to their own citizens in government purchasing. As long as the preference we extend is reasonable and does not become all exclusive because it is set at too high a figure, I am convinced we will not be subject to criticism by other countries. In fact, under the present system, importers have a legitimate criticism of the government in regard to contracts valued at over $15,000 which are reviewed by treasury board, because they do not know where they stand. They do not know what preference will be given to their Canadian competitor.

Treasury board has a leeway. Treasury board has a range in which it can make a decision. If a foreign competitor happens to be as much as 11 or 12 per cent lower than the Canadian bid the Canadian firm may still be chosen by treasury board, particularly if this contact would give aid to a depressed area suffering from chronic unemployment.

At this stage of the bill we are concerned only with its principle and not its details. Nevertheless I should like to touch upon some of the clauses of the bill in a general way. I have already received a letter from the Canadian Council of Professional Engineers who are also speaking for the Royal Architectural Institute of Canada pointing out that the proper method of retaining a consultant in either of these fields is by negotiation and not by tender. At some later stage, therefore, this bill will have to be amended and a new clause written to cover professional services and to delete reference to this service in the general clause dealing with service contracts which would still be allotted on a tender basis.

This is a highly complex bill and there may be other clauses which will require either slight or major modifications as well. I would suggest that if this bill is given second reading today it should not be proceeded with further but should be sent to the standing committee on banking and commerce where interested organizations and individuals can be heard. This committee could act as a sounding board for Canadian opinion on this subject and the evidence secured would be of tremendous advantage in helping the government draft its own legislation on this subject.

A private member does not have the resources for research which are available to the government and it is therefore not too difficult to point out flaws in legislation proposed by private members, yet many of the ideas behind these bills are worthy of further consideration.

For instance, I have had on the order paper for the last two sessions a bill dealing with the publication of financial statements of wholly-owned Canadian subsidiaries. In the throne speech this year the government indicated that it would bring in its own legislation on this subject. Undoubtedly some department of government is now attempting to draft legislation in line with announced government policy. I am quite sure that if my bill on this subject had been referred to a committee of the house for study the evidence given before that committee would be of great assistance and guidance now in the drafting of government legislation on this matter.

If this bill is sent to a committee the clauses which define a Canadian company will certainly be given very close study. This problem was faced by the Right Hon. James Lorimer Ilsley. Mr. Ilsley set out three requirements which must be met before a corporation could be considered a Canadian company. These requirements are found at pages 27 and 28 of the report of the advisory committee on war claims. The first requirement was that the central management and control should be in Canada. The second was that it should be engaged in active trading activities in Canada either directly or through subsidiaries. The third requirement was that a substantial part of the corporation's capital should be Canadian. Mr. Ilsley felt that as the policy of this country for many years had been to encourage the inflow of capital in resources development and secondary industries it would be inappropriate to require a large proportion of the capital to be Canadian before regarding the corporation as Canadian.

In fixing the proportion of Canadian capital Mr. Ilsley followed the agreement of 1948 between the United States and Yugoslavia regarding claims of the United States government against the government of Yugoslavia on account of the nationalization of United States companies. Under this agreement the United States government considered a company to be a United States company when Americans owned 20 per cent or more of the stock. Mr. Ilsley concluded by saying:

> If the passing of these three tests is required in determining whether a corporation is Canadian, it will in my opinion have the effect of singling out corporations whose real interests are Canadian and whose successful operations are of importance to Canadians.

Provision for exemption of contracts singly or by group is contained in clause 3 of the bill which reads:

> (2) The governor in council, where it is in the public interest or necessity so to do, may by regulation provide that this act shall not apply, in whole or in part, to a class or group of contracts or may by order provide that this act shall not apply to an individual contract but every regulation or order so made shall be tabled in the House of Commons within fifteen days after it is made or, if parliament is not then in session, within fifteen days after commencement of the next ensuing session.

I believe hon. members on all sides of the house should support this bill, Mr. Speaker. It may well be that its objectives could be covered by a new government directive which would clearly set out a policy for all government departments and would cover crown corporations but, in my opinion, an act of parliament can accomplish this objective in a much better way.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, with a proper respect for the usual rules of procedure I hesitated, in all modesty, before rising to give an opportunity to one of the non-commissioned officers or one of the privates on the official opposition benches here this afternoon. Possibly they are going to speak later. Because of the ability of the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Tardif) to get into the Ottawa papers and to do battle with Charlotte Whitton I would give him the rank of sergeant-major. I am the first parliamentary broom from the opposition benches, Mr. Speaker, to start sweeping on this bill introduced by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Broome).

First of all, I must say that we in this group agree with the spirit and intention of the bill. We look upon it as a pro-Canadian bill, not an anti-American bill, one designed to tidy up, shall I say, our own housekeeping in the public sector of our economy by showing some preference, when it comes to public purchases and so on, for Canadian goods.

I listened with interest to the hon. gentleman's remarks. It is obvious that he has given some considerable thought to this question and I think that merits mention. When a member takes the time to give some thought to a problem of this sort it means he is interested in the problem and he is doing his best to perform his duties as a member of parliament. It is obvious, as he says, that it is a complex bill. There are 10 sections dealing with the definitions and making provision for the administration of the purposes and intentions that he expressed during his remarks.

In looking at the bill I was interested to know that an order in council had been passed on July 23, 1921, P.C. 2648, which in a somewhat ambiguous way, I would say a completely unsatisfactory way, attempted to do in some respect what the hon. member is attempting to do by the introduction of this bill. I presume the introduction of the bill by the hon. member was prompted by his knowledge of this order in council, by the circumstances that exist in Canada today and by the past and present government's failure to do anything about it—on that score we give him full marks—and to deal with the situation objectively and to seek definitive authority as a result of legislation brought before this house.

However, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member did say that this is a complex bill. I have read it through a couple of times. There are many aspects of it that require a thorough examination. While we agree with the spirit and the intent of the bill, we think that before legislation of this type is adopted hon. members must have more information as to all the circumstances surrounding the situation that exists and the situation the bill aims to correct.

We agree with the hon. member who introduced the measure that the bill should go before the banking and commerce committee. This committee would have the opportunity to call witnesses and hear evidence and obtain the views of the witnesses for or against the bill. In this committee there would be an opportunity to call officials of the appropriate departments of government to give information as to the effect this measure would have in achieving the objectives outlined by the hon. member who introduced the bill.

It is a complex subject, and its many ramifications want a thorough study, in the opinion of this group. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard):

That this bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. J. A. Habel (Cochrane): Before the question is put, Mr. Speaker, I would say I have no doubt in my mind of the sincerity of the intention of the hon. member who introduced the bill. I represent a riding which has a large investment of United States capital, for which we are very thankful indeed. My riding contains an industry which provides employment in the whole district, for which I am thankful. It seems to me that this bill is being introduced at a very bad time. In fact, if one just thinks of the happenings of a few days ago one recalls that two ministers of the present government went to the United States to meet the new administration down there to try to sell more oil in that country. The more we talk about preventing the United States selling or investing in this country the more harmful it will be to good understanding between the two neighbouring countries.

I hold in my hand a number of clippings. I will not mention them all; but only a few things in connection with them. I have a clipping from the Ottawa Citizen dated January 25, 1961, and the heading of the article is:

Bark of Canada worse than bite,—U.S. Investors.

I find the following in the article:

Most expressed annoyance, not alarm. They feel that the move will not hit their present holdings too hard, but they might be reluctant to invest further in Canadian plants if they are to be singled out by the tax collectors.

This indicates how careful we should be when we are dealing with our neighbour.

[Mr. Herridge.]

I have a clipping from the Montreal Gazette, dated January 26, which reads in part as follows:

Canada's trade relations with the United Kingdom have reached a critical point where imports from the U.K. may be restricted by measures designed to solve other problems.

This goes to show that if on the one hand we are to lose the United Kingdom market it would be wise for the present government to consider our neighbour's market. As I said a moment ago, a delegation went to the United States to try to bolster our oil sales to the United States.

Regardless of what my good friend in the C.C.F. party who just preceded me had to say about our being more or less silent, I think I can speak on behalf of the official opposition and say it was simply a case of giving way to the hon. member because it was understood that I was going to speak on this matter. I thought it was my duty and also the duty of the official opposition to make our position quite clear about the whole matter.

I should like to refer to an editorial in our local newspaper, the Timmins Press of January 25, which is headed, "What Is Our Trade Policy?" If I try to link trade policy with the bill, Mr. Speaker, it is because we must be careful if we want to find markets in which to sell our own goods. The first paragraph of the editorial reads as follows:

In any discussion of worsening relations between Canada and the United States, the Diefenbaker government must be regarded as the chief sinner.

The last paragraph reads as follows:

What they are concerned about—or should be—is the development of our business and industry. The vacillating and self-contradictory position of the government has puzzled United States investors. Perhaps it may force Canada to go it alone economically at a time when more investments are vital to our continued economic growth.

So, Mr. Speaker, although the bill may have been presented in all earnestness and sincerity, I think this is a matter that should be dealt with, very carefully; and we should seek to understand what would be the result of such a move with respect to our trade with other countries.

I also noted that the sponsor of the bill stated there was a clause in it providing that the governor in council may, when it is found to be in the interests of the public, exempt any group or class of goods. What is the use of having such a bill if it has a clause in it stating that the governor in council can do whatever he likes? It means that the bill will be absolutely useless. In the explanation of that clause it is stated that group exemption regulations become invalid if not approved by the house in 30 days. What would happen if contracts were signed two weeks after a session ended and the next session did not begin until six months later? What would be the worth of having such a clause in the bill? I leave it to the house to judge as to the necessity of much a measure. For myself, I do not even see any necessity of sending the bill to a committee for further study.

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make a few remarks in connection with the bill I can only say that I was very surprised indeed to hear some of the comments made by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel), and I understood him to say that the views he expressed were those of the official opposition. With the number of representations I have had from trade unions across the country and particularly from my own area urging that a policy of buying Canadian products should be followed in order that the members of these unions may be employed, it is certainly surprising to me to find the opposition taking this position.

Personally I do not have any great objection to United States firms. The principle I would follow is that the goods are manufactured in Canada and produced by Canadian workmen is the essential fact that we must consider. In view of some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Cochrane it would surely be a ridiculous position for the government to provide for winter works as it is doing and to make money available for sewage projects throughout the country if that money is going to go to the United States to provide employment in that country. That is what I understood the hon. member to say.

Mr. Habel: That is not what I said.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): The hon. member will correct me if I am wrong. I understood him to say we should not worry about bringing in goods from the United States. I also find it surprising that he should have taken that attitude because preference for goods made at home is a policy that has been applied by many other countries. I wrote to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association some time ago regarding their program to encourage Canadians to buy products made in Canada in order that employment may be provided in this country. Here is one point they make in their reply:

> I might note here that many other governments, notably Great Britain, Australia and, to a certain extent, the United States of America have seen fit to make domestic buying an instrument of national policy.

So that the very country to which the hon. member referred takes the attitude that they should follow a policy of giving preference to purchases in their own country. I mentioned earlier the representations I have had from trade unions. I think we should perhaps give some consideration to an extension of the provisions of the bill and that when the federal government makes money available to municipalities or provincial governments they should see to it that the money goes to purchase goods made in Canada wherever possible. Money spent in this way involves a growing portion of our national financing. Much of the money spent by the federal government is spent in the form of grants to provincial and municipal governments to provide for various projects.

I can see some other benefits in the government pursuing such a policy at this time. It is true, as the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Broome) has said, that the general policy has been to buy Canadian products wherever possible but it has been left to individual departments of the government and in many instances purchasing agents are not as aware as they might be of the policy of the department. In the letter I have from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association there is this statement:

> Many cabinet ministers have already expressed their desire that their departments follow the buy Canadian principle when buying. There have been many encouraging reports that their desires are being met.

I think the proposal that the government should give preference to Canadian products is only part of the whole problem because to be of real consequence the same policy has to be followed by everybody in the country. The only thing that can keep Canadians working is the production of goods in our manufacturing plants throughout the country and when these goods are produced they have to be sold. No one can expect people to buy goods if they are completely outrageous in price or of inferior quality, but generally speaking I do not think the people of Canada have realized the necessity of buying Canadian goods where possible.

When goods are of equal quality and equal in price I do not think that in many instances our people are conscious enough of buying Canadian products. In many cases this is perhaps brought about because of the advertising of United States products over and over again on television and in publications, a problem that the royal commission on publications is dealing with at the present time. People are familiar with the names of United States products and companies to a large extent. When our own products are equal in quality and equal in price, surely under these circumstances there should not be the slightest doubt that we should follow a policy of preferring to buy Canadian goods.

I was very pleased to hear the hon. member for Vancouver South suggest that the bill should be sent to a committee for study because in my opinion it is a most important matter. It is one upon which an opportunity should be provided for the expression of views in order to ascertain what action this parliament might take. I do not know of anything else that could be done that would do more to create employment in Canada if it were pursued to the fullest extent.

Mr. Habel: I should like to correct the impression left by the hon. member who just took his seat. I must say that I never had in mind the giving of preference to United States goods. The point I was trying to make was that it is this kind of bill that creates the impression in the United States that we are trying to prevent them from investing in this country. My point was that as a young country we certainly need their investment.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the amendment before the house is one to which there is no opposition and perhaps it should be endorsed with the greatest amount of speed in order that the subject matter may be dealt with by a committee of the house, and in order that the interested parties might appear before that committee to present their views. I shall have more to say about that in a moment.

I think the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel), by deferring his opportunity to speak, as it were, to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), has really proved a statement made a few weeks ago by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) to the effect that the C.C.F. is the effective opposition. I understood the hon. member for Cochrane to say, and if I misunderstood him I certainly hope I will be corrected, that the position of the official opposition was that it was opposed to this subject matter going to a committee. I hear no voice raised to correct that understanding, so I assume it is correct. This is typical Liberal philosophy. Let us not be concerned about what other people think, but let us cram our ideas down their throats. You know the type of C. D. Howe activity that existed for so many years.

I support the idea of giving this matter extensive and detailed consideration such as can be given by a committee. You will note that it has always been our approach here that private members' bills should be given this treatment and not just left to die on the order paper as most of them are. One or two interesting things have been drawn to my attention which touch upon the subject matter of the bill. I have in my hand a joint Canadian National Railways-T.C.A. pass or credit card such as has been issued, I imagine, to every member of the house as well as to a number of other people in Canada. We know that both the Canadian National and T.C.A. are crown corporations and, presumably, would have the interests of the nation at heart. I have noticed that on the back of this particular credit card there are the words "Printed in U.S.A."

This really makes one wonder whether the Canadian National or T.C.A. even bothered to inquire as to whether there was a company in Canada in a position to print credit cards of this nature. I understand that there is such a company in existence. Perhaps this is something that these companies should clear up for us. I think perhaps T.C.A. and the Canadian National should review their policy in this regard and perhaps follow out the general idea we all have about Canadian purchases.

I have been told also, and I have no reason to believe it is incorrect although I did not take the opportunity of checking for myself, that there is a new men's washroom on the sixth floor close to the parliamentary restaurant. This is in the process of being decorated and provided with coat hooks. There is a stamp on these coat hooks which indicates they were made in the United States. It would seem to me that perhaps the people who purchased this particular item might have shopped around a little bit more to ascertain whether coat hooks of this nature are made in Canada. I am of the opinion that they are.

I only want to reiterate, Mr. Speaker, that I think we all realize the government—I do not confine these remarks to this particular government—has not all the brains in the country or all the brains in parliament. One of the reasons that private members, such as the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Broome) introduce these bills is the hope that they will become law. When an individual prepares a bill and introduces it he is sincerely of the opinion it is a good piece of legislation and will be beneficial to the interests with which he is concerned. I know that this is the case here.

I think perhaps what should happen, not only to this bill but to all such bills, is that they should be referred to committees in order that they may be tested in the arena of public opinion, and tested against the statutes to ascertain whether there is any conflict and whether the idea should be advanced, rather than have such bills talked out day after day and die on the order paper. I feel that in this way we would be showing more respect for the ideas and views of the private members of this house, and we would be assisting the government in coming to a conclusion about those matters which it has not yet considered.

Mr. R. C. Coates (Cumberland): I should like to take a few minutes of the time of the house to make a few comments on this bill. First of all, I should like to indicate my surprise and shock at the attitude of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) when he spoke for the official opposition and indicated his opposition to this bill. In effect, the official opposition is saying that they oppose this 20 per cent preference provided for Nova Scotia coal which is moving to government institutions throughout Canada. This attitude is quite a shock to me because I would have thought that with the situation as it is at the moment the official opposition would be more than willing to adopt the attitude that this bill should be referred to the committee on banking and commerce in the hope that consideration would be given to increasing this 20 per cent preference rather than eliminating it altogether. The elimination of this preference would only result in far greater damage to an industry that is now having tremendous difficulty in finding markets.

I know when some people read this bill they might feel that the 20 per cent preference being provided for Nova Scotia coal is rather high. When we consider the tremendous benefit that the sale of Nova Scotia coal has on the economy of Nova Scotia, and indeed on the whole of Canada, I believe people would be more than willing to continue to provide this preference and, under present circumstances, give serious consideration to increasing it.

One of the main reasons why this 20 per cent preference has not accomplished all it might have accomplished is the tremendous transportation costs which coal is obliged to bear in order to arrive at the market where it is in demand. From the attitude of the hon. member for Cochrane I am forced to assume that he would be much happier if thermal plants and government institutions in Ontario and Quebec were to use United States coal. Certainly from his words it would be most difficult to assume otherwise. In his statement he said that this was the view of the official opposition. We must therefore assume that this is the view of Liberal members in general, namely to withhold this preference from Nova Scotia, even though we on this side of the house at least are aware of the tremendous difficulties being faced at the present time, with the closure of the mines imminent.

I should like also to say that it was this government that increased this preference from the former 10 per cent to the present 20 per cent, thus indicating our belief that at least 20 per cent in the way of preference should be placed on coal. Indeed, it is my feeling that an even greater preference should be provided at the present time.

I should like to go further and say that this bill in the form in which it is presented, contains many of the things that I feel are necessary. Certainly we have undertaken to do many of these things through treasury board and by other means. However, as the mover pointed out, there are many purchases made under the $15,000 limit to which there is no positive direction given to those making the purchase on the 10 per cent preference that we feel is so necessary.

I can point out a specific example in my own constituency in which a great deal of reinforced steel is produced and sold to contractors in the Atlantic area. When I was first elected I immediately ran into the problem of European steel coming in and usurping a great deal of the market that had once been available to this firm that provided steady employment for over 100 of my constituents. This European steel was coming in and was being used in public works projects and in projects under contract to the Department of Transport. I learned of this situation and brought it to the attention of the departments. They acted quickly and saw to it that a 10 per cent preference was provided. In many instances I found this European steel was coming in at a price that even a 10 per cent preference could not look after. It could almost be said that it was being dumped in the country, having regard to the price being asked for it in comparison with the cost of production in Canada. However, I will say this. The departments of government acted quickly and efficiently, and today I am happy to report that on most of the contracts that are let in the Atlantic area Canadian materials are again being used. Certainly from an employment standpoint, from an income tax standpoint and in fact from every standpoint it is wise to use Canadian goods whenever possible.

I am certainly happy to support this bill and to support the recommendation that it be referred to the banking and commerce committee. Again I want to say how greatly shocked and alarmed I was to learn that the official opposition opposes this bill and opposes in principle the 20 per cent preference that is at present given to coal.

Mr. Habel: Never.

An hon. Member: You said it.

Mr. Coates: If this is their attitude when they are in opposition certainly the people of Nova Scotia can be well aware of what their attitude would be if they were ever in government again. We would be back to the sad old 22 years when we received nothing, nothing, nothing.

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, if there is a minute left, I should like to point out one thing in connection with this bill. Although the emphasis is on the matter of preference to Canadian goods, no matter how well we may deal with this preference and no matter how well we may phrase the language of this act, unless we do something with respect to the specifications that are submitted for the tenders, all our efforts will be to no avail. If these departments and the officials who are making up the specifications were more Canadian conscious and tried to specify Canadian goods, I feel we would have a preference for Canadians even without this act. However, I often get the impression, when we are finding out whether or not a Canadian firm is getting the work, that the specifications have required some item for which they must go to a United States firm in order to get it. That situation is prevalent in many of our departments. As far as this bill is concerned, my opinion is that if our officials were more Canadian conscious we would have less requirement for this bill. However, I think it is a good bill and I want to compliment the hon. member for bringing it before the house.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It is now six o'clock by my clock and I note that it is some minutes past six o'clock by the one on the left. It must be the weather.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I have an indication of what the business will be on Tuesday and Wednesday?

Mr. Nowlan: I cannot go beyond Monday at the moment. As I told the house last night, on Monday there will be a motion to go into supply. It may be that the usual pattern will be followed and that this debate will go into Tuesday. At the moment I can only say that on Monday we shall be dealing with that matter. On Monday night I believe the house leader will be back and he undoubtedly will be able to inform the house what the business will be.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the acting house leader say what the business will be after the motion to go into supply has been disposed of?

Mr. Nowlan: I cannot give a definite commitment but I assume that it would be the conclusion of the debate on the setting up of the broadcasting committee and the setting up of the committee on railways, airlines and shipping. I shall have to consult with the house leader when he returns tomorrow.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PICKERSGILL—CORRECTION OF REMARKS IN DEBATE ON JANUARY 27

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I spoke too hastily on Friday last when I implied that under the previous government there had been no delays in holding by-elections which had the effect of depriving constituencies of representation for the whole of a session of parliament. I do not want to leave this misinformation uncorrected.

I find there were several cases both before the 1953 general election and the 1957 general election when by-elections were not called, apparently because it was common knowledge that a general election was approaching. But there were two other cases where there was no such extenuating circumstance. The Prime Minister reminded me that Brandon-Souris became vacant late in 1950 and the by-election was not held until June of 1951. That also happened in one of the seats in Queens, Prince Edward Island, at the same time. I doubt whether either of these precedents would commend itself to the government, since in both cases members of the opposition were elected and both members then elected are today ministers of the crown.

In expressing my regret to the house for having misinformed hon. members may I also thank the Prime Minister for the assurance that there will no longer be any similar delays in the calling of by-elections.

MRS. FAIRCLOUGH—CORRECTION OF PRESS REPORT OF SPEECH AT GUELPH, ONT.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege with reference to a Canadian Press dispatch reporting an address I delivered to graduate students at the Ontario Agricultural College in Guelph last Friday night. In the first paragraph of this dispatch, which appeared in a number of morning and evening newspapers on Saturday, I am reported to have said that future immigration into Canada would be "limited to persons with a craft, skill or profession".

This paragraph, in which I was incorrectly reported, was subsequently corrected in two later Canadian Press leads, but unfortunately the original story received such widespread circulation that I feel it necessary to set the record straight. The text of my Guelph address is available to the public. I was speaking of the effects of the technological revolution on Canadian agriculture and industry. What I said was quite clear, and I quote:

> We certainly shall have to do everything within our power to make it clear to everyone, and especially to our young people, that there is going to be little room for the unskilled or the half-skilled worker in the world of tomorrow. It ought to be quite clear to everybody that employment opportunities—for native Canadians as well as immigrants—are going to be limited in future for people without some kind of trade, skill or profession.

There was nothing in my Guelph speech suggesting that immigration would be restricted to those with skills and trades.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUGGESTED DATES FOR RESUMPTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the house that I have written to the prime ministers of the provinces suggesting that the dominion-provincial conference on fiscal arrangements which adjourned late in October should be resumed. The dates I suggest for the resumption of the conference are February 23 and 24. If these dates are not convenient for a majority of the provincial premiers, then the meeting will be convened on March 23 and 24.

TRADE

RUSSIA—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALE OF WHEAT

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make an announcement that has to do with a question asked by the hon. member for Acadia on January 24, 1961, and which can be found on page 1350 of Hansard. The question dealt with the sale of wheat to the U.S.S.R. and was answered by the Prime Minister as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, negotiations have been going on with representatives of the government of the U.S.S.R. I am hopeful that agreement will be arrived at in consequence of those negotiations for the sale of 150,000 tons of wheat.

At this time I should like to confirm to the house and announce that negotiations have been completed and 200,000 tons or approximately 7.3 million bushels of wheat have been sold to Russia.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the report of the civil service commission concerning the position of library accountant, library of parliament, laid upon the table of the house, Thursday, January 26, 1961, be now approved.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

FEDERAL PREVAILING RATE EMPLOYEES—CHECK OFF

Motion No. 37—Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Martin, Essex East):

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the Minister of Finance and the national council of the public service of Canada, on the subject of the check off of union dues for federal prevailing rate employees, since January 1, 1960.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are no correspondence, telegrams or documents within the terms of this motion, and even if there were there would no doubt be a question raised as to privilege. In view of the fact that there are none, no doubt the hon. member would be prepared to withdraw the motion on behalf of the hon. member for Essex East.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I will not ask you to put the motion, Mr. Speaker, and I will leave it to the hon. member for Essex East to decide the other question.

Motion stands.

MARKETING OF COARSE GRAINS—REPEAL OF PROVINCIAL LEGISLATION

Motion No. 40—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the federal government, the Canadian wheat board, and any provincial government, since January 1, 1959, regarding the repeal of provincial legislation respecting the marketing of coarse grains.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the government can accept this motion with the usual reservation with regard to the provinces. I should like to add this additional reservation with regard to the Canadian wheat board. If amongst these documents there appear to be any that affect the business operations of the wheat board that are not normally made public, I should like to reserve them. I do not believe there is any need for the reservation, and I think all documents will all be forthcoming.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE

FLOUR AND BUTTER—DISTRIBUTION OF SURPLUS TO UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister care to comment on the press report that the government is giving consideration to the distribution of surplus flour and surplus butter to the unemployed of Canada as a relief measure?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I think hon. gentlemen are aware, this government is always on its toes when it comes to a question of looking after those in need. I may be able to confirm for the hon. member the fact that such a program has been considered for some time, but no announcement will be made until a decision is reached.

BUTTER—TELEVISION ANNOUNCEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he could take the house into his confidence concerning the announcement he made on television yesterday about the price of butter?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): I do not believe there is any secret about the fact we have been in consultation with various representatives of the farm industry such as the National Dairy Council of Canada, the Canadian dairy farmers and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. We have had under discussion various proposals to meet this situation of a temporary surplus in butter. We are, quite candidly, exploring the field to ascertain if there cannot be a reduction in price to the consumer in order to bring back the flow of consumption and, at the same time, maintain the income level of the producers which has been built up over the last three years.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister not think it would be advisable not to make suggestions that would affect the price of commodities until they become policy?

FARM MACHINERY—RESUMPTION OF COMMITTEE INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the national interest in the inquiry by the agriculture committee into the very high prices charged for farm machinery, could the minister say when his officials will be in a position to appear before the committee, and when this discussion may be resumed?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can only speak for my officials. They will be ready at any time the committee is ready to hear them.

POLYMER CORPORATION

CAPITAL REQUIREMENT FOR SPECIALTY PLANT IN FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production based on a press release of his department issued on Saturday announcing the formation of Polymer Corporation (SAF) for the purpose of constructing and operating a specialty rubber plant to be built at Le Wantzenau near Strasbourg, France. My question is this. Does the provision of the estimated capital requirement of $12 million referred to in that press release involve a supplementary budget to that tabled for the Polymer Corporation, or is the capital requirement being met by other means?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): The press release of Saturday night was issued to coincide with the announcement that was made in France by our ambassador, Mr. Dupuy, who was guest of honour at a luncheon attended by Dr. Rowzee, the president of Polymer, as well as Mr. Wilk and Mr. Fontaine of the Banque de Paris et des Pays-Bas.

In so far as the question asked by the hon. member for Ottawa West is concerned, there will be no supplementary budget for expenses of Polymer in this fiscal year.

Mr. McIlraith: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister advise the house as to what changes, if any, have taken place with respect to the prospective sale of Polymer Corporation from the last announcement he made on August 4, 1960?

Mr. O'Hurley: I have no other declaration for the time being with regard to the disposal of Polymer. No decision has been reached, but we have decided to allow Polymer to go ahead with this expansion program to meet the demand for synthetic rubber in those places where it is needed, without diminishing in any way the production of synthetic rubber at Sarnia.

IMMIGRATION

BRITISH COLUMBIA—EMLOYMENT OF U.S. CITIZENS IN PIPE LINE CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received any complaints with respect to the numbers of United States citizens admitted to Canada for employment in the construction of pipe lines in British Columbia? Has the minister also received any complaints with respect to the admission to Canada of United States citizens under what are considered to be false pretences (1) as landed immigrants; (2) as persons allowed to enter for special work because there is no one in Canada supposedly qualified to do this so-called special work? Have these complaints been investigated? If so, can the parliamentary secretary inform the house with what result?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to bring this question to the attention of the minister.

[Later:]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I apologize for not sending her notice, but it has just come to mind.

In view of the fact that the member for Kootenay West on one occasion conducted a successful personal investigation into the validity of certain landed immigrants by proving that they were living in British Columbia and still using their visitors' licences on their cars, would the minister consider asking the R.C.M.P. to check on these people to see whether they are still indicating that they intend to return to the United States and are using the six months' visitors licence while they live in British Columbia?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think on reflection the hon. member will realize that the matter of car registration is one for the provincial authorities.

(Translation):

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

OTTAWA—REQUIREMENTS OF CONCESSIONAIRE RESPECTING BILINGUAL EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday, the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) put to me the following question:

Is the minister aware of the fact that a concessionary at the Ottawa railway station forbids his employees to speak French under penalty of losing their job?

I brought that matter to the knowledge of the Canadian National Railways authorities who inform me that inquiry was made of the concessionary at the Union station and that the latter told them that such instructions had not been issued.

I must add that according to the concessionary, most employees in the restaurant and the newspaper stand are bilingual and no trouble was ever experienced in that regard.

[Later:]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Could he tell me whether the inquiry was made of the employees as well as of the employers, because I have been advised since, that the same person had even refused to display certain French papers?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member who asked the question is taking responsibility for the statement it would be proper, I should think, to pursue it, but the answer that has been received was in response to a similar question and was quite definite.

Mr. Caron: I am taking responsibility for what I am saying because of the answer to the question I asked the other day. I think the inquiry has not been completed.

(Translation):

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, the Canadian National authorities have made an investigation following the question asked by my hon. friend. I had requested an inquiry and I have just read the short report received on this subject.

Of course, I have not made this investigation myself since it is not for me to do it. My job is to transmit them the various questions asked in this house.

Mr. Caron: Another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to blame the minister, but could he not ask for a more thorough inquiry to be conducted among the employees?

Mr. Balcer: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

[Mrs. Fairclough.]

TRADE

REPORTED U.S. COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION FOR REDUCED TARIFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister seen the dispatch by the Ottawa correspondent of the Regina Leader-Post which quotes a new report by a United States Senate committee under the chairmanship of Democratic Senator Magnuson recommending that the United States reduce international trade barriers, and recommending also an extension of tariff negotiating authority to the president, with a provision permitting across the board reductions? If so, does the Prime Minister stand ready to participate in any such negotiations and reductions?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the particular news item has not been brought to my attention. I do not want to enter into a discussion of a conjectural article.

TRANSPORT

KETTLE VALLEY RAILWAY—SUGGESTED USE OF RIGHT OF WAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Hicks (Fraser Valley): I should like very much to make this inquiry of the Minister of Public Works, in view of the fact that the C.P.R. is planning to permanently abandon the Kettle Valley railway from Brodie to Hope, British Columbia, a distance of 50 miles. If permission to do this is granted, would it be possible for this government to turn this right of way, which I believe has been subsidized federally, into a highway making a fifth route through the Coast range to the glorious Fraser valley?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the minister replies may I say this. I think the hon. member who raised the matter indicated that it was a hypothetical question, because he prefaced it by the words "if permission is granted". It seems to me it will be time enough to inquire if and when it has been settled that there will be an abandonment.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

PRAIRIE PROVINCES—INQUIRY AS TO INTERCITY SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. W. Brunsden (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. The minister is aware of the growing concern in various prairie centres, of which, of course, Medicine Hat is one of the more important, respecting the future of the so-called "milk run" of Trans-Canada Air Lines.

My question is, will the minister give the members of this house from the west his assurance that no steps will be taken leading to any deterioration of the present intercity service before full representations from the newly formed prairie region air committee and other interested organizations in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba have been heard and studied by him?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, both my predecessor and I have indicated on a number of occasions that full and careful study will be given to the question of the future of what is known as the T.C.A. prairie milk run. This problem has arisen because of T.C.A. plans for elimination of all D.C.3's from its fleet and the high cost of construction of the secondary prairie airports to Viscount standards, as compared with a relatively low traffic volume on the route.

T.C.A. has been asked to review this problem and report to me on it, and I can give the assurance that this report, when received, will be the subject of very careful consideration by the air transport board, the Department of Transport and myself in accordance with the provisions of the Aeronautics Act, and that any representations received will be carefully studied. If it appears necessary and desirable in dealing with the case, a public hearing may be decided upon.

COMBINES

BRITISH-COLUMBIA—REPORTED USE OF EGGS AS LOSS LEADER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on January 25 the hon. member for Kootenay West asked me a question, as reported at pages 1398 and 1399 of Hansard, about the use of eggs as loss leaders in British Columbia.

I would like to inform the house that there have been no complaints in this regard brought to my attention, and if the hon. member has any evidence indicating an offence under the Combines Investigation Act, if he will bring it to the attention of the director of investigation and research the director will consider it carefully to determine whether an inquiry is warranted.

SUPPLY

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS—TAX SHARING ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, it would be entertaining and amusing, if it were not so serious, to study in detail the extent to which the Prime Minister and the members of the government have gone to make the people of Canada believe that the Conservatives are whistling the same tune today that they whistled so melodiously in 1957. One can barely recall—the picture is fading very rapidly—the self-assurance and even the overconfidence of the Prime Minister when he marched across the country all but submerged in the solutions he professed to have to all the problems, national and international. Among other things he led Canadians to believe that he had found the formula to increase social legislation, reduce taxes and balance the budget. Of course no one would suffer from unemployment, not while the Prime Minister was administering the affairs of Canada.

His predictions also contained a very vivid description of the Conservative vision of utopian Canada where full employment would be the order of the day, where our economy would be stabilized and tight money unheard of, where our national defence would be adequately provided for and our trade deficits would be brought into balance. This was the type of tune whistled in 1957 by the Conservatives.

The tune began to change immediately on their taking office. Instead of the self-assured, confident Billy Graham the Canadians had listened to, the Canadian people found that they had elected a very surprised Prime Minister leading an unprepared and bewildered government in the uncompromising intricacies of government administration without any notion whatever as to how they were going to implement any of the promises they had made, let alone how they were going to achieve anything remotely resembling the utopian vision of Canada under a Conservative administration.

The government's first tactic was then to appear to be busy and to be accomplishing things, and a great deal of publicity was given to the Prime Minister's travels abroad and around the world; and the government's statement with respect to a 15 per cent diversion of trade from the United States to the United Kingdom was made on the basis of sensationalism rather than on the basis of the wisdom and soundness of the action involved.

The description by the Minister of Finance of the commonwealth trade conference, which he claimed was a colossal success, can be justified only in terms of propaganda, because that particular trade conference will forever haunt the minister for having refused to accept the offer of a reciprocal free trade area with the United Kingdom. Smoke screen propaganda was the first Conservative tactic employed to camouflage the government's lack of over-all policies.

Then the government resorted to the inheritance tactic, by which means it sought to justify its inaction on the ground that it had inherited its administrative problems from the previous Liberal government, conveniently forgetting, of course, that these were the very problems the Conservatives in 1957 promised to solve.

Next the government tried the naive approach, the "what recession?" and the "what unemployment problem?" approach. When the opposition pointed out the very real dangers to our economy of an ever-increasing number of unemployed the government immediately turned to the "prophets of doom and gloom" and "selling Canada short" tactics. Whenever I hear hon. members opposite criticizing the Liberal opposition and accusing them of undermining the people's confidence in Canada because we dare criticize the government's inaction and lack of policies, I cannot help but recall a certain premier of Quebec who finally convinced himself that he was the province of Quebec. Surely the Prime Minister and members of the government, after so short a term in office, do not now already identify themselves with Canada. Surely the Prime Minister and the members of the government know and understand that Canadians can have—and indeed a number of Canadians do have—a considerable amount of confidence in Canada but no confidence in the government.

The current tactic, of course, is particularly interesting because it is so revealing. It is not as cunning or as imaginative as the other tactics. It is a tactic in which are employed expression of confusion, bewilderment, and exasperation. Perhaps it could be characterized as the "what would you do?" tactic. This tactic, of course, is already burnt out because on all the national urgent problems the Liberal opposition has stated what it would do, to the great discomfort of the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cardin: Of course, Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite do not have any intention of taking up these suggestions. They prefer to ignore them. However, if the Conservatives really want to find out what the Liberals would do, let the government call an election and we shall be happy to show them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cardin: Many people unfortunately not only consider as smart politics the tactics I have just described, but unfortunately they accept these practices as normal political procedure. I believe—and I feel very strongly about this—that there is no surer way of undermining and indeed destroying the people's confidence in our political system and in our democratic form of government than by the use by a political party, whatever its denomination, of tactics whose aim is primarily to enhance and preserve its political prestige but whose consequences are to mislead and confuse the public on vital urgent national issues so that objective analysis of the problem becomes impossible. Extremely urgent fundamental problems become insoluble simply because the effective solutions might prove unpopular to one or more classes of our social structure; and so as not to jeopardize its popularity, the party merely ignores the solution and jeopardizes the economy instead. Such tactics are not only small politics but are an indescribable injustice to the people who have not only a right but a responsibility to be aware of, to understand and to judge national problems as they really are and not as one political party would like to pretend they are.

The greatest proof that such tactics are not to be taken for smart politics is that in spite of the torrent of words the members of the government have uttered in implementing their successive strategies, none of the urgent problems have been solved and some indeed have become more serious.

Of all the problems facing the government which have not yet been solved I doubt if there is a more fundamental, important, complex or urgent one than that of federal-provincial relations and federal tax-sharing, arrangements.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cardin: I hope that hon. members opposite are not laughing at the problems involved in federal-provincial relations.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We are laughing at the hon. member.

Mr. Cardin: Apparently the proposals made by the Prime Minister in October can be described as laughing at the problems involved in provincial-federal relations. The federal-provincial tax-sharing agreement criticized so violently by the Conservatives expires in March of 1962, and new fiscal arrangements will have to be provided during this session of parliament as announced in the speech from the throne. Perhaps it might be very timely now to examine a statement made by the Prime Minister in 1957, as reported by the Canadian Press on April 26 of that year:

Mr. Diefenbaker pledged to work out new tax-sharing arrangements with the provinces which would strengthen Canada's federal system and give provinces and municipalities the funds to carry their responsibilities.

He said:

> A Conservative government, if elected, would immediately call a federal-provincial conference to settle existing problems. The federal system was threatened by "the centralization complex of the St. Laurent government" and a healthy balance of revenues between federal and provincial governments must be assured.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister does not dare to claim that so far he has fulfilled that promise. And how can the Prime Minister now condone and accept, as he is doing, the Liberal principles and the basis on which fiscal arrangements with the provinces were achieved if indeed they were a threat to the federal system, as he claimed they were in 1957? And if they are not a threat, on what grounds can the Prime Minister justify so insidious an accusation on a matter as fundamentally important as federal-provincial relations, an accusation which in fact did undermine the people's confidence in our federal system.

There have been few issues indeed that have been given the Conservative political football treatment more mercilessly than the fundamental and extremely difficult problem of federal-provincial relations. This may gain votes for the Conservative party, but it has not only confused the thinking of Canadians but has made an already difficult problem almost incomprehensible and retarded and jeopardized the progress that has been made so far toward an equitable solution to this extremely urgent problem.

It is only now that Canadians realize that the Conservative accusations were unfounded and unjustified, and that the present fiscal arrangements with the provinces, though admittedly not an ideal solution, were in fact a serious and sound approach to the problem. The government, instead of rejecting the substance of the fiscal arrangements which they criticized so violently, are now speaking of the difficulties and the problems involved which make any alternative solution to those arrangements extremely difficult. The Conservatives, of course, did not speak of those problems nor those difficulties when they were discussing federal-provincial relations in 1957. At that time they were merely content to confuse the issue.

Federal-provincial relations did not arise only with the Rowell-Sirois report of 1940; they were born with confederation. The provinces at that time saw the advantages to be derived by them in a federal system, and it is impossible to conceive that the fundamental principle of confederation could have been based on anything else than on co-operation and understanding between the autonomous provinces and the federal government. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that at no time has that principle ever been broken, and that tax-sharing arrangements have indeed been an application of that principle.

The exigencies of the war, the demand and urgent need for social legislation, the disparity in the financial resources of the different provinces, the justifiable desire to achieve uniformity in social aid, in the standards of living and in national unity, coupled with the increasing financial demands made within the rapidly expanding provinces and municipalities, presented problems which the fathers of confederation could never have dreamed of and for which they did not adequately provide in the constitution or in the methods of taxation made available to the provinces and to the federal government.

The urgency of the problems, both provincial and federal, and the fact that no clear-cut solution to these problems could be found within the framework of the constitution, made it necessary to resort to the principle of co-operation between the federal government and the provinces to find some alternative solution. That alternative solution was found, Mr. Speaker, when Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent introduced the tax-sharing arrangements which were so violently criticized by the Conservatives.

It would be useful, I think, to review the provisions of those tax-sharing agreements which, in 1957, the Prime Minister felt were a threat to the federal system. Hon. members will recall that under these agreements, first of all, the provinces were completely free to rent their rights to direct taxation or to levy their own direct taxes and have them collected by the federal government, or, third, to levy and collect their direct taxes without interference.

Second, by this agreement the provinces were enabled to derive more than 20 per cent of urgently needed additional revenues during the first years of the new arrangements as compared with the previous years without imposing double taxation and this percentage, of course, increased substantially in succeeding years.

Third, equalization payments based on the tax yield of the two wealthiest provinces were provided to enable the less wealthy provinces to face their constitutional responsibilities. Such an interprovincial redistribution of revenue, as I said before, is essential to preserve a proper balance within our federal system.

Finally, stabilization payments were offered to the provinces as a guarantee against any material decline in revenues from the direct tax field that could result from a prolonged recession.

These 1957 fiscal arrangements, Mr. Speaker, were financially advantageous to the provinces. They completely respected the constitutional rights of the provinces and provided to them, especially to the less wealthy provinces, substantially more revenue without double taxation. We do not claim, nor did Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent ever claim, that these arrangements were the ideal, the complete or the final solution of the federal-provincial problems. But, Mr. Speaker, they did permit both the federal government and the provinces to hurdle what could have become economic and financial disasters in either or both levels of government. And this was done without any of the provinces losing one iota of their sovereignty or autonomy.

It was within the responsibility and the prerogative of the federal government, with the co-operation and authorization of the provinces, to provide the much needed social measures on a uniform basis throughout the country at a time when the economy of most of the provinces could not afford the expenses involved. It has always been the accepted role of the federal government to supply public services which could not be supplied by other levels of government or by private enterprise; but, Mr. Speaker, if the provinces feel they are now ready to assume the responsibility of implementing some of the social measures presenty carried out by the federal government and can guarantee that these measures will continue to be uniform to Canadians in all provinces, then a redistribution of responsibilities as well as of taxes could be considered as the basis of new tax agreements. But the problem has always been whether the provinces could or would add additional responsibilities to their problems of rapid expansion, and whether some uniformity of social legislation would be maintained in all provinces.

A Liberal government, Mr. Speaker, would not object to withdrawing from joint federal-provincial schemes which are now firmly established in the provinces and which the provinces felt they could administer themselves, such as was suggested by the premier of Quebec to the conference in July. To my mind it is part of the federal government's role to co-operate with the provinces in implementing needed legislation and to withdraw when the provinces feel they can carry on alone, but it will be noted that this is the first time a provincial premier has formally expressed his willingness to assume additional financial responsibilities in compensation for additional revenues, and this may well be the key that might open the door to better federal-provincial relations.

In 1957 the Prime Minister waxed eloquent on the supposedly arrogant attitude of the Liberal government in its dealings with the provinces. In his opening campaign speech in Massey hall, Toronto, on April 25, 1957 he said:

> We intend to form a government to immediately convene a dominion-provincial conference to bring about a settlement of these problems, not in the spirit of arrogant domination as displayed by the present government but in the spirit of unity and amity and with mutual tolerance and respect.

He repeated this statement from coast to coast. We shall see, Mr. Speaker, whether the Prime Minister really kept his promises. After the 1957 election a federal-provincial conference was held but was reluctantly convened. It was not convened immediately but in November, 1957. The purpose of the conference was not to bring about a statement of the problem but to get to know one another, and fiscal arrangements were hardly discussed at that particular conference.

Second, it had been agreed at the November conference that there would be a further conference held in the early part of 1958; but the government, in a spirit of amity and tolerance but without consulting the provinces, replaced the conference by a telegram sent to all the provinces containing erroneous calculations made not by the Department of Finance but by Mr. George Gathercole, a top civil servant of the Ontario government.

Third, the Minister of Finance in his brisk and supposedly efficient manner set up a committee on finance consisting of the Minister of Finance and the provincial treasurers to reconsider fiscal problems, and more particularly to consider the request made by the provinces to have the 1957 arrangements revised. The committee met in July and in October of 1959. At this last meeting the Minister of Finance, ignoring the insistent request of the provinces and ignoring the Conservative promises of 1957, amicably announced that the tax-sharing arrangements would not be modified.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would not be what?

Mr. Cardin: Modified. Fourth, in July, 1960 a new federal-provincial conference was called to negotiate new tax-sharing arrangements which were to become effective in April, 1962, and at that meeting the provinces made several concrete proposals. For the first time at such a conference the province of Quebec, which by the way since June 22 last has finally returned to confederation, through its new premier, Mr. Lesage, put forward an over-all and concrete plan which received widespread approval from the other provinces. The federal government, however, apparently came to the conference unprepared. It had no proposals to make of its own and, indeed, had no comments to make on the proposals made by the provinces except to say, in a spirit of amity and tolerance, that the premiers' proposals were irresponsible.

Fifth, as hon. members recall, all the federal-provincial conferences began by a public meeting at which the Prime Minister and the premiers made public statements in order to clarify their proposals and their points of view, and after that was done the meetings continued in camera. In October, 1960 the provincial premiers came with prepared statements that they expected to make at the beginning of the conference, but the Prime Minister decided unilaterally that this conference would be held in camera.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that statement is completely incorrect and I cannot allow it to go unchallenged. I am not concerned about the general statement that has been made so far, but that statement is incorrect. This was an adjournment of the July session. At the July session opening statements were made and there was no objection raised; it was generally agreed that the proper course was to continue as we did in October, that being the resumption of the adjourned July conference.

Mr. Cardin: On that very point, it was the custom at all conferences—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Cardin: —for public statements to be made at the beginning. In 1955 there was also a conference in July which was adjourned and reconvened later in the autumn, and at that time public statements were also made by the then prime minister and the premiers of the provinces. I am glad to see that the Prime Minister corrected himself. He started out to say that there had been no objection to having the October conference meet in camera, and he corrected himself by saying that there was general agreement. There had been objections made to holding that particular meeting in camera.

Mr. Diefenbaker: By whom?

Mr. Cardin: The Prime Minister should know that, of course.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, reference has been made by the hon. member to the fact that the conference proceeded in camera. He is undertaking to make statements as to what occurred in proceedings conducted in camera. Under those circumstances I think he owes it to the house to tell the house the source of his information. If I correctly apprehend the position of the hon. member, he has had no direct access to information of this kind, and if he is undertaking to make statements, particularly statements that have been challenged by the Prime Minister, who was at the conference, I think he should tell us the source of his information; because it cannot be anything more than hearsay he is bandying around.

Mr. Speaker: I disagree with the Minister of Finance that that is a point of order. In accordance with our practice the hon. member who has the floor must, of course, accept the statement of the Prime Minister that he did not decide in advance that the meeting was to be held in camera. That closes that matter. However, in proceeding to discuss what happened at a meeting which was held in camera there is no obligation that I know of to disclose the source of his information. After all, there were a good many people present at the conference, and there will be an opportunity to reply.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, it might be that the hon. member is reading from the fables of Lamontagne.

Mr. Cardin: I do not need Lamontagne, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) or anybody else to tell me what I should say. In accordance with the Prime Minister's intervention a little while ago, let us say there was not unanimous disapproval. Let us say that there was some disagreement with respect to whether or not the meeting should be held in camera. I know for a fact that objections were raised; nevertheless the meeting was held in camera.

So the Prime Minister proceeded in camera, no doubt in a spirit of co-operation, to make known his proposals which he was very sure he wanted to put forward only as suggestions. The premiers decided at that time, of course, that they would want an adjournment until 2.30 to consider the proposals made by the Prime Minister. However, immediately after adjournment of the morning session of the conference and before the premiers had time to study the proposals made by the Prime Minister and to prepare their comments, the Prime Minister issued to the press the proposals he had made in a meeting which, at his own insistence, had been held in camera, leaving the premiers of the provinces obliged to comment publicly on the proposals without having had time to study them. For the Prime Minister, all is vanity and publicity.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): All is rot that you are talking about right now.

Mr. Cardin: You will have an opportunity to debate the question. Surely the Prime Minister is not serious when he claims to have carried out his formal pledge to bring about a settlement of federal-provincial relations, not in a spirit of arrogant domination but in a spirit of unity, amity and with mutual tolerance and respect, when his inaction and his attitude under the circumstances can be described not only as arrogant but as downright insulting to the provinces. But perhaps the greatest breach of the Prime Minister's pledge to settle the problem of federal-provincial relations, and indeed the greatest insult to the provinces, is that the government, in spite of its promises, has evidently after three and a half years not taken the trouble to analyse, study and understand the problems involved in the field of federal-provincial relations. A review of the government's statements at each of the federal-provincial conferences indicates clearly that the government has no over-all plan to solve this problem, and is indeed completely unprepared to negotiate with the provinces.

I would strongly advise the government, Mr. Speaker, not to try to tackle the problem of federal-provincial relations with an ill thought out and off the cuff solution such as the suggestion the Prime Minister made to the provinces at the conference in October. If the government imposes on the provinces the proposal he made at that time they will not only repudiate the magnanimous attitude the Prime Minister displayed in 1957, but they will destroy the basic principles upon which better and sounder federal-provincial relations can be continued.

At a press conference in Winnipeg on May 14, 1957, as reported in the Winnipeg Free Press of that date, the present Prime Minister stated:

> The first thing a Conservative government would do, he said, would be to call a federal-provincial conference which would be held 'in the spirit of confederation' to arrive at a tax rental formula 'more in keeping with the needs of the provinces and municipalities'.
> Under recent tax agreements, he said, the provinces have been forced to a 'starved condition'. Municipalities have been placed in a position where property owners are saddled with heavy burden of taxation.
> He charged that continued centralization of taxation by the federal government was leaving the municipalities as 'the forgotten people'.
> Present tax relations, Mr. Diefenbaker maintained, are a 'haphazard outgrowth' of wartime agreements which don't meet the problems of Canada today. The federal government offered 'cut and dried' plans which the provinces had to accept.
> Under a Conservative government, he said, the provinces would have a voice in deciding fiscal terms and the tax agreements would contribute to national unity.

These indeed, Mr. Speaker, are noble words and noble sentiments, but it is most unfortunate that none of these noble sentiments have been reflected in the least in the proposals the Prime Minister made to the provinces last October. The proposals the Prime Minister made to the provinces in October contain these features:

1. The federal tax rates in the three shared tax fields would be reduced by the amount of the present standard rates, that is 14, 9 and 50. This proposal has two implications. First, the federal government is not prepared to vacate any additional field of direct taxation in order to enable the provinces to get more revenues from direct taxes without adding to the over-all tax burden. Second, all the provinces will have to levy and collect their direct taxes, as some of them are doing now under the provisions of the present arrangements. The provinces will not be able to make tax rental or tax collection agreements with the federal government as they do now. This would mean that all Canadian taxpayers would have to file two income tax returns, and it would also mean additional costs to the provinces for the collection of taxes.

2. Federal subsidies, fixed at $220 million per year, would be distributed amongst the provinces to take the place of the present equalization payments, the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants and the special grants to Newfoundland under section 2 of the Newfoundland Additional Grants Act. A new but unspecified formula of distribution of those grants would replace the present one which is based on the average yield of standard direct tax rates in the top two provinces. This represents, in my opinion, a clear repudiation of the equalization principle which the Prime Minister had promised in July to maintain. I shall return to that point later.

3. Stabilization payments would be based on the yield of the standard taxes in the last two years of the current arrangements, that is in 1960-61 and 1961-62. At present those payments are determined on a moving basis and are based for any one year on tax yields of the two previous years. The change proposed by the federal government means, for all practical purposes, the abandonment of the stabilization principle unless we experience an acute depression in Canada during the next few years.

4. Reciprocal application of sales and commodity taxes to federal and provincial crown agencies would be provided, but no material changes are proposed with respect to conditional grant and shared cost arrangements.

5. The use of sales taxes at the retail level by the provinces would be confirmed through an amendment to the British North America Act. Such a proposal, Mr. Speaker, has very little significance in terms of additional provincial revenues, since all provinces can even now levy such taxes. As a matter of fact seven provinces already do so.

There is, however, one redeeming feature of the Prime Minister's proposals, Mr. Speaker. It is that the federal government has succeeded finally in creating unanimity amongst the provinces. They were unanimously and vehemently against the federal proposals. The Toronto Star of October 27 gave a very succinct and very accurate description of the feeling of the 10 premiers. The headline reads "10 Premiers Turn Thumbs Down on P.M. Offer". In commenting on the proposals this is what the different premiers had to say:

Robichaud, New Brunswick: Preposterous.
Stanfield, Nova Scotia: No better off.
Roblin, Manitoba: No good.
Smallwood, Newfoundland: Disillusioned.
Frost, Ontario: Meaningless.
Bennett, British Columbia: Unrealistic.
Shaw, Prince Edward Island: Not in favour.
Douglas, Saskatchewan: Retrograde.
Manning, Alberta: Deceptive.
Lesage, Quebec: Unacceptable.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member permit a question? Upon what authority does he, as one who did not attend the conference which proceeded in camera, undertake to say that these statements appearing in the Toronto Daily Star are accurate and were made at that conference?

Mr. Denis: Why don't you deny them yourself?

Mr. Cardin: Suppose we put it the other way. Is the Minister of Finance ready to deny what I have just put forward?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless it is the hon. member's intention to move an amendment, which he has not yet indicated, I shall have to tell him shortly that his time has expired. In other words, the hon. member has unlimited time only if he is moving an amendment, but he has said nothing about an amendment as yet.

Mr. Cardin: I do intend to move an amendment. I am sorry I did not do so sooner.

What happened to the solution the Prime Minister claimed in 1957 would be made in a spirit of amity and mutual respect. The Conservatives also accused the former Liberal administration of adopting a take it or leave it attitude. This government apparently is not even that generous, because it is adopting a leave it attitude; there is nothing the provinces can take in the federal proposals.

In 1957 the Conservatives, especially those who were following Mr. Duplessis in Quebec, criticized the Liberal government for taking too large a share of the joint field of direct taxes, thus forcing the provinces into a starved condition. What has this government done, Mr. Speaker? In 1958 the present government increased the provincial share of personal income tax by 3 per cent of the federal rate. But in 1959 the federal government increased its own share of the corporate income tax by an additional 3 per cent tax on profits. I should like to emphasize this point, that the federal share of the joint field of direct taxes is higher in 1960-61 than it would have been in 1957-58 under the provisions of Mr. Harris' budgetary proposals.

Moreover, the present government does not propose to vacate the field of direct taxation any further during the next five years. It has pushed its tax rates as high as it can and now refuses to provide any additional leeway in order to enable the provinces to exercise their rights without adding to an already heavy tax burden. In fact this government asserts that its fiscal needs have a priority over provincial financial requirements.

This refusal to provide additional room for provincial taxes must be related to equalization in order to understand fully what it means to the provinces. As I said before, the federal government, in spite of the firm commitment made by the Prime Minister in July, 1960, now proposes to abandon the principle of equalization and to distribute an unvarying amount of money each year to the provinces. This proposal, Mr. Speaker, I submit is most unfair to most provinces.

This proposal means that the few rich provinces having high tax yields will continue, as at present, to benefit from those increasing yields, but the other provinces will not be able to share further in the country's prosperity. In other words, all provinces except one will be worse off under the new proposal than they would be if the existing arrangements had been simply continued. An undesirable but increasing differential in per capita tax revenue will develop among provinces, and this differential is likely to increase rapidly for another reason. The provinces have been told by the federal government to increase their own direct tax rates if they want more revenues. This procedure might be a possible solution for those few provinces which have a high tax potential, but it will not be possible for most provinces.

We all know, of course, that direct tax yields, and especially the per capita yields from corporate income tax, vary from one province to another. This fact is clearly shown in a table presented by the Minister of Finance last year, which table appears at page 2230 of Hansard of that year. This table indicates that corporate income tax of 1 per cent would yield per capita in the current fiscal year $2.64 in Ontario, $2.18 in British Columbia, $2.05 in Alberta, $1.97 in Quebec, $1.56 in Manitoba, $1.13 in Saskatchewan, $1.02 in Nova Scotia, 88 cents in New Brunswick, 79 cents in Newfoundland and 54 cents in Prince Edward Island.

As we can see, the per capita yield of such a tax in Prince Edward Island is only 20 per cent of what it is in Ontario. On the basis of a 1 per cent corporation income tax, without equalization, Quebec, for instance, would lose almost $3½ million in revenue as compared with Ontario. In order to get the same per capita revenue that Ontario receives from a 1 per cent corporate income tax, Prince Edward Island would have to levy a tax of 5 per cent and Newfoundland would have to impose a tax of 3⅓ per cent. This comparison indicates how inequitable the federal proposal is when it requires the provinces from now on to finance any addition to their services from their own taxes, without equalization.

For certain provinces, at least, the constitutional power of direct taxation is almost only theoretical; in practice it cannot be used to provide adequate provincial revenues. What will happen, Mr. Speaker, in those provinces as provincial financial requirements increase, under the Conservative proposal which would force the provinces to increase their own taxes without equalization? Those provinces would have to impose prohibitive rates of taxes, or refuse needed improvements in provincial services, or ask the federal government to take over their constitutional responsibilities. None of those solutions is compatible with fairness and the proper balance of our federal system.

In summary, the federal government tells the provinces "We will freeze and maintain the benefits you receive under the tax-sharing arrangements negotiated by the Liberals, but you will not get anything more in the future from a Conservative government". As the Leader of the Opposition stated in Sussex on October 29, by driving the provinces back into double taxation and by refusing to apply in the future the principles of equalization and stabilization, the present government is proposing to undo the progress made in federal-provincial fiscal relations and to return the provinces to the financial strait jacket they were in during the days of R. B. Bennett. From now on, as in the early thirties, all the provinces will be left alone to face their increasing financial responsibilities. This situation is exactly what produced so much inequality among the provinces in the early thirties and caused the acute crisis of our federal system which was so vividly described in the report of the Rowell-Sirois commission in 1940.

The Liberal party is strongly opposed to the proposal made by the government to the provinces last October. We believe that the basic features of the existing tax-sharing arrangements should be maintained. We also believe that they can be improved in certain respects not by going backward, as the government proposes to do, but by moving forward.

Without going into the details of this complex question, may I say that the general attitude of the Liberal party in this field can be summarized by the following propositions:

1. We believe in regular consultation with the provinces in order to ensure that priorities in the use of taxes are kept constantly in line with changing conditions and in order to ensure that the provincial governments have adequate revenues with which to provide for their citizens and adequate standard of services and to perform their constitutional obligations. Another important new area for co-operation is in the borrowing operations of municipal, provincial and federal authorities. More regular consultation and closer co-operation require the creation of a permanent federal-provincial secretariat.

2. We believe that the principle of equalization should be strengthened instead of being abandoned, and that all provinces should receive the same revenue, per head of population, from the direct taxes shared with the federal government. In this way Canadians everywhere would receive an equal share of tax revenues derived from national economic activities and all provinces would be in a better position to face by themselves their constitutional responsibilities.

3. The principle of stabilization should also be retained and strengthened. Tax revenues fall off if we encounter a serious recession, but there is no lessening of the need for roads, schools and other services provided by the provinces and the municipalities. Stabilization payments in any given year should be related to the revenues of the previous year.

4. We believe that the permanent programs which had to be started on a shared cost basis by federal and provincial governments and which are now firmly established throughout Canada should be left entirely to the provinces, and that the federal government should evolve appropriate readjustments in its taxes so as to provide for full provincial financing of those programs.

5. Finally, we believe that adjustment grants should be available on a basis of a formula which could be applied to any part of the country, for any province in special fiscal need.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are some of the proposals that we feel should be offered to the provinces and be embodied in the new tax-sharing arrangements. We also believe that current negotiations so far have made little or no progress. We were very happy to hear the Prime Minister announce a federal-provincial meeting for March 23 or 24. Indeed, we are very happy to welcome that announcement. However, I cannot help but state that it is rather confusing that the Prime Minister should make that announcement today about holding a federal-provincial conference in March, when only last Friday, in answer to a question from someone on this side of the house, the Minister of Finance claimed that there would be no convening of the federal-provincial conference in the next two months.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I defy the hon. member to read what I actually did say; not this most misleading paraphrase, but to read what I did say.

Mr. Speaker: The minister is quite within his rights to ask for correction if misquoted and the hon. member yields the floor.

Mr. Cardin: I did not have the statement in my hand, and I want to thank the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate for giving it to me. I do recall what was said, and to make the Minister of Finance happy I will read what is in Hansard. This is reported at page 1476 of Hansard:

> Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether any changes whatever are in contemplation with respect to the tax-sharing arrangements with the provinces for the fiscal year 1961-62.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are in the wrong column.

Mr. Cardin: I know.

Mr. Pickersgill: You admit he is right, do you?

Mr. Cardin: I did not want to read the whole thing, but the question from the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) was this:

> Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister can inform the house whether a date has been set for a federal-provincial conference involving the provincial premiers in order to deal with fiscal matters?
> Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Speaker.
> Mr. Argue: Can the minister say whether a conference will be held within the next month or two?
> Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would not expect one would be held within the next short period.

An hon. Member: That puts the record straight.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Cardin: The Minister of Finance makes many interventions and pretends with a very strong voice to be always correct and not to be wrong.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is crystal clear, as usual.

An hon. Member: Keep on reading.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): You must be pretty bad when the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate cannot help you.

Mr. Cardin: Since 1957 the provinces have presented their concrete views on several occasions, particularly in July, 1960; but in October the federal government acted like a very bad employer who proposes a reduction in wages in order to counteract demands from his employees for better remuneration. What is needed now are genuine negotiations, conducted, as the Prime Minister so eloquently promised in 1957, "in a spirit of unity, amity and with mutual tolerance and respect". Mere exchanges of views, either through telegrams or letters, are no longer sufficient.

We on this side of the house sincerely hope that the government at such a conference will revise its October proposal in several respects, but more particularly with regard to equalization. The government must recognize that, according to its October proposal, although the present equalization payments would be continued, possibly with a new formula, the principle of equalization itself would cease to apply in future. This becomes clear when we realize that according to the federal proposal, equalization payments would remain fixed and become a form of subsidy, irrespective of future changes in the standard tax rates or in the yield of such rates.

This is a direct repudiation of the equalization principle and is a repudiation of a firm commitment made by the Prime Minister to the provinces at the July conference. Here is what he said then, and this is at page 10 of the proceedings:

> I want to make this abundantly clear on behalf of the dominion government, that whatever the ultimate decision may be the principle of equalization must be preserved.

We agree with that fully.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And reiterated again in October, and followed.

Mr. Cardin: I will go on. The Prime Minister went on to define equalization—

> —as a payment by Canada to the provinces to bring the per capita return from the three taxes at standard rates up to the average per capita yield in the two provinces in which per capita yield is highest. For provinces in which the tax potential is relatively low, this principle is most important.

Then the Prime Minister added:

Again I want to emphasize that the federal government remains firmly committed to the principle of equalization and of financial assistance to those provinces in which incomes and taxable capacity are below those of the richer provinces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Hear, hear; and that is still the view.

Mr. Cardin: That is fine. The Prime Minister went on to say:

The government believes that the principle of fiscal aid and equalization to assist the less wealthy provinces stands on its own feet and is accepted on that basis and is quite separate from the question of tax rental or tax sharing.

I am glad to see the Prime Minister nod his head in approval.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am in agreement with what you have read from my speech.

Mr. Cardin: I wonder if the Prime Minister will say that when I go on with the other quotations from his speech. This is a firm, clear and inescapable commitment made by the Prime Minister of our country in July, 1960. But at the October conference of 1960 this is what the Prime Minister had to say:

To meet the needs of the provinces with lower tax potential we would therefore—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member what he is reading from, because there is no official record of the conference.

Mr. Pickersgill: You do not seem to realize it is a press release.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If he is reading something I think he should be called upon to identify it.

Mr. Speaker: I think the minister's point is well taken. If the hon. member is purporting to quote from an in camera conference, he should identify the document. In any event he should identify the quotations.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make this point quite clear. I thought I had made it quite clear. After the meeting in camera at the October conference the Prime Minister released to the press the proposals he had made in camera. I am reading a statement that appeared in the press.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is right here; October 26.

Mr. Cardin: As a matter of fact I am reading from a press release of the summary of suggestions made by the Prime Minister of Canada to the dominion-provincial conference of October 26, 1960.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member says he is reading from a newspaper. What newspaper?

Mr. Cardin: It is a release from the Prime Minister's office. What I was trying to say a while ago was that all this information was available at the time of the conference immediately after the session in camera, when the Prime Minister made this public and released it to the press. After that interruption perhaps I can continue to read what the Prime Minister said, not at the July conference but at the October conference of 1960.

Mr. Speaker: Just so the record may be clear, I take it that the hon. member is not reading what the Prime Minister said at the conference in camera but is reading an extract from a press statement given by the Prime Minister on some date which the hon. member has not yet identified.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I am reading from a summary of suggestions made by the Prime Minister of Canada to the dominion-provincial conference of October 26, 1960. The Prime Minister said:

To meet the needs of the provinces with lower tax potential we would therefore ask parliament to provide equalization payments or their equivalent in a total amount of $220 million a year, which is approximately the scale of the payments this year. The amount so provided will take the place of the present equalization payments, the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, and the special grants to Newfoundland under section 2 of the Newfoundland Additional Grants Act.

Being mindful of the necessity of maintaining a reasonable level of public services in areas of low tax potential, we will ask parliament to provide this sum of money for equalization payments. While we are willing to recommend to parliament that the present scale of equalization payments be made available to the provinces, we have some reservation about the present formula of distribution and would hope that the total might be distributed in such fashion as to give greater weight to provincial fiscal need. If the provinces can all agree on a better or more equitable formula for distribution of this amount, the government will recommend it to parliament, provided that each of the Atlantic provinces gets at least as much from such a provincial formula of distribution as it gets at the present time from the equalization payments, the Atlantic provinces adjustment grant, and the Newfoundland Additional Grants Act.

As I said before, we believe that the only interpretation that can be given to this last statement is that while present equalization payments will be made, the principle of equalization as defined by the Prime Minister in July will not be applied in future. Because of the clear repudiation in October, 1960 of the solemn pledge made by the Prime Minister in July, 1960 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud):

That all the words after the word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

In view of the fact that the federal government at the October conference (1960) with the provinces proposed fixed subsidies in place of the equalization payments provided under the present tax-sharing arrangements, and that this October proposal is a repudiation of the principle of equalization;

Therefore be it resolved that this house strongly favours the continued application of the principle of equalization of direct tax revenues pledged to the provinces by the Prime Minister at the federal-provincial conference in July, 1960, and defined at the time by the Prime Minister as a payment by Canada to the provinces to bring the per capita return from the three taxes at standard rates up to the average per capita yield in the two provinces in which per capita yield is highest.

Mr. Speaker: If no hon. member wishes to comment on this proposed amendment, I shall now put it before the house.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating a topic that is very complex indeed. At this time I should like to express the opinion of this group. We intend to support the amendment offered by the official opposition, but in our opinion it is inadequate. It asks only for a continuation in principle of existing arrangements, and does not call for an extension of the basic principle underlying existing dominion-provincial tax-sharing arrangements. Our amendment to the amendment of the Liberals is going to attempt to underline the need for an extension of the underlying basic principles of these agreements.

In 1867 the fathers of confederation reached an agreement whereby responsibilities and powers of taxation as between the two levels of government were arrived at, and we had emerge the British North America Act. At that time the builders of the Canadian nation, meeting in Prince Edward Island, were unable to see how in the years ahead the responsibilities of our provincial governments were going to grow by leaps and bounds. They also failed to see how in years to come we would have a condition wherein new responsibilities would have to be assumed in the main by our other levels of government and that the revenues of the national government would increase at the same time.

For years the problem has been met, in part at least, by the federal government increasingly assuming a partnership role with the other levels of government. Each year we note how the federal government is in many ways attempting to share the responsibility that was imposed upon the provincial governments by the terms of the British North America Act. Already this session we have had legislation before us under which the federal government will attempt to help the other level of government in the field of education. There has been a growth in federal participation in the meeting of these new and larger responsibilities that the lower levels of government now have.

The other method devised some years ago was one whereby the provinces agreed to rent out to the federal government certain taxation rights in return for revenue from the federal treasury. We had evolved the tax-sharing agreements. There has been a lot of misunderstanding in this matter. The federal government has attempted to assume its fair share of the problems of government. Whenever the federal government has moved in to assist the other level of government in such matters as education, highways, health and welfare and unemployment, there have been protests as to the terms and even as to the basic essence of the tax-sharing agreements that have been arrived at. Obviously the easy solution is that about which we have read and heard much, the return to the provinces of their basic rights to tax in order to enable them to look after their constitutional responsibilities.

That is an easy answer, but it does not resolve the basic problem. It is the attitude of Pontius Pilate washing his hands when faced with a difficult decision. In effect, this latest move in October last whereby the federal government offered to return to the provinces their right in the matter of direct taxation was an adoption of the position of Pontius Pilate, the federal government attempting to wash its hands of a problem at a time when we face grave responsibilities in this regard. I submit that the answer is not easy. However, I also submit that the answer will not be arrived at by unloading the whole problem on to the necks of all provincial governments.

This last move, if it were to be accepted by our provincial governments, has in it implications that we all ought to be aware of. There is a danger, because if the provinces accepted this last offer of the federal government we would have a national government that would find itself unable to deal with problems of recession and depression. It would find itself completely handicapped in dealing with the very difficult problem of unemployment. The national government would find itself in a position where it was completely prevented from lending any effective hand in the matter of national development. It would accentuate the inequalities that exist between the standards of living of Canadians in various provinces of Canada. They would have made no contribution toward resolving the very severe handicap under which our municipalities must now operate. Were this proposal accepted the national government would immediately realize that it would be completely unable henceforth to assist in the matter of education. It would also find itself unable to resolve problems of regional handicaps under which so many of our Canadian people suffer.

We find, therefore, because of all the dangers involved, that the offer of the government to the provinces is not in the interests of our nation. We realize, of course, that there is a problem, as I said before, and we have been given many assurances. I have looked at the Conservative promises made during the last election, as they are to be found in the compilation that has been referred to so often in this house. I notice that hardly any subject contains so many pledges and so many promises on the part of the then leader of the Conservative party, now the Prime Minister, as this matter of dominion-provincial taxation arrangements, or their fiscal arrangements. There are pages and pages of pledges that were given by the then leader of the Conservative party. In reading through all of them one finds that certainly there is no indication that the Conservatives intended to abdicate their responsibilities in this regard.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): And they have never done so.

Mr. Regier: In our opinion this latest move of theirs is an abdication of their responsibilities as leaders of our nation. They are intending to throw the difficult situation into the laps of the provinces. We feel that this is completely inadequate, and is exactly the opposite of the essence of their promises made to the Canadian people at that time.

I might simply touch on the matter of interest rates that other levels of governments have to pay. I refer to the Victoria Times of May 22, 1957, where we find that the man who is now our Prime Minister had this to say, and it is in quotation marks:

> Even the city of Victoria has to pay outrageous rates of interest today.

Again, in his home town of Prince Albert, as reported in the Prince Albert Herald of May 28, 1957, the Prime Minister said:

> Prince Albert knows when it borrows that it has to pay an exorbitant rate of interest to the east.

Yet now, if the offer of the government were to be accepted, there would be no possibility of any help on the part of this government, with all the resources at its command, toward relieving the interest burdens that have to be borne by our provinces and municipalities. As a matter of fact, only recently in the baby budget the minister imposed an even higher rate of interest on our municipalities and our provincial governments, and it is nonsense that our provinces have to be—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is now speaking about the budget. The statement he has made about the budget is completely untrue. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the proper place or time to be discussing the budget. We have had the budget debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the minister, I wonder whether Your Honour would consider enforcing the rules on the minister as well as on the other members of the house and prevent him from raising these phony points of order which enable him to reply to arguments in debate.

Mr. Regier: On the point of order, the rate that has to be paid by the provincial governments is very much a part of the financial arrangements or, in my submission at least, it ought to be a part of the financial arrangements arrived at between the national government and our provincial governments. I therefore feel, even though there was a reference in the budget to those interest rates and to the borrowings of provincial governments, it is also very much an integral part of the debate now before us. I note in the report—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I rule on the point of order. Of course in my mind the subject matter of the amendment moved by the hon. member seems to me to be somewhat restricted, because it brings into discussion only the principle of equalization of direct tax revenues as they exist today, compared with the proposal made at the last federal-provincial conference, which would freeze them, if my interpretation is correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member knows what I mean. Therefore I do not think it would be appropriate to discuss the whole financial situation of the federal government or even the whole problem of fiscal arrangements with the provinces. Unless I misinterpret the amendment, this is the way I feel the discussion should be limited.

Mr. Regier: I realized, Mr. Speaker, that I might have a little difficulty and I did discuss with a number of members the possible limitations of the debate now going on. However, this very matter of the proposal of the government to freeze the incomes, or the possible incomes, of our provincial governments raises, at least to a certain degree, the effect of this limitation of the incomes of our provinces. It was for that reason that I brought in the matter of interest rates although I had not intended to pursue it, Mr. Speaker.

It is our contention that dominion-provincial fiscal relations—and I should like to endorse what the Liberal spokesman had to say on this point—ought to be a continuing process; that a permanent organization should be established whereby the growing problems of the two levels of government could be a matter of continuing discussion. I should like to underline his call for the establishment of a dominion-provincial secretariat wherein the minister of this government would preside over continuous meetings with representatives of each of the ten provinces, which would co-ordinate our problems as they have arisen and will continue to arise. We feel that a continuation of the equalization principle is essential in order to give Canadians in all parts of Canada equal opportunities, in order to enable the government to continue to exercise control over the welfare of the national economy.

The proposal of the government would in fact establish within the borders of Canada ten different Canadian nations, and we believe that would be most regrettable. We would find people in Nova Scotia becoming poorer and poorer while other provinces would continue to become wealthier and wealthier. Equal opportunities for all Canadians would then fly out the window. We need a national government that is able to use ways and means to assure to as great extent as is constitutionally possible equal opportunities for all Canadians in all parts of Canada. We also need a continuation of the basic equalization principle in order to enable the national government to exercise a policy of selective development in those areas of Canada where development is most urgently needed.

We also urge a continuation of this principle in order that at least a little more progress can be made toward helping our municipalities meet their growing responsibilities. We have to recognize the need to share our responsibilities no matter where we live in Canada, and the proposal of the government to hand back to the provinces direct powers of taxation would mean nothing more or less than that the wealthier provinces would be enabled thereby to get off the hook of carrying out as Canadians their share of responsibility to those Canadians living in less privileged areas. We do not want to see a return to the provinces of the right to levy their own income taxes. We believe this would bring in its wake many evil results.

In the new agreements that we hope will be arrived at we should also like to see, in addition to the continuation of the equalization principle, ways and means devised whereby in effect there will not be a penalty imposed on those provinces that desire to be progressive and which introduce legislation of various kinds that other provinces may be years in initiating. What I have in mind particularly is that if a province wants to embark on a prepaid medical care program, ways and means ought to be found whereby that province is not going to be penalized indirectly in the years to come for having undertaken a progressive measure albeit ahead of the rest of the provinces. I have in mind such things as the Trans-Canada Highway Act and a national health insurance plan.

We believe that in addition to the equalization principle the tax-sharing arrangements proposed by the government should embody a new principle, a sharing of the problem of raising the necessary social capital. The federal government has under its control the Bank of Canada, and we feel that our municipalities and provinces should be helped, that the time is overdue for the government to come to the aid of other levels of government in the matter of helping to meet their capital needs.

We also do not like the proposal of the Prime Minister that the existing amount of revenue available for equalization will henceforth be taken and allotted to the provinces. It is our view that by doing so we are getting away from the basic principle into the realm of a Santa Claus prime minister deciding when and how and to which of the provinces he is going to pay additional allowances. I know we already have arrangements whereby we pay additional allowances to certain provinces, but we do not like the abolition of agreements that are based on fundamental principles and the instituting of grants instead whereby the government, according to its whim of the moment, would be able to make what in effect would be hand-outs to what it considered to be needy provinces.

We might thus return to a situation where, if the political complexion of a particular provincial government did not meet with the approval of the government of Canada, the province in question would then be discriminated against. We might again have the five-cent speech of Mackenzie King in the annals of Canadian history; that is to say, unless the people of this province vote into office a provincial government of my liking I can assure them they will not get a nickel out of the national government.

This would be a return to the days of Mr. Duplessis, who decided on his own hook to which parishes he was going to give grants for educational purposes. I am very happy that the new government in the province of Quebec intends, if it has not already done so, to remove this inequity and to enact legislation whereby the parishes will have the right to obtain school grants. We want our provincial governments and the people of Canada to have the right to equal opportunities. We do not want them to have that right only at the pleasure of whoever happens to be prime minister at any particular time in our history.

So far as this matter is concerned, I believe we in Canada have to operate as a team. Let us have a united Canada with a national government working in co-operation with the ten provincial governments. I hope we can end the political competition that has too often been evident in relations between the two levels of government and between particular provinces and the national government. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge):

> That the amendment be amended by inserting after the word "resolved" in the first line of paragraph 2, "(a)", and adding to the proposed amendment the following subparagraph:
> "(b) and be it further resolved that this house is of the opinion that the present tax-sharing agreements should be extended to provide sufficient federal assistance to the provinces so as to enable them to assist the municipalities in the provision of essential capital services."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I put the amendment, would any hon. member care to comment as to its admissibility? I should like to have the guidance of hon. members.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not know whether you wish an observation on that point. I think it is quite obvious that this would involve a substantial charge upon the crown, and it may well go outside the scope of the original amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should like to have the views of the house in connection with citation 202 in Beauchesne's fourth edition, paragraph 3. Reference may be made also to May, page 421, in connection with the relevancy of amendments. My worry is that the amendment deals only with the principle involved in equalization payments, which is something quite different from the tax-sharing arrangements. It would seem, therefore, that the subamendment would widen the scope of the discussion. Of course, if the house is agreeable to having it accepted, then I shall abide by that decision.

Mr. Regier: If I may speak to the point of order raised by the minister, I would say that if our subamendment involves a financial burden on the federal government, then the amendment also is out of order because it could be argued with equal force that the continuation of the equalization principle would involve a financial burden on the federal government. I feel, therefore, since the amendment has been accepted, the point of order in connection with the subamendment is hardly relevant.

May I point out that the amendment offered by the official opposition asks that the principle of equalization be continued in the federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements. All we are asking is that the equalization principle be continued and that, in addition, the principle be extended so as to provide sufficient federal assistance to the provinces in the matter of capital services.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, the amendment speaks of maintaining a principle which has been recognized in the past. The subamendment suggests the extension to a specific field of earmarked funds. There are numerous citations to the effect that an amendment of this kind cannot further encumber the public revenues and I would suggest this subamendment is out of order upon the grounds stated by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister has advanced an argument which I believe has some merit. However, I do not believe the subamendment would impose a greater financial burden upon the crown than the amendment because it is merely a resolution. However, in so far as the subamendment is concerned, I refer the house to May, page 421, the paragraph which is entitled "Amendments to be relevant". The second paragraph reads:

> Stated generally, no matter ought to be raised in debate on a question which would be irrelevant, if moved as an amendment, and an amendment cannot be used for importing arguments which would be irrelevant to the main question.

This is about the same thing as we find in Beauchesne, citation 202, paragraph 3, which reads:

> Since the purpose of a subamendment is to alter the amendment, it should not enlarge upon the scope of the amendment but it should deal with matters that are not covered by the amendment; if it is intended to bring up matters foreign to the amendment, the member should wait until the amendment is disposed of and move a new amendment.

As I indicated, it seems to me that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin) deals only with the principle of equalization of direct tax revenues to bring the per capita return from the three taxes at standard rates up to the average per capita yield of the two provinces in which the per capita yield is highest. Unless I am mistaken, this deals only with equalization payments and tax-sharing arrangements are another phase of the fiscal problems that exist between the federal and provincial governments. The subamendment, therefore, as I read it, would certainly deal with something irrelevant to the amendment. It would certainly enlarge the scope of the discussion, and if we apply the rules or the decisions to which I have just referred, I would have to declare the amendment out of order.

Mr. Regier: I should like to appeal your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those in favour of sustaining the Chair's decision will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

The question is an appeal to the house from a decision of the Chair as follows: Mr. Cardin moved, in amendment to a motion to go into supply, as follows:

"That all the words after the word 'that' be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

'In view of the fact that the federal government at the October conference (1960) with the provinces proposed fixed subsidies in place of the equalization payments provided under the present tax-sharing arrangements, and that this October proposal is a repudiation of the principle of equalization;

Therefore be it resolved that this house strongly favours the continued application of the principle of equalization of direct tax revenues pledged to the provinces by the Prime Minister at the federal-provincial conference in July, 1960, and defined at that time by the Prime Minister as a payment by Canada to the provinces to bring the per capita return from the three taxes at standard rates up to the average per capita yield in the two provinces in which per capita yield is highest.' "

Mr. Regier proposed in amendment to the amendment as follows:

"That the amendment be amended by inserting after the word 'resolved' in the first line of paragraph 2, '(a)', and adding to the proposed amendment the following subparagraph:

'(b) and be it further resolved that this house is of the opinion that the present tax-sharing agreements should be extended to provide sufficient federal assistance to the provinces so as to enable them to assist the municipalities in the provision of essential capital services.' "

Whereupon the Chair decided that the amendment was out of order in that it enlarged upon the terms of the amendment as it introduced a subject matter not contained therein and therefore the proposed subamendment was irrelevant as stated at page 421 of May's 16th edition.

Whereupon Mr. Regier appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the decision of the Chair confirmed.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, whatever else may be said today concerning the pitch by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin), it was certainly preceded by a long wind-up.

He undertook to touch on, I suppose, 15 or 20 subjects before he admitted the house to a view of the subject which he was proposing to raise on this supply motion. I suppose all hon. members shared the same impression as the speech proceeded. Probably all began with the assumption that this was another of the compositions of Professor Lamontagne—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, a genuine point of order.

An hon. Member: That is a change.

Mr. Pickersgill: My point of order is that it is contrary to the rules of the house to reflect upon speeches made by hon. members or to suggest that they were written by someone else.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member spoke too soon, if this is the point on which he is so touchy, because I was going to say that before the speech had ended I think we had all concluded it was so bad that it must have been prepared by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps in view of the answer it is unnecessary to adjudicate.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is certainly something new, Mr. Speaker, to hear an hon. member, who was not present at a conference that proceeded in camera, rise and assure the house that what he is about to state is an accurate report of what happened at the conference, especially when that report comes from a well-known Liberal newspaper.

I think the accuracy of the hon. member's remarks throughout can well be tested by the fact that when he did get down to something specific he found himself in the wrong column—I think he was in the wrong column all the way through his speech—and even then he did not get the right words.

Let me say in general terms concerning the speech of the hon. gentleman who introduced this motion that the speech was throughout based on wrong premises. It abounded in erroneous statements of fact. It was misleading in its purport, except in the quotation from the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. Pickersgill: Which one?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That was the one really accurate and reliable portion of his speech. Even if the speech has been accurate, even if it had been based on sound premises, it would have been completely out of date. It has led now to an amendment which is completely misdirected and which has no basis whatsoever.

I make only one comment on the form of the amendment. It is preceded by a preamble. We have not raised this question of order because we want to meet this amendment and invite the house to pass upon what is an invitation by the official opposition to express want of confidence in the government. Let there be no question about the purport of this amendment; it is a want of confidence motion, and therefore we wish to meet it, and meet it head on.

Just in case the point comes up on another occasion, I should like to say that I question whether on an amendment to a supply motion it is proper to introduce a preamble in the amendment.

But there is something more that is involved in the introduction of such an amendment at this time. This is an attempt to jump the gun. This is an attempt to cast into the midst of pending negotiations what is obviously expected to be a very serious obstacle and interference.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you can conceive of a more irresponsible course for any opposition to follow than to attempt to introduce this matter into the realm of debate, while negotiations are still pending and while much of what has passed in negotiation has occurred behind closed doors, and when the opposition has not all the facts. While these negotiations are still proceeding, and when they know it has been proposed that the conference should resume, they now leap into debate and seek to muddy these waters and to follow a course which is calculated to make agreement between the federal and provincial governments more difficult.

I have no doubt whatever that hon. members opposite must have known when they introduced such an amendment at this time, at this particular stage of negotiations, that it would be construed by others outside this house as purporting to prejudice negotiations. We of the federal government are very hopeful of a good agreement being entered into between the federal and provincial governments in keeping with the policy that this government has followed from the moment it was sworn into office of doing justice to the provinces and their municipalities. Having regard to the national interest we shall continue to do in this fiscal field everything that is proper in seeking arrangements for the fiscal period commencing April 1, 1962 that will be fair to all levels of government.

How different was our course five years ago when we were in opposition. Knowing that these matters were proceeding in negotiation and that many of these negotiations were being carried on in camera, we did not seek to muddy the waters. We held the government responsible for the proposals which it brought into the house in the end, as was our duty. We held the government responsible and we attacked those proposals. We divided the house on the legislation by which the federal government of that day sought to place upon the statute books an enactment confirming the terms that the federal government had put forward. That, I think, is the proper course, not to seek to prejudice negotiations at this particular time.

We have heard something this afternoon by way of a review of history from the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres which, if it bears any resemblance to the fact and the record, does so, believe me, by pure coincidence. History has been rewritten this afternoon and any resemblance is most difficult to find.

I begin with 1957, with the change of government on June 21 of that year. We came into office and inherited an unholy mess left to us by our predecessors in relation to federal-provincial fiscal relations. Of all the lamentable failures of that previous government I suppose none was worse than in the realm of dominion-provincial fiscal relations, leaving aside for the moment the way in which hon. members opposite sought to destroy the effectiveness of parliament and its dignity.

Let me enlarge on what I have said in regard to the unholy mess they left behind. I suppose never in the history of this country has there been a time marked by greater friction in dominion-provincial relations than was the period of the late days of the former administration, that now long since discredited and unlamented administration.

Agreements had been made by nine provinces pursuant to the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act enacted by parliament in 1956. Yes, nine provinces had made agreements. Had they done so with any degree of alacrity and enthusiasm? No, Mr. Speaker. The attitude of nearly all the provinces was that they had no alternative, that virtually a pistol had been put to their heads.

We do not need to turn to what Conservative premiers said, nor to what the Conservative opposition of those days in this house had to say. Let me just quote some things that were said by Liberal premiers of that time. These statements have been put on the record of the house before, but let me briefly remind the house of some of these observations.

Let us turn, first, to a statement made by Mr. Campbell, the then Liberal premier of Manitoba. This statement was made on July 23, 1956 in commenting on the course of discussion at the conference of that year and the previous year and the hard and fast, take it or leave it proposals put forward by the stiff-necked federal government of that day. Here are Mr. Campbell's words:

> However, Manitoba was still disappointed that so little attention had been paid to the question of the actual financial requirements faced by the provincial governments in the next few years.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister tell us the source of that quotation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And again;

> It is our recommendation that before any new pattern in federal-provincial relations is adopted a thorough reassessment of the relative responsibilities and revenue sources of the various governments in Canada should be undertaken.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister say where that was taken from?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. I happen to be reading now from Hansard of February 9, 1959, at page 840, where I had, as I indicated earlier this afternoon, put these statements on the record.

Mr. Pickersgill: But where did Mr. Campbell utter those words?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member will find those words at page 840 of Hansard of February 9, 1959.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Campbell was not a member of this house. Mr. Speaker, I am raising the point of order raised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) with respect to the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin). It is well known that Mr. Campbell, the former premier of Manitoba, was never a member of this house and never had an opportunity to put anything on Hansard. What I asked the minister was where he got Mr. Campbell's words which he is now reading and which he placed on Hansard once before.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I am reading from a statement of Mr. Campbell which appears in Hansard. Those words have been placed on the record several times already and the hon. member will find Mr. Campbell's full statements on Hansard as well as the statements I am now about to read.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is probably fabricated.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if Your Honour heard the remark made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) who said, "It is probably fabricated." I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to instruct the hon. member to withdraw that remark.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: I did not actually hear the word "fabricated" but as the point has been raised the hon. member will perhaps confirm or deny having used it and if he confirms his use of that word I trust he will do more, as was proposed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I said, sir, "It was probably fabricated" and I said so to irritate the minister as I have succeeded in doing. I do not really think it was fabricated.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do think, Mr. Speaker, the house is entitled to be told where and when Mr. Campbell said that and not merely to be told that on a previous occasion the minister put that statement on Hansard. The minister has said those words were uttered by Mr. Campbell. A great deal turns upon when they were uttered and in what circumstances. The minister is using them in argument. The house is just as much entitled to know when those words were spoken as it was entitled to know when the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) referred to by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres were spoken about which the Minister of Finance asked for confirmation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has dealt with a point he has raised himself with which I should like to deal later, but in the interval I trust he will not allow to remain on the record the statement that the minister has fabricated a statement. It seems to me that is an accusation that touches upon the dignity of parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if I did not appear to withdraw handsomely enough, let me now withdraw that statement unreservedly.

Mr. Speaker: The other point is as to whether an hon. member using a quotation he has previously put on Hansard ought to have to verify its source. I think that verification is a matter or argument rather than of right. It seems to me an hon. member is entitled to quote what he said in Hansard at an earlier time if exception was not taken to it then. It is a basic right of hon. members to refer to previous debates and to read what has been said. It is open to hon. members to challenge whether or not the quotation was correct. It is open to all hon. members to challenge the quotation if they have grounds for doing so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On the same occasion, Mr. Speaker, I also put on the record this quotation of Premier Matheson of Prince Edward Island, uttered at the same period:

> No recognition of a province's fiscal need problem or its tax-raising ability was taken into consideration in the re-allocation or distribution of the tax moneys, but the same old factors were again used in the formula—the gross national product of Canada and the population of the provinces.

Here is what the provincial premier of Alberta had to say:

> The federal government has retained for itself the broader and higher-yielding tax fields and, plagued with its financial problems at national level, has failed to recognize the financial needs of its provinces and their municipalities.
> We hope that the shift toward centralization of governing authority which has resulted from a complex system of grants will be reversed so that more than ever the decisions can be made by representatives close to the people.

Those are not the words of Conservatives. Those are the words, in two cases, of Liberal provincial premiers and in the third case of a Social Credit provincial premier.

It was not a happy settlement that came into effect on April 1, 1957. It was a series of arrangements that the provinces disliked and denounced and which we, then the official opposition in this house when this legislation was presented by the government in the summer of 1956, attacked and voted against because we said it made inadequate provision for the provinces. That was the situation when we came into office. The agreements were already in existence. We have carried out those agreements to the letter, and we have added very substantially to the payments that have been made to the provinces, whether by way of conditional or unconditional grants, since that time.

In November, 1957 we called the first of what has now become a formidable series of dominion-provincial conferences in the past three and a half years. One striking fact stood out in that conference. That was that the federal government, this new federal government, was taking an entirely new attitude toward the provinces in such meetings. Gone was the old stiff-necked attitude of the former administration, that take it or leave it attitude which had stood out in their dealings and was demonstrated at the previous conferences. The attitude shown by the new federal government earned the warm-hearted praise of many of those attending the conference representing provinces, and by no means all from provinces with Conservative governments.

Then we come to the early days of 1958 when the federal government moved swiftly to enlarge, and to enlarge substantially, the benefits provided for the provinces. Two outstanding measures were introduced at that time. The first was to increase from 10 per cent to 13 per cent the provincial share of the yield from the personal income tax. The second was the introduction for the first time in history of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants. Let me say very simply but very emphatically, Mr. Speaker, that had there not been a change of government there would have been no increase from 10 per cent to 13 per cent to the provinces of their share of the yield from the personal income tax, and there never would have been an Atlantic provinces adjustment grant.

These new measures have been in effect now for almost three years. They will complete the third year on March 31 next. The increase from 10 per cent to 13 per cent in the provincial share of the yield from the personal income tax has been in those three years worth to the provinces $200 million in round figures. The provision by way of Atlantic adjustment grants was at the rate of $25 million a year for the four years commencing April 1, 1958. In those three years, then, those three fiscal years that have almost concluded, those grants have been worth $75 million to the four Atlantic provinces. They have been worth $7,500,000 to Prince Edward Island; they have been worth $22,500,000 to each of the other three provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland. So you see, Mr. Speaker, these additional provisions have been worth to the provinces in those three years, in round figures, about $275 million.

We did not pay these out of any overflowing treasury, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: That's for sure.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We did not have any big surplus to pay them out of. In order to aid the provinces and the municipalities of the country we were prepared to enlarge our deficit and go deeper into the red to help them.

I have said that none of this money would ever have been made available to the provinces had it not been for the change of government. I go farther and say that when we hear these mealy-mouthed assertions about equalization payments, this government has nothing to learn from its predecessors or from the tattered remnant of our predecessors who bedeck the benches opposite.

The fact is, as I have said before in this house on previous occasions, the principle of equalization, by which we mean the principle of assisting provinces in fiscal need, assisting them out of the federal treasury, has been carried farther by this government than was ever done before, much farther than the former government ever dreamed of doing. The Atlantic povinces adjustment grant represents the farthest extension in this country's history of the principle of equalization in terms of meeting fiscal need of provinces. These are simply the provisions that have been made by way of amendment of the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act; but they do not comprehend at all the total of the provisions made by the federal government on behalf of the provinces.

The previous administration claims credit for the increases that were made and that became effective on April 1, 1957. Yes, the agreements that were entered into at that time did provide for certain increases. But who has found the money in budgets year by year to pay those increases, as well as those substantial increases that were introduced, that would never have been made available to the provinces but for the change of government? It is the present federal government; and when hon. members opposite talk about our deficits we say that those who want to be fair in their judgments of such questions ought to be frank enough and just enough to remember that much of our deficit was attributable to the substantial increases year by year in aid to the provinces out of the federal treasury.

This has been placed on record before, Mr. Speaker; I do not need to delay the house in regard to it. You will find it on page 2676 of Hansard of March 31, 1960. You will see there, Mr. Speaker, what has been the total of federal payments to the provinces. I will just segregate for one moment the conditional payments, for the scope and the extent of those additional payments have been greatly enlarged since we came into office, and because of the enlargement of those cost-sharing programs these have to be paid for. And the federal government has been more generous than any previous government had been in offering assistance to the provinces in measures of this kind which fall under provincial jurisdiction, in their establishment and maintenance, and to which the federal government has been permitted to contribute.

If you look at that record, Mr. Speaker, you will find that the federal contribution to the provinces by way of conditional payments in the fiscal year 1956-57 amounted to $111 million. In 1957-58 they rose to $144.8 million; in 1958-59 to $248.1 million; in 1959-60, according to the then preliminary estimates, $383.3 million and acording to the estimate for 1960-61, $389 million. Since we came into office our contributions to these conditional grants to the provinces have increased more than threefold.

I give now the totals of payments of all kinds, unconditional payments, conditional payments, as well as those payments for the benefit of provincial institutions, namely university grants and grants to municipalities, in the past five years. They are:

Year	Millions of Dollars
1957-58	837.2
1958-59	1,037.6
1960-61 (estimated)	1,300.9

You will see, Mr. Speaker, that since we came into office payments out of the federal treasury to the provincial treasuries, whether by way of conditional or unconditional payments or payments to provincial institutions including universities and municipalities, have, speaking in round figures, doubled. Yet these hon. gentlemen opposite have the temerity to come into the house and pretend, and what a hollow pretense it is, to be the champions of justice to the provinces. We have nothing to learn from hon. members opposite about doing justice to the provinces. We want none of the injustices that they did to the provinces and the way in which they went about their work of centralizing power at Ottawa while not being fair to the provinces in fiscal matters.

Therefore, on the record with respect to the present period covered by the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act, the five-year period that runs to March 31, 1962, we say that since the present government came into office there has been a notable improvement. First, there has been a notable improvement in the spirit in which the federal government has met the provinces and understood the problems of the provinces in discharging their constitutional responsibilities. Second, there has been a substantial increase in the amounts provided out of the federal treasury for the benefit of the provinces and their institutions. Third, the principle of assisting provinces that are in fiscal need has been carried farther than it was ever carried before or dreamt of by our predecessors.

What is the outlook for 1961-62? I would think that the additional 3 per cent in the provincial share of the yield from the personal income tax may be expected in the next fiscal year to amount to somewhere in the neighbourhood of $70 million in round figures. There will be again $25 million to the Atlantic provinces, and the payments out of the federal treasury to the provinces by way of federal contribution to cost-sharing programs will undoubtedly be substantially larger than in any previous year.

Quebec's adherence now to a program of hospital insurance means that the federal treasury in what remains of the present fiscal year will be paying out an additional $13.9 million on that account, and it is estimated that Quebec's adherence to the scheme of hospital insurance will involve additional payments out of the treasury in 1961-62 in excess of $70 million. When people speak of the fact that the estimates for the year 1961-62 show an increase of $222 million over those for 1960-61 let me point out that over $70 million of the increase is accounted for in that way alone.

I pass on to the subject of the preparations for the fiscal arrangements for the period that will begin on April 1, 1962. There have been some half dozen preparatory conferences. Never before has so much effort been expended by the federal and provincial governments in studying the common problems that they face and in laying the groundwork for such arrangements as may be entered into after April 1, 1962. We have had meetings of the continuing committee of officials. There were two conferences of the finance ministers and provincial treasurers and there have been two plenary conferences in 1960 of the Prime Minister and the premiers of all of the provincial governments.

All of these meetings have been helpful. All of these meetings have been carried on in a good spirit. There are, of course, differences. Naturally each government has certain responsibilities which it must discharge in respect of those whom it represents, but the spirit has been good and if hon. members opposite will stop playing politics with this problem—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —if they will stop trying to stir up trouble for their mean political purposes then I think we will go along very well in these dominion-provincial plenary conferences and I think we can look toward something very much better than the provinces ever would have received if there had not been a change of government in 1957.

It sounded strange in the mouth of the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres this afternoon to hear him talk about the desire for more regular consultation. What an assertion coming out of the mouth of a member of the opposition, asking for more regular consultation. There has been more consultation already in connection with these proposed arrangements for the fiscal period beginning April 1, 1962 than there was five years ago in connection with those that came into effect in 1957.

What have we heard when we have reported to parliament on these further consultations? We have heard from the opposition only derision when we have talked about meetings of the ministers of finance and provincial treasurers, useful meetings that they were; when we have talked about meetings of the continuing committee of officials, a committee, incidentally, that was not set up by us but was set up by Mr. St. Laurent. This is another action of Mr. St. Laurent that has apparently been repudiated by his successors opposite who have forgotten the very great debt that they owe to Mr. St. Laurent. They would never have sat on the treasury benches had it not been for Mr. St. Laurent and I think it was very shabby treatment that they accorded to Mr. St. Laurent in 1957 and 1958. It is no credit to them now to try to repudiate what Mr. St. Laurent did in setting up this continuing committee of officials.

Let me say a further word now on the subject of the two plenary conferences in 1960, the one held in July and the other in October. These, as I have indicated, were carefully planned conferences. The meeting in July was called principally for the purpose of giving the provinces full opportunity to state their views, their claims, yes, their demands. Of course they readily responded and they did state their demands. As was my duty I had to make some reckoning of what these demands aggregated and I gave the house the figures. I do not need to delay the house now, Mr. Speaker, with those figures, but I can remind the house of the fact that the demands of the provinces were marked by extraordinary diversity.

It would not have been too easy to harmonize all the demands of the provinces. Apart from the problem of conflict in the nature of the demands, there was the problem of cost. If you look back at Hansard for August 10, 1960, page 7930, you will find that I put on the record just some of the demands that were made upon us. I estimated these demands as there categorized would have cost the federal treasury between $2,080 million and $2,055 million per annum. This was not an exhaustive list.

It is worth recalling what the Winnipeg Free Press had to say at that time on this subject. Here, I expect the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to sit up and take notice because I refer to the Winnipeg Free Press, from which he has never been known yet to derogate. This is an editorial that appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of August 16, 1960, and I quote:

> There is no reason why the provinces' demands should not be met—if the people of the provinces are prepared to pay for them. They cannot, however, expect the federal government to hand out an extra $2 billions every year without getting the money from somewhere. The present federal budget is just under $6 billions. Of this, about $1.5 billions goes for defence, another $1.5 billions to the department of health and welfare—largely for children's allowances and old age and other pensions.
> The federal government could, therefore, almost meet the provincial demands by eliminating entirely our spending on defence or by doing away with family allowances and all pensions. Clearly that is impossible.

I interject there and say that it is impossible unless the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is going to propose it.

> Equally unattainable is the hope of reducing other government expenditures to anywhere near the point that would free enough money to meet the provinces' requests. The only alternative (outside of printing more money and shoving the country over the edge of the financial precipice) is for Ottawa to raise the extra $2 billions by raising taxes to produce this sum.
> To grant the provincial demands would mean an increase of about 40 per cent in the federal budget. That is the amount of increase we could then expect in all the taxes we pay—income, sales, excise and so on. Faced with a tax increase of this proportion, however, it may be that the vast majority of the taxpayers will join with Mr. Fleming in crying "halt" to the premiers' demands.

I am sure that statement will not be attacked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

This afternoon we have heard some curious misinterpretations of the position taken by the Prime Minister at that July conference. If ever a statement was plain, plain for all to read, plain for all to understand, it was the statement made by the Prime Minister at the opening of the conference on July 25. It seems that hon. members opposite are not content to have a plain statement. Instead of interpreting it in accordance with its plain terms we have heard a most interesting but most inaccurate gloss put upon the words of the Prime Minister this afternoon.

Here are the words of the Prime Minister. Can you imagine anything clearer, more straightforward or more emphatic than these words? What the Prime Minister stated on July 25 is the position of the federal government today and will continue to be the position of the federal government. I quote:

> Some provinces have indicated a desire to resume the collection of their own revenue from these tax fields.

He was speaking of the standard taxes, the personal income tax, the corporation tax and the succession duty or estate taxes. He continued:

> This raises a question which will have to be considered in the course of this conference but I want to make this abundantly clear on behalf of the dominion government that whatever the ultimate decision may be the principle of equalization must be preserved.

We had to sit here this afternoon and listen to the hon. member opposite talk as though that statement had never been made.

Mr. Pickersgill: He quoted it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Then he proceeded to misinterpret it in a way that would do justice to only the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I continue the quotation from the Prime Minister's statement:

> Equalization, the second component, is a payment by Canada to the provinces to bring the per capita return from the three taxes at standard rates up to the average per capita yield in the two provinces in which per capita yield is highest. For provinces in which the tax potential is relatively low, this principle is the most important.
> It might be noted in passing that earlier arrangements did not recognize the principle of equalization explicitly although it was to some extent implicit in the "per capita" basis of payment.
> Again I wish to emphasize that the federal government remains firmly committed to the principle of equalization and of financial assistance to those provinces in which incomes and taxable capacity are below those of the richer provinces. Indeed,—I think this is worthy of being pointed out—through the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, this government has carried this principle further than ever before. Last year the total payments for equalization and other fiscal aid grants amounted to $215 million as compared to $136 million in 1957-58, which was the first fiscal year in which the present act has been in effect.
> The government believes that the principle of fiscal aid and equalization to assist the less wealthy provinces stands on its own feet and is accepted on that basis, and is quite separate from the question of tax rental or tax sharing.

I doubt, if any clearer statement has ever been made at a dominion-provincial conference. I do not know how it would be possible for anyone to make a clearer statement than the Prime Minister made on that occasion. That was the position of the government on July 25, 1960, and that is the position of this government on this 30th day of January, 1961. It is the position this federal government will carry into the further conferences and exchanges that remain to be carried out before the new arrangements are finally consummated.

I come now to the October conference. I have indicated that at the July conference the floor was largely occupied by the provinces in stating their demands. At the October conference, the Prime Minister on behalf of the federal government put forward, not any take it or leave it proposition, no package proposal, but what were described by him and treated throughout the conference as suggestions. This was made very clear at the outset by the Prime Minister. No delegate attending the conference in any capacity was under any misunderstanding of the status of these suggestions. They remained suggestions throughout, and indeed the flexibility of the federal attitude as demonstrated by the Prime Minister in that conference won praise.

So, Mr. Speaker, let us be quite clear about this. When the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres this afternoon talked, as he did, about the Prime Minister assuming an arrogant attitude, an attitude that was downright insulting to the provinces, he was talking about something about which he knew nothing. He was making a statement that flew right in the teeth of the fact and of the truth. I hope I have made myself plain, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres rises in this House of Commons today and makes these baseless, irresponsible statements, but no such statements were made by any of the provincial premiers at that conference. Not one of them had anything to say by way of disagreeing with or condemning the attitude taken by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: Page Mr. Bennett.

Mr. Pickersgill: Apparently most of the members of the treasury benches.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is he an ally of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate? He apparently has not anybody else to summon to his rescue now but Premier Bennett of British Columbia.

Mr. Pickersgill: You can have him.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What about some of the provinces closer to home, if the peregrinating hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has any place that he calls home now in the various provinces? Wherever home may be, let us hope that in his case it will be "Home Sweet Home". However, evidently he cannot get any help closer to home, wherever his home may be. I therefore leave that subject at that point.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not think I will do so now, Mr. Speaker. Let me make it clear that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate does not know first hand what happened in that conference. If he is upholding what was said this afternoon by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres in attributing to the Prime Minister an attitude that was arrogant or insulting to the provinces I must say to him that he has been misinformed. He is proceeding from a source of information that is not accurate or reliable.

Mr. Pickersgill: I only read the newspapers.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Then my statement stands, namely that if there is any newspaper or any person that says that the Prime Minister took an attitude at that conference that was arrogant or insulting to the provinces, it or he is resorting to a source that is untrue and unreliable. Let us not have any more nonsense about that matter by hon. members opposite.

The Prime Minister was thanked at the conclusion of that conference by those who were there for the way in which he had conducted the conference. He was thanked for his flexible approach. This was the way in which the provincial premiers reacted to the attitude of the Prime Minister. They did not act in the way in which the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres says, based on his lack of knowledge of what occurred there and supported by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate proceeding on his enormous lack of knowledge of what happened at the conference. So much for the attitude.

The federal government through the mouth of the Prime Minister laid before that conference certain suggestions that were discussed freely and at the close of the conference it was indicated that the views put forward by the provinces would be studied and considered. That promise, like all the promises of the government, has been fulfilled to the letter. The views of the provinces have been most carefully reviewed and studied. We have considered those views in the light of their earlier demands, in the light of the federal fiscal position and indeed in the light of all relevant circumstances.

I pointed out that the suggestions put forward by the Prime Minister at that time took account of the demands that had been made in certain provincial quarters for release from what was described in those quarters as a strait-jacket.

In all of this we sought to have due regard and due respect, which we think any federal government owes, for the sovereignty and autonomy of the provinces as well as for the responsibilities which they carry under the constitution. There was no such thing contemplated as, to use the expression that has fallen from the mouths of some hon. members opposite, a return to the tax jungle. As a matter of fact we said that if in the end a decision were reached that all or any of the provinces were to assume responsibility for levying and collecting taxes, the federal government was prepared to undertake the collection. Hence there will be no question at all about multiplicity of forms or return to a tax jungle. A tax jungle is the sort of thing that I think has existed in the minds of certain hon. members opposite. It certainly is not part of the thinking of the present federal government.

I have indicated the suggestions made by the Prime Minister of what would be involved. There were reasons why the provinces should at that stage have been offered their freedom to make their choice because, as some provinces reminded us, when the tax agreements were first introduced the provinces opposed them. The situation has changed to the extent that some provinces now want the federal government to go on levying and collecting their taxes. At that time I had occasion to point out how far this situation has gone in Canada. It has gone to the point where the provinces in the aggregate are drawing practically one third of their revenues out of the federal treasury.

This point was discussed, namely whether in a country operating under the kind of constitutional system we have that is a sound situation. But if you look at the figures province by province, Mr. Speaker, I think you will see some quite startling percentages. Here are the percentages province by province of payments out of the federal treasury or abatements by way of reduction of federal taxes, and this is an estimate for the present fiscal year, 1960-61:

Newfoundland	68.8

In other words, Mr. Speaker, 68.8 per cent of the revenues of the provincial government of Newfoundland are now drawn from the federal treasury.

Province	Percentage
Prince Edward Island	60.9
Nova Scotia	55.8
New Brunswick	55.5
Quebec	17.4
Ontario	26.7
Manitoba	49.2
Saskatchewan	38.6
Alberta	30.5
British Columbia	35.7
Total	31.5

In other words, the over-all percentage right across Canada is 31.5 per cent.

Hon. members in the opposition apparently do not think these figures are worthy of the attention of a dominion-provincial conference. We thought they were worthy of the attention of the dominion-provincial conference.

But, as I indicated a while ago, even if the baseless assertions that have been made by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres this afternoon had been true or had been based on fact, they would still be completely out of date. The hon. member completely overlooked the status of the suggestions put forward by the Prime Minister at the October conference. They were not proposals. There was no package put forward as was the case with the St. Laurent government five years ago. These were merely suggestions for which the federal government took what was recognized by the provincial premiers in that conference as a flexible attitude and approach. Then the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate had this to say. Here is bravery for you. Here is a Canadian Press dispatch from Ottawa, January 11.

Mr. Pickersgill: What year?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The year is 1961, the year in which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was supposed to grow up but did not do so. It reads in part as follows:

> J. W. Pickersgill said today the Conservative government is trying to destroy the federal-provincial tax-sharing system which he described as one of the greatest acts of statesmanship of the former Liberal government.
> "We Liberals are not going to let them do it," Mr. Pickersgill told the national Liberal rally.

In the face of these thundering words we have just been shaking in our shoes ever since. This is enough to strike terror into the heart of anyone who hears these thundering declarations by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. His assertion has no truth in it; it flies in the teeth of fact. When he says that the present federal government is trying to destroy the federal-provincial tax-sharing system he is being truthful only if he puts a completely distorted interpretation on what he means by the federal-provincial tax-sharing system.

Hon. members opposite know this perfectly well. As I said earlier this afternoon, they are trying to jump the gun; they are trying to make speeches to redeem these thundering threats by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, because he knew perfectly well the status of the suggestions, that these matters were going to be further discussed, and that exchanges were in the course of being prepared. So just to satisfy his ego he puts up the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres this afternoon to make the speech that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate should have made, if he is prepared to assume paternity for what was uttered here this afternoon, so that his threat as reported in the Canadian Press dispatch that I read might not look to be completely repudiated by his own party. So he jumped the gun and had this speech made this afternoon.

Let me do now what should have been done tomorrow or the next day in the house. The Prime Minister this afternoon stated at the opening of the house that a letter had gone to all provincial premiers proposing a resumption of the conference. That letter, of course, is in the mails and normally it would not be read in the house until received by the provincial premiers. But I think the provincial premiers will understand why it is proper at this moment to read this particular letter, in view of the fact that hon. members opposite in their speeches and in their amendment are seeking to cast the federal government in an entirely false light. It is for that reason, and having regard to the fundamental fairnesses that are involved in the situation, that I should like to read the letter that has gone to all the provincial premiers. It has been signed by the Prime Minister and it reads:

> The dominion-provincial plenary conference called to discuss fiscal arrangements for the period following March 31st, 1962, adjourned on October 28th last to meet at the call of the Chair. Is seems appropriate now that steps be taken to reconvene the conference. I propose that the meeting be resumed in Ottawa on February 23rd and 24th.
> I am sure that all governments have been studying this important subject further with a view to arriving at a satisfactory and workable understanding. The suggestions which I have placed before the October conference included the principles of equalization based on fiscal need and the stabilization of provincial revenues. The federal government is also prepared to make provision for a growth factor in the equalization formula. It is our hope that agreement may be arrived at on the basis of these principles.
> I realize that on account of the sitting of parliament and the legislatures this is a very busy time for us all. I hope, however, that you may find it possible to be present at the reconvened conference on Thursday, February 23rd, commencing at 10.00 a.m. If these dates are not regarded by the majority of the provinces as convenient, I would suggest alternatively March 23rd and 24th.

So the attempt of the opposition this afternoon to cast the government in a false light fails. There is the answer, the vindication of the principle of equalization, the vindication of the principle of stabilization and the acceptance of the concept of the growth factor as attached to the principle of equalization. So everything that has been said by the opposition this afternoon is proved now to have been an utter and hollow sham. The government will proceed with its planned program. It will meet the provinces in conference. It will discuss their further proposals and submissions, and in the same attitude as has characterized the approach of the federal government previously we will, as the Prime Minister assured the provinces at the October conference—as he had earlier—seek in the true Canadian spirit to arrive at workable and satisfactory accords and understandings.

As has already been indicated to the house, it is the wish of the government to conclude the discussions and conferences in time to present a measure to parliament at this present session to provide the legislative authority for such arrangements as may be entered into with respect to the period commencing April 1, 1962.

One thing I make abundantly clear, that we have at all times stipulated in these conferences—and I repeat it now—that the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants shall be continued and that they shall be continued as Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, not denied their identity, as seems to be the thinking of hon. members opposite. They want to make them merged, blurred and obliterated in some general formula. Well, we have said, and we repeat, that the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants deserve to continue to stand on their own feet, and we propose to continue them. Likewise we shall continue the provision of the $8 million per annum for the province of Newfoundland to assist that province to bring the level of its services up to those of the other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I see it is six o'clock. I do not wish to retain the house beyond six o'clock. Will you call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, at the six o'clock adjournment I was making some reference to the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants and was drawing attention to what seems to be a developing difference between the government and the opposition. I pointed out that there was a very great difference between us at the outset, for the former government made no attempt to introduce any Atlantic provinces adjustment grants or to recognize the special position of the Atlantic area in relation to the problem of fiscal need, and that had there been no change of government there would never have been any such thing as Atlantic provinces adjustment grants.

Let this further distinction be drawn very clearly. Throughout these negotiations the federal government has maintained very firmly the principle that the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants must be continued. They must be continued as what they can claim to be—Atlantic provinces adjustment grants—a recognition on the part of parliament of the special position of the Atlantic area in relation to this principle of equalization.

The hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres this afternoon made it quite clear—I take it he was speaking for his party; he was certainly speaking for the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and that probably is the party—that it has now become a policy of the Liberal party to blur out the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, simply to leave their problem to be taken care of in general terms by some general formula. The public will have its opportunity to decide which policy it wishes. There is a clear difference drawn here between the government and the opposition in this policy. Let there be no doubt. We will stand firm for the continuance of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants as a separate form of federal aid to this particular area.

I was surprised indeed that this position should have been taken by the Liberal opposition. Perhaps one should not be surprised. They have played politics of late to an increasing degree with everything upon which they have been able to lay their tongues. But at the dominion-provincial plenary conference in 1957 this statement emerged in the agreed communique issued at the conference:

> It was generally agreed that the over-all economic position of the Atlantic provinces is now such as to justify some special grants in aid to the governments of those provinces from the federal government.

Note those words, Mr. Speaker: "some special grants in aid to the governments of those provinces." That is the position of the government; it maintains special grants in aid for the Atlantic areas.

That leads me to make this comment also in relation to the payments to Newfoundland. We made it equally clear at the conference that regardless of what else might be agreed upon eventually in relation to equalization, stabilization, tax-sharing or anything else, we stipulated the continuance (a) of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants and (b) the payment of $8 million yearly to the province of Newfoundland. We now have the Liberal party setting up a new policy here, that all of this is to be blurred and submerged. It will be interesting to know what the premier of Newfoundland will have to say about this suggestion that the special provision of $8 million for Newfoundland to enable that province to help bring the level of its services up to those of the other Atlantic provinces be now blurred and submerged. It will be interesting to hear what he will say when he learns that his political kith and kin in the house are now saying in effect, "Oh well, merge these, submerge them, blur them and just get some general formula of general application."

That is not our position. We say that these are distinct grants and they will continue as distinct grants in the policy of the present government.

I have been conjuring as best I could the reason that has prompted the official opposition to follow the course it did this afternoon. On all previous occasions it was the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who selected himself as the opposition spokesman on dominion-provincial relations. I do not recall any case in which the hon. member has permitted anyone else to share this distinction with him, although I believe last year he permitted the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) to take some part in the debate in relation to the problem of university grants. Always, however, the spokesman on this subject has been the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. Today for some reason or other the hon. member sits back, for the time being at any rate, and it is the distinguished and popular hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres who is permitted to make the speech.

This is an interesting departure from the established tactics. I think we can draw only one conclusion from this departure. It is that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate realized that the course being taken this afternoon by the opposition was so utterly irresponsible that he did not want to have his name tagged on to the amendment. It was generous indeed of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to be willing on this occasion to share with the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres the distinction of being spokesman for the official opposition on matters pertaining to federal-provincial fiscal relations. I suspect, however, that there was an Ethiopian in the woodpile someplace.

It was a striking fact this afternoon that after all the interest displayed by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), and I think one or two others, last Friday, on the subject of the calling of a dominion-provincial conference and the exchange of communications with the provinces, when the Prime Minister on motions this afternoon introduced his statement which one would have thought under any circumstances would be regarded as a very important one, the kind of statement that would have been followed at once, seeing that it was made on motions, by a statement from the official opposition and then a statement from the C.C.F. and no doubt questions on the orders of the day, probing for more and more information, there was silence. Did it not strike you as odd today, Mr. Speaker, that silence followed the statement by the Prime Minister. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate had no statement to make. He was the senior member of the official opposition in the house. Their ranks were badly depleted.

Mr. Pickersgill: But some of us were still here.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This golden opportunity to make some comment he allowed to go by default, a most extraordinary circumstance, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: Very suspicious.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There was ample time on the orders of the day. Today the period was rather shorter. From the whole of the official opposition there was not one question on this subject. I think the reason is plain. It is quite plain that the official opposition did not want any more information on this subject before they introduced their amendment and made their speeches. The less information that came out today in regard to the federal government's position the better from their point of view because they wanted to argue as though they were facts which were not facts, and so they wanted no information. They wanted to bring out nothing further in the way of fact or information for the house. They wanted to go ahead and argue this in the hope that no further information would come before the house before they argued their sorry case.

I think this is about as sorry and irresponsible an exhibition on the part of the official opposition as we have seen or, I hope are likely to see for a very long time. Whatever may be said about their demeanour and their performance when the Leader of the Opposition is present, all I have to say is, if this is the best they can do when he is absent, they had better get him back soon or get a message off to Essex East.

I am interested as well in the fact that when the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate for a moment allowed his mantle to be worn by one of his colleagues it was a member from the province of Quebec who was permitted to wear it on this occasion. I am left to wonder whether this is by way of giving notice to parliament that there has been a change of position in regard to this matter on the part of Quebec. Does this mean that the province of Quebec now espouses the case for tax rentals and wishes to rent these standard tax fields to the federal government?

Mr. Cardin: May I answer the minister immediately. I was elected to the federal parliament and what I say here has to do with the federal government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, not having had any answer to my question I continue to ask it.

Mr. Cardin: Perhaps the minister should ask Mr. Lesage if he wants an answer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is perhaps not amiss for us in this house, when we see the curious tactics adopted by the official opposition today, to wonder whether this is notice, as I have suggested, that the province of Quebec, or the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres now thinks that the province of Quebec should rent these standard tax fields to the federal government?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, not even the Minister of Finance, with all his words, can make me say things that I did not say. I never said any such thing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I did not say the hon. member said that. I am drawing attention to the fact that with the zeal that the hon. member has demonstrated this afternoon he has assumed the role of spokesman for the official opposition—

Mr. Cardin: The Liberal party.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —on dominion-provincial questions in what was intended, I am sure, by the opposition to be a very important statement and has apparently come out quite strongly on this matter. It is a fair question, I think, on the part of those who followed his statement with great care, to ask if this means that the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres has now become a convert to the theory of tax rental, and if he shares with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate this great enthusiasm for the tax rental system to the point where he thinks that the province of Quebec should change its position and now rent, or propose to rent, these fields of taxation to the federal government if the federal government were prepared to rent them?

Mr. Cardin: I think I can answer that question, and I think the minister should let me answer it. I, as a member of the federal Liberal party, have always been in favour of tax rentals, and I have said so in the past. Regardless of whether the province of Quebec decides to go for tax rentals, my position has never changed since I have sat in this house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member has made it quite clear that he supports a system of tax rentals.

Mr. Cardin: That is correct.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He has not dealt with the point I have raised. Does he advocate rental by the province of Quebec to the federal government of all these three fields of taxation?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Gloucester rises on a point of order.

Mr. Robichaud: I wish to raise a point of order. Since when has a minister of the crown been allowed to ask a series of questions of members of the opposition in this house?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Robichaud: It is a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to be natural in the normal course of debate to ask questions to which one does not expect an answer. I do not know of any rule of the house which compels or prevents another hon. member to answer if the member who asked the questions permits it. I think there is no point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I certainly can no longer expect an answer from the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres—

Mr. Cardin: I would be willing to give one.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —because he has said that he is an advocate of the system of tax rentals. He still leaves us wondering whether he advocates that the province of Quebec should rent these tax fields to the federal government.

Mr. Cardin: That is the province's problem, not mine.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Then, we are just where we were. The hon. member still has not answered the question and I suppose we will not even have an answer. We are left then in the position that the official spokesman of the Liberal opposition today on dominion-provincial relations has now proclaimed himself a zealot for the system of tax rentals, but when it comes to a simple question of applying those to the province that he knows best, apparently that is where the answers to the questions end.

Mr. Cardin: Very, very feeble.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In leaving this question, Mr. Speaker, I can only express the hope that some day courage will rise and that the house will be afforded the opportunity of knowing what is the position of the hon. gentleman in regard to this very simple question that I put to him.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With pleasure.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would he tell us what he thinks of Mr. Frost's $100 million inasmuch as the minister comes from the province of Ontario? Let him give a courageous answer to that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Frost has throughout been very straightforward in the demands he has made on behalf of the province of Ontario—

Mr. Cardin: So has Mr. Lesage.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and he has based his demands upon principles that he conceives to be of general application.

Mr. Cardin: So has Mr. Lesage.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have never known Premier Frost to advocate one thing for Ontario and something different for the other provinces. I will say this of him, that always what he has advocated has been applied to all provinces. I have not known him, when faced with a question as to whether he stood for something, to run away from the question of whether it did or did not apply to his own province.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am asking where you stand, not where Mr. Frost stands.

Mr. Cardin: I think the minister had better drop the argument.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I draw attention now to the terms of the amendment. Earlier, I ventured to express a question with respect to whether it is proper in an amendment to a supply motion to introduce a preamble, but here is a preamble and perhaps I might say a word about it as well as on the operative part of the amendment. The preamble reads as follows:

> In view of the fact that the federal government at the October conference (1960) with the provinces proposed fixed subsidies in place of the equalization payments provided under the present tax-sharing arrangements, and that this October proposal is a repudiation of the principle of equalization.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, the fifth word in this amendment. It says, "In view of the 'fact' that". I say that is not a fact. It is an untruth, and this amendment would be much more accurate if it read, "In view of the untruth that the federal government at the October conference with the provinces proposed fixed subsidies".

It is quite true, that in the course of the group of suggestions that the Prime Minister put forward he made it quite clear that the principle of stabilization was being introduced into the suggestion with respect to equalization so that there would be no such thing as any drop in the amount of equalization that would be guaranteed to the provinces. He also invited the provinces to discuss among themselves how the sum should be distributed among them. In other words, he invited proposals from them. But, to call that a proposal in the sense in which the opposition uses the word "proposal" is, I say, to make this preamble a denial of the fact.

The operative part of the amendment reads as follows:

> Therefore be it resolved that this house strongly favours the continued application of the principle of equalization of direct tax revenues pledged to the provinces by the Prime Minister at the federal-provincial conference in July, 1960—

And so on.

Mr. Pickersgill: Read the rest of it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Very well. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate apparently has not read the rest of it so he asks me to do so. I continue:

> —and defined at that time by the Prime Minister as a payment by Canada to the provinces to bring the per capita return from the three taxes at standard rates up to the average per capita yield in the two provinces in which per capita yield is highest.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are you against that?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That latter part is not a precise statement of the—

Mr. Pickersgill: It is word for word.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not a precise statement of the position in regard to the principle of equalization. The Prime Minister made that firm statement that I quoted this afternoon in regard to equalization. The distribution is, of course, a matter to be agreed upon. As I pointed out at the conference, the principle of equalization is there. The principle of stabilization is there. It is fully recognized, it is fully supported. We have carried the principle of equalization farther than it has ever been carried before. The hon. member has gone beyond and has attempted to say in effect that equalization means just the same thing as it meant in 1957.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is what he is asking the house to swallow tonight. So far as the principle of equalization is concerned, the sound principle of using federal revenues to meet the fiscal needs of certain provinces, nothing could be clearer than the statement by the Prime Minister, and I challenge anybody in this house to put in clearer words than did the Prime Minister on July 25 last the firm position taken by the federal government in relation to the principle of equalization, namely the principle of meeting fiscal need in the provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: It cannot be done. That is why we used those words.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Pardon?

Mr. Pickersgill: I said it cannot be done and that is why we used the Prime Minister's precise words as found on page 10 of this document.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member says it cannot be done. I do not know what the "it" is he is speaking of.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will explain it to the minister. The minister said that the definition of equalization could not be described more precisely than it was by the Prime Minister. That was our opinion and that is why we used the Prime Minister's precise words taken word for word from the third paragraph on page 10 of the proceedings of the conference, and the minister is now repudiating them.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, all that fury deserved a better cause and a stronger foundation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Read the words.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I read the words this afternoon. The hon. member is seeking to link two passages and put his own interpretation on them.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, there is no interpretation by me.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let me make it clear what the Prime Minister said. Here are his words:

> —I want to make this abundantly clear on behalf of the dominion government that whatever the ultimate decision may be the principle of equalization must be preserved.

The principle of equalization.

Mr. Pickersgill: Read the next two sentences.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The next two sentences go on to talk about how equalization is applied.

> Equalization, the second component, is a payment by Canada to the provinces to bring the per capita return from the three taxes at standard rates up to the average per capita yield in the two provinces in which per capita yield is highest. For provinces in which the tax potential is relatively low, this principle is the most important.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. gentleman is saying that the principle of equalization must always have attached to it the particular application or particular formula that he or his government attached to it in 1956, then I say that is an accretion on the principle of equalization. That is not the principle of equalization. At the conference we had different provinces suggesting changes in the formula, both the formula by which the amount is determined and the formula by which the principle of equalization is distributed among the provinces. No province that I am aware of treats the present formula as the principle of equalization. The principle of equalization is that out of federal revenues provision should be made with a view to helping those provinces that have fiscal need. That is the principle of equalization.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not what the Prime Minister said.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is what the Prime Minister said. The Prime Minister, having stated the adherence of this government to the principle of equalization, pointed out the application of it in the present five-year period and under the present agreements, but no province has said that this is like the laws of the Medes and Persians, that this is immutable. As a matter of fact, I think a number of them, indeed I think the majority of them, asked for changes in formula.

Mr. Pickersgill: In the rates.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, and they asked for changes in the formula for distribution too. You see, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was not at the conference. He always talks as though he knew everything but the fact is he does not know what went on there and he is just guessing now. It is simply guesswork in which he is indulging now. He is attempting to put glosses on the statements that no provincial premier would ever attempt to put on.

The provinces do not hold the former Liberal government in the same esteem in which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate holds it. They do not wish to have things continued as they were in 1956 under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act. They are hoping for something better. They know they have had something better since the changes were made in that legislation at the instance of the present federal government in 1958 and since.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, then, has written what I would say is a trumped up amendment. He knows, and no member of the house knows better than he that the government and every member supporting the government is committed to the principle of equalization, the principle of assisting provinces in fiscal need. At the same time he has drawn up this amendment knowing perfectly well it is a want of confidence motion and no member can support this amendment unless he at the same time expresses want of confidence in the government. If anyone else had done this the hon. member would be up denouncing it as trickery. What he is trying to do, you see, is put upon those hon. members who will vote against this amendment the appearance of being opposed to the principle of equalization.

We have seen what has happened before when parties have gone out on the hustings, have turned up Hansard, and tried to draw inferences from votes and from the terms of amendments without telling the whole story. I wish to make this plain statement. If after the vote is taken on this amendment anybody goes out anywhere, at any time, and portrays the government or any member of this house supporting the government as opposed to the principle of equalization he will be doing plain violence to the truth. He knows perfectly well that this is a want of confidence motion. It was introduced as such; it has that as its object.

My final word is on something that is most important in relation to the problems faced at the dominion-provincial level in any field, whether it be political, fiscal or otherwise. It is for this reason I have laid such emphasis today upon the spirit in which the present government has approached this problem of federal-provincial fiscal relations. This spirit was reflected by the federal government at the conferences. This is the spirit in which we intend to continue to carry on our exchanges, our dealings, our negotiations with the provinces of this country. It is the true Canadian spirit. It was in that true Canadian spirit that the Prime Minister, again in this opening statement at the conference on July 25 last, used these words:

> We are fully conscious of the fact that the fiscal policy of the federal government has a considerable effect on business in Canada and on the financial position of the provinces and municipalities, and I can assure you this, that in shaping its financial programs the federal government has considered the interests of other governments and of the Canadian economy as a whole.
> This year we will be making greatly reduced claims upon the capital market. Our net new borrowings will be about $210 million as compared with about $900 million last year and nearly $1,300 million in the year before that. The result will be that in reducing the volume of federal government borrowing so sharply the problems of provincial and municipal governments and of private industry are greatly eased in meeting their essential financial requirements in the domestic market.
> Our policies are and will continue to be designed to ease pressures on the capital market at a time of business expansion and at the same time resisting inflation.
> Our financial policies have helped to reduce the reliance of other governments and private business on foreign capital markets, and the beneficial results are to be seen in the decline in the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar.

Then, later on, he said:

> —I hope there will emerge mutually acceptable arrangements or agreements which will govern our financial relations in 1962 and subsequent years. I look forward to a most free, frank and friendly exchange of views.
> My colleagues and I are anxious, I repeat, to hear your suggestions and your representations realizing at the same time that this conference will not make the final determination.
> While conditions are vastly different from those of the founding fathers their dream of a united Canada has become a reality as the spirit of national unity becomes stronger through the years.
> The federal system must be preserved and maintained and without centralization. My hope is that this conference will be a forward step to better things and that in a spirit of friendship and mutual respect we will condition ourselves again to the high ideals of the founding fathers thereby keeping faith with their great concept of a united Canada. We in turn will do our part to share the maintenance of equality of opportunity to Canadians in all provinces.

Those were noble words, Mr. Speaker. They breathed a noble Canadian spirit, and that is the spirit which animates the government of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, we, in the government simply wish to serve the best interests of the whole of Canada, with regard to fiscal relations between the federal government and the provinces.

Our aim is to respect at all times the constitution of the country. We recognize that the provinces have rights and responsibilities of their own which we have respected and shall continue to respect faithfully.

The government is firmly intent on contributing to the national unity of our dear Canada.

(Text):

Mr. Cardin: I did not want to interrupt the minister's usually verbose and unfathomable speech, but I wonder if he would be kind enough to tell the house whether or not the letter he read this afternoon was sent to the provincial premiers today, and if so at what time. Could he at the same time inform us as to exactly what is meant by the "growth factor" to which he referred in quoting the letter to the premiers, the reference being that a growth factor would be provided for in the equalization formula?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The letters were dispatched by Her Majesty's mail to all provincial premiers today before the house met. This was made quite clear by the Prime Minister in his statement at the opening today. If the hon. member is not acquainted with the meaning of the words "growth factor", then I am afraid he has not gone very far in his researches into federal-provincial fiscal relations. This is one aspect of the discussions that proceeded in camera with which it is quite evident the hon. member is not familiar. I am sure all of the provinces will know the meaning of the expression "growth factor" and will have no difficulty whatever in correctly interpreting the letter of the Prime Minister.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I think I should begin by congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on his first wind-up until six o'clock, at which point he announced he was concluding his speech; then he got his second wind which has been almost entirely pure wind. The minister, however, attempted to misrepresent the amendment before the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, it is one thing to say "misrepresented" and it is another thing to say "attempted to misrepresent".

Mr. Speaker: It is sometimes said that an hon. member misrepresents something but to say that he attempts to misrepresent, it seems to me, is contrary to the rules.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it is a very successful attempt because,—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Pickersgill: —as a matter of fact the minister had to read from the proceedings of the federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Speaker: I trust that the hon. member will modify the initial statement "attempted to misrepresent".

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Pickersgill: For the sake of economy of time I will waste no further time and will withdraw the remark. Unlike the minister, I have limited time of which I have no doubt the minister intends to use as much as he can in his customary manner.

This amendment, as the minister was obliged to admit, in the second part from the words "defined at that time by the Prime Minister" is word for word taken from page 10 of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Diefenbaker) statement to the federal-provincial conference on July 25. It was put in those terms precisely because that seemed to us to be an absolutely accurate definition of the principle of equalization as it seemed to me it was understood by everyone who understood it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: We on this side of the house did not think we could improve on the Prime Minister's words in this particular. What the house is being asked to do, is to endorse the precise definition of equalization given by the Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance suggested that there is some trickery. He said he would not use the word but he said I would have used it if the conditions had been reversed. He said there was some trickery about this amendment. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, what there is about this amendment. This amendment would never have been moved at all if the Prime Minister had not made his second statement or his suggestions, as the minister now likes to call them, in October which were in contradiction to what the Prime Minister had said in July. It was because of that contradiction that the amendment was moved.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will call some other witnesses than members of the Liberal party on this particular point and some that are quite close to hon. gentlemen opposite on this precise point before I have finished with what I have to say.

I have no doubt that the government was greatly disappointed by this amendment. From what went on today before the orders of the day were reached it was obvious that the government thought the amendment was going to be to advocate the renconvening of the federal-provincial conference. The Prime Minister, with one of those—I will not use the word "tricks"—political devices which are quite legitimate, thought he would forestall that amendment. As a matter of fact, the calling of the federal-provincial conference is surely far less important than is the question of whether the federal-provincial conference, when called, is going to be able to rely upon the plain language the Prime Minister used in July or is going to be offered some substitute for it.

I must say that the terms of the letter are very equivocal. The Minister of Finance says that equalization has something to do with fiscal need. It is true that equalization helps to meet a fiscal need. However, as the minister also pointed out, it does not by any means completely meet it. Otherwise there would be no need for special grants to the Atlantic provinces. The definition of equalization has never been fiscal need. The definition of equalization has been, as the Prime Minister put it, to bring the revenues from the three taxes in all the provinces up to the level of those of the highest two. That is the definition of equalization, and the only definition there has been.

Either the government is going to stick by what the Prime Minister promised or it is not. We felt that this house ought to affirm that they were going to stick by what the Prime Minister promised in July and what he took away, in the opinion of some observers I think would be hard to laugh off.

I have here from the Winnipeg Free Press, a paper that now seems very dear to the Minister of Finance, of October 29, an account of a statement made by Mr. Roblin, the premier of Manitoba, when he returned from the federal-provincial conference. I do not intend to read all of his account. I simply want to deal with what Mr. Roblin said was the real point at issue. Here is what he said:

> The real point at issue between the federal government and Manitoba, Mr. Roblin said, is the equalization principle which aims at giving the poorer provinces parity of revenue with the richest. He spoke out strongly against the federal proposals to freeze equalization payments at last year's level for the full five years of the new tax agreement.

That is Mr. Roblin's statement when he went back to Winnipeg. That is what he understood by the proposal or the suggestion of October. Mr. Roblin is not a stupid man. In fact, he is an extremely intelligent man and I think he understands this subject thoroughly. It will be noted that Mr. Roblin's view of what was proposed or suggested, if the minister prefers his euphemism, in October was precisely the view we took in this amendment. The plain fact is that if you fix the payment, as was suggested in October by the Prime Minister, at $220 million, that amount is the amount paid last year and there would be no growth factor of any description and there certainly would be no equalization in that procedure unless the revenues of the country remained absolutely stable or possibly, as the minister suggested, fell. I cannot think that even this government is so convinced that we are going to have depression conditions for the whole of the next five years that they regard a freezing of last year's payments as an adequate kind of equalization.

The minister in his speech also made something about another point. I do not intend to spend much time on it because it really had nothing directly to do with the amendment but since the minister raised it, I think it ought to be dealt with. He said that the Liberal party was trying to blur out the distinction between the Atlantic province grants, and indeed he also mentioned the payment due to Newfoundland under the constitution, as to which the position of the Liberal party has always been perfectly clear and has never been changed in any way, namely that it is a matter of right which ought not to be mixed up with this other matter at all but should have been treated quite separately as a matter of right. But I suggest that it is very hard, if you read the Prime Minister's own statement last October, to draw any other conclusion than that this is precisely what the government is trying to do, because here is his second suggestion. This is the operative part:

> To meet the needs of the provinces with lower tax potential we would therefore ask parliament to provide equalization payments or their equivalent in a total amount of $220 million a year—

When you read the next page you find that $220 million is the sum total of the equalization element of the present payments to the provinces, plus the Atlantic provinces grant, plus the payments that should be made under term 29. That is what it is, but it is all blurred together and it is described in this way:

> To meet the needs of the provinces with lower tax potential we would therefore ask parliament to provide equalization payments or their equivalent in a total amount of $220 million a year—

I say that if that is not blurring the thing, I do not know what blurring is. I think it is a good thing that that blurring has now been —and I hope the government does not change its mind again over this—removed tonight by the Minister of Finance.

He said that when this government came into office in 1957 they found federal-provincial financial relations in an unholy mess. If they found them in an unholy mess, that suggests, surely, there was something wrong with the system itself, there was something improper about the system. Yet three years later the Prime Minister goes into the railway committee room here on July 25, 1960 and pledges himself to maintain that very principle of equalization which the Minister of Finance said was in an unholy mess in 1957. I do not know which way you are to have it—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not wish to be interrupted and I intend to continue.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member has said that I said the principle of equalization was in an unholy mess—

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not say any such thing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What I said was that the previous government had left this whole matter of dominion-provincial fiscal relations in an unholy mess.

Mr. Speaker: The minister rises on a point of order, but what he does is contradict. If he is not satisfied with the interpretation of what he said he may correct it at the end of the speech, unless the hon. member cedes the floor.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not cede the floor, and I do not wish to cede the floor, because we have had far too much of this business. I repeat what I said—and it will be found in Hansard that this is what I said in the first place, if the minister had troubled to listen—that the minister had said that we left the whole situation in an unholy mess.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not what you said; you said, "the principle of equalization".

Mr. Pickersgill: That is exactly what I said; and I said that three years later the Prime Minister came and pledged himself to maintain this principle of equalization, which was the principle of the arrangement in 1957 which the hon. gentleman describes as an unholy mess.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Utter sophistry.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): A non sequitur.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister calls it sophistry. If you have to listen to two hours of sophistry it is pretty hard to deal with some other commodity when you are replying.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Do not misquote me.

Mr. Pickersgill: The plain fact is that the principle of equalization, as everyone knows or ought to know—though I sometimes wonder whether some of the members on the treasury benches understand the matter at all—

Mr. Henderson: I do not think you do.

Mr. Pickersgill: Everyone knows, or ought to know, why the principle of equalization and the present tax sharing legislation were substituted for the old tax rental system in 1957. They were substituted for it in order to make it possible for all provinces to participate. Up until that time the former government of the province of Quebec—and the same attitude is taken by the present government—was not willing to rent their tax fields, and they are still not willing to do so.

However, we took the view that it was unfair to penalize a province on that account. That is why this tax sharing and equalization proposal was made by the St. Laurent government in 1955. Actually it was made formally in 1956; it was put up to the provinces and discussed in the autumn of 1955 and a formal proposal was made publicly and clearly so people could understand it. They did not have to ask questions in 1956 about what the growth factor meant.

The result was that every province accepted it. It is true that they were not content with the amount of money they received. The Minister of Finance suggested that even with the harmony that, he claims, now prevails in this country they would not be content with the money they are going to receive. It is perfectly obvious that none of them were at all content with what happened last October. Indeed, I have here, and I think perhaps the minister will give to this the same respect he expects me to show for everything that appears in the Winnipeg Free Press a clipping from the Ottawa Journal of October 29, 1960. This is an article written by a newspaper man who has on the whole, I think been pretty friendly to the present government. It is written by Mr. Richard Jackson The heading on this article is:

Conference nowhere on tax deal, Jobless.

This is how it reads:

The federal-provincial conference got nowhere on either a tax deal or unemployment.

Tax negotiations would continue by mail, Prime Minister Diefenbaker has reported, "in an effort to resolve our differences".

There would be another round of talks next year, and, added the Prime Minister with emphasis, there would "have to be agreement before time run out on us all with expiration of the current tax agreements in March of 1962".

Then he goes on—and I will not read this—to say that even more bleak had been the performance of the conference on unemployment. That was the considered judgment of a reputable journalist in a Tory newspaper about that conference in October.

I was astonished that the minister read one paragraph from the Prime Minister's speech in July, where he talked about the federal government making no demands on the capital market, or very slight demands, in the next 12 months. That was based on the hypothesis of his $12 million surplus and not on the unpleasant facts that he was beginning to realize in October about his $300 million or $400 million deficit.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are quite mistaken.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the minister thinks he can get any premier to agree that he has made it easier for them to borrow he had better read what Mr. Bennett, Mr. Frost and a few of the rest of them said the day after he brought down his budget. I have some of their remarks here, but it would not be relevant to this debate, much as I would like to remind the Minister of Finance of what Mr. Bennett had to say.

The minister also made a great deal of the immense increase that the federal government, the present government, had made in payments to the provinces under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act, including therein the Atlantic provinces grants. I admit that those were very welcome additions, and I would not be so silly as to say they were not. I have never at any time, as the minister knows, done anything but praise the present government for the Atlantic provinces grants. The minister will find nothing that I have ever said to the contrary at any time, because I do like to be accurate about these things.

But I would remind the house and the minister—who knows it very well but never says it—that the change from the old tax rental system to the tax-sharing arrangements act which came into effect on April 1, 1957 resulted in an additional $100 million going to the provinces in the first year of the tax-sharing plan over what they had received in the last year under the old arrangement.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member not agree that I referred to that fact this afternoon? I did not mention the amount but I referred to the fact.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was the first time the minister has ever done that. The minister was careful not to refer to the amount. In the Tory literature that my hon. friends opposite send around the country they always take the last full Liberal year, 1956-57. They claim everything else has been done by the present government. I could bring down that literature and read it to the minister and I shall do so in another debate.

The plain fact is that as a result of the additions that Mr. Harris proposed to this house in relation to the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act of 1956, which came into effect on April 1, 1957, the provinces in the four succeeding years have received well over $400 million more than they would have received if those changes had not been made, and that is compared with the $275 million additional that the minister pointed out had been received by the provinces under changes in the law made by the present government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And we paid every cent of it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Out of the minister's own pocket no doubt. The minister says they paid every cent of it. I will tell the minister who paid. The taxpayers of Canada paid.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member criticized us for having deficits.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister also said, "Of course, it was easy for the Liberals to do it because they ran the country well and had a surplus but it was difficult for me because I was running the country so badly that I had a deficit." That is a very slight paraphrase of what the minister said in that respect.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): A gross distortion.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Pickersgill: And the minister dropped a few tears, of course.

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member said that, not the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister took a great deal of credit for all these meetings that had been held prior to the meeting that has now been called for February 23 or March 23. Of course, when that meeting takes place there will have been, I believe, exactly the same number of meetings as were held before the 1956 bill was introduced in this house in a previous parliament. Precisely the same number, I believe. The procedure that has been followed has also been very similar indeed.

Notwithstanding the unholy mess we are supposed to have made of it, so far as these conferences are concerned the pattern has been extraordinarily similar as though someone had been—and I suspect someone was—looking up the precedents and telling hon. gentlemen opposite what they should do next. Evidently Mr. Frost thought that because he said in the legislature the other day that it was about the time at which it was customary to receive a letter from Ottawa to say what they would get. They are going to get a letter but it is not going to tell them what they are going to get. It is simply going to tell them that there is a growth factor, undefined. Everyone knows what a growth factor is.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres. That hon. gentleman does not know.

Mr. Pickersgill: I say without the slightest fear of contradiction that the government does not know what the growth factor is they are going to propose, that they have not yet decided what particular formula they intend to propose. I am not privy to the secrets of the cabinet but I have had a certain amount of experience and I am perfectly sure that if the government knew what is was going to propose to the premiers and if hon. members opposite were not ashamed of it, we would know it too.

The only reason it is described as a growth factor in that letter is that hon. members opposite do not know what formula to propose. They have not made up their minds. They have not decided. They are probably still arguing about it. There would not have been any letter today nor would there have been a growth factor proposed at this time, or for another couple of months as the Minister of Finance indicated on Friday—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The minister did no such thing.

Mr. Pickersgill: —if the minister had not the impression—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is utterly untrue.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is my opinion, and it is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is flying in the face of the facts.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister knows very well that no letter had been written on Friday and no decision had been made on Friday to send a letter today.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): How do you know?

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister knows full well—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That was a reckless statement.

Mr. Pickersgill: —that no doubt having a shrewd suspicion that this attempt to short-change the provinces that was made last October would be protested in this house at the first available opportunity, the government thought it would be a clever thing to do to get this letter out today. Oh, I think it was quite a clever thing but it would have been a lot more satisfying to the provinces and to the country if that letter had stated in precise terms what this government was prepared to do in the way that Mr. St. Laurent did when he wrote his letter in January, 1956.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Did the hon. member compose it for Mr. St. Laurent?

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister took delight in referring to Mr. St. Laurent's attitude. The minister enjoys going back to the speeches made in 1955. He does not read all of them but he does read some of them and draws from them phrases which he uses again and again. He described the Liberal attitude as inflexible and stiff-necked.

The fact is, of course, that after the letter in January, 1956, was sent another conference was held and a very substantial modification was made in that scheme as a result of the representations made by the provinces at that conference, as the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming) will well recall. It is true that all of the modifications the provinces would like to have seen made were not made and I venture to suggest—and here I am echoing the Minister of Finance and for once agreeing with him—that if all the suggestions from all the provincial premiers at these conferences were carried out there would be nothing left in the federal treasury. However, that is not the point at all.

Mr. Brunsden: Did you tell Mr. Lesage that?

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course, Mr. Lesage's proposals were very moderate compared with those made by the premier of Ontario who has the notion, apparently, that Ontario has some kind of prior right to every dollar that is earned by anyone in Ontario, and that any federal taxation levied in that province is, as his favourite organ the Globe and Mail says so often, stolen by them and handed out to people in other provinces to use it extravagantly.

I do not think this view that has been expressed by the Globe and Mail and that is expressed more and more by Mr. Frost will commend itself much to the minister's friends in all the other provinces. It certainly does not commend itself to the leader of the minister's and Prime Minister's party in the province of Saskatchewan because Mr. Pederson, again according to the Winnipeg Free Press of October 29, 1960, made a statement in Regina which is of some interest. The headline reads:

Saskatchewan P.C. chief blasts Dief on tax plan.

The article reads:

Martin Pederson, Saskatchewan Progressive Conservative leader, Thursday condemned Prime Minister Diefenbaker's proposals on new tax collection methods—

There is more to the same effect.

The plain fact is, as Mr. Walter Harris pointed out in his budget speech in 1957 in words that were simple and eloquent, the taxes imposed on the people of Canada by this parliament are imposed upon Canadians, collected from Canadians and spent on Canadians. That is the whole basis of any tax-sharing arrangement that we have in this country, without which there can be no unity in this country.

I wish I had unlimited time at my disposal because I should like to read what Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding had to say about this in 1907, although they did not at that time have some of the modern techniques and notions we now have.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding pointed out at that time that the proper basis of federal subsidies should be a real per capita basis and not the rather extraordinary scheme that there was in the British North America Act, and changes were made in that direction.

The minister objected to something some of my political friends had said about a return to the tax jungle. I lived in the tax jungle and I lived in what was perhaps the worst tax jungle because it was the most honestly run province in Canada in the depression. I refer to the province of Manitoba.

When I was a lecturer at United College in the province of Manitoba we paid a federal income tax and we paid a provincial income tax, and in addition, a single man paid a 2 per cent wage tax on every dollar he earned if his income was over $480 a year. Every married man paid that wage tax on every dollar he earned if his income was over $960 a year. That tax was imposed by Mr. Bracken. It was imposed by Mr. Bracken because, instead of repudiating the provincial debt, as was done in some other provinces under some other kinds of governments, or instead of allowing the unemployed to suffer, those who were employed were taxed and taxed very heavily indeed in order to see that there was no undue suffering, no more suffering than was inevitable from unemployment at that time.

But notwithstanding the level of taxation that we had at that time in Manitoba, and notwithstanding the honest efforts made by the government at that time to deal with those problems, it just was not possible with the tax base in that province, any more than it is in at least seven of the provinces of Canada today, to finance on that tax base and have taxes anything like the level they are in Ontario or in British Columbia and to provide anything approaching equal services.

If we do mean that there is to be reasonable equality of opportunity in this country, if we do mean that Canadians are to have an equal chance wherever they live, it can only be done in one of two ways. One is by centralization, by providing all the functions from this parliament here in Ottawa, which we turned our backs on in the Liberal party in 1937 when the Rowell-Sirois commission was appointed—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You turned back again later.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and the other is, by putting all the provinces in a position by the equalization of the main tax fields to perform those functions by themselves. I am very proud that I belong to a party and belonged to a government that, from the tax jungle of the 1930's, accomplished the equalization that we had accomplished by 1957, which Mr. St. Laurent indicated was not perfect but was better—and every premier agreed with that—than anything that had been suggested up until then. Every one of them agreed with that without exception. I am very proud that I was associated with that policy.

I was very pleased, genuinely pleased, when I went into the railway committee room that day in July, 1960, and heard the Prime Minister make the statement that is in our amendment. I was pleased because I thought, well, they have had some experience now and they have seen the light, they realize that this is a difficult problem and that, until something really better can be found, this is the best solution and I am going to praise them for it. That is what I intended to do until October. But I could not praise what happened in October any more than Mr. Roblin could, or any more than Mr. Stanfield could, or any more than Mr. Shaw could, or even any more than Mr. Frost could. As I say, it was because of this performance in October that we are debating this motion tonight.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You have brought the same motion in year after year.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the government is prepared to go right back and say that they really, honestly meant, without equivocation, without interpretation, to carry out the plain words that the Prime Minister used in July, there will certainly be no criticism of the conduct of the government from me. But substitutes, ersatz things like growth factors and other phrases, such as equalization means fiscal need undefined, substitutes of that sort; birds in the bush that has not yet been cleared away in spite of the three and one half years of prodigious bushing are a very poor substitute for the bird in the hand that the provincial governments of this country have had since 1957 and that evidently, when the chips are down, none of them wants to lose.

Mr. R. S. MacLellan (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I presume that other hon. members were as much surprised as I was to see this amendment brought forward today by the opposition. Indeed, it seems to most hon. members, I am sure, as it does to me, that this whole amendment is a matter of great sound and fury signifying nothing.

Nothing was more obvious when the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) was speaking than that all he was doing was setting up a straw man to knock down. His proposition is that the government is not sincere in espousing the principle of equalization, when the facts are clear to everybody that the government has always espoused the principle of equalization. No matter how hard the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate tried he could not bring forward one shred of evidence to show that there was any question in anybody's mind about this.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about Mr. Roblin?

Mr. MacLellan: One thing in particular that surprised me was his reference to how happy he was in July, 1958 when he went into the railway committee room—

Mr. Pickersgill: It was in 1960.

Mr. MacLellan: —and heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) there take a firm stand for the principle of equalization without any equivocation. There has been equivocation since then. The debate this afternoon as far as the Liberal party is concerned was a matter of knocking down a straw man.

Again I was surprised to see this topic brought forward when it is remembered that in this particular field the record of the Liberal party is worse than it is in any other, and that is saying a lot. If there was one thing more than another which defeated the Liberal party in 1957, it was their record in the field of dominion-provincial relations. Many people would blame the very obvious reluctance on their part to pay a reasonable old age pension to the older citizens in Canada, or the way in which they trampled on parliament in the last days of their arrogant rule. But I believe more than anything else their record in the field of federal-provincial relations defeated the Liberal party in 1957.

In his speech the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate himself admitted that. "None of the provinces", he said, "was satisfied with the arrangements in 1957". Mr. Speaker, I would say that that was a masterpiece of understatement. Actually, what was their record in the year 1956 and before? The most common news items in the papers of those days were those of the provincial treasurers and premiers trekking to Ottawa to beg a few crumbs out of the great surpluses that the Liberal party were piling up in Ottawa to bolster their sagging treasuries. In every situation even though the treasurers of the provinces were very hard up, and their provinces going without much needed essential services, the Liberal government of that day refused and insulted the premiers and treasurers who came forward looking for funds.

This afternoon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) put on the record the comments of the premiers of Manitoba and Prince Edward Island, both Liberal premiers, in respect of the attitude of the Liberal administration of that day. Certainly in my own province of Nova Scotia there can be no question as to what the niggardly attitude of the previous administration meant to the people of the province. In 1956, and in the years before that, in Nova Scotia we had an educational system coming almost to the brink of collapse because the provincial treasury was too poor to provide decent salaries to the teachers and decent schools for children to be trained in, or proper educational facilities generally. We had a highway system growing at a snail's pace and far short of the traffic requirements. We saw social welfare slipping away behind. Indeed, in some of the Atlantic provinces we wondered at that time whether some of our governments might not be heading for bankruptcy in an attempt to provide essential services because of lack of help of any responsible nature from the federal government.

When the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was speaking today, again speaking under the handicap that he did not have a shred of evidence to support the proposition he was putting forward—

Mr. Martineau: That would hardly stop him.

Mr. MacLellan: I have noticed, Mr. Speaker, that the louder and longer the tirade of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate the weaker is his argument. Certainly if he proved anything this evening it was not that he really doubted that the government was questioning the principle or the application of the principle of equalization; no, it seemed that he was worried that there might be some possibility of a weakening in the process of centralization at Ottawa, which was the factor upon which the Liberals based their fundamental thinking and their entire philosophy as to federal-provincial relations. If everything could be gathered together at Ottawa and if Ottawa could be in complete control of the provincial treasuries and the financial systems of the provinces, that would suit the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. That was the attitude of the administration of which he was a member a few years ago.

I should like to put on the record a few of the facts in relation to the record of the government in the field of dominion-provincial relations. Certainly it is a record of which the Conservative party, our Prime Minister, and his government can be very proud. In contrast to the days prior to 1957 when the treasury of my province of Nova Scotia was in such dire need, immediately after the government was elected in 1957 it called together the provincial treasurers and increased the provincial share of the income tax by 30 per cent, a very substantial increase. In addition, as has been said, it also provided $100 million over a four-year period in special grants for the development of the Atlantic provinces. When the Minister of Finance was speaking this afternoon he pointed out that between 1956-57 and 1960-61 contributions from the federal government to the provinces more than doubled. They increased from $689.4 million in 1956-57 to $1,300.9 million in 1960-61.

Perhaps more striking are the figures for Nova Scotia, which very much needed the transfusion that the Department of Finance provided in 1957-58 and following years. In 1956-57 unconditional grants to Nova Scotia amounted to $24,628,000. By 1960-61 they had almost doubled to the amount of $42,246,000. Conditional grants grew from $4,819,000 in 1956-57 to $20,583,000 in 1960-61. In both cases the figures for 1960-61 are estimated figures. This is an increase in conditional grants of almost four and a half times in this very short period. The total increase in conditional and unconditional grants amounted to $33.4 million or well over 100 per cent.

Let me put these figures another way. The premier of Nova Scotia, speaking at Colchester on May 9, 1960, put the matter this way to show what increased federal help to Nova Scotia meant to us. He said:

> I ask you to note the difference between federal assistance given Nova Scotia with a Liberal government in Ottawa and the federal assistance under the present Conservative administrations here and in Ottawa. In the last three years Nova Scotia has received nearly $7 million more in trans-Canada highway grants. We have received $1,100,000 more for the development of our harbours and shipping facilities. We have received in excess of $9 million more for housing grants and loans. We have received in excess of $4 million more for general health grants, for existing health services, hospital construction, tuberculosis control, etc.
> We have received nearly $6 million more in additional assistance for freight rates. We have received nearly $7 million more in coal subventions. We have received $3½ million more for power development. Our agricultural industry has received $700,000 more for farm improvement and other loans and in lime assistance. The federal government has made available $1½ million more in reclaiming and developing marshland areas in Nova Scotia. We have received $2½ million more in federal loans for new or expanding industries in Nova Scotia. These items alone represent the substantial total of nearly $42½ million...
> But that figure represents only part of the difference... so far as federal assistance is concerned. We should add to that $42½ million another $30 million in special grants to Nova Scotia... And further to that the federal contribution made to our hospital insurance program, which runs to well over $7 million annually. In addition, the Diefenbaker government increased its rebates to the provinces from the tax rental agreements, which resulted in $7 million to the province of Nova Scotia.

This totals $86½ million more than was received by Nova Scotia in the last year of the Liberal administration. Yet that is the party that dares tonight to bring forth an amendment to question the work of this government in the field of federal-provincial relations.

What has this extra $86½ million meant in the province of Nova Scotia? One prime example of the progress we have seen in the province, partly as a result of this extra help, has been in the great highway building program. In four construction seasons the province of Nova Scotia will have hard-surfaced more miles than were previously done in all the years since the second world war. In 1956 the province of Nova Scotia had 2,003 miles of hard-surfaced road. By the end of 1960 it had more than 3,100 miles, a gain of almost 1,100 miles or more than half as much as was done in the whole previous 23 years. In addition, in the past three years the province of Nova Scotia has prepared 800 miles for paving compared with 296.7 miles in the previous three years. In the building of bridges the present administration of Nova Scotia, with this additional help from Ottawa, has built more bridges in three years than were constructed in the previous six years.

We have also seen a tremendous difference in education as a result of the extra transfusion from Ottawa in the last few years. The budget of the province of Nova Scotia in 1960 was nearly twice the budget of the last full year of the Liberal regime in the province, which was 1956. A program that would not have been possible without substantial extra taxation was accomplished in the province only because this nation had the sense to defeat the federal Liberal administration in 1957 and to elect a government that would heed the needs of the provinces and the provincial treasuries.

Indeed, in 1956 as a result of the Pottier royal commission in the province a report was brought in recommending the setting up of a new and improved educational system. It would have been impossible to implement this Pottier report without a sales tax had it not been for the election of the Diefenbaker government at Ottawa and the new and special financial assistance provided to the province of Nova Scotia as well as to the other provinces in the Atlantic area.

In 1956 there were 128 teachers in training in Nova Scotia's universities, only half the number required. Today there are 235 or an increase of almost 100 per cent. The enrolment of teachers in training in the normal college has increased by 50 per cent. We have today in the province of Nova Scotia an educational system which is so much better than that which obtained in 1956 that there is almost no room for comparison, and much of the credit is due to this government which has provided so generously the additional funds so badly needed.

Some mention has been made of the situation with regard to the finances of the municipalities. I could say something about the situation in the province of Nova Scotia which I think illustrates what is happening across the whole of Canada. It is striking to note the astounding increase in grants to municipalities which has been made possible by the greatly increased revenues of the province. In 1951 the Liberal administration increased grants to municipalities by $300,000. Later they provided a little help with the rebate of the gasoline tax on certain municipally owned vehicles. But from 1951 until 1956 no increased aid whatever was provided to the hard-pressed municipalities in my province. Since 1957, the government of Nova Scotia, with the help of the increased revenues which it enjoyed as a result of the election of the present administration, was able to provide an annual sum of $3.5 million in direct grants to the municipalities of that province. This was in addition to the taking over of other burdens of the municipalities as a result of the hospitalization program and the welfare program generally.

I say again, Mr. Speaker, that it is rather shocking, with the record of the Liberal policy as bad as it was in this field, that they have brought up this amendment today. Particularly is this so when they have so little in the way of argument to support their rather obscure proposition.

In conclusion, I would say this in general on the matter of dominion-provincial relations: Nothing could be more striking than the difference which has been engendered in the Atlantic provinces as a result of the increased grants to those provinces. The level of standards in 1956 was becoming dangerously low in all fields, in education, highways and social welfare. Today we see an astounding change. We have a greatly improved highway program which has meant the earning of many more tourist dollars than formerly. We have healthier, better educated people in the Atlantic provinces now, which makes them not only better citizens of our region but, indeed, far better Canadians than they were before.

While I know the Minister of Finance has provided much of this extra assistance by way of deficit financing; while I realize he has shortened his own purse by assisting the provincial treasuries because he realized how badly they needed assistance, yet I would say to him there is no better contribution to the people of the nation than a contribution made to the provincial governments. The authority and responsibility of provincial governments is wide and most important. Without question the extra assistance given to my province along these lines in the future will do as much to bring us ahead as this extra money has in the past.

I was very pleased indeed to note that the special grants to the Atlantic provinces would be continued for another four years. With those grants we are building up a far better service level than we previously had. I would ask the Minister of Finance to find as much money as he can to continue that program. Nothing is more important than better highways and better schools and these cannot be provided in the Atlantic region without the continued assistance of the federal government. We are certainly very pleased with the extra assistance we have had so far. We wonder where we would be today if it were not for the defeat of the decadent Liberal administration of 1957 and the election of a government which would face up squarely to our problems. I would urge that this program be continued.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that every member of this house is rather surprised to learn from the hon. member who has just resumed his seat that conditions are so good in Nova Scotia today. This is quite contrary to statements made in a speech delivered before a group of Conservative women right here in Ottawa on Friday last by one of his colleagues, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Morris). This hon. member stated publicly that conditions in Nova Scotia are bad.

The hon. member also stated that there has been no denial of the principle of equalization by the present government, and that the hon. member who moved the amendment, as well as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), did not have any evidence to support their arguments. I know that the amendment introduced this afternoon by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin) is one which affects the needs of all parts of Canada. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) had not tried to misrepresent our amendment I think we would be justified in saying that he gave his own version of the amendment which is quite different from ours.

The Minister of Finance, in his long and elaborate speech, said the present government had inherited an unholy mess in the federal-provincial field. We know also that the present government inherited a series of surpluses which have been turned into the worst series of deficits in the history of Canada. We know also that the present government inherited an unemployment insurance fund of $900 million, and that four months from now that fund will be completely depleted as a result of lack of leadership and mismanagement by this government. We know also that the present government inherited about 150,000 unemployed in the month of June, 1957. Since then the number of unemployed in this country has been at least two times, and in certain months three times as high as it was in any month under the previous administration.

We all agree that in order to achieve a high level of prosperity for all Canadians it is essential that the financial resources of the nation be available to provide the national government as well as provincial and municipal governments with adequate revenues to support public services. The need for public services such as roads, schools and other services provided by provincial and municipal governments is increasing yearly and imposing additional demands on those governments. Our growing population in this modern world is demanding more and more assistance, more benefits and more protection against economic and social hazards.

In order to achieve national prosperity, which we also agree is essential to national unity, the Liberal party believes that the principle of equalization in federal-provincial tax arrangements must be upheld, and that Canadians from every part of the country must receive an equal share of the revenues derived from national economic activities. The position of the Conservative party, notwithstanding what was said this afternoon and earlier this evening by the Minister of Finance, is far from being clear and definite on matters of such vital importance as the welfare of our population in every section of the country from one coast to the other.

Reference has been made by the mover of the amendment now under discussion to the ambiguous and contradictory statements made by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), first on July 25 last and then in October, to the provincial premiers who were convened at the last dominion-provincial conference. They were told then, notwithstanding the denials of the Minister of Finance, that the federal government was prepared to recommend to parliament that the federal tax rates in the three shared tax fields be reduced at the time of the termination of the present tax rental agreement, that is March 31, 1962, by the amount of the present standard rates, that is 14-9-50. I should like to quote the words of the Prime Minister, to which the Minister of Finance objected this afternoon, and I am quoting from a summary of suggestions made by the Prime Minister of Canada to the dominion-provincial conference on October 26, 1960. This document was made public following the Prime Minister's statement to the conference and was given to the press, so it is a public document. I am sure that the Prime Minister cannot deny that these are his exact words as reported in the statement which under his own instructions was handed to the press following that conference. Here are the Prime Minister's words:

> To meet the needs of the provinces with lower tax potential we would therefore ask parliament to provide equalization payments or their equivalent in a total amount of $220 million a year, which is approximately the scale of the payments this year.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

He went further when he said this:

> The amount so provided will take the place of the present equalization payments, the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, and the special grants to Newfoundland under section 2 of the Newfoundland Additional Grants Act.

He went further and said this:

> Being mindful of the necessity of maintaining a reasonable level of public services in areas of low tax potential, we will ask parliament to provide this sum of money for equalization payments.

That is a total of $220 million a year. We were told this afternoon by the Minister of Finance that at no time were such proposals made by the Prime Minister. I have here, Mr. Speaker, the Concise Oxford dictionary. Under the word "suggest" I find this definition: Propose. I wonder whether there is so much difference between a proposal and a suggestion made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: You can take a suggestion back more easily.

Mr. Robichaud: Probably so. The hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacLellan) said we had no reason whatsoever to doubt the Prime Minister's sincerity in maintaining the equalization principles. As to this offer that was made by the Prime Minister at the October conference, what would it mean to the various provinces? How would it affect those provinces such as the Atlantic provinces where the economic progress has been retarded by factors beyond the control of those provinces, with the result that the standard of living has fallen behind that of the rest of the country.

The freezing of the present equalization tax rate and the replacement of the present equalization payment to certain provinces including, to use the words of the Prime Minister himself, the Atlantic provinces, adjustment grants and the special grants to Newfoundland to a fixed sum of $220 million per year, as suggested to the provincial premiers in October last, is contrary to the principle of the equalization scheme. This is why we of the Liberal party felt that it was our duty to bring to the attention of the country the statement made by the Prime Minister and to object to the statement and to insist that the principle of equalization be maintained. No wonder the conference ended in failure and no wonder the premiers departed unhappy and dissatisfied and no wonder, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have now changed their minds.

In fact, to limit to $220 million a year the equalization payments to those provinces where the revenue yields are not sufficient to meet the needs of the provincial finance, and to freeze such payments for a period of five years following March 31, 1962, is nothing else but a deliberate violation of a principle which has been accepted and recognized as just, equitable and practicable for the performance of those functions of national interest that are especially assigned to the federal government under our constitution.

However, I must admit that I am not at all surprised to hear such a proposal coming from the present Prime Minister. It is true—and I repeat this statement—that it is contradictory to the declaration he made on July 25 last when he said that the principle of equalization must be preserved and when he added that the federal government remains firmly committed to that principle. The Prime Minister knows, as does every Canadian taxpayer, that every dollar of federal revenue comes from the pockets of the Canadian taxpayer and that every dollar contributed by the federal treasury in stabilization or equalization payments is contributed by Canadian taxpayers.

As Mr. Harris said in his budget speech of March 14, 1957, as reported at page 2218 of Hansard of that date:

> Canadians living in Ontario pay exactly the same rates of tax as are applicable to all other Canadians, and Canadians living in Ontario derive their incomes in considerable part, directly or indirectly, from consumers and producers in other parts of Canada, just as Canadians elsewhere may derive part of their incomes from business activity that takes place in Ontario.

At no time should the federal government give thought to the idea of abandoning the objective of the tax rental agreements which make it possible for all provinces to perform their constitutional functions. The suggestion offered to the provinces by the Prime Minister in October last, namely the freezing of the equalization payments to $220 million, which was supported this afternoon by the Minister of Finance, was nothing else but an offer concealed by an artificial cloud or a smoke screen. It was strategy for a take it or leave it proposal.

If the present government was to remain in power for many years,—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): And it will do so.

Mr. Robichaud: The hon. member says "and it will do so". Time will tell. As I was saying, if the present government was to remain in power for many more years I can well understand how many of the provinces might feel that they are protected by a fixed equalization payment based on the present scale of payments for this year. We all know that during the 1950's, the annual output of the Canadian economy more than doubled in value, rising from $16 billion to $35 billion. The gross national product rose quite steeply in the years 1944-56, despite the short setback in the recession period of 1953-54. It is also a fact that real consumption per capita declined in 1957 and in 1958 and by 1959 it was only fractionally higher than it was in 1956; and this decline happened under a Conservative administration, that of the present government.

For the first nine months of 1960 total output was only 2.9 per cent higher than it was in the corresponding period in 1959, but almost half of this increase can be attributed to higher prices of consumer goods. Those figures cannot be denied because they have just been released in the report of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. Under the continuation of such conditions the suggestion of the Prime Minister might be considered as acceptable to certain provinces. But every right thinking Canadian knows that this government has lost the confidence of the people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Robichaud: This government has reached the point where we are back to the Bennett days, where soup lines are being introduced, where surplus food products are being offered to the unemployed.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Although we are now discussing an amendment proposed by our friends opposite concerning federal-provincial relations, the hon. member is now embarking on a complete side issue. Under the circumstances I think the rules should be observed.

Mr. Robichaud: If I may be allowed to do so, I should like to speak to the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am speaking of the national growth of this country. We know that the tax ratio is being based on the gross national income. We know that the gross national income has an effect on the taxes and on the grants that would be made to the provinces. If the gross national product remains at the present level it would mean that this government will be limited to making payments which were about the equal of what they have been in the last fiscal year.

So I feel that my remarks are absolutely related, just as much as the remarks made by the Minister of Finance, who went far afield and spoke of national defence and so forth. The Canadian public is aware that this government lacks the leadership that is required to maintain the growth which prevailed in the last decade, in most of the 1950's under a Liberal government and which has practically reached a stalemate in the last three years since the present government took office.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is just fantasy.

Mr. Robichaud: It is no wonder that the apparent failure of activity to increase at the pace to which business has become accustomed has raised many questions and is causing so much concern in our country at the present time.

As I said earlier, the suggestion of the Prime Minister could be acceptable to certain provinces if, and only if, his government were to remain in office for the next five years; but we all know that such will not be the case.

An hon. Member: It will.

Mr. Robichaud: Look at the Gallup poll that came out last Saturday. I am sure it gave you reason to worry.

The decade of the 1960's, which has begun on a far less expansive note than marked the beginning of the 1950's will, under a new Liberal administration, and very soon, regain its momentum and mark once more a period of progress and prosperity, a period where the growth of the richer provinces will enable the federal government to help proportionately, and on an equal basis, the poorer ones. This is why most of the provinces, and the Atlantic provinces in particular, cannot accept the Prime Minister's suggestion that the provinces be frozen at the 1960 level—

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question. Will he tell me what the Atlantic provinces are getting under this decadent and failing government compared to the powerful and prosperous government which was defeated on June 21, 1957.

Mr. Robichaud: Under the present government the Atlantic provinces are in a worse position today than they have been for years. In the Atlantic provinces the number of unemployed today is over 15 per cent of the labour force.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member needs to call a psychiatrist. I will not say the hon. member is falsifying, but he needs a psychiatrist.

Mr. Robichaud: If a psychiatrist be needed I think he could be used on many of the members opposite. That is the situation in the Atlantic provinces today, and I would refer the minister to the situation in Pictou, and everywhere in the Cape Breton area. I know the hon. members opposite cannot keep quiet, because it hurts them to hear these things.

Under the Liberal principle the provinces were protected in case of inflation, while under the proposal made by the Prime Minister in October last—a proposal which he has amended and changed today—the dollar value of the federal payment will shrink by the full amount of such inflation. Such a proposal, if accepted, could destroy the progress made in the federal-provincial tax-sharing field following the recommendations of the Rowell-Sirois commission of 1937, and the provinces will be compelled to return to the strangling position they were in during the early 1930's in the days of the Bennett regime.

For a sound economy it is important to retain the principle of equalization and also the related principle of stabilization. As I said earlier there is no decrease in the needs for roads, schools and other essential public services provided by provinces and municipalities. Under our constitution it is the responsibility of the federal government to protect the provinces against any serious decline in their revenues from the sharing of taxes.

Our provinces, and our municipalities in particular, are being called upon to undertake capital projects which come within their jurisdiction and responsibility as a fundamental part of our Canadian federation. It is only logical to presume that reasonable men willing and desirous of living in a federation might agree to consider their common fiscal and administrative woes and make every effort to provide a series of working ideas.

This is where lies, and must be retained, the principle of equalization. The need for additional revenues for our municipalities is an urgent one and no one can deny that in order to discharge their constitutional responsibilities our municipalities must have adequate sources of revenue. Everyone must also admit that if the municipalities must exercise their functions under the terms of confederation there should also be in existence a system that would tend to preserve Canadian unity, and not a system that would discriminate against a certain group of Canadians because they happen to reside in certain areas where the standard of living and the economic growth is lagging behind, as compared with that of other sections of the country.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, could the house leader let us know what the program is for the rest of the week.

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow we have the continuation of this debate. On Wednesday we will resume the debate on the motion of the Minister of National Revenue to set up a special committee on broadcasting. That will be followed by the budget resolutions. I judge that would carry over Wednesday and Thursday. If we do not complete the budget resolutions on Thursday, we will finish them on Friday. If we complete them on Thursday, on Friday we will take the estimates of one of the departments, which I will announce tomorrow night.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO CANADIAN PREPARED FOOD EXPORTS

Question No. 84—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

Questions

1. Has the Department of Trade and Commerce been requested to assist a Canadian food manufacturer in Windsor, Ontario, in his efforts to export Chinese-type prepared foods to the United States?
2. If so: (a) have representations been addressed directly to the minister in this matter by the manufacturer himself or by any body acting on his behalf? (b) has any progress been made in negotiations with the United States government or any of its agencies in this regard? (c) has any agreement yet been reached to permit this Canadian food manufacturer to export his product?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. Yes.

2. (a) Yes. (b) Yes. (c) Yes. An agreement has now been signed by the Canadian embassy in Washington and the competent U.S. authority. The agreement will take effect when notice of it has been published in the United States federal register. That publication should take place on February 1, enabling the Windsor manufacturer to begin exporting to the United States as of that day.

FEDERAL PREVAILING RATE EMPLOYEES

Question No. 85—Mr. Peters:

Questions

1. What is the basis for determining terms and conditions of work for prevailing rate of pay employees in the government service?
2. What is the role of the prevailing rate advisory committee?
3. Who are its members and what are their positions in the federal government service?
4. Why are prevailing rate of pay employees required to take the first day of sick leave without pay?
5. During the month of December, did the minister receive representations on behalf of these employees from any staff association?
6. If so: (a) what association made these representations? (b) does the government contemplate changing its policy in this?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1. Terms and conditions of work for prevailing rate employees are determined on the basis of information provided by the Department of Labour resulting from surveys of current practices in outside employment.

2. The prevailing rate advisory committee provides advice to the treasury board on matters pertaining to working conditions of employees under the prevailing rate employees general regulations, ships' officers regulations, and ships' crews regulations.

3. A. R. K. Anderson, superintendent of civilian personnel, Department of National Defence; J. R. Baxter, director of administration and personnel services, Department of Transport; Charles Caron, treasury board staff; A. Gagnon, treasury board staff; R. J. Groves, director, organization and personnel, Department of Agriculture; J. F. Maxwell, chief, personnel branch, Department of Public Works; K. R. Scobie, director of pay and standards branch, civil service commission; Bernard Wilson, director, industrial relations branch, Department of Labour.

4. A waiting period for sickness benefits is the current practice in outside employment.

5. Yes.

6. (a) The civil service association of Canada. (b) It is not the practice of the government to reveal information on policy matters.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, January 31, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

STANDING ORDERS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber) presented the first report of the special committee on standing orders, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

WAR MEASURES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING TREATMENT OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-62, to amend the War Measures Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This bill, Mr. Speaker, seeks to do what the government said it would do itself this session—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And therefore is unnecessary.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —but, as usual, the opposition has to do the things which the government has promised to do. It is hoped that if the government itself takes action in this matter it will be as a result of this prompting by the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The motion is not debatable, and the hon. member is given leave to explain the purport of the bill rather than to debate it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was moved to give this clarification by the benevolent and kindly intervention of the Minister of Finance.

This bill seeks to provide for an amendment to the War Measures Act to bring that act into a position consistent with the bill of rights passed by this parliament at the last session, a bill that was considerably improved as a result of the contributions made by the opposition.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXPROPRIATION ACT

AMENDMENT REQUIRING NOTICE TO ALL INTERESTED PARTIES

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-63, to amend the Expropriation Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Spare us the explanation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) would be among those who would require an explanation, and I am very happy to give it to him.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I asked you to spare us the explanation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This bill likewise seeks to remove from the Expropriation Act provisions that are contrary to the bill of rights passed by this parliament last session.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the unprecedented appeal of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) to officers of the armed services, to use the words of one newspaper and two television reporters, to "dip their feet" in politics by fighting ban the bomb movements in Canada.

Under ordinary circumstances the differences on the use of nuclear weapons might well have waited for an airing until the estimates of either of the two conflicting departments on this matter were before the house. But an immediate debate has been made essential by this attempt by the Minister of National Defence to break with tradition, in that an appeal has now been made to our own armed services to participate in what is today a political issue in Canada.

National Defence Statement

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks just made on this, as I think, unprecedented motion on the part of the hon. member, I feel that I perhaps should say a word or two. On Saturday night I spoke to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may rise on a matter of privilege, if there is one involved, or he may rise to assist the Chair in determining whether it is a definite matter of urgent public importance.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I think it is both a matter of privilege and a matter of assisting you in determining the matter of urgent public importance. The two of them work together, as it happens, in this particular case.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member on the matter of privilege first, if there is one.

Mr. Harkness: On Saturday night, Mr. Speaker, I attended a mess dinner at H.M.C.S. Carleton at which I made a few brief remarks. The writer of the article to which the hon. member refers was not present at this dinner, nor were any other reporters present. I think the writer of the article has come to some conclusions and made some assertions here which are completely unwarranted by anything I said at this mess dinner.

From reading this article one would think I had devoted myself chiefly to discussion of nuclear arms and nuclear armaments. As a matter of fact I did not mention the matter of nuclear armaments at all, and I did not have them in mind at all. Therefore the assertions which are made in this article on that score, and the assertion that I was inviting reserve officers to dip their feet in politics are without any warrant or any background whatever. It was the last thing in my mind and, I am sure, in the minds of any of the officers who were present at this dinner. In view of these circumstances, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The substance of the matter of privilege which the minister raises is that the alleged episode has been misreported, as I understand it. Am I to understand from him that the reports on which this motion is based are not in accordance with the facts?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Regier: May I, Mr. Speaker, make an observation on the question of privilege raised by the minister? I believe you will note that the minister has not denied that he has invited the armed services to participate in a campaign against ban the bomb movements in Canada. The minister carefully avoided a denial of that fact.

[Mr. Regier.]

Mr. Harkness: In connection with this point, Mr. Speaker, may I say that what I did in this speech was to state—and I am prepared to state it again now—that there is a considerable amount of propaganda of a neutralist and pacifist type; and by "pacifist" I mean in favour of unilateral disarmament and so forth. A considerable number of people who are putting forward that propaganda are taking part in ban the bomb movements, putting advertisements in newspapers, engaging in marches, and things along that line. In my opinion their purpose in doing this is to undermine the will of the Canadian people to resist aggression and to weaken Canadian defence efforts.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think if I allowed the minister to go further we would in effect be debating the matter for which the hon. member seeks to move the adjournment of the house. The minister has raised, as a matter of privilege, the accuracy of the report. It remains for me to consider whether this request for leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 comes with the rule.

There are two difficulties that seem to me to stand in the way of the hon. member's request. Standing order 26, subparagraph 1 reads as follows:

> Leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the house when made for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance must be asked after starred questions on Wednesdays and on other days after the ordinary daily routine of business—

I have very serious doubts whether this is a definite matter of urgent public importance. The request is based on some remarks alleged to have been made by the minister during a speech at a private dinner, and not in the exercise of any administrative function of the minister. Standing order 26 has been invoked only to deal with administrative responsibility and acts of the government. Therefore I think that on those two grounds this motion is scarcely within standing order 26. I do not find here a definite matter of urgent public importance. A remark made in the course of a speech at a private dinner seems to me not the kind of urgent matter for which this rule was devised so as to permit the house to interrupt all other proceedings for the purpose of considering that definite matter of urgent public importance. The other question is whether the matter alleged is an administrative responsibility or act.

Having said that much, there is another difficulty. We are today embarked upon a supply motion which is governed by standing order 56, which calls upon the house to vote in the course of this debate at 8.15 o'clock this evening. If I permitted this proposed debate to go on, how could this house comply with standing order 56, which calls for a vote on this motion at 8.15 p.m., if the debate on the motion to adjourn the house were still continuing? It seems to me there is a conflict here of procedure. It is perhaps unnecessary to resolve it, because on other grounds already stated, I do not think this request for leave to move the adjournment of the house can be granted.

There are these difficulties. The two rules, standing as they do, would prevent standing order 26 being used in the course of debate on a supply motion. If the hon. member who made the request wishes to be heard on the two points on which I find against him, I will be glad to hear him. Otherwise I do not find the rule has been satisfied.

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—ORDER IN COUNCIL RESPECTING HANDLING OF LUGGAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport, and ask whether the minister gave directions to Sky-Caps Incorporated at Dorval airport to stop handling passengers' luggage; and is it a fact that this cannot be done without the minister's permission, in accordance with the so-called order in council dealing with the matter?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): For a number of years prior to the opening of the new terminal building in Montreal in December last, porter service was provided under an arrangement made between T.C.A., on its own behalf and on behalf of certain other air lines, and Murray Hill Limousine Service Limited. Payments were made by the air lines concerned to Murray Hill Limousine Service Limited in consideration of which the latter maintained a porter service for the general public with particular regard to the requirements of the air lines.

Some time prior to the move to the new terminal building, discussions were entered into between T.C.A. and Murray Hill, on behalf of T.C.A. and the other air lines concerned, with respect to the provision of an enlarged porter service at the new terminal. In view of the substantial increase in the number of porters and the consequential increase in the cost of providing the service, alternative means of paying for the service were discussed, and an arrangement was made between the air lines concerned and Murray Hill for the adoption of a new system under which baggage checks would be issued to members of the public and a modest charge made for the service. I am informed that this is similar to systems used elsewhere, and particularly in the New York area in respect of porter services at railway and bus stations and, I believe, New York international airport, which have proved to be very satisfactory. One particular advantage is that it minimizes the possibility of lost baggage and facilitates its recovery if mislaid.

In or about November last, as a result of differences which had arisen between Murray Hill and the porters, the services of the porters were terminated and a new group of porters was hired by Murray Hill. At the same time a couple of other groups started operating their own porter services and proceeded to offer their services to members of the public using the airport. This led to confusion and a deterioration of the service. It proved very unsatisfactory, and something had to be done to restore order on the premises of the new airport.

My officials had always assumed that the department had adequate authority to control activities at airports, but in view of the serious aspects of this situation they sought the advice of the Department of Justice, and as a result new regulations entitled "Government airport concession operations regulations" were drafted and approved by the governor in council and promulgated in the Canada Gazette on January 11, 1961. These regulations prohibit the carrying on of any business, including the provision of services, on government airports without the authority of the minister, and provide penalties for infractions.

These new regulations are now in force and Murray Hill has been authorized, in accordance with their provisions, to operate the porter service in accordance with the original plan and in accordance with their contract with the air lines, and they were authorized to start this new arrangement commencing February 1, 1961. The unauthorized porters have been served with copies of the regulations and notified that they will not be allowed to operate, commencing tomorrow, February 1.

Murray Hill has stated that it will employ both coloured and white porters and will reemploy any previously employed porters whose work had been satisfactory.

Under the new arrangement Murray Hill will provide a complete service designed to meet the requirements of both the general public and the air lines. The porters will be paid the minimum wage, which I understand in this case would amount to about $35 a week, together with 10 cents on every 25 cent baggage ticket issued, in addition to any tips they might receive. A locker room has been provided by Murray Hill for the porters; telephones have been installed at key points to ensure more effective control, and there will be adequate and competent supervision on a 24-hour basis.

The new arrangement has been authorized on a trial basis for a period of six months. At the end of that time a full report of the operation will be reviewed by departmental officials.

Mr. Chevrier: A supplementary question. Is the minister aware of the judgment of the superior court of the province of Quebec authorizing Sky-Caps Incorporated to do this carrying of luggage in competition with any other groups? Has he given any consideration to the fact that the order in council is opposed to the judgment of the superior court of the province?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, these matters have been studied very carefully by the legal officers of my department. Of course we do not want to interfere with the ordinary legal rights of the parties in this dispute. The only thing we are doing at the present time is to give effect to an arrangement which has been made between the air lines, the T.C.A. on their own behalf and on behalf of the other air lines, so that a decent service can be given to the public.

As far as the labour problems between Murray Hill and the former sky-caps are concerned, this is a matter for the two parties to fight out between themselves. As far as the department is concerned we could not allow different people to run their own private porter services nor could we allow any individual to walk on the premises of the department and start carrying baggage without proper liability insurance and without proper protection for the public.

Mr. Chevrier: What happens to the rights of those people which have been guaranteed by the judgment of the superior court, and which are now taken away by order in council.

Some hon. Members: Order. Put it on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I think the questions are now verging on opinions on a legal problem, if the hon. member will permit me to say so, and we have had pretty substantial discussion on the subject. It can be dealt with more effectively on the estimates.

Mr. Chevrier: What about the bill of rights?

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN PREPARATION FOR MEETING OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister now in a position to inform the house whether studies are continuing in his department, preparatory to the reconvening of the fifteenth general assembly of the United Nations, to carry forward the proposals which he made in the No. 1 committee in November and December, calling for a cessation of nuclear tests and no expansion of the nuclear club?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has mixed up two or three issues which we were dealing with at the United Nations. The fact is that preparations are under way now in the department for the resumed sitting of the United Nations.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question. Can the minister advise us whether, in the continuing study, there is to be any change in the policy which he enunciated at the United Nations in November and December?

Mr. Speaker: Order. On a supplementary question the hon. member is asking the minister to declare a change in policy in a rather broad field.

Mr. Winch: In view of the statement of the minister my question was, is there any change in the policy on the cessation of nuclear tests and non-expansion of the nuclear club?

Mr. Green: If there are any changes they will be announced in the house in due course.

Mr. Winch: Have you heard from the Minister of National Defence on these matters?

CONGO—ALLEGED SEEKING OF OUTSIDE MILITARY AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the minister care to comment on the press report that President Kasavubu is seeking military aid outside of the United Nations? Would he comment also on the report that Belgium is organizing a foreign legion to battle the pro-Lumumba forces?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I could not comment on this statement. I did read the press dispatch myself, but I think this was not a statement addressed to the United Nations by Kasavubu. I believe it was reported as a statement he had made to some reporter or some other person in the Congo.

There is no evidence that Belgium is recruiting a foreign legion.

CONGO—REPORTED REQUEST FOR CONTRIBUTIONS OF FOOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): May I ask a supplementary question on the Congo situation. Is the minister able to inform the house whether or not Canada has made a decision on the request for the provision of food to the Congo?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not yet in a position to make a statement on that question.

Mr. Argue: Has a decision been made?

PRIVILEGE

MR. MORRIS—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON JANUARY 30

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, before the house resumes the supply motion debate may I speak to a point of personal privilege. I was required to be absent from the chamber last evening, as I am sure occasionally happens with other hon. members, by the visit of constituents on important business. I could not therefore be present when the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) enlightened us in the debate. On reading Hansard this morning I found that in reference to a fine speech by my colleague the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacLellan)—perhaps I can quote the remarks of the hon member for Gloucester—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member state the matter of privilege before he begins to elaborate? So far there does not appear to be any matter of privilege.

Mr. Morris: The question of privilege arises out of an assertion and asservation made by the hon. member for Gloucester on a matter of which he could have no personal knowledge. He said that I stated publicly before a group of Conservative women right here in Ottawa last Friday—actually it was Wednesday—

That conditions in Nova Scotia are bad.

My question of privilege is that the hon. gentleman, understandably—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: I submit to you with deference, sir, that the procedure which is being followed—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order or speaking to the question of privilege?

Mr. Chevrier: I am rising on a point of order to indicate to you, sir, that this procedure which is being followed by the hon. member is entirely irregular because there are debates which take place from time to time, on the budget, on the speech from the throne, or on a motion to go into supply when statements are made which may be inaccurate. I think there are opportunities when objection can be taken—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure what the hon. member says is so, but when a question of privilege is raised it is the responsibility of the Chair to determine whether or not there is a prima facie matter of privilege. In order to do that I must, of course, hear what the hon. member has to say. In what he had said up to the time I interrupted him he had not got to the point. I am not satisfied that the hon. member for Halifax should be interrupted until it is apparent that he has or has not a matter of personal privilege.

Mr. Morris: Mr. Speaker, if the opposition do not want to hear the facts—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member resumes, may I say that if he has been misreported by any member in the house he may state the facts simply, and that would satisfy the question of privilege.

Mr. Morris: With every respect, that is what I am endeavouring to do, to point out that the hon. gentleman asserts that I said things which he is not capable of asserting. This is a quotation from an erroneous newspaper report. What I said was that conditions in Nova Scotia were bad, and I underline "were" but that matters had improved since June, 1957. I intend to repeat the speech later this week.

Mr. Chevrier: I now rise on a point of order to say to you with deference, sir, that the hon. member has taken this occasion to do something which, in my opinion, he has no right to do under the rules. He could have done it either by taking part in the debate or on some other occasion. As far as I can see there is no privilege involved in the statement made by the hon. member.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Since my name was brought into this question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Halifax, I wish to place on record the reference from which I took the statement I made last night. It was from the Ottawa Citizen of Saturday—

Mr. Morris: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Gloucester knows the rule. When a member states in his place that certain facts pertaining to him are so, his duty as a member of the house is to accept the word of the hon. member and not to seek to controvert it. I suppose there is no reason why the hon. member should not indicate how he came to make the assertion which has been complained of; but when a statement has been made by an hon. member it then is for the house to accept that statement unless there is a procedure taken to deal with the matter.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to you with great respect that your statement of the rule is not perhaps fully in accord with what the rule seeks to do. If an hon. member makes a statement to which another hon. member takes exception and raises a question of privilege, it is the duty of all hon. members to accept the statement of the aggrieved member provided the person who makes the initial statement feels that he is not in a position to controvert the grounds on which the statement of the aggrieved member is made.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member is not accepting the statement made by the hon. member for Halifax, and he is seeking to establish justification for the statement he has made. After that statement has been made by the hon. member I think it would then be open to Your Honour to take the position you have outlined, but surely the hon. member for Gloucester is perfectly justified in saying that he does not accept the statement made by the hon. member and then give his reasons.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member for Essex East perhaps has a point but it might better be expressed in this way: "I accept the statement of the hon. member but there are these circumstances which seem to justify my comment." I do not think any member has to sit down when he feels that there is something to be said, but in the final analysis if a member makes a statement on his honour from his place in the chamber with regard to a matter which is within the knowledge of the member speaking, that statement must be accepted by the house. Unless some hon. member wishes to set the hon. member for Essex East and myself right, I might hear the hon. member for Gloucester.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I was just about to say that I was prepared to accept the statement made by the hon. member for Halifax. However, as he said that I had no personal knowledge of what was said by him at the meeting, I think I have the right to refer to the article.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is going a little far afield. The hon. member for Gloucester has now admitted that he was not present at the meeting and therefore has no personal knowledge of what was said by the hon. member for Halifax. Nevertheless he wishes to read a statement from a newspaper which the hon. member for Halifax has already declared to be erroneous.

Mr. Robichaud: Maybe he is following your example.

Mr. Churchill: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is carrying things too far.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Gloucester has said that he accepts the statement of the hon. member for Halifax with respect to what he said, and has indicated that the reason for his making the remarks he did make was a newspaper report. I follow him that far and up to that point I consider it proper comment and quite in order, but I think he should not read the report.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—STATEMENT ON RELEASE OF CANADIAN CITIZEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he can give the house any information or make a report on the arrest of a Canadian citizen in Poland, Mr. Tadeusz Koyer.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The house will recall from statements made by the Prime Minister on November 28 and December 1 last that Mr. Tadeusz Koyer, a Canadian citizen of Polish birth, was arrested last summer while paying a private visit to his family in Poland. The investigation has been going on since that time. According to a brief telegram received today from our embassy in Poland, Mr. Koyer was released on Saturday and will be returned to Canada this week.

When this matter was raised previously in the house, occasion was taken to note that the Polish authorities had been co-operative in allowing our consul in Warsaw to interview Mr. Koyer. At this time, in addition to expressing my pleasure at the recent news, I should like to note again the correctness of the Polish attitude in the handling of this matter.

COMBINES

BRITISH COLUMBIA SUGAR—INQUIRY AS TO ABANDONMENT OF APPEAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether the government has abandoned the appeal to the court of appeal of Manitoba in the British Columbia Sugar Refining Company case and, if so, why.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Notice of abandonment of the appeal was entered in the court in Winnipeg on Friday of last week, I believe. Briefly stated, the reasons are that the trial judge had made certain findings of fact adverse to the crown's case, and had come to the conclusion that the crown had not satisfied him beyond a reasonable doubt with respect to the effects of the merger upon competition necessary to be established in order for the prosecution to succeed. After discussing with very eminent and learned counsel the advisability of appeal in the light of the above findings, I came to the conclusion that the appeal should not be proceeded with.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. In view of this decision, coupled with the supreme court decision in the other merger case involving breweries, does this not provide justification for amending the merger section of the act in order to make it more effective?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is seeking to present an argument under the guise of asking a supplementary question.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO SPEECH BY MINISTER AT GUELPH, ONT.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. When the minister spoke at Guelph last week to the graduate students of the Ontario Agricultural College did she state the government's present policy on immigration or did she announce new government policy?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Where were you yesterday?

Mr. Grafftey: A Tuesday to Thursday member.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Speaker, if hon. members will let me finish, I have not questioned the minister's denial. I am making no reference to the denial or what was said or was not said. I am merely asking whether she was stating present government policy or was announcing new government policy. Second, in the interests of knowing precisely what did happen, would the minister be good enough to table the text of her address?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that my hon. friend has returned to the house. If he had read my statement of yesterday he would have realized that I offered therein to make the address available, as it is public property. So far as the first part of his question is concerned, I was describing current government policy.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, emanating out of the same subject matter raised by the hon. member for Halifax, I think it is not proper for one member of the house to say to another member that he has been absent from the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Where is your leader?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members cannot settle anything by noise, and I should like to hear what the hon. member for Laurier has to say.

Mr. Chevrier: What I should like to say, if I am going to be allowed to say it, is that no member is more assiduous in being in his place than the hon. member for Cartier.

Mr. Speaker: I question that any matter of privilege arises, and I say that with all due respect to the hon. member for Laurier and hon. members of the house who may consider that it is not appropriate or in good form, shall I say, to draw attention to the fact that a member is absent. It is common practice in the house to refer to the absence of members, particularly from the opposite side, and if this is to be raised as a question of privilege I will have to have some more substantial precedent to follow.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED HARMFUL ALGAE IN KOOTENAY LAKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the less thin-skinned member for Kootenay West wishes to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the minister received a request from Kootenay rod and gun clubs for his co-operation in a study by a liminologist of certain undesirable algae that have appeared in Kootenay lake since 1957 and are causing damage to the world famous Kootenay trout?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it that the hon. member has given notice, but the question in its context discloses no urgency, because I understand that the activities of the algae or whatever they are have probably been going on constantly since the formation of the Kootenay lakes. However, I see that the minister is prepared to reply.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, there is more to this than appears on the surface.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The hon. member was kind enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question. I have no personal knowledge of any such query, and neither have any of the officials of the department.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REPORTED STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion).

Is it true that last Sunday evening the Secretary of State stated over the French television network that the percentage of unemployed was lower in Canada than in the United States?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall making any such statement. I might have said something along that line, but certainly not in those terms.

Mr. Deschatelets: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could he tell us exactly what he did say, over the T.V., about unemployment?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I cannot accept the hon. member's invitation in his supplementary question to ask the minister to repeat a speech made on television. It is true that the minister's administrative acts are open to question on orders of the day, but I doubt that the speech made comes within the category of a question relating to administrative action.

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion: In his own interest, the hon. member should listen to what I say; I think he could only gain by doing so.

THE CENSUS

REFERENCE TO REPORTED STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion)?

Last Sunday, on television, the Secretary of State said that the census questionnaire will correct the 1951 questionnaire, not to mention the correction made in that of 1960.

Could the Secretary of State explain to the house how that questionnaire will correct the 1951 questionnaire and the one drafted in 1960 on instructions given by this government?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what extent I can take it upon myself to answer this question, since the matter comes directly under the Department of Trade and Commerce. Last Sunday, I did refer to the matter on television, but I think this is a problem which comes under the Department of Trade and Commerce. I would not want to assume powers which are not rightly mine but, with that reservation, I am prepared to answer the hon. member's question.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Would the Secretary of State explain to the house—

Mr. Dorion: I think it rests with Mr. Speaker to rule whether it comes within my province to answer that question.

Mr. Denis: I do not think Mr. Speaker needs any advice from the Secretary of State to decide what he has to do; he is quite familiar with his duties.

As a supplementary question further to the reply of the Secretary of State, and if in his opinion this matter now comes under another department, may I ask him why he talked about it when he appeared on television last Sunday?

Some hon. Members: Order. Order.

Mr. Dorion: If one had to speak only of matters coming under one's responsibility, I think the hon. member—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me we are engaged in a futile series of questions which do not relate to the responsibilities of the particular minister involved.

SECRETARY OF STATE

REPORTED SENDING OUT OF ELECTION MATERIAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion) in order to ascertain whether he is aware that, according to a press release originating in Hamilton, the returning officer for the riding of Hamilton South is reported as saying that he has received tons of electoral literature from Ottawa, and that he was wondering what this might mean. Here are the questions I have to ask of the Secretary of State: Has he read this press release, and what does he make of all this activity which smacks of pre-electoral conditions. How is it that tons of electoral matter—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it that the hon. member is not rising to verify the press statement. He is, therefore, asking a question relating to the delivery of the literature. I do not ask him to take the responsibility for the truth of the facts on which he bases his question, but it is normally desirable that a member asking a question should accept the facts on which he bases his question.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I am asking the minister, first of all, whether it is true that a tremendous volume of electoral literature has left the offices of the chief electoral officer for the various ridings and, second, what is the meaning of this action? I would ask him to explain to the house the meaning of all this.

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Speaker, in the first place, let me say that I have not read the report referred to by the hon. member. In the second place, if anything like this has been done, it has been so under the authority of the person solely responsible for it, the chief electoral officer.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, January 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Cardin.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS—TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment of the house at ten o'clock last night I had stressed the need for additional revenues for our municipalities, and I insisted that our municipalities must be provided with adequate sources of revenue. I would be prepared to go even beyond the tax-sharing agreements and the additional payments which are being provided under the principle of equalization. Instead of a complacent attitude and a cold indifference in meeting the problems facing this country at the present time, this government should come out with a bold determination to meet those problems and rectify the present state of affairs which is not worthy of a growing nation with unlimited resources.

According to the letter which was made public yesterday and which has been sent by the Prime Minister to the provincial premiers, we now know that there will be another federal-provincial conference within the next few months. At that conference I feel that the Prime Minister should take advantage of the opportunity to offer to the provinces not only the continuation of the tax-sharing agreements, and not only the continuation of the equalization principle, but should go further and offer a means of relief to the municipalities.

The offer which was made to the provinces at the July conference and which, notwithstanding the statements made yesterday by the Minister of Finance, was contradicted by the Prime Minister at the October conference and which was renewed in the letter sent to the provincial premiers by the Prime Minister yesterday, will not meet the demands of the provincial and the municipal governments.

What I would suggest—and this I do keeping in mind the principle involved in the amendment now under discussion, namely the principle of equalization—is that much more could be done to relieve the provinces, and particularly the municipalities, which have reached and even surpassed the limit of their taxing facilities. Keeping in mind the principle of equalization, and keeping in mind the needs and the increasing demands of certain areas where the economic growth has been retarded and is lagging behind that of more fortunate sections of the country, I feel that the government should also consider the possibility and advisability of providing the municipalities with financial facilities for the undertaking of certain capital projects. In other words, financial facilities should be made available to municipalities for a number of approved projects which should be undertaken, according to the present terms of our constitution, by our municipal governments.

Such a scheme would not mean a direct outlay of money by the federal treasury. It could consist of guarantees to our municipalities, extended through our provincial governments and subject in all respects to provincial jurisdiction. It should consist of money made available to the municipalities at a low rate of interest not exceeding 4½ per cent to 4¾ per cent, and it could be used for a variety of approved capital projects such as streets, sewers, public buildings and even schools and hospitals. Under existing conditions our municipalities are curtailed by the excessive cost of borrowing, and the high cost of financing means an additional burden to the individual taxpayer.

I see at this moment the Minister of Forestry in his seat listening to my remarks. I would remind him of the statement he made at the 1955 conference and again at the 1957 conference, when he pleaded with the federal government to come to the assistance of the municipalities. At that time he had particularly in mind the municipalities of his province of New Brunswick. Now that he is sitting only three seats away from the Minister of Finance I hope he will speak up. I hope it will not be only a matter of words. I hope he will insist on action in this field of assistance to our municipalities which so badly need it in the province of New Brunswick.

If funds were made available to municipalities under a four-year program or a five-year program, a series of capital projects could be undertaken as a result of which direct employment would be provided to hundreds of thousands of unemployed and thousands of new jobs would be opened in supplying the material required for such projects. After all, when billions of dollars were needed in war years in order to safeguard our rights and our liberties, Canada was able to find ways and means to meet its obligations. When hundreds of millions of dollars are needed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in order to provide new homes for Canadians, the necessary funds are made available to individuals and groups alike. Today the welfare of the nation is at stake, and such ad hoc measures as those which have been introduced so far by the government will not be sufficient to solve the problems.

In the course of his lengthy remarks yesterday the Minister of Finance insisted that the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres was "completely misdirected and had no basis whatsoever". Notwithstanding the long arguments put forward by the Minister of Finance, with the approval of hon. members on the government side, I hope we have been able to convince the house that the reason for our amendment was the contradictory statement with respect to the proposal which was made by the Prime Minister at the October 26 conference. The words of the Prime Minister have been quoted. They have not been denied. They have been quoted from a statement which was given to the press following the statement made by the Prime Minister at that conference. I therefore insist, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment of the opposition was well founded and well warranted.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I think I should express my appreciation for the warmth of the welcome which has attended my first contribution in any formal debate in this chamber. I appreciate the warmth of the feeling expressed by all my hon. friends from every quarter.

In rising to make some observations in connection with this amendment at present before the house I am very confident that most hon. members who listened to the able review of the Minister of Finance yesterday, when he dealt with the matter in general terms and also in specific terms to some degree, are thoroughly satisfied in their minds that this amendment is ill-conceived and ill-intentioned. It is a flagrant attempt to becloud the whole question of dominion-provincial relations in this country and to convey an erroneous impression to the Canadian people.

I do not claim familiarity in detail with all questions which come before this house. I would not be presumptuous enough to make that claim in the limited time I have been here. I am familiar, however, with amendments of a like nature to the one before us, since it has to do with dominion-provincial relations with which I have had indirect and direct connections for something like 16 years.

It has also, in my opinion, another element with which I am familiar. That element, in my view, Mr. Speaker, is that this amendment constitutes a political manoeuvre. It is designed with a political end in view. I do not for a moment believe that it will have the desired effect, but I do want to quote the amendment. It is as follows:

That all the words after the word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

In view of the fact that the federal government at the October conference (1960) with the provinces proposed fixed subsidies in place of the equalization payments provided under the present tax sharing arrangements, and that this October proposal is a repudiation of the principle of equalization;

Therefore be it resolved that this house strongly favours the continued application of the principle of equalization of direct tax revenues pledged to the provinces by the Prime Minister at the federal-provincial conference in July, 1960, and defined at the time by the Prime Minister as a payment by Canada to the provinces to bring the per capita return from the three taxes at standard rates up to the average per capita yield in the two provinces in which per capita yield is highest.

The amendment, of course, is a motion of non-confidence in the government. It suggests that by virtue of its attitude toward and its leadership in the field of dominion-provincial relations, this government no longer retains the support of this parliament. I have listened with great interest to the debate on this amendment up to now. The arguments advanced by various speakers have been of interest. I wish now to give to the house a review of my experience in dealing with the previous government in dominion-provincial relations as a representative of a province, and then dealing with their successors in office. I wish to apply the test of comparison to this government with the previous Liberal administration and then compare the results. That, to my mind, is the acid test.

My indirect experience with federal-provincial relations came as an opposition member in the New Brunswick legislature for a period of something like eight years. Time after time the Liberal premier of that day reported to the New Brunswick legislature concerning various dominion-provincial conferences. He would report in general terms, and would state that the arrangement concluded with the federal authorities was the best that could be secured in view of conditions prevailing. It seemed difficult to secure information in detail in those days. Suffice to say that the principle of special consideration for the province of New Brunswick did not seem to be seriously considered at that time.

I wish now to skip over a few years and to give the house some information concerning the 1955 dominion-provincial conference, at which I was honoured by making the presentation for the province of New Brunswick. I wish to deal with the representations made, the consideration given, and the results achieved.

I have in my hand the official report of that conference. I consider some of the submissions made of sufficient importance to read here and now. This is the first proposal that was made, and it is found in the official report of the conference at pages 29 and 30. After I had mentioned the difficulties which smaller and less wealthy provinces were having, I had this to say to the conference at that time:

> Yet, Mr. Chairman, most of us will admit that certain deficiencies and weaknesses in this course of national development have become very evident. It is true that Canada as a whole gained in prosperity and social security and all provinces have made considerable progress since 1945; yet, at the same time, the discriminatory features of our federal system have not been overcome and, in some respects, have tended to grow greater over the years.
> New Brunswick has derived considerable benefits from federal social security provisions and no doubt this is true in any province where the low income groups are relatively great in number and the per capita income tends to be low. Yet, although supplementary family income from social welfare sources is welcome and useful in raising regional standards of living, the fact remains that such matters still depend and must always depend upon the regional economy in the final analysis. It will be the submission on behalf of our province that this matter can only be dealt with by a national policy specifically designed to improve regional income through helping to increase the productive capacity of areas which fall below certain indices to be determined.
> At this point, I would exchange principle for concrete example by mentioning the great problem which confronts the government and people of New Brunswick at the present time. I refer to our vital need for relatively cheap power. This question has none of the academic qualities and values of constitutional and ethical discussions. It is a matter of economic life or death and any representative of the province would be derelict in his duty if he failed to call the matter to the attention of this gathering at the earliest possible opportunity.
> As many present have reasons to know, our province has made great efforts over the past few years to secure federal assistance in meeting the demand for more electric energy at lower cost and we have been told that compliance with our request would contravene national policy and that there is no provision for it in the articles and conventions which bind the nation and its component provinces together.
> I do not propose to argue the questions of whether these decisions have been right or wrong, just or unjust, expedient or inexpedient. Our proposal at this time is for the purpose of giving the matter of federal assistance to the provinces for resource development the place and importance which it undoubtedly deserves so far as New Brunswick is concerned.

That is the first quotation. I therefore suggested that the first item on the agenda—and I would like this house to keep in mind that this is the year 1955 about which I am speaking—should be "Discussion of national policy of assistance to the provinces for resource development."

The second item which I requested should be placed on the agenda for discussion was "Future tax rental agreements should include a factor which would take into consideration the difference in taxable capacity among the various provinces." My pertinent comments in connection with taxing capacity read as follows in one paragraph to be found on page 32 of the report. I might call the attention of the hon. member for Gloucester to this point. He called my attention to it and I refer him to it also, because this is what I submitted to the government which he supported and which I presume he still supports—that is, their successors—without any results.

> What I have said about the lack of taxable capacity for our province also applies in the case of New Brunswick municipalities. The trend in municipal finances indicates that local authorities are becoming increasingly dependent upon grants and subsidies from other levels of government in order to meet their traditional responsibilities as well as the new demands upon them. Inadequate transfers of income from the federal authority in turn prevent the province from making transfers to the municipalities, upon a scale adequate to their needs. Furthermore, in the event of business recession the demands upon municipalities would greatly increase. The problems of municipalities is another reason for considering the principle of taxable capacity. I submit, therefore, agenda item as follows:

That taxable capacity of the provinces be a consideration in determining annual grants.

No. 3, Mr. Speaker, had to do with the Duncan and White awards, and I will not go into the detail of it at the moment. No. 4 was a recommendation for the agenda. It had to do with the trans-Canada highway and its extension and revision. I feel quite certain that all hon. members will be fully sympathetic with the aims and objects of this particular submission.

I have gone into some detail concerning this preliminary conference with this end in view; that members of this house might be aware of the problem existing at that time, in 1955, and of the representations which were made to the federal government in that year. I should like to draw the attention of hon. members once again to the conference itself, which took place on October 3, 1955. For the information of the house I might mention that a preparatory committee had been working subsequent to the preliminary meeting.

So far as New Brunswick was concerned, our formal submission might be summarized as follows. We requested that tax rental agreements be renewed and that a definite renewal clause be inserted to that effect. We submitted also that low income provinces should receive a national adjustment grant. The submission in this connection was as follows, and I quote again from my remarks at the conference itself:

Experience, however, has indicated that the tax rental agreements do not go far enough to meet the needs of low income provinces in that they are largely based upon a per capita plan of compensation. We are firmly convinced that these provinces should receive a national adjustment grant to compensate them for their lack of taxable capacity in respect of those sources of revenue remaining to them.

It has seemed to us that the conditions which favour this conference permit a reconsideration of one of the major recommendations of the Rowell-Sirois commission designed to correct regional maladjustments. In this connection, the language of the Rowell-Sirois report is still eloquently persuasive in regard to the principle of adjustment grants. The following quotation is taken from chapter V, book II of that report:

"They (the grants) are designed to make it possible for every province to provide for its people services of average Canadian standards and they will thus alleviate distress and shameful conditions which now weaken national unity and handicap many Canadians. They are the concrete expression of the commission's conception of a federal system which will both preserve a healthy local autonomy and build a stronger and more united nation."

The government of New Brunswick urges with all the force at its command that, in addition to the tax rental agreements, there should be adjustment grants to the low income provinces, and we submit herewith a formula based on relative per capita personal income which would, we consider, accomplish this purpose in a simple and equitable manner.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that I submitted a formula which will be found on pages 50 and 51 of the report. I repeated my request for reconsideration of the Duncan-White commission awards, and I outlined the need for federal financial assistance for projects. To be specific, I now quote exactly what was said in that connection as reported on page 53:

The government of New Brunswick proposes that the federal government should extend financial assistance to the provinces for approved natural resource development projects which are in the national interest. The assistance should take the form of loans to the provinces at low rates of interest. To limit the commitment of the federal government, the maximum loan which would be extended to any provinces at any one time could be restricted to two hundred dollars per capita. Such a program would bring great benefits to the federal government in the form of increased revenues from personal and corporate income taxes.

The question of sewage disposal units was discussed, and this seems significant in view of the legislation which has been passed by the house during the present session. Misgivings were expressed in connection with the pollution of our provincial rivers and streams; the serious effect of this pollution on the fishing industry and on tourist traffic was mentioned. We also suggested a continuation of farm credit policy and a more aggressive performance of all its functions. We expressed our approval of the health program, and may I say at this point that the former minister of health was always co-operative with the province of New Brunswick; I should like to pay him that tribute here and now. We requested assistance for electric power development, and I should like to quote again from page 56 of the report. This is somewhat lengthy, but it does sum up the submissions made to a federal-provincial conference and, after all, we are talking about federal-provincial conferences at the present time:

The government of New Brunswick comes to this conference table representing a province united in its determination to accept no substitute nor make shifts for the rights of full citizenship in this great and growing nation. Today, in our province, you will find a new spirit of enterprise new capacities—a new determination to take our place beside our fellow Canadians on terms of full economic equality. Such ambitions and endeavours have not always been practical for us—but they are practical now. We know that we have resources which, properly developed, can furnish our people with the means to greatly improve our public services and our provincial standard of living as per capita income rises. Through the efforts of the provincial government, and by the enterprise of our people, we have already made important advances in the improvement of our economy. We are co-operating with private capital and doing everything possible to create the favourable economic situation which can encourage the fuller use of our resources. In fact, everything that government and people can do is being done and will continue to be done; yet our progress will be slow without assistance—our full development can only come about with financial help from an interested outside source. The interested source should be the federal government.

We have applied to the central authorities for assistance in electric power development, which is the key to our provincial future; so far without result. We have been led to believe that federal assistance in this respect is contrary to national policy. But we now find that this is not the case. Those listening to the C.B.C. national news bulletin at 11 p.m. on September 13, 1955 heard the announcement that Canada and the province of Ontario had agreed in principle to jointly finance a portion of the Alberta natural gas pipe line. In order that there shall be no possible chance of misunderstanding, I propose to quote the applicable portion of the newscast.

"Agreement in principle has been reached on a plan to have the federal and Ontario governments jointly finance a major section of the proposed Alberta natural gas pipe line."

We are pleased to note that the federal government is adopting a new policy of assisting provinces to obtain additional sources of energy for industrial development.

New Brunswick expects the principle of joint financing to apply to us. Certainly we need it. Surely, you cannot and will not deny it to us.

The details of the arrangement can easily be worked out between your capable officials and ours who are equally efficient, faithful and interested.

We in New Brunswick have no quarrel with other provinces—no quarrel with the federal authority. We are not coming hat in hand to this or any other conference table. Yet we know that we represent an important principle, far beyond considerations of area, population and voting strength in its importance. It is the principle of justice and equity, and no federation of any kind can survive without it.

That conference met again early in 1956 and finalized the five-year agreement for 1957-62. The point I wish to make here and now is this. No action was taken in connection with the special situation existing in the low income brackets which particularly affects the Atlantic provinces. We were led to believe that this could not be undertaken that all the provinces comprising the nation should be prepared to accept the principle that a formula of general application must be applied and should be accepted. We were obliged to accept the conclusion that this was the policy of the government of the day, and that from then on we could expect no recognition by way of special adjustment grants for the Atlantic provinces.

I proceed now with the history of those years. April 1, 1957 ushered in a new fiscal policy. A federal election was called in June, and I took some part in that election. I was delighted when the new government came into office and was sworn in on June 21. The reason I was delighted was that—well, of course, it was my party; but there was another reason, and a good reason. We had received no action from the Liberal party on repeated requests for recognition of the special situation with respect to the fiscal need, no action regarding special situations with respect to development, no action regarding special situations with respect to the lack of reasonably priced electric energy. And so our only hope, Mr. Speaker, lay with the new administration. What were we going to get from them? That was the question with which we were faced.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the minister will permit a question?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the minister can decide. My question is, does the minister not recall an offer made in Mr. Harris' budget of 1957, which he as premier of the province accepted in principle, for aid in developing low cost electricity in New Brunswick?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): We are getting into low cost electricity. That was a different proposition. It came from the minister of northern affairs and national resources, if I remember rightly, and was not acceptable because—

Mr. Pickersgill: I have the minister's acceptance in principle.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): We will leave that with you, but it was not entirely acceptable. We may have accepted it in principle, but there certainly were still some details with respect to which it was not acceptable, as I remember it.

Mr. Robichaud: It would have helped the coal mines.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): They were going to develop the power; they were going to move in and take control of New Brunswick. The hon. member recalls it as well as I do. Certainly we did not shut the door in their faces, Mr. Speaker. We could not afford to shut the door in their faces; but as far as that was concerned, there soon was a change after June 10, 1957, because what we expected and what we received from the new administration is now a matter of history. On November 25 and 26 a provincial conference was called by the new administration here in Ottawa. We were welcomed by the Prime Minister, who made a speech at the opening of the conference. I now wish to quote his words to that conference.

They are found in the dominion-provincial conference report of the year 1957, at page 9, and read as follows:

> The purpose of each of us here today, as Premier Smallwood said in effect, is to come together in a spirit of amity, to endeavour while maintaining the spirit and intent of the British North America Act to assure the ability and capacity of the federal and provincial governments to discharge their respective constitutional functions. The spirit of confederation requires that provincial governments by their demands upon the federal treasury shall not undermine the strength it requires to sustain its own proper burdens, and that the dominion government shall not take advantage of the legitimate needs of the provinces to undermine the essentially federal nature of our constitution: We are here at this time primarily to listen and to learn. We want to learn about your problems, those problems that bear upon ours. We want to hear your suggestions. We, of course, know something from the public record of the past. We wish to hear directly from you of things as they now are and as you see them.
> We believe that this federation cannot thrive in a climate of glaring disparities in levels and standards of service and development as between the several provinces from Newfoundland to British Columbia. Believing in a positive policy, this government intends in co-operation with the provinces to co-operate actively in promoting the development of Canada and all its regions. It is our opinion that positive government is necessary both at the dominion and provincial levels in assuring national development and we are prepared to assist provinces in carrying out their functions where we agree that is necessary and when parliament approves. We are prepared to consider on their merits major projects which will contribute to national development and which are beyond the capacities of any of the provinces.
> In that connection I might refer to three examples. In pursuance of that general plan we have announced a program in respect of power in the maritime provinces. In the speech from the throne reference was made to this government's willingness to recommend to parliament participation with the government of British Columbia in a joint program for the development of the immense potential of the Columbia river.
> Premier Douglas and members of his government will meet with members of the federal government shortly to consider the making of plans regarding the South Saskatchewan river dam and irrigation projects.

These were the words of the Prime Minister of Canada in addressing the conference called almost as soon as the government could get around to doing it. These three projects that the Prime Minister mentioned were projects which seemed to be incapable of development under the previous administration. They could not do it. Under the new government they were not impossible, not by any means. Two of them have already been provided for and the third is well under way, as all hon. members are aware, since the signing of the treaty in Washington a few days ago.

I wish to say something in a somewhat personal way, but still with tremendous reference to the general subject of federal-provincial relations. I refer here to the speech from the throne on October 14, 1957, and I quote from that speech from the throne as follows:

> As an immediate start upon a program of more extensive development in the Atlantic provinces, you will be asked to authorize, in joint action with the provincial governments, the creation of facilities for the production and transmission of cheaper electric power in those provinces. You will also be asked to provide assistance in financing the Beechwood project which has been under construction in New Brunswick.
> My ministers will advance this national development policy further by initiating new discussions with the government of Saskatchewan in order to make possible the early commencement of construction of the dam on the South Saskatchewan river.
> My ministers are pressing for a favourable settlement of international problems in connection with the Columbia river to clear the way for a joint program with the province of British Columbia to develop the immense power in the waters of this river.

I was impressed, thrilled and thankful to hear this reference to the financing of the Beechwood project and the relief it would afford to all my fellow citizens of the province of New Brunswick. And if there should come a time when there is a proper matter before this house I would be glad to give a resume of my expenrience in connection with Beechwood and the previous administration.

I have no doubt members from Saskatchewan were equally pleased. I have no doubt that members from British Columbia were likewise especially delighted at the mention of the Columbia river. These words would have been a thrill coming from any minister of the crown; they would have been a great thrill coming from the lips of the Prime Minister of Canada, but when they were uttered by Her Majesty the Queen, opening the first session of the twenty third parliament of Canada, it seems to me that was an occasion when we should all acknowledge and properly be grateful for an outstanding moment in all our lives.

Yesterday in this house the Minister of Finance, in an eloquent speech, made a comparison between the policy of this government toward the Atlantic provinces and the policy of the Liberal party. I have said on many occasions, and I repeat here and now, that there is a definite, clear-cut distinction between the policies of the two parties with respect to the Atlantic provinces. It is simply this, that this government has recognized the special situation existing in the Atlantic community. The Liberal government would not recognize that special situation. They never recognized it. This government has taken steps to deal with it. This government has made possible a combined electric grid system for New Brunswick and Nova Scotia by which stand-by power plants in each province are made available to the other. This grid system will also be available when wanted for Prince Edward Island, and for Newfoundland when required. It may properly be considered to be on the way.

Coal subventions more generous than ever before have been applied to the Atlantic region. Financial aid has been extended by way of loans to pay for the Beechwood project. All we ever asked for was a loan, not a hand-out; just a loan for Beechwood. The transportation difficulties of the Atlantic provinces are receiving consideration by the transportation commission at this very moment. The present dominion-provincial conference is still in progress and is to be reconvened on a later date, either in February or March.

Relations between the provinces and this government are excellent, and I subscribe completely and enthusiastically to the words of the Minister of Finance yesterday when he stated that there never would have been any Atlantic provinces adjustment grants under the previous administration. He also said that the government was firmly behind the principles of equalization and stabilization and, as I said before, they have demonstrated that they are behind the general principle of the recognition of special situations, and that special adjustment grants will be permanent as far as this government is concerned.

He mentioned the fact that there was an improvement in spirit. I can vouch for that as a completely accurate statement. There is a new optimism generally prevalent in our region, and it is due in no small measure to the sympathetic attitude of the Prime Minister and his government. I have said and I repeat here that in my opinion the Atlantic provinces might very well consider that June 10, 1957, was more important to them than July 1, 1867.

When one considers the percentage position of federal contributions in relation to total revenues of all the provinces and compares this with the position that existed previous to the advent to power of this administration, to be asked to join in a motion of non-confidence against such a government, Mr. Speaker, was referred to yesterday by the Minister of Finance as temerity but I submit that it is unmitigated gall. That is what it is. In my opinion any members of the house, particularly those representing the Atlantic provinces, who would join in a motion of non-confidence against the government on the basis of federal-provincial relations would be casting an entirely partisan vote not in the best interests of his constituents, not in the best interests of Canada and especially not in the best interests of the Atlantic community which forms a part, and an increasingly important part, of this great nation.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my first words are to congratulate the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming) on his maiden speech in the house. I think all members can agree that he has given an excellent account of himself and has made a speech in the grand style of a political campaigner. In my view a speech of that kind is always welcome in the house.

Mr. Robichaud: He should have made it last June.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, we are discussing today a very serious reversal of policy by the government whereby it proposes to abandon the tax rental agreements and turn back to the provinces the right to levy corporation and income taxes and succession duties in a field also occupied by the federal government. In our opinion, Mr. Speaker, this is a return to the antiquated past. If the government persists in following this policy it will mean we will go back to a sorry state where, instead of having a uniform or nearly uniform level of corporation and income taxes and succession duties across the nation, we will have differing rates in each of the ten provinces of this country.

This means, of course, that differing revenues will be coming into the provincial treasuries. Even though the government may continue to follow a so-called principle of equalization with a different definition it will mean a very great variation in provincial revenues and therefore in provincial services. In the main fields of provincial services it will mean that Canadian citizens will receive widely varying standards of services in the different provinces.

We believe that this retreat to the past will make it more difficult for the federal government to embark on those policies that are necessary to provide the kind of climate in which we can have full production and full employment. We feel that this return to the past will mean further encouragement and additional impetus to the concentration of industry in certain areas. If the Prime Minister persists in following this policy it will mean almost inevitably that the less well to do provinces will of necessity be forced to impose higher corporation and income taxes. These higher taxes will not encourage the establishment of industries in the less favoured provinces but rather will result in a further impetus to the concentration of industries in the central provinces and in the present main industrial areas of the country.

A great forward advance was made after the war when the government of the day in its green book proposals proposed to the provinces that during peacetime they should rent their right to occupy these three main fields of taxation, and that in return they should receive certain grants, certain income from the federal government. In our opinion this has had many great advantages. It meant that these taxes would certainly be equal if all of the provinces rented their right to occupy these fields and the federal government from the revenues obtained would be in a position to make grants on the basis of a specific formula which would enable the provinces to provide a minimum standard of provincial services for their citizens.

Now, we feel these taxation agreements have worked reasonably well. We feel that they have worked in the interests of Canada and that they should be continued. When the conference was held on October 27 last year the Prime Minister made these proposals in his statement:

> I wish now to place certain suggestions before you:
> First, the federal government is prepared to recommend to parliament that federal tax rates in the three shared tax fields be reduced at the time of the termination of the present tax rental agreements, March 31, 1962, by the amount of the present standard rates, that is, by 14-9-50 in terms of current tax rates. This will permit the provinces to re-enter these tax fields and to cultivate them in the way they find necessary to meet their respective revenue requirements.
> Second, it is realized, of course, that handing these rental tax fields back to the provinces will not solve the whole problem of provincial finance. There are many provinces where the revenue yields from these taxes will not be large enough to meet the needs of provincial finance. The problems of such provinces must be recognized, and indeed we have recognized them and continue to recognize them.
> To meet the needs of the provinces with lower tax potential we would therefore ask parliament to provide equalization payments or their equivalent in a total amount of $220 million a year, which is approximately the scale of the payments this year.

This meant, Mr. Speaker, that the provinces would be forced back into those three main taxation fields; that for the provinces that had rental agreements and were receiving equalization payments there would be a fixed payment of $220 million per year; that no matter how the country prospered, no matter what the growth in production, no matter what the increased wealth in our nation, the people living within those provinces would not have the right to share in that increased production and increased wealth.

When these proposals were made to the conference every province, I think without exception, expressed keen disapproval and keen disappointment, perhaps with the exception of Ontario. The provinces knew that this was turning back the clock. They knew that this would place them in the position of being part of a tax jungle which would stretch across this nation, in which taxes would vary from province to province. The provinces knew that this proposal concerning equalization grants would mean that the citizens of the less wealthy provinces would have a fixed standard of services above which, during this period of time, they could not hope to go. Such a howl went up across this country, Mr. Speaker, that the government had to make some amendments to the proposal put before the conference at that time.

Sometimes it is said that parliament is not very effective, and that the opposition may not be able to make the government act. However, it was very interesting yesterday, when we all knew a supply motion was about to be moved in this house, to find the Prime Minister announcing the convening of a federal-provincial conference. By doing so, of course, he would take away some of the impetus of the opposition in moving this want of confidence motion. In order to show that the government considers this a very important question, to show that the government is sensitive in this field, the Minister of Finance read a letter that had been sent by the Prime Minister to the provincial premiers saying that the Prime Minister was prepared to have the federal-provincial conference reconvened on Thursday, February 23, or alternatively on March 25.

It was interesting to me to note in listening to the Minister of Finance that this letter was not dated. I have in my hand the Toronto Star for this afternoon, which indicates that Premier Frost, late yesterday afternoon, had not received the letter that had been read in this house; that is the one the Prime Minister sent to the provinces. As an indication that the government is very sensitive on this question, and that the government knew something had to be done in answer to the debate that might take place, we have this letter which was written. I think it also shows a great discourtesy to the premiers of the provinces of this country when the Minister of Finance refers to a letter and reads it into the record as part of the proceedings of a debate, at a time when the provincial premiers had not had a chance of receiving this letter.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What would the hon. gentleman have said if the Minister of Finance had spoken and not disclosed the existence of a letter which was in the mail?

Mr. Argue: I think the Prime Minister should have written this letter before the debate; that is what I am saying.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): He did.

Mr. Argue: Oh, yes, a few minutes or a few hours before; but even with the fast air mail between Ottawa and the city of Toronto the premier of Ontario had not received this letter at the time the Minister of Finance was disclosing it in the House of Commons. This undated letter—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What does the hon. gentleman mean "undated letter"?

Mr. Argue: The minister did not refer to the date. I am sure the letter has a date.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Of course it had a date on it.

Mr. Argue: I imagine the premiers of the provinces will show greater courtesy after they received this letter than the Prime Minister showed after receiving certain letters from the provincial premiers on former occasions. He did not even have the courtesy to reply to some of those letters.

A federal-provincial conference is necessary. The government's proposals have been held up before the conference, but I suggest that even with the additional propositions contained in this letter these proposals are inadequate. They are shortsighted, and they will not assist in dealing with the great unemployment problem or the great economic crisis that faces the Canadian nation. What these proposals, in toto, say is this: Go back to the tax jungle, go back to varying rates of corporation taxes in this country. This proposal would give the provinces that have the largest amount of revenue an opportunity to levy a lower corporation tax, and would provide a still greater incentive for the concentration of industry in this country.

Then the federal government are saying, "We will pay a lump sum to the provinces by way of the so-called equalization grants. We will put in that grant a factor for growth, but an undisclosed factor". We are not told what the factor will be. The provinces will have no idea of this factor until the conference is held. However, Mr. Speaker, putting the very best interpretation one can upon these proposals, I suggest that the government's policy is archaic and will not in any way meet modern conditions.

As an alternative to the government's policy I would suggest that there should be maintained a policy of offering to the provinces a continuation of the tax rental agreements. I suggest that the federal government should give leadership in encouraging the provinces to sign such agreements so that we may maintain standard corporation, income and succession duty rates across this country. We also suggest that in any such proposals there should be provision for an equalization payment. By that I do not mean an equalization payment that gives to each province a guarantee of having an income equal to the per capital yield of the three taxes at standard rates in the two provinces in which the per capita yield is highest but rather an equalization payment related to the average per capital yield from these three taxes at standard rates in the province with the highest per capita yield. This provision would then bring all the provinces on a minimum standard basis up to the level with the province with the highest yield and not up to the level—which of course is a somewhat lower level—of the average of the two provinces with the highest yields.

In addition to that, we suggest that there should be other proposals or other provisions such as provision for additional grants from the federal government to the provinces. We suggest that grants should be provided by the federal government to provinces that undertake a program of health insurance. Grants of this kind are what the government should be providing to provincial governments in addition to the equalization payments. We suggest that the government should bring into effect once again the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act under which municipal governments could obtain money for capital needs at a low rate of interest.

Proposals of this kind, Mr. Speaker, are necessary to deal with the present recession, to give Canadians in every province a basic minimum standard of social services and to provide for the citizens of each province a reasonable hope of having industries within their province. With the new proposals contained in the letter sent out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and with the additional moneys that may come as a result of those proposals, we suggest that the government is in error in scrapping the tax rental agreements which have served the Canadian nation so well for so long.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my first words will be to commend the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming) who has just made in this house, a speech which certainly will count among the most notable which have been heard here in a very long time. He spoke as the true leader of the Atlantic provinces. Let us bear in mind his concluding remarks to the effect that the official opposition showed incredible cheek in submitting a motion of nonconfidence in this government in the field of federal-provincial relations, and more particularly trying to justify it by the treatment meted out to the Atlantic provinces in fiscal matters by this government.

Mr. Deschatelets: You were not singing that tune in the days of Mr. Duplessis.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, there is no ground on which the Liberal opposition is more vulnerable, no ground where it runs a better chance to stumble—

Mr. Michaud: Who stumbled on June 27 last, in New Brunswick?

Mr. Martineau: —and to slip, than the one mentioned by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin) when he introduced his amendment yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said that when this administration came into power in 1957, it had to face an unprecedented fiscal jungle, and, at this point, I would like to quote some words which give about the best description of the Liberal party's attitude throughout the years, in the field of federal-provincial relations. As a matter of fact, these adjectives are an excellent illustration of the conditions inherited by this government.

It has been said that the attitude of the Mackenzie King and St. Laurent governments had been unpardonably arbitrary. It has been referred to as medieval and feudal. It was stated that the terms offered were hard, complex and anticonstitutional. It has also been said that the ministers of the crown, at that time—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Who has been saying this?

Mr. Martineau: —acted with incredible arrogance.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Who said that?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I was anticipating that question. Right at the beginning of my remarks, I said that I was giving a concise summary of remarks heard in connection with the proposals of the federal government during the 1945-57 period. The descriptive words are my own, but they reflect—

An hon. Member: The Union Nationale.

Mr. Martineau: —precisely the feeling which prevails throughout this country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Inside the Conservative party.

Mr. Deschatelets: Your own former chief, Mr. Duplessis, said so.

Mr. Martineau: But, allow me to continue. I could describe the situation as an awful mess, an unaccountable jungle, a medieval labyrinth, utter confusion, an anticonstitutional attitude, an imbroglio. Such were the epithets used by observers of the parliamentary scene at the time. Today I fully endorse those epithets, believing as I do that they reflect the extreme scorn and arrogance shown by the then central government toward our confederative pact, provincial autonomy and, in fact, the whole constitutional history of this country.

Mr. Cardin: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will only be patient, and if I have some time left at the end of my speech, I shall be pleased to grant his request.

Perhaps the hon. members opposite will say that my words do not accurately describe their attitude, and they may perhaps try to say that, as far as they were concerned, they were above reproach. So I shall refer to another authority, one that hon. members opposite indeed will not be able to disavow, since it is none other than the ineffable member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), an increasingly important authority on constitutional matters.

Here is what the hon. member said as recorded in Hansard for July 24, 1956, page 6373:

Nothing—

Referring to the proposals then put forward by the federal government, he said:

Nothing would have been simpler then for the government to recommend ... some slight change in the formula—

That is to say the formula then in force in connection with federal-provincial agreements; but here is what he added:

—and continue the situation which had persisted since 1945. A situation which, I submit—

And I quote textually:

A situation which I submit, was not good for this country and which could not much longer continue—

Therefore, according to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, from 1945 to 1956, his government tolerated, with regard to this matter, a situation clearly detrimental to the best interests of the country. He went on to say:

Whereby the benefits—

And I still quote:

—of this legislation were going to two thirds of the country and not to the other third.

Those were the words of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate: they are a very clear indictment of his government's attitude during those years.

But, it might perhaps be said that in the meantime, hon. members opposite have changed their minds, have realized they were on the wrong track and have now adopted a new approach which, this time, will be more in keeping with the Canadian spirit, and when I say Canadian spirit, I mean the spirit of the federalist system now prevailing in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, when hon. members of the opposition introduce a motion of non-confidence in the government, they somewhat remind me of expert witnesses who are sometimes heard in court. You know, when those witnesses are heard, it is the practice—and a good one at that—to ask them about their qualifications as arbiters or as experts called upon to decide the pros and cons of a controversial matter.

Well, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of the words I have just quoted, and particularly after what has been said by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, I feel that I can say that those hon. members are certainly not qualified to deal expertly with a matter as closely related to the best interests of this country.

But recently it has been suggested that our friends had repented and that the Liberal policy would now be in accordance with our confederate mentality and our confederate system.

The other day, the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) spoke about a recent Liberal rally and he explained very clearly that the centralizing tendency of the Liberal administration was always as strong as it had been. In addition, he particularly proved that point by taking issue with the sentence of the Liberal policy which concerns education, which is a clear encroachment, or attempted encroachment upon a field belonging exclusively to the provinces. Thus, there has been no repentance whatsoever.

Coming back now to last night's debate, I must say I was especially surprised at certain words spoken by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, particularly those recorded on page 1559 of Hansard where the hon. member quotes as his authority none other than Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Here is what he said on that matter:

> Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding pointed out at that time that the proper basis of federal subsidies should be a real per capita basis and that the rather extraordinary scheme that there was in the British North America Act...

Let us then consider that suggestion in detail. First of all, what was the attitude of the Liberal leader in the matter of tax sharing between the provinces and the federal government?

I read in column 5289 of Hansard of March 25, 1907, the following which is worth quoting. Sir Wilfrid Laurier was then prime minister of Canada and proposed the adoption of the following address:

> We pray that Your Majesty may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the imperial parliament at its present session, repealing the provisions of section 118 of the British North America Act, 1867, aforesaid, and substituting therefor the scale of payments above set forth, which shall be a final and unalterable settlement of the amounts to be paid yearly to the several provinces of the dominion for their local purposes and the support of their governments and legislatures.

Here is another proposal made by the prime minister of the time, and which is mentioned in column 5304 of Hansard for the same year:

> The plan we proposed was that we should revise the subsidies given the provinces, with the clear intimation to them that this was to be a final settlement, that no further claim would recognize, that each province must carry on its affairs with the means at its command and must not have recourse to this parliament.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is certainly useless for the hon. members opposite to quote such an authority in support of their claims, for provincial rights, and especially a larger tax share for the provinces.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in fact of the opinion that a final settlement had to be entered into with the provinces and that those provinces should not come and knock again at the door of the federal government.

Such was the very opinion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as reported in Hansard which I just quoted.

It has been rightly said that the Liberal leader, the then prime minister, also thought that it was a false principle that one government should collect taxes and another spend them.

I remember that at the beginning of this session the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) seemed to disagree with this and even said of one of my interventions that it was utter nonsense.

Be that as it may, I believe that those words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier which I just quoted imply that this was his opinion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You accepted it.

Mr. Martineau: Yes, we accepted the principle, but the hon. members opposite are the very ones who no longer accept it; they would have us believe that their leader at that time, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, did not advocate that principle.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You accepted that principle under Mr. St. Laurent's administration.

Mr. Martineau: Other similar statements were made. Do you know by whom? By none other than the great constitutional wizard, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who stated the following, as reported in Hansard for March 24, 1956:

I think it is much more advisable that the government spending the money should collect it.

That is, should collect the taxes.

So, why maintain and suggest now, in vague and underhand terms, that such a principle is unfounded?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the question under discussion.

Mr. Martineau: Surely more surprising still are the remarks made yesterday by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who described as "rather unusual" the tax-sharing formula provided under the B.N.A. Act between provinces and the federal government Now, we know what this is all about. We realize now how the Liberal party throughout its long administration gradually sought to disregard the precise terms of the constitution and to lean towards centralization.

Besides, they have never changed their position, because yesterday the same member for Bonavista-Twillingate said that the formulas provided in the B.N.A. Act were really extraordinary. He used the word "strange."

Mr. Deschatelets: Let the hon. member read his statement.

Mr. Martineau: I understand why my remarks are not to the hon. members' liking.

Mr. Ricard: They hurt.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not what he said. You are wrong and you know it.

Mr. Ricard: It hurts the hon. members.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, let us go back to the motion introduced yesterday by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin) as it appears on page 1535 of yesterday's official report. There is a preamble, because this was an important event in the history of parliament, and they saw fit to begin the amendment with a preamble.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Very well said.

Mr. Martineau: Mention was made of the meeting held on October 26, 1960.

In view of the fact that the federal government at the October conference (1960) with the provinces proposed fixed subsidies in place of the equalization payments provided under the present tax-sharing arrangements, and that this October proposal is a repudiation of the principle of equalization;

[Mr. Martineau.]

Therefore, be it resolved that this house strongly favours—

Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, such words coming from that source.

The continued application of the principle of equalization of direct tax revenues.

Mr. Speaker, it is readily realized that hon. members of the opposition are still confused, not only with respect to the history of Canada's constitutional evolution, but also as to the very meaning of the terms. This can clearly be seen in this resolution in which principle and formula are confused.

The principle of equalization has not at all been questioned nor challenged by this government. On the contrary, that principle was recognized by the very words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), on the occasion of the first steps taken by his government.

Here is what he said on the matter as can be found on page 1546 of Hansard:

Whatever the ultimate decision may be, the principle of equalization must be preserved.

And further on, the Prime Minister stated:

Again I wish to emphasize that the federal government remains firmly committed to the principle of equalization and of financial assistance to those provinces in which incomes and taxable capacity are below those of the richer provinces.

And again, in the letter sent yesterday to the premiers by the Prime Minister of Canada and which is recorded in yesterday's Hansard, we find this:

The suggestions that I have placed—

I am quoting the Prime Minister.

—before the October conference included the principles of equalization based on fiscal need and the stabilization of provincial revenues. The federal government is also prepared to make provision for a growth factor in the equalization formula.

Thus it is claimed here that equalization is being preserved not only in principle but in fact.

The formula can of course be changed, because as conceived by the constitutional authorities sitting on the treasury benches at the time, it is far from perfect, as constitutional experts agree almost to a man.

It has been said, for example, that it went against the spirit of the federal covenant allowing taxes to be levied for purposes entirely provincial. That is a first breach of the constitution. Second, it is not very realistic. And on this point, I am going to quote—

Mr. Deschatelets: Why did you consistently support it?

Mr. Racine: What is your proposal?

Mr. Martineau: There, Mr. Speaker, is the supreme argument of members of the opposition whenever they run out of arguments.

That is the principle underlying the whole theory of equalization. It is intended to ensure that provincial services will not, due to the poverty of some provinces, fall below a minimum which is considered appropriate for Canadians generally. This is subject to one condition, namely that each contracting province should raise its various taxes to a level considered equal to that of the provinces which are required to pay the cost of the subsidies.

In other words, it is a question of equalizing tax revenues. Now the constitutional experts following the lead of François-Albert Angers, a distinguished authority and a noted sociologist and economist, have made a very searching analysis of that government's proposals and have pointed out the flaws in the present formula. So it is with a view to correcting those flaws, and ensuring full compliance with the federal covenant that this government offers new proposals, which though not final, involve certain amendments to the 1957 agreements.

If the provinces accept those solutions, we shall be reverting to the true spirit of the constitution. That, surely, is an improvement on the previous agreements. Here is what Mr. Angers had to say in the concluding lines of an article published on November 24 in Le Devoir:

Summing up, the present equalization system is over-simple, phony and certainly unfair.

Over-simple, phony and certainly unfair.

Mr. Speaker, could anyone in his right mind rise in this house and say that the devious formula devised by Mackenzie King and his assistants, particularly the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) is so perfect, that it cannot be improved in any way?

That is the situation we are faced with now, in the year 1961, at a time when consideration must be given to renegotiating federal-provincial tax agreements.

The proposals submitted by the federal government were not as rigid as those put forward by the former administration. The Prime Minister in all his press releases and in all his dealings with the provincial authorities, repeated over and over again that these proposals were to be discussed, and the provinces were invited to make representations.

I must not forget to quote Mr. Angers' conclusions on this problem, as they appeared in Le Devoir for November 24:

The present federal formula, the one submitted to the October 1960 conference is basically correct. We have now reached what may be termed the dangerous narrows in a reversion to a decentralized system involving greater consideration for the true autonomy of the provinces.

And he added:

The Liberals have diabolically—

This word may be worth noting.

—diabolically sown confusion and have harnessed interests to make them work for centralization.

In order to break out of their system, the provinces must now show enough wisdom and dedication to the common good to disregard the petty interests—

Petty interests.

—that the King and St. Laurent governments used for fifteen years to further their centralizing policies.

That, Mr. Speaker, is an unbiased opinion from a man who is certainly not interested in promoting anything but the highest interest of this country in the matter of government policy in the field of federal-provincial taxation.

Now, our hon. friends opposite, having been guilty of those offences, which are now a matter of history—and here I repeat the words used by the Minister of Forestry—have the gall to criticize this government, a government which has done more than any other to foster friendly relations and understanding between the central and provincial authorities. And if there is one thing, among all the achievements of this government, that deserves to be remembered and praised in the highest possible terms, it is its effort to restore a fair distribution of taxes. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, there is no deluding ourselves about this: we know, and everyone knows, that there is only one taxpayer and that whether taxes are paid to the federal or provincial governments, it is always the same man who pays, and I believe that—

An hon. Member: Poor man.

Mr. Martineau: Yes. —That in view of the tax burden he has to carry, the Canadian taxpayer should be treated with dignity and justice. That is what this government has tried to do, and in a most concrete way by increasing, as it did—in fact it almost doubled over the last three and a half to four years—the share of federal taxes that is paid back to the provinces. This share has gone up from approximately $680 million to the present figure of $1,300 million. That, surely, is significant evidence. And this government has done it without sacrificing the principles of our system of government. Today, it is proposed to come back to those principles which, surely are not unusual, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) seems to think, but are the cornerstone of this nation and the basis of its future prosperity.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the hon. member drew me into his speech, would he permit a question before he takes his seat? Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the present government was acting on a principle different from that founded by Mr. St. Laurent—allow me to finish my question, please—because the Minister of Finance told us last night it was exactly the same principle?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the hon. member missed the greater part of my speech because I was very careful to state that the present government still adhered to the principle of equalization but that there could be changes made in the formula. There is a distinction, in case the hon. member does not know, between principle and formula.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman say what changes the present government has made in the formula?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, again my answer is the same. I would have to repeat my entire speech and I think it would be time lost because the hon. member would not understand it anyway.

(Translation):

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member resumes his seat, I should like to ask him a question. I did not want to interrupt the Prime Minister's parliamentary secretary. Could the hon. member tell us exactly what is meant by the factor of growth, and tell us also the basis on which this factor would be calculated for tax distribution?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, factor of growth means exactly the growth of a factor, and if the hon. member does not know the meaning of the word, I suggest that he look it up in the dictionary.

[Mr. Martineau.]

Mr. Cardin: I thank the hon. member for the information he gave me about the word growth. Would he now explain to me how the government intends to determine the basis on which the payments will be made, taking into consideration the factors of growth?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, contrary to what was done under the Liberals, this government does not decide on such matters without having discussed them with the provinces, and it is not for me to deal with them here before the provinces have been consulted and have given their opinion.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to follow the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) as I feel that he did not talk to the amendment before us. I regret very much that he refused to give us a definition of the growth factor because this is the heart of the amendment before us at this time.

(Text):

I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming) likewise refused to give us an explanation of what is meant by the factor of growth which is, of course, the heart of the matter before us at this time. If we had had from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), if we were to have later from the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), some indication of what the Prime Minister meant in his letter of yesterday, which he said he sent to the provinces, by his reference to the factor of growth, we could then determine whether or not the government has abandoned the position which the Prime Minister took in July. Then he spoke of his faith in equalization and the determination of his government to see the principle of equalization in federal-provincial fiscal relations perpetuated.

I should like to begin what I have to say by complimenting the Minister of Forestry on the manner of his speech if not on its content. The hon. gentleman has made a very creditable first speech. One recalls, however, that many of the arguments he used today were arguments which he employed in the last federal election, particularly in the province of New Brunswick, when he urged the people of that province to support the present government. They were likewise arguments that he used in part in the last provincial election and the results of that election, of course, made possible his entrance into this house. But the fact is that the people of New Brunswick do not share his very strong and extravagant view of the beneficence of this government, because in that province there is now a new provincial premier and the former provincial premier has, as I said, made a very creditable first speech in the House of Commons today.

The fact is, however, that neither the Minister of Forestry nor the Prime Minister's parliamentary secretary addressed himself to the issue before us at this time, to the amendment now before the house so ably introduced yesterday afternoon by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin). That issue is whether or not the government is prepared, in accordance with its promise to the Canadian people, to prosecute to the full its assurances with regard to amelioration in the relations which the federal government has with the ten provincial governments.

Mr. Chambers: That is done.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member says that is done. Whatever has been done during the last forty eight hours has been as a result of the prodding by this party on Friday last and by this amendment, as I hope to show before I take my seat. Certainly we should have had from the parliamentary secretary today a definition of what the Prime Minister meant when he said in his letter to the provinces inter alia that he would hope that the equalization total might be distributed in such a fashion as to give greater weight to provincial fiscal needs and that the government would also take into consideration the factor of growth. We have not had that from the parliamentary secretary what is meant by the factor of growth, and in spite of repeated questions and requests yesterday by hon. members on this side we have not had from the Minister of Forestry today, a member of the government, any explanation as to what is meant by the factor of growth. A few moments ago the parliamentary secretary said to the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres that anybody knows what the factor of growth is, and exactly the same reply was given to us yesterday by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Martineau: We speak in plain terms.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The real fact is that the government has not yet decided what it means by the factor of growth. I venture to challenge the Prime Minister to tell us before this debate is over what he meant in the letter signed by him, a letter which undoubtedly was prepared and dictated by the Minister of Finance, in using the words "growth factor". If the Prime Minister wants us to regard that letter as indicating the government's stamp of faith in this matter, let him tell us, the provinces and the country generally precisely what is meant so that we will be able to determine whether or not the government is going to adhere to the assurances of the Prime Minister given in July, given prior to the last election in Winnipeg and given in 1957 in the same city, in absolute contrast to the reluctance of the Minister of Finance to forecast beyond one year what the government of Canada was going to do with regard to equalization payments.

The Minister of Finance chided the house yesterday because the Liberal opposition dared, pending negotiations with the provinces, to raise this matter, as though it was not the responsibility and duty of the House of Commons and of the opposition in particular to ascertain and to obtain precision of government policy in all aspects. Why dominion-provincial fiscal relations should be excluded is very difficult to see, but the Minister of Finance chided us yesterday as though when he was sitting in the opposition he was reluctant to question the government of the day with regard to matters involving negotiations with the provinces, as though in those days he was reluctant to criticize the government or examine policy when negotiations of another character were under way.

It is the duty of the opposition, Mr. Speaker, to ascertain whether this government has a real policy in these matters, whether it has changed its policy, whether it is favouring one province as opposed to the nine other provinces, whether it feels that its election commitments are such that it has got to pay greater attention to the most powerful province, economically, the province of Ontario, or whether it is going to give justice to all the provinces in our country. These are some of the issues that are implied in the discussion being carried on in this house. We have a right to ascertain whether there is implied in this matter a secret understanding, not put to the other provinces, between the Minister of Finance and the premier of the province of Ontario. There is good ground for asking this question. At the last conference the only premier who was satisfied with the plan put forward by this government was the premier of Ontario. The premier of Manitoba and the other premiers certainly did not accept it.

Why did the premier of Ontario seem to accept the proposal put forward by the government? I believe it was because the premier of Ontario, the premier of my own province, was opposed to the principle of equalization. This government, clearly, was determined to get rid of this principle and it was prepared to carry out the undertaking which I suspect was given by this government to the premier of Ontario.

An hon. Member: You suspect.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course I suspect because—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mischievous.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —when the present Prime Minister was on the same platform with Premier Frost in Massey Hall in 1957 Premier Frost said, I want $100 million more from the federal government, and I know the only way I can get it is by electing this man, and Premier Frost then put his hand on the Prime Minister's shoulder. Certainly Premier Frost could look to him for the kind of assistance which the premier of Ontario wanted.

Now hon. gentlemen may take issue with what I am saying. Let the Prime Minister rise in his place after I have spoken and deny that there was this understanding with the premier of Ontario, deny that the premier of Ontario did not state that he would be pleased to see this principle of equalization abandoned because Ontario then would stand to gain.

While I come from the province of Ontario, I prefer to take the position that the way we are going to build up national unity in this country is by according to all Canadians the same opportunities, wherever they may live, because in the final analysis they are the ones who supply the federal government with the revenues it receives and with which it carries on and discharges the functions of government in Canada. There can be no other way of carrying on a satisfactory relationship between the two levels of government in Canada than by recognizing that all the provinces have a right to share, along with the more fortunately endowed provinces, in the building of schools and all the other things which Canadians have an equal right to expect from the two senior levels of government.

I believe that throughout this whole matter we have had a demonstration of the real character of this government. We have here a day to day government. Ministers make decisions only when a crisis has developed or when they are under the immediate pressure of the opposition. We have seen evidence of that on more than one occasion. We saw it in the case of the appointment of a royal commission to investigate health insurance. We saw it in the case of the conference of management and labour called by the government with regard to unemployment. We saw it in the matter of the Clark report, an investigation made by the government into the old age survivor system in the United States. We saw it, as the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) points out, in the case of the census questions on which the government and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) retreated.

The real fact is that since October last the government has allowed this matter of federal-provincial relations to drift as so many other problems are allowed to drift by this government. The proof of that is seen in some of the questions that were put in this house on Friday last. I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to page 1476 of Hansard, where the following questions were put:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether any changes whatever are in contemplation with respect to the tax-sharing arrangements with the provinces for the fiscal year 1961-62.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the ambit of discussion at the dominion-provincial conferences on fiscal questions has been confined to measures in the period commencing April 1, 1962.

Then, the minister went on to deal with something that does not have anything to do with my point. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) put this question:

I should like to ask a supplementary question. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a reported statement by Mr. Frost to the effect that it would be impossible to present a budget, that is in Toronto, until the federal government position is known in this matter?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My attention has not been called to this statement. I heard a reference to it on the radio this morning. Obviously this is a budget matter, and it would not be proper for me to comment on the plans of the Ontario government in relation to budget matters.

The minister then made certain other observations that do not have anything to do with the point I am making. At this point, I interjected:

The minister is not suggesting, is he, that he is not on talking terms with the premier of Ontario?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, no, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that thought would not have crossed the mind of any hon. member but the hon. member for Essex East.

I thanked him for that compliment. The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) then interjected:

He just would not allow the premier of Ontario to get a word in edgewise.

Mr. Pickersgill: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think I ought to hear the supplementary question of the hon. member for Assiniboia.

It is this part to which I ask hon. members on the government side to pay attention as to whether the letter written yesterday was not the result of prodding by the Liberal opposition. I quote:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister can inform the house whether a date has been set for a federal-provincial conference involving the provincial premiers in order to deal with fiscal matters.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Speaker.

If that does not indicate a justification for the course taken by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres, then I would like to know what kind of evidence would satisfy hon. members opposite. The fact is that this government had no idea on Friday last when it was going to call a conference. The fact is that on Friday last, and as late as Sunday, the Prime Minister had no thought whatever of writing to the provinces suggesting a proposed date for the conference and he had no idea of using the phrase "growth factor". I shall point out later my reasons for making this statement.

Then, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) went on:

Can the minister say whether a conference will be held within the next month or two?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would not expect one would be held within the next short period.

However, this conference is called for February 23. Obviously, even the Minister of Finance, who is generally alert to these things, had no idea of the dangerous trap in which this series of questions was putting him. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) then asked:

Mr. Speaker, if I may ask a supplementary question, is the government contemplating sending any communication on this matter to the provincial governments in the next month?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

It is true that the letter sent yesterday comes fully within the terms of the reply of the Minister of Finance. However, Mr. Speaker, what has happened is clear. Hon. gentlemen were aware that there was dissatisfaction on the part of at least nine provincial premiers; among those premiers were some strong supporters of the Conservative party, notably the premier of Nova Scotia and the premier of Manitoba in particular. Likewise great concern was expressed in editorial opinion in Conservative newspapers and in other politically affiliated newspapers throughout the country. It was sent only after the Minister of Finance realized on Friday that a supply motion was coming up for consideration on Monday and that it might be this particular question which might be the subject matter of discussion on a supply motion.

I can visualize what happened. On Saturday, after the Minister of Finance had cleaned his desk on going down to his office when all of his staff were away, when he was afforded an opportunity of contemplation, not being disturbed by the presence even of his parliamentary secretary, he suddenly realized that the position taken by the government was one which could not be defended and that something must be done about the matter. He knew what the Prime Minister had said in July about equalization payments. There was not any doubt that the Prime Minister in July affirmed his conviction with regard to and his belief in the principle of equalization payments. That was not always the position of the Prime Minister nor was it always the position of this government. Well do we recall in this house the reluctance of the Minister of Finance to give any assurance that the principle of equalization would be carried on beyond any one year. It was only when confronted with opinion in Manitoba that the Prime Minister, after that reluctance on the part of the Minister of Finance, made the assertion that his government would support the principle of equalization.

But then what happened? In the month of October the Prime Minister changed his mind, the government changed its position, and the communique of October 26, 1960 clearly established that the total of $220 million a year—which included, of course, the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants and the special grants to Newfoundland—was to be frozen. It was as a result of the realization of that fact that there was consternation and criticism all over this country. But over the week end and, I am sure, during the course of the last few days, in thinking about this kind of problem the Minister of Finance has realized that neither he nor the government—and certainly not a government in whose membership is to be found the new Minister of Forestry—could defend a government policy that denied the principle of equalization.

That is the reason the Minister of Finance suddenly got busy. He could not find the Prime Minister on Saturday morning. He could not find him on Saturday afternoon. He certainly could not find him on Saturday night because I understand the Prime Minister was speaking at an extremely exclusive club in the city of Montreal about something that is not my business. However, he got hold of the Prime Minister obviously before the week end was over because a cabinet meeting was held early Monday morning, so we are told. At that cabinet meeting undoubtedly the Minister of Finance presented the Prime Minister with this letter in which it was proposed there would be a conference with the provinces on February 23, and in which were used certain words that have not been defined in this house, namely "growth factor" something which would lend encouragement to the interpretation that the government was relenting in the position it had taken at the Quebec conference.

Why bring this letter forward on that date, namely yesterday morning? Largely because, as often happens in this house, news must have leaked out that the Liberal opposition was going to bring in this particular motion; and the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, who is not above doing this sort of thing, said: "We will anticipate them". The Prime Minister said, "We shall have only a few hours, but, Donald, if you rise in your place sometime during the course of your speech on Monday and indicate that I have sent a letter to the provinces, that procedure will take the wind out of the sails of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and any other hon. member in the Liberal opposition who would likely be attacking us". That is the situation.

An hon. Member: That is not the situation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Somebody says, "That is not the situation". I should be happy to have the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Halpenny) tell us what really went on.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Solicitor General (Mr. Browne).

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Excuse me; I meant to say the Solicitor General. But the matter cannot be allowed to rest there. It is true that we have this letter. It is clear that the government has been prodded into writing this letter, into having a conference and into what could be interpreted as a relaxation of its rigid policy of maintaining for a time equalization payments at a stated level. But this is not good enough. This is not a boys' parliament; this is the parliament of the nation. There sits the government of Canada. It cannot justifiably use trick words in its relations or in its correspondence with the provinces.

An hon. Member: Trick words?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, trick words; and I say that advisedly. No one can tell from that letter what those words mean and no minister in this debate has been able to tell us what the words "growth factor" mean. I ask the Minister of Finance, who is not here, through his parliamentary secretary to tell us before this debate is over, so that the provinces will know, what is meant by growth factor. On what is the growth factor to be based? The Minister of Finance did not tell us yesterday. The Minister of Forestry did not tell us today. The parliamentary secretary simply said growth factor is growth factor. We are entitled to know what the letter meant.

Is growth factor to be based on population growth or is it to be based on an increase in our gross national product? It could also be determined on the basis of the per capita yield of the three direct taxes at standard rates in the wealthier provinces. Here the basis could be the top provinces, as I should like it to be, or the top two provinces as at present, or it could simply be the national average as requested by the premier of Ontario. But surely we are entitled to know on what this growth factor is going to be based. Moreover, in a debate of this kind I think we are entitled to know not from the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister but from the Prime Minister himself.

I should like to have brought before us any precedent for a debate on provincial relations of this character, particularly one that is based upon an initiative taken by the Prime Minister, in which that right hon. gentleman in the course of the history of this chamber has not taken part. The Prime Minister should speak tonight. He should tell us what he means by growth factor. He should also tell us whether I am justified in the surmise that the government had not thought of this matter at all until it heard of our proposed amendment, and only after it had been prodded into it by the brilliant questions of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

I have another reason for believing that this growth factor continues to be the essence of this argument. The Prime Minister says: I have never varied from my view that we should accord to the provinces of our country the principle of equalization. He says that notwithstanding the clear words contained in the press release of October 26, 1960 when he said this:

> To meet the needs of the provinces with lower tax potential we would therefore ask parliament to provide equalization payments or their equivalent in a total amount of $220 million a year.

Then he went on further to say this:

> —we . . . would hope that the total might be distributed in such fashion as to give greater weight to provincial fiscal need.

If that is the case, why does the Prime Minister use these particular words in the letter which he addressed to the provinces?

Mr. Churchill: Are you trying to find it? It is on page 1548.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I welcome the hon. gentleman back from India.

Mr. Churchill: You need somebody's help anyway.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister says that his view has always been that the principle of equalization shall apply. The Minister of Finance says the same, and he says that all the arguments adduced on this side of the house are without any validity. If that is the case, why does the Prime Minister, in his letter to the provinces—which is supposed to be dated yesterday morning and which is supposed to have been mailed just before we began this particular debate yesterday afternoon—use these words:

> The federal government is also prepared to make provision for a growth factor in the equalization formula.

Why would he say that the government is prepared to make provision for a growth factor in the equalization formula if that has always been the policy of the government of Canada? The fact is, it was not in October. The fact is that notwithstanding what the Minister of Finance says, while the Prime Minister took that position in July the government took a different position in October. It was as a result of that that provincial premiers condemned this government, and among them particularly the premier of Manitoba.

I have here two press clippings, one dated October 25, 1960, from the Winnipeg Free Press.

Mr. Lambert: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend for Edmonton West does not like the Winnipeg Free Press. I quote it with relish because I think it is an excellent newspaper, and the Minister of Finance quoted from it yesterday. Here is what Mr. Roblin is reported as having said on October 25, 1960:

> It would, he said, be "very difficult" to maintain the equalization principle under a new formula which would allow all provinces to set their own tax levels.
> Manitoba, he said, would have "little or nothing to gain by getting the right to vary its own tax rate."

I am sure the premier of Manitoba would not have made that statement if he had not interpreted the policy of the government in October as we have interpreted it, as other provincial governments have interpreted it and as every newspaper in Canada has interpreted it. Here is what Mr. Roblin said on October 29, 1960, in an article headed:

> No excuse for refusing tax proposal

An hon. Member: What paper is that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Winnipeg Free Press. The heading of the article continues:

> Diefenbaker's plan is termed "Expensive, unnecessary" by Roblin.

Then the article goes on to quote what Mr. Roblin said:

> The real point at issue—

And this is the real point at issue in this particular debate:

> —between the federal government and Manitoba, Mr. Roblin said, is the equalization principle which aims at giving the poorer provinces parity of revenue with the richest. He spoke out strongly against the federal proposals to freeze equalization payments at last year's level for the full five years of the new tax agreement.
> The equalization payments, he said, must vary from year to year with the revenue capacity of the government.

Then Mr. Roblin said, as reported in this article:

> If there can be derived a formula on equalization and stabilization that can reach our requests, there can be no legitimate refusal on the part of the provinces to collect our own standard tax.

Then he goes on and I ask the Minister of Forestry to note these words:

> An equalization that depends entirely on a fixed amount, not related in a flexible way to a real measure of revenue capacity changes, as is incorporated in the present agreement by tying it into the standard tax rates, is unsatisfactory to us.
> We would urge that equalization should be tied into some such measure of revenue capacity as the standard tax rate or any better measuring rod that can be devised.

There is no doubt, then, what the premier of Manitoba thought as a result of the conference that was held in October last. He saw here a denial by this government of an opportunity which was the only effective means of providing economic justice to the provinces that are less fortunate economically than some of the other provinces of our country. Unless the principle of equalization is to be recognized by the federal government, Manitoba would not be able to share, as it is entitled to share as a member of our national family, whatever economic advantages flow to this country through the avenue of the more fortunate, economically, situated provinces. Likewise the province of New Brunswick. Where would the province, from which the Minister of Forestry comes, be if the principle of equalization were not to be carried forward year by year?

This motion of ours has served to prod the government into some kind of action. First, in calling the provinces together to another conference. Second, in causing the government to realize that the rigid position it took in October was one that could not be accepted by the majority of the members of this house who want to be true to their trust and to the interests of their constituents, and it could not possibly be accepted by the majority of the provinces of Canada.

We have served a valuable purpose in putting forward this amendment. We have caused the government to give further consideration to its policy. We have caused the government at long last to call the provinces together. At long last we have given the Prime Minister an opportunity of triumphing over the ministerial discussions that obviously have taken place in the cabinet between himself and the Minister of Finance.

The story of this administration's handling of federal-provincial fiscal relations is a sorry one. This is the government of the Prime Minister who said in 1957, "Elect us to office; make me prime minister; I will call a conference in September and I will resolve once and for all this problem of federal-provincial fiscal relations".

No conference was called in September, 1957. It is only because of the series of questions put from this side of the house that one was called in November 1957. And what happened in November? Nothing was settled; there was no statement of federal government policy; the conference was adjourned; it was to come back in January of 1958. This government, that was going to settle problems on the basis of consultation and collaboration with the provinces, did not reconvene the conference. Instead the Minister of Finance sent an ex parte telegram imposing on the government of New Brunswick and on all the other provinces of our country conditions to which the federal government alone was a party.

As a matter of fact the telegram was so erroneous in some of its mathematics that the Minister of Finance was put to great embarrassment a few days later when the necessary amendments were made. The reason for that was of course that the Minister of Finance did not prepare the telegram. It shows the great collusion that exists between this government and the present government of Ontario, because that telegram was prepared by Mr. George Gathercole, a very able assistant in the office of the premier of Ontario, and I challenge hon. members opposite to deny that.

Mr. Pallett: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett), whose contributions always consist of mild interruptions, I am sure is now convinced—

An hon. Member: —that you are crazy.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that the opposition has brought the government to a realization that good government in Canada consists of proper relations between the federal government on the one hand and the provincial governments on the other.

The provinces cannot be treated like children. They have a right to have their responsibilities recognized by the federal government. The way to recognize those responsibilities is by treating the provinces as they should be treated, and as they were treated by Mr. St. Laurent, as ladies and gentlemen elected by their constituents to carry on government in the provincial area. They have their responsibilities under section 92 of the British North America Act. We have ours under section 91 of the B.N.A. Act. I call on this government to discharge its responsibilities under section 91, and the way to do that is not by the method employed yesterday, when under the prodding and the compulsion of an opposition it began to do something which it should have undertaken many weeks ago.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Before offering congratulations to the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming) I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) on his very great versatility. Over the years the hon. gentleman has demonstrated his ability as president of the Essex East bureau of statistics. This afternoon we have heard him as president of a new bureau, the Essex East detective agency. The hon. member has reconstructed the whole thing. He has told us precisely what has happened. He left nothing to surmise, nothing to conjecture. Frankly, after all the sound and fury is over, and having listened to the whole story, I cannot help feel I would prefer to be guided by one phrase used by the hon. member when he referred to constituents, and to leave these things to the constituents across Canada and their conclusions when they read the hon. member's speech.

There is no doubt in my mind that the constituents are thinking deeply about these questions and are inclined to look at the facts with regard to them. From what I have heard in the last few days I should be inclined to trust the facts as set out by the various hon. members on the government side who have spoken. These facts are hard to refute, and they concern the change which has been brought about in dominion-provincial relationships since 1957, since June 25 of that year, to be exact. I intend to deal with the subject only in relation to my own province, and this at a later time.

May I say that I rise with a good deal of diffidence and a certain amount of humility to follow the Minister of Forestry. This was his maiden speech. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) afforded him the somewhat dubious compliment of saying it was a good political speech. To my mind it was a good deal more than that. It was a factual speech, and it came from a man who has had a great deal of experience in provincial-federal relations. The hon. gentleman has not only seen all sides of this question but he is also a steady and sound thinker who puts his facts forward very well. I would accept what he has said, together with the various quotations from newspapers which have been put on record. I would accept entirely his contention that in June, 1957 there was a change in the manner in which provincial ministers of finance were dealt with by the federal government.

I like the remarks made by the hon. gentleman. They were straightforward. He said: Certainly we accepted the deal. We did not like it, but we had to accept it because of the take it or leave it attitude of the government of the day. He contrasted that situation with what took place at a later date and said that a true test could only be made on the basis of comparison. He said, among other things, that after 1957 the federal government was prepared to listen to proposals from the provinces, and I would say, offhand, that the facts bear out this contention.

The hon. member for Essex East made a lot of the position of New Brunswick, but it is only fair to quote a figure, namely that in 1960-61 the provincial budget of that province showed 55.5 per cent of its income to be derived from federal sources. That is, of its total revenue 55 per cent comes from federal sources. That is something to remember. In my own province that figure is certainly a lot less, but it is still a good one. I intend to say more on this point later. The Minister of Forestry brought out certain facts and set them before us very well.

But if anyone had listened carefully to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) speaking in this house they could not have helped feeling that he knew precisely what he was doing, precisely what he was setting forward; and that there was no deviation in any way from the acknowledged purpose of the government with regard to dominion-provincial relationships.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was saying that my constituents and the average voter anywhere in Canada would accept the statement made by those members of the government and those people who have spoken on behalf of the government as against the sound and fury generated during the last two days by others in this house. I was relating my remarks to those of the Minister of Forestry and those of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming).

On the government side we have two things coming forward, first of all co-operation with the provinces and, second, and perhaps to the average voter much more important, performance.

If you look at the figures given by the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker, you will see that in the increase from 10 per cent to 13 per cent—which was voluntary, incidentally—of the provincial share of the yield from personal income tax, the sum of $200 million has been paid to the provinces since we came into power. In addition, if you look at the Atlantic provinces adjustment grant you will see that at $25 million a year the additional sum of $75 million has been paid. If you look at the conditional payments to the provinces by the Liberals in their last year in office you will see that the sum amounted to $111 million, a rather puny figure—and this is the figure they are boasting about—as against the figure of $389 million paid by this government. That is performance.

I go now to British Columbia. Under conditional grants British Columbia received in the last year the Liberals were in power the sum of $17,491,000. The figure in the estimates for British Columbia last year is $61,936,000; $17 million as against $61 million in my own province. That is performance and it should be recorded.

What does it cover? Well, it covers a multitude of things that this government has gone ahead with, far more than has ever been done in co-operation with a provincial government in my province before. I might mention a few, comparing last year as against the last Liberal year. First of all, with regard to highways, mainly the trans-Canada highway but there are others, under the Liberals the policy was barren, negative, stalling; they managed to bring forth $6,680,000 for the trans-Canada highway. This government has spent three times as much, namely $18,872,000. This figure does not include Glacier national park, one of the finest parks in Canada. I hope that the Liberals will use their transportation and come out and have a look at that park which will be completed next year. A lot of expense has gone into it and it is a wonderful park.

I turn next to vocational training which is another phase of the program and into which have gone additional grants. Under the Liberals the figure amounted to $549,000; under the Conservatives the amount has been three times as much, namely $1,553,000. This does not take into account the new legislation brought in this year which expanded and will expand the amount of money going into vocational training as a guide to further employment and the production of further skills in Canada. In British Columbia we took advantage of that and a grand technical school for technical training was erected last year. No doubt in other provinces further work will be done along this line.

I come next to the municipal winter works program. Last year $1,335,000 was spent in the province of British Columbia. As hon. members know, this legislation has been widened considerably. Take one city, the city of Penticton, in my constituency as an example. Winter works to the amount of $441,000 have been approved this year and this is only one spot. Multiply that by the cities all over Canada which have taken advantage of this forward looking Conservative legislation and you will see what I mean. This is dealing with problems.

In welfare, of course, twice as much has been spent—I will not give the figures—as was spent by the Liberals. The next is slum clearance. In British Columbia alone $700,000 was spent on that last year. The figure for the Liberals was nil under this heading; no advantage was taken of it. This is just one more place where the federal government in conjunction with the provincial authorities has said, "Let us do a job; let us do it together; let us do it in the spirit of co-operation". As I indicated, there was performance last year to the extent of $700,000 in my own province.

Mr. Deschatelets: Will my hon. friend permit a question as this time? Is he in favour of the equalization payment?

Mr. Pugh: If the hon. member would ask a question on the matter on which I was speaking, yes, I would answer.

Mr. Deschatelets: Just tell me.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deschatelets: Will the hon. member tell me whether he is in favour of equalization payments?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pugh: The hon. member has asked me whether I am in favour of the equalization payments. Why should I, as a Conservative backbencher, take any side other than that which has been publicly stated in this house by the Minister of Finance who has spoken forcibly, sincerely, and, despite all of the rumbling and bumbling that is going on next door, consistently. We have no other axe to grind on this.

Mr. Hellyer: Did you say "inconsistently"?

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Speaker, I have given a few of the figures and there are many more of course. In the province of British Columbia 35.8 per cent of the total budget of the province is provided by the federal government in the form of payments under various acts which have been instituted or furthered by the government. There are many others. I might refer to aid to agriculture. I do not want to go into that in great detail. I think it is sufficient to say that aid given by the government is practically three times the 1956-57 dollop provided by the Liberal government.

In the field of health there have been vast increases brought about in part by the government saying, "We are going to help the hospitals; we will double the ante on beds". That was done. A good many other things were done under the changes they made in the act. The grant for chronic and convalescent beds was increased from $1,500 to $2,000 per bed. The grant for nurses' beds was doubled. As to internes' beds, the Liberals did not give anything for that but we are giving $750 per bed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We started it.

Mr. Pugh: The hon. member for Essex East, who has just come in, says that they started it. I will tell you one thing. Verbally the Liberal government started many things but so far as fulfilment is concerned they left a great deal to be done. It is rather nice to be on one side of the fence or the other. It is rather difficult to remain astride but some of these members to my immediate right in the Liberal party are pretty adept at doing just that.

Mr. Hodgson: Mugwumps.

Mr. Pugh: They say that they suggested it but they did not carry it out. I understand from reading Hansard of past years that members of the government took a strong stand at that time and pushed and prodded the Liberals when they were in power.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They opposed family allowances.

Mr. Pugh: What I am trying to get at is that the people of Canada, Mr. Average Voter, decided about three years ago that they had had enough of this business of the Liberals saying that they were going to do all these things and put in a government that would do them. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that we now have a government which is doing these things.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it is my duty to do so pursuant to section 3(d) of standing order 56 and to put forthwith the question on any amendments now before the house.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. The question is on the main motion.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—REFERENCE TO REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like at this time to report a grievance to the house. My grievance is that there is a division of opinion in the ranks of the government in the matter of nuclear weapons being used and being made available to our defence personnel and that a clear-cut policy is urgently needed at this time. What is even worse is the obvious admission that was made this afternoon by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness). Our Minister of National Defence this afternoon admitted guilt in that he agreed that he had appealed to the armed services to use their influence to counter "ban the bomb" movements in Canada.

This is a violation of our traditions, namely that in our democracy servants of the crown are subject to the will of the people. The whole of our judiciary and the whole of our armed services bear allegiance to the crown and the crown, by tradition, is subject to the majority decision of the people. A minister of the crown appealing to people on his payroll to come to his defence is a violation of our heritage. Personally speaking, may I say that I have a son who belongs to a reserve unit of the armed forces, and I do not like the idea that the minister responsible would appeal to my boy to oppose the aspirations of his mother who subscribes to the movement in Canada which says that we ought to ban the use of nuclear weapons by any Canadian, including himself. After all, I am the taxpayer and not my son and I feel that I ought to have more authority than has my son who is a member of the reserve forces.

My next complaint may be regarded as a relatively minor one. However, I feel that it is none the less significant. Immediately after the orders of the day were called my secretary stenographer did her utmost to get information as to what the minister had or had not said last week end. All she asked for was either a copy of the minister's speech or some press releases that had been issued by officers of the navy. It is amazing, Mr. Speaker, how the departments of the minister will run for cover the moment they smell a rat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Regier: You will be given at least a dozen officers and telephone numbers to which to appeal. You will even be told the almost unbelievable story that there is no copy of the minister's speech available, that he merely spoke off the cuff. You know that various press releases of his speech were issued, but to get a copy of one of them is almost an impossibility; that is a horse of a different colour.

I now want to publicly express my appreciation to a member of the press gallery who supplied me with a copy of the press release issued from H.M.C.S. Carleton, Ottawa, which among other things has this to say:

> Turning to considerations of defence in Canada, Mr. Harkness pointed out that pacificists and "ban the bomb" movements are apparently being encouraged by groups wishing to prevent Canada from being able to make an effective defence effort. Their propaganda is being well disseminated in the country and the personnel of reserve units of the forces should make an effort to combat it. Being in much closer touch with the general population in their daily lives than men of the regular forces, reservists should counter pacificist and neutralist ideas whenever they hear them expressed.

That is the end of the quotation from the press release issued from H.M.C.S. Carleton, Ottawa.

We appeal to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) to express the opinion of the government on this issue as to whether or not Canadians ought to be supplied with nuclear weapons.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I will not relinquish the floor at this moment. I have given my word that I would be brief on this point.

[Mr. Regier.]

We would like to hear especially from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green), and I regret that he has to be absent tonight because the whole of the nation would like to hear from him on this issue in this House of Commons and not at the podium of the United Nations. We would also like to hear an expression of opinion on the part of the Minister of National Defence on this issue.

The government owes to the people of Canada an expression of opinion, and I am convinced that if our heritage means anything, any expression of opinion as to government policy will demand the immediate resignation of either the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of National Defence.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to say on behalf of those of us on this side of the house that we agree with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) that this is no time for pacificism or neutralism. The Canadian temperament is neither. It has not been in the past, and is not now.

Several times Canadians have been called upon to take up arms in the name of freedom, and each time, without hesitation, they have done so willingly and both on this continent and abroad have fought gallantly for the things in which they believed.

We cannot be neutralist. To be neutralist is to be nothing. We are for something; we are for freedom. If we are for freedom we cannot be neutralist in this struggle. It is not enough to have freedom in Canada. We have to covet this belief for all peoples everywhere.

Mr. Khrushchev said, when visiting this continent, that he intends to bury us. Surely we have to take him at his word. Surely he means what he says, and even if he does not mean that he will bury us by means of force of arms, he means that he will attempt to do so by some other means, whether by the use of economic pressure or through an intensification of the ideological warfare which has been taking place now for some years.

We have to take this threat seriously and we have to do something about it. We are involved in an all-out struggle between two forms of government, the totalitarian on one side and the libertarian on the other. How, in this circumstance, can we be neutral? It is a struggle between tyranny and freedom.

Many people in this country know from bitter experience what freedom really means. Included in the more than one million post-war immigrants who have come to this country are a great many political refugees who have come from various countries behind the iron curtain. Some of them have been personally persecuted because of their belief in freedom. Some of them have had families persecuted. Some of them have lost their families. Some of them have spent terms in prison camps in Siberia because they refused to be cowed by political tyranny. Believe me, they know what the word "freedom" means, and they are the vanguard of trying to keep this country stirred up to the point where we will not shirk our responsibility.

They know the meaning of freedom. The people from the Baltic states know the meaning of freedom; the people who have come here from Poland or Hungary, or any of the other countries behind the iron curtain, know that there is in fact a struggle and it is going to be waged until one side emerges victorious, either those who believe in the totalitarian system of government or those who believe, as most of us do, in freedom for all peoples to choose for themselves the way in which they would like to live. There can be no neutralism amongst them, and indeed they set a standard for us.

In this situation we must stand with our United States friends. True enough, they do things from time to time which annoy us. True enough from time to time they take us for granted. But notwithstanding that, when all the froth is swept away we must stand beside them, because they are carrying the burden of freedom in the western world and will continue to do so. The least we can do is to make sure that we co-operate with them in any useful venture which will strengthen the western world in this all-out struggle.

Coming now to the means of co-operation, may I say that this government has contributed considerably to the present tendency among some very small minority groups in this country toward pacifism and neutralism.

Mr. Pallett: Including the Liberal convention.

Mr. Hellyer: This government, through its refusal to give the armed forces of Canada the wherewithal to fight has contributed to the feeling of frustration which has given rise to this unfortunate deviation toward neutralism and pacifism.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) proceeds further I should like to try to enunciate what is the real grievance. At this stage of the proceedings in a supply motion single subjects only may be introduced as grievances. I understood from what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) said that the grievance he had related to remarks made by the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) at a meeting the other night during a speech. It did not deal directly with defence policy but the grievance was, rather, directed toward the attitude expressed by the minister at the meeting in question.

I do not think that reference to neutralism would be excluded, but I think the hon. member would be going outside the scope of the debate which has been initiated and should be kept to this single topic until it has been concluded. He should not deal with Canadian-United States defence relations and arrangements.

Mr. Hellyer: You are quite right, Mr. Speaker. That is my grievance and I am coming to it. What I have been giving is, really, background which I think will help in laying the ground for the grievance itself.

Before the election of 1957, the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), when questioned during his coast to coast tour, said the Liberals had been telling the people of Canada that if he was elected he would let down the defence effort. The right hon. gentleman categorically told the Canadian people that he would not do so, that defence expenditure would not be cut. The record can be checked on this point.

Mr. Speaker: I thought the hon. member agreed with me that it was the conduct of the Minister of National Defence which was in question. I would ask him to keep to that subject so that it may be dealt with. If there are other grievances they can be dealt with in due course.

Mr. Hellyer: I was just coming to the point, which is that a mess dinner is no place for the Minister of National Defence to make a political speech. From the look of the monkey suit the hon. gentleman is wearing tonight—and it is very becoming, incidentally—it appears as though he may have another such engagement. Perhaps it is part of a campaign. Of course, there is an obligation upon people in Canadian public life to point out to the people of this country in plain terms the issues which confront them. Had he been doing this under proper auspices the Minister of National Defence would have been providing a worthwhile public service. The objection which has been raised by my hon. friend is that the minister chose a mess dinner as the occasion on which to launch this particular campaign.

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Trinity has the floor and I would point this out to hon. members who are attempting to usurp it.

Mr. Hellyer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has just said: "How would you know, you were not there?" I am glad the hon.

member asked that question. Earlier today you, yourself, Mr. Speaker, ruling on a matter of public urgency questioned the administrative responsibility of the minister for this particular act but surely when an officer of the Royal Canadian Naval Reserve issues a public release which purports to give the kernel of what the Minister of National Defence said in his speech, this clearly comes within the responsibility of the minister. When this garbled version—garbled according to the minister—got into the hands of the press, the department gave out a somewhat modified version in order to set the record straight in accordance with the version which the minister preferred. Thus it is clear that this matter does come under the minister's responsibility and that it is a real grievance, because this government which has refused to provide the equipment, the mobility and the fire power necessary to the Canadian armed forces now goes to mess dinners in the person of one of its ministers in order to launch campaigns against the very neutralism which this attitude has itself engendered.

In conclusion, may I say that I think the Minister of National Defence should be reprimanded for skating on the constitutional nicety of encouraging members of the armed forces reserve to take an active interest politically in questions which refer to national defence. I think a measure of impropriety is involved here and I should like to hear the minister's comment on this aspect. But apart from the ill chosen vehicle which the minister used in order to make his pronouncement I must say that I think, should he make that speech outside, in the name of freedom we would have to agree with him that in a struggle involving as it does the whole world, a struggle to which the conclusion is not yet in sight, we must stand together in the name of liberty—

An hon. Member: As bird watchers.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Walker: How can the hon. member for Trinity who chaired the Liberal rally advocating their bird watching policy now do a volte face and recommend a "get tough" policy?

Mr. Hellyer: I was about to conclude my remarks but I hope I can have the opportunity to answer the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Trinity has the floor and, as I understand it, he is concluding his remarks.

Mr. Hellyer: The other day someone told me that when the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) goes duck shooting this fall he is going to take a CF-100 with him for artillery, because that is all the use they are at the present time. If this government has money to spend on lame ducks and Bomarc dead pigeons surely it could find something better than that to do in the name of liberty and in the name of standing with our allies.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) said the minister chose a mess dinner in order to make an improper statement. Our grievance is that he chose a dinner to make a mess of Canadian practice and tradition.

An hon. Member: You were there too, were you?

Mr. Herridge: No, but my colleague from Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) read the release issued, I presume, by the armed forces public relations department.

This is a serious matter. This is a departure from Canadian and, shall I say, British tradition when it comes to the armed forces. Here is a minister attending a mess dinner and advising the officers present there to use their influence—to exert a certain political influence, anyway—on those people who, he claims, by their efforts in support of peace—good Canadian citizens in every way—aim, so the minister says, to weaken the will of fellow Canadians.

In the first instance, we in this group think it was highly improper to make such a suggestion to officers of the armed forces of Canada and highly improper to refer to good loyal Canadians who are doing their best to do some of the things which are necessary at this time to build up public interest and public concern with international peace and the direction in which we are going. In contrast to the attitude taken by the minister, look at what has happened in the United States. In the last few days President Kennedy has issued a directive: no more talking from generals and senior officers. That is a democratic procedure. The congress of the United States is the place where the talking should be done. With all respect to the armed forces, it is parliament in all democratic countries which forms policy, and the armed forces take their direction from the parliament concerned.

Now I do want to indicate the obvious contradictions in the policies pursued by the Department of External Affairs and the Department of National Defence as indicated by the attitude taken toward the movement know as the Voice of Women on July 28, 1960. The representatives of that movement came to Ottawa. They received the blessing of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), and I give him full marks for that. They received the blessing of the Secretary of States for External Affairs (Mr. Green); they received the blessing of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Pearson), and they received the blessing of, let me emphasize, the national leader of the C.C.F.

Mr. Chambers: Who is that?

Mr. Herridge: I am referring to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), who leads this group so effectively, so efficiently and with such magnificent results in this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I admit that the hon. member is asking for it, but perhaps if he were given a respectful hearing he would not be encouraged in that line.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the interruptions in the least because it pleases me, Mr. Speaker, to see the whole house listening with intent to what I have to say.

In contrast with the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley), what do those women, who received the blessings of the people I have mentioned, aim to do? They are working for disarmament. Does that weaken our will? They are asking for the abolition of nuclear weapons and their maintenance only by the countries which have them at the present time. They are asking for a United Nations police force, and they are giving consideration to our civil defence and an all-out shelters policy.

Those women have been working effectively, Mr. Speaker. I know some of them are active and prominent in the Conservative party. I know some who are quite active and prominent in the Liberal party, and I would say this, they have more courage, conviction and guts than the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer). They say where they stand.

Those people are doing good work as Canadian citizens in a democratic country, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs informed them only three or four days ago on their second visit to Ottawa. With respect to their activities, a minister of the crown said yesterday that he had received many reasonable and responsible letters from persons who had joined this group and had been influenced by this devoted group of women. There once again be blessed these persons I have mentioned and their work and I think they should be. They are giving consideration to these problems.

It is not a clash of ideas as to whether we shall do this or that in Canada that will weaken our will. What will weaken our will in international affairs, in national affairs and in local affairs is a growing sense of cynicism and indifference to things we should be concerned about. That is the thing that will weaken our will. It is because of people such as these to whom I have referred—we may not agree with all they say but they are good Canadian citizens putting forth their views—that we in this group think it is most unfortunate, most improper, out of line with our Canadian tradition, that the hon. member and gallant Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness)—and I give him full credit in that direction; I know of his record in war—should suggest to the officers of the reserve forces that they should go out and use their influence to defeat the efforts of the very women who have received the blessing of the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Leader of the Opposition, the leader of the hon. member for Trinity, and the national leader of the C.C.F. I protest very strongly. This may seem to be a minor matter, but it is a precedent, it is the first time. I do urge on behalf of this group that the minister give this question very serious consideration. We trust, Mr. Speaker, that after listening to the remarks of the members on the opposition side of the house and having a quiet night of sleep and meditation, he will return in the very near future and correct his unfortunate position in this respect.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the members to your immediate left, the C.C.F. party, have been very well known in the past for their ability to attempt to make mountains out of molehills. I think they have surpassed themselves tonight; they have tried to make a mountain range out of a grain of sand. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) has made various accusations against me based on the story written by a reporter who was not present at the time that the alleged remarks were supposed to have been made and which, as I indicated this afternoon, did not bear a very close resemblance to what I actually said at the mess dinner in question.

A great deal of this talk that we have had from the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) seemed to revolve around nuclear weapons and so on. As I made it extremely clear this afternoon, I made absolutely no mention of nuclear weapons at this particular mess dinner. I did not have them in mind in any way whatever and I think anybody who was present at the mess dinner would be prepared to say that that is so, that there was no mention of them whatever.

Then, of course, the hon. member went on and attempted to state or to give the impression that this is what I was talking about; that then I was attempting in some way to introduce politics and to make political converts, or something else along that line, at the mess dinner. Nothing was further from my mind and nothing, I am absolutely sure, was further from the mind of any member of H.M.C.S. Carleton who was present. The effort, supposition, imagination or whatever you should like to call it on the part of hon. members opposite who tried to make out that there was anything political in the remarks that I made is completely absurd. There was nothing political in them whatever. There was no attempt made and no idea of there being anything political in them, and if my hon. friends in the Liberal party would like to ask the son of one of their senators who was there I think he will completely confirm that that was the situation. Certainly nobody ever raised any such idea or had any idea along that line as far as I am aware, and I am quite sure that this is so because there was no excuse for it at this particular dinner.

I hope this effectively disposes of the two allegations which have been made by hon. members opposite in connection with the remarks I made at this particular mess dinner.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam tried to make a point of the fact that there was a copy of the speech, and then there was none, and so on. Then he said there was something that had been issued by an officer of H.M.C.S. Carleton. I can assure the hon. member and all other hon. members that I went to this mess dinner without any pieces of paper of any kind, and I spoke entirely off the cuff without any notes such as those in my hand, or of any nature whatever and, therefore, naturally there was no copy of the speech.

Mr. Regier: The minister admitted it earlier today.

Mrs. Fairclough: He did not.

Mr. Harkness: I did not admit any such thing; I could not have admitted any such thing because there was no such copy in existence, as a matter of fact. This is just another example of how the hon. member imagines something and then tries to put words in somebody else's mouth and makes completely incorrect accusations.

Mr. Regier: Just read Hansard.

Mr. Harkness: Completely without my knowledge, apparently one of the officers who was present at this mess dinner, and I presume he has the right to do so if he wishes, did put out some sort of account of what went on at the dinner and this was, I presume, issued to the press. However, as far as I am concerned, as far as my office is concerned, there is absolutely nothing to any accusations such as the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) made that there was a modified version issued from my office. I saw this reported in newspaper accounts and I questioned the people in my office. After investigation they came back and told me that this was completely incorrect.

Mr. Hellyer: This came from a very reliable source.

Mr. Harkness: This is another example of the way in which this matter has been blown up out of all recognition and a certain amount of confusion seems to have arisen over it.

Mr. Regier: We could not get anything out of your office.

Mr. Harkness: I should like to make it clear again that at this mess dinner I expressed my opposition to neutralism and to pacifism as expounded by those who advocate unilateral disarmament and so on as far as Canada is concerned, and I expect to continue voicing my opposition to ideas of that kind. I think I would be a very poor minister of national defence if I did anything else. I quite understand that the C.C.F. party has a neutralist and pacifist outlook—

Mr. Regier: That is boloney and you know it.

Mr. Harkness: —and policy.

Mr. Regier: That is boloney.

Mr. Kucherepa: Determined at Regina.

Mr. Harkness: However, I would be very much surprised if any considerable proportion of the Canadian people supports them in that attitude. In fact, I feel quite convinced that the great majority of the Canadian people are just as determined as I am to see that the country's security is properly protected and the country is properly defended.

The hon. member for Trinity, as is usual with the Liberal party with respect to defence matters, was trying to be on both sides of the fence. He applauded the kind of remarks I made but at the same time he tried to say that I should not have made them, that there was a political manoeuvre or something of that sort on my part in making these remarks at this particular mess dinner.

Mr. Hellyer: Very logical and consistent.

Mr. Harkness: Of course, I have already dealt with that point. This is not the time to enter into a debate on defence policy. In fact, Mr. Speaker prevented the hon. member for Trinity from pursuing that line as he was attempting to do, but I must say I was extremely surprised at the general line taken by the hon. member in view of the resolutions passed at the Liberal rally over which he presided as chairman.

Mr. Kucherepa: Phony Liberal policies.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, you ruled that this kind of discussion was out of order and the Minister of National Defence, acknowledging that that ruling has been made, now defies it. I suggest to Your Honour with great respect that the minister should be asked either to take his seat or to take another line altogether because he is now transgressing a ruling that you made.

Mr. Kucherepa: Are you one of the bird watchers, Paul?

Mr. Speaker: I understood that the minister was dealing with some remarks which had been made by the hon. member for Trinity but it is true that he seemed to go beyond that in referring to certain resolutions which have not heretofore been mentioned.

Mr. Kucherepa: They want to forget them.

Mr. Speaker: I shall allow him to continue with the reminder that he himself has already declared that this is not a defence debate.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I agree with your ruling that this is not a defence debate and, as you indicated, I brought up this matter only because the hon. member for Trinity brought it up and was allowed to continue for a considerable length of time. I think it has always been your custom under those circumstances to allow at least a few words in reply—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Not at all.

Mr. Harkness: —when statements of this kind are made. However, I will only say further in connection with the matter that if the Liberal party could for once come down on one side or the other on this particular question or any other question I think they would be a great deal better off than they are in the extremely ambiguous and anomalous position in which they find themselves at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Vancouver East rising on a new matter?

Mr. Winch: On the same grievance.

Mr. Speaker: I do not propose to stop the hon. member but I suggest to him that in order that there may be some systematic procedure during the grievance period hon. members who wish to speak to a grievance should do so before the minister concerned replies. No one rose before the minister but as he does not close the debate the hon. member can proceed on this matter if he wishes to do so.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have listened very carefully to what has just been said by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) and at the outset I want to say that the minister cannot brush this matter aside as being something of no importance. In his opening remarks he stated that we in this group were endeavouring to make a mountain out of a molehill. All I can say is that if it is not a mountain it is a mighty big molehill. The grievance that has been raised is a most important and serious one. It must be or I would not be on my feet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Kucherepa: That is the biggest joke of all.

Mr. Winch: It is quite obvious from the remarks of the Minister of National Defence that as a tactician in the military sense he agrees with the old statement that the best defence is offence because that is exactly the strategy which he used. The grievance that has been raised has nothing whatsoever to do with what is the defence policy or international policy of the C.C.F. or whether we are or are not neutralist or pacifist in our policies. I am not going into that question, except to say that the minister is absolutely wrong there, because that is not the matter before us.

The matter before us is a most serious one. First of all, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), this is what we term a break in tradition with respect to what, according to the press, was said at a meeting addressed by the minister and it is also something which, for a minister, was in exceptionally bad taste. I could not help noting, that in his remarks the Minister of National Defence made some reference to a press report but it must have been noted by all that he did not deny the correctness of the press release issued by the public relations officer of H.M.C.S. Carleton. That press release, which has already been quoted and not denied by the minister, reads in part as follows:

> Turning to considerations of defence in Canada, Mr. Harkness pointed out that pacifist and ban the bomb movements are apparently being encouraged by groups wishing to prevent Canada from being able to make an effective defence effort. Their propaganda is being well disseminated in the country and the personnel of reserve units of the forces should make an effort to combat it. Being in much closer touch with the general population in their daily lives than men of the regular forces—

As I say, it has not been denied and we say that it is in bad taste, that it should not have been done and that it goes beyond tradition with respect to the relationship between a cabinet minister and any segment of the armed forces.

Mr. Speakman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member identify the document from which he read?

Mr. Winch: Yes, I have read from a press release from H.M.C.S. Carleton, Ottawa.

That phase of our grievance has been discussed already by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) and the hon. member for Kootenay West. I should like to speak on a phase of this grievance which is of the utmost seriousness. I refer to the fact that such a statement can only be taken as the policy, the new thinking of the Minister of National Defence, that organizations of Canadian citizens who want to work for peace are basically subversive. This is the only interpretation that can be placed on these remarks which have not been denied, that some of these people are organized to work for peace and to ban the bomb.

It is essential, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada should have an understanding of the position of the minister and, therefore, of the government on the question of banning the bomb and on the question of nuclear weapons, not on whether or not we should have them, but on the question of nuclear weapons themselves. I am going to make this statement as brief as I possibly can.

I had the privilege of being named a parliamentary observer to the United Nations during the first two months of the fifteenth general assembly in New York. During those two months I do not believe I missed a day in the plenary sessions or a day in the No. 1 committee in which matters of this nature were discussed. I believe I heard the representatives of 31 countries speak in that No. 1 committee. I heard the speech which was made by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) in the plenary session. I want to say here that I thought it was an excellent presentation. I had the privilege also of sitting immediately behind the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) when he made his presentation in the No. 1 committee of the proposals put forward on behalf of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order; if I may interrupt the hon. member, it seems to me he is getting afield again. The alleged grievance relates to the advice given by the minister to members of the armed forces at a dinner. It does not relate to defence policy or to meetings of the United Nations. It has to do with a meeting of the defence forces at a mess dinner, and it is within that scope that the matter ought to be discussed.

Mr. Winch: I am completely within that scope. It is not only the fact that the minister made certain statements that is important, but the statements which he has made are imporant. Among those statements is one which can only be construed as an attack on those people who are organized across Canada for the purpose of achieving peace and one of those purposes is to ban the bomb. Surely I can point out the seriousness of what the minister did and the seriousness of what he said.

Mrs. Fairclough: How do you know what he said?

Mr. Winch: He has not denied the P.R.O. report here. He has evaded and dodged, but he has not denied it. He did not deny it when he was approached by other members of the radio, T.V. and press corps. He has not denied it in the House of Commons. I maintain, sir, and I know that you will agree with me, that I have the right to discuss the statement that was made and say that we consider it very serious in relation to the statements I distinctly heard time after time in the United Nations during September, October and November which called for a cessation of nuclear testing, which put forward a policy of non-expansion of nuclear testing and which called for immediate action to get the Geneva committee of ten operating again to achieve complete disarmament. Those are things that were said at the United Nations and which we certainly hoped represented government policy.

If there is to go out in the name of the Minister of National Defence, and not denied, this approach that is reported from H.M.C.S. Carleton, then I say it is a matter of serious import to the people of Canada. They do not know what the policy of this government is, and whether or not it is subversive to go out and advocate the banning of the bomb. What is of even greater importance is the reaction of our friends in the United Nations, and in particular the uncommitted nations. I intend to speak on that particular phase when the opportunity presents itself.

I say that this is not something that can be brushed aside. This is a matter of supreme importance to the Canadian people, not so much the fact that the minister made a speech but what was in the speech. I would not term it a directive because he could not give a directive of this nature, but there was at least a definite inference, an indirect direction, that the reserve officers should use their influence in their daily lives to oppose these movements for peace in Canada along the lines of the ban the bomb movement.

This is a most serious matter. I maintain it is a breach of a cabinet minister's responsibility and something which can only cause confusion in the public mind and in the international mind, something to be most roundly condemned and most bitterly attacked. The minister should exhibit a greater sense of responsibility when he speaks as a minister, whether in this house or outside of it, because whether he likes it or not he does speak as a cabinet minister. The most important thing is not whether he knew the statement would be reported, but what the views of the minister were. I take this matter so seriously in its national and international implications that I believe, unless the minister tells us here and now that this report which he has ignored so far is completely incorrect and that he did not infer anything like that, there is only one thing for the minister to do and that is the decent thing as would be done in Great Britain, immediately resign his portfolio.

Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the government can take some satisfaction from the fact that the only matter the opposition can find upon which to raise a grievance on the first occasion on which an opportunity is presented is a report of what someone said that someone else said that the minister said at a dinner at which no notes were taken. It seems to me that both this afternoon when this matter was first raised, and this evening, the minister has been most clear in explaining, first of all, what he said and, second, how it came about that the press report was in the form in which it appears. He is the Minister of National Defence. He was speaking to members of the armed forces and he spoke on defence. Upon what else would he speak? He expressed his opinion because he is a man who has the courage to express his opinion on this matter.

However, he has made it clear, and the press release that was read out a few minutes ago makes it clear if it is read carefully, that he advocated no political action on the part of his audience; that he did not oppose those who advocate peace. Surely, no government, no group in the history of this country has a greater record in the search for peace and disarmament than this government.

Mr. Peters: Nobody made more promises either.

Mr. Chambers: This was not a question of promises. This was action in the United Nations, action at Geneva and action right in this House of Commons in giving expression to the policies.

Mr. Hellyer: Failure in the United Nations, failure at Geneva and failure in the House of Commons.

Mr. Chambers: It is a new line that the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) is taking when he says that Canada was responsible for the failure at Geneva.

Mr. Hellyer: I did not say it was responsible. Just that its success is indicated by the results.

Mr. Chambers: There is a difference, Mr. Speaker, between being in favour of peace and working for peace through the international media that are provided for that work and advocating unilateral disarmament. There is a difference also, I suggest, between those who honestly and from conviction advocate that point of view and those groups who for their own particular and suspicious purposes may foster these movements. I think a close reading of the press release, if indeed it reflects the words of the minister, will show that distinction was made.

However, we have had here this afternoon two extremely interesting demonstrations, one on the part of the C.C.F. party who are attempting to take unto themselves the mantle of being the only group in this country who are in favour of peace and that on the part of the hon. member for Trinity who has announced the third Liberal defence policy in the period of about a month.

Nowhere, Mr. Speaker, has there been the slightest substantiation in any of the speeches made from across the floor of the house of the allegations that the minister in any way acted improperly or the allegation that he did anything in fact but get to his feet and honestly express his opinions on the defence of this country.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Skeena rising to speak on the same matter?

Mr. Howard: On the same subject matter, Mr. Speaker, yes. I have only two or three brief comments to make, some of them occasioned by the remarks of the hon. member who just took his seat. I point out to him that because we have such an inept, bungling government in the house, that this is not the only subject matter that could be made the point of discussion this evening.

An hon. Member: What about divorce?

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend may be desirous of obtaining one or he may need one, but that is his problem not mine.

An hon. Member: "Honi soit qui mal y pense."

Mr. Howard: There is that nasty innuendo again.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member precipitated the comment by a personal reference which had nothing to do with the subject under discussion.

Mr. Howard: The reason that this matter is raised is the extreme and immediate seriousness of it. It is more than a question of differences of opinion in the cabinet which are quite obvious. It is a question of the very lives of the people of this nation and of other nations. The very lives of children are involved if we are going to embark on a program directed to the end of becoming a nuclear power and if we are going to follow the program advocated by the Liberals when they were in office. I do not know what they are advocating now, really; their policy moves too fast for me to keep up with it. But the program advocated by that party and by the government in office, that is the ultimate end to which it is leading. That is the reason the matter is raised.

It is a serious question of war or peace. It is not a question of accusations about positions or unilateral disarmament, whether or not they are advocated by anyone in this house. It is a matter of action by the minister and of the split personality that exists in the cabinet over this matter. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it cannot be brushed aside or be pushed off into one corner by some—and I use this word in a general sense—scurrilous innuendos, without naming the people to whom they are directed.

As the parliamentary secretary indicated, the activity of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) was not improper. It is his responsibility as minister to speak his mind. But it is the statement that he made to promote in the armed services political activity, attempting to undo all the fine work in this matter by people like Dr. Schweitzer, Dr. Linus Pauling and others. I submit that this is the result of straight absolute confusion in the minds of the government about this matter. This is the effect of the statements of the Minister of National Defence.

I listened with interest to the comments of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer). It is obvious that he still thinks he is associate minister of national defence in exhibiting that sort of schizophrenia for which the Liberal party is responsible. I have in my hand a document; I will be gracious and call it by that name. It is entitled "The Record Speaks". It is published by the Conservative association of Canada, I presume.

An hon. Member: Have you read it?

Mr. Howard: Yes, I have read it.

An hon. Member: It is good is it not? There is nothing wrong with it.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member says there is nothing wrong with it. It is full of falsehoods. I will relate them at another point.

An hon. Member: You are losing your sense of humour.

Mr. Howard: When I look at my hon. friends my sense of humour picks up.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is taking off at a tangent, if I may say so. If he wishes to relate the document to the grievance, I suggest that he do it before he pursues it.

Mr. Howard: I had fully intended to do so immediately but I was being pushed to one side by hon. members who remain in their seats. On page 14 of this document—I do not know whether it is a serial story or what it is—this particular piece of fiction, there are some quotations from the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) at the United Nations, September 26, 1960, a period of time to which my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) referred. Like my friend the hon. member for Vancouver East I think they are excellent comments dealing with this self-same subject matter. I wish to quote from "The Record Speaks". You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that the colour has changed. It is getting to be a paler and paler blue all the time.

An hon. Member: You are getting deeper in the red.

Mr. Howard: In the financial part it gets deeper in the red. As found at page 14, the Prime Minister said this:

> I have frequently had occasion to urge publicly the end of nuclear weapons, the systematic control of missiles designed to deliver nuclear weapons of mass destruction,—

And so on.

> Canada over and over again has advocated an end to nuclear testing.

He is another one who would ban the bomb, another one of those individuals whom the Minister of National Defence would like to send his charges off to quell. The country is full of people who believe explicitly in what the Prime Minister said. But the more that we get statements by the Minister of Agriculture or rather, the Minister of National Defence—and I keep thinking of him as the Minister of Agriculture—it is obvious that he is going to make as much of a mess of this department also as he did of that one.

In any event, statements of this nature made by the Minister of National Defence, which by his silence must be accepted as factual, unless he now, in a belated way, wants to repudiate them and say he did not make them, will within this country undo all the good that has been done, as I said, by people like Dr. Schweitzer and Dr. Linus Pauling and the 2,000 scientists who signed the petition, and the work that has been advocated by the Prime Minister at the United Nations. It will also undo the work that has been done by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) on the disarmament question. All this work could well be unravelled, undone, emasculated and ruined by irresponsible statements of the nature of those attributed to the Minister of National Defence.

It is perhaps obvious that his long attachment with the Department of Agriculture got him in close association with what is decently referred to as fertilizer and which is now slopping over into defence policy.

An hon. Member: That is your level.

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on this matter which has been brought up by the C.C.F. tonight is, as the minister has said, trying to make a mountain out of a grain of sand. It is just another illustration of the tactics they have carried on in this house.

No man and no government in this country is more interested in disarmament and the abolition of nuclear weapons than the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and this government. But it is our duty to protect this country. We have never been known as an aggressive country. We are a country wishing to protect ourselves and the western hemisphere. It seems to me—and this is my own opinion and I have a right to that opinion—that that little corner down there would like to see our defences weakened by the abolition of nuclear weapons so that their big brothers from Russia could overrun this country.

I say that on these grounds, and I will quote a few remarks that I have here. Even the late Mr. Woodsworth, the first leader of the C.C.F. party, confessed on February 1, 1933, in the house of Commons:

> It may well be that force may prove inevitable.

Then we go on to 1943, when the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) made that notable speech in Calgary. This has been recounted before, but I think it should go on record again. These are his words, as reported by the Calgary Herald:

> Asked about the position of the police and military forces in the event of moves for a change, Mr. Winch said that when "we become the government we will introduce socialism immediately," and would use the power of the police and the military forces to force those opposed to obey the law. "Those who defied the government's will would be treated as criminals," he declared, adding "If capitalism says no, then we know the answer—so did Russia".

These are the statements on which I am basing my opinion. There are one or two more. There is the statement made by Mr. Woodsworth on April 23, 1935:

> "The socialist", Mr. Woodsworth says, "stands for the abolition of capitalism".

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I may be confused, but may I ask you whether the grievance is regarding a speech made by myself allegedly in 1943, or is it in reference to a speech made a couple of days ago by the Minister of National Defence?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member who has the floor would indicate how he relates these matters to the point of grievance.

Mr. Smallwood: I am just relating the reasons why they are bringing up this matter. They want us to give up nuclear weapons so that their big brothers in Russia can take over. I just have one more statement. This was reported in the Calgary Herald.

Mr. Winch: If it is mine, I hope it is correct this time.

Mr. Smallwood: Speaking to a C.C.F. rally of 1,000 people on April 23, 1935, Mr. Woodsworth made this clear and unequivocal declaration:

> The doctrines of the C.C.F. are the doctrines of the united front or communist, and all that keeps us apart is a difference of tactics and a suspicion of insincerity.

That is why this matter has been brought up tonight. They do not want nuclear weapons in Canada for the simple reason that they want their big brothers in Russia to overrun this country, and we in this capitalist country do not want that.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised how such a simple little grievance—

Mr. Speaker: Are your remarks on the same matter?

Mr. Peters: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am surprised how such a simple little grievance should raise such a storm of protest. It would seem to me that the minister in this case made a speech at H.M.C.S. Carleton. I think he admits that. I think he also admits that he stated a new policy as far as the reservists of Canada are concerned.

As an active military man over the years, with a good reputation, and getting into a department now that he should know something about—certainly more so than in the previous department—I am not surprised to find that he has asked his reservists to do something that he wishes to be done.

Reading the press statement we come to the conclusion that the reservists in Canada are going to be asked to help the minister in this way, "Let us get as big an appropriation out of my cabinet colleagues as possible and we will keep all you boys employed".

I do not blame the minister for this, if he wishes to do it and has the inclination. If he is, as the minister was, asked to make that statement, then he should make it. But I think the question now is not whether the C.C.F. is interested in banning the bomb, or whether we are neutralists, or what our position is going to be, but whether the minister agrees with the statements he is reported to have made at a meeting that he attended.

I think it is that simple. If this is a new policy of the Conservative party, then I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) should be told; I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) should be told, because we have three or four different policies going around. We in the opposition are entitled to know what the stand of the government is.

I do not believe we will ever find out what the Liberal stand is; we cannot follow them. If we are going to have airplanes, we can bird-watch; if we have no airplanes we cannot even do that. So I am not particularly concerned with what they stand for. I am concerned with the fact that the Canadian reservists should have an honest appraisal of what they are doing. If we are going to ask them to go out and spread our military strength, the fact that our country has a capable defence, then I think the minister should say so. He should be quite proud to say that that is his opinion and go on from that supposition.

If he was misquoted in this case; if he did not say that, he should say so. It is true that over the years reservists have been allowed much more freedom than the active army, the active air force or navy, who have been told they are not to participate in political action of any description except by special request, although allowance was made for certain people in the services to declare themselves political candidates during the period of war. With that exception they have not been able to do what the reservists have been able to do; but they are not acting in the line of duty.

If this is a change in policy—and it appears to us to be a change—then I think the minister should say so. But if he says this, I think he must go much further and make the statement that is requested by the opposition. He should give out information that is contrary to that being propagated by "ban the bomb" and other pacificist organizations. He should be in a position to give to the reservists more than just the speech that he gave off the cuff. He must come out with the new policy so that the reservists will have some opportunity at least of being informed, or half as well informed as the opposition.

The Prime Minister is giving leadership, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is giving leadership to those who say we should work toward disarmament and peace, toward banning the bomb. I think that at least the reservists should be given enough information so that they are not going to look silly putting forth a half-baked scheme that the minister may get up for his amusement for an after-dinner speech.

As I see it, that is all that is involved in this particular matter. If the minister has been misquoted, if he does not believe these things, then he should say so. If he does believe them he should have the gumption, in my opinion, to stand up and say, "I said them; I stand behind them, and if the other cabinet members do not like it they can go jump in the lake".

(Translation):

Mr. Louis Fortin (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I listened, along with everybody else, to the remarks of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) and, surprisingly enough, with my limited experience of only two and a half years in this house, I managed to understand fully the explanation provided when old-timers of the parliamentary scene do not seem to understand it or at least are not willing to understand it.

We are called upon at times to account to our constituents for the work being done in the House of Commons. I believe it would be very difficult to explain to those who elected us the hour and a half we spent tonight discussing this problem.

The government has to find answers to serious problems. Some important legislation is awaiting our consideration. And we are being asked now to spend an hour and a half to discuss a matter that the minister might have raised some place.

Mr. Speaker, for my part, I would rather consider, first of all, the military record of the Minister of National Defence and then his accomplishments both political and administrative. What he told us tonight in this house is worth a lot more than all those reports which were read to us and whose origin cannot even be ascertained.

I would rather stick to the tradition existing in this house and which gives a member claiming to have been misquoted, let us say, in the newspapers the opportunity to explain the situation and to have his word accepted by his colleagues.

The Minister of National Defence explained to us tonight what had taken place. I think we should all accept his word of honour. Second, he has witnessed and lived through the very events that he related.

Consequently, we are faced here with only hearsay such as the C.C.F. party like to spread. They preferred to rely on what they may have read.

The minister, who naturally was present on that occasion, told us exactly what had taken place, and I feel his word should be accepted. More especially as the position he holds is so closely connected with the one occupied by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) and both these gentlemen, let me emphasize it, have done a lot to bring about a well balanced and controlled disarmament.

At all events, I think this debate will have been a good thing since it will have indicated that our people—who are so much interested everywhere in the work done by the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs—can be very happy about the task performed by these two ministers.

I am not suggesting that this debate was begun in bad faith, I am only suggesting that it will nevertheless have been beneficial to the people.

Mr. J. A. Habel (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, on this same grievance I will say only a few words. Indeed tonight's discussion should produce good results, I hope.

Not too long ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) stated that the Conservative party failed to make its record known to the Canadian people. Ever since that statement was made, we have noted that ministers, took turns in delivering speeches here and there. Saturday's speech was one of the series; quite often however, those same ministers have had, not to retract, I would not say that, but they had to correct newspaper reports.

An hon. Member: To clarify.

Mr. Habel: To clarify, if you like. Then, to use the words of Mr. John Bird, I say that he was perfectly right when he blamed the present government, whose fault is not to keep its record secret but to talk too much.

Therefore, the ministers had better agree before making statements; then they would not have to take the time of the house afterwards to correct newspaper reports.

(Text):

Motion (Mr. Fleming, Eglinton) agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration branch—

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

47. Departmental administration, $1,001,840.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

76. Departmental administration, $6,924,915.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

165. Departmental administration, including annual contribution of $200 to the conference of commissioners on uniformity of legislation in Canada and $167,500 as grants to recognized private after-care agencies as may be approved by treasury board, $1,194,583.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

255. Departmental administration, $1,821,267.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

308. Departmental administration, including Canada's share of the upkeep of the international bureaux at Berne and Montevideo, $2,174,216.

Proceedings reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I have an indication of what the business is to be tomorrow and Thursday?

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow we shall continue the debate on the motion setting up the committee on broadcasting. This would be followed by consideration of the budget resolutions of which there are two, to be taken in this order—the one dealing with customs tariffs and the second dealing with income tax. If we finish the budget resolutions we will consider the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration on Friday.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 1, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON JANUARY 31

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might rise on a question of privilege regarding some remarks of mine and another hon. member which appear in Hansard for yesterday on page 1607. During the debate, as recorded on that page, an unidentified hon. member said:

What about divorce?

Then in the heat of the moment I replied, and my remarks appear on page 1608, as follows:

My hon. friend may be desirous of obtaining one or he may need one, but that is his problem not mine.

I should like to express my regret, Mr. Speaker, and apologize to the hon. member, whoever he was, for having made that statement.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PERMISSION TO REVERT TO MOTIONS AT 5.45 P.M.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have an announcement to make on government policy which, for business reasons, I do not want to make until 5.45 this afternoon. I request the permission of the house to revert to motions at that time, in order that I may make the announcement at 5.45 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: I think the house has heard the minister's request that he be given leave to revert to motions this afternoon at 5.45 p.m. so that he may make an announcement which can be conveniently made at that time and not now. Has the minister unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Alan Macnaughton (Mount Royal) presented the first report of the standing committee on public accounts and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES—FIRST REPORT

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Huron) presented the first report of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and asked for unanimous consent to move that the report be concurred in.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to give unanimous consent to going ahead today.

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of unanimous consent, the motion cannot be accepted at this time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—FIRST REPORT

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East) presented the first report of the standing committee on external affairs, and asked for unanimous consent to move that the report be concurred in.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to give unanimous consent.

BANKING AND COMMERCE—FIRST REPORT

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport) presented the first report of the standing committee on banking and commerce, and asked for unanimous consent to move that the report be concurred in.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to give unanimous consent.

MARINE AND FISHERIES—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. L. R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg) presented the first report of the standing committee on marine and fisheries, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary) presented the first report of the standing committee on privileges and elections, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Industrial Relations Committee

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE RILLS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORE OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax) presented the first report of the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. R. H. Small (Danforth) presented the first report of the standing committee on industrial relations and asked for unanimous consent to move that the report be concurred in.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not refuse to accede to the request of the hon. gentleman for unanimous consent, but I would point out the inadequacy of this report—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no subject matter before the house for debate at the moment. If unanimous consent is given the motion will be put and then may be dealt with; otherwise I must reject the motion. Does the house give unanimous consent that the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Small) present this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this report does not give a true indication of what transpired at the committee meeting. This was an organization meeting for the purpose of electing the chairman and arranging for the routine business of the committee. I may say, incidentally, that I was very happy to support the nomination of the hon. gentleman as chairman of this committee. On that one subject there was unanimity. I, of course, had a special opportunity to be able to attest to the great experience of the hon. gentleman as chairman of parliamentary committees.

However, it was proposed at the committee meeting this morning that since the committee had not been assigned any particular functions by this house, and since the committee should be put to work, we should ask the house for authority to examine into the state of the unemployment insurance fund, which is now in a perilous state.

This motion was not supported and was overwhelmingly defeated by all members supporting the government. The report of the hon. gentleman should have stated that there had been a request made by some members of the committee—

Some hon. Members: One.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. gentlemen say "why?" It is because in the judgment of those of us who belong to this party the state of the fund is such that parliament should examine into its condition at the earliest possible moment.

(Translation):

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, following the remarks made by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), I should like to say a few words about what took place this morning during the meeting of the committee in question.

It was understood that this morning's sitting was only for organization purposes and it was agreed that the question raised by the hon. member for Essex East would not be considered on that occasion. It is simply a recurrence of what happened last year. The hon. member for Essex East wants to make the headlines and it is only a big flare-up he staged in the house.

(Text):

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I do not intend to get involved in the debate as to what happened in the committee meeting this morning, because I was not there.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): That is my complaint. The hon. member for Peterborough and myself are members of that committee but we did not receive notice of this morning's meeting. That is the reason I was not there this morning. As far as the hon. member's speech is concerned, I think we could deal with that at a more appropriate time.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Before any other member enters into the discussion may I point out that although this motion is debatable, the subject before the house is only the report itself. Hon. members are not supposed to go behind or beyond the report; it is irregular to refer to what transpired in the committee. An hon. member may express opposition to the report, of course, and say it is not complete, but this is not the time to debate what went on in the committee.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I was rising merely to take exception to something said by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot which was inaccurate. The hon. member said there was a repetition of what took place last year. I just want to remind the house of what did happen last year. This has nothing to do with the proceedings of the committee reported in the motion now before us, but it has to do with the report. What happened last year was this. An attempt to investigate unemployment was defeated in the committee and the investigation took place in another place. I hope we are not going to have a repetition of that this year.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Small) which was agreed to on the following division:

DIVORCE

PROVISION FOR OFFICE OF PARLIAMENTARY PROCTOR, REGULATION OF COSTS, ETC.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-64 to establish the office of parliamentary proctor and to regulate taxation of costs.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Peters: The first purpose of this bill is to establish the office of a proctor to examine into parliamentary divorce proceedings. This is particularly essential because this house has passed a bill which eliminates all effective appeal procedures. If this bill were passed people would be able to appeal to the proctor, and I believe the other place is very interested in that.

Second, this bill would allow the Minister of Justice to refer appeals to the proctor rather than to his own department because, as he himself has said, constitutionally these appeals are probably not within his jurisdiction. Third, this bill would establish a joint committee of the two houses which would have the right to set up rates to be charged by the various people concerned with divorce petitions such as lawyers, parliamentary agents, detectives and others, with a view to lowering the cost of parliamentary divorce proceedings.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

STARRED QUESTIONS

USE OF JAPANESE CEMENT, Y.T.

Question No. 62—Mr. Mitchell (for Mr. Hardie):

1. Is cement imported from Japan being used in works undertaken for the federal government in the Yukon Territory?
2. Is cement imported from Japan being used in works in the Yukon Territory undertaken under the federal winter works program?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, could this question stand?

Mr. Chevrier: We would like an answer to this question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of the hon. member in whose name shall the question stand? It has been requested, but I would think—

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member for Sudbury moved for the hon. member for Mackenzie River (Mr. Hardie).

Mr. Mitchell: The hon. member for Mackenzie River is not here, and I do not know when he will be returning.

Mr. Dinsdale: I asked that the question stand out of courtesy to the hon. member for Mackenzie River. I can give a reply if that is required.

The answer to question No. 1 is no.

The answer to question No. 2 is no.

[Mr. Peters.]

CAMPBELLTON-CROSS POINT BRIDGE, N.B.—TENDERS FOR FEDERAL SHARE

Question No. 64—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Have tenders been called for the federal share of the Campbellton-Cross Point bridge?
2. If so: (a) what was the name of each tenderer and the amount submitted? (b) to whom was the tender awarded?
3. Is it expected that the work will be completed for the amount tendered?
4. If not: (a) have any estimates been made of the extras to be paid to the contractor? (b) what amount has been paid to the contractor to date? (c) what amount remains to be paid when the work is completed?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I ask that this question be made an order for return. The answer is long and complicated and contains a great many figures.

Mr. Speaker: Order for return.

PERCENTAGE OF LABOUR FORCE UNEMPLOYED

Question No. 70—Mr. Chevrier:

In what years between 1945 and 1957 was the percentage of the Canadian labour force which was unemployed higher than in 1960?

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): The answer to this question is as follows. The percentage of the Canadian labour force which was unemployed, based on annual averages, in the years 1946 to 1960, inclusive, follow:

1949	2.8
1951	2.4
1952	2.9
1954	4.6
1955	4.4
1956	3.4
1957	4.6
1958	7.1
1960	7.0

The annual averages for 1945 are not available.

UNEMPLOYED AS PERCENTAGE OF LABOUR FORCE, 1936-40

Question No. 75—Mr. Knowles:

What was the number of unemployed for each year, 1936 to 1940 inclusive, measured as an average percentage of the civilian labour force?

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): The answer is as follows:

Canadian labour force surveys were commenced in November, 1945, and for earlier years the only labour force data available are estimates for the single month of June.

These estimates and the methods used in constructing them have been published in the dominion bureau of statistics reference paper No. 23 (revised), entitled "Canadian Labour Force Estimates 1931-1945". The civilian labour force for that period has been divided into persons with jobs and persons without jobs and seeking work. June estimates of persons without jobs and seeking work expressed as a percentage of June labour force estimates are shown following, for the years 1936 to 1940 inclusive.

The concept here covers only persons without jobs and seeking work, while the present definition includes persons on temporary lay-off of up to 30 days as well. It should be noted also that June is a month of high employment, so that the proportions of the civilian labour force without jobs and seeking work would undoubtedly be much higher in the winter months of these years.

Year	Persons without jobs and seeking work as a percentage of the Canadian civilian labour force
1936 — June	12.8
1937 — June	9.1
1938 — June	11.4
1939 — June	11.4
1940 — June	9.2

If the present definition of unemployment were used for this period the figures would be increased. It has been estimated that on a comparable basis the proportion of unemployed would then be as follows:

1936 — June	13.5
1937 — June	9.6
1938 — June	12.0
1939 — June	12.0
1940 — June	9.7

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The figures are all for the month of June. That is a very inaccurate statement.

FEDERAL PRINTING DONE OUTSIDE CANADA

Question No. 78—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Is any printing done for the government outside Canada?

2. If so, what, in each case, is the nature of the printing and the reason for having it done outside the country?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): The answer to this question is as follows in so far as the Department of Public Printing and Stationery is concerned:

1. Yes.

2. (a) Reprints of articles in technical periodicals published outside Canada. Not available in Canada.

(b) Printing for local offices of the departments of external affairs, trade and commerce, citizenship and immigration, located outside Canada. For local use and distribution.

Starred Questions

MRS. JEANNE SAUVÉ

Question No. 80—Mr. Pigeon:

1. For how many years has Mrs. Jeanne Sauve, of Montreal, been employed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (French network)?

2. What is her annual salary, including her casual fees?

3. Do the regulations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation permit a permanent employee of the said corporation to take part in official political meetings?

4. If not, in what capacity has Mrs. Jeanne Sauve participated recently in the national Liberal party convention, held a short time ago at Ottawa?

(Translation):

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows:

1. Mrs. Jeanne Sauve is not on the staff of the corporation. She is a reporter and commentator whose services have been required now and then on the basis of one program at a time.

2. She is not paid on a yearly basis but rather for each engagement. It is believed that it would be contrary to the public interest and that of the corporation to reveal the amounts paid to individuals, since it might hinder the corporation when entering into negotiations for the services of commentators and others.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wish hon. members would contain their satisfaction or the reverse or whatever it is that is troubling them until the question has been answered.

(Translation):

Mr. Lambert: 3. No.

4. It is quite possible that Mrs. Sauve took part in the recent Liberal rally, but the corporation is not aware of the fact and does not know in what capacity Mrs. Sauve might have been there.

(Text):

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—DREDGING CONTRACTS

Question No. 81—Mr. Pigeon:

1. Have all contracts dealing with the dredging of the St. Lawrence seaway, from the beginning up to 1957, been awarded to the lowest tenderer?

2. If not, in what year have contracts been awarded to persons other than the lowest tenderer, and how many such contracts were awarded?

3. What are the names of those contractors and for what amounts were such contracts so awarded?

4. In each case, what was the difference in price, as compared to the lowest tenderer?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence seaway authority advise that the answer to part 1 is yes. In view of the answer to part 1, parts 2, 3 and 4 are not applicable.

C.B.C. SHORTWAVE BROADCASTING TO WESTERN EUROPE

Question No. 82—Mr. Regier:

1. Has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation recently arrived at a decision to reduce or abolish its short wave radio broadcasting in foreign languages to western Europe?

2. If so, what are the reasons for this decision?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this question was raised the other day in the debate on the motion to set up a committee by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), and I propose to deal with it in more detail, I hope, in a few minutes. However, in answer to the specific question I would say that the answer is yes, the international programs have been curtailed in western Europe in certain countries and so far as shortwave broadcasting is concerned, we are taking advantage of the modern facilities for rebroadcasting our own programs over the facilities which exist there. I am informed that we should be able to give better service than we have given heretofore.

The reason for this curtailment is the fact that we are expanding our facilities in Africa and also to cover the north country. As a result, it has been necessary to improve the service and possibly reduce the expenditure.

ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM, MINAKI, ONT.

Question No. 83—Mr. Benidickson:

Under the roads to resources program has a request been received for federal government participation in the construction of a road to serve the base metal properties situate near Werner lake, northwest of Minaki, Ontario, either (a) from the province of Manitoba involving a road outlet in a westerly direction; or (b) from the province of Ontario involving a road outlet in Ontario in a southeasterly direction?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The answer to the question is as follows:

The base metal properties near Werner lake lie in Ontario close to the Manitoba boundary. A road from the existing Manitoba road network to the Ontario boundary, leading toward Werner lake, is included in the roads to resources program for Manitoba. It is described in the agreement as the Oiseau lake road. It is my understanding that a low standard road constructed by the mining company now exists between the Werner lake mining area and the eastern terminus of the Oiseau lake road at the Ontario-Manitoba boundary.

The province of Ontario at one time during the planning of its roads to resources program proposed two roads in the Werner lake mining area, but later dropped these proposals.

COLUMBIA RIVER POWER DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 84—Mr. Webster:

1. (a) What is the net amount of electrical power capacity, in kilowatts, to be made available for Canadian use in the Columbia river power treaty? (b) how much of this capacity will be firm, that is, able to produce 8760 kilowatt hours? (c) what is the estimated annual load factor, compared with the planned installed capacity?

2. (a) What will be the initial costs to Canada for the dams and plants? (b) what annual costs? (c) what are the estimated costs in terms of firm and secondary capacity? (d) what will be the cost to Canada of these kilowatt hours at 100 per cent load factor?

3. What is Canada's (B.C.'s) ability to absorb this power?

4. How much timber, agricultural, recreational or other potential income producing land will be flooded both in the Upper Columbia and the Kootenay?

5. What are the anticipated revenues accruing to Canada from the United States?

6. What annual rental fee for these installations will be paid to the British Columbia government? (As is the case in the province of Quebec).

7. What is the accumulated cost to Canada to date, for the studies made around this prospective development?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): In view of the fact that the answer to this question would be rather lengthy, I wonder whether the hon. member would be agreeable to having it made an order for return?

Mr. Webster: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Order for return.

TAX RENTAL ARRANGEMENTS—FEDERAL PAYMENTS

Question No. 85—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. What was the total amount of payments to the provincial governments plus deductions allowed from federal taxes under the tax rental arrangements in force in the fiscal year 1956-1957?

2. What was the total amount of payments to the provincial governments plus reductions allowed of federal taxes under the tax-sharing legislation in the fiscal year 1957-1958?

3. Was any part of the amount referred to in part 2 of this question provided by virtue of legislation enacted after June 21, 1957?

4. What was the amount of payments to the provincial governments plus reductions allowed of federal taxes attributable to the additional 3 per cent of personal income tax allowed in the fiscal years 1958-1959 and 1959-1960?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The answer is as follows:

1. The total amount of payments to the provincial governments plus estimated deductions allowed from federal taxes under the tax rental arrangements in force in the fiscal year 1956-57 was $523.3 million.

2. The total amount of payments to the provincial governments plus estimated reductions allowed of federal taxes under the tax-sharing legislation in the fiscal year 1957-58 was $628.9 million.

3. No.

4. The amount of payments to the provincial governments plus estimated reductions allowed of federal taxes attributable to the additional 3 per cent of personal income tax allowed was $55.9 million in the fiscal year 1958-59, and $67.2 million in the fiscal year 1959-60.

FINANCING OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PAYMENTS

Question No. 86—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Are unemployment insurance payments being financed at the present time through the sale of securities?
2. If so, what is the amount of the losses incurred through such sales during the last six months?
3. If securities are not being sold to finance unemployment insurance payments, are such payments being financed through advances by the government?
4. If so, what is the total amount of these advances for the months of November, December, 1960 and January, 1961?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The answer is as follows:

1. In part.
2. $2,032,744.80.
3. No.
4. Answered by No. 3.

RESOURCES FOR TOMORROW CONFERENCE

Question No. 87—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the federal government, in planning for the resources for tomorrow conference advanced the view or argument that (a) the conference give consideration to such problems as cost-benefit analyses which would determine the priorities that resource development projects should be given; and/or (b) the conference should consider the question of foreign ownership of capital in the resource industries, in relation to the over-all source of capital for resource development and the best means to channel Canadian funds into such development?
2. If so, what has been the result in terms of (a) background papers; (b) assignment of time at conference to these topics; (c) co-operation of the other participants?
3. Have any departments of the government other than northern affairs been approached to advise the conference arrangers on the matters of cost-benefit analysis or foreign ownership of capital?
4. If so, which departments and their branches?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The answer is as follows:

1. (a) (b) In planning the resources for tomorrow conference, the conference secretariat is providing for consideration of such problems as cost-benefit analyses and capital requirements for resource development.

2. One background paper is being prepared on benefit-cost analysis and another paper will deal with capital requirements. The provinces have all agreed that discussion of these matters will take place at the conference.

The answer to question 3 is that other departments have been consulted in the matter of cost-benefit analysis and capital requirements.

Starred Questions

The answer to question 4 is that the departments of agriculture, finance, fisheries, forestry, mines and technical surveys, national health and welfare, and trade and commerce have been consulted.

C.B.C. INFORMATION PROGRAMS—PRESS GALLERY PARTICIPATION

Question No. 88—Mr. Brassard (Lapointe):

What are the names of the press gallery members who have taken part, from January 1, to December 31, 1960, in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation information programs on the radio and television French network, such as Conférence de Presse, Tribune libre, Nouvelles, Commentaires, and Le Tour des Capitales?

(Translation):

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard), I am informed by the C.B.C. that the following members of the press gallery have taken part in programs on the French radio and television network during 1960: Miss Francoise Cote, Messrs. Clement Brown, Jean Grand-Landau, Langevin Cote, Marcel Gingras, Jean-Marc Poliquin, Amedee Gaudreault, Lorenzo Pare, Tim Creery, Philip Dean, Francois Morisset, Claude Paulette, Norman DePoe, Jean Charpentier and Gerard Morin.

ESKASONI INDIAN RESERVE—HIGH SCHOOL FACILITIES

Question No. 89—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. What arrangements are provided for high school students at the Eskasoni Indian reserve?
2. Are these facilities adequate?
3. Have any complaints been registered by the chief or band council of this reserve in regard to the school facilities provided for high school students?
4. Have any complaints been registered by anyone in this regard?
5. What financial arrangements are in effect for the tuition of these students?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer to question 1 is, the department provides transportation for students who live on the reserve to attend the provincially operated East Bay high school at McCormack. Students who cannot be accommodated at East Bay high school are given financial assistance to enable them to board close to other schools which they can attend.

The answer to question 2 is yes.

The answer to questions 3 and 4 is, no complaints from any source about the high school facilities for Indian pupils at Eskasoni have been received in the department.

The answer to question 5 is that this department assumes full responsibility for tuition, text books and supplies for all students of the Eskasoni reserve who are attending high school. Where students have to be boarded away from home, assistance is provided in accordance with the need, with parents contributing to the extent of their financial ability.

KITWANGA INDIAN BAND—POSSESSION OF RESERVE

Question No. 91—Mr. Howard:

1. Has the Kitwanga Indian band communicated any allegations to the government or to any agency or branch thereof to the effect that persons other than Indians are or have been (a) unlawfully in occupation or possession of; (b) claiming adversely the right to occupation or possession of; or (c) trespassing upon a reserve since January 1, 1958?

2. If so, has any information been exhibited in the Exchequer Court of Canada on behalf of the said band, what is the nature of the information, and the results thereof?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the first question is yes. In a letter to the superintendent of the Babine Indian agency dated June 4, 1959, the council of the Kitwanga band expressed concern about alleged trespass by the British Columbia department of highways on their reserves. A copy of this letter was included in correspondence provided in response to notice of motion No. 15 by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) of November 24, 1960.

The answer to the second question is no.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CANADA SHIPPING ACT—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING SEWAGE DISPOSAL

Question No. 62—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government received representations from any body requesting an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act to require all ships using great lakes or connecting rivers to be equipped with containers for sewage, oil, and other refuse, and to require ships to deposit such refuse in municipal disposal sewer systems?

2. If so, from whom have such representations been received, and what reply was made?

CAMPBELLTON-CROSS POINT BRIDGE, N.B.—TENDERS FOR FEDERAL SHARE

Question No. 64—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Have tenders been called for the federal share of the Campbellton-Cross Point bridge?

2. If so: (a) what was the name of each tenderer and the amount submitted? (b) to whom was the tender awarded?

3. Is it expected that the work will be completed for the amount tendered?

4. If not: (a) have any estimates been made of the extras to be paid to the contractor? (b) what amount has been paid to the contractor to date? (c) what amount remains to be paid when the work is completed?

[Mrs. Fairclough.]

FEDERAL PROPERTY, NORTHERN ONTARIO

Question No. 65—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the government of Canada or its agencies held or now hold ownership of real property within the cities of Port Arthur, Fort William and the municipalities of Neebing and Paipoonge?

2. If so, has any of this property been sold or transferred to other ownership in 1959 or 1960?

3. If so, to whom, to what purpose, at what cost or consideration?

COLUMBIA RIVER POWER DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 84—Mr. Webster:

1. (a) What is the net amount of electrical power capacity, in kilowatts, to be made available for Canadian use in the Columbia river power treaty? (b) how much of this capacity will be firm, that is, able to produce 8760 kilowatt hours? (c) what is the estimated annual load factor, compared with the planned installed capacity?

2. (a) What will be the initial costs to Canada for the dams and plants? (b) what annual costs? (c) what are the estimated costs in terms of firm and secondary capacity? (d) what will be the cost to Canada of these kilowatt hours at 100 per cent load factor?

3. What is Canada's (B.C.'s) ability to absorb this power?

4. How much timber, agricultural, recreational or other potential income producing land will be flooded both in the Upper Columbia and the Kootenay?

5. What are the anticipated revenues accruing to Canada from the United States?

6. What annual rental fee for these installations will be paid to the British Columbia government? (As is the case in the province of Quebec).

7. What is the accumulated cost to Canada to date, for the studies made around this prospective development?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

FEDERAL PREVAILING RATE EMPLOYEES—CHECK OFF

Motion No. 37—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the Minister of Finance and the national council of the public service of Canada, on the subject of the check off of union dues for federal prevailing rate employees, since January 1, 1960.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. member is aware that in his absence on Monday, January 30 this motion was moved by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) on behalf of the hon. member for Essex East. In commenting upon it I said, as reported at page 1522 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, there are no correspondence, telegrams or documents within the terms of this motion, and even if there were there would no doubt be a question raised as to privilege. In view of the fact that there are none, no doubt the hon. member would be prepared to withdraw the motion on behalf of the hon. member for Essex East.

In his absence the motion was allowed to stand, but I suggest that as there are no documents within the terms of the motion the hon. member may wish to withdraw it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, as there would be no purpose served by having the motion stand, obviously I will withdraw it.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE DIRECTIVES, CIRCULARS, ETC.

Motion No. 38—Mr. Roberge:

For a copy of all circulars, letters of instruction or directions issued by the unemployment insurance commission for the local offices since July 11, 1955 with respect to
(a) the insurance coverage, and
(b) the interpretation of the words "contract of service or apprenticeship" contained in section 25 of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) has been approached to delete the words "letters of instruction or directions". This was explained to him. I understand he is agreeable to these words being deleted from the motion. If so, there is no objection to the motion.

Mr. Speaker: The mover and seconder are agreeable that the words "letters of instruction or directions" be deleted. Is it agreed that the motion be amended as proposed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion as amended agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ADJUDICATIONS

Motion No. 39—Mr. Racine:

For a copy of all adjudications or decisions made by the unemployment insurance umpire since July 11, 1955, with respect to (a) the insurance coverage, and (b) the interpretation of the words "contract of service or apprenticeship" contained in section 25 of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to.

BRITISH COLUMBIA SUGAR—COMBINES INFRACTIONS

Motion No. 41—Mr. Howard:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents, except those containing opinions from counsel, on legal questions which were submitted to them by the Department of Justice, exchanged between the federal government, or any agency or department thereof and any other person, company or organization, since January 1, 1957, relating to the prosecution of the British Columbia Sugar Refining Company Limited et al, for alleged infractions of the Combines Investigation Act.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this motion is, I think, identical to a motion relating to the prosecution of Canadian Breweries Limited which was moved by the hon. gentleman on an earlier occasion after having been reworded as a result of discussion. I am accordingly prepared to accept this motion on the same basis as the earlier motion.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the explanation of the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PRINCE ALBERT, SASK.—DESTRUCTION BY FIRE OF RESEARCH LABORATORY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence and ask if he would make a report to the house on the circumstances surrounding the fire which destroyed the main building of the defence radar research laboratory in Prince Albert, and especially on the adequacy of fire protection equipment available to cope with this fire.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have a report here on the fire so far as it has been possible to secure one up to date. It is as follows.

The main building of the defence research board's Prince Albert radar laboratory was heavily damaged by fire in the early evening of January 31. The Prince Albert fire department was unable to extinguish the blaze, but was able to limit the damage to the transmitter area in the main building. The tower and antenna were not damaged. The major portion of the test equipment, receiving equipment and office furnishings were saved and removed to storage. A temporary office has been set up in the armoury at Prince Albert. No one was injured.

The Prince Albert radar laboratory is operated by the defence research telecommunications establishment, Ottawa. A senior officer of this organization and three other members of the staff are flying to Prince Albert this afternoon in order to carry on an official inquiry into the circumstances of the fire, which will be started immediately. The extent of the loss, of course, cannot be estimated at the present time, nor the length of time that the laboratory will be out of action.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the minister and ask him to inquire into the fact that, in accordance with the report that I have before me, there was no water in the vicinity of the radar station at the time.

Mr. Harkness: Naturally, all details and all information in connection with this fire will be brought out at the court of inquiry which is being instituted immediately.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the great public interest in the royal commission inquiring into the automobile industry, can the Prime Minister say whether receipt of the report of the royal commission will be much longer delayed?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had any communication with the royal commissioner during the last week or so. However, I will get in touch with him and let the house know.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—FURTHER STATEMENT ON RELEASE OF CANADIAN CITIZEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Murphy (Lambton West): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. It is partly based on a statement in this morning's Montreal Gazette by a Mrs. Koyer about whose husband the Secretary of State for External Affairs made a statement yesterday in reply to a question.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has any comments to make on the statement attributed to this lady. Furthermore, because there is some confusion among the public as the result of a difference in the spelling of this man's name, would the Prime Minister tell the house whether this is the same person about whom he was concerned last fall, and whether anything was done about the case at that time by the right hon. gentleman? Further, is he the person the Canadian-Polish alliance of Canada was concerned about, and has the right hon. gentleman been in touch with that organization concerning this case?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): In so far as the statement reported in the press is concerned, that Mrs. Koyer was surprised when advised by the press that her husband was to be released, I think I should say that I presume her statement was made as an exercise of feminine caution. She had known of his release, I think it was on Friday or Saturday, but naturally nothing was said about the release in case, in the meantime, the situation might alter, or circumstances change the date of her husband's departure. Mrs. Koyer was fully aware of the fact that he had been released. Indeed, her representative in Ottawa saw me in this connection, I think it was on Tuesday morning, and notified me that she had been made aware that her husband was going to return to Canada.

In so far as the latter portion of the question is concerned, hon. members will recall that the hon. member for Lambton West brought this case to the attention of the house. Following his intervention in this connection the Canadian-Polish congress communicated with me and asked whether the government would do what it could to ensure that justice was done in this case. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said, the Polish government received the representations which were made by this government, and in the course of events a decision was made which brought about the release of Mr. Koyer. The Canadian-Polish congress did a great deal in this connection, and I think the house will be most happy at the fact that the Polish government, after the representations had been made, acted as it did, indicating an attitude in the comity of nations which all of us hope to achieve.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister comment on the radio report of this afternoon that efforts to reactivate the international supervisory commission in Laos have not succeeded, and would he care to comment also on the statement in the news report that India attributes this failure to the course taken by Canada?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the radio report in question, but it is quite inaccurate on both counts. The fact is that at the moment the Soviet union, which was one of the two co-chairmen of the 1954 Geneva conference, the other being the United Kingdom, is considering a draft letter to the government of India asking that government to name the chairman of the Laos commission and have him go to Laos in an endeavour to get the consent of the king of Laos to the return of the commission to that unhappy kingdom. If that consent is given by the king of Laos, then the commission will be reconvened at once. Canada is ready to name the Canadian commissioner.

Incidentally, Canada played quite a significant part in bringing about agreement on this draft letter. The reason for delay at the moment is that the Soviet government has not yet replied to the suggested letter put forward by the government of the United Kingdom, although the letter has been in the hands of the Soviet government for the matter of a week or ten days.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

MANUFACTURE OF MAIL BOXES AND KEYS IN PENITENTIARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice based on a report in today's Ottawa Citizen to the effect that master keys to open any government mail boxes are in the hands of thieves. According to this report, police have been told the master keys were made in the Kingston penitentiary machine shop where mail boxes are repaired. My question is, has the minister any report to make to the house in connection with this matter?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I do not want to raise this formally as a point of order, but I must point out that at the moment none of us is in a position to vouch for the facts stated in the press report on the basis of which the hon. member asks his question. As I say, I do not raise that as a formal point of order, but I think both the question and my answer should be read in the light of the situation that the facts are not yet ascertained.

I can, however, say this at the moment. Last April and May, as a result of routine checks in both Kingston and New Westminster penitentiaries, it came to the attention of the officials of those institutions that there might be some irregularities in connection with the work shop and the printing shop, and certain materials were confiscated. In one case, publication of the prison paper was suspended for a period. This was as a result of routine investigations and checks by our own officials.

With regard to the full extent of the ring, if any, and the extent to which these materials may have been manufactured in penitentiary workshops, I have ordered a further full investigation and as soon as the facts are ascertained I shall advise the house.

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): May I direct a further question to the Postmaster General on the very same subject? On January 26 the Postmaster General was supposed to look into this matter and report in a couple of days, so he said. I do not think—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has so far been making a statement. If he has a question to ask, would he please ask it?

Mr. Denis: I would ask the Postmaster General whether he is in a position to comment on the progress of the investigation he was supposed to have made on this subject, including what has happened in the city of Ottawa.

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Not at this time. The Minister of Justice and I have had certain discussions on the subject, and as soon as I have anything to report I shall be very glad to make a statement.

Mr. Denis: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may rise to ask a new question but not a supplementary question, because the minister has in effect taken the question as notice. I will give the hon. member the floor if he wishes to ask a new question.

Mr. Denis: Will the Postmaster General reconsider the advisability of replacing these locks and keys, as I asked him to do on January 26, and this time by hiring honest people?

POSTAL SERVICE

REPORTED DELAY IN DELIVERY OF OLD AGE PENSION CHEQUES OVERSEAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that it takes up to 26 days for old age pension cheques mailed in Victoria, B.C. to reach recipients resident in Britain, would the minister have inquiries made as to the reasons for the length of time taken with a view to improving this tramp-steamer time required for delivery?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): This is hardly a question of immediate urgency, but I appreciate the hon. member having given me advance notice. Until now the Department of National Health and Welfare has sent these cheques by sea mail and surface mail, and since they may have to wait up to eight days for a ship to depart, and since the ship may then take up to 12 days to cross the ocean, it is obvious that this is not the fastest way in which these cheques could be sent. The Minister of National Health and Welfare, having been informed of this situation, has now decided that these cheques should be sent by air mail, and I congratulate him for his interest in the welfare of old age pensioners.

Mr. Herridge: Does not the minister consider, when old age pensioners have to wait 26 days for cheques to arrive, and then write to hon. members in Ottawa saying it is an urgent matter, that it is an urgent matter—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is seeking to debate what amounts to a point of order, and I suggest he should not pursue it.

TRADE

ELECTRONIC TUBES—REPORTED IMPORTS FROM JAPAN THROUGH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Smith (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue as a follow up to a question I asked the minister a few weeks ago concerning the importation of Japanese-made receiving tubes. Is the minister aware that substantial quantities of Japanese receiving tubes are coming into Canada by being transshipped from San Francisco, thereby circumventing the voluntary embargo?

I have not given the minister notice of this question, but I do not expect an answer today. I have a considerable amount of evidence which I would be pleased to make available to the minister.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I accept that question as notice, Mr. Speaker, and will reply at the first opportunity.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

STATEMENT ON AIR CREW COMPLEMENT FOR NEW PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the hon. member for Laurier inquired regarding the air crew complement on T.C.A.'s newer aircraft types. The number of air crew required on duty in the cockpit of a plane is subject to approval of the Department of Transport. It is determined in relation to such factors as aircraft handling characteristics, cockpit visibility, instrumentation and controls, general cockpit layout, and a number of other factors.

In the case of the DC-8, the department required that the cockpit complement be three persons. Two of these, of course, would be pilots, but it was left to T.C.A. to determine whether the third person should be a pilot or flight engineer. In fact I understand that T.C.A. is carrying a third pilot.

With regard to the newly acquired Vanguard aircraft, a thorough examination of the requirements for flight crew has been completed. My technical officers have taken into consideration the representations made by the Canadian air line pilots' association, the views of the most experienced supervisory pilots of T.C.A. and reports from air carrier inspectors of the civil aviation branch of my department who have made in-flight investigations including all normal and emergency manoeuvres in the air.

As a result it has been concluded that this particular model of Vanguard aircraft, which has a cockpit especially designed to T.C.A. requirements, does not require three pilots, and that operational safety can be maintained with two on all routes on which T.C.A. intends operating the aircraft initially at least. Our examination of the problem, however, indicated that the qualifications for first officer or co-pilot established some years ago and requiring that a first officer hold a commercial pilot licence only did not visualize the introduction of aircraft of the size and performance of the Vanguard, and it has therefore been decided to require that first officers in Vanguard aircraft be technically trained to the standard of a fully qualified captain and that such first officers shall be required to hold a valid air line transport pilot licence. This increased requirement is designed to ensure that in the event of incapacitation of the captain, the aircraft will be in the charge of a person who is technically competent to act as captain in an emergency and will be in possession of the higher minimum experience requirements necessary to hold an air line transport pilot licence.

STATEMENT CONCERNING EMPLOYMENT OF PILOTS LAID OFF

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the hon. member for Laurier also inquired regarding the pilots who had been given notice of lay-off by T.C.A., numbering approximately 100. At that time I assured the hon. member that every effort was being made to help this group.

I have since learned that approximately 14 of them have been employed by the Irish air line, Aer Lingus. I have also been informed that British European Airways has a very substantial requirement for new air crew this year which, indeed, may number over 100 before the year is out, and that they are at present interviewing those of the T.C.A. pilots who have been given notice and would be interested in employment by B.E.A. and whose services could be made available in time to meet B.E.A. requirements.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for the comprehensive statement he has made on this subject matter. May I now ask a supplementary question. Could the minister give some idea as to how many of the 104 pilots are likely to find employment arising out of the first part of the statement the minister made?

Mr. Balcer: No, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry I cannot give an exact answer, but I shall inquire and report later.

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO PROMOTION OF USE BY ONTARIO HYDRO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys arising from a report in today's Toronto Star which purports to be Ontario hydro's reply to the request of the hon. member for Cape Breton South that Ontario hydro use 1 million tons of Nova Scotia coal a year and save the coal industry of Nova Scotia. Since Ontario hydro's reply appears to state that it has received no indication of the delivery cost of Nova Scotia coal and that it cannot ask its customers to subsidize the maritime coal industry, I should like to ask the minister whether his department and the dominion coal board have played any part at all in trying to assist the hon. member for Cape Breton South in his arrangements with Ontario hydro.

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I have not read that article but I shall take notice of it and inquire and reply on a later occasion.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

EQUALIZATION FORMULA—CALCULATION OF GROWTH FACTOR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question about the letter he addressed on January 30 to the provincial premiers. Could the Prime Minister explain to the house the basis of calculation of the growth factor in the equalization formula?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the question is one that arises out of a debate which the house has been having and has just concluded. It is a debating question rather than a question of information. If the hon. member disagrees with me I shall be glad to hear him, but that is the way it strikes me.

Mr. Pickersgill: On that point, Mr. Speaker, I am not seeking to debate the matter at all. I am merely seeking information as to the formula. The debate, after all, was on an entirely different proposition, a proposition made last July.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I would suggest that since this letter was read into the record, surely a letter from the Prime Minister to the provincial premiers stands on its own feet. The letter is an important document. If there is some suggestion in it that a growth factor will be involved, it is in order to ask about this since the letter has no particular relationship to the debate aside from the fact that the minister quoted it.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I attempt to assist Your Honour. Yesterday afternoon I asked the Prime Minister if he would give an answer as to the meaning of the phrase "growth factor" and provide us with some information which would indicate what was the basis the minister had in mind in the use of that phrase. Unfortunately the Prime Minister was not in his seat. I know he was occupied with important matters elsewhere. As he did not follow and close the debate, the right hon. gentleman did not take the opportunity of answering the questions that were put to him. An answer was given by his parliamentary secretary to the effect that a growth factor—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I submit, Your Honour, that the question should be answered.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate repeat his question in the light of the discussion?

Mr. Pickersgill: My question was, would the Prime Minister explain the basis of the calculation of the growth factor in the equalization formula?

Mr. Speaker: The question is properly one for the order paper. It asks for statistical information which members could not expect to be written on the minister's cuff. Furthermore, it is not one of those questions that has to be answered immediately because of its urgency.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be most happy to put the question on the order paper.

TRANSPORT

SABLE ISLAND PONIES—ADOPTION BY PRINCE EDWARD ISLANDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, at the urgent request of some of the interested parties I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister giving consideration to the pleas of over 500 Prince Edward Islanders, including many Progressive Conservatives, who are interested in adopting some of the blue-blooded Sable island ponies?

Mr. Argue: The Minister of Transport has disappeared.

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of the minister, perhaps the hon. member would defer his question to another time.

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport): There is no urgency in the hon. member's question, and we will take it as notice.

[Later:]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am prompted by the intervention of the hon. member for Victoria (Ont.) to ask the Prime Minister if there is any truth in the rumour, which I think all of us will have regretted, that the hon. member has submitted his resignation as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has always been so that after a person ceases to occupy a position feelings of deep regret are expressed. I thank the hon. gentleman for these words. I understand that the hon. member is about to tender or has tendered his resignation but that it has not yet been accepted.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NAMING OF HOUSE OF COMMONS MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs in his capacity as house leader. When can the house expect the names of the House of Commons members of the joint Senate and House of Commons committee on Indian affairs to be presented to the house so they may be communicated to the other place?

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the house names the members of this committee in due course when the motion is called. Is the hon. member inquiring about the appointment of the members of the committee? If so, I suppose it is an inquiry about business that will be coming before the house. Perhaps the house leader might reply.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): When the report is ready it will be presented to the house.

THE CENSUS

FORM OF QUESTION RESPECTING RACIAL ORIGIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Have the two questions having to do with citizenship and origin been reframed and submitted to the cabinet, as indicated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce some days ago?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this whole question is being considered by the appropriate authorities, and when we are in a position to give a reply we will do so, not in piecemeal way but covering the entire situation.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question which perhaps should be directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is not here. Will the questions be shown and submitted to the members by way of a letter from the director of the dominion bureau of statistics, in the same manner as they were on two previous occasions by the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that too will be answered in due course.

IMMIGRATION

BRITISH COLUMBIA—EMPLOYMENT OF U.S. CITIZENS IN PIPE LINE CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on January 30 last the hon. member for Kootenay West directed a question to the Minister of Labour with respect to whether the minister had received any complaints concerning the numbers of United States citizens admitted to Canada for employment in the construction of pipe lines in British Columbia.

This is the time of year when such complaints begin to come in and we have received a number, particularly from the leader of the C.C.F. group in the house and house leader of the New party, the hon. member for Assiniboia. I can assure him that we are examining each and every complaint that is brought to our attention, and that officials of the national employment service have orders to make strict application of regulations regarding the admission of workers. No one is being approved by the national employment service to do any job for which a qualified Canadian is available.

We are receiving excellent co-operation in this regard from the department of my collegue the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. If the hon. member for Kootenay

West has any particular cases in mind in particular areas I would ask that he specify such cases, and I assure him that I will get a report in each case.

BROADCASTING

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE ON RADIO AND TELEVISION

The house resumed, from Friday, January 27, consideration of the motion of Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue):

That a special committee be appointed on broadcasting to consider radio and television broadcasting with power to examine and inquire into the matters herein referred to and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon and to send for persons, papers and records;

That the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable or necessary;

That the committee shall consist of 35 members;

That standing orders 66 and 67 be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, last Friday afternoon I started to reply to some of the matters which had been raised during this debate, and I had referred particularly to arguments advanced by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who was the first speaker following the calling of the motion. I dealt with the point he raised as to the scope of the resolution and also the second matter with which he dealt and to which I replied at that time.

The hon. member also raised a question which he has brought up in every debate since I have been in this place, the argument that there should be a fixed parliamentary grant for the C.B.C. over a period of years rather than one vote by parliament each year. I have dealt with this matter on other occasions and I do not propose to spend much of the time of the committee this afternoon in repeating matters which I have stressed before. However, there are one or two obvious questions that arise in considering this matter. Over how long a period would such a fixed vote be scheduled? Would it be for one year, which is what we have now, or two, three or five years?

In theory an argument can be advanced for this procedure. If this nation had attained its full growth, if our territories were fully served by the C.B.C. or by private networks, if electronic devices had reached the climax of their development so there would not be revolutionary changes from year to year, if decisions had been made with respect to the institution of colour rather than black and white television; if all these matters were settled I think it would be fairly easy to prognosticate the amount of money which should be allocated to the C.B.C. over a period of three, four or five years and vote it accordingly. But under the circumstances as they exist today, with the necessity of expanding our facilities in various areas in Canada, with the great electronic developments which are taking place and which render obsolescent equipment which the year before was thought to be adequate; with all the other questions with which the corporation has to deal, I suggest that this is not the time for us to fix an amount or even apply a formula of some kind applicable over a period of years.

How would one work out a formula? I have figures before me covering the years during which I have had some responsibility for the C.B.C. In the year 1957-58, the first year in which I had any responsibility, the corporation drew from the public treasury $41,600,000. The next year the amount was $51,900,000, an increase of $10,300,000. The next year there was an increase of only a little over $1 million, and the corporation drew down from the public treasury $52,300,000. The next year the amount was $60 million even, an increase of about $8 million. This year it is estimated the amount will be $70,418,000, an increase of about $10,400,000.

If one looks at commercial revenues, to which reference was made, one finds that in the year 1957-58 they amounted to $15,500,000; 1958-59, $21,700,000; 1959-60, $27,200,000. The next year there was an increase of only a few hundred thousand dollars and this year there will be a drop of about $300,000. Now, Mr. Speaker, one would need to have the wisdom of Solomon and the gift of prophecy of the late Joseph Howe, as well as a few other attributes that have not been given to mortal men, even in the Conservative government of this country, to make a reasonable prognostication or arrive at a formula upon which you could operate without putting the C.B.C. in a strait-jacket on the one hand or, from time to time, providing it with too much money. I say "too much money", but too much money is always a figure of speech so far as that corporation is concerned because there are many demands upon it, legitimate demands.

We remember when the taxation schedule was in effect and when the C.B.C. was in receipt of the excise tax on the sale of television sets. The sales of these sets were going up by leaps and bounds and there was a tremendous accretion to the treasury of the C.B.C., far more than its demands. When the demand for television sets levelled off the revenue of the C.B.C. fell off accordingly. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, therefore, that the proper procedure is the one which we are following at this time. I am not questioning for one moment the fact that the time may come when a change such as the one suggested by the Fowler commission should be made. It is easy to make these suggestions, but it is much more difficult to bring them into operation. I say at this time the policy of this government is to maintain the present system of parliamentary grants. This government is prepared to trust parliament. We believe in the supremacy of parliament, and that is the policy which is going to be followed in the immediate future.

What reason is there for suggesting a change? The only reason we have ever heard, Mr. Speaker, is the possibility of the corporation being under pressure from the government. The other day a suggestion was made that the corporation might be under pressure from the treasury board or it might be under executive pressure. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) quite properly said that it was just as necessary to avoid executive pressure on the C.B.C. as it was necessary and advisable to make sure that the judiciary of this country is not under executive pressure. I could not agree more with that position.

During the time that I have been reporting for the C.B.C. I have never heard any suggestion of the corporation being under executive pressure in any way, shape or form. I have seen no letters from my friends of the C.C.F. party pointing out any incident or complaining about it or referring to it. I have seen no letters from the official opposition with respect to such a matter. I have received no letters from anyone in Canada, pointing to any incident or any alleged incident which could possibly give suspicion to the fact that the corporation was under executive pressure. As a matter of fact, if one judges from the correspondence one gets, if there is any pressure it is not the pressure of the executive on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation but it might be the pressure of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on the executive. I think if there is any pressure anywhere, judging from the mail which I receive—I realize, of course, that we who are in the spotlight of politics are undoubtedly sensitive to political criticism and we have an allergy to this criticism which is not given to citizens further removed, and perhaps very fortunately further removed—

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the minister one question? Is he distinguishing between executive pressure in so far as finances are concerned or all executive pressure?

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Nowlan: I am thinking of all kinds of executive pressure. As I was saying, judging from the mail which one receives, and that is perhaps one yardstick, there certainly has been an increasing abundance of it suggesting that there has been pressures on the executive by the corporation; that is not for me to comment upon. I have seen no evidence of it. As I have said, there is no evidence whatever. There has never been a thought of executive pressure on the C.B.C., and I am sure there never will be as long as this government is in power, or any other government, I would hope.

We are following this policy at the moment, and there will be no change in it in the immediate future. Certainly one would almost think, dealing at least with one phase, C.B.C.—Radio Canada, if there is any major pressure it is the political pressure that Radio Canada has exercised in certain ways in the area which it serves. There are abundant complaints with respect to that. It is not for me to measure them, but I do know that there has been a tremendously increasing volume during the four years in which I have had some responsibility for reporting to parliament for the C.B.C.

The hon. member also brought up the question of the commercial policy of the C.B.C. He regretted the increase in advertising. I must say that I can get very irritated at excessive advertising as well. I recall one program to which I wanted to listen and there was sufficient advertising, although well within the scope of the regulations laid down by the board of broadcast governors, to rather irritate me. I said to myself, I will never buy that product again under any circumstances. This was perhaps a human reaction to advertising in that form. Anyone using the C.B.C. naturally has to guard against any excessive commercialism because I am sure it will redound against the corporation using it. We try to safeguard that by regulation by the board of broadcast governors, and we judge by the experience of the C.B.C. itself which has looked after that matter for many years.

If one is worried about excessive commercialism he should read, as I do from time to time, letters from United States citizens who live just south of the Canadian border or from Canadians who have moved, for business reasons, to the United States and away from the C.B.C. If one reads these letters one finds these people never appreciated the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation until they got away from it. They never knew what commercialism meant; they never knew about the way in which the airways could be saturated by blatant commercialism until they were subjected to some programs far removed from the C.B.C. I know that for one letter in this vein that I receive the corporation gets thousands which commend the corporation for their restraint. As the figures I read a while ago indicate, there has been a substantial volume of commercial programs on the C.B.C.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is a very expensive corporation. It costs more to run the C.B.C. now than it ever cost in the old days to run the Canadian National Railways. It costs almost as much as it did to run Canada itself at one time. The people demand extensive and expensive services. Undoubtedly expenditures have risen, and I suspect they will continue to rise. A certain amount of commercial revenue, therefore, is not only advisable but necessary and is good business on the part of the C.B.C. management. My own opinion is that we have not reached the stage where we can say that commercialism on the C.B.C. is interfering with the primary responsibilities of the C.B.C., that is the dissemination of the type of program outlined at the inception of the corporation. I believe that the programs of this type are being maintained at the present time.

I think one could say this in general, that the corporation is working out a reasonable compromise between commercial necessities on the one hand and the maintenance of a broad national system on the other hand. I want to congratulate the corporation on doing that. These are the four points which were raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), I believe, and I have dealt with them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister permit a question at this point?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: As far as I can recall, I did not raise any question about excessive commercialism. The question I raised was with regard to advertising on the C.B.C. of United States magazines at the time the government was professing to be interested in promoting Canadian magazines. I was wondering about the good judgment of accepting that particular kind of advertising as opposed to any other kind.

Mr. Nowlan: That was the substance of the question the hon. member raised. I well remember it. I made some comment of another kind at that time. I think he did so or at least I understood him to do so and I think the text will show it, and he is perfectly within his rights in doing so. I am not suggesting for a moment that he should not do it. He was suggesting the possibility of commercial broadcasting being so extensive that we are weakening the corporation.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I did not.

Mr. Nowlan: If the hon. gentleman did not do so, other hon. members did. That was why I referred to the matter.

Various hon. members dealt with various questions. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) suggested that all crown corporations, particularly the C.B.C., should be the responsibility of a minister. That is, of course, an argument that has been advanced in this house from time to time but it is one which thus far parliament has not seen fit to accept. Although there may be criticism of the C.B.C. as perhaps being an independent creature and therefore divorced from parliament, there can also be equal criticism if there should be any suggestion that the corporation should come under the control of any minister or any government; that is not the policy, at any rate of this government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nor of the opposition.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member also referred to the necessity of expanding our programs and services in the French language. I agree with him entirely on that matter. I am not going to take up the time of the house in dealing with what has been accomplished in that matter in the last four years. A great deal of work had been done prior to the present government coming into power. We have carried out that program and the French network has been greatly extended and that extension will be continued.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: The question is this. What steps are being taken to make adequate provision for French television stations? What I have in mind is this. I know of an instance—and I do not want to blame anyone for it—in which a licence was granted on the distinct understanding that a certain period of the day would be devoted to French television programs. The station was sold and that was stopped entirely. I spoke to the new owner. He told me that this would not be continued because no programs were being sponsored by the French speaking people in that area. Surely that should not be the reason for determining that matter. It would strike me that this is not the private domain of any corporation, but that it is rather the public domain. That consideration prompts me to ask the minister what provision is being made in those cases? I agree with him that a tremendous impetus has been given both in the C.B.C. and in private stations with reference to—

Broadcasting

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of questions I should like to ask and a number of comments I should like to make as the minister's speech goes along. It seems to me that the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) is taking undue advantage of his request for permission to ask a question. I am just wondering, Mr. Speaker, whether you could see that the rules are enforced?

Mr. Speaker: As long as the hon. member who has the floor was not restive I did not think I should intervene. However, the fact is that the hon. member for Laurier made a short speech.

Mr. Chevrier: I apologize to the house, Mr. Speaker, but not to the hon. member who has interrupted me. I do not apologize to him because he is often a sinner in that respect. I now come back to the question and ask the minister whether he would answer it?

Mr. Nowlan: I am not in a position to answer that question at the moment. I should be obliged to get advice from the C.B.C. with respect to it. I would suggest, with deference, that this is a question which should be explored in the committee and I presume it will be explored there. If the hon. member wants me to get him any information from the C.B.C. prior to that time I shall be glad to do so.

I might say this in passing, although I am not sure that it is in order. One perhaps should not discuss what one may have in mind with respect to legislation to deal with the French network. However, I think this is a fair comment to make. The C.B.C. today—and I am speaking now very roughtly—or Radio Canada covers about one third of the operations of the corporation. It serves the whole province of Quebec and part of New Brunswick and has now gone as far west as Manitoba. The number of directors, who were allocated on a regional basis, in my opinion do not give adequate representation on the board of directors to Radio Canada. One cannot, of course, and one should not by legislation designate directors from a certain group, a certain region, or a certain race. I have considered this matter and the committee may consider it. I have considered recommending to parliament this year the enlargement of the board of directors. Some amendments to the act will have to be brought forward. I think I am prepared to recommend that the number of directors be enlarged by a reasonable number so as to give additional representation on the board to Radio Canada and those on the French network.

The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) dealt at some length and very forcibly with what he said was an infringement of free speech having regard to the fact that certain programs—and I think they were Canadian citizen programs or Canadian forum programs—were interfered with or were in some way controlled by the board of broadcast governors. This is a matter which I think can be dealt with much more effectively in the committee itself than by me at this time. The circumstances to which the hon. member refers are well known. There are rules for controversial programs, where the time is usually used as a forum. The understanding is that all sides should be represented in those discussions.

In the case of an individual program or an individual station, if all sides are not represented and one side fails to show up or something of that kind, the station management can go ahead with what they have, with the one side represented, provided that they undertake to give the other side an opportunity to be heard at some future time so that both sides of the issue can be presented. But when you have a program emanating from a station and then that program is taped and sent off the next day or the day after to a score or more stations across the country which are not under this responsibility, then the taped program presents only one side of the question. That is in general the problem with which the board of broadcast governors is confronted. It is that phase for which they have made regulations and it is that phase which they would like very much to have examined by the committee when the committee has an opportunity to meet.

The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) dealt at some length with the international service and the fact that the C.B.C. is curtailing its shortwave broadcast to western Europe. Because of the fact that this matter was the subject of a starred question it was necessary for me to deal with it in part this afternoon. However, because the hon. member for Essex East stressed it to such a great extent, I want to deal with it again here for a moment or two.

As I have already said, it is true that the international service to western Europe has been curtailed in certain languages. This is not the first time that has happened. It was curtailed to a marked degree or a substantial degree anyway five years ago and it has been curtailed still further within the last few months.

As I pointed out, there are two economic reasons for this. The north country is developing. At one time it was served by radio by the armed forces and other facilities. Those facilities have been breaking down, they are obsolete and worn out, and it is necessary now to service the whole north country with adequate radio coverage. In order to do that we are using some of the facilities at Sackville for beaming radio programs into the north country. Another point is that it is very desirable that we get our programs into that highly developing country.

Africa, is a country where there is not such an extensive knowledge of Canada, and our existing service to Africa is being extended substantially. It is, of course, being done on the advice of the Department of External Affairs, which has always worked in close co-operation with the C.B.C. in handling these shortwave programs.

We are maintaining our services to eastern Europe on our shortwave facilities. Throughout there has been some comment about jamming, and so on, and it is interesting to note that reports indicate a substantial decrease in this jamming during the last few months. In Poland there is apparently no jamming now. There have been programs exchanged between Russian and Canadian stations, largely on athletic events, and there is a move on foot now to broadcast programs which might be emanating from Russia.

The old concept of the shortwave service has to be changed in this modern age, and I am told by the officials of the C.B.C. that because of tape recording and modern techniques a better program service will be available now to western Europe.

The hon. member spoke about losing trade because we did not have a shortwave service here. I am sure that if our exporters had to depend entirely on the C.B.C. for the development of trade they would not feel like paying taxes to maintain it on that ground alone.

In western Europe we have common ideas. We have an exchange of ideas and people back and forth at all times. Movement is free and their facilities are available to us for our recordings, programs, and so on. I am told we can give a better Canadian service by using these new facilities than we were ever able to give in the past by the conventional shortwave service which has been used for so many years.

There is a wealth of information, of course, which is available by recording, radio, television, and so forth. In that connection I have a memo here which I think sets forth this point very authoritatively. I am not going to bore the house with the figures of how many people have been served, and so on. There is always some question about this, but in fact there is a very substantial listening audience in eastern Europe for Canadian programs. It is because of this information which we have received that we are maintaining shortwave service to eastern Europe.

I am told that as a result of the better reception made possible by local rebroadcasts of Canadian programs it is expected that the actual number of listeners in the countries concerned will remain substantially the same and might even increase. Thus the decision to eliminate shortwave broadcasts to these five countries would not appear to affect Canadian interests and influence there adversely. Indeed, improvements may occur and considerable savings in public funds will have resulted.

The memo goes on to say:

> I should perhaps mention at this point that the Voice of America, the United States counterpart of the C.B.C.-I.S., does not broadcast by shortwave to the five countries in their national languages.

That is a memo which, frankly, I received from the Department of External Affairs on their reaction to this situation.

The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), with his usual interesting, forceful manner, covered various facets of the C.B.C.'s operations. I do not intend to deal with all his points. I think I have already dealt with some of them. He raised a very interesting point, of course, and it was something which was raised impliedly by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in referring to the advertising of United States publications: Just how far does a Canadian national organization go, which is created for the purpose of developing a Canadian culture and an essential Canadianism? Just how far does it go in emphasizing United States' institutions in broadcasts and telecasts? The hon. member pointed out—as was very obvious at that particular time—the telecast which had been made on the occasion of the inauguration of President Kennedy and repeated, I believe, over national systems here. He wondered what contribution that would make to the development of Canadianism and whether Canadian political figures would receive the same treatment in the United States.

It is a very interesting question. One sometimes wonders what treatment Canadian political figures do receive. I received a letter a while ago from Quebec complaining of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) did not appear on Radio Canada news the night of his Christmas telecast. I made inquiries respecting that matter and was informed that the Prime Minister was a political figure, and since his telecast had appeared at noon it was not thought proper that he should appear again that night, on the news, and Mr. Pearson's Christmas message was carried instead. It is to be noted that the President of the United States appeared three times on the occasion of giving his address on the state of the union. So there is a very interesting field there about which no one has the answer.

Obviously and naturally a program on which the President of the United States appears is of tremendous interest to the Canadian people; at least when he is a new face and a new personality. I think the corporation is perfectly justified in giving a reasonable amount of publicity to him in these circumstances. If they did not do so the demand would be almost irresistible. The question is where we should draw the line between that situation and televising Canadian figures and programs, in this nation of ours jammed up against this so-called undefended border of which we all boast so freely, a nation of 18 million trying to develop a Canadian identity against a nation of 180 million which has tremendous facilities for dissemination of information.

It is a most interesting problem. How we ever were created is something hard for us to understand, but we have grown tremendously because of the courage of those who have gone before us. I am sure the C.B.C. will solve this problem, as they have solved other problems in the past, in developing a Canadian culture, Canadian content and pride in Canada, and at the same time giving us information from across that border.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) made me think for a moment or two that our old-time friend, the hon. member for Lethbridge, who at one time sat in that far corner of the house, was here again when he was dealing with the fact that there was a danger of thought control being disseminated by the C.B.C., or at least it was a platform for communism and red infiltration. I am not trying to quote him, but that was the general effect of his statement. I doubt very much whether there is any merit in that. I know that I heartily disagree with the views expressed by the C.B.C. from time to time, and I am sure the same thing could be said of every member of this house. But the C.B.C. is a national organization and one of its purposes is to present views which cover various facets of our activities, political and economic, and I do not think anyone can take objection to that.

Certainly whatever evil or danger there may be in such a course of action, I am sure it is much less than the course suggested by the hon. member, that the C.B.C. should be given directives by the government as to the type of thought control or ideas which are to be disseminated by the corporation. That is something which I do not think any responsible government could accept, or certainly the management of the C.B.C. could not accept. There has to be freedom here and, very desirably so.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is almost up. There were various individual questions raised. The hon. member for Kootenay West again raised the question of radio coverage in his area. He again mentioned the question he has raised before of the Nelson radio station which refused to take an advertisement from a newspaper which was operating in opposition to that newspaper-operated radio station.

The hon. member for Port Arthur mentioned the question of newspaper licensees and the fact that no licence should perhaps be given to a radio or television station which was controlled by a newspaper. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate referred to the same thing. Well, if we were starting anew to create the world I think that might have been a good policy to follow.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the minister at this point, but it is necessary to point out that the hon. gentleman's time has expired. However, if the house would agree to allowing him to continue—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps I could have two or three more minutes in order to complete my remarks. There has been a pattern established in this country whereby radio and television licences have been granted in the past to interests which also control newspapers and one can hardly change that policy in midstream because if we were to do that I can imagine many newspapers in this country which would have to divorce themselves from radio and television. I think, sometimes, it would be a very good thing for this government if there had been no applications from newspapers, because then there would have been no resentment or criticism by those newspapers who have applied for television stations but failed to get them and who therefore felt that this government was, perhaps, more subject to criticism than would otherwise have been the case. In any event we have this system in Canada today as a result of which, according to the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), the people of Toronto will have available two television stations, the C.B.C. station manned by so many personnel of the Toronto Star that he wonders how that newspaper is ever produced; and if the hon. member expects the other television station to be manned by personnel of the Telegram there will be a great opportunity for a newspaper to do very well in Toronto.

The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) raised a question about service. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) raised various questions with which, I think, I have dealt in part. He also stressed the necessity of extending television in French speaking areas of Saskatchewan. As I have said, I hope and believe that this will be done. I agree entirely with the hon. member that it should be done.

The hon. member for Okanagan-Boundary (Mr. Pugh) brought up the question of low power relays. Similar questions asking for additional services were raised in respect of Grand Falls, Humber-St. George's, Halifax, and other areas, and in addition there were other hon. members who did not raise the question in the house but who wrote me notes and reminded me that they had been after me many times before in this connection. They hoped they would not be overlooked because they had not taken up the time of the house on this occasion. Among them was the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr. Rapp) who has written to me with particular reference to Tisdale.

Then, of course, there was the perennial question raised by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) and the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Forbes) with respect to the extension of radio and television to northern Manitoba. This is a problem with which he has confronted me ever since I took up my present position. It is a very difficult problem. The government of Manitoba is servicing that country with a telephone system. It is going to cost a lot of money to extend television and broadcasting services to the north country. It will have to be done, and I am hoping some way can be worked out whereby with some co-operation we can reduce the cost of those services, because after all the C.B.C. has got to work within certain limits. If it costs, say, $50 per family to provide a service in one area while in another area, equally remote, a service can be provided for $15, hon. members can see the type of problem the C.B.C. is facing in this connection. We have discussed this question time and time again and I am hopeful, and quite confident, that some solution can be worked out.

I think I have covered, though inadequately and hastily, the points raised during the two days when this matter has been before the house. I appreciate the manner in which hon. members have brought these matters to my attention and I hope the committee will have a fruitful session. It will have several months of work before it. Even if we can get out of here by May 1, which we are all hoping to do, it will have three months in which to operate, and I am sure it will be able to make a report which will prove very helpful.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not wish to interrupt the minister, but before you put the question, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I think one of the hon. gentleman's remarks may have left the implication that I was associated with an objection to President Kennedy's broadcast. I want to make it clear that I am very much in favour of having President Kennedy on the C.B.C.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to make the point very clear. There was no objection to Mr. Kennedy's broadcast. The more the better. But it does raise the issue of what we do with our own politicians. I do not like to be linked with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, but we seem to have the same point of view on this.

Mr. Nowlan: If I left the impression that either of the hon. members was complaining about President Kennedy's appearance, then I would correct it at once. No one did. But, as the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) said, it was brought up as an example of how we handle this matter.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the customs tariff and to provide:

1. That the said act be amended by adding thereto immediately after section 2 thereof the following section:

"2A. (1) For the purposes of this act, goods shall be deemed to be of a "class or kind" made or produced in Canada if

(a) in the case of goods other than goods custom-made to specifications, goods of approximately the same class or kind are made or produced in Canada; and

(b) in the case of goods custom-made to specifications adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), goods other than goods custom-made to specifications shall be deemed not to be of a class or kind made or produced in Canada unless at least ten per cent of the normal Canadian consumption of goods of the same or approximately the same class or kind are made or produced in Canada.

(3) The decision of the minister shall be final with respect to the following matters:

(a) the normal Canadian consumption of the goods described in subsection (2), and

(b) whether goods are custom-made to specifications, and whether adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time."

2. That subsections (9) and (10) of section 6 of the said act be repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(9) For the purposes of this act, notwithstanding section 2A, goods may be deemed to be of a class or kind not made or produced in Canada where similar goods made or produced in Canada are not offered for sale to the ordinary agencies of wholesale or retail distribution or are not offered to all purchasers on equal terms under like conditions, having regard to the custom and usage of trade."

3. That subsection (4) of section 6A of the said act be repealed.

4. That any enactment founded upon this resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the 21st day of December, 1960, and to have applied to all goods mentioned therein imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The resolution now before the committee contemplates certain amendments to the Customs Tariff. The text of the proposed amendments is actually contained in the resolution itself. This follows the practice of the house in giving to hon. members in precise legislative form the text of amendments to such statutes as the Customs Tariff and the Excise Tax Act. The practice, of course, with respect to amendments to the Income Tax Act is somewhat different. There it is the practice to state the gist or effect of certain amendments. But in the case of statutes such as those I have mentioned the practice is to set forth in the resolution the precise terms of the proposed amendments. That is true in the case before us.

The proposed amendment is to be found in Hansard of December 20 at page 1017. In the budget speech on that date I dealt at some length with the situation out of which the proposed amendment has arisen and the proposed effect of the change in legislation. I do not wish to cover again the ground I sought to traverse in my remarks that night. They are to be found at pages 1013 and 1014 of Hansard of December 20. Perhaps in this part of my opening remarks I might just touch briefly on some of the features of the proposed amendment.

The anti-dumping provisions of our customs laws date from the year 1904. They were introduced by the late Mr. Fielding. It was in the year 1907 that legislation was first introduced which makes use of the expressions "class or kind made in Canada" or "class or kind not made in Canada" or similar phrases embodying the class or kind principle. This again was a measure introduced by Mr. Fielding.

I have already said in general terms that originally this legislation embodying the class or kind concept was intended to be given a broad interpretation, and it was in fact given a broad interpretation until about a decade ago. I think it is an incontestable fact that the intention was that the reduction given off the ordinary rates of customs duty in the case of a class or kind of goods not made or produced in Canada was intended to apply to goods not directly competitive with those in Canada.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

As I have said that was the kind of interpretation that was always given to these phrases in the law until about the year 1950. In the earlier period the differences in the rates applicable on the one hand to goods of a class or kind made or produced in Canada and on the other hand of a class or kind not made or produced in Canada was not as great as latterly, but in these more recent times with a growing difference in these rates the incentive has been very greatly multiplied on the part of importers or on the part of producers in other countries who wish to export into the Canadian market to bring their goods within the definition of those of a class or kind not made in Canada.

In other words, the incentive in this regard has grown considerably. This has had the effect of increasing the litigation which has marked the period of the last decade. Indeed one can say that in the period up to the last decade the administration of the terms to which I referred was fair and workable but in the decades since—I am speaking now particularly of the 1950's—the litigation has greatly expanded. Indeed there has been what might fairly be called a welter of litigation. This is attributable to several factors, one of which I have mentioned, namely the fact that the incentives are very much larger now with a considerable widening of the difference in the rates applicable as between the two types, and on the other hand the fact that there has been a growing volume of imports. This has also had the effect of increasing the volume of litigation.

Another factor of considerable importance is that a trend developed which I think it not unfair to say gathered a fair amount of momentum in the course of all the litigation, a trend of departing from the original interpretation. The result of this has been an erosion of the original interpretation given to these expressions in the Customs Tariff and accompanying that erosion a lessening of the benefits enjoyed by Canadian producers from the Customs Tariff, a measure of protection of their competitive position that parliament certainly intended to give them and which they enjoyed under the recognized interpretations down to the period of the last decade.

I have already said something on the subject of the relationship of GATT to this question. The committee is aware that a number of the rates on various commodities which are affected by this phrase are bound under GATT, but the definitions contained in the present statute and order in council are not bound. They were not the subject of negotiation. The effect of the trend of interpretation of the definitions in the Customs Tariff in the past decade has been to give a windfall benefit to the producers of other countries who are seeking markets in Canada, something that was not expected on the part of the negotiators who represented their countries in the various GATT negotiations, beginning with 1947.

Nowadays—and of course GATT has continuously emphasized this fact—when countries are in a position to reduce their tariffs they seek compensating trading advantages in the markets of other countries, particularly of countries which are interested in obtaining a reduction of the tariffs of the first country. These become very important in the course of negotiations when it becomes a matter of making exchanges of trading advantages.

The result of this course of decision in Canada over the past decade relating to words used in our own Customs Tariff has been to give to the exporters of other countries an advantage in our market for which there has been no corresponding concession made by those countries in their markets in favour of the exports of Canadian goods into those markets. That is why I refer to this as a windfall. It was something that was not to be expected on their part when the GATT agreements were first negotiated or in the early renewals. It was not paid for and it was not a matter of agreement at all. It has been a windfall benefit.

We do not think that under modern conditions a windfall benefit should be given to other countries unless Canada obtains corresponding benefits in their markets in the course of negotiations under the auspices of GATT. That has been the approach to this question in recent years and it is a sound approach.

The number of times these important phrases appear in the Customs Tariff is quite extraordinary. If you comb through the provisions of the Customs Tariff in detail you will find that the expression "of a class or kind not made in Canada" appears in 70 items and you have similar appearances of corresponding expressions such as "of a kind not produced in Canada", "of a class or kind not produced in Canada", "of a class or kind not manufactured in Canada", and so on. There are half a dozen other similar expressions appearing. There are many items in the Customs Tariff in which this expression or one similar to it appears.

What of the meaning of these words? I think it is common ground that in legislalating with reference to business transactions it is desirable that the legislation be clear, that those who are entering into important business transactions under the provisions of the law should know what will be the consequences, particularly in relation to financial results. There have been definitions in the present section 6 of the Customs Tariff. They are subsections 9 and 10 of section 6. The present amendment would propose to repeal these two clauses, substitute new clauses and introduce certain new provisions. The new provisions are set forth in the resolution.

The effect will be to set up two types of goods under the broad category that we are discussing. They are goods that are made up according to specifications, which may be called custom made, and then there is the broad class of goods not of the custom-made type. In the amendment proposed we have two classes of goods, one described as goods "custom made to specifications" and the other described as "other than goods custom made to specifications", etc.

Definitions are provided in the amendment which it is believed will be of very great assistance in clarifying the law. In that way they will be of assistance to those who are entering into business transactions involving imports. These amendments will also have the desirable effect of restoring to the interpretation and administration of these provisions what was fully accepted until a decade ago when this process that I have described as one of erosion set in. In other words, we are proposing to restore to this concept the well recognized and established meaning that this concept and these phrases bore from 1907 right down to the beginning of the last decade.

In relation to this matter of definition there is an important point. I will enlarge on it in dealing with the proposed definitions as applied to the two classes of goods referred to in the new amendment. The statute, in the clauses to which I have referred, authorized the governor in council to establish the percentage of the normal Canadian consumption and to fix such percentage in defining whether goods are or are not of a class or kind made in Canada, and it was by an order in council that these powers were exercised. The order in council is P.C. 1618 of July 2, 1936. It provides that "articles shall not be deemed to be of a class or kind made or produced in Canada unless a quantity sufficient to supply 10 per centum of the normal Canadian consumption of such article is so made or produced".

In other words, there has never been a statutory provision defining the percentage of consumption in the Canadian market that must be produced in Canada before the article in question shall be deemed to be of a class or kind made in Canada. That has been a definition established by order in council in existence now for some 25 years and passed under the authority of the statute. One of the results of the amendment now submitted to the house is that this definition will no longer rest upon an order in council. We are proposing that the house should legislate completely on this subject without the necessity of any recourse to the fixing of percentages by order in council.

With respect, I invite the committee to approach this question from the point of view of dealing with the amendments according to their terms and, I think, the clear sort of definition that is proposed in the amendments. There is no occasion whatever for exaggerated statements in relation to the purpose of this amendment. Since the resolution was introduced into the house on the evening of December 20 there have been statements describing it as a measure of high protectionism. It is nothing of the kind. The effect of this measure is to restore the concept that was accepted and, indeed, not challenged in this country up till a decade ago, a well established and unchallenged concept. The fact is that there has been an erosion of that concept since and that producers in other countries have taken advantage of that erosion and have been shipping into the Canadian market more than they would otherwise have been entitled to at these very low rates applicable in the case of goods of a class or kind not produced in Canada, and they have done so without Canadians obtaining any compensating advantage in the markets of other countries.

This is the point, and it is the essential point that the government has in mind in bringing this legislation before the house. There is no justification or warrant whatever for describing this, as it has been described in certain newspapers, as a measure of high protectionism. It is nothing of the kind.

If it will be of assistance to the committee I should like to draw attention now to what I believe to be the essential features of the amendment now proposed. Let me just recapitulate them briefly in the hope that it may be of assistance to the committee in the discussion to follow.

First, for the first time the legislation will contain a positive definition instead of merely a negative limitation. Thus the negative formulation that "goods shall not be deemed to be of a class or kind made or produced in Canada unless" would be replaced in respect of the entire subsection by the positive formulation that "goods shall be deemed to be of a class or kind made or produced in Canada if".

Since a positive definition is being introduced it is appropriate that it be placed in conjunction with all other definitions in the Customs Tariff, that is to say, immediately after section 2, and that is why it is proposed to insert now a new section numbered 2A. The positive formulation may be expected to eliminate the uncertainties which might have surrounded a mere limitation although in fact, in the past, words with a limiting effect have in general been applied by the department and the courts as if they were a definition.

Second. I have already drawn attention to the two kinds of goods, goods that are custom-made according to specifications and goods that are not custom-made according to specifications. Perhaps this latter group could be called, for simplicity's sake, "shelf goods". They are goods of a kind that may often be found upon shelves, in inventories or in stock.

Now, I have pointed out the difference that is drawn in the proposed amendment between these two types of goods. I point out that in regard to shelf goods we have a provision to be found in 2A (1) (a):

> in the case of goods other than goods custom-made to specifications, goods of approximately the same class or kind are made or produced in Canada;

That is the definition or interpretation to be given to the words "of a class or kind made or produced in Canada". Then, in clause (2) of the amendment we have these words:

> Notwithstanding subsection (1), goods other than goods custom-made to specifications shall be deemed not to be of a class or kind made or produced in Canada unless at least 10 per cent of the normal Canadian consumption of goods of the same or approximately the same class or kind are made or produced in Canada.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the second observation I wish to make in regard to shelf goods. The word "approximately" is now inserted. This is designed to restore the breadth and flexibility of the whole concept which has been gradually narrowed down by the decisions of the tariff board, supported by the courts, reversing the rulings of the department, departmental rulings that were in accord with the interpretation well established up until a decade ago. It should be noted that in many cases these departmental rulings were in effect, as I have indicated, at the time the tariff items involved in "class or kind" were bound by GATT.

Mr. McIlraith: May I clarify one point before the minister leaves it? When he says the interpretation was well established up to a decade ago, do I understand him to suggest that the tariff board and the courts changed their decisions or that appeals were taken to these bodies and their decisions differed from the interpretations of the departmental authorities?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes; I think if the hon. member will examine the record of what I have just been saying he will see that the changes have been brought about in the narrowing of the concept, what I have described as a process of erosion that has occured as a result of the decisions of the tariff board on appeals and decisions of the courts.

The third observation, Mr. Chairman, is on the 10 per cent requirement which also relates to shelf goods. This requirement has been transferred from the present order in council to the basic legislation and, at the same time, it is provided that "Canadian consumption" is to be "as determined by the minister". This change is designed to reduce uncertainty and eliminate profitless litigation.

In so far as this matter of the jurisdiction conferred upon the minister is concerned, there has been a good deal of misunderstanding in some of the newspaper articles that I have seen on this subject. It has been pretended that this clause is designed to destroy the jurisdiction of the tariff board and to vest in the Minister of National Revenue arbitrary powers. That is a far-fetched, indeed fantastic, misinterpretation of the language of the proposed amendment.

Mr. Hellyer: That is what it says.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not what it says. It is quite evident the hon. member for Trinity either has not read the clause or has not read it with any degree of adult understanding.

Mr. Hellyer: That is what it says in English. I do not know in what language you are reading it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Evidently the hon. member does not know how to read English.

Mr. Hellyer: Certainly you don't know how to read it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I should like now to refer to the fact that the regular appeal procedure of the tariff board will remain open to those concerned with regard to (a) whether or not imported goods are of approximately the same class or kind as goods made in Canada; (b) the determination of the amount of Canadian production and (c) whether or not the number of articles manufactured in Canada does, in fact, constitute a minimum of 10 per cent of the normal Canadian production.

Mr. Hellyer: And that is not arbitrary power?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, this illustrates how completely befuddled the hon. member for Trinity is. I am talking about the jurisdiction of the tariff board and the hon. member, lost in his usual fog, is talking about the arbitrary powers of the minister. I am not talking about the powers of the minister at all, I am talking about the right of appeal to the tariff board, where the door is open. Perhaps the hon. member, until he comes out of his fog, had better remain silent.

Mr. McIlraith: The minister had better address his remarks to the bill. It is a very important bill.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is an important one, which can be better understood without these gratuitous interruptions by the hon. member for Trinity who has not read the bill.

Mr. McIlraith: These interruptions are brought about by your gratuitous references on the basis of personality.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member for Ottawa West address his efforts to restraining his colleague from making these gratuitous and irrelevant interruptions?

Mr. McIlraith: No, he is trying to keep the minister in order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The minister does not need this gratuitous assistance from the member for Ottawa West.

Mr. McIlraith: He could do with a model of some sort.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He will not be looking to the hon. member for Ottawa West for any helpful instructions. He will take them from other sources, but not from the hon. member for Ottawa West who has been holding forth in his sepulchral tones.

Now, the fourth observation I should like to make on this subject in the hope that it will be of assistance to the committee is this: For the first time an attempt is made to grapple with the problem of "custom-made goods". There has been a good deal of discussion over the years, Mr. Chairman, in regard to this matter, and I think it is quite clear that it never was intended by any government that introduced words of this kind that custom-made goods should automatically be ruled as not made in Canada. However, the rulings of the courts have tended in that direction.

In the field of custom-made goods, each product is either unique or virtually unique. Accordingly, it has been found necessary, in the provisions relating to this field, to confer upon the Minister of National Revenue a discretion that is broader than was necessary with respect to mass-produced or "shelf" goods. This is the reason, and a very complete reason, in my mind, for the proposed provision with respect to custom-made goods put forward here. We have in the proposed amendment the following provision:

For the purposes of this act, goods shall be deemed to be of a class or kind made or produced in Canada if—

I shall now refer to clause (b):

—in the case of goods custom-made to specifications, adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time.

This definition with respect to goods custom-made according to specifications will undoubtedly bring the position much closer to the original intention, to the established understanding and meaning of this legislation of a decade ago and will stop the process of erosion that has occurred in this period.

Mr. McMillan: What does the minister mean by "a reasonable period of time"?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is a matter of fair interpretation. It will depend upon the nature of the particular goods. Naturally every one of these cases will have to be examined on its own circumstances, and regard will have to be had for all the circumstances such as the length of time it takes to bring a particular article into production. It is a matter in which regard will have to be had for the business practice in this situation and I think the hon. member will appreciate what may be regarded as a reasonable time will vary from one type of goods to another. Something might depend also in such situations on the extent to which order books were filled up.

Mr. Pugh: Will the minister accept another question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Pugh: This thought just runs in my mind. Would you be obliged to have a firm offer from a producer in Canada to produce that type of goods; I refer to a firm offer from a producer in Canada indicating that he is going to produce the item or could produce it?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. It is not necessary that it be a firm offer. However, in any situation that arises calling for an interpretation in this matter, regard obviously will be had for all of the circumstances that concern it. That does not necessitate a firm offer in the sense of a binding legal obligation. But when the question arises for determination with respect to one of these custom-made goods, it will be the duty of those who are given that responsibility under the legislation to determine whether, having regard to all the circumstances, adequate facilities exist in Canada for economic production of that item of goods within a reasonable period of time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister permit a question, for the purpose of clarification?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister explain how you could make any determination of whether there was any demand for custom-made goods before you had a customer?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I take it that we are still speaking of custom-made goods?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not shelf goods?

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): All right. With regard to custom-made goods, suppose the situation arises in respect of a Canadian importer or, let us say, of a manufacturer in another country who wishes to know what will be the tariff rate applicable to his goods if they are here in Canada. A ruling is asked for. It may be asked for in advance of actual entry. If entry occurs, of course, a decision must be made as of that time. That decision is important because the results can be substantial having regard to the wide difference in the applicable tariff rates. Regard will be had to capacity and that will involve a determination in Canada as to whether the facilities exist. It does not mean that goods of precisely the same type and manufactured according to precisely the same specifications must have been made previously. There are numerous situations in which goods that are similar in nature have been produced but not of precisely the same kind as those that are specified in the particular case. It is in this area that some rigid and hard decisions have been made in the past.

I am prepared to contend that it never was the intention of parliament and never was the intention of governments that introduced legislation of this kind down through the years since 1907 that where the capacity exists, it should be a precise requirement of the legislation that the particular item of goods should actually have been made before it shall be deemed to have been of a class or kind made in Canada.

The Chairman: Order. I must inform the committee that the minister's time has expired. I understand there is unanimous consent that he continue.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I think I have completed my general remarks on the introduction of the bill. I realize there will be many questions. It is for the committee to decide whether they wish to ask questions now or later. I am here to serve the committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was simply trying to elucidate the last point made by the minister. I think perhaps I did not make my question sufficiently specific. However, taking the answer the minister gave, I understand that if an importer of some article that is not now an article that is made currently in Canada—that is, a custom-made article—goes to the department and asks for a ruling the department would then have an onus put on it to search around Canada in order to find out whether there was capacity to make this article before giving an answer as to what the duty was. However, a great many people order things, although perhaps not a custom-made article of the kind the minister has in mind, and they do not go and ask the department for a ruling in advance. Indeed, I am not sure whether the department would give it. What I should like to know is what the modus operandi is here? I think we should all like to know this because we cannot form any judgment about this matter without knowing it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think there is one circumstance bearing on this question that will help to answer the question of the hon. member. What we are dealing with here are, broadly speaking, not small articles.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We are dealing here largely with large machines and indeed often machinery systems. In this situation I cannot imagine these people going very far in incurring substantial obligation without assuring themselves of where they stand with respect to the custom duties that are likely to be imposed.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is exactly the point that I should like the minister to follow up. He is asking us to make what is in effect a new law with respect to custom-made goods, a law that has not existed previously. We should know how it is going to operate. Suppose there is no manufacturer for these custom-made goods. There may be a potential manufacturer but there is no actual manufacturer now. Every time someone comes to the Minister of National Revenue to make an inquiry about wanting to import some new kind of huge bulldozer from some other country, must the Minister of National Revenue refuse to answer what the duty on it will be until he searches from one end of Canada to the other in order to find out whether there is a potential manufacturer here and perhaps get by a construction season and put the work off to another year? That is the kind of practical problem that will arise in this case. As the minister so correctly stated, these are big machines or perhaps systems of machinery, where a big capital investment is going to take place, and people are not going to want to wait six months while this question is being determined.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. member may be unconsciously exaggerating the difficulty.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We are not here in the realm in which there are great numbers of producers involved. There are perhaps not more than about eight or ten manufacturers of heavy machinery or large items of machinery in Canada. Hence the difficulty that the hon. member foresees in those proportions is not anticipated.

I made brief reference to the subject when I spoke on December 20 and drew attention to the fact that there is confidential information often available in these cases that enables the department to make rulings and to obtain what is required in the way of data from the producers who are concerned.

May I make just this one final observation. This matter is of interest not only with respect to the customs duties under the 70 particular items of the Customs Tariff to which I have referred but it is also of considerable importance in the administration of the anti-dumping laws. If hon. members will have regard to section 6, subsection 1 of the Customs Tariff they will see that dumping duties apply only in respect of goods of a class or kind made or produced in Canada. Accordingly all class or kind determinations are strictly relevant in this connection. The anti-dumping laws cannot be invoked unless what is concerned are goods of a class or kind made or produced in Canada.

In so far, therefore, as the new legislation results in "made" determinations in borderline cases, this will have the effect of enabling dumping to be dealt with by the application of the anti-dumping duty.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, at this stage of our debate we have an opportunity to elicit further information. It is true that the minister did describe his intentions in his budget speech of December 20 to an extent, but I was rather disappointed in some of the imponderables in connection with these proposals. We have had very little additional information given to us this afternoon beyond what was described when the minister spoke on this subject on December 20.

At this stage there are a number of questions that naturally arise because the minister's statement to date is lacking in the necessary information. The minister indicated that in an amendment of this type to the Customs Tariff Act the language that we find in the resolution will compare very closely with the language that will appear at the next stage of debate when we have before us the amending bill.

If that is so, and we accept that, I think all of us who have read the language in the resolution that is now before us will see very quickly that, far from finding here something in the nature of preciseness, in some of the essential factors we find the very opposite.

The hon. member for Welland raised a very pertinent question, which I have here in my notes and which arouses my curiosity in connection with the language of this resolution. It refers to the language and what is a "reasonable period of time".

Before we proceed from the resolution stage to discussion of the bill I think the minister should give us a much better explanation than he has so far provided as to what is a reasonable period of time. I felt that the explanation was very foggy indeed and it certainly did not satisfy the curiosity that I have as to the minister's intention in respect to a reasonable period of time.

Then I would draw the attention of the committee to another phrase which is certainly also very vague indeed. I think we must have some further explanation of the intention of the ministry in regard to it. I refer to the phrase in the very same section. What is going to be, in the opinion of the minister, "economic production"? That is indeed a very wide and broad phrase and would require considerable clarification.

While the minister recited perhaps six or seven times, simply as a statement, that there has been within the last decade, by reason of litigation, what he called an erosion of what was the original intent with respect to this item in the Customs Tariff, I was disappointed that he did not give any cases to illustrate what he had in mind in this respect. I think that as the debate continues we should hear from the minister a citation of some of the litigation and hearings before the tariff board and in the superior courts about which he complains and which he says are largely responsible for his decision to bring in this amending legislation.

I felt that the minister certainly skirted around section 3 of this proposed resolution when I think he used the phrase "The proposed legislation will give a broader discretion to the Minister of National Revenue in so far as decisions under this section are concerned". It is certainly not a matter of broader discretion. One simply has to read the language. It says here:

> The decision of the minister shall be final with respect to—

This, that and the other thing. That certainly was the understatement of the day, when the minister attempted to brush aside this arbitrary power by saying that there is a broader discretion.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has unintentionally quite misunderstood my statement. I was drawing attention to the fact that the power of decision conferred on the minister applies in the one class of goods but not the other. I was dealing with the two classes of goods, one the custom-made class of goods and the other the shelf class of goods.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, one has only to read the language here, which is very plain:

> The decision of the minister shall be final with respect to the following matters:
> (a) the normal Canadian consumption of the goods described in subsection (2), and
> (b) whether goods are custom-made to specifications, and whether adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time.

When one reads that language one recognizes immediately that this is certainly not a matter of broader discretion, which was the mild description given by the minister, but the conferring upon the minister of arbitrary powers of very substantial consequence indeed, an absolute discretion in these matters which are matters of fact. I take it that the minister, with powers of this kind, could perhaps in his discretion make decisions that are contrary to fact, such as would be determined and have been determined hitherto by litigation by an appeal on the part of the taxpayer to our courts, our tariff board and the like.

That, with respect to these matters, is a right that is being taken away from the taxpayer. This, instead of providing preciseness and something definite, I suggest will actually bring in uncertainty on the part of the business community when they find that they are not going to be able to rely on a history of judicial decision. These matters are of utmost importance in their cost of production, because, as the minister said, most of these items of the custom-made type are exceedingly expensive and are perhaps a basic factor in the cost of production and in manufacturing of other goods that have to be produced in competition on a world wide basis.

I am satisfied that when these matters are not likely to be decided by rule of law and the recording of decisions of the tariff board and our courts, and depend, on the contrary, on the decision of a minister, many businessmen facing this uncertainty will perhaps decide that they cannot go ahead with their plans because of the vagueness and uncertainties of this law.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that we will hear from the minister further about some of the definitions of these broad phrases that are contained in the language of this resolution. I refer to a reasonable period of time, economic production, adequate facilities and the like. I do not think we can give adequate consideration to a discussion of the intent in this legislation until we get from the Minister of Finance or from the Minister of National Revenue who will be making the decisions under this statute a further explanation of what their real intentions are under the broad provision which is contained in this resolution.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Perhaps I could deal with one or two of the points which have been raised. I believe we are to rise in a minute or two—

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, the custom is that a representative—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was assuming the hon. member for Assiniboia would not wish to speak when there are only about one and a half minutes remaining before we rise.

Mr. Argue: I should like to speak for that minute and a half.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the hon. member for Assiniboia continues, may I ask a question—

Mr. Argue: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minister made a misstatement and I should like to have some clarification.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Argue: I think I have the right to speak. In the minute and a half or minute at my disposal I should like to say that while I listened with great care to the spokesman of the Liberal party I was unable to determine in my mind from his statement the exact position which the Liberal party takes on this question. I should like to say for the C.C.F. new party that we feel that this resolution should not be embarked upon, that this is a return to Tory protectionism and a continuation of the policy followed by this government since it took office of carrying forward one increase in tariffs after another. The government in embarking on this undesirable policy is in my judgment working against the modern trend. The government, in going forward with this kind of policy, is using old weapons, old means which have invariably led to increased tariff barriers and retaliation in the past and to impediments to an expanding international trade.

This government has, of course, been very free with its advice to other nations. After certain discussions had taken place overseas in December with regard to common market procedures the Minister of Trade and Commerce at that time made it perfectly clear that Canada was prepared to retaliate if Britain went into the common market. I wonder if the government is retaliating in advance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is utterly silly. There is no retaliation here at all, and if the hon. member does not know that he does not understand much about it.

Mr. Argue: The minister's skin is very thin.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is not. It is quite normal, but I wish something could be said about the way the hon. member uses his tongue to say things which are utterly at variance with the facts.

Progress reported.

OIL

STATEMENT ON NATIONAL OIL POLICY

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As the house is aware, the government has been giving active consideration to the situation of the oil industry in Canada for some time. It has had the benefit of a constructive report from the royal commission on energy, and the national energy board has studied intensively the changing conditions which have characterized the period since the commission reported.

I wish to inform the house that the government has decided upon a national oil policy which is, briefly, to achieve target levels of production of oil, including natural gas liquids, which will be set from time to time, and which will be designed to reach approximately 800,000 barrels a day in 1963. This objective for 1963 can be achieved by the industry on an economically sound basis, and will be approximately as high as the figure which would be achieved if the Montreal pipe line were to be constructed.

The production target level for the first part of this period will be an average of 640,000 barrels a day for the year 1961, with a level of not less than 625,000 barrels a day to be attained by mid-year. This compares with an average production of 550,000 barrels a day in 1960.

These targets are to be reached by increased use of Canadian oil in domestic markets west of the Ottawa valley, and by some expansion of export sales largely in existing markets which can be reached through established pipe lines.

The growth in domestic use is predicated in particular on substituting in Ontario markets west of the Ottawa valley products refined from Canadian crude for these now supplied from foreign crude. This will require in Ontario the displacement of the present small imports of crude, and a progressive reduction in imports of foreign products and transfers of products refined from foreign crudes in Montreal. Refining capacity in Ontario will have to be increased over the period so that by 1963 capacity is sufficient to enable the Ontario market west of the Ottawa valley to be supplied substantially from Canadian crudes.

The government program for expanded production of oil will be on a voluntary basis, but importers of crude and petroleum products will be required to report their imports monthly from January 1, 1961 in order to permit the national energy board to continue to assess the situation.

The increase in production of Canadian oil reflected in these target levels will of course require a sincere effort and full co-operation by all segments of the industry. The government desires that this effort and co-operation will be forthcoming without formal regulation.

The government has instructed the national energy board to evaluate the contribution of individual companies to the general efforts of the industry, as well as to report periodically on the progress of the program. If this progress suggests that voluntary efforts are not producing the results anticipated, then the government will take whatever further steps the circumstances may require to ensure the success of its policy, including the proclamation of section 87 of the National Energy Board Act, which provides for the regulation of imports and exports of oil.

In developing its policy the government has full regard to the interests of other countries which might be affected by its decisions. Its present program is designed to achieve the national objectives with the least possible disruption of normal trade patterns.

The increase in exports which is integral to the government's program is wholly consistent with the growth of sales of Canadian oil contemplated when exemption from United States oil import controls was established, under which Canadian oil is relatively free to move into the United States by overland means of transportation.

The progressive displacement of imported crudes and products in the Ontario market is considered to be fully consistent with the public announcement of the government of Venezuela that it considers that its oils should not reach these markets in the interior of Canada.

The United States government has been made aware of the Canadian government's plans in view of the close connections between the oil economies of the two countries. Other interested governments are being informed today of the contents of the announcement which I have just made.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): The house has listened with care and I am sure a great deal of interest to this statement which on the face of it appears to be an important statement emanating from the government with reference to the oil industry. After having looked at it carefully and at first blush this appears to us to be not a statement of national policy but only a repetition of what was contained in the recommendations of the Borden commission set up some few years ago.

As all hon. members know, the Borden commission presented to the governor in council in July of 1957 a special report on oil. The announcement today in our opinion is a faithful reproduction of the Borden commission's recommendations as they can be found at page 6-32 of the second report of the royal commission on energy. I should like to place on the record a brief summary of the recommendations of that commission:

To summarize, the commission recommends:

(1) That it be national policy

(a) to encourage and permit the export of Canadian crude oil without licence, and

(b) to ensure the continued use, consistent with the interests of the Canadian consumer of petroleum products, of Canadian crude in refinery areas of Canada accessible to it by existing pipe line facilities, thereby increasing the market outlets for such crude oil.

(2) That to implement such national policy the oil companies concerned take steps as soon as possible to displace, with products refined from Canadian crude, a volume of petroleum products now moving into the Ontario market from the Montreal refinery area equivalent to approximately 50,000 barrels daily of crude oil.

(3) That to implement further such national policy the Canadian oil industry take vigorous and imaginative action very substantially to enlarge its markets in the United States on a basis that will ensure the continuing participation of Canadian crude in these markets and in their expansion.

(4) That no government action should at this time be taken to ensure the construction of pipe line facilities to transport Canadian crude oil to the Montreal refinery area and that before any such action is taken an opportunity be given to the oil industry to demonstrate that it can find markets elsewhere in Canada and the United States sufficient to sustain a healthy and vigorous Canadian oil industry with the incentive for further exploration and development.

(5) That, if government action should become necessary to implement the national policy we have recommended above, imports of crude oil be made subject to licence and that such licences be denied (except for some good and sufficient reason) to refiners in a refinery area in Canada where adequate pipe line facilities exist for the transportation of Canadian crude oil to meet the demands of such refinery area, but that crude oil imported through a pipe line or by motor carrier or rail and produced in the country from which such crude oil is imported be exempted from such licensing.

I ask the house to find the difference between the statement just made by the minister and the recommendations of the Borden commission which I have just read. I submit there is no difference in essence, between the two and I challenge the minister to point out any material difference between the recommendations I have just read and the statement he has made.

Of course, we will examine very carefully the statement that has been made and in due course and from time to time as the opportunity arises, we will make known our position on this policy. After listening to the statement, the only conclusion to be derived is that (1) it took the government two years to take cognizance of the report of the royal commission and (2) it took the government the two-year period preceding that to submit this matter to a royal commission on energy.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the statement put before the house today by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) is undoubtedly an important one for a lagging Canadian oil industry. I believe that this announcement of policy by the government holds out the hope of renewed activity, renewed production and an increase in markets for our Canadian oil industry.

The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) appeared to be critical of the government's policy because he alleged it followed the royal commission's report. The report is in much greater detail than this statement. I know it follows it to some extent but I can see no reason to criticize the government for having gone forward with certain recommendations put before the country by this royal commission.

For many years hon. members of this group have advocated a national energy policy. We hope this is a step in the development of such a greatly needed national energy policy. I tell the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) that the type of policy enunciated today to deal with a difficult trade situation as far as the oil industry is concerned in the opinion of our group is a preferable one to that of increases in tariffs as a means of dealing with this problem.

We, of course, will have to study the target figures. We will concern ourselves with how this policy is implemented, with the allocation of markets among Canadian companies, and so on. We will have comments to make on this aspect of the policy as it unfolds.

It is well known to hon. members of this house that the international oil industry is in general an international cartel and to the extent that this policy will encourage production in Canada by independent oil companies we believe it will be a welcome policy in the opinion of Canadians. We like to see any government adopt the kind of social planning necessary to the welfare of our country.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire what the business will be for tomorrow and Friday?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will carry on with the budget resolutions. If they are concluded, we will take the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration on Friday.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

RADIOACTIVITY SAMPLING RESULTS

Question No. 60—Mr. Howard:

1. For each of the radioactivity sampling stations in Canada, what was for each month since July 1, 1959, the level of each radioactive material so found in (a) milk; (b) soil; (c) rainfall; (d) air; (e) water; (f) bones; (g) cereal grains by type; (h) salt water fish; (i) fresh water fish; (j) vegetables by type?

2. Have any steps been taken to measure the levels and effects of such radioactive materials in the human body and, if so, what are the results of such steps and studies?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. (a) Table attached.

(b) Soil—Initial samples collected during summer of 1960; analyses not yet completed.

(c) Table attached.

(e) Water—No measurements made.

(f) Bones—(Measurement of strontium-90 content in micro micro curies per gram calcium). Human bone samples are made available to the Department of National Health and Welfare through the co-operation of pathologists across Canada. Samples are not received at specific intervals nor from specific sampling stations. Results for samples collected since July 1959 will not be available until the publication of the next annual report.

(g) (i) Cereal grains-wheat—(measurement of strontium-90 content in micro micro curies per gram calcium). The Department of National Health and Welfare and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited jointly operate a wheat monitoring program. To date measurements have been made in the laboratories of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. The initial report on this program is in preparation.

(ii) Cereal grains other than wheat—No measurements made.

(h) Salt water fish—No measurements made.

(i) Fresh water fish—No measurements made.

(j) Vegetables—No measurements made.

2. A total body monitoring facility is being constructed by the Department of National Health and Welfare and the laboratory to house this facility will be ready in February. A preliminary period for the installation and calibration of instruments will be necessary before the equipment is ready for operation.

Questions

RADIOACTIVE LEVELS ABROAD

Question No. 61—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1960, has any information been received from other countries regarding the levels of radioactive material in those countries?
2. If so, what are the names of the countries and the levels of radioactive material so found?

1. Yes.

2. The Argentine, Austria, Denmark, England, Finland, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, the United States, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

A wide range of radioactive substances originating in radioactive fall-out are measured in these countries in samples of air, rainfall, soil, milk, wheat and food products and human bone collected and analysed at different times. Single copies of the reports are kept on the files of the Department of National Health and Welfare. As there are a great many such reports, they are not reprinted here but are available within the department for study by interested members of parliament.

MR. DACOUGNA—DEPORTATION TO FRENCH GUIANA

Question No. 75—Mr. Argue:

1. Did Mr. Dacougna of French Guiana seek entry to Canada, at Montreal, in September, 1960?
2. If so, was he affianced to Miss Louise Bolduc of Coaticook, P.Q.?
3. Was his passport in order?
4. Was he in possession of return transportation to French Guiana via Trans-Canada Air Lines?
5. Was he refused admission to Canada?
6. Was he put in gaol, and, if so, for how long?
7. Was he subsequently deported and, if so, on what grounds?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

1. Yes.

2. Yes; by correspondence only. The couple had never met.

3. Yes.

4. Yes.

5. Yes.

6. Mr. Dacougna was held in the custody of the provincial police from 2.40 a.m. to 8.10 a.m. on September 23, 1960, and from 9.05 p.m. on October 6, 1960, to 4.55 a.m. on October 7, 1960. Since there are no separate immigration detention facilities at Montreal airport or in Montreal itself, it was necessary to make use of the local goal facilities for these periods of overnight detention.

7. Yes; the order for deportation was issued under section 5(p) of the Immigration Act.

PROVINCIAL WINTER WORKS PROJECTS

Question No. 90—Mr. Racine:

How many winter works projects, in each province, have been accepted by the federal government (a) during 1959-60; (b) since the beginning of the 1960-61 period to date?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) presented the first report of the standing committee on mines, forests and waters, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

ESTIMATES—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Arthur Smith (Calgary South) presented the first report of the standing committee on estimates and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE

GRAIN—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALE TO CHINA

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that the efforts of the government to sell grain to new markets have resulted in one of the largest single sales ever consummated in the commercial field. Agreement with the China Resources Company of Hong Kong has been reached for the sale and shipment to China during the next few months of 40 million bushels of grain. The break-down is as follows: 750,000 long tons of wheat, equivalent to 28 million bushels; 260,000 long tons of barley, representing 12,133,000 bushels.

The grade of wheat will be mostly No. 2 Manitoba northern, which is the predominant grade available in Canada. There will be a limited quantity of No. 3 Manitoba northern. The barley will be No. 1 feed.

The total value of this sale is approximately $60 million. The wheat and barley will be shipped from the Pacific coast ports of Vancouver, New Westminster, Victoria and Prince Rupert.

The Canadian wheat board negotiated the agreement for the Canadian government. The Canadian grain trade, acting as agents of the Canadian wheat board, will be completing delivery and shipment of the individual cargoes, and will undertake the necessary arrangements in connection therewith.

I know that all Canadians will be pleased at the size of the sale. I would like at this time to pay tribute to my predecessor who was in charge of the wheat board before he became Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill). He made the decision for representatives of the Canadian wheat board to go to China in 1958 and again in the fall of 1960. I have carried on with his plans for the expansion of wheat and flour sales to all parts of the world, but I feel that credit should go where credit is due.

The Canadian wheat board, and all others who helped, deserve our appreciation. The government's policy of accelerated wheat sales is illustrated by the fact that Canada's share of the commercial wheat markets of the world has increased from 30 per cent to 35 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope the minister will permit me to interrupt and remind him that the privilege of the floor to make announcements is limited to factual statements. I do so because I have difficulty from time to time with the comment which follows such statements, which I propose to keep within the same narrow bounds. I just feel that in embarking on an explanation of government policy he ought to have that in mind.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for your advice. I just wanted to keep the record straight.

I am informed that when all commitments are considered the Pacific coast ports will be utilized to full grain capacity until next August, and the heavy movement of western grain during the next few months should have a beneficial result on the Canadian economy generally and more particularly to the workers handling grain, and to the farmers.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Of course all members of the house join with the minister in the satisfaction which undoubtedly must come in the realization of this arrangement with the Chinese mainland, an arrangement which will be of great value to the income position of many farmers in Canada. I am sure the minister will realize that the drop in farm income last year—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In any event, this announcement will be very well received by the people of Canada.

Sale of Grain to China

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): The announcement made by the Minister of Agriculture is welcome and important. I trust it is merely a prelude to a continuing expansion of sales of Canadian grain in markets where we have been selling relatively small quantities in recent years. If the minister can do so later on the orders of the day, I should like him to give the house some information as to the price and terms involved, because I think such information is necessary if we are to judge the precise value of this very important transaction.

I express the hope that the minister and the government may raise their sights and attempt to better the target for wheat sales set by the minister at 300 million bushels for the present year. I think it is necessary to get sales above that figure, and if the government is able to conclude further transactions such as the one now concluded I think an improvement in the target should be possible.

This is an announcement of importance. I express the hope that the government will explore the possibility of large sales of wheat to India, where, I suggest, a very large market for Canadian grain is available if the government takes the necessary initiative. In conclusion I would say this is an indication that in an economic sense the government recognizes the existence of the government of China. We suggest that in logic they should now extend this recognition—

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture on behalf of the prairie grain growers. First I want to thank the minister for his announcement of additional grain sales worth $60 million. That is very good news for all Canada. I should like to ask the minister whether the shipments from the Pacific coast ports will also include Saskatchewan and Manitoba wheat as well as wheat within the Pacific shipping area, thus helping wheat delivery quotas in all parts of the three prairie provinces.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): I do not think there is going to be any change in the wheat board's policy of taking wheat from the areas closest to the ports. I would think most of this particular wheat will some from Alberta, reaching further, I trust, into Saskatchewan.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

INCOME TAX ACT—NOTICE OF AMENDMENTS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): As the leader of the house has announced that in committee of ways and means today or tomorrow we shall be coming to the resolution respecting amendments to the Income Tax Act, may I now give notice of certain amendments which will be moved to the resolution and ask for these to be incorporated in Votes and Proceedings in case we do not come to all of them today.

I have sent mimeographed copies to hon. members opposite and we shall have, I think, an ample supply for use in the house today, but it may be a convenience for hon. members to have on record in Votes and Proceedings such of the amendments as may not be reached in the house today.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—LETTER TO B.C. PREMIER

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): In view of the interest indicated by hon. members in this subject may I read a letter which I wrote two days ago to Premier Bennett of British Columbia concerning financial arrangements respecting the development of the Columbia river system:

Dear Premier Bennett:

I acknowledge receipt of your letter dated January 13 concerning the subject of financial arrangements for development of the Columbia river.

I was very much surprised that you doubt that the Canadian share of downstream power can be delivered to the Vancouver area at a cost of less than 4 mills. The negotiations between the federal and British Columbia governments have been proceeding for nearly two years, and I am informed that this is the first time that you or the representatives of your government have attacked this estimate.

The treaty with the United States, as you are aware, has now been signed by the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States of America. The negotiations and the signing of the treaty were both carried through with the full knowledge and approval of your government at every stage. The only occasion on which doubt ever arose as to the readiness of British Columbia to carry out the Columbia river treaty as negotiated was on the occasion of the reference made by you last December to the British Columbia energy board of certain questions involving a comparison of engineering and economic aspects of the Columbia and Peace river projects. At the meeting of the policy liaison committee early in January our representatives expressed their concern that this might involve doubt and delay on the part of British Columbia in proceeding with the Columbia river development. Your representatives on the committee assured us that this was not the case, and that on the contrary the reference was designed to hasten the taking of effective action by British Columbia under the proposed treaty. On the basis of these assurances, the treaty negotiations were concluded and the treaty was signed, as above stated, with the full knowledge and approval of your government.

In the light of these circumstances, for you to write as you now have, expressing doubts as to the feasibility of the Columbia river development "from engineering and financial standpoints", is a most extraordinary development, and must necessarily raise again our doubts as to British Columbia's intentions which we had thought were set at rest by the assurances of the British Columbia members of the policy liaison committee. I do hope that we will not now be met by delaying action on the part of British Columbia.

I am ready and prepared to discuss the financial aspects of the project with you, as we had previously arranged.

I am puzzled, when confronted with the new position which you are taking, which would appear to make our negotiations rather hypothetical, since you now seem to question the economic feasibility of the entire enterprise. I understood that we were aiming to deal with the question of the financing of the project as between the federal and provincial governments on the understanding that both governments accepted the fact that the project is entirely economic. The federal government has no doubt whatever that the project is entirely economic and should be proceeded with and without delay.

We have already submitted to you a generous proposal for federal financial participation in the cost of the undertaking. I shall be pleased to come to Victoria at an early date to discuss these matters on the basis that your government seriously intends to support the project, and on this basis we can, I am sure, have fruitful talks in regard to the means of achieving the common purpose of the two governments.

I would also suggest that the Canada-British Columbia policy liaison committee might plan to hold its next meeting beginning on the same date as our meeting in order to assist in the early conclusion of all the necessary arrangements for the implementation of the treaty.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the house thank the minister for having placed on Hansard the letter which he has addressed to the premier of British Columbia. We hope he will also find it possible to put on Hansard the letter which he has referred to. The tenor and language of the letter indicate that there is not too much harmony in so far as the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia are concerned. As the house knows, a project of this great importance is one where there must of necessity be understanding among the four governments involved. We hope that harmony will be forthcoming in due course.

With respect to more detailed comments on the letter, they will be given to the house at the proper time.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of this group we appreciate the minister informing the house of this latest letter to Premier Bennett. I must say that this letter and recent developments illustrate, in view of past experience, how completely naive the government of Canada has been in its negotiations with the premier of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it that the letter was produced for the information of the house and not to introduce a debate on the subject matter of the letter. I hope the hon. member will reserve his comments of an argumentative or debating kind until the matter comes before the house at the appropriate time for that purpose. In the meantime comment is a matter of the recognition of the statement and a reservation of differences, if there are any, rather than an exposition of them.

Mr. Herridge: I accept your admonition, Mr. Speaker, but continue to think what I intended to say.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask him whether he will table the letter of the premier of British Columbia to which he referred in the letter which he put on Hansard? I wonder whether that letter could not be put on Hansard in the same manner as his own.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the tabling of the letter dated January 13, which I received from Premier Bennett. I should say that I have not asked his permission to table the letter, but I think I am justified in doing so in view of the fact that he gave a statement to the press, I think shortly after writing this letter, as to its contents. I think on that basis I am quite justified in supplying a copy of Premier Bennett's letter to me of January 13 for the information of the house, and in view of the fact that the letter I read today is in reply to this letter from Premier Bennett.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the minister, but I wonder whether we could have it in Hansard alongside the letter he has tabled.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly in agreement with that, if that will meet the convenience of hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that the first letter presented today by the Minister of Finance was to go in Hansard.

Some hon. Members: It was read.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give its consent that the further letter be printed following the letter which has been put on the record?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Columbia River Development

[Editor's note: the letter referred to is as follows:]

OFFICE OF THE PREMIER
Province of British Columbia

Victoria, January 13, 1961

The Honourable Donald M. Fleming, Minister of Finance,
Ottawa, Canada.

My dear Mr. Fleming:

Further to our earlier correspondence concerning financial arrangements for development of the Columbia river, and specifically with regard to your letter of December 30, 1960, I regret that it has not been possible as yet for us to meet. I believe, and am sure you agree, that since negotiations leading to a treaty between the governments of Canada and the United States appear now to have progressed to the signing stage, it would be in the best interests of the finance departments of both Canada and British Columbia to discuss the necessary arrangements as quickly as possible.

When it is convenient for you to visit Victoria, I should like to suggest that you would find it advantageous to bring with you technical financial officials who will be able to undertake immediate detailed discussions with British Columbia technical officials on the policy matters referred to them by us.

Like the federal government, British Columbia is anxious that the Columbia development proceed at the earliest possible moment—assuming, of course, that it is proved feasible from engineering and financial standpoints. In that connection, I must tell you that British Columbia entertains serious doubts that power returned from the United States as the Canadian share of downstream benefits can in fact, be delivered to the Vancouver area at the cost of 3.77 mills which has been quoted so often by your colleagues. For that reason, the British Columbia energy board has been asked to investigate this question in association with independent engineering counsel of international repute, and an interim report will be received by March 1.

If the cost of 3.77 mills quoted so frequently by the Honourable E. D. Fulton is, in fact, accurate, then, of course, no difficulty in financing the project should present itself. Until the cost figure is verified through study by the British Columbia energy board, however, the government of British Columbia would of course require the guarantee of the Canadian government that the cost is firm and accurate before it would add its own guarantee to any financial arrangements for the development.

I look forward to meeting you for full and cordial discussion of these arrangements at the earliest possible opportunity.

Yours faithfully,

W. A. C. BENNETT,
Premier and Minister of Finance.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF COMMONS MEMBERS OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. John Pallett (Peel) moved:

That the 24 members of the House of Commons to act on behalf of the house as members of the joint committee on Indian affairs be as follows namely: Miss LaMarsh and Messrs. Badanai, Baldwin, Barrington, Cadieu, Charlton, Fairfield, Grenier, Gundlock, Hardie, Henderson, Howard, Korchinski, Leduc, MacRae, Martel, Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria), McQuillan, Pickersgill, Robinson, Small, Stefanson, Thomas and Wratten, and that a message be sent to the Senate to inform Their Honours that the foregoing members have been appointed to act on behalf of the commons on the said joint committee of both houses.

Motion agreed to.

OIL

U.S. ATTITUDE TOWARD ANNOUNCED CANADIAN POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the minister tell the house whether the United States ministers whom he met in Washington have concurred in the national policy on oil which he announced yesterday; and, if not, what precisely was the position they took?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance and I went to Washington a week ago. We advised the members of the United States government of the oil policy which the Canadian government intended to proclaim. We did not ask their concurrence in it; we advised them of it and we discussed the implications of it, how it would work and matters of that kind.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask what their reaction was?

Mr. Hees: I think the reaction was very favourable, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, now that calm has returned to the house I would like to clear up any possible misunderstanding in the answer I gave to the hon. member for Laurier a short time ago regarding my assessment of the reaction of the United States government representatives, when we saw them a week ago, regarding our oil policy. As I pointed out, we did not ask for or receive their concurrence or rejection of our oil policy. They did not agree with it or disagree with it, and neither did we ask them to do so. My answer to the hon. member was in reference to the very friendly atmosphere in which we were received by the United States ministers in Washington.

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF PORTABLE PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the strong emphasis laid by the Canadian Labour Congress in its brief to the government on a social security system and the desirability of a portable pension plan. Can the Prime Minister inform the house what consideration is being given by the government to the introduction of a social security plan which would include portable pensions?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): As the hon. gentleman knows, a question on government policy is not answered in the house at a time like this. Any consideration being given thereto, whether favourable or unfavourable, will be brought to the attention of the house in due course.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister care to go so far as to say whether it is the intention of the government to introduce legislation in this field during this session?

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the hon. gentleman had followed my earlier answer he would have had an answer to this question.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REMARKS OF MINISTER TO LABOUR REPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Since the minister, in his lecture this morning to the representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress, saw fit to shift the responsibility for unemployment from the government to labour and management, will he try to reconcile this strange new hypothesis with his party's—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: May I intervene in the hon. member's question to say that in my view it is not a question seeking information. In the first instance he makes a statement and then proceeds to make an assumption, which is contrary to the proper practice at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great confidence, Mr. Speaker, I submit that this question is perfectly proper.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This morning the Minister of Labour—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member, but I should like to know just what factual information he is requesting, and I think he should give that now because the absence of it was the basis for my intervention.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask this question. This morning the Minister of Labour, in talking to the leaders of labour, announced a change of policy, and I am now asking the Minister of Labour what I believe to be a proper question. My question is, why did the government make this announcement of policy contrary to the announcements and the assurances they gave to the people of Canada regarding full employment when they sought the support of the people in the last federal election?

Mr. Speaker: As I understand the question the hon. member is seeking to put, he is making the assumption or the statement that a change of policy was announced and is asking why it was announced at that time?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps that might be asserted as a question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is the question which I was not permitted to ask.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has made the assertion that I gave a lecture to labour today, and that I put forward a new philosophy or a new policy. It is utterances of this type by the hon. member for Essex East that have been detrimental to the labour movement in this country.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Labour, I think, is on sound ground in rising and making his assertion as a point of order because, in my opinion, it was improper for the hon. member for Essex East to impart the information or to make the assertion he did about the minister this morning as a question, since it is purely an interpretation on his part of what took place.

Mr. Starr: And a complete falsification of that statement.

Mr. Speaker: That is the part of the question that I found to be out of order. The hon. member for Essex East asserts that he is entitled to ask the question which he proposed and which, as I understood it, was why the government announced a change of policy this morning. The question makes an assumption, but I think perhaps it deserves an answer unless some member wishes to assert that it is not proper. If that is the case, I think this is important enough to hear him. Otherwise I would permit that part of the question to go forward.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I submit there is a well understood formula by which this kind of question can be raised and which avoids an assertion, which is the improper thing. My hon. friend is seeking to make an assertion—an inaccurate assertion—for the purpose of getting it on the record on Hansard and heard in the galleries. There is a proper method to follow which, of course, he prefers not to follow, and that is the method by which one seeks to get information instead of making assertions. The hon. member, who has been in the house longer than I have, appears to have forgotten more than I have.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No lecture from the hon gentleman.

Mr. Fulton: When we were on that side we tried to observe the rules of the house, and I would suggest—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the minister is going afield. Let me put it this way. As I understand the question, the hon. member for Essex East is in effect asking whether the statement the Minister of Labour made this morning was a change of policy, and on that basis I do not think I can exclude it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask my question now?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Starr: I do not know whether the hon. member wants an answer.

Mr. Speaker: I understood that the hon. member's question was before the house.

Mr. Chevrier: He was not allowed to finish it. The Minister of National Revenue shouted him down.

Mr. Speaker: I will certainly give the hon. member for Essex East the opportunity to put that part of his question which I have accepted, but not to deal with the rest of it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I must thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to put a question which I know is important and which, regrettably, hon. members sitting opposite have shown a desire to prevent me from asking—

An hon. Member: Put your question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This attitude of the people.

Mr. Speaker: I must ask for the co-operation of the house. I have permitted the hon. member to restate his question, but I would ask him to restate it without embellishment.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister is apparently not satisfied, so I will give him the floor.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, you have made a ruling twice, but the hon. member for Essex East appears to think that because he clothes his question with pomposity and ponderosity he therefore becomes—

Some hon. Members: Order order.

Mr. Speaker: If the Prime Minister is rising on a point of order or on a question of privilege I shall be glad to hear him, but I have permitted the hon. member to rephrase his question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am just rising to ask that your ruling be upheld. That is what I rose for, because the hon. gentleman is flagrantly disregarding your rulings.

Mr. Chevrier: I am pleased to hear the Prime Minister say that he rose to have your ruling upheld, Mr. Speaker, but I wish to bring to your attention the fact that we on this side of the house cannot ask questions because of the interruptions which are being made from both in front of us and the rear of us. It is impossible to do so.

Mr. Ricard: The hon. member is always against the ruling. He knows that.

Mr. Chevrier: I ask for permission—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We should not permit a debate on the Speaker's ruling and I do not think hon. members propose to follow that course. I indicated what part of the question of the hon. member for Essex East I considered might properly be asked and expressed it in my own phraseology. If the hon. member wishes to put it in his own words, and if he will limit himself to the question, I think we could proceed and that the house would give him a hearing. Unfortunately the hon. member for Essex East has introduced extraneous matter each time he has risen, and that is what has caused the difficulty.

Mr. Speakman: I rise on a question of privilege that affects all members of this house. The hon. member for Laurier has made a statement implying that the backbenchers on the government side will not permit questions. I think that is a most unfair and unkind implication, and that he should be asked to withdraw it.

Mr. Chevrier: I am glad that the hon. member has raised the question of privilege. Not only do I not withdraw the insinuation; I repeat it. I say that every time we raise a question or ask to be heard on a question of privilege, attempts are made to shout us down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot accept the question of privilege. It is not proper now to comment on the conduct of the house unless the hon. member rises to complain of it at the time it occurs.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I desire to rise in order to complain about the situation now.

Mr. Speaker: I think the situation is under control, if the hon. member would permit the hon. member for Essex East to phrase his question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I just want to say this, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Prime Minister who was allowed to make a statement.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Prime Minister and the hon. member for Essex East engaged in some discussion which was quite aside from the purpose for which the hon. member is now taking the floor.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I certainly do not intend to allow the Prime Minister to lecture me. I should like to ask the Minister of Labour how he reconciles his statement this morning, when he shifted the responsibility for unemployment on to labour and management from the government, with the speeches which he and the government members and particularly the Prime Minister made to the people of Canada during the last election.

Mr. Starr: In reply to the memorandum which was presented by the Canadian Labour Congress this morning I set out the measures that have been taken by this government and passed by this parliament in order to deal with the economic situation in the form of legislation; I set out as well the measures that were included in the baby budget. I pointed to these measures as actions by the government to deal with the situation. I also pointed out that it was not possible for the federal government alone to alleviate or bring about a solution to the problem of unemployment, but that it was necessary to have the co-operation of industry and labour doing their part and their share in the production of materials in the manufacturing industry in this country so that it may be competitive in the domestic field and in the export field as well.

Those were my remarks or my pleas to management and labour. I have said these things to management as well on many occasions. I hope they can get together in order to carry on the manufacturing of products in this country so that the whole economy and all Canadians can benefit as a result and more jobs may be provided for people in this country. Any remarks by the hon. member for Essex East in the same form as those he has put forward today are not only a disservice to Canada but a disservice to—

Mr. Chevrier: That is not what you said in the election.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Labour, if I may take the liberty of reminding him of this fact, went beyond the appropriate answer in making the reference he did to the hon. member for Essex East. I feel that he might consider modifying his statement that the hon. member for Essex East, as I understood it, in asking his question was doing a disservice to Canada.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, may I correct an answer—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Just a minute. You made a ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I know the Minister of Labour would not want to go beyond the proper conduct in debate. It seemed to me that in concluding his remarks by the statement that the conduct of the hon. member for Essex East was a disservice to Canada, he went beyond that point.

Mr. Starr: I quite agree with you, Mr. Speaker. I had no intention of making any such remark. However, in view of the remarks and the assertions made by the hon. member, I had no alternative.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, you asked the Minister of Labour to withdraw the words.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. gentlemen opposite would not let us finish, and we are entitled to point out that fact. As the hon. member for Laurier said, whenever we put a question they shout us down or try to do so. Well, they are not going to shout me down.

Mr. Speaker: I think hon. members will appreciate that this contretemps, which seems to be developing out of all proportion to its importance, will best be disposed of if they will relax and listen to the question of privilege to which the hon. member for Essex East is speaking; and I would ask him to confine his remarks to that matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You asked the Minister of Labour to amend his remarks in which he said in effect that I had rendered a disservice to my country because I raised this question today.

Since the Minister of Labour does not wish to accede to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I am simply going to say that it is not a disservice to my country to point out the serious unemployment condition existing in this country. It is not a disservice to my country to point out that the Minister of Labour—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to withdraw my remark provided the hon. member for Essex East would withdraw his assertion about a change of policy in the phraseology he used in putting forward the question. As soon as he does that I will withdraw my remarks with regard to him.

Mr. Speaker: I trust that both hon. members will be satisfied with that solution.

Mr. Chevrier: Speaking on the point of order, if I may—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before I recognize another member, may I say that I trust that the matter may be concluded on that apparently amicable suggestion. Is the hon. member for Essex East satisfied to allow the matter to rest there?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not satisfied with the condition, but if the minister does not wish to observe your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied to let him be judged by the people of Canada.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I have made it very clear that I am prepared to withdraw my remark provided the hon. member for Essex East withdraws his question on the basis on which he put it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. In order to dispose of this matter the Minister of Labour has been kind enough to go as far as to say he would withdraw the words which in my view were not appropriate to the occasion.

I have indicated that the question which was asked originally was not in accordance with our practice and should not have been asked. I also indicate, for the benefit of the Minister of Labour, that when the hon. member for Essex East rephrased his question he took advantage of the opportunity to put it back in the form of asking for a reconciliation of policies, which really was an argumentative question.

On that basis, if the Minister of Labour will go as far as I am asking him to go, I suggest that the matter might well be closed. I see that the minister agrees to that.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask a supplementary question of the minister?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; I cannot see the hon. member on a question supplementary to a question which has taken so much time of the house.

[Later:]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Labour whether in inviting the co-operation of management and labour before the Canadian Labour Congress he was implying that such co-operation does not now exist?

Mr. Starr: I was speaking about the co-operation of management and labour in order to bring about the type of production efficiency and quality of goods which will be competitive in domestic and export markets; probably a more accentuated co-operation than there has been in the past.

REPORTED APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON RAILWAY WAGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister care to comment on a story in today's Toronto Telegram that the government intends to appoint a one man royal commission to establish railway wages in the hope of avoiding a national railway strike?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for verification of a newspaper report, which also involves a declaration of policy, I think he will agree with me that that is not an appropriate question for the orders of the day.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, Mr. Speaker, this is surely a ruling that is not in conformity with our practices. Here is a newspaper which makes a statement on government policy. I am asking the Prime Minister whether that is a correct statement of government policy. If the Prime Minister wishes to say that he does not propose to give an answer, or that government policy will be announced in due course, then very well; but surely I am entitled to ask whether this reported statement is in conformity with government policy.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): On the point of order, I can understand, Mr. Speaker, that after the proceedings in this house so far today you would be recluctant to give permission to the hon. member for Essex East to do something that—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You have just sat here saying and doing nothing while we have been fighting for labour.

Mr. Argue: That is not true. Mr. Speaker, that is the very best example I could give of the reason Your Honour may be a little reluctant to let the hon. member for Essex East ask a question even if it is in order. On the point of order—

An hon. Member: There is no point of order.

Mr. Argue: I think the hon. member for Essex East is correct in his assertion that when a newspaper makes a disclosure such as this it is in order to ask the Prime Minister to comment on it. The right hon. gentleman could comment by denying it, confirming it or refusing to say anything about it.

Mr. Speaker: After hearing argument I am still of the same opinion.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Then I should like to ask the Prime Minister if it is a fact that the government intends to appoint a royal commission for the purpose indicated by my hon. friend from Essex East.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I am glad that after all this time an hon. gentleman has finally been able to ask a question that is proper to be asked. May I say this. When and if any such decision is made it will be announced in the house in the proper course.

What has taken place is that I have written to Mr. Hall, representing the various unions, and also to the railway companies asking them to reconvene and give consideration to those things which separate them to the end—and I expressed this hope—that they might be able by a continuation of discussion to arrive at a settlement of the differences between them.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. Is it not a fact that the Toronto Telegram should be regarded as an official organ of the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member wishes to verify that, he will have to do it otherwise than by making it a matter of government responsibility.

SPRINGHILL, N.S.—IMPLEMENTATION OF WINTER WORKS PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received a communication from Mrs. Lillian Henderson, president of the association of miners' wives of Springhill, Nova Scotia, complaining that Springhill has been sidetracked as regards winter works and other projects to the point where some 600 men are unemployed? Could the minister report to the house what success the government has had in its endeavour to bring much needed works projects to the disaster town of Springhill?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No such telegram has yet been brought to my attention today. I have been rather busy, of course. I will certainly look to see whether there is such a telegram on my desk. In any event, as far as winter works are concerned that is a matter to be undertaken by the municipalities through the provinces, and when these projects are approved the federal government pays 50 per cent of the total payroll costs.

Mr. Argue: If the minister does not have this information, I will understand. Is the minister in a position to give us any information as to what success the government has had in any projects which will bring employment to this disaster town?

Mr. Starr: I will have to check with my colleagues in the various departments to see what projects have been undertaken. If the hon. member wants detailed information, I suggest that he put his question on the order paper and he will get it.

Mr. Argue: On that point, Mr. Speaker, this is not a question of information but of action by the government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for specific information. Perhaps the order paper would be better if he has not given notice of his question.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PAYMENT DURING IDLE PERIODS DUE TO WORK SHARING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I think the time has arrived for a question from the constructive section of the opposition.

In view of the fact that in agreement with Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company in 1954 the mine, mill and smelter workers union initiated proposals to prevent lay-offs that would require an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act, and in view of the fact that those proposals have in effect recently been endorsed by Mr. Walter P. Reuther in his proposals to the automobile manufacturers association, I would like to ask the minister the following question.

In view of the proposed amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, would the government give consideration to amending the act to provide for the payment of unemployment insurance benefits for the fifth week, where agreements are reached between labour and management to share the work on the basis of four weeks on and the fifth week off, in order to prevent lay-offs in Canada?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his interest in this matter, but it is now being carried out under the present act.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INVITATION TO U.K. PRIME MINISTER TO VISIT OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. H. Phillips (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of Prime Minister Macmillan's proposed visit to Washington for talks with President Kennedy, would the Prime Minister consider extending Mr. Macmillan an invitation to visit Ottawa?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the course that has been followed generally is that whenever the right hon. prime minister of the United Kingdom has visited the president of the United States with a view to having consultations and discussions with him, he has almost invariably visited Canada either before or after the meeting with the president.

I know all Canadians would welcome his doing so on this occasion. I believe it would be helpful if he would visit Canada. In his discussions with the President of the United States he then would be in a position, in discussing international matters, to have the information and knowledge which he will have secured at the prime ministers' conference as to the attitude of the various commonwealth members, without in any way representing them or their viewpoint.

On the other hand, I think it would be beneficial to the prime ministers' conference if it were possible for me to consult with the President of the United States before the conference of commonwealth prime ministers, such consultations to be in an informal manner, to the end that the views of the United States might be available to the members of the commonwealth as we meet together to discuss not only commonwealth but international affairs.

In answer to the hon. gentleman I would say that Mr. Macmillan would be most welcome if he could arrange to call at Ottawa and discuss the matters that he will have considered with the President of the United States generally, and in regard to the international situation.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is it clear from what the Prime Minister has said that he hopes to see the President of the United States, but that is not yet a certainty, before the commonwealth prime ministers' conference?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, what I tried to place before the house was that I thought it would be beneficial; but whether it is feasible, having regard to all the circumstances connected with the transition from the former administration to the present, I do not know.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED INTENTION TO PURCHASE CANADA AND GULF TERMINAL COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Could he inform the house whether the C.N.R. intends to buy the Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I cannot answer that question just now, but I shall pass it on to the management of the Canadian National Railways.

FINANCE

ONTARIO HYDRO—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister received any official protest from the Ontario energy resources minister, Robert Macaulay, regarding the federal taxes levied on Ontario hydro?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. In any event, I do not know that there could be any protest on this subject, because the federal government does not collect any taxes from the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister, since Mr. Macaulay has protested the tax on hydro power exported to the United States, whether one can consider that a tax upon hydro.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I am not acquainted with any protest which Mr. Macaulay might have made. I was asked if there was any record of having received any official protest from Mr. Macaulay, and my answer is in the negative.

OTTAWA—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask him whether the city of Ottawa has approached the government for a subsidy or any other form of financial assistance for the Ottawa transportation commission as an alternative to raising fares?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such approach. Certainly none has been made to me.

TRADE

CUBA—ALLEGED SCREENING BY JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The question is based on an allegation in a report in the Montreal Star by a Montreal exporter that all Cuban trade including that with Canada is screened by a joint Russian-Cuban purchasing committee in Havana before being approved. Is the minister able to advise the house whether such a committee exists?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): This is the first I have heard about it, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

MANUFACTURE OF MAIL BOXES AND KEYS IN PENITENTIARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): May I direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of what happened yesterday, that is, mail box collection by bandits, will the Postmaster General inform the house whether mail boxes are still being repaired by prisoners in Kingston penitentiary and elsewhere?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I presume the hon. member is referring to a sensational story which appeared on the front page of an Ottawa newspaper yesterday, which was completely inaccurate and a fine piece of fictional writing in so far as the first part of the story was concerned; the second part was a rehash of facts which appeared in the same newspaper last week. Having said this, I would remind the hon. member that I will make a statement, as I indicated to the house yesterday, as soon as I have the necessary information.

Mr. Denis: Does the Postmaster General deny that four persons having master keys have been arrested?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): That was the story which appeared a week ago, and I referred to that when answering the question put to me. My reference to yesterday's story and the fictional part thereof concerned the statement that this situation was continuing and growing more serious. That is completely untrue and false. As far as I can see, the newspaper was just searching for a headline.

THE CENSUS

REQUEST FOR HIRING OF QUALIFIED UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In making appointments in connection with the taking of the census, will the government give priority to unemployed persons, providing they have the necessary qualifications, rather than to party hopefuls?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): In appointing those who will take the census the government bears in mind a great many factors all designed to make sure that the very best and most capable people should carry out this work.

Mr. Garland: I wonder whether the minister would mind answering my question.

Mr. Hees: I have answered it.

Mr. Speaker: The latter part of the question was not one appropriate to be answered, if I may say so.

IMMIGRATION

RADIO AND TELEVISION TECHNICIANS—REPORTED ADVERTISING IN U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder whether the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has seen a report which appeared in the press yesterday to the effect that Canadian firms were advertising in the United Kingdom for radio and television technicians, and whether it is the practice of her department to encourage the immigration to Canada at the present time of this category of workers.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I do not know what the situation is concerning this particular matter. I did see the article, and I have asked for a report.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COAL

STATEMENT AS TO PROMOTION OF USE BY ONTARIO HYDRO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Port Arthur asked me whether the dominion coal board or my department had played any part in assisting to develop a market for Cape Breton coal in the plants of Ontario hydro.

The dominion coal board have been, and remain, fully aware of all the circumstances connected with this proposed supply. The Ontario hydro officials have been most co-operative and have given the board full information on any points raised.

The Ontario hydro have a very large stockpile of coal and are consuming comparatively little coal at present. It is not known yet whether they will purchase coal this year, but if so the quantity will probably not be large. If they do invite tenders to supply, I am sure the Canadian mines will be given the opportunity to bid. At that time the problem of the cost differential will be given most sympathetic attention by the board in the light of the orders in council providing assistance.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO SASKATCHEWAN, 1960

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance to inquire when starred question No. 57, standing in my name and made an order for return on January 18 last, will be tabled.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, it was not and could not have been a question directed to the Department of Finance, because I have not asked that any starred question be made an order for return this session. Therefore I think the hon. member should direct his question to the minister on whose proposal the question was made an order for return or, failing that, to the Secretary of State.

[Later:]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Finance through what department of government payments are made to the provincial treasuries?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, payments to provincial treasuries are made through the Department of Finance. If this question is intended to have any reference to the question asked by the hon. member for Welland, I have to direct the hon. member to the answer I gave that hon. gentleman.

The hon. member for Welland asked me a question by number. I pointed out to him that no question in the present session has been made an order for return at my request. I can only infer that the hon. member for Welland was prompted to ask the question of me because some part of the information that he desires is information that would normally be supplied by the Department of Finance. I can only conclude that as the question was made an order for return, it must have involved other departments as well.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to raise a point of order, sir, with respect to this matter. The minister has indicated that payments are made through his department to provincial treasuries. This question merely asks for payments from the federal treasury to the provincial treasury of Saskatchewan. In accordance with the minister's own answer it appears not to involve any other department but his.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I now have the text of the question before me; it was not given by the hon. member for Welland. I see that in Hansard of January 18 the question was put by the hon. member for Welland. My colleague the Secretary of State said:

> I would ask that this question be made an order for return.

Following that, Mr. Speaker said:

> Order for return.

Any follow-up question should therefore be directed to my colleague the Secretary of State who, of course, is the minister responsible for the tabling of returns that are directed in response to orders for returns in the house.

PENITENTIARIES

NEW WESTMINSTER—REPORTED PRINTING OF FORGED IDENTIFICATION CARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. It is reported in yesterday's Montreal Star that a Vancouver police officer said the night before last that prisoners in the federal penitentiary at New Westminster printed counterfeit identification cards for a country-wide forged cheque ring. Is the minister in a position to comment on that report?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I did not see that particular report but as I informed the house yesterday in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Ottawa West, in which I am certain the hon. member himself took a great deal of interest, we discovered in April or May last year that there were certain irregularities in connection with the printing in the penitentiary print shops in Kingston and New Westminster. Steps were taken at that time to deal with those irregularities. I am sure that part of the answer escaped the hon. gentleman's attention.

INDUSTRY

STEEL—REPORTED DISCONTINUANCE OF PRODUCTION STATISTICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister received a letter from Mr. William Mahoney, national director of the united steel workers, in which he has protested that the publication by the dominion bureau of statistics of rate of production statistics for the steel industry has been discontinued as of the beginning of this year? Could the minister say whether he has given consideration to having publication continued?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the letter in question, but the hon. member was good enough yesterday to give me notice of his interest in this matter. Therefore I have had it checked and have here an answer for him.

The dominion bureau of statistics has not discontinued publication of figures on steel furnace capacity in Canada. It has been bureau practice to establish a capacity figure as of January 1 each year, using data supplied by the steel furnace operators. This total figure has been published regularly in both monthly and annual reports. This practice is being continued.

The bureau has merely altered its weekly release on ingot production. This release formerly stated the tonnage produced along with a percentage of rated capacity, the latter being based on a fixed weekly capacity obtained by dividing the annual figure by 52. There were two reasons for this change. First, the weekly percentage figure may in fact be misleading since it is not calculated on the basis of capacity actually in use during the week. That is, it does not take account of forced shutdowns of furnaces for repairs or shutdowns for holidays, etc. Second, important technological changes taking place in the industry make capacity figures less meaningful than formerly. The use of oxygen in steel furnaces has increased substantially the tonnage that can be obtained from a furnace. The use of an index based on average weekly output over a representative two-year period appears to provide a much firmer basis of comparison from week to week.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Rea in the chair.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the customs tariff and to provide:

1. That the said act be amended by adding thereto immediately after section 2 thereof the following section:

"2A. (1) For the purposes of this act, goods shall be deemed to be of a "class or kind" made or produced in Canada if

(a) in the case of goods other than goods custom-made to specifications, goods of approximately the same class or kind are made or produced in Canada; and

(b) in the case of goods custom-made to specifications adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), goods other than goods custom-made to specifications shall be deemed not to be of a class or kind made or produced in Canada unless at least ten per cent of the normal Canadian consumption of goods of the same or approximately the same class or kind are made or produced in Canada.

(3) The decision of the minister shall be final with respect to the following matters:

(a) the normal Canadian consumption of the goods described in subsection (2), and

(b) whether goods are custom-made to specifications, and whether adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time."

2. That subsections (9) and (10) of section 6 of the said act be repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(9) For the purposes of this act, notwithstanding section 2A, goods may be deemed to be of a class or kind not made or produced in Canada where similar goods made or produced in Canada are not offered for sale to the ordinary agencies of wholesale or retail distribution or are not offered to all purchasers on equal terms under like conditions, having regard to the custom and usage of trade."

3. That subsection (4) of section 6A of the said act be repealed.

4. That any enactment founded upon this resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the 21st day of December, 1960, and to have applied to all goods mentioned therein imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, this is one of those rare occasions when I find it possible to take the opportunity to congratulate a cabinet minister. These occasions present themselves so rarely that I never hesitate to seize upon them when they occur.

One of the favourite pastimes in this country today, whether we are dealing with unemployment, exports, imports or any other problem, is to place the complete blame on labour. This is why I congratulate the Minister of Labour for not going along with this very popular trend at the moment. I should like to refer to an article which appeared in Highlights, a publication of the national union of public employees. It is contained in the November 1960 issue. At page 4 we find this:

> Union economists who argue that labour costs should not be made the culprit for pricing Canadian goods out of world markets received support from an unexpected ally—federal labour minister Michael Starr.
> Mr. Starr suggested in an address to the Toronto board of trade that latest studies in his department indicated industry's profit margin was increasing while labour costs remained about the same percentage of gross value of output.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but is he directing his remarks to the Customs Tariff resolution?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): That is so, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: I wish the hon. member would point out to the Chair how he relates this to the Customs Tariff. I have been reading the resolution, and up to this moment I cannot reconcile the hon. member's remarks with it.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, before I commenced my remarks perhaps I should have explained that this is merely a preliminary leading up to the item before the committee which deals with changes in the Customs Tariff. I presume the resolution has been brought in by the minister in an effort to meet some of the problems of the day.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On that point, of course this is one of the methods put forward by the government to meet problems of the day; but, Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with a specific legislative proposal now. It is not in the realm of general debate. I think the point raised by the hon. member for Laurier is well taken, Mr. Chairman. We are discussing a proposed amendment of the Customs Tariff respecting the definition of class or kind.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, before make a ruling on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Laurier, I suggest that this matter of tariffs and trade is of vital importance to the country at the present time in trying to deal with the problems before us. I suggest that on the first resolution we should deal with this subject as thoroughly as we possibly can. Certainly at a later stage I expect the debate will be confined much closer to the individual matters before the committee, but I would suggest that this is the only occasion when we shall be able to deal with this matter as a whole.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. We are not dealing with the whole Customs Tariff. In this resolution we are just dealing with certain specific things. Perhaps the hon. member has reference to the first item of the estimates of a department during the discussion of which great latitude is given, but this is a specific matter. There is no ruling to make because there is a definite rule, namely standing order 59 (2), which says that the discussion must be relevant to what is before the committee. We just concluded the budget debate.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): In that case, Mr. Chairman, I shall have to get right down to the point without painting the picture as I think it should be painted at the present time.

This appears to be just another step in the devious road that the minister is taking at the present time, and the apparent perennial answer of the Conservative party, which is to have higher and higher tariffs. I have seen this coming, Mr. Chairman, ever since September, 1958, at which time the minister brought in regulations and so forth which transferred from parliament to the cabinet the right to set tariffs in this country.

There is one difference at the present time as compared with the old form of Conservative high tariffs. We find that back in the old days R. B. Bennett marched boldly down the road to high tariffs. He came completely out in the open, with no holds barred. Of course the fact still remains—maybe this is the reason for the different method at the present time —that he had his eyes fixed so firmly on that goal, that the result was that he fell into a pit which was 22 years deep. The people of this country were willing to put up with the Liberals for 22 years, following the former Conservative high tariff policy. What we see now is that the current Minister of Finance apparently lacks the honesty of R. B. Bennett. He appears to have the same goal, but he uses devious routes to get there.

I must confess it is a very clever scheme that he has adopted here, Mr. Chairman. This change appears to be designed at the present time to extend the powers of the minister in this field, powers which can be used in a political sense to reward friends and to punish enemies, Mr. Chairman. This is one fact which will bring about fear and confusion across the country, because it will give the minister an opportunity to play off one group against the other. In Mr. Bennett's days it was at least open and above board, and it was a policy that was equitable to all. It was not a policy that could be played against one particular group at any one particular time.

We need a policy that is fair to all. Whether you agree or disagree with a high tariff policy, at least it applies to all and it can be met with organized resistance by all. What we have at the present time is a policy which puts us in this position. Each group waits, wondering who is going to be next, wondering whose turn it is going to be when the axe next falls.

I do not know what the purpose of the change is, or whether it is going to make very much difference. Apparently aggrieved parties were previously able to appeal to the minister from the board's decision. Now they are going to be able to appeal to the board from the minister's decision. I do not know what the purpose of it is, and I certainly cannot see any difference.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. gentleman understands nothing about it.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): In spite of the fine words, Mr. Chairman, I would say the result will be something which we have seen coming about in the last three or four years, namely an ever increasing trend toward high tariffs. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this is an even worse answer to our present problems than the popular one I mentioned before, namely to blame labour for all our ills. In the February 1 issue of the Toronto Telegram we find a little article appearing on page 6 which reads in part as follows:

> Take the tariff that protects a large part of Canadian secondary industry: In a study prepared for the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, Dr. John H. Young estimated that in 1956 the tariff cost Canadians about $1 billion. It would be more now. This is an indirect subsidy to industry, paid by the consumers of Canada. Ontario, having the largest concentration of industry, is obviously the chief beneficiary.

This, Mr. Chairman, is one of the inevitable results of this trend toward higher tariffs. We have again the warning of Mr. John L. Bonus, general manager of the Canadian association of British manufacturers and agencies. His warning is contained in the Globe and Mail of July 6, 1960 on page 20, and the article reads:

> Mr. Bonus warned that it would be a mistake for Canada to retreat behind a production barrier of high tariff quotas. To do so would lead inevitably to further isolation on world trade and increase inability of Canadian firms to compete outside the domestic market.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this inevitable trend toward higher tariffs indicates the government is going back to the old days of Mr. Bennett. High tariffs and economic isolation are going to be for this government an even greater pit than the one into which Mr. Bennett fell in 1935.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I rose a while ago when the hon. member rose.

The Deputy Chairman: I will recognize the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: After the statement made by the Minister of Finance yesterday there are a number of questions that come to mind. Before commenting on this resolution I should like to put them to the minister. Some of these questions were asked by my colleague the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and other hon. members on this side of the house. They were pertinent questions with which the minister, I take it, will deal in due course.

The first question that comes to my mind is not as innocent as it appears to be on the surface. It is this. What is the purpose of this section? I have before me the statement which the minister made in the house yesterday. I was in the house when he made the first part of it, but unfortunately I had to leave before the last part was delivered. I note that on page 1636 of yesterday's Hansard the minister is reported as having summarized the three or four points that he suggests are the gravamen of this matter. These points are, to a large extent, legalistic and I think the house should have from the minister a simple statement of the purpose of the section.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): When the hon. member says "section", does he mean the entire—

Mr. Chevrier: I mean the resolution. Then I believe the committee would like to know what goods or commodities will be covered by this resolution. What goods or commodities will be protected? What will be the increase in the rates of duty? It has been said that the rates will be increased from 7 per cent to 22 per cent on items covered by this resolution. I believe that should be confirmed or explained in some manner.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can do that at once if the hon. member wishes. There is no change in any tariff rate involved here. The tariff rates are in the Customs Tariff today. They have been legislated by parliament. This proposed measure does not change a single rate in the whole Customs Tariff. With respect to those 70 items to which I referred in my opening statement yesterday, there are rates that apply in the case of goods of a class or kind made in Canada. There are different rates established in the Customs Tariff with respect to goods not of a class or kind made in Canada. This proposed legislation simply concerns itself with the definition of class or kind.

Mr. Chevrier: I am glad to have that explanation in answer to the question which has been put. However, there are still a number of matters which I feel deserve attention. Why is it necessary to do the things that are being done in the resolution? What industries will be affected by this change? How is this resolution related to the dumping regulations which were enacted by the house in 1958? What effect did the dumping regulations have on the commodities toward which they were directed? Why does the Minister of National Revenue require the powers that are contained in this legislation, and why should he be given these powers which, on the face of them, certainly appear to be arbitrary?

Then why is the right of appeal to the courts taken away, a right which has heretofore existed? What is the value of the commodities to which this resolution is likely to apply? I am sure the officers of the finance department gave consideration to this matter before the preparation of the resolution and are in a position to tell the minister. What is the amount in dollars and cents of goods to which this resolution will apply?

Now, as I understand this and the minister will correct me when he replies if he wishes, this resolution seeks to amend sections 2 and 6 of the Customs Tariff dealing with goods of a class or kind made in Canada. The minister said yesterday the first part of the resolution will be enacted as section 2A of the Customs Tariff, and the latter part as an amendment to subsections 9 and 10 of section 6. It seems to me that the simplest way in which to put this matter is as follows. When are goods coming into Canada subject to duty? My understanding is that they are subject to duty in two cases. First, they are subject to duty when of a class or kind made in Canada. There is no point in putting a tariff on goods coming into Canada which are not made here. This, I take it, would be in restraint of trade.

Then there is the case in which it is expected that by putting a duty on goods it will encourage a new industry in Canada. However, goods of a class or kind have not always been easy to determine. They have not been easy to define. There is a long history of discussions on this subject in this house. Yesterday in his remarks the minister indicated that these discussions had started in 1904. I have a chronological history which goes away beyond that to 1894, but I am not going to burden the committee by putting that on Hansard. It is a fact that there have been long discussions in the house over many, many years as to the meaning and interpretation of words of this character, "goods of a class or kind made in Canada," "the cost of production factor" and the "made in Canada" species.

Mr. King, the former prime minister, stated in the house that there were two ways of making a tariff. He put it in this way. First, parliament could fix the rate, in which case it became known to the whole country and would apply at once. Second, the government could take discretionary powers artificially to alter the tariff by order in council, by altering the value for duty, in which event no one would know what tariff would be charged or how long a particular rate of duty would remain in effect. There is a third way, namely the manner in which it is being done in this resolution; because now the minister is to be given arbitrary powers and his decision shall be final. It is of no use for the Minister of Finance to take exception to that statement which was made yesterday in the house, because I intend to repeat it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I take exception to it.

Mr. Chevrier: Having regard to the language used in the resolution, there is no doubt that is what is meant.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Not at all.

Mr. Chevrier: The tariff is a tax. The taxing power belongs peculiarly to the commons, and that power should not be parted with or delegated to any administration whatever.

What is being done in this resolution? The minister defines two kinds of goods, namely goods custom-made to specifications and shelf goods, as they were described by him yesterday. There is no doubt that by this definition he is increasing the range of commodities regarded as made in Canada. Goods that are not classified as made in Canada are not subject to dumping duties. What then is the relationship between this resolution and the anti-dumping duties enecated in 1958? The only relationship between the two is that the dumping law is applicable only to goods of a class or kind made in Canada. This change in the resolution is to broaden the definition and, in broadening the definition, therefore to bring more goods within its purview. It will therefore increase the range of goods that will be classified as made in Canada.

I said earlier that I could put on the record a long list of statements made in the house on this subject. I will not do that but I will refer, as did the minister, to the policy that was enacted by order in council in 1936. It was that goods would not be subject to duty unless there was Canadian production of those goods up to 10 per cent of the domestic market. The law here is being changed with reference to custom-made goods. In so far as the other kind is concerned, as I understand it, there is no change save and except in the abolishing of the appeal.

In 1958 parliament amended the Customs Act for the purpose of changing the method of valuation. The method of valuing goods for duty purposes was changed so as to include a cost production factor. The relationship between the two is that here they are bringing more goods under the umbrella of this protective resolution. I have heard it stated—and I repeat it because I have heard it stated from authoritative sources—that some $200 million of goods will be affected by this resolution.

I cannot come to any other conclusion but that this is bad and vicious legislation. The minister is moving toward protection furtively unlike Mr. Bennett did. The minister is moving toward a protective tariff in more than one way. He has been moving in that trend for quite a long time now. When he was offered the British free trade proposals at Mont Tremblant, he turned his back upon them and they were not considered. Then we had the tariff increase concerning British woollens. Then we had the quotas on Japanese goods, wherein the Japanese agreed to accept certain quotas affecting exports from that country to Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Chevrier: No, not at this stage. I would ask the minister to reserve it until later, if he will. Then we had the dumping regulations in 1958. What was the effect of the dumping regulations? I think we are entitled here in the House of Commons now in considering this matter which is not unlike the other one, to a complete statement by the minister as to the effect of these regulations. Why were they not sufficient? Why were they not successful in meeting the ends for which they were put into force and which we fought as strongly as we could in the house?

As a fifth trend toward higher protection we have a redefinition of goods of a class or kind made in Canada. Then there is the question contained in the latter part of section 2A of the resolution which the minister states is not taking arbitrary powers. I should like to put subsection 3 of section 2A of the resolution on the record in order to make my remarks clear. It reads as follows:

(3) The decision of the minister shall be final with respect to the following matters:

(a) the normal Canadian consumption of the goods described in subsection (2), and

(b) whether goods are custom-made to specifications, and whether adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time.

The minister has been asked first, what is the economic production of such goods and what is the meaning of the words "within a reasonable period of time". When the minister states that these are not arbitrary powers, surely he cannot be serious. The words are quite clear. Here in those two matters, affecting two important items in this resolution, the decision of the Minister of National Revenue is final. Is that not taking away the rights of parliament? Is that not taking from parliament the taxing power to which this House of Commons is entitled?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Not at all.

Mr. Chevrier: It is giving that power to a minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Chevrier: It is in restraint of trade. It is restricting trade. It is also in effect, both directly and indirectly, making the capital cost of production higher. How can you raise the productivity of the nation if you are going to raise the capital cost of production? As I say, that is a matter which belongs to this House of Commons and not to the Minister of of National Revenue in any form or shape.

Then again, this section which I have read, in my opinion, gives to the minister new and arbitrary powers, and authority to impose a tax which is the prerogative of parliament. This is protection with a vengeance. This is also protection against something which does not exist at the present time. It is also an invisible tariff. This is obtaining this power not by the front door method, not by the method which Mr. Bennett would have used, but by another method which is being used now by the Minister of Finance, namely the back door method. It is a return in another way to the days of Mr. Bennett, whose policies were so destructive to our economy. It seems to me it has been the policy and the tendency of the Conservative party to resort to these measures in times of unemployment. They may be sincere—I have no doubt they are—in their hope that this will help the economy, but I can assure the minister that in my opinion this is very bad legislation.

There is no appeal from the decision of the minister. There was an appeal, prior to this, to the tariff board, from the tariff board to the exchequer court and from the exchequer court to the Supreme Court of Canada. Now there is to be no appeal from the decision of the minister; the minister's decision is final; he has the full authority to decide these matters, and his decision ends the matter.

I ask the Minister of Finance whether he believes that this is the kind of legislation which will commend itself to the Canadian people. I remember what he thought of powers that were taken away from parliament in days gone by, of powers that were taken away from this house and given not to a minister but to the governor in council.

I remember what he thought in those days, and I would like to put on Hansard a statement dealing with a matter not unlike the one which is under discussion today. To my mind this one under discussion today is far worse, because it is giving the power to an individual rather than to the governor in council. At page 4524 of Hansard of June 7, 1955, the Minister of Finance, who was then the member for Eglinton, had this to say on the subject of certain powers taken away in a matter that was before the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member should say what particular powers and what measures were being considered at that time.

Mr. Chevrier: It was on the discussion of the Defence Production Act.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is a very different matter.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister says that is a very different matter, but let us hear what the minister had then to say. I quote his words, as reported in Hansard:

> The supreme duty of parliament, in discharging its responsibility to the people, is to be true and faithful to its traditional role of the champion of the rights and freedom of the people.

Then he said:

> How this government loves to dress up what is in fact a denial of the rule of law, the subjugation of parliament to the executive branch of government, by having parliament go through the process of conferring upon them the power to legislate. And that vicious practice is dressed up. An attempt is made to clothe it with an air of respectability by calling it "delegated legislation". Sir, no euphonious title will succeed in applying a sufficient disguise to this vicious and threatening practice.
> Hon. members can well see, in the light of the description of the Prime Minister of the powers under this act, that these are such powers as make it possible for the government to make itself dictator of the Canadian economy tomorrow. Under this legislation the government, and particularly the Minister of Defence Production, hold the Canadian economy in the palms of their hands. The government can override any other legal obligation howsoever created.
> Sir, these powers are so sweeping that I am quite sure most Canadians just could not believe this is the way in which parliament is called upon by this government to legislate.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Those are the words of the Minister of Finance of yesteryear.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): And very true they were, in the circumstances.

Mr. Chevrier: Those words are applicable to this legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: They are much more so.

Mr. Chevrier: They are much more true in this case, as my hon. friend the member for Bonavista-Twillingate says, when the powers will be conferred not upon the executive but upon the Minister of National Revenue, as contained in the second part of this resolution.

An hon. Member: And without appeal.

Mr. Chevrier: And without appeal. This is really dressing it up. Where could you dress it up any more than you have in the resolution and as you probably will in the bill?

I said earlier that this, in my opinion, was vicious legislation. The Minister of Finance and some of his colleagues have gone to Paris, to Washington and elsewhere in an attempt to come to some understanding with the common market countries. The common market countries up until now, as I understand it, have reduced their tariffs by some 30 per cent and are prepared to raise their tariffs against countries on the outside. Canada, the United States and Britain may well be affected by this unless Britain joins the common market, and unless Canada and the United States give greater consideration to a modus vivendi between the two blocs, because there is no doubt in the world that the economy of the common market is in high gear at the present time.

This is the kind of legislation which in my opinion is giving effect to the threat which the Minister of Trade and Commerce expressed in a speech delivered in Paris, and which the Leader of the Opposition has already put on Hansard. In view of that it would seem to me that attempts should be made to find a common denominator between the economy of those countries and that of Canada, Britain and the United States, rather than resorting to this kind of legislation, which undoubtedly will have a detrimental effect on our country.

I repeat what I said earlier. I do not think this legislation will meet the position which the minister has in mind, and I can only repeat what he said:

> Sir, these powers are so sweeping that I am quite sure most Canadians just could not believe this is the way in which parliament is called upon by this government to legislate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Laurier began by indicating that he had not heard half of the statement that I made yesterday by way of explanation of the resolution. I can well understand that, after having listened to his remarks this afternoon, because they have not been directed to the resolution at all. He may have thought he was speaking about the resolution, but he was talking about something quite different from what is before the house.

He began also by saying he was going to ask a series of questions, and I gathered the impression that he was going to wait for the answers before he launched into any statement of his position on the bill. But he has not waited to obtain the information in reply to some eight or ten questions. He went on, not waiting for the information, not waiting for the answers; indeed, not caring to wait until he received information that evidently he was aware of needing. He then proceeded to attack the bill and to denounce it with adjectives which can only be construed as indicating that he is not aware of the terms of the legislation proposed.

I am going to begin by offering him the kind of information that I thought he was seeking, and suggest that had he had this information he would have come to a rather different conclusion. I also have some observations to make on some other long bows that he has drawn on the record of this government in relation to matters pertaining to tariff protection.

His first question was, "What is the purpose of this resolution?" I stated that in the budget speech of December 20, and I stated it again yesterday. It is very clear. The purpose of the proposed legislation is to restore the original concepts relating to this phrase "class or kind" after what I described yesterday as a decade of erosion. In doing so we will provide for the first time some effective means of dealing with goods that have been described in this proposed amendment.

The second of his questions was, "What goods or commodities are covered by the resolution?" I have already answered that. They are all set out in the Customs Tariff in the 70 items in which this expression appears. They cover a very broad range of goods. In most cases there is no question about whether goods are made or not made in Canada, but difficulties have arisen over marginal cases. These have always been subject to the rulings of the department. The hon. member knows perfectly well that this legislation, which has been on the statute books for many years, has required rulings to be made times without number by the department.

Mr. Pickersgill: Which were appealable.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, they were subject to appeal. I am dealing now with the situation as regards the interpretation of legislation the meaning of which was well understood, especially by the governments which introduced it, principally Liberal governments, and I say that the course of the decisions in the past decade has been to set at nought in many of these cases the purpose of parliament and the purpose of the governments which introduce this legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was denied the privilege of asking the hon. member for Laurier a question, but I do not wish to follow his example.

Mr. Chevrier: You interrupted me and made a speech.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not do anything of the kind. I asked if I could ask a question, and the hon. gentleman said no.

Mr. Chevrier: Just a moment. I will not allow the Minister of Finance to misinterpret what happened. The hon. gentleman interrupted me in the early part of my speech and proceeded to make a statement. I did not deny him that opportunity. Then he asked if he could ask a question and I denied him the right to ask that question because I did not want my speech to be interrupted by a number of statements from the minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I come back to what I said. The hon. member is referring to the question he asked me, his second question. I indicated I was prepared to answer that at that time. He yielded the floor, and I then answered his second question. Later, when the hon. gentleman reached the point of talking about export quotas applied by Japan on certain exports to Canada, I rose and asked, in accordance with the rules of the house, if I could ask a question then, and the hon. gentleman said, no. The record will bear me out.

Mr. Chevrier: You interrupted me then.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, there was no interruption at all; none whatever.

I will deal with the question asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister mean by what he is pleased to call "erosion" the decisions of the courts and, if so, is he not asking this parliament to overrule and override the courts because he does not like their decisions.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is a fact that that there have been decisions of the courts in this period, decisions which have been at variance with the rulings and interpretations which had been well established up to that time.

Mr. Pickersgill: The rulings of the executive.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Of Liberal governments, principally—

Mr. Pickersgill: Still the executive.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —of which the hon. gentleman's colleagues were previously members.

Mr. Pickersgill: That does not alter the principle.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This parliament changes the law very often in the light of the interpretation of the law by the courts.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Legislation by parliament—

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I finish my statement?

Mr. Pickersgill: I beg the minister's pardon.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Many of the proposals put before parliament in the course of budgets arise out of interpretations which the courts have placed on certain measures. There is hardly a budget placed before parliament which does not take note in some respect or other of an interpretation put on something by the courts and the necessity for changing the law as thus interpreted by the courts. Let there be no mistake about that. In recent years, as a result of one or two of the decisions which the tariff board has been following, interpretations have been given by the courts which, again, have carried an emphasis which is at variance with what was the well-established import of those words prior to this last decade. That is an uncontestable fact.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister if he will now answer my question. I accept what he has said that parliament has a perfect right to change laws after the courts have made decisions. If the courts place a certain interpretation on the law and we think it should be something else, then we have the right to change it, but what the minister is asking here is that we should suppress the courts. He is denying the right to an appeal in the future, and that is what we are objecting to.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You see, Mr. Chairman, this speech has been introduced under the guise of asking a question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, answer it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Answer the speech? I shall be prepared to answer anything that is raised in the committee and I shall be prepared to answer this point, but I will first draw to your attention, Mr. Chairman, the manner in which the hon. member, having taken to himself the right to ask a question, then comes forward in typical style to supply his own answer, which is a most erroneous and misleading answer, and then sits down with a look of utter satisfaction although the answer he has supplied to his own question is wrong.

Mr. Pickersgill: You give the answer, then.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I make my own statement?

Mr. Pickersgill: Give the answer; never mind all the verbiage.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We were referring a moment ago to interruptions. You will note, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member is still not satisfied. He has asked a question and supplied his own answer and now when I am dealing with the subject he insists that he should supply my answer as well. The process of totalitarianism with which the hon. member is all too well acquainted has not gone that far here. The hon. gentleman is not going to supply the answer for me.

I had reached the point, before the hon. member's interruption, where I was dealing with the second question put by the hon. member for Laurier. Quite at variance with his idea of the effect of this amendment I say that there are no rates changed by this legislation. This legislation does not change a single customs tariff rate under the Customs Tariff.

We are asked, in the third place, what industries are affected. They are the industries which are engaged in the production of the articles described in these 70 items in the Customs Tariff. They cover a wide range but, as I indicated, if you are looking in particular at one branch of the goods, namely those described here as custom-made according to specification, they are obviously heavy machinery in large measure.

I was asked next by the hon. member for Laurier how this is related to the dumping regulations. The form of the question is very interesting. What does the hon. gentleman mean by "dumping regulations"? The dumping regulations which I presume he has in mind must be some regulations promulgated in pursuance of legislation passed by parliament. He is quite right in saying that the powers which are created under the Customs Tariff in relation to dumping apply only to goods of a class or kind made in Canada. That is quite correct and I dealt with that subject in my remarks yesterday. I pointed that out plainly. Then when he went on to talk about this subject later it appeared that when he talked about dumping regulations he had some reference to the legislation which was introduced in 1958 in this house by way of amendment to the Customs Act. That is not this statute at all; it is the Customs Act. That was a measure introduced by a colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, dealing with the basis of valuation of goods imported into Canada and requiring that certain elements of cost of production be included in that value for entry purposes.

At a later stage in his speech, without having waited for an answer to this question, we heard the hon. member say that the present legislation apparently had some sinister connection with the legislation of 1958. The legislation of 1958 was very good legislation and as was pointed out at that time it was badly needed for the purpose of making known to some foreign producers who were in the habit of exporting into Canada that they would not be permitted to do so on a basis of dumping in Canada.

So salutary has been the effect of the mere enactment of that legislation that it has not been necessary once in the two and a half intervening years to apply that legislation in any particular case. The Minister of National Revenue made that fact known in the house previously. I say there is an exemple of very great benefit having been achieved by the mere enactment of that legislation.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): All this talk about arbitrary powers has no application whatever. It never had any basis and it has none now.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, Mr. Chairman, contrary to the position taken by the hon. member when he was speaking, I shall be glad to answer his question.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the hon. minister, Mr. Chairman, but I should like to ask him this question. How salutary could the regulations to which he referred have been when in the constituency of Stormont and in the city of Cornwall no less than two industries closed down?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I draw attention to the evidence of a continued and sad misconception on the part of the hon. member for Laurier. I have been talking about legislation, amendments to the Customs Act enacted in this house in the 1958 session. The hon. member comes back and talks about the dumping regulations. I am left to wonder what the hon. member is talking about or whether he clearly understands what the matter is that is now before the committee.

Mr. Chevrier: The two thousand people who are out of work are wondering too.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member apparently is saying that more drastic use should have been made of the powers conferred by parliament upon the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister is saying that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Otherwise the hon. member's statement has no sense in it whatever.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister is saying that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Here we are getting interruptions, you see, from the hon. member who was complaining about interruptions when he did not get any. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can listen now when someone else has the floor.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that this was salutary legislation. It has had a good effect. The hon. member for Laurier having opposed that legislation in 1958 is now saying in effect, "You should exercise powers now that I objected to your taking in 1958." This is just about as consistent as one might expect in that particular quarter.

Mr. Chevrier: Two thousand people out of work.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There he goes again, Mr. Chairman, and yet the hon. member was complaining about interruptions.

I now proceed to the hon. member's next question which was this: Why does the minister require the powers? I dealt with this subject yesterday and I will come back again to this subject of the powers of the minister and of the tariff board in relation to the matters that are going to arise under the proposed amendment. I again draw the attention of the committee to the fact that the hon. member is apparently not aware that the legislation as it has existed in its present form for years has required many decisions on the part of the minister. But I will come back to this matter of the powers of the minister and of the tariff board in relation to the amendments because there has been, not only a sad misinterpretation but indeed a drastic misrepresentation of the effect of the amendments in that regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: Lack of clarity.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In question No. 6 the hon. member asks why the right of appeal is taken away. I say that the right of appeal as to matters that are properly the subject of appeal is not taken away by this legislation. Again I shall have something to say by way of enlargement on this matter at a later stage in my remarks.

In his next question the hon. member asks what is the value of the commodities to which the resolution is likely to apply. The fact is that no one can say precisely what is the value of the commodities to which the amendment is likely to apply. This case is not at all the simple case in which there is a change in the rate of duty on an existing tariff item. In such cases statistics are usually available including the volume of imports which would be affected. In the present situation, however, what is involved is some alteration in the position of the margin between what is considered to be made in Canada and what is not.

There are two reasons why statistics cannot be given here in reply to this question. In the first place, in the case of many pairs of tariff items—and when I speak about pairs I am speaking about items including those that are made in Canada on the one hand and those that are not made in Canada on the other; that is what is meant by a pair—statistics exist only for total imports. In the second place it is not possible to forecast what quantitative effects will flow from rulings based on the new section as opposed to rulings based on the former section.

The hon. member's next question, I think, was really the same question re-phrased. He asked what was the amount in dollars and cents of such commodities. I have dealt with that.

The hon. member next asked when are goods coming into Canada subject to duty. The answer is that they are subject to duty when the Customs Tariff makes them subject to duty. That is legislation with which we are not interfering in the least. I say again that this legislation does not change any rate whatever. Broadly speaking the rates are lower in the case of goods not produced in Canada under these 70 items of the tariff than are the rates on goods that are produced in Canada.

I wish now to proceed to deal more broadly with some of the remarks of the hon. member for Laurier and hon. members who preceded him. The hon. gentleman spoke about the history of this legislation. He is aware of history going back to 1894. Actually, if you wish to go to the fine point, this kind of legislation goes back to 1873 for it was in that year that provision was made for a 10 per cent duty on "machinery for mills and factories of kinds which are then manufactured in the dominion." There was further legislation in 1880 and again in 1890, and so on.

My reference to this legislation yesterday as coming from 1907 related largely to the form of the present tariff. It is in that tariff that we find this present concept appearing and carried to a greater extent than had ever been done before in any legislation of this parliament.

We have had statements made to the effect that this proposed legislation gives the government or the minister power which, as the hon. member for Laurier said, belongs to the house. The hon. gentleman said that Mr. King had once stated that there were several ways of applying tariffs and one way was to take unto the governor in council the power to establish the tariff by order in council.

Mr. Chevrier: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member said that Mr. King had said that this was one of several ways in which a tariff could be established. I have his words here. The hon. gentleman said in effect that the better way was to legislate directly and not to give the governor in council power to establish rates by order in council. It is unfortunate that the hon. member for Laurier was not better prepared with his case before he began to talk along this line today. We are asking the house in these present amendments to reduce the powers that the Customs Tariff now confers on the governor in council.

Mr. Pickersgill: Subject to appeal.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, the powers to which I am referring are not subject to appeal at all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Do not become angry.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I sometimes find it difficult to be completely patient and docile in the face of statements emanating from hon. members opposite that are not only erroneous but misleading.

Mr. Howard: Docility is not one of your qualities.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not hear the remark, but I take it that it comes from a source that probably one should not take the time to deal with, anyway.

Mr. Howard: That is because it is injurious to you.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The source in question I should think is injurious to everything, including itself.

The hon. member waxed quite loud on this subject. He evidently does not like powers being given to the governor in council. Well, Mr. Chairman, let me draw his attention to powers that parliament has given to the governor in council, which we are in effect now giving back to parliament if parliament will approve the present resolution. Under section 6, subsection 10, of the present Customs Tariff we have this provision:

For the purpose of this act goods shall not be deemed to be of a class or kind made or produced in Canada unless so made or produced in substantial quantities, and—

And note these words, Mr. Chairman:

—the governor in council may provide that such quantities, to be substantial, shall be sufficient to supply a certain percentage of the normal Canadian consumption and may fix such percentages.

This is the section, Mr. Chairman, and it is under the authority of this clause that the Liberal government in 1936 proceeded to pass order in council P.C. 1618 on July 2, 1936, and to name as 10 per cent the percentage of the normal Canadian consumption which an article must supply before it is to be deemed to be a class or kind made in Canada.

Mr. McIlraith: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I just go on. I will be glad to take the question at the proper time, but I am in the middle of developing a point here.

This is the order in council passed by the Liberal administration. It is significant that it was passed in 1936, in the first or the second session that the hon. member for Laurier was a member of this parliament. I have no doubt that since this legislation was introduced by the government of that day it had his full support.

Mr. Pickersgill: The legislation was not introduced then; it was the order in council.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The order in council was introduced at that time, and I have no doubt that since it was introduced by the government of that day it must have had the full support of the hon. member for Laurier. I do not recall that he has ever raised his voice in protest against the exercise of this power.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as long as this power remains on the statute books it lies within the power of the governor in council to change that percentage requirement. It will be perfectly lawful for the governor in council to pass a new order in council and say that the order in council of 1936 is repealed and that hereafter articles shall not be deemed to be a class or kind made or produced in Canada unless a quantity sufficient to supply 1 per cent—

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —of the normal Canadian consumption of such article was made or produced. That is the power, and that would be a perfectly valid exercise of this power that parliament has conferred on the governor in council, and that is the sort of exercise of such a power that I would expect to be carried out by a government that had a high tariff or a high protection purpose. It would be the easiest thing in the world, and the hon. member has the temerity to accuse the present government of having a high protection purpose in what it is doing.

Mr. Chevrier: There is no doubt about it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The facts are all against the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: Not at all.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They are. In the teeth of the argument that he put before the committee this afternoon is the answer that we are not using the power that we could use to reduce to some vanishing point, some merely nominal percentage, the requirement in order that the higher tariff rate should become applicable, because the goods would then be classed as a class or kind made in Canada. We are, on the contrary, taking this power away from the governor in council and we are asking parliament to legislate. We are doing the very thing that the hon. member for Laurier—if he understood the full significance of the words he used this afternoon, or probably he was ascribing them to Mr. Mackenzie King—says that he would have been doing. He should be supporting our amendment instead of purporting to say, as he did, that we were violating, as I understood him, those principles on which he was taking a stand. He says that this is bad, vicious legislation.

Mr. Chevrier: It is.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I hope he will go down to Cornwall and say to the people there that he is against anything in the way of protection; that he has stood up in this House of Commons and denounced what he said was a protective measure, even though the facts seem to be somewhat different.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister should go down to Cornwall and explain his stand.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Here is a member who has asked me repeatedly in the house about what measures we are taking to prevent goods coming into Canada to displace those made by the textile mills in Cornwall. I hope that the workmen in the textile mills in Cornwall will be well informed of this; I hope that they will know that their former member for Cornwall has risen in his place today and has attacked legislation that he said had a protective purpose because it had such a purpose, in his assertion.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a point of order and a question of privilege. The Minister of Finance has no right to make statements such as those he has made, and he has no right to insinuate. He has asked questions in connection with a question which I put to him, and from what was said has drawn a conclusion. I did not deal in my remarks with anything concerning the textile industry or with anything concerning the mills in Cornwall. In his reply to me my hon. friend knows—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What is the point of order?

Mr. Chevrier: The point of order is that I have been misrepresented by the Minister of Finance. I have been misrepresented not only in the words which he used but also in the interpretation which he put on my remarks. At no time in the remarks which I made did I refer to the textile mills in Cornwall. When a question was put to me I did ask, what was being done by the anti-dumping regulations in so far as the 2,000 people put out of work in the mills at Cornwall are concerned. I will meet my hon. friend on that point here in the house at any time he wishes.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What is the point of order?

Mr. Chevrier: The point of order is that the anti-dumping regulations were enacted in this house with the stated view of coming to the assistance of those who were in difficulties and those who suffered in those mills. So far as I can see not a thing has been done to assist them in any way whatsoever. When the minister makes a statement he should not attempt to put words in an hon. member's mouth which were not there at all.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is the phoniest point of order ever raised in this house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I quite agree with my hon. friend from Carleton that what we have just heard is just about the phoniest point of order that has been raised in this house. The hon. member obviously wished to make his speech. He is not content to wait and do so in the proper way, so he raises a bogus point of order. Let us not worry about that, Mr. Chairman. We have this interesting situation. The hon. member for Laurier was one of those who believed that the workers in the textile mills in Cornwall should have some protection against dumping in the Canadian market of the kind of goods that they were seeking to make in the Cornwall mills. The hon. member apparently has not realized yet that the power to deal with dumping is confined to goods of a class or kind made in Canada, and the erosion that has gone on over the past 10 years has gradually narrowed the power reposed in the government by parliament to deal with the dumping of goods of another nature that are of a class or kind made in Canada, and that applies to the textile goods made in those Cornwall mills.

Mr. Chevrier: You put 2,000 out of work.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Everything said by the hon. member for Laurier, everything that has been argued for this afternoon, confounds him when he pretends to be a champion of the workers in the textile mills. He has argued here this afternoon for a position that would gradually reduce the power of government to apply dumping measures to restrain the kind of dumping that would otherwise deprive Canadians of their jobs in those textile mills in Cornwall.

Now, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, in seeking to come to the rescue of the hon. member for Laurier, was a little too quick on the trigger a moment or two ago, as he so often is. I should like to caution my old friend, the hon. member for Laurier, against accepting gratuitous aid from that uncertain quarter. I think that his own mistakes in his speech this afternoon were such that he would be better advised to stick with those than to accept the Trojan horse offered by his seatmate, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

The order in council to which I have referred, Mr. Chairman, P.C. 1618 of July 2, 1936, was passed under the authority of subsection 10 section 6 of the Customs Tariff, as I have indicated. I did not go on to state, as I should have at that time, that that subsection, which gives to the governor in council the power to determine the percentage which shall be the test whether goods are of a class or kind made in Canada, was itself enacted in this house in 1936. It was part of the budget proposals introduced by the Liberal minister of finance in 1936, and was supported by the hon. member for Laurier. It was after that subsection was enacted by parliament that the power thereby conferred on the governor in council was exercised in the manner I have indicated.

Now, I proceed to another interesting observation made by the hon. member for Laurier.

The Chairman: Order; I am sorry to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can give the minister a chance to continue by saying about five words because I think we would like him to continue. I wonder if the minister would not go on and answer the question I asked, and on which he beat around the bush and carefully evaded an answer. My question is this: Why is the government, instead of changing the law and undoing this so-called erosion but still leaving the right of appeal to the courts, abolishing the appeal to the courts by this legislation? Subsection 3 of section 2A of the proposed resolution reads:

> The decision of the minister shall be final with respect to the final matters:
> (a) the normal Canadian consumption of the goods described in subsection 2,—

If the minister's decision about that is final, the minister can set that at any figure he chooses. No matter what other aspects of the matter may be appealed to the courts, if the minister says normal consumption is only 100 of something, then 10 per cent would only be 10. If you give this control and completely arbitrary power to the minister then there is nothing whatever left for determination on the appeal. I ask the minister why, when he attaches great virtue to this government for putting the 10 per cent into the law instead of leaving it in the regulations, he changes the definition of class or kind to make it uncertain when formerly it was precise and certain. I believe that the change with respect to the 10 per cent, of itself and isolated from everything, is commendable. However, this resolution gives to a single minister the arbitrary power, without appeal, to determine the quantity that is normally consumed in Canada.

The moment you abstract one element from the adjudication, no adjudication can be made at all. Unless the tariff board has the power to decide the quantity normally consumed in Canada it cannot make any proper decision as to what 10 per cent of that is. This decision will be governed by the amount the minister may arbitrarily determine. If the minister has some friends who want some protection he can set the total quantity very low in order to make sure their production is 10 per cent, thus giving them a hand-out. If, on the other hand, there are people he does not like he can say the normal consumption is very high and a small duty will be applied on the goods. In other words, any possibility of adjudication on shelf goods, taking all the objections into account, will be prevented by subsection 3 of section 2A as it is now.

I say, why is this government trying to override the courts, trying to prevent people getting into the courts, to have the facts decided? The facts should not be decided in a back room down on Mackenzie avenue, they should be decided openly when they are in dispute and before a proper tribunal set up for the purpose. Anything less than that is arbitrary power. You are taking the power to tax away from parliament and doing the very thing the minister objected to so eloquently in 1955. The year 1955 seems to have been a poor year for the minister in setting precedents. In the year 1955, as the hon. member for Laurier has just said, the present Minister of Finance objected to a minister or the governor in council being given certain powers in the event of an emergency threatening our very existence. However, this government suggests now that the Minister of National Revenue should be given arbitrary powers to govern the whole ambit of Canadian import trade, without appeal to anybody.

If one looks at subsection (b) of section 2A he finds that the minister can decide whether or not goods are custom-made. If he says so, that is fine. There is no appeal to anybody. No more arbitrary power over the economy of a country has ever been requested in any document that I have ever seen placed before parliament than the minister is proposing to put in this legislation. The Minister of National Revenue will be able to decide, without appeal, without regard to the facts if he wishes to be capricious, whether goods are shelf goods or custom made. There will be no appeal. He will be able to decide, in the case of shelf goods, what the normal consumption in Canada is. Once he has decided that, any adjudication on the other points will be an utter and complete farce. It is this legislating of the courts out of existence, denying the people the right of appeal to the courts which is, of the many objectionable features in this legislation, the most objectionable.

I ask the minister why he does not ask us to change the law in a fashion that he thinks is right, but leave it to the courts to interpret the law? This is the proper way, under our constitution, instead of substituting the Minister of National Revenue for the courts and providing no right of appeal. There is no right for anyone else to examine the facts in an independent fashion. This is the most arbitrary interference with our trade which, after all, represents the source of the income of 20 per cent of the people of this country. This provision clearly gives to the Minister of National Revenue the power of life and death over the income of a very large proportion of the Canadian people. Compared with anything that was done by the previous administration, the arbitrary character of this legislation is beyond belief.

Mr. Chevrier: Before the minister answers, since he was proceeding to reply to what I said, I wonder whether he would not give consideration to one matter which will take just a moment to bring to his attention. I refer to a statement made by the Prime Minister at Cornwall in 1958, and which is reported as follows:

> A textile manufacturing city, has been seriously hit by United States "dumping" of textiles, and Mr. Diefenbaker made it plain this situation would not be permitted to continue. The textile industry has not always been treated fairly in the past, he affirmed in a searching denunciation of the former Liberal government. Its requests for better treatment have much too long been neglected.

Notwithstanding the passage of three years, not only has nothing been done but three of these industries have been closed putting out of work some 2,000 people.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has his right to speak in the committee. It was interesting to hear him make this speech under the guise of attempting to be of assistance to me and give me an opportunity to continue. I think it would have been much more to the point if he had said he was exercising his right to speak and to raise the questions which he did. I said I intended to deal with these questions. If he will be patient, I intend to deal with them, and deal with them adequately, just as I intend to deal with the points raised last night by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

We heard this afternoon the hon. member for Timmins speaking in the same sense as did the hon. member for Laurier this afternoon and somewhat in the same sense as the hon. member for Assiniboia last night in his typically wild speech. The assertion is made that this legislation is an example of a protectionist policy and that in this respect it exhibits a trend. Those assertions have no basis in fact whatever. They have no basis in anything except the fancy, the fiction and the political approach of those who resort to such statements.

What is the record of this government with regard to tariff changes? The record, is this. Three regular budgets have been introduced, namely in 1958, 1959 and 1960, in which tariff changes were made. Where those tariff changes involved items with regard to which there were bindings under GATT we have followed scrupulously and to the letter the provisions of GATT. In every case negotiations have been held and what was presented to the house was presented in accordance with the agreements reached with the countries concerned. There has been loyal adherence at all times to GATT, both with regard to its letter and its spirit.

I think it is not unfair also to recall that the tariff changes that have been made, as to the principal items concerned, have been made invariably on recommendations made by the tariff board. Some amendments have been made, of course, on items that were not before the tariff board but they were not large matters or important and far-reaching amendments. Some of these references to the tariff board had been made by our predecessors before we came into office. Some of these references have been directed to the tariff board since we came into office.

What about the changes themselves? Here is the record. I do not say this is the only way by which to test the effect of budget policies in this regard but I think it is not unfair to tally up the results of tariff changes made in the aggregate in these three budgets, and here they are. There have been 392 changes. Of those changes, 203 were simply formal changes of a mixed character. There have been 65 increases and 124 reductions. Hence, when the hon. member for Timmins talks about a trend under the present government toward high tariffs I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that he just does not know what he is talking about. He has not taken the trouble to inform himself as to the facts. When his leader last night talked about protectionism, again he was speaking not in accordance with the facts but in violation of the facts.

Mr. Regier: It is a question of the volumes involved, not the items.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): As to the volumes involved, may I say this. The matters involving larger volumes were those that were negotiated under GATT. They were those that were passed upon by the tariff board. Does the hon. member not believe that attention should be paid to the recommendations of tariff board? Does he not think that the countries concerned in the negotiations are perfectly competent to judge whether they are satisfied with the changes made? I therefore say that the facts are all against hon. members opposite in this regard.

Then the hon. member for Laurier surprised me very much indeed this afternoon when he talked about the export restrictions applied by the Japanese government on exports of certain commodities to Canada, including a number of textile products. It was at that point that I sought his leave to ask him a question. That leave he denied me. I wished to ask him whether he was opposed to the imposition by the Japanese government of these restraints on their exports of textiles to Canada. He did not give me the opportunity to ask that question, so he has his choice now. Either he disapproves the effort that has been made in discussions with the representatives of the Japanese government to seek such reasonable restraints against the flooding of the Canadian market by exports into our market in concentrated form or he can, on the other hand, say that he approves those efforts, in which case I think he must withdraw what he had to say this afternoon or admit that he has changed his mind.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the hon. member permit me to reply?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I shall be delighted to do so.

Mr. Chevrier: In so far as Japanese quotas are concerned I say to the minister that in my opinion that was not the way in which to protect the textile industry in this country or in Cornwall. The statement made by the Prime Minister in all the textile areas was quite clear, namely that the situation of dumping would be put an end to and would be stopped. That promise has not been carried out. My answer to the question of the Minister of Finance is this. The method which he adopted is not the one which should have been followed. If there was dumping, the one which should have been followed is the one which the Prime Minister himself said he was going to put into effect and which was never put into effect.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Do I correctly understand the hon. member to say that the proper method by which to protect the textile operations in Cornwall, then, was to apply anti-dumping valuations?

Mr. Chevrier: I did not say that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member tell us what method he says should have been applied?

Mr. Chevrier: I am telling the minister that the Prime Minister made a statement in Cornwall. That statement was quite clear, namely that he would put an end to this dumping in the city of Cornwall and in other textile areas. I do not know what method he intended to use but he indicated that he would stop it in the same way as he stopped the dumping of agricultural products. That was not done.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I ask the hon. member whether he wishes to say what method he, the hon. member for Laurier, would apply—

Mr. Chevrier: You are the government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —in order to protect—and that was the word he used, namely "protect"—the operations of those textile mills in Cornwall. I am asking him what he says would have been the proper method to apply.

Mr. Chevrier: I have repeatedly attacked the government because of a lack of policy which they have demonstrated with reference to dumping in the textile industry. I reply to the minister now by saying that he is in office or his government is in office, and that it is his responsibility to do away with that situation, not that of the opposition.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I have asked the hon. member a plain straightforward question and he has turned his back on it three times at least and has run right away from it.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has the answer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I took my seat. I gave the hon. member an opportunity to tell me what he would say was the method by which protection should be extended to the textile mills in Cornwall and he still has not answered the question. He has run away from it as fast as his feet will carry him.

Mr. Pickersgill: You have run away from the Prime Minister's promise.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member talked vaguely about dumping.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was the Prime Minister who talked vaguely about dumping.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, the Prime Minister did not talk vaguely about dumping. The hon. member for Laurier has now had his opportunity to say what he thought should have been done. He said something should have been done to protect the operations of the textile mills in Cornwall, but he cannot or will not tell us what that method is and he is running away from it.

Mr. Chevrier: The Prime Minister is running away from it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will tell my hon. friend what has been done, and I will tell him what he and his associates have done to try to prevent the government from doing something salutary in this respect.

Mr. Chevrier: Let us hear that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member was one of those who sought to prevent the government obtaining at the hands of parliament in 1958 those measures that were asked for to strengthen the enforcement of the law against dumping.

Mr. Chevrier: And which you have never put into effect.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He and his colleagues fought that legislation up hill and down dale.

Mr. Chevrier: We certainly did.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is talking out of both sides of his mouth this afternoon. He is talking as though there were need of more rigorous anti-dumping measures, and yet he is one of those who sought to prevent the government from being given by parliament in 1958 powers that were needed to prevent the kind of dumping that had gone on under the Liberal administration.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let me finish my statement. He is going on this afternoon on the same tack, pretending on the one hand that he wishes to see textile production in Cornwall protected—he used that expression —but he will not come out and tell us what he would do.

Mr. Chevrier: I did not say any such thing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He has had the chance. He shows he is against anything in the way of tariff protection—

Mr. Pickersgill: He did not say that either.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; I made no such statement, because the textile industry in Cornwall exists no longer. It has been put out of business. The question I rose to ask the hon. minister is this: What effect have these tremendous and terrible anti-dumping regulations had upon the textile industry which existed at the time?

Mr. Pickersgill: And which has disappeared now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, there are several answers to that. The first one is that the neglect by the former Liberal government to take measures that should have been taken by them had gone so far at that time that it was not possible to save those industries in the time that was available to us.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then why did the Prime Minister promise to do it?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This government has done everything that it could reasonably do under the circumstances.

Mr. Chevrier: It has done nothing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And what we did do was done in the face of unrelenting opposition, interference and delay on the part of the Liberal opposition. They tried to deny us the powers for which we asked in 1958 to deal with dumping, just as today they are trying to narrow down the powers of the government to deal with dumping.

In relation to the textile industry, we referred this matter to the tariff board at once in 1957, and in respect to the recommendations of the tariff board in its report we asked parliament to carry out those recommendations. When the very first one of them came before this house, hon. members opposite did everything in their power to prevent a very modest increase in the customs tariff on woollen fabrics being legislated in this house. They did their best to prevent that.

I did not expect the hon. member for Laurier to take this line this afternoon. I can understand the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate taking this line, because he is an unrepentant free trader, but I cannot understand a line like this being taken by the hon. member for Laurier, whose position has been, I have always understood, that of a protectionist when it comes to the textile industry. He laughs now. Apparently I have misunderstood him and he is another of the free traders of the Liberal party and does not mind seeing protection withdrawn from Canadian industries that cannot be competitive unless they are given the modest protection that is given to them. Then we have the position taken by the hon. member for Essex East when it comes to protection for the automobile industry.

So we have all categories over there in the opposition. We have members over there who can talk free trade; we have members over there who can talk high protection. It just depends which record you turn on at any particular moment.

I think I have reviewed the record in this respect that was put before the house last night and today by hon. members opposite in very distorted form. Now, if I may, I wish to conclude this part of my remarks with an observation about the position of this government in relation to trade in general.

I have referred to the way in which we have loyally observed the provisions of GATT under all circumstances. I think it is a matter of satisfaction that, far from there being retaliatory measures—as was suggested by the hon. member for Assiniboia last night in an utterly wild statement—the fact is that Canada's export trade has prospered under the present government. Our total external trade in 1960 was the greatest external trade ever carried on in the history of this country. Our exports were at an all-time high. There, in the facts, is the answer to these baseless assertions by hon. members opposite.

I think those persons in this country who are dependent upon industry for employment, and who in many cases are represented by ladies and gentlemen who are in Ottawa today taking part in the presentation of the case of organized labour for certain measures, will be interested in some of the things that were said last night by the hon. member for Assiniboia, things that were said in the house this afternoon by the hon. member for Timmins and things that were said here by the hon. member for Laurier.

They will know perfectly well that it accords with the philosophy of those three gentlemen, and undoubtedly the parties that they represent, to deny this protection to Canadian workmen engaged in these industries. These hon. gentlemen would narrow down the interpretation of the words "of a class or kind made in Canada" and would thereby deprive those industries of a measure of protection that was intended to be extended to them by governments right down to 1950 before the process of erosion set in. Because on that matter depend jobs for Canadians. Hon. members opposite seem to be quite ready to overlook the fact that jobs are involved.

I said there were matters raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River with which I would deal. The hon. member asked last night about the interpretation to be given to three expressions that are to be found in the amendment.

The first of these was the expression "adequate facilities exist in Canada". In regard to that phrase, it is considered that there must be in Canada one or more manufacturers, or a combination thereof, who have the required installed manufacturing or producing equipment, coupled with the technical knowledge, required to make the goods in question.

The next question related to the expression "economic production". On this point I say that as costing data will not always be available when considering the status of custom-made goods in the light of this expression, each case—as I indicated yesterday—will have to be examined on its own merits. Factors such as mark-up realized by the manufacturer, and the laid down cost to the purchaser taking into account the incidence of duty based on the goods being regarded as "made" and proper valuation in accordance with the provisions of the Customs Act, must be taken into consideration.

The third phrase the hon. member asked about was "reasonable period of time". In so far as that phrase is concerned, a definite period may not be set without regard to the actual goods under review and the standard established by good business practice in the field involved. Proposed delivery dates in the instances where they are known may serve as a guide in this respect.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question? I was just wondering from what document he was reading. Is it a draft of the regulations that we can follow?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am referring to my notes, Mr. Chairman. The word "reasonable" is not a new one to the hon. member. This is a standard of conduct that is being interpreted by tribunals every day with respect to all manner of questions. It is not a new concept by any means at all.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to deal with this subject that has been very tangled and confused by hon. members opposite, in relation to the function of the minister and the function of the tariff board under the proposed amendment.

I draw attention again to the two classes of goods that are contemplated by the amendment; first of all the custom-built according to specifications goods, and second the shelf goods. It is in clause 2, subclause 3, that we have reference to the decision of the minister. The clause reads:

> The decision of the minister will be final with respect to the following matters:
> (a) The normal Canadian consumption of the goods described in subsection (2).

Now the goods described in that subsection are shelf goods. So the minister is called on to make a simple determination as to what is the normal Canadian consumption of shelf goods, a matter which is not difficult at all. The clause continues:

> (b) whether goods are custom-made to specifications and whether adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time.

That is the only other point which the minister is clothed with power to decide under the terms of the proposed amendment.

Mr. Chevrier: That is the more important of the two.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The power which is given to the minister is the power to decide into which of the two classifications the goods in question fall—are they custom-made according to specifications, on the one hand, or are they shelf goods. These are not difficult matters to determine at all. It is not a difficult question involving processes of law or legal determination for a minister to say, on the one hand, these are goods custom-made according to specification or, on the other hand, they are not of that class and are, accordingly, shelf goods.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the minister permit a question on that point?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am right in the middle of an explanation—

Mr. Benidickson: The minister has referred to subclause 3 where his decision is final with respect to the normal Canadian consumption of goods described in subclause 2. Would the hon. gentleman reconcile that with his statement yesterday, reported at page 1367 of Hansard, when he outlined three items which would still be eligible for appeal. Item (b) was the determination of the amount of Canadian production. Are we not talking of the same thing in this resolution?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. member has misapprehended what is involved here. On the one hand we are dealing with Canadian production. The other concept is that of Canadian consumption, and these are two different things.

I was in the middle of my explanation with respect to clause 3(b). I was pointing out that the other matter which arises for decision by the minister is whether adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time. These are all matters which are capable of decision in the light of statistical analysis. This is the sort of thing which is involved in decisions by government departments day after day. These are not matters of a nature which calls for judicial determination as related to questions of interpretation of words, or questions of law related to the interpretation of words in statutes. Therefore, these are eminently suitable matters for decision by the minister.

Jurisdiction in this form has very great advantages for the business community since it is possible for the minister to make quick decisions, whereas if those decisions were to be left to delay, those whose business it is or those whose interest might lie in delay could delay decisions on these simple questions for very long periods of time. As a matter of fact, through no fault on the part of the government department concerned, delays amounting to years have occurred in such situations. Therefore we are seeking this method of greatly improving the administration in this respect by putting simple decisions in relation to matters which are capable of relatively simple statistical determination into the hands of the minister for prompt decision.

Mr. Pickersgill: The usual argument for arbitrary power.

Mr. Crestohl: Would the minister permit a question? What is the definition which the hon. gentleman conceives under the clause which speaks of goods being custom-made to specifications? The minister did suggest that it referred to heavy machinery. If it is to be restricted to heavy machinery only, why does not the bill say that it is to be so restricted? Otherwise, the minister or the officials of his department will have to wrestle with a whole range of problems when they have to adjudicate on what is custom-made to specifications and I certainly would not wish to be an official of the department charged with the duty of wrestling with this definition. Perhaps the minister could clarify the position.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can assure the hon. member for Cartier that he will not be faced with the prospect which he fears and that he will not be called upon to make such decisions as an official of the department.

May I say that yesterday afternoon I gave illustrations of the type of goods to which this definition will normally apply. I do not anticipate the slightest difficulty in connection with these words, as to finding what are custom-made goods according to specifications. The hon. member knows what specifications are. He knows when goods are made up on a customer's order according to specifications. It is obvious that this relates to heavy machinery—quite heavy machinery —and the sort of thing, which is based on specifications; engineering specifications, for example.

Mr. Pickersgill: You say the same words over and over again.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I hope the hon. member understands them, because they are relatively simple. If he does understand them, then he has grasped the point.

Mr. Crestohl: Textiles could be made to specifications.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, that is not the type of goods here—

Mr. Crestohl: Then why not say so?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The textile goods that I know of would, I think, in all cases be shelf goods. Of course, the words "shelf goods" do not appear here. The hon. member will realize that what I have called shelf goods are the residue—all kinds of goods except those which are custom-made to specifications. Surely the phrase presents no difficulty. We would look for the order—something made up according to specifications. Engineering specifications would be a good example. Heavy machinery used in the manufacture of textile goods might be an example.

Mr. Crestohl: May I give an illustration to the minister which might help him clarify the situation a little. It is possible to order textile goods made in another country, requiring that this textile contain so many squares to the inch, be of such and such a colour, or quality and so on. Those are specifications for custom-made textiles, according to our normal understanding of the English language. If the minister intends that only hard goods, machinery and equipment, should be covered, then I think the legislation should clearly say so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You can have shelf goods made up according to specification, but that does not make them custom-made goods according to specification.

An hon. Member: What is the difference?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can anticipate no problem in relation to determination here. I think the line of definition is drawn quite simply by this legislation.

Mr. Crestohl: What are custom-made goods, leaving aside the word "specifications"?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Goods that are made up specially in response to a particular order.

Mr. Crestohl: That is correct. That could be the case with textiles, though.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): But this is a combination of the two things you have here. You have custom-made goods and, I stress this, the phrase "according to specifications".

Mr. Hellyer: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I finish dealing with one question at a time?

Mr. Hellyer: You have not dealt with it yet, but carry on.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not see how I can with the hon. member contributing his interruptions.

The hon. member for Cartier talks about custom-built goods on the one hand and specifications on the other. Here there are the two requirements. It is the union of the two.

Mr. Hellyer: Will the minister permit me to direct this question to him. If I went to the United States and ordered some shirts to be made of a particular cloth to particular measurements to suit me, would those be custom-made goods?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Those would not be custom-made goods according to specifications, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hellyer: With deference, Mr. Chairman, they are custom-made goods, made to specifications; so when are custom-made goods made to specifications not custom-made goods made to specifications?

Mr. Benidickson: No one can challenge the minister's interpretation.

The Chairman: Order. For the sake of orderly debate I would ask hon. members to put questions but not make a speech.

Mr. Hellyer: I asked a question which the minister made no attempt to answer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): For the enlightenment of hon. members opposite, here is a declaration made by the tariff board in a case:

> The significance of much of the evidence and argument can be seen most clearly when related to certain facts which are not disputed concerning the building and installation of newsprint machines in Canada. Newsprint machines are not produced for stock. Each machine is made to order in accordance with detailed specifications agreed upon by manufacturer and user; it is seldom a precise duplicate of any other newsprint machine but normally it resembles several of them very closely. The building of a machine normally requires many months. In Canada production and consumption of newsprint machines have been very irregular; in some periods many machines have been installed, in others none.

It will be seen that this is the distinction that has been adopted in the legislation that is now before the committee. We are dealing here with goods—obviously machinery in large part—of a kind that is not sitting in stock. It is not produced for stock. It is made to order in accordance with detailed specifications agreed upon by manufacturer and user.

Mr. Hellyer: As would be the case with my shirts.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Hellyer: They are not from stock.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member perhaps wears unique shirts.

Mr. Hellyer: The arms are a lot longer than yours.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. MacEwan: With initials embroidered on the pocket?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There are other parts of the anatomy than the arms which are of considerable importance in this context.

Mr. Hellyer: Some parts of yours are pretty thick.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I suppose we are what God made each of us, but we are responsible for what we do with what He gave us, and the hon. member and I will have to leave it at that I suppose.

Mr. Hellyer: Passing the buck again.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member talks about his shirts—

Mr. Matthews: He has lost his shirt.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would have thought that shirts would be an article carried in stock as a rule. Shirts can be produced for stock—

Mr. Hellyer: So can a machine.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not think the hon. member is going to say that the shirts he wears are so unique as not to be capable of resemblance to other products of the same kind or that they are never carried in stock or that production is irregular. I would have thought that shirts were a staple commodity notwithstanding the fact that the hon. member, as he said, takes a very long arm.

I have been trying for some time to deal with this subject of tariff board jurisdiction and ministerial jurisdiction. I have dealt with the provisions of subclause 3 in relation to the power of the minister to make decisions and have pointed out the very limited nature of that power.

Let me conclude by reiterating what I said yesterday, that the regular existing appeal procedure to the tariff board remains open to importers with respect to these much more difficult and involved questions: (a) whether or not imported goods are of approximately the same class or kind as goods made in Canada; (b) the determination of the amount of Canadian production; and (c) whether or not the number of articles manufactured in Canada does in fact constitute a minimum of 10 per cent of normal Canadian production.

Mr. Pickersgill: Normal Canadian consumption.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The suggestion that sweeping, arbitrary powers are supposed to be conferred upon the Minister of National Revenue is totally erroneous. That assertion completely falls to the ground.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just because the minister says so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Power is conferred upon the minister to make certain decisions with respect to matters that call for decision in the light of statistical data on matters that essentially call for swift decision, the kind that cannot be made in any other quarter than by the minister. Therefore we are presenting to the committee what is a very workable and sound proposal, one that in my respectful submission removes from the governor in council powers that the Liberal government conferred on the governor in council in 1936 and used all the remaining years that it was in office and we instead invite parliament to do the legislating.

The effect of this legislation so far as the function of the minister and the tariff board and the courts are concerned will be to preserve all that is desirable and necessary and helpful in relation to the right of appeal so that there may be no such thing as persons being denied their due rights by arbitrary decision, for the power of the minister to make decisions is confined to a narrow and proper field. This is a very workable scheme and will undoubtedly contribute very greatly to improved administration for the benefit of the business community.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, for the hon. member for Laurier to compare this legislation with the kind of legislation under debate in 1955 when I made certain observations about the arbitrary powers sought by the government of that day at the hands of parliament in relation to the Department of Defence Production is to try to compare day with night. That legislation sought arbitrary power—

Mr. Chevrier: We will show the minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —that was so sweeping in its terms that the minister of defence production of that day, had he chosen to exercise those powers, could, as I said in that speech, have held the Canadian economy in his hands. He could have changed it. He could have introduced socialism overnight if he had chosen to do so, so sweeping were the powers. To compare those sweeping powers with the limited powers conferred here upon the minister—necessary powers to make decisions essential to the benefit of the business community, prompt decisions—is to compare day with night. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we present this to the committee as sound, workable legislation without the arbitrary features in it that hon. members opposite think that they see in it but which do not exist in fact.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I must admit I have found the debate this afternoon most confusing. Depending upon who is speaking, the Minister of Finance is either a saint or a sinner. I hope in the course of my questioning to find out if the hon. gentleman is a saint, a sinner or a combination of both.

Of all the important matters that come before this house I have always found and still find the question of tariffs one of the most complex and confusing. Because of that I have no hesitation in saying I do not consider myself an expert with respect to tariff policies. That being the case I shall not be dogmatic in anything I put forward. The reason I rise in my place is that I feel it is necessary for some of this confusion compounded to be cleared away. As one of the representatives of British Columbia in this House of Commons I feel it is my duty to draw the attention of the minister to those fears which are being expressed in our province relative to the proposals he has placed before us.

I made reference a few moments ago to the possibility of the Minister of Finance being a saint or a sinner. From what I have heard thus far from industry in British Columbia it would be my conclusion that he is a sinner, and therefore it is of the utmost importance in our province, if the primary and the manufacturing industries have misinterpreted what will be the effect of the proposals of the Minister of Finance, to have the matter clarified. In the interests of British Columbia we must know whether there is a mistake in interpretation. If there is a mistake in interpretation, now is the time for the fears of the primary industry and the manufacturers of British Columbia to be cleared away.

This morning I received a lengthy communication from R. H. Ellison, executive vice president of Canadian Collieries Resources Limited. In the past few days I received, as I know the Minister of Finance has also, communications from C. B. Dunham, chairman of the British Columbia loggers association, W. R. Malpass, president of the truck loggers association, and R. T. Rose, general manager of the Vancouver board of trade. These men represent major industries and associations in British Columbia. In all of these letters to me, and in all of the copies of letters or telegrams sent to the Minister of Finance, there is general agreement that they are distinctly worried and fearful of the proposal regarding tariffs being placed before us at this time. I have arrived at a sort of conclusion now. If these big associations and organized industries have reached certain conclusions, then I think we should know from the Minister of Finance whether these conclusions are correct. If not, how did the economy in British Columbia go wrong?

According to the information from the executive vice president of Canadian Collieries Resources Limited, there is a strong feeling that any item which falls into the category of class or kind made in Canada, under the policy being enunciated by the minister, will be in this position. There will be an increase in the price to the consumer or user of between 15 per cent and 20 per cent. That is the reaction they have.

I was also supplied information relating to a statement made by Dr. Purdy, president of the British Columbia Electric Company Limited, to the effect that the turbine which they are to buy from the United Kingdom will increase in cost from $34 million to $39 million under one other proposal.

I get the impression that the fear of these people is that the major impact of this change will result in an increase in the cost of the tools of production. From the letters that I have received from the Vancouver board of trade, the manufacturers association, the loggers association, the Canadian Collieries Resources Limited and the truck loggers association, I have come to the conclusion that they have interpreted the proposal of the minister—I presume they have their economists, statisticians, experts and so on—to mean an increase in the basic cost of the tools of production. This, of course, is a matter of the utmost importance to British Columbia.

As a member of this house I am vitally concerned with the general good of all Canada. However, it is understandable that I am vitally and particularly concerned with the economy of British Columbia. When I hear from my people in British Columbia that this is going to mean a basic increase in the tools of production of the primary and resources industries of British Columbia it becomes a most serious problem. We all know—it has been pointed out by the Minister of Finance and others—that we are already facing difficulties of a competitive nature. I can say this definitely for British Columbia because of the problems we are facing. Anything which increases our cost of production places us in a most invidious and difficult position, in an attempt to produce for a competitive export market.

Not only do I want to express the problem with respect to establishing primary industry in this country, but to say this. If their interpretation and understanding of the problem is correct, then it most certainly is going to discourage to a great extent the possibility of the establishment of new industries in our province and the expansion of those already existing.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, at the dinner recess I was pointing out the fears which have been, and are still being expressed by the primary and manufacturing industries in British Columbia relative to their interpretation of the impact in that province of the proposals that have been set forth by the Minister of Finance. It has been pointed out to me during the dinner hour that this fear is being expressed only in British Columbia. If that is the case, then it is of the utmost importance that every measure be taken by the Minister of Finance in this House of Commons to so explain his proposals that that fear may be alleviated.

However, I have also heard others in this house who do not come from British Columbia express similar fears. In addition, if I gather aright from what was said by the minister this afternoon, particularly in the latter part of his remarks, these proposals are in tune with GATT and in tune with our good neighbour policy with the United States. I do not find that to be the case. I should like to make a brief mention of a publication which is entitled, "Washington through Canadian Eyes". This publication is published privately and is circulated privately to Canadians. I should like to quote from the issue of January 17 of this year, and this is what it says:

> While the Canadian removal of tax incentives for American investment in Canada captured all the headlines in United States, it is the customs action on "class or kind" that really has shaken official Washington. Over at the commerce department, officials can become almost livid with anger in discussing this action which they feel endangers much of the U.S., machinery exports to Canada. The state department takes a less anxious view, but remains concerned, nevertheless. At commerce, you even hear talk about retaliation. And one other thing this Ottawa action has done is to provide more ammunition to the protectionists in the U.S. congress.

If the information which was published on January 17 by this publication "Washington through Canadian Eyes" is authoritative at all there is some concern in the United States about the proposed customs action, especially as it relates to the interpretation of class or kind. I quite understand why there might be concern in the United States if this action could interfere with exports. The anxiety which I have been trying to express, as it exists in British Columbia, relates to the possibility of an increase in the cost of the basic production machinery in British Columbia. The vast majority of production machinery is not produced in our province but has to be freighted in and the increase in cost of production machinery, whatever that may be, can be passed on only to the consumer.

As I mentioned previously, we already have enough difficulties in meeting the competition which faces British Columbia as an exporting province at existing prices without having any increase in our cost of production. I do not know whether they are livid in the commerce department in Washington, but I do say that according to the information sent to me, whether or not it is justified, the logging industry in British Columbia is pale with anxiety. If my memory serves me correctly, 54 cents out of every dollar of revenue the people of British Columbia receive comes from our forest resources. What affects the forest industry is, therefore, of the utmost significance to us. Both the B.C. loggers association and the truck loggers association are deeply concerned. Whether or not they have grounds for this concern, I am raising this matter now so we can hear from the Minister of Finance.

On January 13 of this year the B.C. loggers association informed me through a letter that the introduction by the Minister of Finance in his baby budget of matters having to do with goods of a class or kind not made in Canada is causing grave concern to the manufacturing end of the forest industry in the Pacific province. I can understand that because anything that could result in an additional tariff burden on the forest industry, dependent as we are in British Columbia on foreign markets and faced with competition as we are, is most vital. It was for that reason that on January 13 a telegram was sent to the Minister of Finance over the signature of the chairman of the B.C. loggers association and the president of the truck loggers association. Since a copy of this telegram was sent to me, I hope you will not mind if I read it. It reads as follows:

> The logging industry on this coast have noted with much concern that portion of Customs Tariff resolution Hansard page ten seventeen December twentieth. To us it would seem that benefits expected to accrue to one form of industry in Canada could be more than offset by harm to manufacturers of primary products dependent upon foreign markets for their existence. Crippling of the position of mills buying logs from the independent logger can only result in critical harm to his position. On behalf of the loggers represented by our associations we respectfully ask that the suggestion of the manufacturing branch of our industry be enacted as a part of the proposed legislation and that end-use items be provided for all phases of production and manufacture of wood products not now included in the four eleven series.

As this is a concise setting forth of the problem as viewed by those two associations in a telegram directed to the Minister of Finance I sincerely hope, that without my having to go into the matter in more detail on this particular phase, he will give us officially the answer to the anxieties therein expressed and will perhaps go further and make specific comment on the communication which I understand he received under date of January 27 from the Vancouver board of trade.

The Vancouver board of trade is made up of hundreds of the primary and secondary industries of the province of which I happen to have the honour of being one representative. They also express fears similar to those which I outlined to the committee as expressed by the executive vice president of Canadian Collieries Resources Limited and the logging industry. In this the most recent letter they definitely express a vivid concern about the possible effect on our British Columbia industries primarily involved in export trade. The board of trade, which have research men and statisticians at their command, and the representatives of the major industries of our province in this letter have no hesitation in coming back to the problem, namely that an increase in the price of the production tools in our export industries would make it harder, if not impossible, for them to compete in world markets.

I was most interested in one of their recommendations to the Minister of Finance. I hope the minister will inform us whether he or his departmental officials have made a study of the recommendation of the board of trade for a change in part of the wording of the resolution he is presenting to the committee. As has already been expressed by hon. members who have previously spoken, the board of trade considers that the word "approximately" used in the phrase "goods approximately the same class or kind made in Canada" is capable of too broad an interpretation to be administered equitably. I know that the minister had something to say on this word "approximately" this afternoon but I hope he will enlarge upon what he said previously.

It has been suggested to the minister that in the wording he is recommending to the House of Commons he include some of the words he used in his budget speech. Those words are "goods which are similar in nature and purpose". It is felt by the Vancouver board of trade that these words could, with great advantage, be included.

I may say that I have gone over this matter three or four times and I believe that it reads like a good suggestion. I certainly would be most interested in hearing from the minister whether he can meet the request for the change as set forth by the board of trade. If this request were met, the proposed legislation would then read as follows:

2A. (1) for the purposes of this act, goods shall be deemed to be of a "class or kind" made or produced in Canada if

(a) in the case of goods other than goods custom-made to specifications, goods of the same class or kind, similar in nature and purpose, are made or produced in Canada.

This proposed change seems to meet some of the objections that have been raised in British Columbia.

Mr. Benidickson: In essence, the hon. member would leave out the word "approximately". Is that the idea?

Mr. Winch: Yes; and put in, after the words "same class or kind", the words "similar in nature and purpose". I think the minister would get away from a great deal of difficulty if this suggestion were accepted and I most sincerely commend it to him.

I do not think I need to continue at any greater length, Mr. Chairman. As I stated when I first rose to speak on this subject, to me the question of tariffs has always been a complicated and complex one; indeed it is so complicated, complex and confusing that I honestly admit that I find it difficult on many occasions to understand it. I therefore do not pretend to be an expert. However, as one of the representatives from British Columbia, having received all these communications and telegrams from responsible organizations of industry, both manufacturing and primary, and from such associations as the board of trade, I felt that it was my responsibility to bring the matter forward at this time and to say this to the Prime Minister and to those who maintain that there is no need for such fears or anxieties and that British Columbia apparently is the only province that feels this way. I hope the minister will be able to clarify the situation, and if what he says is correct, then put it in such a manner that there is understanding in British Columbia. If you do not do that, I am afraid that the complex will continue, something that is dangerous for our economy in the battle we now face and shall face in the months ahead, not only to maintain our industry in present production but to extend it in the way which is so necessary for the maintenance of our standard of living and in order to extend prosperity across the nation as well as to maintain it in British Columbia.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Perhaps with the permission of the hon. member for Stormont I might deal with this matter that has been raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Yes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is a fact that we have had representations from, I believe, seven associations in British Columbia connected with the forest products industry. We have not had representations from similar organizations in other provinces. I think there have been just two other formal representations from the rest of Canada and they were both from importers.

The hon. member, of course, is perfectly justified in raising this question and I am glad to have an opportunity of dealing with it. I hope I can convince him. As I have said to those organizations which made the representations from British Columbia, I think their fears are based on an assumption and I do not think the assumption is warranted. In general I think their fears have been greatly exaggerated.

I shall be glad now to give to the committee and to the hon. member the substance of the views that have been conveyed to these associations. The concern which they have expressed is to the effect that there will be a material increase resulting in the cost of machinery and tools of production used in their operations, and thus their position in relation to export sales will be weakened.

I would like to suggest first of all that the forest industries may be divided into three phases, logging, saw mill and manufacture of wood products. The tariff accords special treatment under the nominee items which do not have any "class or kind" limitation for most machinery and equipment which enters to any important degree into the direct cost of production of logging and of saw mill operations.

Machinery and equipment for use in the operation of logging is provided for in tariff item 411a at rates of 10 per cent B.P. and 12½ per cent m.f.n. Machinery used up to but not including the planing operation in saw mills is provided for in tariff item 411, also at rates of 10 per cent B.P. and 12½ per cent m.f.n. Item 411b provides for cylinder stave saws, wheel type stave jointers and crozing and chamfering machinery at rates of 10 per cent B.P. and 15 per cent m.f.n. The proposed amendment will not, and indeed could not affect these tariff items as they are not "class or kind" items at all.

The third phase of the forest industries, the manufacture of woods products, encompasses a multiplicity of products which for the most part do not enter in any important degree into the Canadian export trade. Machinery and tools required for the production of these products, with the exception of those used in the production of plywood and veneers, generally are classified under the so-called "basket" machinery items. These are items 427 and 427a in the tariff. These are "class or kind" items and depending upon the "made in Canada" status of the machinery it is classified under tariff item 427a, if it is not made in Canada, at rates of free B.P. and 7½ per cent m.f.n.; or under item 427, if made in Canada, at rates of 10 per cent B.P. and 22½ per cent m.f.n. Such machinery could be affected by new rulings on this subject of class or kind made in Canada under the proposed amendment.

Machines for the manufacture of veneers and plywoods are provided for in item 427f at rates of free B.P. and 7½ per cent m.f.n. Veneer drying machines are provided for in item 426b at rates of 5 per cent under both B.P. and m.f.n. regardless of whether they are of a class or kind made in Canada.

I think, therefore, that the concern which has been expressed by these various associations in British Columbia is greatly exaggerated. It follows, I think, from what I have said that to a limited extent new rulings in relation to the question of whether goods are of a class or kind made in Canada may affect the industry. Their effects will be confined largely to those branches which produce predominantly for the home market in Canada rather than for export. Any industry producing for the home market has of course a real interest in the prosperity of that market and stands to gain indirectly from measures taken to safeguard or increase the well-being of other sectors of the market.

I do wish to say that a number of hon. members of the house have spoken to me or communicated with me in regard to this same matter. The hon. member for Nanaimo and Comox-Alberni have been much interested in this question, and other members also have made their representations. The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary and Okanagan-Revelstoke have also communicated with me in regard to this matter. Thus I have had an opportunity of conveying to these hon. members the explanation that the hon. member's question has now given me an opportunity to give to the committee this evening.

In a word, as I indicated at the outset, I think the fears expressed by these associations are based on an assumption. I personally do not think the assumption is warranted and I am happy to say, for that reason, that I think the fears they have expressed are very greatly exaggerated.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the minister to comment on the proposed change of the Vancouver board of trade to the definition of "class or kind".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am glad the hon. member has reminded me of that. Various wordings were considered when the decision was taken to put the legislation forward in this form. On careful consideration it was considered that the word "approximately" was the best word to use under all the circumstances here, rather than such words as were suggested by the board of trade, namely "similar in nature or purpose".

I point out that words like "similar in nature or purpose" would open up an entirely new realm. It should not be thought, I think, by those who put this suggestion forward that they are putting forward something that would be more restrictive than the word "approximately". As a matter of fact, having regard to the fact that the word "or" is used in this expression "similar in nature or purpose," there is very good reason for thinking that the word "approximately" is more restrictive than would be the words suggested by the board of trade.

After all, goods could be similar in purpose without being similar in nature and this kind of expression would take us, I think, pretty far afield. So I think that while the hon. member considered that the words that were being suggested by the board of trade were more restrictive in their effect than the language proposed in the amendment, I would have to take a contrary view.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Mr. Chairman, my remarks this evening will be brief. I must say that I was extremely touched by the solicitude of the hon. member for Laurier, who spoke before dinner, regarding Canadian Cottons and the constituency of Stormont, more particularly Cornwall. I am especially touched by this solicitude because this industry of Canadian Cottons is one which he and his colleagues had neglected for 22 years, and the constituency of Stormont is one which he himself abandoned. I regret that the hon. member is not in his seat at the moment. I had the pleasure of sharing a very delightful occasion with him a few minutes ago. We were both at a reception by the Montreal Trust, but I regret that he has not yet returned.

I believe that the hon. member for Laurier, my predecessor, is having a death bed repentance in the same way the Liberal party at their recent convention had a deathbed repentance. That is the only explanation of the fact that they promised everything that they neglected to do for the previous 22 years. I think it is also significant that my hon. predecessor ran away from the question of the Minister of Finance. Time and again the Minister of Finance reiterated the question: what would you do? In each case the hon. gentleman evaded giving a direct answer. I think it is very significant that he abandoned committing himself in the same way that he abandoned Cornwall after he had abandoned the Cornwall canal to the Americans.

I would like to confirm what the Minister of Finance has said, namely that Canadian Cottons, which I know very well and where I had so many friends working, because of 22 years of neglect by the hon. member for Laurier and his colleagues, has disappeared, before even the very salutary action taken by this government to reverse the situation could take effect as it has done with regard to so many other textile firms in this country. The former employers, the former workers and the former union men in my constituency will never forget the attitude of my predecessor and, more especially, of his colleague the late Mr. C. D. Howe who was of the opinion that this textile industry was obsolete and expendable. He made that opinion very clear indeed. These people will never forget that, nor will they forget the obstructionism and delaying tactics on the part of the present official opposition—I would hate to call it the effective opposition—to this present constructive measure now being brought in to assist and protect the hard beset manufacturers in this country and, in turn, provide so many more jobs for our people while at the same time not interfering with our obligations under GATT or the export trade of the rest of the country.

In closing, there are a few other things I wish to say. I referred a few minutes ago to abandonment. I understand that many people in Quebec are referring to my predecessor as a refugee from Cornwall. Furthermore, many of his former friends, who know him far better than I know him, have been going so far as to regard him as a renegade. Again, in closing, let me pay a tribute to the people of Stormont who have snatched victory out of defeat. They have made the best of a bad situation. They have taken these cotton mill buildings and formed a limited dividend company, a development company. In these buildings they have almost a million square feet of floor space to rent at advantageous rates in order to attract new industries to this area. There is no greater bargain in this whole country for any new industry than our people have provided in Stormont, and I predict that very shortly this enterprise will bear fruit. Let me say that the imagination and enterprise of these people in Stormont and of my constituents in Cornwall is unprecedented and that it has set an example to all the people of this country. Ever since 1812, as I have reiterated in this house, when our people of Cornwall commenced the construction of the Cornwall canal—

The Deputy Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member that we are discussing a resolution concerning the Customs Tariff. I notice that in his speech the hon. member has made many references which are not relevant.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): I was just referring to the commendable way in which my constituents have reacted to the difficulties created by my predecessor and his colleagues because of their customs policy. But, let me say, because of this fallacious, this iniquitous, this unwarranted, doctrinaire, free trade policy which has been such a disaster to this country and which has placed us in our present difficulties; because of this and also because of the loss of the Cornwall canal to which I referred earlier, Cornwall, my home town and my predecessor's town, was stranded high and dry like a gasping whale on a rocky shore left dry by the receding tide of Liberalism, but because of the provision of $400,000 for a new harbour and the great tide of legislation which this government has brought in, once again Cornwall is afloat and once again it will find itself in the position it deserves and enjoying the prosperity to which it has been accustomed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should just like a moment in which to reply to the insinuations made by the hon. member who has just taken his seat in the course of the high-minded speech he delivered about the hon. member for Laurier. I think the committee ought to know that the hon. member for Laurier is at a meeting this evening of the University of Ottawa, his alma mater, having to do with the expansion of that institution. That is the only reason my hon. friend is not here tonight.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): The hon. member for Laurier had no hesitation about referring to my constituency when I was in conference with members of the Canadian Catholic Federation of Labour this afternoon.

Mr. Nowlan: I, myself, unfortunately had to be out of the house this afternoon for the same reasons as the hon. member for Laurier and the hon. member for Stormont. I, too, had appointments which prevented my being here, so I did not have the opportunity of hearing all the debate. It may be, therefore, that for a minute or two I shall be dealing with straw which has already been threshed. But having had reports sent me of what has been said during the debate so far, I know there has been some criticism raised of the fact that apparently the Minister of National Revenue, who happens for the moment to be the person standing in front of you, has power to decide this and to decide that. Apparently some hon. members believe that is a most iniquitous position in which any minister could be placed, that it is a regression to the days of R. B. Bennett, and all the other cliches with which hon. members opposite try to appeal to the house sometimes when they are entirely devoid of arguments.

There is nothing new about the fact that the Minister of National Revenue has power to decide this, that and the other. I have not had time to check carefully the Customs Act, but I have gone over it in the last few minutes—

[Mr. Campbell (Stormont).]

Mr. McIlraith: It is the Customs Tariff with which we are dealing; that is the act which is before us.

Mr. Nowlan: The Customs Act is also one which I administer. The Customs Tariff is the one which falls in the province of the Minister of Finance. Take, for example, that section of the Customs Act which deals with valuations for duty. It is clearly set out that where the valuation for duty cannot be determined under certain preceding sections—and there are five of them—the value for duty of goods shall be of such value as the minister may determine. Mr. Chairman, believe it or not, this statute was not brought in in 1958 in the amendment to which the hon. gentleman from time to time refers; this amendment was brought in under the benign Liberal leadership of that great patron leader of Canada, Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, and therefore that power must be sacrosanct, the fact that the minister when he brought in legislation could be endowed with such power—

Mr. Crestohl: It was not frozen as final.

Mr. Nowlan: It is final. This is final. There is no appeal provided in the sections from which I am reading. I am not reading sections relating to class or kind. I direct the attention of hon. members to subsection 11, under which the minister may reduce the value for duty and so on. I invite hon. members to turn to subsection 12 under which it may be found that the minister may fix the value. I direct the attention of the committee to section 38, subsections 1, 2 and 3 under which there is reference to the same power. If one had time I am sure one could go on and give other examples.

All I am saying is that there has been recognized for years and years in the administration of the Customs Act and in the administration of the Customs Tariff for which I am responsible, that there must be decisions made with fairness, with equity and with some degree of celerity and speed. You cannot hold goods in a warehouse for anywhere from six to nine months when an importer is awaiting delivery of those goods until someone makes up his mind and reference of the matter is made to various officers and so on. In simple, elementary but practical things, the Minister of National Revenue has been endowed with power under previous governments.

I referred to the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King. Frankly that provision may well have been in existence before he became prime minister. It has been on the statute books for a long while. I am simply stating it as a recognized principle. There is nothing to which one could take exception in the fact that the Minister of National Revenue has the power to do this or that.

To hear some of the discussion this afternoon and yesterday one would think that class or kind legislation was something new, a departure from past practices, an iniquitous conception, something which this Tory government seeks to bring into the house hankering back to the days of R. B. Bennett. Class or kind legislation was in effect when I became minister and has been in effect, indeed, for many years. The history of this legislation has been referred to in this debate. It is well known that it extends back over decades.

Scarcely a week goes by but that the Minister of National Revenue makes rulings with respect to class or kind. I made three last week and indeed I make them all the time. When I say that, I do not mean I make one every hour. Perhaps days or a week will go by without my making one and then perhaps in the period of one day I will make three or four.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the minister permit a question? Would he indicate to the committee what change is proposed in this resolution vis-à-vis the previously existing conception, particularly when it involves the Liberal administration, that in so far as class or kind made in Canada is concerned the question of substantial production in Canada has a bearing?

Mr. Nowlan: Under the order in council to which reference was made by my colleague when he opened this debate it has always involved 10 per cent production of those goods of a class or kind made in Canada. That has been the provision for many years.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): For 25 years.

Mr. McIlraith: Since 1936.

Mr. Nowlan: My friend the hon. member for Ottawa West says since 1936. It was at that time the order in council was passed.

Mr. Benidickson: It did not prevail under the Bennett regime.

Mr. Nowlan: No. My hon. friends opposite love to refer to R. B. Bennett and the terrible things that will happen if this legislalation is enacted. Personally I have no fear of returning from time to time to the regime of R. B. Bennett. At least, one could find there some integrity and determination and various qualities which perhaps have not been entirely predominant in the regimes which immediately followed the Bennett regime.

My hon. friends opposite see shadows and ghosts. I believe that you, Mr. Chairman, were in the Chair two years ago when we brought in amendments to the Customs Tariff and were told that we would raise the tariffs as high as Haman's gallows. On that occasion the shadow of R. B. Bennett was walking the floor, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was almost in hysterics thinking about what would happen in respect to it—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is a daily occurrence.

Mr. Nowlan: —but, as we see, the world has gone on very nicely ever since. I refer my hon. friends opposite to a quotation which I vaguely remembered from having attended Sunday school. I checked the scriptures tonight and I think this quotation might be offered as a timely word of advice to hon. gentlemen opposite who never have anything realistic to deal with and therefore always have to deal with imagination and ghosts and things which they fear may happen. Before they go to bed tonight I urge hon. gentlemen opposite to read the thirteenth verse of chapter 18 of Proverbs, according to which they will find that:

> He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him.

I suggest that my hon. friends stop answering these things before they hear them because it is a shame and a folly and it is above all a shameful waste of time to have a debate on such imaginary and dreadful things as they conjure up before us without any foundation in reality whatever.

With respect to class or kind and the rulings made by the minister from time to time, it is true that there is some technical differentiation—or will be if this amendment is approved by the house—in relation to the matter of appeals. Substantially, however, the appeal procedure is exactly the same. I observe that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate shakes his head. I will tell the hon. gentleman how realistically this matter is approached. How many appeals have we had? What is there of which we may be deprived?

Mr. Benidickson: What about the right?

Mr. Nowlan: Hon. members opposite are not being deprived of anything because the only matter with respect to which the minister can make a determination under the proposed legislation are substantially statistical information which is available to the dominion bureau of statistics in any event and is a matter of commonsense computation and nothing else. In any event, whatever the appeals may have been, I find that going back over the last 10 or 15 years there have been seven appeals made on seven different rulings.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is all the erosion amounts to, then?

Mr. Nowlan: There also have been several appeals made of one ruling and several of another. The hon. member talks about erosion—

Mr. Pickersgill: It was the Minister of Finance who talked about erosion.

Mr. Nowlan: My hon. friend says that the Minister of Finance spoke about erosion. Another hon. member asks: Why do you bring this in? I did not hear the debate this afternoon or last night.

Mr. Hellyer: The minister is not following his own advice now. He is answering without having heard it.

Mr. Nowlan: I did not hear the remark made by the hon. member for Trinity. I believe he was worried this afternoon about having his shirts made to order. Well, my arm is longer than his, so I am faced with exactly the same problem he is and I buy my shirts in Canada—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: —so the hon. gentleman need not worry about the class or kind ruling.

Mr. Hellyer: I buy my shirts in Canada, too.

Mr. Nowlan: I am sure the hon. member does. He would never be elected in Toronto if he did not.

My hon. friends talk about erosion and class or kind rulings. Here is one example the minister gave in respect to a famous case relating to the manufacture of car wheels. One had a spindle which was perpendicular. The wheel went around the perpendicular spindle and the centre was cut out into which the axle went. It was held by the department to be of a class or kind made in Canada. Another was imported and it was a horizontal spindle and the wheel went around in the fashion I now describe with my hands. The tariff board said it was of a class or kind not made in Canada. That is an example of class or kind and of erosion.

Let us take the case of the shovel. We were making power shovels in this country of two cubic yard capacity. The plant was there and they were producing them all the time. They had the machinery, equipment, experience, men and the orders for shovels of a capacity of two cubic yards. Then shovels of a two and a half yard capacity came in from a foreign source. There was an appeal. The tariff board said despite the fact that there were men who were out of a job, despite the fact that there was the plant, equipment and experience, that two and a half yard shovels were not of a class or kind made in Canada. That is a class or kind ruling. That is an example of erosion. That is the shovel case. If my hon. friend wants the reference I can give it to him.

Mr. McIlraith: I have the judgment upstairs.

Mr. Nowlan: It is appeal No. 306. The decision was given on May 20, 1954. Then, there is the ballbearing case and the .22 rifle case. In one case, if it was fed manually, it was of a class or kind. If there was a little attachment to it, it was not of a class or kind. It was because of decisions such as these that we have introduced the legislation. I could go on, but I am not going to bore the committee by giving the cases. There have been others since 1949, but without questioning the judgment, the whim or whatever the philosophy of the persons who were writing these decisions, the fact remains that from 1949 and 1950 there has been a complete erosion of the principle of class or kind. Surely, Mr. Chairman, when you get a shovel which has a capacity of two yards and another one with a capacity of two and a half yards, both powered in the same way, both manufactured in the same way, both performing in the same way, you cannot say that one is a different class because it happens to have a half yard more capacity. It is not identical and that is why we used the word "approximately" to cover such cases as those I have mentioned.

I could go on, Mr. Chairman. But I think there has been a great deal of misapprehension, which my colleague has cleared up, in talking about this matter, as though this were something revolutionary, something new. It is new in so far as goods made to order are concerned, and for the moment I am not dealing with that. This is a matter which we can discuss later on, as the committee desires. But I am dealing just now with goods of a class or kind which are made in Canada. It is because of this erosion, because of the things which have happened, which I am certain was never the intention of parliament when parliament enacted the statutes, that we have introduced this legislation.

It was never the intention of the various Liberal ministers of finance—and when I say "Liberal" I mean Liberal with a capital "L"—under the Liberal regime and the various ministers of national revenue that this statute would be applied in that way. All we are trying to do is to restore what in our opinion was the intention of parliament when it passed this legislation. We are not going back to the days of R. B. Bennett; we are simply going back to the practices which were pursued, and I think properly so, by the government of Mr. Mackenzie King, and those associated with him, up until at least 1950.

There are other things I could say about this, but I think we have at least cleared away the background in so far as I am concerned because I have had pretty close experience with this now for almost four years. I could have checked it; I did not have time to do that, but I have given score of rulings. As industry changes, as we move ahead, for instance, in the plastics field today and in the field of drugs—and there are a score of fields —we make class or kind rulings very frequently. I make many a year, and very often several a week.

My friend from Vancouver East was talking about the lumber business and quite properly what this might do to that industry. I think my colleague replied to that effectively and fully. This also might be said. In that industry you are dealing not with machinery made to order, generally speaking, I would think, but with saws and planes and with production machines. Generally speaking, you order this material from a factory.

Mr. McIlraith: Oh.

Mr. Nowlan: My hon. friend says "oh". I think that is right. I have had some experience in the lumbering business. Generally speaking, it is a different thing entirely from manufacturing, shall we say, a generator or a turbine generator, which takes two years to build and is built to a new specification. You buy your equipment. It is true there are variations in size and so forth, but generally they are of a class or kind which can be manufactured and supplied within 48 hours, or a week after the order. If there is a class or kind situation there the rulings must have been given before. Many of those machines which are used in that industry undoubtedly have had a class or kind ruling. Therefore, there is going to be no change under this legislation unless, of course, some new machine is developed which has not been envisaged so far, and on which there could be substantial manufacture developed in Canada.

All I am saying, Mr. Chairman, is that we should look at this realistically. This is nothing new. This is no attempt to raise tariffs, or anything of that kind; it is simply, in so far as this phase is concerned, class or kind of goods made in Canada. It is simply an attempt to restore the law to the situation in which it was, and the reason for that is the attrition which has taken place and which has had the effect to quite an extent, shall I say, of weakening the position of Canadian industries.

As I said, when you cannot tell whether when you have a shovel which is two yards and another one which is two and a half yards, that one is of a class or kind and the other is not, you are really working on an even more theoretical position than the fears of my hon. friends opposite in dealing with this situation tonight.

When you come to those goods made to order, I could say something on that because of the experience we have had—

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the minister goes on with that—

Mr. Nowlan: I do not intend to.

Mr. Pickersgill: —I have one question I should like to ask. Why does the government now consider it is necessary to take away from the tariff board the capacity to decide on an appeal what the normal Canadian consumption of the goods is? That is the question I ask the minister. The minister says no change is being made, but this is a very substantial change. Our argument is that no effective adjudication can be made at all if one of the questions of fact is decided finally by the minister and cannot be considered in the appeal. That is a change in the law, abolishing the right of appeal.

Mr. Nowlan: It is very largely statistical information which you can get from the bureau of statistics in five minutes by calling them up. There can be no question of the argument—

Mr. Pickersgill: Then, there is no reason why the tariff board should not decide that.

Mr. Nowlan: Because we do not want a period of six months or a year to elapse on an appeal on something which has no merit whatsoever.

Mr. Pickersgill: An appeal can be taken anyway.

Mr. Nowlan: An appeal can be taken on substantial grounds. Undoubtedly, my colleague has enumerated the grounds on which an appeal can be taken, and I am not going into that.

Where does the tariff board get the information? They usually get it from the Department of National Revenue. The departmental officials are in contact with the manufacturers, shall we say, on how many automobiles or buck saws, or whatever it may be, are manufactured. We phone them and they say, how many saws were produced by the firm last year. We can get that information in an hour or so.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about consumption?

Mr. Nowlan: There is nothing of merit whatsoever in this. It is simply a figment of the imagination where somebody is trying to draw a red herring across the path because they do not understand how this thing works.

Mr. Pickersgill: An all wise government.

Mr. Nowlan: They are trying to justify something for which there is no justification whatsoever.

Mr. McIlraith: Hon. members in the chamber must be grateful to the Minister of National Revenue for his quotation from Proverbs. It was much the most apt description I have heard or could think of, to describe the arguments of the Minister of Finance in putting forward this resolution for the consideration of the house. Certainly, there is nothing that I can think of that is more apt to describe the presentation of the Minister of Finance today.

In any event, the minister went on to say there is no attempt in this legislation to raise tariffs. Then, if he is to be logical, he ought to withdraw the legislation and not take up the time of the chamber.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is sophistry.

Mr. McIlraith: The sole purpose of the legislation, according to the minister, is to redefine the meaning of certain phrases in usage in the Customs Tariff so that what the minister and the government apparently thought was the former rate of tariff which has been eroded, if I may use the word of the Minister of Finance, is put back to where it was more than 10 years ago. In other words, what he is asking the committee to do is to raise the tariff by adopting this legislation. I do not know why the opposition should be attacked for suggesting that that is the case because if it is not the case then the minister has no right to have this legislation before the committee at all.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the hon. gentleman say whether if goods are of a class or kind made in Canada they ought to deserve a margin of protection in excess of that given to goods of a class or kind not made in Canada?

Mr. McIlraith: The statement is very general, but as a general proposition and allowing for generalities, the answer is yes. But that is not the point. What I want to get at here is the use of the word "erosion" by the Minister of Finance. He bases his whole argument on the fact that the interpretation was eroded. When he was questioned a bit on it, it turns out he really means that the departmental officials' rulings were not upheld by the tariff board or the exchequer court, as the case may be. What he is saying, in effect although he will not say it directly, is that he feels the courts and the tariff board, the judicial tribunals dealing with this matter, have not applied the law laid down in the legislation and the orders in council. He does not say that. He does not freely disclose to the committee that it is a matter of the appeals having gone a different way from that which the departmental officials thought they should go.

That is certainly a valid position for him to take. Again, I do not understand why he was trying to present the matter in such a way as to lead one to the reasonable interpretation that the courts or other interpretative authorities have changed their rulings. They did not, in fact, change them. It was a matter of the appeal authorities having given rulings that were different from those which the departmental officials thought they should give. It seems to me that is the nub of his argument.

I think that to criticize tribunals who are doing their work and, so far as I am concerned, interpreting the law in a proper, legal way; to describe their judgments as an erosion of the law is not fair to these tribunals. I think that if the minister will reflect on it a bit he will agree that he ought not to leave the impression he was criticizing the judgments of the tariff board and the exchequer court in that way. I do not believe that is what he really intended. I hope he will clarify that because I would be very sorry to see him making that kind of criticism. I do not believe either body warrants it.

I, for one, am a bit mystified about the other legislation that is on the order paper having to do with increasing the number of members comprising the tariff board. I thought we had arrived at the period of development in this country when the tariff board should be increased in size because of the large volume of work it has to do. I am on record to that effect over a period of time, and I understand the government is doing that. The point I wish to make is that now that is being done what is it that makes the government so distrust having factual matters determined by the tariff board? What is it that makes them want to take away from the taxpayers of the country the right to appeal to this judicial tribunal? Why do they want this power vested in the minister? Arguments could have been advanced concerning the delays in the tariff board. But the purpose of increasing its numbers is to do away with delays.

The minister quoted a rather strange reference when he cited the Customs Act which is not before the committee as an example of arbitrary power given to the minister. Every section he quoted is carefully circumscribed.

In order to illustrate my point, I shall only refer to section 35, subsection 6, which says:

When the value for duty cannot be determined—

The whole premise upon which that section is based is that the value cannot be determined and it is, therefore, obvious that somebody has to exercise an arbitrary power. This arbitrary power was given to the minister. The Minister of National Revenue used that as an example of arbitrary powers such as might be used in this case without mentioning the fact that the use of the arbitrary power in this resolution may well be the means of taxing a citizen who would not otherwise be taxed, which is quite a different thing altogether. There is no such limiting premise in the resolution before us. If the minister will look at the provision he will see that it says the decision of the minister shall be final with respect to the following matters, and then there is a reference to these two matters which are of such a nature that they are the key to the whole decision in the case.

For instance, if the minister determines the normal Canadian consumption of the goods described, then the determination of the 10 per cent is a matter of arithmetic. Surely for the minister to suggest that an appeal to the tariff board is still valid on the 10 per cent factor is just a specious argument. Surely it is the minister's decision that is the essential point there. I would think that would be common ground, and I cannot see otherwise. Then the provision goes on to mention goods which are custom-made to specifications. I do not want to develop that because the minister did not develop it, and perhaps we can deal with it separately. I am quite frank to say I feel this is an improper use of the minister's power when he is put in a position to make this kind of decision.

I should like to make one other point. I made an interjection when the minister was dealing with the decision about saw mills, and the significance of the decision as to whether or not they were of a class or kind made in Canada. I want to point out to him that what he said may be true about saw mills in some parts of the country but not true about saw mills in other parts of the country. I think if he will examine the saw mill operations in this country he will find that what I say is right. I regret that I have not the decision in the power shovel case here, and it is some years since I have read it.

Mr. Nowlan: It was in 1954.

Mr. McIlraith: It is some years since I read it, but my recollection is that it is a very different case from the simple proposition put before this committee. It is a very much more complicated case based on a rather difficult set of facts. If the minister has the decision readily available I invite him to take another look at it because, although I put this forward with some hesitation, my recollection of it is quite different from the simple proposition he put forward.

I should like to point out to the minister what seems to me to be the difficulty running all through this discussion, that is the difficulty of generalizing in connection with a definition that has significance in a great number of tariff items, some items which really are of a nature that they relate to articles for final consumption as opposed to articles being imported for use in manufacturing. I should like, for a moment, to address my remarks to the significance of the change being made which applies to the kind of machinery and equipment that is brought in by persons intending to use it in the process of manufacturing articles that will be used in the final analysis by consumers who buy from the retail trade.

I want to limit my remarks at this point to that type of operation and I want to point out to the government that something here is being missed. We are in a situation in which I think it is common ground that all hon. members would wish our industry to be as competitive as possible. A good deal has been said about export trade. However, I want to deal with these articles where the final article is used internally in Canada and is not for export. Our competitive position is such that manufacturers in many other countries are able to compete more than favourably with us on price. Our costs must be a matter of concern to all hon. members, to the government as well as to the opposition. I think that is common ground.

This problem of the definition of class or kind as applied to machinery when it is imported has a significance that in many cases materially changes the rate of duty paid for imported machinery. In some cases the duty can be increased by as much as 22½ per cent. I think there are some such cases where it is that large and certainly there are many in which it is 17 per cent, 17½ per cent and in that area. There may be cases in which it is higher. I think I had one where is was 27½ per cent. In any event, there are cases in which the increase is in the area of 22½ per cent and 17½ per cent. That added duty on many machines used in production is an added cost of production. If these machines are of such a nature that they are used in making articles used by consumers from the retail trade, then this situation prevents manufacturers from getting started in some cases and in others it makes that shade of difference in the cost which prevents their being able to compete favourably with regard to the retail article.

In that context I point out the bearing the cost of the manufacturer's machinery has on the final cost of the manufactured article. The real problem that I think should be decided with regard to that type of manufacturer is whether or not he should be assisted in bringing in the most up-to-date machinery he can get for production or to get into his plant the very last word—if I may use a slang phrase—in machinery for production. That should be our concern. If that is so, consistent with helping our own machinery manufacturers—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McIlraith: I will do so in just a moment, if I may be allowed to continue now. Any looseness of definition that is capable of permitting careless or arbitrary decisions that mean that, because of the price factor at that point, the manufacturer is going to have second best machinery or—perhaps I should not use the term "second best"—machinery that is not precisely suitable for the operation for which it is intended to be used has real adverse significance to our economy. I for one have no apology for expressing real concern about what I regard as the impropriety of the course being taken by the government in this proposed amendment. I refer to new sections 2A and 3. That is the nub of the proposition.

Mr. Nowlan: In what way?

Mr. McIlraith: I do not want to give references to particular companies. I think the minister will agree with me in that regard.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Is the hon. gentleman not repudiating completely now what he said earlier in answer to a question I put to him?

Mr. McIlraith: Not a bit. That is the point the hon. member missed. That is why I am taking the time to try to clarify it. I think the hon. member completely missed the point in making a sweeping generalization or a broad generalization that was relative enough to off the shelf goods but which had no bearing at all on the disputed item.

Mr. Benidickson: The major item.

Mr. Nowlan: Is the hon. member referring to shelf goods?

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Mr. Nowlan: He is referring to the custom-made goods.

Mr. McIlraith: That is right, and other machinery used in manufacture. What I was suggesting was that the hon. member for Carleton, in his large generalization, was putting them in one basket and so on.

Mr. Benidickson: He ignored custom-made goods.

Mr. McIlraith: He was dealing with another kind. I think his question was a perfect example of the impropriety of making a sweeping generalization with regard to a subject which, by its very nature, must be particular and must be somewhat precisely dealt with.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I have never seen such straddling of the fence as the hon. member is doing now.

Mr. McIlraith: I am not straddling the fence. I am expressing my views and I am prepared to defend them. I think the Minister of National Revenue is aware of the problem with which I am trying to deal. It is of real concern to the country in general and, I may suggest, to his area of the country in which I think it is the honest wish of all Canadians that there be more development of industry.

There is this proposition to be considered. When you get certain types of machines for use by manufacturers, on which they are dependent for a product to be manufactured, one particular machine with some slightly different characteristics may do the job at a rapid rate and extremely efficiently whereas another machine, which is remarkably similar but which perhaps does not have the same raise to it or does not have the swing characteristics to it, will not do the job efficiently. In one particular case I have in mind the difference in the duty was 22½ per cent. If the ruling in that case was in accordance with the definition in this resolution the result would be that the plant would not have been established. I am happy to say the decision was under the kind of rulings that the minister's colleague described as erosion. It was treated as of a class or kind not made in Canada and the plant is now in extremely successful operation.

I want to go a step further and point out this consideration. Depending on the product being manufactured, the cost of machinery for the manufacturing operation can have a large importance in the final cost of the articles being manufactured. That is where the difficulty lies in this problem. That is why I am concerned with what I regard as an extremely loose definition in this new legislation being offered to the committee and for which the resolution is being submitted now. I am rather concerned about it.

It is all very well for the minister to charge us with having fears of return to interpretations in former days of Prime Minister Bennett and so on. I do not want to rehash that old ground. Admittedly there was a high tariff movement in those days and legislation was submitted directly for that purpose. I will not re-argue the merits of it now. After reading this legislation and having observed the minister's curious attitude in presenting it—I refer to the Minister of Finance—the only way in which I can assess it and size it up is this. I think it is an attempt to do indirectly the same sort of thing in that connection that was done in that other era directly.

Having said that I admit that there are difficulties in the interpretation of class or kind; I am prepared to admit that there may be some need for clarification in the light of experience over the years because the tariff has in it a great number of items and some sections of it can get into an area where there is a whole new technology and development and so on. So I am not saying there is no need for any legislation on the subject, but I am saying that, looking at this legislation, it is an attempt to do indirectly what the government is not willing to do directly and what it is wrong to do.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, before the minister speaks I would like to say a few words. I am very keenly interested in the minister's personal viewpoints when we are looking at a section that is giving him personally, as minister, something that he has not today, a personal discretion, a discretion that will not be open to review by the tariff board or subsequently by the courts. I am particularly impressed after hearing the hon. member for Vancouver East and, just now, the hon. member for Ottawa West. One can see immediately that the minister is taking on very vast responsibilities.

Knowing the location of his constituency, in an area of Canada that could perhaps expect its greatest economic advantages in the future to come from extractive industries, I know that in Nova Scotia there is a great interest in the forest industry, and so on. I want to know, before we get into the next stage of debate, something about the sympathies of this minister who is given this personal discretion. I want him to tell us about his sympathies before we are presented with a bill in this connection.

If he is faced with a problem as to perhaps the establishment of a new paper mill in Nova Scotia, how will he interpret this proposed new law? That is what I want to know. Will he perhaps say that he finds there is somewhere in Canada adequate facilities to produce paper mill machinery, because it is possible that as a result of that decision the cost of that machinery could conceivably rise from 7½ per cent to 22½ per cent on tariff alone. And we all know that anybody financing and purchasing this type of machinery expects a mark-up on their purchase after that.

We also know that if that machinery could be imported at a rate of 7½ per cent instead of 22½ per cent it might be encouraging to the promoters of this new industry in Nova Scotia. At 22½ per cent plus a mark-up on 22½ per cent for financing it might conceivably discourage the advancement of that new enterprise and production in Nova Scotia.

I think we should hear very clearly from the Minister of National Revenue, who under this proposed new law is to be given these wide powers, an indication of his leanings in this respect.

What kind of evidence is he going to seek as to whether adequate facilities exist in Canada? We had a rather vague explanation from the Minister of Finance as to what he would call a definition of "economic production in Canada". It was obvious that it involved expense to the purchaser of equipment of this kind and meant a very substantial advance in price.

Why does the Minister of National Revenue, as a member of the cabinet which approved this resolution, want to take personally this kind of responsibility that is beyond appeal to our tariff board and subsequently to the exchequer court or higher courts of this land?

I think that before we proceed further we should have from the minister who is going to administer this particular section an indication of what his preferences are likely to be when faced with a direct conflict between the needs of primary production in this country which must ultimately sell its product in a highly competitive world and perhaps demands that will be made upon him by some industry which might be able to sell the minister—if they are not producing it now—on the idea that they have adequate facilities.

Again, I am not satisfied on this matter of "economic production". Then I am still not satisfied that manufacturers might be able to produce these goods within "a reasonable period of time". I think this is a perfect example of the opportunity that is provided at this stage of the debate for the minister to share his thinking with his colleagues in the committee on how he would deal with some of these problems.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, I wish to raise another question which I think has not yet been raised in our discussion on this resolution. It may not be generally known in connection with the "class or kind made in Canada" regulations—which are the essence of the statutory revision before us at the moment—that this developed in a very clear way in 1936 when Canada decided to enter into a broader trade agreement with the United States.

At that time this became of the essence in our good relationships with the United States. Even prior to the opportunity for parliament to rectify some of the offensive restrictions that had developed during the Bennett regime prior to 1936, when we were entering into new faith with the United States on a broader range of trade, there were certain stipulations. One of those stipulations was set out in a letter dated November 15, 1935, on the very day this new trade agreement was signed. It reads as follows:

> In interpreting the words "of a class or kind made or produced in Canada", provision will be made to make it clear that the phrase "made or produced in Canada" in this context means "made or produced in Canada in commercial quantities" and arrangements will be made—

This was a pledge of our embassy at that time:

> —for giving adequate notice of the transfer, for customs purposes, of a product from the category "not of a class or kind made or produced in Canada" to the category "of a class or kind made or produced in Canada".

We know that to a tremendous degree our international trade depends upon working out proper arrangements with the country to the south of us. We know that the Minister of Finance, not only in his budget speech of March last but in his so-called baby budget of December 20 expressed some alarm that in this area there might be some risk of a diminution of our over-all volume of trade. The minister did indicate on December 20 and again yesterday, in his remarks in connection with the Customs Tariff Act ... Incidentally, I should point out to the minister, who is a meticulous man himself, that as he would be the first to agree we should really refer in our pamphlet to the Customs Tariff Act. The word "act" is not referred to there.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No; the statute itself is called the Customs Tariff.

Mr. Benidickson: I know that in connection with income tax we say the Income Tax Act and I thought, when we look down and see in paragraph 1 that the said act would be amended, perhaps the word "act" should have appeared earlier in the resolution. However, I do not want to be diverted by what I describe as an incidental point.

The minister took great pains on December 20 and again yesterday to say that in his view at least technically, and from the point of view of language and phraseology, he felt he could stand as a very honest man in connection with any negotiations in which he was participating as a representative of Canada with respect to our GATT trade relationships. That may be, but before we proceed very far I should like to have some further up-to-date information as to the present status of our all too vital negotiations in connection with GATT which have been taking place since last fall and which, unfortunately, we learned from the well informed financial press are not proceeding very satisfactorily as far as Canada is concerned. We learn, even, that there may be a complete break-down as of now as a result of which we would lose all the background of four or five months negotiations in connection with GATT. I should like to know from the minister whether he can assure this committee that if such an event is to take place it in no way involves any feeling on the part of our co-partners in the GATT agreement with respect to such a vital item with regard to the redefinition of what is a "class or kind item" in connection with tariff negotiations.

To return to the question of our trade relations with the United States, I would like to refer the minister to a comment which was made by Mr. Tim Creery of the Southam News Service at the time when the government hinted, in the speech from the throne, that it was intended to bring in amendments to the Customs Act such as we now have before us. Mr. Creery, a reputable reporter who is, I believe, a mutual friend of the minister and myself, said, writing from Washington, that these proposed changes in the definition "made in Canada" for the purpose of the class or kind provisions were causing great concern in that capital. In fact, the headline of the article reads "Terrible Concern in Washington". Before we proceed too far in connection with this particular statutory endeavour I think the minister should indicate to what extent he has found the new definitions do, in fact, offend the nation with which we principally trade, and I think the hon. gentleman should give all members of the committee an indication whether any objections have in fact been received from the United States in this connection.

In preparation for yesterday's discussion, the minister very carefully prepared, in writing, and then read, certain definitions which I felt were required by the committee in connection with this legislation. "Reasonableness", "economic production" and so on were defined. I do not think the minister today did in similar fashion indicate what was to be his view or the view of his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, when we come to the word "approximately" which also would seem to be a key word in the resolution which is before us. I should like to draw this question again to the attention of the minister.

I spoke to the minister this afternoon indicating that I felt he had not answered the question I raised yesterday with respect to his assertion that it was obvious and clear that in the past ten years decisions of judicial bodies such as the tariff board, the exchequer court, the supreme court and so on had very patently led to an interpretation which was contrary to what the minister thought was the view of parliament. The Minister of National Revenue to a certain extent dealt with that tonight. I think this is basic to our discussion which involves an apparent need, as far as the ministry sees it, for something new in the definition of what is class or kind, made or not made or produced in Canada.

I think the minister should go beyond saying that there has been an obvious departure from what the minister says was everybody's idea of what parliament had in mind a little over ten years ago in connection with a definition in this respect. I think he should give us certain cases to illustrate those which in his opinion are responsible for bringing forward this change in the legislation. Naturally we shall say that if a ratification is required the ministry should not be afraid to bring forward that definition or bring it back if we are persuaded it is a bringing back and there was an original intention that has been subject to erosion by judicial decision that should be presented before the committee. We still insist that any new definition should still be subject to an appeal by the taxpayer above the minister to the tariff board and to the usual judicial procedure.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, the questions asked by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River are of a bifocal nature. In the beginning the hon. member referred some questions to me and later on referred some to my colleague, the Minister of Finance. I shall deal with only one or two.

There was a specific matter raised by the hon. member in the beginning. This is a very easy matter for me to deal with. It is not a complicated question, thank heaven, or I should not be able to deal with it. The hon. member was somewhat concerned about what might happen to a paper mill in Nova Scotia if this resolution passes.

Mr. Benidickson: Or in Kenora-Rainy River.

Mr. Nowlan: Or in Kenora-Rainy River. I am applying to the reference to Nova Scotia because the hon. member specifically referred to it and Nova Scotia is a province very close to my heart. My hon. friend was wondering what would happen to a paper mill there if I should make an unfortunate ruling with respect to paper making machinery which might prevent a Swedish firm spending the sum of approximately $40 million it plans to spend there. I have no problem in that regard and neither does the committee because paper making machinery and all incidentals, components, parts and everything in connection with it are economic, and therefore we can make no class or kind rulings. Therefore this will not affect machinery of that kind going into that plant. There are, of course, other machines with which I could deal but perhaps that answers the hon. member's questions.

Mr. Benidickson: Perhaps the minister was not in the committee when the Minister of Finance dealt specifically with paper making machinery. I must confess it occurred to me at the time that a year or two ago there was a change and that paper making machines would not any longer be within the 70 items that would be affected by the legislation now before us. However, I do not think that was made clear by the Minister of Finance and perhaps I did get a little off the track in that respect.

Mr. Nowlan: In any event, Mr. Chairman, this is covered by paragraph 427, subparagraph 6. That was a specific matter to which the hon. member directed my attention.

Again there were references to the Bennett regime and so on. In passing let me point out to the committee as I mentioned before that the made in Canada rulings—whatever may have been the merits or demerits of the Bennett regime—the great majority of these rulings were made between 1936 and 1939 at the outbreak of war. I do not have the exact proportion but a substantial majority of them were made in that interval. That was when the made in Canada pattern developed and that was under the benign leadership of that great Liberal about whom my hon. friend directly opposite has recently published a part of such an interesting biography.

I am sure the hon. gentleman will agree with me that such an apostle of Liberalism could not be guilty of anything wrong, that he would never be guilty of high tariff practices and that whatever he did must have been right. Therefore, the most that can be said for what we are trying to do is that we are attempting to restore again the vision which Mr. Mackenzie King had when he had the made in Canada rulings enacted and which afterwards were eroded, subtracted from and diminished. I do not want to offend the delicate sensibilities of my friend the hon. member for Ottawa West in the terms I use. In any event, let me say that the original scope of these rulings have been substantially diminished. That is one reason —and I think perhaps the lesser reason; the other factor is that dealing with custom-made goods—why we are bringing forward this amendment tonight.

My friend the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River asked me about my own personal feelings with respect to this amendment. I doubt if my personal views would be of very much interest to the committee. I hope I am broad-minded. I hope I am sympathetic. I also hope that I have done a reasonably good job in administering these rulings up till now. If Providence should ordain that I should continue in my present office for some time and continue to make these rulings I shall try to follow the pattern established in the past, which incidentally, I am told by those coming to the office, is very satisfactory and compares reasonably well with the practice which was followed prior to my succeeding to the office.

As far as the questions about GATT are concerned and the other queries raised by my hon. friend, I think perhaps I had better leave those to my colleague to answer because I know the Minister of Finance must have dealt with that subject to a certain extent earlier today. I am not sure how much ground my colleague covered and I prefer to leave those matters to him.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, if I may deal with the balance of the questions asked by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, first let me comment on the origin of the so-called 10 per cent rule. It was in November of 1935 that a note was sent by Canada to the United States. At the time of the signature of the 1935 Canada-United States trade agreement. That note contained a paragraph under which Canada undertook:

> —to make it clear that the phrase "made or produced in Canada" in this context means "made or produced in Canada in commercial quantities".

It was pursuant to that undertaking that the King government in the budget of 1936 introduced what is now subsection 10 of section 6 of the Customs Tariff.

Mr. Benidickson: That is the "substantial quantities" item for order in council, is it not?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. I referred this afternoon to the order in council of July 2, 1936, P.C.-1618, that was then promulgated in pursuance of the authority conferred by subsection 10 of section 6. The point to note is that the undertaking which was given to the United States by Canada in that note referred to "commercial quantities". Those are quoted words. This phrase was not defined. The decision to implement by the 10 per cent rule which is now to be found in subsection 10 of section 6 was a decision of the Canadian government of the day and this particular formula was never bound.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, would the minister assist me. My notes have gone to Hansard. Was it "commercial quantities" or "substantial quantities"?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): "Commercial quantities" were the words used in the note given by Canada to the United States. The expression used in section 6, subsection 10, is "substantial quantities".

Just to complete my comment, Mr. Chairman, I had just finished saying before dealing with that question that the particular formula was never bound. Moreover, I would say that the commitment contained in the note presumably expired when the 1935 trade agreement between Canada and the United States was superseded by later agreements. It was never incorporated in any subsequent agreement.

The next point raised by the hon. member concerned the United States. We have had discussions with representatives of the United States government on this subject. They were naturally curious to know what might be the effect of this legislation. There have been discussions and I think it may be said that the representatives of the United States government are continuing to follow this matter with interest.

Mr. Benidickson: I am sure they would.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They have received the explanations that have been given to the committee yesterday and today, explanations that I am quite sure would satisfy any reasonable person.

The next point raised by the hon. member concerned the definition of the word "approximately". This is the key word in subclause (a) of the resolution. The primary purpose of the introduction of this word is to change the concept that goods to be of a class or kind must be virtually identical goods. Recent decisions of the tariff board have pointed to the narrow interpretation placed on the phrase "class or kind" to the point where goods must be practically identical before they may be rated as being of the same class or kind. This, we say, is a rigidity that was never intended. Under the new definition of the phrase it will be possible to restore and confirm the broad and historic interpretation which had been applied prior to 1948, with the result that similar goods may be placed in the same class or kind group. My colleague the Minister of National Revenue has given some specific illustrations tonight in that regard.

On this matter of the right of appeal; this subject, with great respect, has been quite misapprehended. The suggestion is that there has been some narrowing of the effective right of appeal. I submit there is no effective narrowing of the right of appeal contemplated by this legislation. I pointed out this afternoon the three matters in which power is given to the Minister of National Revenue to make a decision, and those three matters are essentially questions to be resolved in relation to statistical data. They are not questions that involve the exercise of some judicial process in relation to interpretation of words in a statute. I am sure no one knows better than the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River that on an appeal to an appellate tribunal that tribunal will not enter into a rehearing of determinations of fact. The ordinary rule is that there must be something more than an issue over facts involved.

There are lots of situations under the laws, whether of parliament or of provinces, where the appeal is confined to a question in relation to law or jurisdiction or mixed questions. All that the minister is given power to decide finally is in relation to those three matters I enumerated and those, I have said, are questions essentially of a statistical nature. My colleague made it quite clear this afternoon that under the present practice of the tariff board, when they encounter such question what they do is refer to the Department of National Revenue for information.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that a bogey has been set up in this debate in regard to the matter of limitation of the rights of appeal. The right of appeal on essential questions has been retained; the right of appeal from decisions made by the department, and then to the tariff board and thence to the exchequer court and the Supreme Court of Canada. This is simply a bogey that there has been some arbitrary power conferred upon the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Pickersgill: Assertions do not make facts.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would commend that to the hon. gentleman. "Physician, heal thyself".

I am hoping that the committee will see fit to allow the resolution to pass tonight so that the bill can be introduced. I do not think I need—

Mr. Pickersgill: There is not a chance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, then, in view of the fact that the hon. member of Bonavista-Twillingate says there is not a chance I might just say—perhaps it is unnecessary, in view of what my colleague the Minister of National Revenue said earlier—that the case may be amply documented as to the course of decisions to illustrate what I refer to as the process of erosion.

Perhaps I might just touch very briefly on some of these things. My colleague referred briefly to the decision in regard to the .22 calibre rifles. This is a decision which was made in 1950. The department had held that all .22 calibre rifles were of a class or kind made in Canada. The tariff board decided that the .22 calibre class should be divided into subgroups. They held that the autoloading type rifles, which were not made in Canada, were of a different kind from manually loaded rifles which were made in Canada.

Let us go on to 1952. Here is a decision involving fork lift trucks. The department had held that fork lift trucks of sizes within a certain range were of a class or kind made in Canada. The tariff board accepted this establishment of classes by size range. Now, Mr. Chairman, note that this is a case in which the tariff board upheld the decision of the department on the question of a size range. But what happened later, Mr. Chairman, by 1960, in the light of certain intervening decisions that had been made by the board and by the courts in the meantime? Then came an appeal involving truck mounted cranes. The department had held truck mounted cranes of sizes within a certain range to be of a class or kind made in Canada. The tariff board rejected the range class, indicating that individual sizes were to constitute the criterion. Here is a case where a decision of the board in 1952 in regard to range was completely set aside by the decision in 1960 under strictly comparable circumstances because of the change in the course of decisions in the interval. Does anybody in this house say that it is reasonable to think that it was the intention of parliament that we should reject the idea of a range class, and that individual sizes are to constitute the criterion as to whether goods are or are not of a class or kind made in Canada?

Here is a decision in 1953 involving a Snyder car wheel boring machine. Although it was agreed that the imported and the Canadian made machines performed the same operation on railway car wheels, that is to say, the cutting of metal from the hub thereof, the decision of the board was to the effect that the machines were not of the same class or kind as they operated on different mechanical principles. The imported machine operated through the action of a rotating spindle carrying the cutting tool on the hub of the wheel held stationary by a special holding device; whereas the Canadian made machine operated on the vertical lathe principle; that is to say, the tool bar moves vertically and does not rotate, while the wheel to be bored is held on a rotating table during the cutting operation. One might go on—

Mr. Benidickson: Has the minister anything there about the paper making machine which the Minister of National Revenue and I had some discussion about?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am just giving the decisions I have here. Here is a decision in 1954 involving the shovel to which my colleague referred this evening. The department ruled that while a two and a half yard shovel was not made in Canada, it was competitive with a two yard shovel which was made in Canada, and that therefore the two and a half yard machine should be considered of the same class as the two yard machine. The tariff board ruled that inasmuch as no two and a half yard sizes were made in Canada at the relevant time, such machines should be held as of a class not made in Canada.

An appeal was taken from that decision of the tariff board to the exchequer court and the decision of the exchequer court is reported in the 1956 Exchequer Court Reports, at page 379. The exchequer court upheld the decision of the tariff board. An appeal was then taken to the Supreme Court of Canada, and the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada is reported in 1958 Supreme Court Reports, at page 652. The supreme court upheld the decision of the exchequer court with Mr. Justice Rand dissenting. It was following that decision, and the protracted litigation that was involved in it, that a more definite turn was given to the course of decisions and therefore the tariff board from that point on felt constrained by the decision of the supreme court to give that emphasis that I have indicated and was well exemplified in this very narrow distinction between a shovel with a two yard capacity and a shovel with a two and a half yard capacity.

We say—and this is my final word—that this is not in accord with the intention of parliament; it certainly was not in accord with the intention of the government which introduced this legislation over the years.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I presume we are to go on with this business tomorrow?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, we will continue with the budget resolutions tomorrow. If they are completed we will take up the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. The forecast for next week, subject to change if circumstances so require, is as follows: Monday would be private members' day, the third one in the series; Tuesday we would commence with the resolution in my name dealing with the amendments to the Pension Act which were brought before the house before Christmas. If that is completed, then we would carry on with the budget resolutions and the legislation. Wednesday would be similar and we would take second reading of the bill dealing with the Pension Act and, if time permits, budget resolutions and legislation pertaining thereto. Thursday and Friday of next week would be available for the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

NANAIMO ASSEMBLY WHARF, B.C.—
SHEET PILING

Question No. 81—Mr. Bourget:

1. Did the Department of Public Works issue a directive to the contractor to use steel sheet piling of Canadian manufacture in the construction of the Nanaimo assembly wharf, Nanaimo, British Columbia?

2. If so, what is the cost comparison between this product of Canadian manufacture and the imported product?

3. Is it the practice of the Department of Public Works to insist upon the use of materials of Canadian manufacture?

Question

4. If so, is there any limit to the cost differential over imported products in directing the use of Canadian materials?

Answer by: Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. Using Canadian steel sheet piling driven in place, the price was $86,361.54. The tender using West Germany steel sheet piling driven in place was $74,901.60.

3. Yes.

4. Yes. Each project is reviewed on its merits. Canadian parts and materials are however used to the full extent to which the same are procurable, consistent with proper economy and the expeditious carrying out of the contract.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 3, 1961

The house met at 11 a.m.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

ANNIVERSARY OF DESTRUCTION BY FIRE OF HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Speaker: Order. As today, February 3, is the anniversary of the tragic destruction of the original House of Commons by fire in 1916, which was accompanied by some loss of life, I have taken the liberty of reminding the house of that event by asking the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring into the house the mace which was used immediately after the fire when the house reassembled several days later.

This is the old, wooden mace made here by the workmen of parliament which was used until the beautiful new gold and silver mace which we now use daily was presented later, in 1916. The new mace and its presentation are described in Beauchesne at page 331. It is familiar to all hon. members. However, I thought perhaps all hon. members did not know that we had two maces, the second being the one which is on the table today and which served the house as the symbol of its authority during the interval between the fire in February and the presentation of the new mace in June of 1916.

If I have erred, the regular mace can be fetched, but I thought hon. members would permit the liberty which I have taken.

AGRICULTURE

HOGS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUPPORT PRICE

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that the agricultural stabilization board has been authorized to stabilize the price of hogs to producers for the calendar year 1961 by a deficiency payment program similar to that in effect during 1960. The support price to producers has been established at $22.65 per hundredweight, national basis, which is approximately 83.5 per cent of the base or ten-year average price of $27.11 per hundredweight.

Under the deficiency payment method of support the board will determine at the end of the year the national average price to producers at which grade A hogs were sold, and if this average price is less than the national support price of $22.65 per hundredweight then a deficiency payment equal to the difference will be made to each registered producer on a maximum of 100 grade A or B hogs.

The action taken by the government last year in placing hog support on a deficiency payment basis has had the anticipated effect of eliminating the previous surplus production and greatly improving hog prices. Over the past year prices to producers have averaged approximately $1 per hundredweight more than the national support price. A year ago the price for grade A hogs at Toronto was $23.65. It is now $29, and has been at or above that level for some time.

There is a very real danger that present prices may encourage a level of hog production which could lead to heavy supplies and much lower prices later this year. While some expansion in production can be accommodated, a warning must be sounded to producers against overexpansion at this time. This situation is widely recognized, and provincial departments of agriculture and others are calling attention to it.

Under these circumstances it is important that the government should not take any steps which could be interpreted as an encouragement to greater production. It has, therefore, been decided to retain the national support price for 1961 at the same level as that of the past year.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the announcement by the minister is a repetition of the policy followed by the government last year in employing the principle of deficiency payments with regard to hogs rather than continuing them under the Agricultural Stabilization Act. What was said last year in this connection, of course, bears repetition now; that is, that the use of the deficiency payment principle will mean that the farmers will not know in advance the price which they will receive as they do with regard to products under the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member does not understand it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is a fact. I do understand it.

Banking and Commerce Committee

BROADCASTING

PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON RADIO AND TELEVISION

Mr. John Pallett (Peel) moved:

That the special committee on broadcasting appointed February 1, 1961 be composed of Miss Aitken, Mrs. Casselman and Messrs. Allmark, Asselin, Baldwin, Bourbonnais, Brassard (Lapointe), Caron, Chown, Creaghan, Danforth, Drouin, Fairfield, Fisher, Forgie, Fortin, Keays, Lambert, MacEwan, Macquarrie, McCleave, McGrath, McIntosh, McQuillan, Pickersgill, Pratt, Pugh, Richard (Ottawa East), Robichaud, Rouleau, Simpson, Smith (Calgary South), Smith (Simcoe North), Tremblay and Webb.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough, for Mr. White) moved:

That the first report of the standing committee on external affairs presented to the house on Wednesday, February 1, 1961, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING AND COMMERCE—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport) moved:

That the first report of the standing committee on banking and commerce presented to the house on Wednesday, February 1, 1961, be now concurred in.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have an objection to this motion that I should like to state. I shall try to state it briefly and remain relevant to the point at all times. I am quite concerned with the practice that is growing up of committee chairmen, when they present reports to the House of Commons, asking for leave to move concurrence the same day. The significance of that practice is that the report must then be read by the Clerk to the house. Depending on the length of the report, considerable time is taken up that otherwise would not be taken up if leave to proceed with the motion the same day was not asked.

Ordinarily the report is merely presented at the table and it then appears in Votes and Proceedings where all hon. members can read it. When concurrence is moved at a later stage the members have before them the report and know what is being dealt with. I venture the opinion that the vast majority of members have not the opportunity of hearing a report when concurrence is moved on the same day the report is presented.

Apparently the practice of asking for unanimous consent to move concurrence on the same day has now become standard. This is a small point. I mention it because it is a procedure that takes considerable time of the house, and that time is lost from what would be more urgent business. I think it should be mentioned, and I should like particularly to draw it to the attention of the house leader for his consideration. There may be, of course, and undoubtedly there are, cases where it is necessary to ask for unanimous consent. There can be no objection if there is some reason for it; there is objection when there is no reason for asking for such unanimous consent.

My second point is that the motion now before the house asks for concurrence in a report of the standing committee on banking and commerce. The committee report contains three paragraphs; first, that the quorum be reduced from 20 to 15 members; second, that the committee be empowered to print its evidence and proceedings. As far as I am concerned there can be no objection to these two paragraphs.

The third paragraph asks that the committee be given leave to sit while the house is sitting. Now, in certain years this is the committee to which the decennial revision of the Bank Act is referred, and special circumstances may arise in those years; in other years there may be special items of business before the House of Commons which would be referred to this committee and which would require special consideration.

We had a particularly bad experience in this committee some three sessions ago when the estate tax legislation was referred to it. On that occasion the committee sat while the trade and commerce estimates were first being considered in the house, and it will be remembered that trade was quite an important matter at that time. Last year we also had considerable argument in the committee, which I do not wish to go into now, when the combines legislation was being considered. Many hon. members felt that they were being improperly denied their right to attend to their duties in the chamber because very important combines legislation was before the committee and the committee was needlessly sitting at the very hour the particular matters in which they were interested were being considered in the House of Commons. Again that is a matter about which there will be differences of opinion.

The committee can only be a body having delegated authority from the House of Commons, and when the committee has no occasion to seek this special power from the house I can see no reason why it should do so as a matter of course. It is rather interesting that the mover of the motion did not even find it necessary to state to hon. members what particular legislation he expected to come before the committee which would require members to absent themselves from the House of Commons in order to attend committee sittings.

I would hope that we could revert to the practice of only asking for this power in cases where a committee is able to foresee the necessity of using such power. That situation undoubtedly arises in the committee on agriculture, in that it is necessary to bring officials of the wheat board and the board of grain commissioners before the committee. When that situation arises I think it meets with the wishes of all hon. members that these gentlemen, because of the nature and importance of their duties, should be heard in continuing sessions of the committee, and of necessity that involves the committee sitting while the house is also sitting.

A similar situation arises in the case of the special committee on railways which deals with the annual reports of Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines. Obviously there is a special need for that committee to ask for this extraordinary delegation of power from the house, but I see no reason for it in the case of the banking and commerce committee at this session of parliament.

I desired to place my objections on record so that hon. members might be fully aware of what is taking place.

As I understand the procedure, it is not possible for the house to amend a committee report. We cannot do that. I have no desire whatever to hold up the commencement of the work of the committee or to object to the other two parts of the committee report, but I propose to submit for the consideration of the house an amendment to the motion which I think is in order. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin):

> That the motion be amended by inserting the words "paragraphs 1 and 2 of" after the word "that" and before the word "the".

The motion would then read:

> That paragraphs 1 and 2 of the first report of the standing committee on banking and commerce be now concurred in.

I think that meets the practice of the house in that it is not open to the house to amend the committee report as such. Hon. members will see that if the amendment is carried the report will be concurred in with respect to the reduction of the quorum and the right of the committee to print its proceedings. The only thing that would be changed in any way is that the committee would not have leave to sit while the house is sitting but would have the right to bring that matter forward again at any time.

Mr. Speaker: My impression is that the amendment proposed is in order, but in case any member may think otherwise I should like to refer to Beauchesne, fourth edition, citation 323, paragraph 2, before placing the amendment before the house. That citation reads as follows:

> A report from a committee cannot be amended by the house, but it must be referred back to the committee.

That is the general principle, namely that it is not competent for the house to change a report or amend it. If it wishes to have a report altered, it must send it back to the committee with the request. Also in citation 320 the practice is reported in these words:

> A report may be adopted only in part or an amendment imposing a condition to the motion for concurrence may be moved.

This amendment purports to adopt the report in part without altering the report, leaving the third paragraph in suspense.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, whether or not the motion is in order is a matter that I leave to Your Honour to decide. The point at issue is whether a certain committee of the house shall have the privilege of sitting while the house is in session. This is not a new matter. It has been raised in the house on several occasions in the past. We debated it at some length last year following suggestions by the hon. member for Ottawa West, who gave the example then that he gave this morning with regard to some difficulty in 1959 over attendance in the house affecting the attendance in committees.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is the page number, please?

Mr. Churchill: Page 1434 of Hansard of February 25, 1960. Several times during last session the question of committees sitting while the house was in session was raised, as it had been raised in 1959 and in 1958, and we considered the matter rather carefully. On that occasion I pointed out that the practice is not new. It has been in existence in the House of Commons for many years. I gave exact references to the session of 1956 when hon. members opposite were on the treasury benches, and compared that record with ours in 1959. I pointed out that in 1956 152 days were devoted to the business of the session, and that on 52 of those days committees were meeting while the house was in session. I pointed out that in 1959, when we formed the government, there were 127 sitting days of the session and that on 55 of those days committees of the house met while the house was in session. I gave those examples covering two regimes in order to indicate that there was nothing new in the practice of asking the permission of the house for committees to sit while the house was in session.

All of us who have served on committees —and everybody here has had that experience now—deplore the necessity of attending committee meetings when the house is in session, when they would perhaps prefer to be in the house in order to listen to or participate in the debates that are taking place. The pressure of business over the years has indicated that it is essential to give this power to the committees, which can be exercised with discretion. It is up to the committees themselves to determine on what occasions they will hold their meetings while the house is in session.

The hon. member for Ottawa West quite fairly pointed out that there were instances—and he gave instances such as the wheat board, the board of grain commissioners, railway officials of the C.N.R. and officials of T.C.A.—when officials were called to appear before committees, and in order not to keep busy people in the city for several days it has been found appropriate to hold committee meetings morning, afternoon and evening, if necessary, in order to complete the examination of witnesses. That happens with other committees as well. The house in its wisdom over the years has decided that the practice of holding committee meetings while the house is in session is one that cannot be easily avoided.

The hon. member for Ottawa West implies that if a committee wishes this additional privilege, it should come back to the house later in the session and ask for it. However, that procedure would involve more delay—and unnecessary delay—because I am sure that if any committee not having the power to sit while the house is in session came back to the house and asked for that power, we should be obliged in reason to accede to that request. We might just as well do it at the start of the session when the committees are being set up. It is open to any member of the opposition who is a member of a committee to raise his objection in that committee if a meeting of the committee is called at what in his opinion seems to be an inappropropriate time. That has been the practice over the years. I see no reason for changing it.

The arguments advanced this morning by the hon. member for Ottawa West are not dissimilar to those advanced in the past. Yet in view of the figures I have given I think it is obvious that in ordinary sessions such as those in 1956 and 1959—and by "ordinary" I mean in the sense of commencing early in the year and carrying on to midsummer—the actual number of days when committees meet while the house is in session is about one third of the total. I am not sure of the figures for last year.

However, with the discussion that we had a year ago, I think the committee chairmen and the committee members are fully aware of the situation, and there is no question about the experience of the house now with regard to committee work. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we would not be able to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): As the minister has pointed out, Mr. Speaker, this is not the first occasion on which this disagreement has arisen in this house. I do not know whether we are gaining ground or losing ground. I notice that, as the minister stated, the matter was raised on February 25 last year. Here we are again, off to a blanket start, and it is now being raised on February 3. I therefore do not really know whether we have gained a month or lost a month. However, apparently we find ourselves in the same situation as that in which we found ourselves not only last session but in previous sessions as well.

The minister pointed out that the matter is not a new one, and he went back to previous administrations to prove his point. I should like to point out to the minister that, while it may be nothing new, certainly in the opinion of this party, if something is bad that was carried on by a previous administration, there is no reason why it should be carried on under the present one.

I think the dispute is a simple one. It is a question of whether permission should be granted to these committees to sit while the house is sitting, when it becomes necessary to do so, or whether blanket approval should be given at the start of the session. We are certainly consistent in our view on this matter. We opposed this procedure previously. We do not think it is right or proper that it should be done at this time. We do not think it is fair to the members. We are certainly pleased to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Ottawa West. I might say that we are glad to note that, contrary to the situation two sessions ago, the Liberals are now in full agreement with this group.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): There is just one point I should like to add, and it is this. The amendment deals with one committee and one committee alone. The remarks of the house leader dealt with the over-all position and the practice that had grown up in the past in all committees. The point that we on this side of the house are making and have made is that for this particular committee there is certainly no necessity at this time of the session to sit while the house is sitting. That consideration was pointed out to the chairman and the members of that committee when this organization meeting took place, for some of the reasons that were given by the hon. member for Ottawa West. However, those reasons did not commend themselves to the committee.

The only point at issue at the moment is the question of necessity. I think there is no necessity at this time of the session for this committee to take these extraordinary powers. There are exceptions in certain of the committees that have been mentioned by the hon. member for Ottawa West and the house leader, such as for example the committee on railways, air lines and shipping, because there the officials come and must give their evidence over a period of days. But certainly that consideration does not apply to this committee at all. If it did; if there were an extraordinary case which I have not seen during most of the years I have been here, surely the committee could seek the power of the house at the time. For that reason it seems to me that the amendment is one which should commend itself to the house.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): There is one point in connection with this matter that I think perhaps requires some airing and it relates, if we are dealing with past attendance in committees and attendance in the house, to the most active members in both places. For instance, in 1959 the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who we all know is extraordinarily active in the house, also had by far the highest record with regard to attendance and activities in committees in 1959 as compared with all the rest of the Liberals put together. But I think other hon. members are affected, such as the hon. member for Carleton, who is most active. His record in committees and in the house shows that he is one of the most active members. The hon. member for Calgary South is another whose attendance in committees and in the house shows that he was one of the most active. I refrain from mentioning statistical information relating to those of us in the C.C.F., perhaps for reasons of modesty.

In any event, I think this indicates that having committees sit while the house is sitting denies to the most active members of the house the right to participate fully in our affairs. I think the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and the hon. member for Calgary South are cases in point. Perhaps this procedure merely does nothing but cater to a degree to the laziness of some of us who want to get out of the full performance of our duties in the house. I could perhaps understand the desire of this particular committee to sit while the house is sitting if it was doing something or if it was engaged in some important activity in this particular session, or if there was any indication given as to what its activities might be. In this regard I might say that perhaps one of such matters might be the drug industry and the pharmaceutical houses.

Mr. Speaker: That matter is not at issue.

Mr. Howard: This is an important matter. This consideration would perhaps be some justification for this committee functioning as desired by their report. Apart from that, however, I think we have no other course but to be consistent and protect members like the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and the hon. member for Carleton, just to mention two, and also the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, who is another who is most active in committees and in the house. It is to protect their activities and in order to give them every opportunity to participate fully this session, as they did in other sessions, and not really to cater to the laziness on the part of some members and their inclination to shirk their responsibilities.

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to make any comment on this motion, but in view of some of the things that have been said I thought it might be well to point out that when the meeting of the committee took place there was plenty of opportunity for discussion of this matter, and the house might be interested to know there were only two members of the Liberal—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the hon. member not to deal with proceedings in the committee, because that would be irregular in debating the report.

Mr. Morton: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I did not want to offend the rule, but only to say that neither of the hon. members who were so vocal just now was present to voice his objections, worthy as they may be.

I know many of us in this committee are, as the hon. member for Ottawa West mentioned, somewhat freshmen. I am not the chairman of the committee; I am only presenting this on behalf of the chairman. But I think we have been here long enough to know that there are occasions when the business of the committees needs to be expedited; and we have been here long enough to know how the former regime carried on its proceedings. I do not think there has been any great injustice in the carrying out of the proceedings of these committees.

Banking and Commerce Committee

Last year we were very careful to try to avoid unnecessarily sitting while the house was in session. Perhaps many of the difficulties that arose last year were not so much because this particular committee was sitting during the time the house was sitting, but because of the number of committees. Perhaps there should have been greater co-ordination between the various committees when sitting.

I suggest that there are occasions when we bring witnesses from out of town, and we might find in the morning that we are not able to complete their testimony. It is then too late to ask permission to sit during the rest of that day and we find ourselves having to hold those witnesses over. It seems to me only good business to accept this provision, in view of that difficulty which is foreseen. This would prevent us being put in an embarrassing position.

I would urge that the house accept the motion as presented. Although I am not the chairman of the committee I can undertake, as a member of the committee, to see that we do not abuse the privilege that is given to us.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I am sure the hon. gentleman would not wish to leave the impression that those who were at the committee meeting did not protest. As the hon. member knows, I asked for the vote and I took exactly the same view as the hon. member for Ottawa West.

Mr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, had I been able to continue I would have been able to clear the hon. member for Laurier, because he did raise the question. But I did temper my remarks by saying that those who were most vocal this morning were not present.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the mover of the motion. Can he advise the house what business he expects will be referred to this committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question would not be proper, because it is not proper to discuss the business which will be referred to the committee on this particular motion, which it is proposed should now be amended as follows:

Moved by Mr. McIlraith, seconded by Mr. Martin:

That the motion be amended by inserting the words "paragraphs one and two of" after the word "that" and before the word "the".

The motion would then read:

That paragraphs one and two of the first report of the standing committee on banking and commerce be now concurred in.

[Mr. Morton.]

Is the house ready for the question? The question is the following:

Mr. Morton, seconded by Mr. Cathers, moves that the first report of the standing committee on banking and commerce presented to the house on Wednesday, February 1, 1961, be now concurred in.

In amendment thereto, Mr. McIlraith, seconded by Mr. Martin, moves that the motion be amended by inserting the words "paragraphs one and two of" after the word "that" and before the word "the".

The motion would then read:

That paragraphs one and two of the first report of the standing committee on banking and commerce be now concurred in.

The question is on the amendment. Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Pickersgill: On division.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost on division. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: On division.

Mr. Speaker: Carried, on division.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PERMISSION TO REVERT TO MOTIONS AT 5.45 P.M.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I make a request of the house. It is that the house give unanimous consent to reverting to motions at, say, 5.45 o'clock this afternoon in order that I may make a statement on a matter that I think can more properly be made after the close of business for the day.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the minister that 5.45 is during the private members' hour. Does the minister still wish to do it at that time?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I think we are all aware of that fact. This matter will only take about ten minutes and, as I have indicated, the statement is of a nature that I think will be much more appropriately made after the close of business.

Mr. Speaker: So that the minister may have some certainty as to the course he is to follow, is the house prepared to give him unanimous consent to revert to motions at 5.45 o'clock today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF JOINT DEFENCE BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister in a position to make any statement following the recent meeting of the Canadian-United States permanent joint defence board, which was held aboard H.M.C.S. Bonaventure?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this board was set up during the last world war, and meets three or four times a year. It has not been the practice to make statements concerning the business discussed at these meetings.

DISARMAMENT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REPORTED COMMONWEALTH PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. Is he in a position to say what is Canada's attitude regarding the reported suggestion that when Prime Minister Macmillan visits the United States early in April he will take with him a detailed commonwealth disarmament plan? Is the Prime Minister in a position to state whether this is a fact and, if it is, what is the view of the Canadian government in connection with this matter?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman has sent me the clippings to which he referred. I think that article reveals a lack of appreciation of the nature of a commonwealth prime ministers' conference. The conference meets for the purpose of the exchange of ideas, not for the determination of policy. Indeed, each of the nations of the commonwealth determines its policies for itself. I would fear greatly if at any time the prime ministers' conference were to arrive at the conclusion that an announcement of a united policy should be made. The danger of so doing would be to create internationally a concept of the commonwealth as an operative bloc.

Having said that, may I add that so far as disarmament is concerned all the nations of the commonwealth are united in their desire to achieve disarmament to the end that the load of expenditures which today rests on all nations may be relieved and international tension may be diminished.

In so far as the conference is concerned, there have been exchanges of views on disarmament, and the Canadian government would like to see included in these exchanges and consultations consideration of the role of the middle and smaller powers in disarmament. Canada, as all hon. gentlemen know, under the vital leadership of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has taken the lead in the United Nations and in the ten nation committee on disarmament.

The house will recall that the Canadian disarmament resolution, which the Canadian delegation will pursue when the United Nations general assembly resumes in March, had two main objectives; to make provision for an active role for the middle and smaller countries in disarmament within the United Nations, and to bring about a resumption of disarmament negotiations.

In so far as the objective of attaining disarmament is concerned, all the nations of the commonwealth are in agreement, but I would make very clear that each nation speaks for itself. None of the nations can speak for the others on any matter connected with the individual responsibility and independence of the nations composing the commonwealth.

COMBINES

DRUGS—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister inform the house when we might expect the report of the restrictive trade practices commission in connection with the pricing policies of certain pharmaceutical houses?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the director that he expects to be in a position to place his statement of evidence before the commission before the end of this month. It will be necessary for the commission to contact all interested parties for the purpose of obtaining their submissions with respect to the material submitted by the director. At this stage, therefore, the time factor is almost impossible to assess, since a great deal depends on the nature and extent of the public response.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the right hon. Prime Minister. May I ask the right hon. gentleman, in view of the statement today by Premier Manning of Alberta that he would be prepared to give full provincial support to any federal investigation in the field of pricing policies of pharmaceutical houses, whether the Prime Minister would take under consideration whether this is a subject matter which might well be studied by the banking and commerce committee?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I am in a position to give an answer to that question at the moment. The determination of what the banking and commerce committee will look into is naturally within the jurisdiction of that committee and the house.

PULP AND PAPER—INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION INTO MERGERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): May I ask the Minister of Justice if his officials in the combines investigation branch have under surveillance the much-rumoured mergers in the pulp and paper industry which have been dominating the financial pages of the press for the last ten or 12 days?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I am certain these reports would have been drawn to the attention of the director, and that he would have the matter under observation.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

FEDERAL PROPOSALS RESPECTING TAX SHARING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to place definite proposals before the federal-provincial conference on tax sharing when that conference resumes its sittings.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at the last meeting, as the hon. gentleman knows, I placed suggestions before the conference for the consideration of the provincial premiers, to the end that none of them would contend that they had not had definite proposals placed before them. At the meeting which is to be convened later this year the government of Canada will place before the premiers the proposals of the federal government based on discussions and considerations that have taken place at previous meetings.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Is it the intention of the government to follow the precedent established by Mr. St. Laurent in 1956, that is, of making that proposal public as soon as it has been submitted to the premiers, in advance of the conference, so there will be ample opportunity for study?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I made it very clear in the answer I just gave that the proposals will be submitted to the conference. Whatever course may have been adopted by my predecessor as prime minister, while always entitled to respect, of course does not in any way bind the present government.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Can the Prime Minister say whether the suggested date is acceptable to all the provinces? I have seen some intimation that it is not convenient for the premier of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Speaking from memory, I think four of the provinces have agreed that the conference should take place in February. No one has said it should not. The premier of British Columbia would find it more convenient if it were held in March, but has expressed himself as agreeable if the majority decide on the February date. Up to the present time I have not heard from the premier of Quebec.

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—ORDER IN COUNCIL RESPECTING HANDLING OF LUGGAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport and ask the hon. gentleman whether he saw a delegation this morning from professional Sky-Caps Incorporated concerning the termination of their services at Dorval airport. What decision did the minister take with reference to their representations concerning the order in council which was passed recently and which terminates their services at midnight tonight?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Yes, I saw the delegation, and they presented a brief. Unfortunately I have not had time to study the brief properly yet, but my department is considering the matter very closely.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask whether the minister or his officials have given consideration to the fact that the order in council promulgating the new regulations may well be an infringement upon property and civil rights, as well as contrary to the declarations in the bill of rights?

Mr. Balcer: The whole matter is under very close scrutiny. My officials are going into the question.

OIL

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Smith (Calgary South): I wonder if I may direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Last Wednesday, announcing the government's national oil policy, I believe he stated the government would take further steps to ensure the success of this policy in the event the targets mentioned were not reached. These included the proclamation of section 87 of the National Energy Board Act. May I ask the minister, in the event that these targets are not reached, whether he could advise the house at what point the government would be prepared to introduce the mandatory quotas under the energy board act, section 87?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I think I can best answer the hon. member's question by repeating the eighth paragraph of the statement on oil policy I read in the house last Wednesday, which is as follows:

> The government has instructed the national energy board to evaluate the contribution of individual companies to the general efforts of the industry, as well as to report periodically on the progress of the program. If this progress suggests that voluntary efforts are not producing the results anticipated, then the government will take whatever further steps the circumstances may require to ensure the success of its policy, including the proclamation of section 87 of the National Energy Board Act, which provides for the regulation of imports and exports of oil.

I can assure the hon. member and other hon. members that if it becomes evident that satisfactory progress is not being made in achieving the desired levels of production, then the government will take such steps as may be necessary to implement the policy which I outlined in the house on Wednesday.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to raise a point of order in respect to the question which has just been asked and answered. Is it to be taken as a precedent that from now on hypothetical questions will be answered by the government?

Mr. Speaker: It did occur to me that the question was hypothetical, but I came to the conclusion that the hon. member was asking for a statement on present policy even though the question relates to a future situation, and I did not object. The hon. member certainly has a point, but each case stands on its own feet.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I could raise another point of order with respect to the statement Your Honour has just made. Is it now to be taken as a precedent that requests for statements of government policy will now be allowed and may be directed to ministers?

Mr. Speaker: This was a question asking for clarification of announced policy, but the hon. member may use the precedent as well as he can.

TRADE

GRAIN—INQUIRY AS TO SHIPMENTS THROUGH PRINCE RUPERT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as the temporary substitute for the agricultural expert of the C.C.F. may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, and ask whether he has received a telegram from the mayor of Prince Rupert regarding shipments of grain to China through the government elevators at Prince Rupert. Can the minister indicate what volume will be shipped through that port and over what period of time?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I received a wire from the mayor of Prince Rupert. The hon. member for Skeena was kind enough to send me a copy of his question. I cannot give actual volumes, but I would refer the hon. gentleman to my statement in the house yesterday as reported at page 1649 of Hansard, where I said:

> I am informed that when all commitments are considered the Pacific coast ports will be utilized to full grain capacity until next August—

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CANADA-U.S.—INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED AIRPLANE EXCHANGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Does the minister entertain any continuing hope of being able to sell some CL-44 aircraft to the United States government in exchange for some F-101 fighters?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am always of an optimistic temperament.

Mr. Hellyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say when this matter might be finalized one way or the other, in view of its great importance to the Canadian aircraft industry and the nation generally?

Mr. Harkness: No, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STATEMENT ON REPORTED REFUSAL OF MEDICAL AID TO EMPLOYABLE UNEMPLOYED

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on January 24 the hon. member for Vancouver East asked me to comment on a report that the province of British Columbia will no longer supply medical aid to certain persons drawing welfare benefits, claiming that the decision was necessary because the federal government does not share the cost of this part of its welfare operations.

While I regret that the provincial authorities have seen fit to take this action, I cannot see how it can be claimed that any decision at this level of government has made the step necessary. Various provinces have programs providing medical services of one sort or another for particular groups of welfare recipients. These programs were developed by the provincial governments who alone decided the scope of the medical services to be available. My department has never shared the costs involved, though substantial federal payments in related fields help to ease provincial expenditures.

I might point out that the government's concern over the proper approach to the whole question of medical care is shown by the proposed establishment of a royal commission on this subject, as announced last month by the Prime Minister.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

REPORTED U.S. ORDER RESPECTING AID SHIPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of External Affairs arising from a news item in this morning's Globe and Mail to the effect that a storm of protest was sweeping the great lakes yesterday because of a United States government order which could divert hundreds of thousands of tons of cargo from the St. Lawence seaway and perhaps damage the prospects of paying for the seaway out of revenue. The ruling was made by the International Co-operative Administration, a United States government agency that channels foreign aid, which ruled that effective February 1, freight will be paid only on aid cargoes moving in United States ships. Would the minister comment on this?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice.

[Mr. Harkness.]

IMMIGRATION

RADIO AND TELEVISION TECHNICIANS—REPORTED ADVERTISING IN U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is in a position to answer the question I asked yesterday.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I have not yet received the report.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Rea in the chair.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Customs Tariff and to provide:

1. That the said act be amended by adding thereto immediately after section 2 thereof the following section:

"2A. (1) For the purposes of this act, goods shall be deemed to be of a "class or kind" made or produced in Canada if

(a) in the case of goods other than goods custom-made to specifications, goods of approximately the same class or kind are made or produced in Canada; and

(b) in the case of goods custom-made to specifications adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), goods other than goods custom-made to specifications shall be deemed not to be of a class or kind made or produced in Canada unless at least ten per cent of the normal Canadian consumption of goods of the same or approximately the same class or kind are made or produced in Canada.

(3) The decision of the minister shall be final with respect to the following matters:

(a) the normal Canadian consumption of the goods described in subsection (2), and

(b) whether goods are custom-made to specifications, and whether adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time."

2. That subsections (9) and (10) of section 6 of the said act be repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(9) For the purposes of this act, notwithstanding section 2A, goods may be deemed to be of a class or kind not made or produced in Canada where similar goods made or produced in Canada are not offered for sale to the ordinary agencies of wholesale or retail distribution or are not offered to all purchasers on equal terms under like conditions, having regard to the custom and usage of trade."

3. That subsection (4) of section 6A of the said act be repealed.

4. That any enactment founded upon this resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the 21st day of December, 1960, and to have applied to all goods mentioned therein imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, a well-known volume on Canadian commercial relations has stated that although most tariffs are highly complex the Canadian tariff has been described by the chairman of the tariff board as "easily one of the most complicated in the world." Indeed, a really comprehensive knowledge of all the facets of the Canadain tariff is the work of a lifetime.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Would hon. members please lower their voices when leaving the chamber. It is very difficult to hear the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Pitman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Because of the complexity of this matter my remarks will be very brief. We have been told that this amendment will mean no higher tariffs but is simply a matter of reclassification where—to use the words of the minister—erosion has taken place in the classification of goods of a class or kind made in Canada. We have been told it will affect some 70 items involving free entry or reduced rates of duty or drawback in respect of specified types of goods when of a class or kind not made or produced in Canada.

I believe that some of the confusion which has resulted has arisen from words that have been placed on Hansard during the debate. We have been told that this is not a high tariff policy, but the hon. member for Stormont in his speech as reported at page 1685 of Hansard commended the minister for introducing—

> —this present constructive measure now being brought in to assist and protect the hard beset manufacturers in this country—

If this is not a high tariff measure, and if there is no intention on the part of the government to undertake high tariff policies or a trend toward such policies, how can this measure—and I quote the hon. member's words once again—

> —assist and protect the hard beset manufacturers in this country—

The hon. member in the course of his remarks went on to say that there will be no changes in GATT arrangements or in trade agreements with other countries. I suggest that the proposed amendment, though not one which may immediately bring about higher tariff policies, is none the less an open door toward future higher tariffs. As we have seen, there are two methods of determining tariff classification relating to whether goods are of a class or kind made in Canada. The first is to determine whether dumping duties are applicable; the other is to determine the tariff classification for goods which are of a class or kind made in Canada. Surely this proposed legislation will change the entire emphasis and open the door to future higher tariff policies. Will it not mean that the same rules and much wider rules, will apply for purposes of the tariff classification as well as the dumping provision?

I think this is a most interesting innovation. If the government has no intention of raising tariffs, then this should be stated very definitely and some negation of the remarks made by several hon. members in this committee should be made. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate with regard to custom-made specifications, no Canadian production is necessary. The only question is whether "adequate facilities exist" for the economic production of goods "within a reasonable length of time." However, the question arises, what are "adequate facilities"; and what is "a reasonable length of time". Indeed, what is "economic production"? Does it contemplate a level of costs above that which would be competitive with the cost of imported goods? Certainly it must. But how high?

In his speech, especially in his remarks in reply to the hon. member for Laurier, the Minister of Finance indicated a belief that Canadian labour was in the vanguard for higher tariffs; that it was beating the drum or sounding the trumpet for higher tariffs. This is an entirely erroneous concept, and I should like to place on Hansard a statement from the very brief which was placed in the hands of the government yesterday morning with respect to tariffs. I shall read a very short quotation which will indicate the position of organized labour and indeed unorganized labour on this matter of tariffs:

> Where the industry is dying, or seriously ill, because of import competition, the situation is different. The obvious, simple, easy (deceptively easy) solution to the problem is to slap on a quota or a tariff stiff enough to stop the imports or reduce them to negligible proportions. There are times when this may be the only thing to do, at least temporarily.

Here is the long term policy:

> But as a general, permanent policy for dealing with unemployment arising from import competition, this simple, easy policy has several serious defects.

The next two or three pages of the brief are concerned with the defects of the higher tariff policy. This statement has particular relation to the remarks made by the hon. member for Laurier—I do not know why I should be defending the hon. member—in regard to the textile workers, who are looked upon as probably the foremost exponents of tariff increases. Statements made in this house in that regard are completely erroneous. I am quoting from the latest official publication of the textile workers. It is an open letter to the Globe and Mail in answer to an editorial, and it reads in part:

> For these and other fundamental reasons we have rejected the traditional laissez-faire demand for wage reductions and tariff increases in favour of increased international trade on a planned basis.

In my remarks I do want to indicate that the Minister of Finance has no fear from labour in this country if the policy of this government is one of lowering tariffs. Labour does not want a "beggar thy neighbour" policy. Labour does not want to export unemployment to some other country or to some other part of this country. We realize that secondary industry produces more of our gross national product than any other sector of the economy; that it provides more employment. But I think secondary industry is coming to realize that higher tariffs, which this amendment appears to be advocating, if the remarks of the hon. member for Stormont are to be given any credence, are a very fallacious argument for increasing prosperity in this nation.

Possibly there were times in the past when a higher tariff policy had some force, and possibly that was true of the national policy of the nineteenth century when Canada found herself beside the large, expanding and very aggressive industrial economy of the United States, so in a sense low tariffs were a serious disadvantage to an infant industry economy. But an infant industry economy argument no longer holds very much water in this country. The position of this group is that the trend or the emphasis which in the long run will direct our Canadian economy toward the establishment of a world market —eventually, not immediately—is the only thing which can be regarded as legitimate in this twentieth century.

The Minister of Finance has indicated that he is concerned with the dumping which is being carried on by other nations. Indeed, this is a serious problem; but I think we should never forget that what we call dumping may be regarded as a legitimate trade practice of the nation which happens to be on the other side of the fence. There is no reason why our use of an emotionally charged word like "dumping" should be an excuse for putting up tariffs which will create inefficient industry by raising the price of machinery or by permitting higher prices, because I think the Canadian public realizes that the consuming public pays for tariffs in a straightforward way just as it pays income taxes every April. There is virtually no difference, except that you can tell a little easier in the former case just where the money is going and where it is coming from.

[Mr. Pitman.]

In looking at this amendment I think we could very well recognize other methods by which we can create more stability and more prosperity in our secondary industry. One way would be by capital assistance on an enlightened taxation system to take the place of this emphasis on higher tariffs. Possibly the setting up of export and import boards would be a great help, and under some kind of a plan we could determine what particular industries do have a place in our Canadian economy, where the raw products and skilled workers are available, and so on. This, I think, would receive the support of the Canadian people.

As I have stated and must repeat in conclusion, the trend must be toward a world economy, a lowering of tariffs and other barriers and an increase in the prosperity of other parts of the world. The emphasis and trend which appear in this particular amendment must be reversed if Canada is to play its part both politically and economically in the world of the twentieth century.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, after listening to the hon. member for Peterborough, especially in the last few minutes, it seems to me there was no necessity for him appearing as a New party candidate. He has been talking Liberalism and nothing but Liberalism, and I commend him for doing so.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. gentleman adopts his words completely, then?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman makes his own speeches except when he finds it useful to refer to the previous utterances of the Minister of Finance, which sometimes express his thoughts better than his own, and this is going to be one of those occasions. Last night the Minister of Finance attempted to sum up what was said at some greater length by his colleague the Minister of National Revenue about this question of appeals. His words will be found at page 1697 of Hansard, in the first full paragraph, and I read as follows:

> On this matter of the right of appeal; this subject, with great respect, has been quite misapprehended. The suggestion is that there has been some narrowing of the effective right of appeal. I submit there is no effective narrowing of the right of appeal contemplated by this legislation.

There is no misapprehension about this matter, and the mere fact that the Minister of Finance says there is does not make it so. As I pointed out last night, it is perfectly clear, to deal only with shelf goods first, that up to now there has been the right of appeal on all questions of fact. Now parliament is being asked to deny the right of appeal on what is quite obviously the most important of the questions of fact. In other words the taxpayer, or any other party who considered himself aggrieved, formerly could go to the tariff board and have an adjudication, if he appealed on any of those points. He is now to be denied the right of appeal with respect to the normal Canadian consumption.

We were given a very specious argument by the Minister of National Revenue last night that this was a purely statistical matter. If that were true, sir, it seems to me that, if it is a mere matter of fact it should not be excluded from determination by any appeal. The tariff board should not be prevented from looking at this fact and from looking at the source of what is an alleged fact. The tariff board is an independent tribunal, or is supposed to be, and I think it always has been. Its judgments on points of law are appealable to the courts and public argument can be made before the tariff board, so that the public is let in.

What we are being asked to do in this resolution is to approve the introduction of a bill which will take away from the tariff board altogether that right of appeal on the most important single matter of fact. By doing so this will make a complete farce of any appeal, because the Minister of National Revenue is now going to be able to say finally, without having to produce any facts in support thereof—it is just his word that will determine this—what the normal Canadian consumption is; he can put that at any figure he likes, and that is it. That is what parliament is being asked to say, that the minister may state that in his opinion the normal consumption is such and such and that is it, and all you can then ask the tariff board to decide is whether 10 per cent of that quantity is produced in Canada.

The 10 per cent part is a mathematical operation but the first part, the vital part on which all the rest depends, is to be taken away from appeal. Why? I can follow both ministers when they say they do not like the way in which the courts have, as they say, narrowed the scope of the made in Canada provision. If so, let them come in here honestly and redefine that, but do not take away the right of appeal. I do not even approve of their redefining of it, but that is a separate matter. I am dealing now with this denial of the right of appeal in the most important single element of the whole thing.

Why are they doing this? I ask myself, why are they saying that the tariff board cannot look at this, the most important single element of all, in its adjudication? Why not? One can only suppose that the government has some reason for this, and some reason other than the snide observations made by the Minister of Finance about the tariff board and the courts in which he described their judgments as an erosion. "Erosion" is not a word that lawyers generally apply to judgments of the courts.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Are you speaking as a lawyer now?

Mr. Pickersgill: The courts are supposed to interpret the law, and as a matter of fact on balance I would rather have the courts interpret the law for me than the Minister of Finance or even the Minister of National Revenue, for whose objectivity I have somewhat more regard than I have for that of the Minister of Finance. But I think this is a position in which no parliament should ever put any minister unless there is absolutely no other course. The Minister of National Revenue has said there is nothing new about this. He has said that he has power now under the Customs Act. He referred to the power to determine valuation for duty purposes under the dumping laws where there is no prescribed method applicable to the case. That is true, and it is quite obvious why it is true. Parliament has laid down a lot of tests, and if none of these tests apply and somebody still wants to import the goods, the minister may decide what the value is. That occurs when there is no criterion at all, but this is a very residual matter and not an unreasonable provision in the circumstances.

But here we are applying this provision to the whole range of commodities that may become subject to the made in Canada provision. In the case of certain goods that are free under the tariff it would not apply of course, and that is also true of certain cases where the duties are absolutely fixed. But having regard to the vast range of our trade, why does the government think the minister should be given the power to decide this thing finally? I grant, of course, that the minister and his officials have to determine all these things in the first instance. That is the only way you can carry on administration, and anybody who has any experience with government knows that.

What we are objecting to more than anything else in this resolution, though we object to almost everything in it, is this eagerness to place arbitrary power in the hands of a single minister. Six years ago the Minister of Finance and other members who now occupy the treasury benches were very eloquent in their objections to certain arbitrary powers which they suggested the government of that day was asking to have conferred for an indefinite period upon the then minister of defence production. Under that legislation those powers could only be exercised at a time of the gravest national peril, and notwithstanding the argument that was put up at that time any lawyer worth his salt knows that if those powers had been exercised at a time other than one of grave national peril it would have been possible to take a case into the courts and challenge the government in that regard.

But here we are being asked to give a single minister the power to determine at his discretion, without appeal, something which is supposed to be a matter of fact in the normal course of the operation of our trade. There must be some reason for it. It is not just because it would be more convenient. The hon. member for Greenwood has often and eloquently spoken in the house about the question of discretion. He knows, as I know—I am not sure that many other members on the treasury benches remember these things, but he does—that the classic argument for discretion is speed and convenience. I think one can argue that there will be no additional speed or convenience here at all, but that is not the issue. The issue is that this is a power of final determination which it was not thought necessary before to give to the minister. Why are we being asked to do so now?

If I were of a suspicious mind instead of being the naive and innocent person I am, I would suspect that the reason the government is doing this is that an election is approaching and they feel that if there were an unscrupulous minister he could make these determinations in such a way as to give protection in a lot of cases where 10 per cent of the normal consumption is not being produced in Canada at all. All the minister needs to do under this law is to fix the amount of the normal consumption low enough so that whatever little production there may be in Canada is 10 per cent, and then the higher duty applies. It just makes a mockery of any determination, and I would think that any minister who has any regard for our constitutional system, any regard for the courts, any regard for parliament, would not be seeking, without any excuse except that it would be easier or that it is merely statistical, to have this power of life and death over a large part of the business of the country all the time. Surely the practice that wherever it is possible to do so there should be in the subject the power of appealing to a tribunal not under the thumb of the executive is a basic principle of our whole constitution.

Speaking for myself, sir, and I think I can also speak for everybody else over here, I will not be impressed in the slightest degree by any alleged precedents for this action even if they were Liberal precedents. Since they came into office in 1957 hon. gentlemen opposite, no matter what they do, say "Well, you used to do it". I would remind them and the people of the country that these hon. gentlemen, in making their appeal to the electors said they would change all that and restore the rights of parliament—that is what they said—which they said had been eroded by the Liberals. Now they have produced the very precedents they condemned previously in order to support far more thoroughgoing invasions than anything that was ever proposed in peacetime by the Liberal government.

It is quite true that the powers that were asked for by the government in 1955 under the Defence Production Act were extraordinary powers to which any reasonable person would take objection in normal times, but they were only asked for not in normal times but to meet a critical emergency at a time when the state of the world was, as it still is, very much disturbed.

Whether that case was justified or whether it was not justified, here we are dealing with our normal trade; and the government, through this resolution and the bill to be founded upon it, is seeking to take away a right of appeal which has up to now existed, or to take away an element in that right of appeal which would make the rest of the appeal a complete mockery. The moment the minister decides what the normal consumption is in Canada, everything else flows from it as a mathematical formula.

It would appear to me a great deal simpler and a great deal easier to determine what the production was in Canada. If you were going to give something to the discretion of the minister on the ground that it was statistical, that would be a great deal simpler to determine. After all, most of these commodities are produced in factories the location of which is known, and it would be much simpler. But none of the elements should be excluded from the review if there is to be a review. How can you adjudicate if you are told that you must accept as the truth any statement the minister chooses to make? I hope we are not going to hear anyone on the treasury benches rise in his place and say, "We are such honest and straightforward fellows that we would never do anything wrong."

Mr. Nowlan: We would not.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is exactly the point. I call to witness the Minister of Finance who, as reported at page 4524 of Hansard of June 7, 1955, stated as follows:

> Sir, hon. members, as I conceive it, were elected to this house to legislate, not to abdicate the legislative function to the government. They are elected to preserve freedom, not to open the doors or admit the Trojan horse of executive power into the citadel of Canadian freedom.

We of Her Majesty's loyal opposition have fought this kind of legislation, and I think we can point to some success.

These fighters of other years are now wishing to strangle the Canadian economy in a way that no one ever dared to suggest previously.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not think I have ever before heard such a distortion of the truth.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I say, Mr. Chairman, that the words I used are the words of the Minister of Finance, and if he regards them as a distortion of the truth, that is his privilege.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. I regard what the hon. member has said about them as a distortion of the truth. I refer to what the hon. member said about the minister; I regard that as a distortion of the truth.

Mr. McIlraith: Don't interrupt.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Finance can and will make several more speeches, although he concluded last night by saying that he was giving us his final word on this matter. However, I suppose that was only the final word for yesterday.

Mr. Lambert: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said precisely the same thing.

Mr. Pickersgill: To continue with the quotation of the words of the minister:

And, sir, we mean to go on fighting against this vicious practice.

That was five years ago. I would direct attention to the way in which he is fighting it now. He continued:

Let there be no doubt in the mind of anyone on that score.

I could go on and read from the preceding column other eloquent language of the Minister of Finance; it is much more eloquent than mine. I am simple about these matters. I have not that tongue of bombastic eloquence possessed by the minister. That is why I must use his words when I want to make these arguments really strong. That is why I must use his words when I draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that what we are doing here is denying something to a taxpayer or other person affected by this legislation who considers himself aggrieved. We are denying to him a proper appeal because we are saying that the tariff board can only use one eye, and that it must close that eye to half the facts—the important half of the facts, the basic facts—the facts on which everything else depends.

Why are we doing this? I am not going to impute motives, but one can only assume that the government has some purpose in doing this. Nobody is going to believe for two minutes, the argument advanced particularly after what the Minister of National Revenue said last night, namely that there were few appeals. There would be few appeals because in most cases I think these determinations would be quite reasonable. But if there are going to be few appeals, the argument that appeals take a great deal of time and that the procedure would be more expeditious largely falls to the ground. What I say is this. In a case in which someone wishes to appeal, he should have that right to appeal. That is what we are saying. We are saying that it should not be interfered with in this way, particularly when no valid argument, and indeed virtually no argument at all, is given as to why this change is being made.

There is another argument that can be made, namely that this abridgement of the right of appeal in the case of shelf goods is being made so the minister will be able to decide quite arbitrarily which are shelf goods and which are custom-made goods. That is one of the three things he can decide. I do not think anybody on earth will be convinced by the argument made by both ministers that the decision as to whether something is shelf goods or custom-made goods is a statistical question.

Obviously it is not a statistical question.

We can take a simple example. If some of us in this house go to buy a suit of clothes, we can buy them off the rack and we do not look too much worse than we would otherwise look. But there are one or two hon. members —and I will not mention their names, though I am sure the hon. member for Nipissing would not mind if I mentioned his—who are not in this position. I doubt that many shelf goods are made for the hon. member for Nipissing. This is a qualitative matter; it is not a quantitative matter at all.

Let me illustrate how this thing could operate. Maybe the ministers have thought about this matter already, or maybe some of their friends have done so. Suppose someone wants to get 22 per cent protection in order to start the manufacture of something new. Suppose he has a friend who is a potential consumer of these goods, and he gets that friend to order that article, or several articles, to specifications in another country, so they become custom-made. Then the gentleman who wants to make the article goes to the Minister of National Revenue and says, "I hear this article is being ordered. I have capacity to produce it. This is a custom-made article." The minister then rules that it is a custom-made article. It has never been made in Canada before, but it is a custom-made article. In this way person A gets right around our international obligations; he gets right around the law made by parliament and is able to start with a protection of 22 per cent to make something never before made in Canada, that in fact would normally be regarded as shelf goods. But if it were done in this way it would in fact be custom-made in the first instance.

That could happen. The opportunities for jiggery-pokery, the opportunities for corruption, the opportunities for capriciousness, the opportunities for favouring one person and denying favours to another, are put in the hands of a minister when there is no appeal on matters of fact in this regard. One does not need much imagination, in fact one needs very little imagination, to conceive what the difficulties are.

If this kind of loose language were put into our income tax legislation and the minister was the final judge in these matters, we would have a peculiar income tax structure in this country.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: These are the great reformers who were going to change all that, who were going to restore the rights of parliament. They were going to do better than we had done, but in the three years this government has been in office there has been more arbitrary legislation and more arbitrary conduct on the part of the government of Canada than there ever was in the whole 22 years of Liberal government.

Mr. Lambert: That is absolute and utter nonsense, and you know it.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is making statements which are absolutely without foundation or any semblance of fact. If this were not the parliament of Canada I would say they are absolutely untrue and would ask him to withdraw them.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister had better compose himself.

Mr. Nowlan: I will not.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can find statements made by the Minister of Finance which are far more extreme than those I have just made. I refer to statements which have been made by the Minister of Finance about the late C. D. Howe, with much less reason and much less cause than I have for making these statements.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Perhaps hon. members might come back to the resolution.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I submit, with the greatest possible respect, that I am discussing this right of appeal and I am drawing an analogy between what happened under a previous regime and what this government is seeking to do. I say that hon. members opposite will not find this kind of legislation under the previous regime. They will not find this kind of deliberate abridgment of an existing right of appeal in the legislation of the previous government. They will not find it at all.

It is true, as I said before and I repeat, that there are some administrative matters on which a final determination must be made. I am very familiar with that. I had a department in which quite a few of those matters had to be determined. I certainly sought, during all the time I was there, to reduce the number to a minimum and to increase to a maximum the number of things to which definite rules apply.

As I say, it is impossible to understand why, with respect to shelf goods, the government are seeking to abridge this right of appeal, unless they have some sinister reason for doing so.

Mr. Lambert: That is poppycock.

An hon. Member: That comes out of your associations in the past.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member says that comes out of my associations in the past. If that remark means anything, which I do not think it does, it means that the hon. gentleman is suggesting there were in the previous government people who did things for improper motives. If the hon. gentleman thinks that is a proper thing for him to say, I think perhaps it would be equally proper for me to say it about the present government. But I am not saying that about them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: All I am saying is that this kind of legislation would make it possible for an unscrupulous minister to do that.

Mr. Henderson: We have not any of that kind.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the hon. gentleman for that excellent argument and that excellent intervention. That is the classic argument of all those who defend tyranny. They always say "But we are good tyrants. You do not need to fear us".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is what you used to say, in effect.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I have never said that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You have in effect.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest that the minister find the occasions where I have said that in or out of the house. But I am saying it now.

Mr. Morton: You are trying to convince yourself.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am now saying that this legislation is tyrannical legislation. This is legislation conferring upon the executive the final power to determine things in one way for one person and in another way for another. I think it is an improper use of legislative power. If we have any self-respect in this house we will not give that power to the government.

I would also like to say something about the denial of the right of appeal in the case of custom-made goods. Why is the government so anxious to keep all this secret? Why is the government so frightened of having the decisions of the minister reviewed, if someone wishes them reviewed? I think the hon. member for Ottawa West dealt very persuasively with this problem last night, but I have another example right here in an answer given by the government to a question of the hon. member for Levis. It is question No. 18, which was received in the Votes and Proceedings office on February 2. The first question was:

> Did the Department of Public Works issue a directive to the contractor to use steel sheet piling of Canadian manufacture in the construction of the Nanaimo assembly wharf, Nanaimo, British Columbia?
> 2. If so, what is the cost comparison between this product of Canadian manufacture and the imported product?

The answer to the first question was yes, and the answer to the second question was:

> Using Canadian steel sheet piling driven in place, the price was $86,361.54. The tender using West Germany steel sheet piling driven in place was $74,901.60.

That is a difference of approximately $12,000. With that amount a complete wharf could have been built in many places in the province I represent. But the point I was seeking to make—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I could just complete this one point.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give consent to the hon. member continuing?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not going to take advantage of the committee to do more than complete this one point. The point I was seeking to make here was that of course this difference is not very much more than the 10 per cent that was normally—well, I am not complaining particularly about this case because I do not know enough about it.

An hon. Member: Then why did you raise it?

Mr. Pickersgill: The reason I raised it is that this power could be used, not intentionally—I do not think any government would be so stupid as to use it intentionally, but we have all had some experience of what bureaucrats can do, no matter who is in office—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We had 22 years of it.

Mr. Pickersgill: And we have had some experience of what some ministers can do in the way of delay. I am saying that if we are going to put a 22 per cent tariff on manufacturers' goods on the assumption that they could be made in Canada, and if we do that arbitrarily, we may very easily, if the price differentials are going to be anything like this example, stultify industrial development in this country. We could very easily do exactly what Mr. Bennett did with trade, shrink it and shrink it and shrink it until only the essential minimum was left. That is what we are afraid of in this legislation relating to "custom-made". We are afraid that it is going to reduce our productive capacity and our capacity to compete, or alternatively it is going to put an undue burden on the consumer. But even in this case, if the government are going to do this—and I assume they are, regardless of our views on this matter—why will they not allow the facts to be considered by the tariff board? Why not? What is the reason for taking away this right of appeal.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, in view of the forensic display to which the committee has been subjected for the last 30 or 40 minutes, perhaps I should say one word. We are to have the commemoration of the centenary of confederation in 1967, and I presume the pages of Hansard will be explored for momentous and outstanding statements which have been made. I am sure when that is done the pages recording the proceedings of the committee this morning, particularly the speech which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate made will be accepted as the greatest example of arrant nonsense to which the committee has ever been exposed in the century of its history.

One might deal with this seriously, I suppose, but it is so silly that I do not know how anyone could take the time. Lewis Carroll, if he had rewritten "Through the Looking Glass", could not have written anything comparable to what the hon. member was saying this morning; and I noticed that when he was speaking so severely he had a good deal of difficulty in refraining from smiling. It is a terrible commentary, if we were to take it seriously, on the associations which the hon. gentleman has had in the past if he thinks ministers can do those things he suggested a while ago.

As I said last evening, and as I say again now, in so far as the absence of provision for appeal is concerned the Minister of National Revenue has no more power under this clause than has been given to ministers of national revenue by the Customs Act and by the Customs Tariff time and time again, powers conferred by the government of which the hon. gentleman was a member.

Mr. Pickersgill: Conferred by parliament.

Mr. Nowlan: Some of my statements last night were perhaps a little too generalized. I said last night that all this information—and it is statistical information, almost entirely—was available to the public, that it was a matter of record in the files of the bureau of statistics, and so on. That was too general a statement. As the hon. member knows, a substantial amount of the information which passes through the office of the Minister of National Revenue having to do with imports, consumption and so on is confidential. We get information from importers and other Canadian businessmen which has to be treated on a highly confidential basis. That information is not made available anywhere else, and it would be contrary to the law as it at present exists to make such information available. The availability of such information to the minister on a confidential basis, in addition to all the other information which is produced and published by the bureau of statistics, is one reason the Minister of National Revenue is able to decide these matters, decide them quickly, and decide them in such a way as to avoid unnecessary delays and appeals.

There has been talk about ministers making arbitrary decisions, that they might take a figure of 2 per cent and make it 10 per cent. I suggest to the hon. member that neither under the present Minister of National Revenue nor under any of his predecessors—certainly not under his immediate predecessor—has any such situation arisen, and as far as I recall there has never been one appeal on the question of the proportion, the quantity. These are decisions made by a minister responsible to parliament, and to suggest that a minister could twist the figures around without the circumstances being known is something I cannot for a moment credit.

This parliament itself is the high court. This is the court of appeal in which we are standing at the moment. This is the court of parliament to which the minister is responsible; and if any minister committed 1 per cent of the improprieties to which the hon. gentleman referred this morning the matter would certainly be brought to public attention; there would be discussion and debate in the House of Commons, a matter of public record, and no minister who had any sense of responsibility not only to his own office but to his colleagues and to his government would consider doing such things as was suggested. As I say, this is the final court of appeal, and it is one to which every minister is responsible.

Other questions were raised on which I could comment, but perhaps I may call it one o'clock. I believe the few moments remaining are not enough to permit me to clarify what I hope are honest misapprehensions felt by hon. members opposite. There is so much misapprehension on the other side of the house that I should like to be sure what the facts are.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at one o'clock I had the floor. I intend now to occupy the time of the committee for only a moment or two. Frankly, I do not think there is too much merit in carrying on the substance of this debate for a longer period.

We have had various imaginary pictures presented to us by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate this morning. Apparently there is a plan on the part of the official opposition whereby the hon. member for Essex East speaking in terms of the typical gloom that characterizes the utterances of that hon. gentleman worries this committee about the dangers of unemployment and the people who are suffering therefrom.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have not spoken a word on that subject.

Mr. Benidickson: The hon. member for Essex East has not spoken.

Mr. Nowlan: I know that the hon. member for Essex East has not taken too lengthy a part in this debate. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, on the other hand, with a slightly different tone of voice worries about the Canadian consumer. Between the two hon. members they are attempting to create a picture which would suggest that there is something in the nature of a conspiracy on the part of the government which will result in prejudice to the people of Canada. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The Minister of Finance and I in our contributions in this debate have, I think, established to the satisfaction of every reasonable hon. member who is not suffering from a jaundiced prejudice of some kind that this is simply an amendment to a statute which will provide for the development of Canadian industry without any prejudice whatever to the Canadian consumer.

There has been talk about appeals, the powers of the minister and all the rest of it. These are all figments of the imagination. I sometimes think hon. members opposite must have read the memoirs of that supreme propagandist of all time who I believe died in a funeral pyre on the outskirts of Berlin at the end of the last war. In his book he said that if you are going to create a picture you want to create one so absolutely black that no one could believe that you did not believe it when you started to create it. That is the kind of picture my hon. friends opposite are attempting to create here.

This is simply a routine amendment to the Customs Tariff without any of the dire and sombre connotations which hon. members opposite attempt to relate to it. If you were to analyse the speeches of hon. members who spoke with respect to this amendment—with the possible exception of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate—you would realize how very little they know about the administration of the Customs Tariff. One hon. member started out by saying that tariffs do not apply to any goods which are not made in Canada.

Mr. Benidickson: Dumping duties do not apply. That is what was said.

Mr. Nowlan: That is the statement which Hansard will show was made. The statement was as I described it. That is in keeping with the knowledge of this matter on the part of most hon. members opposite.

Mr. Pickersgill: Who made that statement?

Mr. Nowlan: The record will show who made the statement.

Mr. Benidickson: As I heard it, reference was made to dumping duties.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is usual in making these imputations to apply them to someone.

Mr. Nowlan: I heard the statement made as I described it and the record will show it. I have heard many other non-factual statements made with respect to the application of the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff. On the basis of this one wonders exactly how much hon. members opposite know about the subject. I exclude from that charge the hon. members for Bonavista-Twillingate and Kenora-Rainy River who do know something about the application and administration of this legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister suggest for one moment that the hon. member for Ottawa West does not know something about the administration?

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member for Ottawa West was not the one who made the statement. There have been enough silly statements made in connection with this matter. I do not think it is necessary, as far as we are concerned, to prolong this discussion further.

As I said, this amendment seeks to achieve certain alterations in the Customs Tariff all of which are necessary and all of which contribute to the furtherance of the development of the Canadian economy, and all of which at the same time offer every safeguard to the Canadian consumer.

The flights of imagination to which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate ascended this morning were such that if our friends in the Soviet union or the United States air force could achieve similar flights they would not only have had a man in space long ago but they would have landed him on the moon and on terrestial spheres much beyond that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister is exceedingly poetic today.

Mr. Nowlan: I think it is time this debate came back to the elements of the situation which, as I said, are these. This is a simple amendment to the Customs Tariff with no evil connotations whatever. The powers attributed to the Minister of National Revenue by my hon. friends opposite in their dire forebodings are nothing like the powers which the minister has exercised, continues to exercise at the moment and probably will continue to exercise in future, because if the legislation is to be administered the minister will have to have certain powers by virtue of his position, by virtue of the information which is available to him and by virtue of the advice he receives from his officers.

We have heard suggestions about vested interests which could exercise some influence on the minister, the government or parliament. That would be a dire day and one which no one would like to see arrive. On the other hand, I do not want to see it as a vested interest of importers, or some of them, who by exercising capricious appeals could also have the same influence or a greater one than that to which the hon. member referred earlier this morning. We are avoiding both.

On questions of fact which are within the knowledge of the department, and to some extent exclusively within the knowledge of the department, in order to avoid capricious appeals and a waste of time the appeal is precluded. On all other matters the basis of appeal is as wide as it ever was. This amendment can be recommended with the utmost confidence by every member of the House of Commons to the Canadian people, knowing that it is in the interest of the Canadian people, both the producer and the consumer.

Mr. Pickersgill: I consider that I have been misrepresented by the Minister of National Revenue, but I did not want to interrupt his flight of fancy to take exception to it. The minister said that I had imagined things. I did not imagine anything. I read the resolution which the minister does not appear to have done, because the resolution quite specifically does take away the right of appeal in respect of "the normal Canadian consumption." That right of appeal exists now, and the resolution is asking us to take the right of appeal away from appellants. That is not a fancy. If the minister would take the trouble to read the resolution that his colleague is sponsoring and asking him to enforce, it seems to me it would be desirable. The ministers should inform themselves of the legislation that they are bringing before this house and what its alleged purport is.

The minister who is a member of this government that produces documents like the one that has just come from the Tory office called The Record Speaks presumes to talk about propaganda from any other source. I would strongly suggest that that be left out of this debate and that we stick to the matter before the committee. The matter before the committee is a highly practical one, and I would ask the minister to show me that this statement is incorrect. At the present time an appeal is allowed to the tariff board on all the facts, not on a selected group of facts with certain of them abstracted. The government is truncating those appeals by saying that there will be no appeal with respect to normal Canadian consumption. This is what the resolution says. What we ask is, why is the government taking away a right that now exists?

We saw the Prime Minister going back and forth across this country, and heard him talking about a bill of rights giving the people access to the courts. Here is this Prime Minister allowing the Minister of Finance to come in here and take away a right of appeal to the courts that now exists. I think it is time the Prime Minister came to this committee and told us why he, the great prophet of the rights of the people, is sponsoring this kind of restrictive legislation, giving powers to the executive which it now has not got. That is the whole point; that is exactly the point that the Minister of Finance purported to be speaking about in 1955 in the speech that I quoted from this morning. I am almost forced to the conclusion that that speech must have been written for the minister by someone else and that he did not understand what was in it, because he is certainly doing—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You do not believe that for a minute.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not be surprised if it was one of the efforts of Mr. Finlayson who understands a great deal more about the law than the minister does.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You do not believe what you say at all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Don't interrupt.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the minister says he wrote it all himself I will accept his word for it. If the minister says he understood it, then why on earth does he not apply it in this case? Why, in this instance, is the minister trying to take away a right of appeal which now exists?

To say that there are some arbitrary powers now, as the Minister of National Revenue has just said, is one thing; but here they are asking for more arbitrary powers, and to what end? I should like to ask the Minister of Finance, who is going to introduce legislation based on this resolution, if the bill that is to come up as a result of this resolution has been examined by the Minister of Justice and certified under the order in council passed pursuant to the Canadian bill of rights act, and if the minister thinks that this denial of an existing right of appeal that we are being asked to make here in this parliament is consistent with the bill of rights? I maintain that it may be consistent with the letter of it but it certainly is not consistent with the spirit of it, because what is being sought to be done here is to take away the right of appeal to an independent tribunal which now exists and to vest it in the minister, who told us—and this was the most incredible thing that has yet been said in this debate—that he will have to make his decisions based on secret information that could not be disclosed.

Mr. Nowlan: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister can look at Hansard and at what he said just before luncheon. If he will do that he will find that that is exactly what he did say. In other words, what we are being asked to do is to turn the Minister of National Revenue into a star chamber who will make his decision on the basis of secret information to which others do not have access, determining their affairs on this basis. That is what the minister said himself.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. gentleman's imagination is infinite.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman can read Hansard and see for himself. Why does the minister want this power; why does the Minister of Finance want him to have it? The only excuse the Minister of National Revenue has given us yet is that he can decide these things faster than the tariff board can. As a matter of fact, he has made some pretty fast decisions today. And if the kind of slapdash decisions are going to be made in these cases as are made with respect to the arguments made in this house by the Minister of National Revenue it will be a sorry day for the people who have decisions made on their affairs.

Five years ago these hon. gentlemen opposite made the rafters ring all over this country about powers that the previous government asked to have, to exercise in case this country was in imminent peril of its very existence, and now they come in here, these great champions of the rights of parliament and the right of access to the courts, and ask us to vest discretion in the minister so that he can exercise it on the basis of secret information that will not be disclosed to the parties, and to take away from persons affected an existing right of appeal to the courts. That is what the resolution says. I ask again, why is it necessary to take away this right of appeal?

The minister talked about capricious appeals. As a matter of fact when a member of an executive starts to talk about capricious appeals you have a pretty tyrannical attitude manifested by the executive. If we have any freedom it is the freedom to exercise an appeal, to go to the courts if we want to, not if the Minister of National Revenue thinks it is all right for us to do so.

The moment you start talking about capricious appeals whose caprice is being exercised? The minister is deciding what is capricious and what is not. He is not only arrogating to himself the power to make a final decision in this matter, but he is doing it because he does not trust the people. The people cannot be allowed—of course, this is a real Tory attitude—to make up their minds whether they want to appeal. Because the minister says they might do so capriciously they have got to have their cases decided on the basis of secret information with no appeal of any kind whatsoever. I say that this is the biggest issue that has yet been raised in this parliament. These gentlemen who talked so much about the rights of parliament, about access to the courts and about the rule of law—

Mr. Benidickson: They used to.

Mr. Pickersgill: —five years ago—

Mr. Denis: And the bill of rights.

Mr. Pickersgill: —are now seeking to abrogate the rule of law completely—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: —to decide these questions on the basis of secret information and to decide them finally on that basis. I was looking again at that speech of the Minister of Finance and I found another gem.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It would certainly be a lot better than this.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Carleton will see. These words are found at 4525 of Hansard for June 7, 1955:

> In those days parliament was a grand inquest with the right to inquire into everything and anything, but it is not today, when we see secrecy imposed by the government—

That is what the minister has just told us.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, different altogether.

Mr. Pickersgill: He has told us that these things are to be decided on the basis of secret information. The parties will not be allowed to discuss the matter at all because the citizens whose affairs are affected might be capricious.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What was the reference?

Mr. Pickersgill: Page 4525, June 7, 1955. It is that same excellent speech that the minister made in 1955. He had a great year. It was a vintage year for the minister. That was the year there was a grave emergency over unemployment, the minister will remember, and then there was an emergency over this matter.

Mr. Pallett: This is a sour grape year for you.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, I think the grapes are sour on the other side of the house. The minister went on to say on that occasion:

> This is what I hope will be my final quotation.

That was three or four pages before he ended his speech.

> Our objects are open and avowed. We seek no concealment, for we have nothing to conceal.

Yet the affairs of their fellow citizens are to be decided in secret by a minister whose decision is final instead of being open to appeal before a tribunal as such cases now are.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is contrary to section 6 of the bill of rights.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Essex East, who is an eminent member of the bar, says that it is contrary to section 6 of the bill of rights. I have not consulted the act but I accept his legal opinion.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That was not a legal opinion. That was the Martin bureau of statistics. He does not give legal opinions when he is not paid for them.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will leave it to the Minister of Finance to discuss this matter with his colleague at the bar. It is not my intention to discuss it. I ask the question, and I expect the minister to answer it, whether or not he has complied with the provisions in the bill of rights and the order in council recently made under the power in the bill of rights with regard to having his bill examined by the Minister of Justice and certified that it is not contrary to the bill of rights.

Mr. Benidickson: The Prime Minister should come in and tell us about that.

Mr. Pickersgill: We really ought to have that great apostle of the rights of the citizens, the Prime Minister, come in here and tell us why his government is sponsoring legislation to take away the existing right of appeal to the tariff board and the courts.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Does he contend that the right of appeal in all cases must be absolute? If so, does he suggest that we should repeal the provisions of the Supreme Court Act which limit appeals on a monetary basis and for which his government was responsible?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Carleton has asked a question which I am going to answer very directly. Any appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada is from a court of law, not from a minister. That is the first thing. There has already been an adjudication before an independent tribunal and it is quite reasonable when there has been a trial in a court that only certain kinds of cases should be appealed. I would have thought any lawyer would know that well enough that he would not have to ask an unlearned person that question. I do not say that there has to be an appeal in every case but I do say—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Where do you limit it?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. member for Carleton, having asked his question, would allow me to complete my answer, and I might point out that I am answering his question and not trying to evade it as members on the treasury benches do with our questions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Particularly the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pickersgill: I say that every administrative decision affecting the rights of a citizen should be subject to an appeal.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Why did you not do something about it in 22 years?

Mr. Pickersgill: We did a great deal about it.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Not a thing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You closed the door. That is what you did. You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest that the Minister of Finance, who once more does not like my line of argument and is trying to divert me—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is absolutely absurd.

Mr. Pickersgill: —take a look at the Regulations Act. As the hon. member for Essex East has reminded me, this is a determination which involves taxation and, indeed, imposes taxation or is capable of imposing new or higher taxation. To use the minister's own words, that taxation is to be at the caprice of the Minister of National Revenue, not even the Minister of Finance who has the constitutional function of recommending the scale of taxation. It is to be at the sheer caprice of the Minister of National Revenue who, if he wants to, can rig the figures in such a way as to have one thing rather than another.

If they are honest, open and aboveboard about this, why do they want to place themselves in a position where they will be open to this kind of suspicion?

Mr. Benidickson: They want back-room power.

Mr. Pickersgill: As the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has just said, unless they want to carry on some back-room activities it is hard to see why they wish to do this. In any event, parliament should not agree to it. In this year of grace 1961, year 1 of the Diefenbaker bill of rights, parliament should not be taking away from the people of Canada a right of appeal to the courts that they now have, and that is what the minister is asking us to do.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, there may be occasions in this house when the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate talks rationally—

An hon. Member: Very seldom.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —but today was not one of such occasions. We have listened this morning and again this afternoon to about as hysterical and irrational a perversion of facts as this house is likely to be subjected to at any time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am going to rise on a question of privilege. It is a well known rule of the house that one does not impute motives. I did not impute any motives in what I said—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and I suggest that the minister, instead of imputing motives to me, deal with my arguments.

Mr. Benidickson: And not get hysterical.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I did not touch on the subject of motives at all. I was dealing with the approach of the hon. member in what he calls his argument and which I would call a perversion of the facts and with the way he has gone about that presentation which I say was a most irrational one. There are some subjects on which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate just has a blind spot. He sees red any time anything is mentioned of that nature. I have observed before and have noticed in the course of every budget debate that whenever we are discussing a subject related to the Customs Tariff or the Customs Act we run into one of those areas where the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate casts aside all pretence of rationality, simply sees red and then engages in one of these utterly irrational diatribes.

Mr. McIlraith: Tell us about the time you had to be ejected from the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is not new on the part of the hon. member. I will point out, without these interruptions from the sepulchral tones of the hon. member for Ottawa West, that the observations of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate—

Mr. McIlraith: You are sensitive about the flag.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): More reverberations from the same sepulchral source. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has this subject of appeal on the brain now. He has discarded entirely the calm, constructive and indeed instructive observations on this subject by my colleague the Minister of National Revenue. He has cast them entirely aside and he talks about something that has only a faint resemblance to the terms of the bill or the course of this debate and he drags in, as though it had some pretence of relevancy, observations that were appropriately made in a debate in 1955.

Let me make it clear that I take back not one syllable of what I uttered in 1955 about the matter there and then under discussion. Every word I uttered at that time was uttered with abundant justification, and I think history has vindicated what was said on that occasion.

At that time I had a good deal to say about depriving parliament of its rights. The measure then under discussion was entirely different from the measure that is before the committee at the present time. I will briefly, Mr. Chairman, read certain sections from the Defence Production Act which was then the subject of debate and I will ask hon. members if what the government at that time was seeking to do has the slightest resemblance to the measure now being debated in this chamber.

The hon. member seeks to take my words uttered in 1955 with respect to the proposed extension of the Defence Production Act and relate them to the measure now before the committee. The situations do not fit together at all. Here are sections that were in that act then under debate in 1955 which the government of that day was asking parliament to extend in the circumstances of 1955. There was no national emergency then as applied to the safety of the realm. There was no war or insurrection, real or imminent, at that time. However, that government of which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was then a member—I think he was then the junior member of that cabinet—asked parliament to extend this power in peacetime under the circumstances then existing.

Here are just a few of the powers they were asking parliament to confer on the minister of defence production at that time. In case you think I am reading the most sweeping of the powers first, let me say that they grow worse in this case as we proceed. I shall read just three sections. There are others, but I shall not extend the debate:

> 11. The minister shall examine into, organize, mobilize and conserve the resources of Canada contributory to, and the sources of supply of, defence supplies and the agencies and facilities available for the supply of the same and for the construction of defence projects and shall explore, estimate and provide for the fulfilment of the needs, present and prospective, of the government and the community in respect thereto and generally shall take steps to mobilize, conserve and co-ordinate all economic and industrial facilities in respect of defence supplies and defence projects and the supply or construction thereof.

That is one section.

Mr. Pickersgill: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The time was 1955 when the Liberal government wanted to have this carte blanche extension of these sweeping powers. Next I read section 14 of that measure:

14. The minister may, on behalf of Her Majesty and subject to the provisions of this act, acquire, store, maintain and transport and sell, exchange or otherwise dispose of such materials or substances as may be designated by the governor in council as materials or substances essential to the needs of the community of which it is advisable to maintain stocks to safeguard against possible shortages thereof.

They said they had to have those powers in 1955 and we fought them for three weeks in this House of Commons. It was an honourable struggle that in the end was crowned with a measure of success. Here is section 15, Mr. Chairman:

15. The minister may, on behalf of Her Majesty and subject to the provisions of this act,

(a) buy or otherwise acquire, utilize, store, transport, sell, exchange or otherwise dispose of defence supplies;

(b) manufacture or otherwise produce, finish, assemble, process, develop, repair, maintain or service defence supplies or manage and operate facilities therefor;

(c) construct or acquire defence projects and sell, exchange or otherwise dispose of them;

(d) arrange for the performance of professional or commercial services;

(e) purchase or otherwise acquire, sell, exchange or otherwise dispose of real or personal property or any interest therein which, in the opinion of the minister, is or is likely to be necessary or desirable for any of the purposes mentioned in paragraph (a), (b) or (c);

(f) make loans or advances to or guarantee repayment of loans or advances made to a person for the purpose of providing assistance for the construction, acquisition, extension or improvement of capital equipment or works by, or to provide working capital for, that person for the manufacture, production, finishing, assembling, processing, development, storage, transportation, repairing, maintenance or servicing of defence supplies or for the construction or operation of defence projects or by way of advance payment on account of or to enable that person to carry out any contract entered into with the minister under this act or any defence contract; and

(g) do all such things as appear to the minister to be incidental to or necessary or expedient to the matters mentioned in the foregoing provisions of this section or as may be authorized by the governor in council with respect to the procurement, construction or disposal of defence supplies or defence projects.

Those are some of the powers which that measure conferred upon one man, namely the then minister of defence production. In 1955, a year of peace, parliament was asked to extend those sweeping powers, that vesting in one man of powers that were broad enough to put the whole economy of Canada within his power. That is the kind of legislation that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate thought parliament should pass not in time of war but in a year of peace, namely 1955.

We have to compare that with what is being asked here today, with the right of appeal observed.

It is quite obvious that this has been just about as complete a demonstration as is possible of an hon. member of this House of Commons talking out of both sides of his mouth. There was plenty of reason why parliament should have resisted that attempt in 1955 to take sweeping powers unto one man from parliament. That legislation does not bear any resemblance whatsoever, except in a lurid imagination, to what is now under debate in this committee.

The suggestion was made that parliament should do the legislating. That is the essence of the measure now before the House of Commons. I have pointed out that in legislation passed by parliament in 1936, and introduced by a Liberal government, the power was taken under the governor in council to fix the percentage that should be taken as the normal Canadian consumption for the purpose of determining whether goods should be deemed of a class or kind made in Canada. They gave that power to the governor in council. That was not having parliament legislate. That was a case of having parliament confer a power upon the government, and they proceeded to use that power. They passed the order in council in July, 1936 and it has remained in effect ever since.

The measure now before the committee seeks to give that power back to parliament and to have parliament do the legislating in terms of the fixing of the percentage. Is there no limit to the amount of distortion that has been imposed upon this House of Commons? The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate I think has reached the acme today, the nadir.

Mr. Pickersgill: Those words mean the opposite of one another.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. I have put the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate at both ends, depending on which way you look at the matter.

Mr. Benidickson: On second thought.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In terms of crescendo and shrieks he certainly rose to the top. In terms of trying to put off on parliament an argument that is completely transparent and devoid of fact to support it I think he hit the bottom or the nadir.

An hon. Member: A doubleheader at the same time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member talks about appeals with great gusto. He talks about them with more gusto than knowledge.

If he had pursued his studies in the law a little further he would not have talked in this unlimited way.

There are not very many cases in any realm within the law where a right of appeal is unlimited. Appellate tribunals do not review findings of fact as long as there is any evidence whatever to support the findings of the tribunal.

Mr. Pickersgill: From another court.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They do not inquire into the sufficiency as long as there is evidence to support the finding of fact. On appeal they will not open the determination of facts and they will go on to determine the appeal in the light of other questions. That is the ordinary rule. There are many, many cases where there are specific limitations imposed on a right of appeal. Sometimes it is on the jurisdictional aspect; sometimes it is in terms of the amount involved. There are many cases under statutes both of Canada and the provinces where the scope of appeal is limited.

I have pointed out that we do not take away the right of appeal here at all. If the hon. member had approached this rationally he might have said, "There is some limitation on the scope of appeal in relation to particular findings related to areas of fact". But he is not content to do that. He talks in these irrational terms as though the right of appeal had been taken away.

The right of appeal is not taken away and as to the alleged narrowing of the right of appeal, as I pointed out last night, it is not a matter of substance at all. The effective right has not been taken away. When the tariff board hears appeals it takes the position that the onus is on the appellant to show that the department is wrong. I also pointed out, as did my colleague the Minister of National Revenue last night, that in these circumstances we are dealing with matters involving a statistical determination and evidence that is available on a confidential basis, because it comes from industries, to the Department of National Revenue. It is not available to the public.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate then quotes statements that have been made on the matter of secrecy and distorts those out of all recognition. He bandied these words around today, "If the ministers were honest in doing", this and that. I am going to appeal for a little intellectual honesty in the approach to this question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think you might well.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. member might observe very carefully what I am suggesting in this regard, because we have had enough, surely, of his attempts—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would permit me to ask a question, since he is talking about intellectual honesty. The minister was talking about appeals and about the limitation of appeals to questions of law in many cases. When he was talking about those matters, was he not talking about an appeal from one court of law to another, and not an appeal from an administrative decision of a minister to the court of first resort? They are entirely different things. I have never before heard any suggestion that this kind of appeal from an administrative decision would be limited to some of the facts and would not include all of them.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is just getting himself in deeper all the time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Answer that question. Never mind whether I am getting myself in deeper.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is this a schoolteacher who is holding forth now, Mr. Chairman, a professor?

An hon. Member: A Sunday school teacher.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I am just a learner trying to learn from the great instructor who does not seem to be able to instruct.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Then may I tell the hon. member that he will never learn if he keeps on talking.

Mr. Benidickson: That provides no answer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The only chance for him to learn, Mr. Chairman, is for him to listen. We are certainly getting an interesting response from hon. members opposite; they are coming to life. The hon. member was talking about appeals from administrative decisions. With great interest and great fervour he has undertaken to deliver himself of a legal judgment in this matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; I asked a question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let me tell him, in relation to administrative decisions made at government level, that there are relatively few appeals provided for them because these, under our system of government, are the responsibility of government and of ministers. That is a responsibility for which they are answerable on the floor of the House of Commons. That is our system. There are not very many of them at all that are open to appeal to courts, boards or tribunals of that nature. Ministers on these benches are bound to be making administrative decisions every day.

There are very few of them that are open to appeal to any court other than the high court of parliament.

Mr. Benidickson: Does not the bill of rights cure all this?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The bill of rights cures many things but it does not claim to cure the woeful and abysmal misunderstanding on the part of hon. members opposite. When they talk about having parliament do the legislating, let me point out that an appeal is not a legislative act at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: The provision for appeal is.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The provision for appeal is if you have it written into the statute. That would be legislation. But the hon. member was talking about something being taken away from parliament. He is so befuddled that he really does not remember very clearly what he did say.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a deliberate misrepresentation of what I said. What I said was that this right was being taken away from the citizens, not from parliament at all.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member says that that is a deliberate misrepresentation. That is an offence against the rules of the house. The hon. member has done that before.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will withdraw the word "deliberate" and substitute the word "ignorant".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member thinks he is adding to his stock of self-satisfaction in that way, he is welcome to it. There are not very many others who would, I think, find their measure of self-satisfaction added to so cheaply. I repeat that the hon. member talked about something being taken away from parliament. That is what he was talking about in relation to this question of appeal.

Mr. Pickersgill: No. I was talking about a right of appeal being taken away from the citizens.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The record will bear out precisely what I have said. This is not a matter of taking away anything from parliament; this is a case of asking parliament to legislate. The right of appeal is not taken away. The hon. member is apparently still suffering from the hallucinations that were evidenced in the irrationality of his remarks this morning and this afternoon. Nothing has been taken away from parliament, and we say that a good deal is being restored to parliament—

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not what I said at all.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —by reason of the fact that the power conferred by section 6, subsection 10, of the Customs Tariff on the governor in council is now to be repealed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I never even discussed that question, so do not think you are replying to me.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member cannot restrain himself; he has completely lost control of himself now. Of course he did not mention this section. He tried to make an argument without reference to this section because he knew his argument was completely contradicted by section 6, subsection 10.

Therefore I say that the hon. member has put on a strange act here today, but for him not altogether unusual. He has not hesitated to impute all kinds of purposes to the government. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the purpose of the government in introducing this legislation is to provide a much more workable form of legislation and to restore to Canadian producers and Canadian workmen the benefit of such provision as parliament certainly intended they should have under these statutory words and that they did have until this past decade.

What are the other reasons for placing these decisions based upon statistical analysis under the jurisdiction of the minister? I have given those again and again. We have pointed out the nature of these matters, what is involved in gathering the information, and we have also drawn attention to the benefits that this legislation will bring to the business community.

That apparently means nothing to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. We have had these long delays before. But it will be approved by the business community that the proposal now before the house will provide an opportunity for establishing with great speed, celerity and certainty their position under the law in relation to situations in which they involve themselves in liability in respect of customs duty.

Those are the purposes, and those are all the purposes involved here. The argument as to arbitrary powers simply has no basis in fact. My colleague the Minister of National Revenue has drawn attention to any number of situations in the legislation introduced by the Liberal government where powers are conferred on him far greater than the powers which it is proposed to assign to him under this legislation. I conclude this part of my observations by saying that what we heard this afternoon and this morning was simply a bogus argument, a fictitious representation with relation to this amendment which is as far removed from it as day is from night.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit one simple question? Why is the minister asking that from now on normal Canadian consumption shall be determined by the Minister of National Revenue and not, as heretofore, by the tariff board in cases where a citizen wishes to appeal? The reason I ask this question is that the minister talked about rights being taken away from parliament. I said rights were being taken from the citizen, and one right the citizen now has is to appeal in these cases from all the findings of fact. Why is the government taking away the right to appeal on the question of fact as to normal Canadian consumption?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have made that clear twice already. I have pointed out that in the first place this is a matter involving the gathering of statistics. The normal source of those statistics is the Canadian bureau of statistics, but where these statistics are not available and it becomes necessary to gather them, they are obtained by contact with Canadian producers and sources which are knowledgeable in these matters, and such information is made available on a confidential basis. Information of this kind is not given for publication, and my colleague the Minister of National Revenue pointed out last night that when there are appeals to the tariff board in such instances the tariff board turns to the Department of National Revenue for this information.

The hon. member talks as though the tariff board were sitting in this situation as a court of first instance reviewing all the facts involved in the appeal. I am afraid he is not too well informed on this subject. Moreover, he will not listen to what my colleague the Minister of National Revenue has said in this chamber for his information. The tariff board, in seeking information, unless it is a matter of public record, turns to the Department of National Revenue because it knows the department has this information from producers on a confidential basis. The tariff board takes that information from the department. The hon. member is completely mistaken in assuming that there has been hitherto on the part of the tariff board some gathering of information of its own in this regard. There is no secrecy about the method—

Mr. Pickersgill: You have just said there was.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Minister of National Revenue has made this perfectly clear and he has shown that all this talk about truncating the scope of appeal does not fit the facts at all. These are not matters which are essentially matters of appeal. These are not matters which are fought over on appeal. These are matters in regard to which it is evident from the statement made by my colleague that the tariff board turns to the department for information.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the minister wishes to give us all the information, and wants to try to convince us. I did not say that the minister would not determine this in the first instance. But this is an appeal from the minister's decision. Surely the appellant should be allowed to dispute the minister's findings before the tariff board as to the normal consumption. The minister says that in future an appellant will be able to dispute Canadian production and two or three other things, but he says he can no longer dispute the minister's decision as to normal Canadian consumption. Why exclude this one element from the appeal? The minister has not yet given us a good reason.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Because, having regard to the essential elements of the present situation there is no real scope today for litigating this question on appeal, since the sources of information, where they are not a matter of public record, are available only from the Department of National Revenue, and a good deal of that evidence is supplied on a confidential basis.

Mr. Pickersgill: About consumption?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Further, it is in the interest of the business community, the people involved in these matters that it should be made clear that this is a question for decision by the minister, in order to give the business community the advantage of an expedited decision. The hon. member has not been in business—

Mr. Pickersgill: Neither has the minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —nor has he been in contact with business people, but I can tell him that this matter of having certain and speedy decisions is of the greatest importance to people in the business community. It is important to importers. It is important to persons seeking to export to the Canadian market.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister another question? This is a purely factual question. The minister has just said some of this information was secret. I can understand that some of the information about production may be secret. But would the minister tell me why any information about consumption should be secret? What is secret about consumption? This is about the most fantastic thing I have ever heard. The minister is saying that it is a secret how much of these goods are consumed. Maybe it is a secret how much of certain commodities is consumed by the Department of National Defence, but for the rest surely the amount of our consumption is not a secret matter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Consumption is the aggregate of Canadian production and imports less exports. As to information in this realm, it is often necessary for the Department of National Revenue to turn to sources outside Canada. Those sources are prepared to supply these figures, as are sources in Canada in similar circumstances, but on a confidential basis. They are not prepared to have the information given out publicly. The tariff board itself does not want to drag people in there and make them disclose information which, though it may be highly important in helping to arrive at conclusions is not the kind of information which those who possess it wish to make public.

Mr. Pickersgill: What kind of persons?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This legislation takes account of today's needs and is based upon experience and based upon concern for the business community. It is realistic legislation in the interest of all concerned, and I think the business community can be depended upon to see the advantages of this legislation in spite of the benefits of the academic instruction which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, with his lack of experience would like to impart. The other point I wish to deal with—

The Deputy Chairman: I must advise the hon. minister that his time has expired.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I thought I was making three speeches, having been interrupted so often by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. minister spent a great deal of time dealing with the questions which were put to him. He did not have to allow the question.

Mr. Herridge: We in this group listened with a great deal of interest to this vehement duet between the minister and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I rise to deal with one question of serious concern to some of my constituents. Last evening while I was in my office seeing various delegations from the Canadian Labour Congress the hon. member for Vancouver East, assisted by Hansard, brought to the attention of the committee in a very good way certain fears of the British Columbia coastal lumber operators with respect to clause 2(a) of these resolutions and also the fears expressed by the Vancouver board of trade on behalf of primary and secondary manufacturers.

I will not repeat his arguments in expressing my support of what he said. The arguments were well put by the hon. member. I will not take the time of the committee to indulge in repetitions which I have done on occasion. I want to say, however, that exactly the same fears are felt by the interior lumber manufacturers' association and various separate milling industries in the constituency I have the honour to represent.

I have received a number of telegrams and letters from people in the lumber industry in the interior. I will not take time to go into them to any extent but I will read one which clearly illustrates their attitude:

> We feel that amendments proposed in the new section 2(a) of the Customs Tariff Act will increase costs of operation to our industry a primary exporting industry which will result in the lumber industry being placed in less competitive position and add to an already extremely serious economic situation. We agree that encouragement of secondary industry is desirable but it is extremely essential not to place primary industry in a noncompetitive position in our markets.
> E. L. Vance, president, Kootenay Forest Products.

I know this gentleman very well. He has long experience in the lumber industry. I can support his claim that the industry is in a serious economic situation at present in the interior of British Columbia owing to the extent of markets and the prices being paid for lumber shipped to those markets. It is presently a marginal operation for the operators in that area. That is why they are concerned about the amendment to the Customs Tariff proposed by this legislation.

If the minister rises to speak again perhaps he would give us the reason why he is amending the Customs Tariff in this respect using what is considered even by laymen who are not familiar with legal matters to be somewhat ambiguous language likely to be open to many interpretations. I have been asked why this has been done and why ambiguous words are used. The words that are particularly objectionable are "approximately the same class or kind made or produced in Canada". The word "approximately" whether viewed in its dictionary meaning or looked at from its application in daily life is a word the meaning of which varies according to personal imagination and one's understanding of the English language.

I should like the minister to tell us why he has made this alteration. I trust he will give consideration to the reasonable fears expressed by the lumber industry in toto in British Columbia and, as far as I am concerned, particularly in the interior where operating conditions are even more difficult than in the coastal area.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member was not in the committee last night when a similar question was raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East. I believe I dealt with it quite fully in reply. The hon. member will find my observations on this subject at pages 1683 to 1685 of Hansard. The hon. member for Vancouver East raised the question as to the word "approximately" and asked for my comment on the alternative suggestion put forward by the Vancouver board of trade in this respect. I dealt with that and the hon. member will find my observations on that subject beginning at the bottom of the second column of page 1684 where, I think, the reasons are given quite fully.

I should like to make what I hope will be a relatively brief observation upon some of the remarks made this morning by the hon. member for Peterborough. Let me say that in general I liked the hon. member's speech very much. It was to my liking not because I approve what he was contending for but because I thought it was a very useful exposure of the fact that if the hon. member typically represents the new party it will not be the spokesman or even the pretended spokesman of labour in this country very long because the speech that the hon. gentleman made was just about as inimical to the interests of labour in Canada as I suppose any speech that any of us has heard in this chamber for a very long time.

Peterborough is a riding that has unhappily had considerable unemployment. Perhaps the hon. member owes his election to that unhappy circumstance. But I may tell the hon. member that in the course of this past decade the kind of attrition to which I have made reference before has greatly weakened and subtracted from the benefits that these provisions in the Customs Tariff were intended to provide for industries and their employees in places like Peterborough. These benefits have been whittled away. That is one of the reasons why there has been unemployment in places like Peterborough.

When we bring forward here a measure to restore to these words the value that they had up until the decade of erosion this hon. member rises in his place and opposes this legislation and in the course of doing so makes statements which show that if he has any knowledge of labour and labour's problems and any knowledge in relation to the problem of unemployment, his knowledge is not more than academic, in my opinion.

The hon. member talked as though this legislation were the expression of a high tariff policy. It is nothing of the kind. I gave an abundance of evidence last night to indicate that this government has loyally observed all the provisions of GATT and that in the three budgets that have been introduced since we came into office in which there have been tariff changes there have been more tariff items reduced than there have been increased. I pointed out some of the things that a government could have done under the existing legislation if it had been minded to use it in pursuance of a high tariff policy. We had only to change by order in council the present percentage defined in pursuance of the powers conferred by section 6, subsection 10 of the Customs Tariff, but we have not done that and we are proposing to give that power back to parliament.

I say that this committee, the people of Peterborough and people outside the riding of Peterborough will be interested to know whether the hon. gentleman who is a member of the new party can be regarded as a champion of the rights of labour and they have evidence to the contrary on the basis of the speech the hon. member made today. The hon. gentleman had the opportunity to show himself as the champion of the rights of labour, a man interested in the employment possibilities of legislation of the kind now under debate, but he has chosen instead to denounce the legislation and in that way to deprive industries in Peterborough and their employees of the benefit that this legislation was intended to give them and which they did enjoy prior to the erosion of the past ten years.

I can tell the hon. member that the delegations which have appeared before my colleague the Minister of National Revenue and before me in regard to matters related to the terms of competition of Canadian producers and Canadian workmen with imports from abroad do not tell us the things that he has told the committee today. There is a deep gulf fixed between the point of view which he exposed in this house today and the point of view that is put before my colleague and myself by the authentic voice of organized labour in appearing before us.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister does not think the electors have an authentic voice.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think they do, but it has to be remembered that at times the electors send people here on a minority vote and that members arrive here without having the endorsement of the majority of their electors and that sometimes—

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not suffer that way.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —they are misled as to the position, the platform, the attitudes and the sympathies of those they elect, and sometimes it takes time for them to find out. They are finding out that—

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is right, they are finding out.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They are certainly finding out and they are going to find out a great deal more on this subject, and what was said here this morning I think will be of considerable assistance not only to the electors of Peterborough but to the electors of other constituencies who may be intending to support candidates of the new party on the theory, the now discarded theory, that they are authentic spokesmen for labour and for the rights of labour.

Mr. Benidickson: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not now; I wish to finish what I am saying.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister has heard the voices; would he be specific on those voices?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I took several questions from the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and he made a speech every time. I wish to develop a point. I will take the hon. member's question later.

The hon. member for Peterborough tried this morning to put the Canadian Congress of Labour on the side of low tariffs. While it is true that in the brief put forward yesterday attention was drawn by the congress to the fact that tariff increases, as it is put here, "would not provide any real solution to this problem", that is, the essential problem of the plight of secondary industries in the face of import competition, yet, Mr. Chairman, that is not all that the congress has said, and that is not all that the congress has represented.

Two years ago the congress appeared before the cabinet, and they also made their representations. It happened to come just after a hearing before the tariff board in regard to the imports of rubber footwear coming into the country in heavy volume at that time, both from Hong Kong and Japan. Following that decision of the tariff board, this is what the Canadian Congress of Labour had to say in its memorandum to the government of Canada dated January 22, 1959. I quote:

> We are naturally disappointed at the recent tariff board decision not to afford protection to the rubber footwear industry. This may prove to be the death knell of this long established Canadian industry and seriously affect the future of the small towns in which most of the industry is located. The condition of the textile industry continues to be precarious notwithstanding the fact that some increases in tariff have taken place.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, let no hon. member attempt to pretend in this house that the authentic voices of organized labour have not been heard, and heard frequently, by the government or by individual ministers of the government in receiving their representations on the subject of the terms of the competition faced by Canadian workmen in relation to imports from abroad.

Then, the hon. member made an extraordinary statement in which he said that dumping may be legitimate trade practice. This is a most extraordinary statement. Here we have an hon. member saying that dumping may be a legitimate trade practice. Let me say to him that there is nothing legitimate about dumping.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not what the hon. member said.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The provisions of the GATT—I have not given the floor to the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: He did not say that at all.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The provisions of the GATT make it quite clear that the GATT regards dumping as an inadmissible practice.

Mr. Deschatelets: He never said that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, dumping is the sort of thing that, as a trade practice, has been put under the ban and condemnation of this house over the years, and put there in stronger legislative form in 1958. I hope the hon. member for Peterborough will soon learn that dumping is a practice which is capable of robbing Canadian workmen of their jobs.

Then, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member went on to say that we should have import boards, and let the import boards determine what industries have a place in our society. This means that he is proposing that the government should set up boards and take this right away from parliament, and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate rose in his place at the end of the speech and said that it was a good Liberal speech. This proposal was to take something out of parliament and put the power in the hands of an import board to say what industries in this country have a place in our economy. Do you realize what that means, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is willing to put it in the hands of the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is suggested that we confer upon a board, which could be entirely bureaucratic, the right to decide what industries in this country should be marked out for survival and what industries should be marked out for the sentence of economic doom.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister prefers to give that power to the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is socialism. It is the kind of socialism that can strangle enterprise; it is the kind of socialism which expresses itself in that kind of bureaucracy. As long as this government is in office it is not going to set up any boards to pronounce the doom of any Canadian industries or pronounce the death knell on the jobs of Canadian workmen. No, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pickersgill: Just a single minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let me make it very clear, then, Mr. Chairman, that when we hear what is the first voice in this house of the new party we hear a doctrine that is absolutely inimical to the interests of Canadian workmen, that contemplates the destruction by bureaucratic means of some Canadian industries. If the Canadian people want that, then I do not know the Canadian people. The Canadian people know that with this present administration every reasonable effort is going to be made to give a decent opportunity to Canadian industries and Canadian workmen to compete with the imports that are coming into this country, and to do so at all times with due regard to our obligations under the GATT and to our position as a great exporting nation. We have shown ourselves at all times deeply conscious of the necessity of maintaining those relationships and that position of Canada in the markets of the world.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I leave this subject. This is a doctrine that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, in his laudatory remarks, said at the conclusion of the speech this morning by the hon. member for Peterborough—apparently he regarded it as good Liberal doctrine—was a Liberal speech. He hailed it as a Liberal speech, the kind of speech that I say can find a way of pronouncing the doom of Canadian industry and the jobs of Canadian workmen.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister knows very well that I did not endorse the whole speech. I endorsed the concluding observation with a degree of praise. I want merely to correct the untrue statement just made by the Minister of Finance. I did not endorse the whole speech of the hon. member at all. I said that his concluding words, which were words of—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Pickersgill: —commendation for the liberation of trade were spoken like a Liberal, or words to that effect.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am afraid the record will not bear you out on that.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will review the record, and so can the hon. member.

Mr. Benidickson: I know the hon. member for Timmins wants to make some remarks. I rise only to ask a question following the minister's remarks. The minister indicated that at the proper time he would be prepared to answer my question. In his recent remarks he referred to the voices of labour which he and the government had received.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I understood the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River just wanted to ask a question.

Mr. Benidickson: That is right. As you will remember, Mr. Chairman, I rose when the minister was speaking—

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Timmins wishes to make some remarks. If the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River wishes to ask a question he may do so.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister indicated that at the conclusion of his remarks he would be prepared to receive from me the question I had risen to ask him and which he preferred to have at this point. In his remarks with respect to the attitude of the hon. member for Peterborough the minister referred to having received as a minister of the government representations from labour with respect to the tariff question. Would he indicate from what voices of labour in Peterborough he has received approbation of the legislation presented to us?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not confine myself to Peterborough; I was not speaking simply about Peterborough. I was speaking about the voice of labour generally. We have had representations from labour organizations and very often the delegations are accompanied by representatives of the labour organizations.

Mr. Benidickson: I take it then that the minister suggests that he has heard from labour representatives of the rubber footwear industry but from what other labour representatives whose voice he would respect has he received representations in support of this kind of legislation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There have been a number of them. I would not attempt to give a complete list now. My colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, has also received many of them. We certainly have had representations from labour in the rubber footwear field. We have had representations from labour in the silver flatware field. I have had a number and the Minister of National Revenue has had even more.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I should like to correct the misinterpretation that the minister had placed on the comments of the hon. member for Peterborough. The minister has indicated that organized labour wants tariff protection. Organized labour has contended annually for many years now in its presentations to the government of the day that it is not asking for high tariff policies because in the eyes of organized labour high tariff policies rather than providing employment are a major cause of unemployment such as we have in Canada at this time.

This does not mean to say that organized labour is in favour of free trade. Organized labour has continually asked for protection of various enterprises when it is in the national interest to do so. The resolution says that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Customs Tariff so as to provide certain things. I regret that it does not read that it is expedient to introduce a measure to abolish the Customs Tariff and to replace the whole tariff structure with adequate legislation enacted by parliament which would be based on recommendations of export and import boards as to what enterprises in Canada should receive all-out protection, which ones should receive partial protection and which ones should receive no protection whatsoever. To indicate that the hon. member for Peterborough was not adequately defending the interests of labour in Peterborough was a gross misrepresentation indeed because even the people of Peterborough know that high tariffs are not the answer.

The minister has made a great point of advocating that this measure is necessary to provide protection to Canadian industry and supply employment to Canadian labour. It is our contention that the enactment of the legislation which will follow the resolution is going to add to unemployment in Canada in that we will very definitely be handicapped in our efforts to hold down Canadian costs of production. I cannot for the life of me see why machinery entering into either primary or secondary production in Canada could not be exempted from the proposal that the government is now placing before us.

The minister made the statement that this legislation is going to be applauded by the business community of Canada. I have yet to hear any applause anywhere in Canada with respect to the proposed legislation except for the odd real dyed in the wool Tory newspaper editors writing editorial comment on the action proposed by the government. The minister admits that the purpose of the legislation is to raise tariffs and yet when we say that the Tories are raising tariffs there are heated and angry denials as though the loudness of voice of the minister is going to make it so. Regardless of the loudness of his voice, a reading of Hansard alone will convince any Canadian that the aim of the government is to use this resolution and the legislation to follow for the sole purpose of raising tariffs on imports into Canada.

The minister claimed that the other member nations of GATT are not complaining. We believe that we have reason to think that other nations have complained in the past about the actions of the Conservative government when at every possible turn they are taking advantage of the loopholes that exist under GATT and, while paying lip service to the principles of GATT, are eroding those principles by the many minor actions that are being undertaken from time to time. That is why I indicated in the budget debate that actions of this kind by member governments are undermining the possible future existence and extension of the very basic principles of GATT.

The minister knows very well that it is not part of our plan to have import boards arrive at decisions as to what enterprises are to receive adequate protection. Import and export boards are meant to act in an advisory capacity to whatever government happens to be in office at the time and as advisers to legislators generally. We say that there is an alternative to a policy either of high tariffs or of low tariffs and that the whole concept of tariffs in this day and age is outmoded as a useful instrument in the hands of government and has to be replaced. Otherwise we will have either low tariff policies which will ruin legitimate Canadian industries and cause unemployment or we will have high tariffs which in turn will cause unemployment as they have always done in the past.

The minister is very worried about the effect throughout Canada of the election in Peterborough. We are very well aware of that, but I felt that for the minister to attempt to misrepresent the position of labour on the question of tariffs was not in keeping with the debate now taking place. If the minister wants to know the position of labour on the whole subject of tariffs he only has to read the briefs that the organized labour movement as a whole has presented to the government over many long years now. While labour contends that a policy of high tariffs is not the answer to unemployment, labour also realizes that there are industries in Canada which in many cases may need not merely partial protection but all-out protection through the actions of the government of the day.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to ask a question of the hon. member who has just spoken. If I understood him correctly, he suggested that industry should be controlled by boards so that they could set tariffs to protect the industry that needed protection and the industry that did not need protection. I was wondering whether he thought the same boards or boards of a different type should control organized labour at the same time.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I was not even recommending that the import or export board should control anyone. The import or export board should only look at the statistics and the facts and, bearing all factors in mind, make known to legislators their findings. I see no reason why we should not have a policy whereby we import into the lower mainland of British Columbia a fixed amount of potatoes at certain definite seasons of the year without the handicap of a tariff and at other times, when it may be deemed in the national interest, block them from ruining our own Canadian producers.

Mr. Benidickson: This is the first opportunity I have had to speak, Mr. Chairman, except to ask a question, since the Minister of National Revenue spoke before the luncheon adjournment and for a few minutes after the luncheon adjournment. We may have had some fairly strong language used in the consideration of this resolution. I think perhaps it is justified because some great changes are being made in connection with historic patterns with reference to goods of a class and kind made in Canada or not made in Canada; and this is so despite what the Minister of Finance has tried to suggest to this committee.

The Minister of Finance makes a statement and he perhaps thinks we are naive enough to accept it as being important. He says this legislation presented to us now involves no change in rates. What could be more fatuous or more out of line in real meaning than a statement of that kind? The minister himself is the author of the statement in this debate that some 70 items of great consequence in our tariff schedules involve rates of tariff duty which ultimately go down into our economy as an expense to our consumers, and they involve rates that could be for the most part either 7½ per cent or 22½ per cent. That is an increase of 15 per cent.

In the strict interpretation of his words the Minister of Finance may be truthful when he says that what is before us is not making any change in tariff rates in so far as what is before us is not changing the numerals in the tariff schedule with respect to any of these important items. However, I hope no member of the committee will be misled in the slightest degree into thinking that if we are changing the rules upon which there is judgment as to what article is made in Canada as against what article is not made in Canada we are not here in this committee in effect making a great change perhaps in the rate of tax that will apply to the articles involved.

In particular, it has been made evident that in respect of articles that are described here as goods custom-made to specifications we are dealing with extremely expensive items; and perhaps, even more important, we are dealing with items that are of the kind that would be purchased by our broad base of producers and manufacturers across this country. I refer to machinery and heavy articles of custom-made goods.

Everyone whom I have heard who is entitled to respect these days in connection with some of our economic difficulties always includes in his speech a reference to the importance of not only doing something in the nature of increased production for our domestic market, he also emphasizes the importance of getting into the export market. I suggest that nothing could be more fatal to that wide group of producers or manufacturers than not to make sure that they are not subject to costs in connection with their original capital costs, particularly related to the machinery of their production, that would first of all perhaps deter them from entering into new fields of endeavour or, in replacement of existing plant, would prove so expensive as to cost of this machinery in relation to what they could get in the cheapest market that it would prove that they could not compete effectively in the export markets of the world.

The hon. member for Vancouver East referred to briefs that he had received from a number of important industries in this country represented in his province of British Columbia. They were notably, I admit, in the extractive and resources industries. On the other hand, however, this consideration goes right through the piece. As far back as 1890, I believe, when a Conservative government was in power, that government despite the pressure that a Conservative government generally gets from manufacturers in this country and quite irrespective of the interests of consumers, through the then minister of finance, namely Mr. Foster, perhaps for the first time decided that this item "of a class or kind made in Canada" was important. He recognized then that one must not look solely to the plant and its labour which would create these machines which involve capital expenditures but that one, in looking to the broad interests of all Canadians, must look to the necessity of making sure that the entire level of manufacturers in this country were given a break to the extent that the costs of capital equipment were not originally priced at such a point beyond international figures that they could not ultimately compete with their international competitors. That idea is of the essence here because we have had an admission that these items described as goods custom-made to specifications are of the essence of the debate that we have been pursuing.

Mr. Nowlan: It is the first time it has really been raised.

Mr. Benidickson: In this area we also find our chief concern because, despite the comment a moment ago of the Minister of National Revenue, it is in this sphere where we suggest improperly, undesirably and with perhaps havoc to the country, we are giving ministerial final discretion and we are taking away the opportunity of people affected to have the right of appeal to an outside tribunal beyond politics and beyond the minister, a tribunal that has its decisions even subject to appeal through our normal courts, namely the exchequer court and the Supreme Court of Canada.

It is here where I feel there is no justification whatsoever for this legislation. We will not support the loose phrases that are in this definition. To my mind the word "approximately" practically makes a nonentity of anything serious in connection with this legislation.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What would the hon. gentleman suggest.

Mr. Benidickson: I think perhaps I could suggest something more definitive and accurate. That, of course, is not my responsibility. The hon. member for Carleton may hear an amendment that may be more accurate in that respect. I do not know whether or not he is inviting that.

But certainly by dictionary definition, or by reason of the particular power given to the minister to interpret the word "approximately", this language is unduly loose, wide, indefinite and uncertain. I think this is the centre of the ministerial final and ultimate decision that is involved in these matters.

I insist again that this is not going to assist industry in this country to embark on new enterprises. I am convinced that uncertainties will prevail when these matters are not subject to judicial, open and known decisions, when these decisions come from a back room and are final in the office of the Minister of National Revenue, case by case, and because of the looseness of the language that prevails here industry will be discouraged from taking the initiative and deciding to take a chance on introducing some new endeavour into the industrial activity of this country.

I thought this point was most effectively made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate today. I still think that, while we heard about "Alice in the Looking Glass" and some other off-base comments, no minister has given this committee an adequate answer to that important question which was raised. The question was this: If you are proposing that there should be a redefinition to describe a class or kind of goods that are produced in Canada, why do you not give it to the parliament of Canada to study, and why do you not allow our courts —not a political office—to determine in the future whether a particular item of goods does or does not meet the specifications that the parliament of Canada has in its judgment determined are proper, even if it is by revised and more up-to-date language, having regard to the decisions of certain judicial courts which were referred to in the debate yesterday?

I think this is of the essence. The minister says that over the history of this country there have not been many appeals. Of course that simply emphasizes the necessity for maintaining this right on the part of every Canadian, with respect to a tax, to have a right of appeal beyond the political level, rather than to reduce and deny that right as in substance is being done in this legislation.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. minister a question. Has the minister attempted to figure out what change there might be in budget revenues as a result of these amendments?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to try to delineate or prophesy the amount of revenue which would be effected by any of these rulings. Obviously such rulings as might be made according to the dire prophecies of my hon. friends opposite will result in a substantial addition to the national revenue.

Mr. Benidickson: If there is further protection there will be additional revenue.

Mr. Nowlan: There will be additional revenue; there is no question of that. How I can answer it otherwise, I do not know. That is the one intelligent comment that my hon. friend has made during the day's debate, and I welcome his return to sanity. However, I do not think there is anything one can say of a specific nature. As a "class or kind" ruling of that nature is made it does, as my hon. friend pointed out, attract a higher rate of duty.

Mr. Pickersgill: Which is not paid.

Mr. Nowlan: Of course it is paid.

Mr. Benidickson: I realize I was going against my own argument—

Mr. Nowlan: That is nothing new.

Mr. Benidickson: —because my point was that the article might prove to be 15 per cent more expensive by reason of customs duty only, and we all know that every businessman also takes a fee for financing the original cost of his merchandise. So there would be a subsequent mark-up over the 15 per cent before the machinery, perhaps, reached the ultimate consumer. There would be discouragement to even starting out by purchasing capital goods of that nature. But in the end perhaps, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said, it would mean even less revenue than now; and of course we would have less employment than now, or less employment than possible, because of the fictitious costs provided at the original base of starting up a factory which would provide jobs.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, there are a few factual questions that I would like to ask. My first question is this. I assume—and I base it on an assumption, and my assumption may be wrong—that the reason the government now proposes to bring custom-made goods within the ambit of the "made in Canada" provision is that they have had representations made to them that there are cases where, if the duty were high enough, these goods could be made in Canada. I assume that representations have been made to the government and that the government is aware of industries where this could take place. I think before we are asked to make this quite revolutionary change in the law we should be told precisely what those industries are.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, goods of this kind are not being brought in for the first time. There have been rulings on custom-made goods. I have made rulings myself within the last 18 months on goods of the custom-made kind. You get a cartel—

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I have not made my question clear and I am sure the minister does not want to answer a question the answer to which does not interest me. What is revolutionary about this is that the minister may decide there is a capacity to make them in Canada, instead of the 10 per cent that is made in Canada. I am interested in finding out just what are the categories of industry, manufacture and all other forms of production about which the government has had representations that has led them to think that if this change is made in the Customs Tariff there will be greater production in Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes. I think the question can be answered "yes".

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to know what they are. Normally when a change is made in the Customs Tariff it is not made in vacuo simply because somebody has had an airy fairy notion that it might have some effect. These changes are based on concrete information, either information which the government has assembled itself or more usually because it has been lobbied, because certain people have approached them and said: We could make a certain kind of bulldozer which has never before been made in Canada, but we cannot make it to compete on the basis of the duty on that article at the present time; if the duty were 15 per cent higher, we could do it.

Mr. Nowlan: Certainly, it would not apply to bulldozers. There, you might get that iniquitous word to which so much objection has been raised, the word "approximately". There might be a question of whether it could lift five tons or five and a half tons, or whether the shovel capacity was three yards or three and a half yards. I am not an industrialist, and I am not speaking with the tone of authority which the hon. gentleman has adopted all day in dealing with these questions. I am not speaking pontifically about all these things. The hon. gentleman has spoken about what goes on in pressure groups and lobbies—subjects with which we are not accustomed, though perhaps we shall be more accustomed to them after 23 years.

What could come in, for example, would be atomic reactors; a thermogenerator could be one of those articles; material and equipment of that kind, which is very heavy equipment of the type which is being increasingly used today because of the change in technology.

The great change in technology which has accompanied the introduction of atomic energy has only developed in the past few years in this country. We first developed our hydroelectric energy. We have harnessed, to a large extent, the streams and rivers at our disposal where this can be done economically. The St. Lawrence waterway is perhaps one of the last we have here in this area of Canada. The Columbia river is another river to which this government is paying attention, and great progress is being made there.

But having exhausted the economic development of hydro you then get thermo-generators. These are, of course, made to specification; they are custom-made. It takes, I am told, a long while to make them. These are some of the fields in which this legislation may be used in the future to provide employment for Canadians and the development of Canadian industry.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say that is pretty vague stuff as, I think, the minister will admit. The hon. gentleman is going to have to decide three questions here. It seems to me that under subsection 3 (b) he will have to make a final decision whether the goods are custom-made to specifications. I admit that is probably not an impossible decision to make.

Mr. Nowlan: An easy one, I think.

Mr. Pickersgill: It would not always be easy. But the minister has to decide on a much more important question. He must then decide whether adequate facilities exist in Canada. My imagination does not go far enough to enable me to imagine that any government would bring in proposed legislation of this sort unless it had in mind certain specific industries, specific facilities now available in Canada for the manufacture of particular goods which are not now being made in Canada but which the government believes could be made in Canada under the higher duty. It seems to me the government should come clean and tell us what they are. What are we legislating about? Let us have this information in specific terms.

Mr. Nowlan: I think I have already answered that question. I think perhaps the hon. member is being a little more impervious than he usually is, because he apparently wants to stall this debate until five o'clock. I have already said that one example of a machine, or group of machines coupled together, which could be custom-made would be an atomic reactor or a thermogenerator. We have John Inglis who have been working on one; General Electric have been working on one. It is easy enough—I will not say easy; it needs the advice of engineers and inspection by competent officials—but it is a relatively simple matter to determine whether General Electric, for example, can produce a light bulb or whether they can produce a generator or not. These are matters which require an investigation by officials and experts who would then advise in that connection. I am sure the hon. gentleman is not suggesting for one moment that it cannot be determined whether adequate facilities for the production of whatever particular custom-made instrument or engine or productive machinery to which an order may apply exist in Canada or not.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I was not attempting to suggest that. The minister is misunderstanding what I am trying to find out. I am trying to find out where those facilities are at the present time which created in the mind of the government the impulse to bring in this legislation. I do not believe the government dreamed this up. They must have some specific imports in mind which they think could be made in Canada if this legislative change were made. If this is not the case, I think it is irresponsible to ask parliament to deal with the situation.

The government is asking us for a change in our present tariff structure, a change which, because it is clearly protective, is undoubtedly going to arouse hostility among certain of those who at present export goods to Canada. I am not saying this is necessarily a reason why the legislation should not be enacted. I am seeking information. I want to know what facilities exist here which in the view of the government could be used to manufacture goods in place of those now being imported.

I am sure that when Sir John Macdonald introduced the national policy in 1878 he did not just say: if we raise the tariffs a lot of goods will be made here. He raised specific tariffs on specific things for the purpose of promoting manufacture. It is true that at that time the tariff was a much cruder instrument than it is today and that it was imposed mainly for revenue purposes, but the tariffs were raised higher on certain categories of goods because it was considered that with a higher tariff goods would be made in Canada.

An hon. Member: It was a good thing, though.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member is entitled to his own opinion about that. I do not think it would be relevant to debate the question, interesting though it might be. What we are discussing now is whether we ought to give the Minister of National Revenue the power to raise tariffs on certain imports which now come into Canada because he believes that adequate facilities exist in Canada for the manufacture of those goods. I wish the minister would tell us right now what the things are that the government knows about that it believes there are adequate facilities for so that we will be equipped with knowledge of the facts and will not be simply speculating on the subject.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I hope that the capacity of Canadian industry is not so limited that in a moment or two I could foresee and prophecy all the developments that will occur in Canadian industry in the years to come. If one looks today at our achievements compared with those of 20 years ago—

Mr. Pickersgill: Before C. D. Howe, you mean.

Mr. Nowlan: Do not bring C. D. Howe into this. We give him full credit for all that he did. There has been much reference made this afternoon to one debate which is a subject of great embarrassment to my hon. friends opposite so I fail to see why they are bringing in that gentleman's name at the moment.

I should not have liked to make a prophecy 20 years ago concerning developments which have already taken place in Canadian industry. No one can tell what scientific and industry. No one can tell what scientific and technological developments may occur within the next few years. I have already mentioned atomic reactors and thermal generators. These are two things—particularly thermal generators—concerning which it is assumed that within the next few years interesting things will occur because of the development of our economic hydro resources. There may very well be more thermal generators in Canada in the future. If a Canadian firm succeeds in getting a tender on the construction of a thermal generator it can involve thousands upon thousands of man hours of employment. It can succeed in developing an industry here from which at the moment due to competition from outside this country our producers have been excluded from entirely. There has been one made in Canada during the last year. A ruling was made. I made the ruling that it was of a class or kind made in Canada. I am very happy that I did it, too. There was no appeal. There were none of the dire consequences about which we have heard lamentations, griefs, prophecies and fears. All that ensued from it was the provision of employment for Canadians, thousands of Canadian man hours.

That is what this government is going to do. My hon. friends opposite talk about exports and putting on increased costs in relation to the export industry, thereby depriving us of employment. This government is watching that factor. We are not trying to increase the cost of exports. After all, as was said last night, during the relatively short time I have been in office, a period of between three and a half to four years, there have been scores of rulings of class or kind made in Canada. What happened? Under the aegis of my friend the former minister of trade and commerce and now under the new Minister of Trade and Commerce Canada's exports last year were greater than ever before. They were greater than they were under hon. gentlemen opposite who have been weeping saline tears about the future of Canadian exports. My hon. friends do not need to worry about that. We are looking after that matter just as we will look after the question of Canadian employment.

Mr. Chevrier: The government is not doing very well with respect to employment.

Mr. Nowlan: We are doing very well. We have had the two schools of thought among hon. gentlemen opposite, one represented by the hon. member for Essex East, pompous Paul, tramping up and down and ringing the rafters with his howling about unemployment, and the other represented by the member for Bonavista-Twillingate shrieking cries to high heaven about what we are going to do to the Canadian consumers. Hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to make the best of two worlds simultaneously, but they have made an awful mess of both of them.

I certainly do not pretend for one moment that the problem of unemployment is going to be solved by this government unassisted. It requires the co-operation of everybody. We are convinced, however—and we are advised to this effect by labour unions, management and employees—that by means of measures such as this the government is taking steps which will result in increasing the efficiency of Canadian production and in creating additional Canadian employment. Whether that is right or wrong is another matter. Every government has to make decisions on the basis of the best information it can get and on the basis of the technological situation confronting it at the moment. We are convinced that the measure before the committee at the moment is in the best interest of Canadian producers, Canadian employees and Canadians generally, and that instead of interfering with our exports, or prejudicing them, it will add generally to employment and the productive capacity of Canada.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, while I admire some of the poetic eloquence employed by the minister in portions of his arguments there is one pattern or thread running through his argument that concerns me very greatly, and that is his insistence on the fact that because we—the minister uses the term "we" meaning the government—are convinced that this legislation is good legislation, therefore he does not have to answer any questions of the opposition or explain precisely and in detail the reasons for the resolution for which the government is seeking the approval of the committee. That is where my difference with the minister and his colleague lies. That pattern has run through the whole of the debate on this resolution.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There has been no such thing.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps my hon. friend would be good enough to explain what he thinks my colleague the Minister of Finance and I have been doing here in the committee for the past few days if we have not been answering questions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Making speeches.

Mr. McIlraith: The minister has made little attempt to explain the resolution and the Minister of Finance has devoted his time to vicious attacks on the personalities of those persons who have dared to express a point of view different from that which the minister espouses and he has rarely addressed himself to the resolution before the committee.

Mr. Nowlan: I have attempted to deal with any questions that have been raised.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is this not a vicious attack on my personality?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of National Revenue asked me a question and I am attempting to answer it. I will make no comment about the manners of the Minister of Finance. I am content to leave it to those who read Hansard to form their own assessments as to his manners and conduct as a minister of the crown in seeking the approval of the committee for a resolution brought before it by him. If the hon. gentleman chooses to make personal references to me or about me, that is a matter of complete indifference to me. The minister may make all such references he wishes to, and I hope that will relieve his mind.

Earlier this afternoon when he was asked some very relevant questions the Minister of National Revenue devoted his reply to expounding the argument that no hon. member of the opposition knows anything about this difficult subject whatever and that he and the Minister of Finance do. The hon. gentleman is at perfect liberty to advance that sort of argument if he likes. I for one have always found this legislation quite difficult. I have found the subject complex and difficult. I have never asserted special knowledge of it. I suspect that on occasion the minister has his own problems with it.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member is right.

Mr. McIlraith: Anyone else who ever deals with it recognizes at once that they have problems with it. However, the minister asked me a question and I felt he was entitled to an answer. The point I want to get at is that there has been a constant repetition by both ministers of the argument that because we, the government, think this is good legislation it should go through, which is not an answer to the questions which have been asked.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

A moment ago the Minister of National Revenue said that no one can tell what future developments will be. He was addressing himself to the problem of the terminology custom-made to specifications, I do not think anyone will disagree with that statement too much because technological changes are very rapid, but the point I want to make is that that is not the basis on which to introduce legislation under which the minister is taking away from citizens the right of appeal to a tribunal and arrogating that power to himself as he is effectively doing in these provisions. That is particularly true when you bear in mind the fact that the right involved is that of an appeal by a taxpayer, the consequences of a decision on which may be to impose taxation. It is a very serious thing when such arbitrary power is taken by the minister.

In answer to my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, the minister said it was an easy decision to make whether or not goods are custom-made to specifications.

Mr. Nowlan: To order, I said; I said, custom-made to order. It is easy to determine whether or not there is an order.

Mr. McIlraith: The whole point and argument back of so many of the kinds of machines coming into plants in the manufacturing business have to do with whether the machinery is something that is custom-made to specifications. You can engage in endless arguments on that subject. I do not want to elaborate the problem here but it is possible to engage in endless arguments as to whether a machine is custom-made to specifications.

With due deference to the minister, it is not an easy decision to make. It is one of the sources of continual representation to departmental officials and to others concerned with the administration of the act. To generalize and to brush it aside and say it is an easy decision to make is not good enough. The decision may be easy enough for the minister to make when he is dealing with certain of the newer plants such as the atomic energy plant, but let him apply his mind to that other problem, namely the ordinary manufacturing plants which are making consumer goods, and see how difficult it is.

There was some confusion arising out of my remarks last night. I am afraid I did not clearly understand the implications of an interjection by the minister. As a matter of fact, I did not hear it clearly. The interjection was made when I was seeking to point out a distinction between those types of machinery which are not custom-made to specifications, but are used in the manufacturing and production field and are not consumer goods in the ordinary sense at all. My reference was to such machine tools and machinery. When one reads Hansard today one sees that there was confusion on that point. There was an interjection from the hon. member for Carleton which I at least thought had to do with off the shelf goods mainly, but that was another point altogether. The minister says he cannot tell what the development will be in the future; therefore, he is not sure. I deduce from that statement of his that that is why he would need this power. Why is he then taking away from the tariff board the right to make this adjudication? The tariff board is being enlarged and, as I said, I am happy to hear that.

In the concluding part of his argument this afternoon the minister referred to a decision he made that something was of a class or kind made in Canada and everybody was happy and that the results of that decision were very successful. I am not making this as a personal reference to the minister who made that decision, but he had the knowledge, and the staff had the knowledge that that decision was subject to appeal to the tariff board. Let me remind him of that fact. Let me remind him of the fact that the importer also had that certain knowledge in his mind. I am quite happy that the minister made that successful decision, but let us not be under any confusion about what the effect of this legislation is and what its possible implications may be.

I regret this attempt to accuse anyone who is opposing this method of legislating on this difficult subject of being unfriendly to the economic development of this country or trying to create unemployment in the country. It just is not that way at all. This is difficult legislation on a definition that has caused trouble to succeeding governments over a considerable number of years. Surely what is required is legislation that would provide better certainty and better clarity in the economic field and that would meet the situation and not worsen it.

If he likes the minister can accuse me of having a suspicious mind, I must reiterate that I find this proposed legislation on the points we have been arguing about wholly offensive. I think it is the wrong way to deal with the problem. I think it is a way that is only going to add to the trouble. I think it is a way that is going to, depending on the whim of particular administrations at particular times, lead to an increase in the tariffs on a good many items. That may or may not be desirable. The minister will argue and some will argue that it is in certain cases; but there is this other side of the coin that I want to point out. It may be that improper decisions on this definition will increase the cost of production of our goods.

Last night I tried to point out to the minister the dangers of having firms, as a result of improper rulings, take machinery that was not quite the best and most efficient they could get and install it in their plants instead of having in those manufacturing plants the most efficient machinery we can possibly get. That is the nub of the problem that secondary industry is having today.

A few minutes ago the minister said something about exports. I invite the minister to examine some of the problems relating to exports. I refer to categories of goods comprising our exports. It is rather difficult to generalize about them, but let the minister examine them in relation to secondary industry in this country. If he does I do not think he will make, shall I say, the same glib statements he has just made on the subject of exports. But more particularly I ask him to consider the implications of wrong use being made of this provision on the cost factor of consumer goods being used in Canada. I point out to him that if those goods are not produced economically and cheaply in Canada, then the pressure is to import those manufactured consumer goods and that is where he gets to the nub of the employment situation in the manufacturing industry. He had better have a bit of a look here and examine rather carefully into the matter.

I wish to raise one other matter. Just before lunch I sought to ask the minister a question when he was dealing with this point. I sought to ask the Minister of Finance a question on the same subject when he was speaking. I refer to the matter of secret information that the Minister of National Revenue has that is not available to the tariff board. The minister pointed out the fact, which is very true as I well know, that the tariff board very frequently gets information from the Minister of National Revenue about quantity of imports, and so on, on which to found their judgment.

I would also like to have this matter clarified. The clear inference from the remarks of both of the ministers was that the tariff board did not also have procedures for getting such confidential information on those matters from his department and, in many cases, confidential information which the Minister of National Revenue does not have in his department. That is the impression which both ministers left, and I do respectfully want to differ from them on this matter of tariff board procedure. I ask them to address themselves to this point and explain to us just what type of confidential information is it that the tariff board has not been able to get that enables the minister to come here now and say he should have the right to make a decision and there should be no appeal to the tariff board. Perhaps I might conclude my remarks for now until I get an answer on that specific point because I should like to have it cleared up.

Mr. Nowlan: As I have said and as the hon. member says, it is customary for the tariff board to get confidential information from the Department of National Revenue. It may be that the tariff board has some machinery for the obtaining of confidential information on their own behalf. I have been told, though I do not know this, that the tariff board, although it makes inquiries from our department with respect to information for background purposes, is very reluctant to get information of a confidential nature on its own initiative because it cannot use it publicly. It does not want to be in the position of basing a judgment on confidential information. I have been accused today that I would be doing this, that and the other thing without the right of appeal, but obviously the tariff board does not want to base judgments on confidential information and ascribe its reasons for judgment to confidential information. My understanding of the practice is that the board substantially gets its information from witnesses, and from the Department of National Revenue and they do have—I am not positive about this but I will accept the hon. gentleman's word for it—some machinery whereby the board itself can acquire certain information on a confidential basis.

Mr. McIlraith: The point I was getting at was that any confidential information the minister had would presumably have to do with the quantity of imports.

Mr. Nowlan: And also, of course, as to Canadian consumption. Take the question of the 10 per cent. What do you have to do? You have to find out how much is imported and we have the figures. Then you have to get confidentially from various firms, or perhaps not confidentially, the amount that they have manufactured this year and the amount they have sold. We add the two together and that gives you Canadian consumption, and then you ascertain your 10 per cent or more.

Mr. McIlraith: That is precisely my point. In determining Canadian consumption one factor is the import data which the Minister of National Revenue has.

Mr. Nowlan: Definitely.

Mr. McIlraith: It is very definitely a factor and it is information which the minister can easily make available to the tariff board. I have always been under the impression that it was being made available to the tariff board and I have always thought that the board has very excellent machinery for handling questions of a confidential nature so that there would be no prejudice to the individual firms concerned. I have always thought that the board was an example of a very competent board in that respect and I have a high opinion of their work. However, there is a lot of other information that comes from other sources which has to be gathered together, and from the minister's argument I could not see that he was in any better position to assemble that information than was the tariff board.

Mr. Nowlan: Except that I suggest this without interrupting the hon. member, although I suppose I am interrupting him, that the tariff board can get specific information with respect to a specific matter which is before it at a particular time. If they have these powers I am sure they are limited to obtaining information on the specific question. We, on the other hand, and I refer to the officials of the department, because of the fact that we are dealing with all imports at all times and Canadian production generally have this information and are in a position to get information of a confidential nature on a general basis which would not apply to a specific question relating to a specific firm before the tariff board at this particular minute.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not want to digress too far into the argument about the tariff board. The board has quite good research facilities and its membership is being enlarged. With deference to the minister, I think I can leave the matter this way, that I find there is some difference in our views as to the possibility of the tariff board doing this job. I think that is perhaps a fair way to leave that point.

There is one other thing. I cannot for the life of me understand this. The Minister of National Revenue spoke several times about the relatively few appeals from departmental rulings. If there are relatively few appeals and the tariff board is being enlarged so it can sit in several panels, what is the logic in taking this appeal work away from the board? Would he explain that? To me it is a simple proposition and I just cannot follow the minister's argument.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It has been repeated time and again.

Mr. McIlraith: I beg to differ. The Minister of Finance would not address himself specifically to that simple proposition. He went into large areas around it with considerable force and vigour but he did not stick to that point and explain it to us in a way that was relevant. I wish he would do so.

Mr. Nowlan: Of course, the converse or the other side of the coin is certainly true. If there have been very few appeals exercised, if there has been very little done under the appeal section, then there was no basis for all the blatant outcries we have heard today about the public of Canada being deprived and robbed of something of substance. If my statement is correct and the hon. member accepts it—I am speaking in general terms and not of a specific fraction of one per cent—if there have been very few appeals entered then there has not been this great damage done. We are entering a new field here where undoubtedly there are areas of dispute but we do not want to provide an opportunity for fictitious or fractious appeals in order to delay matters. As my last word before five o'clock and I hope in this debate, although I am perhaps sanguine, I say that these matters on which we are accused of depriving the public of a right of appeal are purely routine statistical matters.

Mr. McIlraith: They are not.

Mr. Nowlan: You deny that. I am saying that is so. We can spend from now until Christmas arguing about what is statistical and what is not. I am saying that (a) no appeals of any substance have been submitted and (b) if there were appeals they were on statistical matters on which the information is not a matter of argument but a matter of fact, and the Minister of National Revenue is in a better position to produce that evidence than anyone else in the public service.

Mr. McIlraith: On the question of appeal, the right of appeal undoubtedly has, as it always has had, a salutary effect on the administrative arm of government. There is no doubt about that. Surely the minister has been a minister of the crown long enough to have noticed that and to have appreciated it. I think the taking away of this right of appeal is going to lead to a dangerous situation and result in damage to our economy. I have further remarks to make, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock, in order to permit the house to proceed to the consideration of public and private bills pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise and report progress on a certain resolution and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of public and private bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF STATUTORY HOLIDAYS WITH PAY FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-12, to provide for pay for statutory holidays for employees and for pay for work performed on statutory holidays.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I again have the honour of introducing the bill before the house. I wish that the government in its wisdom had introduced a bill of its own and that I therefore would not be under the obligation myself of discharging this responsibility. As has been indicated many times previously in this house, the purpose of this bill is to provide that all employees in Canada who come under federal labour jurisdiction shall receive their regular pay for at least eight statutory holidays each year, without having to work on those holidays. It also provides that when any such employee is required to work on any statutory holiday, as defined in the bill, he shall receive pay for such work at double time in addition to his regular pay for such holiday.

Nothing in this bill affects any provision for statutory holidays with pay enjoyed by any employees where such provisions are more favourable than those enjoyed herein. However, this bill supersedes any provisions which are less favourable than those that are contained in the bill.

After the adoption of this bill on second reading I hope to move that the bill be referred for detailed examination to the industrial relations committee of this house. I know that the bill is a lengthy one and is rather complicated. I feel that a useful service would thus be performed and that the bill ought not to become law until the industrial relations committee has examined it in all the details and implications and has amended it as the committee may desire to amend it. It will then be returned to the house and I hope eventually become law. If, however, the government indicates that it would like to introduce a bill of its own having the same aim, I should be only too happy at any moment's notice to ask leave of the house to have the bill taken off the order paper in order to make it possible for the government to bring in its own bill and we would then be able to deal with the government's proposal.

It is estimated that some 10 per cent of all employees in Canada do not come under the jurisdiction of any of the provinces but rather come under the jurisdiction of the federal government as far as labour legislation is concerned. Our proposal is one that will guarantee to each and every one of this large group of Canadian workers exceeding several hundred thousand in number the right to a minimum of eight statutory holidays a year; and if for some reason or other they were obliged to work on such holidays they would be entitled to what already prevails in the case of many agreements between employers and employees; that is to say, they would have the right to claim pay for that day as well as double pay for having worked on that particular day. That is in addition to the normal pay for the day would be received by all those who were working.

I know the argument that has been used year after year in opposition to legislation of this kind, namely that matters of this kind are best left to the process of negotiation. However once the people of Canada as a whole accept a certain attitude and once most of the workers involved already have these concessions by the process of negotiation, I submit that it then becomes time for parliament to legislate in order to force, if necessary, those employers who do not comply with accepted standard practice also to grant to their own employees the concessions, rights and privileges that most other workers now have.

Most of our provincial legislatures have now enacted statutory holidays legislation. In the interests of the many workers involved we feel that the national government ought to do the same for workers coming under its particular jurisdiction.

A number of years ago we used to argue for a bill calling for annual vacations with pay for all those workers coming under national labour jurisdiction. At that time the government argued that this matter was best left to the process of negotiation. At this time I want to give the government full marks for having enacted in its first parliament after the 1957 election—I believe it was its first parliament—in fact a vacations with pay bill. I hope the day is not far distant when the government will also see its way clear to round out, if you wish to call it that, its existing labour legislation by providing under law the right of every worker coming within its field of authority to a minimum of eight statutory holidays a year.

I have looked at the debates, especially the one that took place in this house on December 13, 1957 when Mr. Stanley Knowles, the former member for Winnipeg North Centre, introduced a bill almost identical to this one, as he had so often done in the past. After Mr. Knowles had spoken I am pleased to note that the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Small), who is still a member of the house, rose in his place and endorsed the principle of the bill. His main complaint seemed to be that the bill did not go far enough. In his opinion there ought to be legislation to provide for at least one statutory holiday in each and every calendar month. He expressed a little bit of concern about the employer of only one, two or three men or in other words the small enterpriser in Canada. If one looks at the class of workers who come under federal labour jurisdiction he immediately realizes that there are in effect no employers of only a very limited number of men whose employees come under the jurisdiction of the national government.

The bill itself lists most of the major employers of labour who would be affected by labour legislation passed by this parliament. In the main the industries concerned are Canadian railways; Canadian steamship lines; those operating aerodromes, aircraft and lines of air transportation; radio broadcasting stations; banks and banking and enterprises of this kind. It is therefore really not right to argue that this bill would penalize the small enterpriser in Canada inasmuch as the small enterpriser is not involved to any degree worth mentioning at all. His employees are almost exclusively under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments.

I was also pleased to note that in that debate the spokesman for the Liberal party—I assume he was the spokesman for the Liberal party; I refer to the then hon. member for Kootenay East, Mr. Byrne—also endorsed the principle of the bill and indicated that he had supported the principle of legislation of this kind over a period of many years.

When you have such unanimity in the house from the spokesmen of all three political parties concerned I feel the government ought not to delay any longer and ought to permit this bill to go through as such, or ought to indicate that it is prepared at a very early date to bring forward legislation of its own having the same ultimate aim in view.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to delay a vote on this matter, and I also know there are other members who would like to participate in this debate. Therefore I will now close my remarks.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) in introducing this bill. I was struck by one phrase that he used in recommending this bill to the house. He said that most industries have statutory holidays with pay. He said the idea of this bill—and now I think I am quoting him—is to force those employers who do not conform to accepted standard practices to do so.

I checked with the Department of Labour regarding statutory holidays with pay in connection with non-operating unions and the running trades to try and obtain some facts as to what is now being done and as to what is the custom now. I am told that non-operating unions do have, through collective bargaining, statutory holidays with pay. These unions work on a shift basis. They have regular work weeks and it can be arranged so that men can be off on holidays; and if they are not off, they are entitled to extra pay for those days worked.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. Is the hon. member aware of the fact that the extra gangs employed in such large numbers by the railway companies have no statutory holidays with pay?

Mr. Broome: Mr. Speaker, I have worked on extra gangs, but this was quite a few years ago. I can say that at that time we had no statutory holidays with pay. Frankly, in my gang we would have thrown the foreman in the river if he had tried to stop us working and had tried to make us just sit around in the bush for a full day. I do not think the point the hon. member has raised is really germane to this bill. Extra gangs are certainly entitled to holidays. Extra gangs are entitled to vacation with pay on the basis of the number of months worked, on a calculated basis, where if they do not get the vacation they receive pay in lieu.

It might well be that something along that line might be worked out at the termination of the job, because the people on extra gangs are not permanent employees of the railroad; that is, they are simply there for one contract, usually that one job only. They are construction workers, and it might well be that something along that line might well be written into this bill. It is not in there now. This bill really deals with permanent employees, employees who have what we might call a year-round job.

When the hon. member talked about forcing employers who do not conform to accepted standard practices, I think he was making a rather drastic statement, because when you look at the list of industries and vocations which do not have statutory holidays with pay you find that they practically all come under the general heading of essential public service.

I suppose that when a man enters the profession of medicine he knows he is going to be called out seven days a week. Shall he charge for a house call on a Sunday three times the charge that he would make for a house call on a Wednesday? The same reasoning can be applied here.

The running trades are paid, not on an hourly basis, not on a daily basis but, as the hon. member knows, on a mileage basis. It is not unusual in a run for a man to accumulate three days' pay in one day. He may be on a mileage basis of 100 miles, and if he travels 300 miles he receives three days' pay. There are lay-offs in the running trades. If people want a holiday, they lay-off; if people are sick, they lay-off. These jobs are based, not on hours but on a mileage standard.

If a train leaves Toronto on Friday and there is a statutory holiday on the Saturday, should it stop or should it carry on? If your telephone goes out of commission, if the power fails in your house and it happens to be a statutory holiday should maintenance crews be available to make the necessary repairs? The hon. member will agree that this must be so. Yet he says that this bill is to force those employers who do not conform to accepted standard practices.

He is trying to apply working conditions, working rights and working methods which you will find in a factory to an essential industry which is based on a 24-hour operation every day, seven days a week.

I suggest that these industries to which I am referring, and which are mentioned in clause 3 of the bill, would like to arrange things so that they did not have to work on holidays, because there must be continuous pressure on them to pay extra for work done on those days, and there must be even more pressure on them from employees who do not want to work on Christmas day no matter how much they are paid. Therefore they must have difficulty in staffing these essential services on family holidays such as Christmas day. So it is not a question of forcing these employers; it is a question that the very facts of life demand that men and women in these essential services have to work on these days.

Therefore we come to the real question. That is, whether employees who have to work on these days shall receive extra compensation for so doing. Let us get to that essential point, not the point that we shall force employers who do not conform to accepted standard practices, but should we legislate that men and women who have to work on holidays shall receive extra pay for working on those holidays?

This is not a question of holidays; this is a question of remuneration, of pay. Questions of pay are properly settled around the bargaining table through collective bargaining. I think the hon. member has missed that point when he refers to speeches made by other members in this house who have said this is a matter of negotiating between employer and employee. He has thought about it in terms of legislation to give time off on national holidays, rather than legislation which will give extra pay. No matter what we do with this legislation, whether we pass it or not, the same people will be working the day after this legislation is passed as were working the day before. I think that is the criterion. This will not reduce employment on those days, because this employment is in regard to essential services.

So I want to say that viewed in that light I think men and women who work on Christmas day and have to forgo the holiday are entitled to extra compensation, because the following Monday is not as good. Everybody else is back at work. They cannot go on family picnics and family gatherings or to holiday resorts for special events put on that day. They are deprived of the facilities which are made available as special holiday facilities. It must always be borne in mind, of course, that when they entered their avocations they did so in accordance with the conditions of employment existing in those occupations, but since then wages have increased as a result of collective bargaining and fringe benefits have changed, also as a result of collective bargaining, and it may be that collective bargaining could win extra compensation for holiday workers. I think that is the key to the bill and that it should be debated, discussed and decided with that view in mind.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): In rising to speak on this bill I am reminded of the long and often serious struggle working people have engaged in to improve their position in Canada. This is a story which has a peculiar appeal to all of us who know something of the conditions which used to prevail. I have most vivid recollections of those days as told by my father who worked in a stove factory at Guelph when he first came to Canada near the turn of the century. This Conservative party, the party which now forms the government, has a worth-while record with regard to improving conditions and the return for labour in Canada.

The granting of holidays with pay is, for the average Canadian workman, an important part of his daily life. Many of our provinces have recognized that fact in legislation. The legislation varies from one province to another and it is because of this that I think the present bill should receive careful and considerate attention by this parliament. There is a definite need for more universal recognition of most of what has been included in the bill. However, there is one aspect of this measure which, as it is drawn, raises a question of efficiency of administration, and that is contained in clauses 10 and 11 which to my way of thinking, would make for very wasteful and unnecessary accounting by employers. So that there may be no doubt as to my meaning I think it might be well to read the clauses in full and I make no apology for doing so because I think this measure should be read by everyone who reads Hansard. Clause 10 reads as follows:

(1) Every employer employing any employee to whom this act applies shall at all times keep a record to be called a "holiday book" showing in the case of each of his employees:

(a) the name and address of the employees:

(b) the regular rate of wages of the employee;

(c) the date of the commencement and termination of the employment of the employee;

(d) the date of the statutory holiday of the employee in accordance with the act;

(e) the sum of money paid to the employee in respect of each statutory holiday excluding the sum referred to in clause (f);

(f) the sum of money paid to the employee in respect of time the employee was required or permitted to work or to be at the disposal of the employer on each statutory holiday;

(g) the exact hours the employee was required to work or to be at the disposal of the employer on each statutory holiday;

(h) such other particulars as are prescribed.

(2) The holiday book may be incorporated in any holiday book or wages book which the employer is required to keep under any other act of parliament.

Clause 11 reads as follows:

The minister or his duly authorized representative may at any reasonable time:

(a) inspect the holiday book in use by any employer for the time being or any such book used by that employer during the preceding three years;

(b) require any employer to verify the entries in his holiday book by statutory declaration or in such manner as the Minister or his duly authorized representative may require;

(c) require any person to furnish, in a form acceptable to the Minister or his duly authorized representative, such information as the Minister or his duly authorized representative deems necessary to ascertain whether the provisions of this act and the regulations are being or have been complied with.

I cannot help but feel that clauses 10 and 11 requiring a separate holiday book are just so much socialist nonsense. I would be happy to see parliament recognize statutory holidays with pay but those two clauses would serve only to set this object apart as something not ordinarily required of a good employer. There is more than enough paperwork undertaken unnecessarily at the present time in the ordinary course of business without adding to that waste by this duplication of an employer's records.

There is another aspect of this situation which may also be worthy of consideration.

These clauses might appear to be just another irritation to a large number of employers in this country who today are overburdened with reports and records many of which are destined never to be consulted. Going through some offices I have been astonished at the weight of dead filing material carried. All this adds to the cost of production, and in this respect the government should be the first to set a good example.

Some time ago I was reading the debates of a few years ago and I noted there has been general agreement on the principle of this bill. Certain days have been set aside for due observance over a long period of time and they have come to mean much to many people of this country. There should be some action taken at federal level to ensure that all our citizens are made aware of these days and their significance in our national life. Legislation such as is contemplated in this field could go a long way toward reaching that objective.

While this bill is necessarily of primary concern to people in the trades and professions I would suggest that one of the statutory holidays which could be considered and observed would be a national farmers' day. The people of Canada have much to be thankful for as far as the contribution of the Canadian farmers to the national welfare is concerned. In many parts of the country there would not be many jobs if it were not for the demand for Canadian goods and services which originates on Canadian farms and in the primary industries. The fact that Canadian farmers have not been as well organized as certain other groups in Canada has contributed to the situation in which the agriculture industry finds itself today, lagging behind the economy of this country. That is one reason for the present difficulties we find in certain industrial areas of our country at the present time.

It is therefore very important, in my opinion, that this parliament take any action that can be taken to bring to the attention of all our people the dependence which all of them have on our primary industries such as agriculture. I should therefore like to move an amendment to this bill. I know this is not the time at which one can move such an amendment but if the proper time were to come the amendment that I should like to move would be that included in the statutory holidays would be a national farmers day. I sincerely elicit the support of all hon. members of this committee for this amendment when it is presented and I hope they will also support the principle of the measure before us.

I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that the rules do not allow my moving that amendment at this time. In order that proper consideration may be given this matter I want to say, however, that I am not alone in believing that a holiday known as national farmers' day should be included among our statutory holidays. I have had many hon. members from all parts of Canada and particularly the agricultural areas indicate that they would like to second that amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member proceeds further I think I should remind him that if the subject matter of the amendment is not one that can properly be moved as an amendment it would also be irregular to debate the matter.

Mr. Nasserden: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In conclusion I should like to say that I approve the principle of this bill with the reservations I have set forth today. I also hope that hon. members of the committee will remember the traditions of this party which has placed on the statute books of this country more beneficial labour legislation than was placed on the statute books by any other party in Canada.

Mr. Laurier Regnier (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am also in favour of the principle of this bill but because we have so many unemployed in Canada, instead of paying people triple the wages they earn on a holiday I would rather we give them two extra holidays some other time to help create employment. I do not think we need to offer more inducement to get people to work because they would like to earn three days' wages in one day. I think we should probably have more holidays as a solution for the unemployment problem. I believe that labour and management should co-operate to bring this about.

If each Canadian worker had an extra holiday each month we would create employment for an additional 5 per cent of the working force employing them all year round. This would be a good thing if it could be brought about without increasing the cost of living and without pricing our goods out of the markets of the world. I believe it would go a long way toward solving the unemployment problem in Canada.

Dr. R. Warren James in a brief submitted to the special committee of the other place on manpower and employment on January 25, 1961 pointed out that on September 22, 1960 there were 339,300 unemployed registrants. Of those, 22,500 were workers for whom part time or temporary work was most suitable. Another group numbered 26,800, excluding married women for whom it was not a necessity to work to support themselves or their families. The number of married women for whom it was not a necessity to work to support themselves or their families totalled 44,500. Those who had worked the full previous week numbered 22,500. A group described as "other registrants" numbered 223,000.

I submit that by having 12 more holidays each year we could employ almost 300,000 more people. Management and labour could share the cost of this 5 per cent increase in the working force. I believe that an increase of 5 per cent in the working force would mean employment for 283,000 additional people.

The solution of the problems of unemployment does not in my opinion rest solely on the government. The labour unions and the working people have a responsibility in this respect. I think if they were really given a chance to agree to such a scheme through their labour unions they would unanimously accept this as a solution.

If we had 5 per cent more people employed in Canada general economic conditions would improve even though it would perhaps mean that those who are working would have to accept a 3 per cent reduction in their wages and that perhaps management would have to absorb 2 per cent of the cost. I think that would assist in bringing about a condition of parity in Canada and the curse of unemployment could become a blessing in that this solution would result in people having more leisure and more time to pursue hobbies and studies, and everyone would have employment.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have been expecting the hon. member to relate the problem of unemployment to this bill. He has failed to do so and I cannot find any connection myself. If I am correct in my understanding this bill does not establish holidays but is for the purpose of seeing that employees under federal labour law receive pay for certain holidays so that the hon. member should really address his remarks to the question of whether or not payment should be made for the holidays already established rather than to the principle of establishing more holidays in an effort to solve the unemployment problem.

Mr. Regnier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was attempting to relate my address to the question as to how to better compensate the people who would work on holidays. Instead of paying them with dollars they would be paid with more leisure time. By giving triple pay we are only creating for those with jobs an incentive to work on holidays at a time when we have so many people out of work.

Double pay is provided for all provincial holidays. This bill really provides for triple pay. I think this is an exaggerated request. This will help price our goods out of the markets of the world. Today we should attempt to bring down our living costs. We should spread the benefits of labour among all Canadians and not, as it were, create a special monopoly for those who already have jobs. I think it is the duty of those who have jobs to try to spread the benefit to those who are out of work. That is the point I want to make.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is one that has been introduced on many occasions. I well recall my first session in this house. At that time a bill similar to this was introduced by Mr. Knowles, the then member for Winnipeg North Centre, who is now the vice president of the Canadian Labour Congress. I am just wondering how pressing the problem is at this time. I feel that all federal government employees are being justly treated in this matter.

Before I go into that phase of my remarks may I say I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) who intimated that at one time his father worked for a stove company in Guelph in my riding. I am happy to tell him that the firm is still operating. They have the very best labour relations and they are producing some of the finest stoves in the country.

This problem of federal employees getting paid on statutory holidays is important, but what we must not overlook is that many of these employees of the federal government are doing essential work. The people who are working on statutory holidays are working on very busy days. Their services are needed very badly. I think of the railways and the air lines, the steamship services and such services. They need this help very much on those days, and it is more convenient for them to be given a day off later on which they are given now, as I understand it.

The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Regnier) had a good point. He mentioned the fact that it is a case of supplying four days work rather than just more pay at the present time for one individual.

If this bill were to pass it would mean that a person would secure three days pay for one day's work. I think we would have to give serious consideration to this. I agree with the principle of the bill but I feel that certain parts of it should be studied very carefully. No doubt if this bill receives second reading it will go before the industrial relations committee.

Another fact that could come into the picture is this. If one is to be paid three days pay for one day's work, the mercenary angle may become more important than the holiday angle, and the value of the statutory holidays may become secondary and the mercenary angle foremost.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member allow me to interrupt him because of the order of the house made earlier this day giving leave to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) to revert to motions at this time.

FINANCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF AMALGAMATION OF CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE AND IMPERIAL BANK

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to thank the house for having given unanimous consent this morning to revert to motions now in order that I might make a statement.

I wish to inform the house that after careful consideration I have approved the making of an amalgamation agreement between the Canadian Bank of Commerce and the Imperial Bank of Canada for submission to their shareholders as provided by sections 100, 101 and 102 of the Bank Act. The proposed name of the amalgamated bank is the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. In giving approval to the making of this agreement, I have satisfied myself that the public interest will be served in this amalgamation and the interests of the staffs of both banks fully protected.

The banking community is one of the most highly competitive segments of Canadian business. Not only is there internal competition among banks, but they face competition from other lending institutions. Both the Canadian Bank of Commerce and the Imperial Bank of Canada are in a strong financial condition. However, the proposed amalgamated bank, with branches in all Canadian provinces and in several other countries, will be in an even stronger position to provide better and more competitive service to its customers. The amalgamation will enable a broader use of larger domestic resources and provide a more comprehensive international service through association with the extensive branch system of Barclays group of banks.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the amalgamation would be in the interests of the Canadian public. I am informed that there will be no reduction in staffs or services because of the amalgamation, and indeed it is planned that the new bank will expand its operations on a national basis quite substantially over the coming years.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, there is not very much I would care to say on the statement which the minister has made. It is one of importance. I believe it is some time since we have had an amalgamation of banks such as this in our country. I am pleased to hear the minister say that this will be in the public interest and that he has satisfied himself that such is the case. I did note, however, he stated also that it is subject to one of the sections of the Bank Act. As he made his statement I was wondering whether or not legislation will be required to approve the amalgamation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Speaker, no legislation is required. The legislation already exists in the three sections of the Bank Act to which I have referred, and this amalgamation is carried out in pursuance of those provisions, and my approval has been given in pursuance of the provisions of these three sections of the Bank Act. They are the same sections that were followed at the time of the amalgamation of the Toronto Bank and the Dominion Bank and the later amalgamation of the Imperial Bank of Canada and Barclays Bank.

Mr. Chevrier: Under the provisions of the Bank Act I take it that all that is required is the approval of the minister. Speaking for those of us who sit on this side of the house and without having considered the matter, I trust, as the minister has said, that this amalgamation will be in the interest of all Canadians.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, we were in a state of excitement behind the curtain for some 15 minutes prior to the minister entering the house, thinking there was going to be some earth-shattering announcement about interest rates, a bond issue or Bank of Canada policy; but we were rather let down in that respect because the minister merely led us in that direction.

However, I must say on behalf of this group that this is a normal development in our present financial and industrial society. We hope that every effort is being made to make certain that the public interest is protected and will be well served; that the clients are protected and will continue to be as well served and that the staffs of this organization will not suffer in any way in respect of salaries, pensions, seniority or things of that sort. That is all I have to say at this time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have been given the assurances sought by the hon. members.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF STATUTORY HOLIDAYS WITH PAY FOR EMPLOYEES

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Regier for the second reading of Bill No. C-12, to provide for pay for statutory holidays for employees and for pay for work performed on statutory holidays.

Mr. Hales: I had about concluded my remarks, Mr. Speaker. I was saying I felt that the bill before us was not a very pressing matter at the moment. I felt that the suggestion that pay for work at double time in addition to regular pay for work done on such holidays was rather a large order and would create a hardship on our railways at the present time. We all know well the financial struggle that the railways are having and if this bill were enacted at this time and they had to pay three days' pay for one day's work it would be quite a financial hardship on the railways. As I say, the railways need men to work for them on statutory holidays. Those are the days on which the greatest amount of travel takes place and the provisions of the bill would mean quite a hardship for the railways. I think the matter is being dealt with very well at the present time. Those who work on statutory holidays are rewarded with a day off at a later time. I do not think that too many complaints have been brought to the attention of the federal authorities.

As I have said, I am in sympathy with the principle of the bill but there are some parts of it I cannot agree with at the present time. I would hope there would be further discussion of the bill so that we would have a better understanding of its contents.

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Winch: Can you hold out for six minutes?

Mr. Thrasher: —other members who have preceded me in this debate have supported the bill in principle. The explanatory note reads as follows:

> The purpose of this bill is to provide that all employees in Canada who come under federal labour jurisdiction shall receive their regular pay for at least eight statutory holidays each year, without having to work on those holidays. It also provides that when any such employee is required to work on any statutory holiday, as defined in the bill, he shall receive pay for such work at double time in addition to his regular pay for such holiday.
> Nothing in this bill affects any provision for statutory holidays with pay enjoyed by any employees where such provisions are more favourable than those enjoyed herein, but this bill does supersede any provisions which are less favourable than those set out in this bill.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I think the principle of the bill is a laudable one. However, I am inclined to agree with the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Broome) who said that payment for statutory holidays was a matter of negotiation and should be left to bargaining between labour and management. It seems to me that if you attempt to force industry to make payment for holidays you are not really serving the purpose for which the bill was actually designed. The bill sets out that extra remuneration shall be paid to those who work on holidays but I think that implicit in that is the intention to discourage work on such holidays. The hon. member referred to clause 3 of the bill which has to do with the application of the measure. That clause reads as follows:

> This act applies to and in respect of employment upon or in connection with any work, undertaking or business that is within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, including, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing,
> (a) works, undertakings, or businesses operated or carried on for or in connection with navigation and shipping, whether inland or maritime, including the operation of ships and transportation by ship anywhere in Canada;
> (b) railways, canals, telegraphs and other works and undertakings connecting a province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of a province;
> (c) lines of steam and other ships connecting a province with any other or others of the provinces or extending beyond the limits of a province;
> (d) ferries between any province and any other province—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I just want to remind the parliamentary secretary that the proper time to deal with the details of a bill is when it reaches the committee stage. There is no objection to reference to sections in so far as it is necessary to understanding the principle of the bill. However, I think the details having to do with any labour matter subject to federal legislation might well be left to a later stage.

Mr. Thrasher: Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to go into all the details of the bill. My purpose in reading the application section was to inquire into the reason for the inclusion of particular industries and the omission of others. It seems to me that it is very difficult to cover all of the industries that should be covered in such a provision and that some might be omitted that perhaps should be included. I think it would be preferable that a provision of this kind should be of general application rather than having the industries set out in detail.

To go back to the principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker, in introducing the bill the hon. member indicated that the government had enacted legislation in the session of 1957 providing for paid annual holidays. I think that the provision for annual vacations is somewhat different from a provision with respect to statutory holidays. The purpose of an annual vacation is to provide an opportunity to the industrial employee to rest. I should like to call it six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might enquire what the business of the house is on Monday?

Mr. Churchill: There will be no change from what was announced last night. Monday will be a private members' day. On Tuesday we will commence with the resolution dealing with amendments to the Pension Act, followed by the budget resolutions and the legislation pertaining thereto.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

First report of standing committee on agriculture and colonization—Mr. McBain.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the motion that the first report of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, presented to the house on Wednesday, February 1, be now concurred in.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): For reasons which I set out on Friday in regard to a similar motion for concurrence in the report of the committee on banking and commerce, I desire to oppose this motion.

I do not propose to reiterate the reasons given on that occasion. I think it is sufficient if I have permission of the house to make reference to what was said in that debate, and to say that I still find myself opposed to the proposition that a committee chairman can come before the house and ask concurrence in a committee report which recommends that the committee should have leave to sit while the house is sitting, without at the same time giving the house any reasons why that particular committee needs such an extraordinary right.

As far as I know this particular committee has no special business indicated for its attention this session, and in the absence of any such circumstance I find myself opposed to the motion for concurrence; that is, opposed to paragraph 3 of the report. I note that in paragraph 2 a request is made to reduce the quorum of this particular committee from 20 to 10, again without any particular reasons being given, but I do not particularly raise that matter at this time.

I therefore move, seconded by my colleague the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier):

That the motion be amended by inserting the words "paragraphs 1 and 2 of" after the word "that" and before the word "the".

The motion would then read:

That paragraphs 1 and 2 of the first report of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines be now concurred in.

The significance of the amendment in this form is that the other parts of the committee's report would be concurred in, and if the amendment were carried it would merely mean that the paragraph having to do with the right of the committee to sit while the house is sitting would not be dealt with today and that matter would stand in suspension in so far as the house is concerned.

Mr. O. H. Phillips (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may be permitted to direct a question to the hon. member and ask if he is not aware that the motion for the committee to sit while the house is in session was seconded by his colleague the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai).

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it that the hon. member is referring to what happened in the committee. I think it would be out of order to go behind the report which is before the house for consideration. Is the house ready for the question?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to repeat the arguments which have been advanced over and over again throughout the years in this regard. Suffice it to say that all that is being asked by the committee is the right to sit. That does not mean that the committee would be asked to sit unless some matter of importance should arise.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister would permit a question. The hon. gentleman said that what was being asked was the right to sit. The report reads "to sit while the house is sitting".

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is exactly what I said. I point out the fact that we realize very well that with the number of committees set up it is sometimes difficult for hon. members to be present in all of them, particularly so if those committees sat while the house is sitting. However, this has become the traditional course. Objection has been taken in the past, and I seem to recall that when I was in opposition similar arguments were advanced.

I also recall, however, that when it came to the implementation of the power given by the house, then as now this course was not arbitrarily followed. Every consideration has been given to hon. members by the committee to the end that hon. members will not be placed in an impossible position.

I simply raise the question because that has been the practice in the past, and no harm that I know of has resulted under that practice. I am sure that every care and consideration will be exercised by the chairman and members of the committee to the end that injustice or inequity should not be allowed to occur, and to the end in particular that hon. members shall not be denied the fullest opportunity to be present in the house.

Sometimes when this question is raised it occurs to me that although hon. members have a very strong desire not to have committees sit while the house is sitting, the attendance of hon. gentlemen in this house is not always what it should be. It is no different in this house from the situation that obtains in the British House of Commons. All hon. members are not present throughout the full day. After the orders of the day have received attention those hon. members who are particularly interested in subjects coming before the house remain in attendance. I am sure that no injustice would be done under this arrangement.

Sometimes we hear it said that our members are not present to the degree that they should be, that more of them should be in the house. That has been said throughout the years. I was impressed upon reading Friday's issue of the London Times to learn that on Thursday in the House of Commons in the United Kingdom it was found that there was not a quorum present. When the matter was brought to the attention of the speaker those who were in the environs came in and the house proceeded. The fact that hon. members are not always present but have other work to do in no way indicates their lack of interest and responsibility.

That being so, I am sure that much of the argument to the effect that there would be gross interference with the rights of private members, in the event that this motion was passed, tends to disappear in the light of experience.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Perhaps I might be allowed to say one word in connection with the matter. The objection taken by the hon. member for Ottawa West had to do with two committees only, the one last week dealing with banking and commerce and the other this week dealing with railways, canals and telegraph lines. The objection taken in connection with both was that it seemed to him and to us that the over-all powers should not be taken at this time because in these committees, and more particularly in the one now before the house, the matters dealt with normally are bills of a public or a private nature, where it is not necessary for witnesses to remain in attendance on the committee over a period of hours or even days. In my experience, at least, most of the time they have been witnesses from government departments, principally from the Department of Transport or its agencies. Surely it cannot be said that it is difficult for these witnesses to come here.

Therefore it seemed to us, as I am sure it seemed to the hon. member for Ottawa West, that this was a power which should not be given until later on in the session. If there should come a time when witnesses were required to remain here for several days, then a request could be made for the power. It seemed to us that this power should not be asked for now because it is not necessary. This is a matter which I at least would like to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Howe: I should like to say that the committee we are discussing today has a great deal to do with the national development of Canada. If the hon. member for Laurier will cast his mind back he will recall that a great many bills of one kind or another, having to do with the development of Canada from one end of the country to the other, come before this committee. There have been occasions when witnesses have been brought here and if the sitting had extended over several days it would have entailed considerable personal sacrifice and expense on the part of these people. Therefore I do not think we are at all out of order in asking for this privilege.

As I say, this is not something new; it is something that has been done before. I suggest that the house accept this motion. I can assure the house and the committee that we will not abuse the privileges that are being given to this committee by this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? The question is on the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. McIlraith) negatived on division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

STATEMENT ON MANUFACTURE OF MAIL BOXES AND KEYS IN PENITENTIARY

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, last week the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) asked certain questions regarding the repair of mail boxes, and I am now able to reply.

In order to provide work in connection with the rehabilitation and training of prisoners, post office street letter boxes and relay boxes have been repaired in penitentiaries, principally Kingston penitentiary, for many years and certainly since the 1900's. Only the metal work has been carried on in the penitentiaries; no locks were repaired there and no keys officially manufactured.

However, late in 1956 Post Office Department officials received an indication that keys might have been secretly manufactured in Kingston penitentiary and smuggled out. As a result discussions took place with the penitentiary officials, and my department received assurances from them that protective measures would be taken.

Recently certain mail box thefts were committed with illegally manufactured keys, and my officials informed me that keys were again issuing from Kingston penitentiary despite the protective measures which had been taken there. This was the first indication I had been given of this problem, and as a result it has been decided to discontinue mail box repairs in penitentiaries and have the work done by commercial firms.

I have given consideration to changing the locks on mail boxes but have decided against this step at this time, because there are over 40,000 such boxes spread across Canada and the estimated cost would be in excess of $200,000, and there would be no effective increase in security. The type of professional criminal who is able to procure a key and use it to open mail boxes will not be deterred by a change of locks; even bank vaults and safes are not always proof against their ingenuity. Furthermore, in most cases where mail boxes have been rifled the box has been forcibly broken open and no key has been involved at all.

Perhaps I might be permitted to say a few words more, Mr. Speaker, on a closely related subject. It has been post office practice for a number of years to pay rewards to those giving information leading to the arrest and conviction of persons who have committed offences concerning the post office. A similar practice is followed by the Canadian Bankers' Association and other organizations.

Some of these organizations have publicized their willingness to pay these rewards and have found it helpful. Until now the Post Office Department has not done so, but we will shortly be issuing a poster for display in all post offices offering rewards of from $200 to $2,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those guilty of various types of offences against the post office and the mail it carries.

The two actions I have referred to today, Mr. Speaker, indicate that while it may never be possible to eliminate thefts, robberies and burglaries completely, aggressive action is being taken by the government to prevent such occurrences and to apprehend and convict those responsible. One measure of our success in this regard has been demonstrated by the fact that the number of robberies in the nine months ending December 31 has decreased from 292 in the previous year to 248 in the current year, and our losses of cash and postal supplies from such robberies dropped from $135,557 in the same period of the previous year to $87,042 for the current year.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house has listened with interest to the statement which the Postmaster General has just made in connection with this important matter. It is difficult, of course, when such a statement is read to follow it carefully. However, when Hansard is available tomorrow we will have an opportunity of reading the statement in detail.

From what the minister has said and the statement he has made to the house there is no doubt that the hon. member for St. Denis was well advised in raising the question when he did on, I believe, more than one occasion. In the granting of awards the Postmaster General has in mind I think he should give consideration to giving a reward to the hon. member for St. Denis.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): He will get his from the electors in the next election.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member for St. Denis unquestionably warrants the reception of one on two counts, not only because of the fact that he raised this important subject but also because of the fact that he was scoffed at by those on the other side of the house when he did raise it.

HOUSING

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASE IN LOANS AND HOUSING STARTS

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the statement I wish to make has nothing to do with awards. Because of the swift and vigorous response of the house building industry to actions taken recently by the government and the resulting very significant impact on unemployment, I wish to make a brief statement.

All hon. members will, I know, be happy to learn that total National Housing Act lending activity in January was higher than in the same month for any other year in the whole history of N.H.A. activities. Loans were requested during the month for 3,515 dwelling units. This figure compares with a mere 157 in January, 1960, and with the previous high of 3,192 in January, 1958.

Of the 3,515 units, 1,460 were by approved lenders compared with 151 a year ago and 1,580 in January, 1955, when the banks had their first full year of lending under the National Housing Act, 1954. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation financed the balance of 2,055 units. Although most of the January loans were to home owner applicants and to builders who had already obtained purchasers, a feature of the month's lending was the $8,135,000 approved for 961 units of limited dividend rental accommodation for lower income families and elderly persons.

I must report also that the rising trend in new housing starts, unbroken since last August, continued in January, the increase being 4.7 per cent over the same month a year ago.

Finally, I revert to December, 1960, which was a near record month for home improvement loan activity. This, of course, reflected extension of these loans to rental properties, including apartment houses. Home improvement loans during the month amounted to $4,683,000, the highest dollar volume since September, 1958. These figures indicate, Mr. Speaker, the immediate effects on economic activity and employment of some of the amendments to the National Housing Act were made in December last.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the house will rejoice in the message the Minister of Public Works has just given it, more particularly that part having to do with increased activities in housing generally and the rising trend in housing starts. My friend the hon. member for Nipissing, who deals with these matters for this side of the house, is unfortunately absent in his own constituency; otherwise he would be commenting on this announcement.

All I need say at the moment is that anything done in this house which tends to assist the construction industry or the possibility of employment will be welcomed on this side of the house. None the less, we cannot help but couple the statement the minister has just made with the one he made on the radio, I believe it was on Friday, wherein he stated that the unemployment situation would be a great deal worse before it would get better. I trust that the measures he will bring before this house will have the effect of improving the situation in the near future.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): The members of this group are happy to know that the prodding and suggestions and advice of members of the opposition have moved the government to action so that the minister has pleasure in announcing this measure of winter success in housing. We trust the minister will continue to accept our suggestions and advice, and it is hoped that he will have further successes and achievements to report.

[Mr. Walker.]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CRESTON, B.C., AIRPORT

Motion No. 43—Mr. Herridge:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Minister of Transport or any of his officials, and any municipality, company or persons, relating to the establishment of an airport at Creston, British Columbia, since January 1, 1960.

Motion agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

PAYMENT OF BENEFITS TO WIDOWS OF CANADIAN WORKERS

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic) moved:

That in the opinion of this house the government should consider the advisability of amending the Unemployment Insurance Act so that any benefits to which a Canadian worker would have been entitled be made available to his widow.

(Translation):

He said: In introducing this resolution, it is advisable to read the notice of motion. We find then that those concerned by the resolution now under discussion are the needy mothers. The notice of motion reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Unemployment Insurance Act so that any benefits to which a Canadian worker would have been entitled be made available to his widow.

That idea, Mr. Speaker, was suggested to me by one of my constituents who had obviously discussed the matter with his fellow workers. It is as a result of some practical experience that this idea sprang up in the minds of those workers.

As long ago as the first session of this parliament, I had the opportunity of discussing this matter briefly when I took part in the throne speech debate.

I shall refrain from saying again what I stated at that time, but I should like to refer my hon. friends to page 347 of Hansard of May 22, 1958.

Subsequently, every year since 1958, I put on the order paper the resolution I have just read. As you know, Mr. Speaker, according to the rules of this house, if a resolution is not among the first six ones to be drawn, it stands no chance of being discussed during that same session. That is what happened in 1958, 1959 and 1960.

But in 1961, in the course of this session which started in November, I placed this motion on the order paper the very first day. It happened to draw number three, which gives me an opportunity to deal with it more fully today and go into more detail than I did in my outline of May 22, 1958. May I point out immediately that this proposal is in line with the general policy of the Liberal party in the field of social security. That is so true that I am going to quote to you right now paragraph 5 of page 28 of the new statement of Liberal policy made in 1958:

Extend unemployment insurance benefits to as many people as possible.

Well, you are quite aware, Mr. Speaker, that eligibility for unemployment benefits is not transferable in case of death. The heirs cannot expect to receive any more than what is owed to the deceased in the week of his death.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that the death of the head of a family always brings tragedy in the family, because he leaves a widow and children behind him, and sometimes quite a number of children. The death of the father leaves his family without a bread-winner. Such a tragedy, of course, causes more hardship in the working classes because it is in those classes that people live from hand to mouth.

It is of the utmost importance that a family should have minimum resources to carry on for a while after the death of the bread-winner. As you know, Mr. Speaker, a certain amount of time must elapse after a decease, particularly in the case of the head of a family, before the estate can be settled, and it sometimes takes up to six months. And during that time, bank accounts and other properties belonging to the estate are temporarily frozen under both federal and provincial succession duty legislation.

And the widow and children are sometimes forced to borrow large sums of money at heavy interest to take care of their needs.

It is true that there are provincial workman's compensation laws and also laws providing assistance to mothers in need. But here again, for a case to be processed by the workmen's compensation board, in instances where death is the result of an accident, it takes time, and the widow has no money to live on in the meantime. In the case of a mother in need, the inquiry by the provincial officials takes from three to six months, and I hardly need to stress the plight of the mother during that time.

The suggestion I am making today, on behalf of the people of the Megantic riding, would cover that period of time and provide the people concerned with a minimum of money to live in the meantime. Then, under what circumstances could those benefits be obtained? Evidently, the present terms of the act will continue to apply. In the case of a labourer or a wage-earner, the application will be dealt with according to section 25 of the act, which defines the insured occupations. It would also be necessary to establish whether the benefits are regular or seasonal. That is not too important, for all you would have to do would be to look up the file of the individual concerned to determine whether he is entitled to regular or seasonal benefits.

If the head of a family dies as a result of an accident, of illness or an accident sustained on his job, I submit that even then it is not too important because the general provisions of the act would still apply.

If the widow is getting benefits under the workmen's compensation act, she would of course have to declare her earnings to the unemployment insurance commission, and if such earnings exceed the amount permissible under the Unemployment Insurance Act, she would not in such a case, be entitled to unemployment benefits. But if, on the other hand, her income is below the permissible amount she could obtain the difference allowed by the Unemployment Insurance Act.

In the case of death following an illness, it would be necessary to establish whether the illness started while the individual was unemployed, or even whether it was the cause for the separation from employment. There again, the general terms of the Unemployment Insurance Act would apply, and people claiming benefits would have to comply with the other provisions of that act.

If death resulted from an accident other than an occupational accident, the solution would be easy. The widow could then apply for and obtain unemployment insurance benefits.

Now, for how long should the widow be entitled to such benefits? At present, the act provides for 52 weeks of regular benefits, while seasonal benefits are available only for the period comprised between December 1 and May 15.

The act could operate normally and the benefit period could depend on the number of weekly contributions standing to the credit of the deceased breadwinner.

Mr. Speaker, those are the main reasons why I feel that the draft resolution under review today should receive the support of all members, regardless of whether they sit on this side of the house or on the government side.

The benefits payable under such circumstances would cause no extra drain on the unemployment insurance fund, since only a small percentage of the people of this country would be entitled to them.

In closing, I urge my hon. friends to allow this resolution to be adopted by the house today.

(Text):

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, this house is asked to express an opinion. If we accepted the resolution proposed by the hon. member we would be recommending that the government give consideration to amending the Unemployment Insurance Act in such a way as to give a widow whatever benefits a deceased worker was entitled to receive.

It is a resolution which appeals to our better qualities. It is sentimental. I do not doubt in the least that people would go along with that suggestion, with that idea, in the proportion of ten to one. It no doubt appeals to the Canadian worker, as it is intended to. If the Canadian worker is concerned with anything he is concerned about the financial position which his wife would have to meet in the event of his death. Though he might be a spendthrift and live from hand to mouth and day to day he would still be in favour of this idea, because a dollar, no matter from what source, is a welcome addition to the security of his widow.

This resolution is intended to appeal to the widows of workers, and no doubt it will. There is hardly a woman who does not live from day to day in fear of losing the breadwinner of her family, of losing her mate, of losing her loved one. Above all she worries about the financial condition in which her family would find itself in the event of her husband's death. This house should commend the hon. member for having conceived the idea contained in the present motion. Although he does not claim full paternity of it I still give him credit for bringing the idea to the attention of the house. We should not be human, we should not be Christian, if we did not admit that the idea behind this resolution is a Christian one.

However, the hon. member for Megantic has made reference to some of our statutes which provide for security to widows. I wish to elaborate on them, and to say that the idea is not a new one. Every province has statutes which are intended to assist destitute widows, in particular widows who are left with children. We have provincial workmen's compensation acts, which provide for compensation to widows whose husbands lose their lives in the course of their employment. We have the wives' and children's maintenance acts. We have a child welfare act in Manitoba under which the state provides for the needs of a widow left with children. Rights to benefit are conferred in Ontario under the statute known as the mothers' and dependent children's allowance act, which provides for such contingencies. Nor do the federal statutes fail to make provision for destitute widows or widows who require assistance. I refer hon. members in particular to the war widows' allowances act. That is as far as it goes.

I fully realize that unless a widow qualifies under these statutes she cannot receive assistance. That is why the hon. member's idea is a commendable one. A widow could be left penniless on the sudden death of her husband; she might not even have enough money to meet the funeral expenses. Even if her husband does leave an estate, I admit that it does take time to obtain letters of administration or letters of probate from our courts before she has access to whatever resources may have been left.

The concept behind the hon. member's resolution appears to be that a widow should receive at least the sum to which her husband would be entitled under the Unemployment Insurance Act. That seems to be the crux of the matter embodied in the resolution. I ask the hon. member this question. Is there anything in the Unemployment Insurance Act which gives a workman entitlement to any particular or definite sum?

I listened very carefully to the introductory remarks of the sponsor of this resolution. He omitted to indicate to the house whether an amendment of the nature he suggests would fit in with the principles of the Unemployment Insurance Act, or whether it would in effect pervert its principles. I am led to wonder whether such an amendment could be incorporated into the act or whether it is based on a false conception, a false hope that anything and everything is possible, that all you have to do is throw responsibility on the government and condemn the government for not carrying it out even if it is impossible to carry it out.

I hope that hon. members who participate in this debate will give some thought to the questions I have posed and answer them if possible. For my part I submit that the hon. member has placed an erroneous and false interpretation on the Unemployment Insurance Act. This legislation is not social welfare legislation. The hon. member believes that an amendment under which the worker's benefits under the act could be transferred to his widow is compatible with this legislation, but he has failed to prove this and I see no possibility of it being proved. It is true that this legislation has been so frequently amended and its interpretation stretched to the breaking point that those who brought it into being would today scarcely recognize the original intentions behind the measure. I am in full accord with the intention of the hon. member, but he has built his case on erroneous premise.

I trust that hon. members will follow me in this analysis. What I have in mind is this. Under the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act a worker, qualified for benefits, is entitled to receive them when he is unemployed. For the purposes of this illustration let us say he is qualified for 20 weeks of benefits at $15 a week. Under the legislation he is not entitled to 20 × $15, or $300, but is entitled to weekly benefits based on weekly reports he must make. If he obtains employment within a three-week period he will have drawn $45, but he has no legal claim on interest in or right to what he may have anticipated receiving, i.e., the balance of $300. On the basis of the premise adopted by the sponsor of this measure the worker, regardless of having found employment, would be entitled to the full $300 and could transfer that entitlement to his widow, his estate, his heirs or to whomever he pleased. If that premise were correct, of course, the hon. member's amendment embodied in this resolution would fit like a glove.

I submit that under the Unemployment Insurance Act a worker is not entitled to any certain sum. He knows what his weekly benefits will be and he knows for how many weeks he qualifies to draw unemployment insurance benefits, but he has no legal claim to any specific sum nor can he draw benefit when what is coming to him has been exhausted.

In my submission the Unemployment Insurance Act is not social welfare legislation but straight insurance, and in no way differs from, let us say, fire insurance or automobile insurance. Both those forms of insurance offer protection. The Unemployment Insurance Act offers protection to a worker in the event of the loss of his job. His entitlement to that protection is based on his contributions. Until circumstances are such that the insured under a fire insurance policy can make a claim to the company, he has no interest in the fund set aside by the insurance company to pay claims when they arise. The same situation obtains in the case of an automobile insurance policy. An insured pays his premiums but has no interest in the fund set aside by the company to meet contingencies until the insured is involved in a collision or in some other way damages his automobile.

Under fire and automobile insurance policies however, an insured is entitled to cancel his protection at any time he chooses and receive a refund of the premium he has paid. You cannot do this under the Unemployment Insurance Act. If you stop making contributions you cannot ask for a refund, because you have absolutely no interest in the unemployment insurance fund. I am not losing sight of the fact that under the provisions of this act and its regulations, out of every dollar in the fund the worker contributes five twelfths, the employer five twelfths and the federal treasury two twelfths. I should like the hon. member to explain to what portion, if any, the worker is entitled during his lifetime. I am afraid that in his introductory remarks he did not take note of that; he ignored it entirely, intentionally or otherwise.

As I have said, this resolution is very appealing; it is bound to appeal, and I think that is the hon. member's intention. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that the worker has no interest in the unemployment insurance fund to which he has contributed, none whatsoever, except on the happening of a certain event. The first event is that he has to be without a job, but under the act it is not sufficient just to be without a job. That was the principle on which the act was first built; that was the original intention of the creators or fathers of this particular legislation. First, as I said, there must be the happening of a certain event, namely that he is without a job; but that is not sufficient. There must be more, and what is that? Everyone knows that he must register, be capable of and available for work during all that period of time to which he is entitled according to the provisions of the act. By no stretch of the imagination can we say, Mr. Speaker, that a man who is sick—he may be available—is capable of work, and even less so when he is dead. But even when he is available and capable he cannot tell from week to week how much of a drain his unemployment will be on the fund. There is nothing definite, nothing certain, Mr. Speaker, and there is nothing left for the widow when he dies. Therefore this resolution is built on a permise without foundation.

The Unemployment Insurance Act is a straight insurance act with a contract being the guiding principle all through it. I have an illustration I should like to give the house. Suppose it has been determined that at the time the worker makes his claim he is entitled to a maximum of $30 per week for 12 weeks, or a total sum of $360. Has he any entitlement to this amount when his claim has been approved? Should he be unemployed for 12 weeks, certainly he will draw the $360; but if he should, as I have already mentioned, secure employment within four or five weeks, then that is all he is entitled to and that is all he will get. If he gets a job he is not entitled to any benefit. Oh, I know there are mistaken impressions and mistaken interpretations of this act throughout the country. I think every hon. member realizes that there are abuses. As I said before, this act has been amended so often that its original creators would hardly recognize it, but insurance is the main principle on which it is based.

I could give the house an example of a man or a woman who has contributed to the fund for 34 years while working at a permanent job during that time, but is required, to retire at 65 on a sizeable pension. Yet this person has the mistaken idea that because he or she has contributed to the fund for 30 or 40 years, he or she is entitled to withdraw at least the money put in, and if he or she can get more, all the better. But the act says they have to register, and they register. The next step is to be available for employment, but who wants to employ a man of a certain age who has been discharged or pensioned off by others? Through technicalities there are many people who are drawing unemployment benefits for 52 weeks. I submit that this idea would fit in wonderfully well with some portion of social legislation.

I posed certain questions to the hon. member which he did not touch on, much less try to answer. There would be a considerable drain on the fund, but the hon. member has not indicated how collections would be made or whether workers would be asked to increase their contributions. He has attempted really to create another breach in the battle that we are carrying on to defend the integrity of the fund, because to carry out this suggestion would mean a considerable drain on the fund.

I will admit that this is a good idea; it is attractive; it has a sentimental appeal, but it does not fit into the Unemployment Insurance Act. It fits in no better than a square peg in a round hole. This idea could be the subject of new legislation altogether.

[Mr. Mandziuk.]

My sympathies are with the widow who is left penniless and needs money in a hurry, but we already have some legislation in that direction. I like the Ontario legislation that I have already mentioned. With respect to mothers' allowance legislation, it could be amended to take in the widow regardless of whether she has children of a minor age. I think this could be the subject of a special statute. I appreciate the value of this suggestion, but I submit that it does not fit into the concept of the Unemployment Insurance Act because, as I have said, there is no sum to which the worker is entitled even when he is qualified for benefits.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Megantic on bringing this very important problem before the house today, but I am afraid that right at this moment I must part company with him because this resolution is not a very good solution to the important problem that he has brought before the house.

I am also afraid that the resolution shows a woeful lack of imagination on the part of members of the Liberal party, in that once again we see them taking a fund designed for one specific purpose and trying to spread it across the whole gamut of all the social problems with which we are faced today. Let us take a look at the resolution. It reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Unemployment Insurance Act so that any benefits to which a Canadian worker would have been entitled be made available to his widow.

As the hon. member for Marquette pointed out in what I think was possibly a legal interpretation, the worker is not really entitled to any benefits unless he falls within a certain set of circumstances. I am not going to go into the legal aspects of the matter at all, because I do not think we have to do so. I should like to consider for a moment just what the resolution means. Is a widow only going to be entitled to whatever unemployment benefits her husband may have on his death? Is that the way we are going to solve the problem of widows in this country? Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we need a fund for widows, but not the unemployment insurance fund.

I think this resolution points up one of the reasons why we find the unemployment insurance fund in the predicament it is in today. If we cast our minds back to when the fund was originally established we will recall that it was set up for a specific purpose, on the simple theory that while a person was working he would pay a premium which would give him at least a subsistence payment when he was temporarily out of work.

What has happened to this principle over the years? We have seen it steadily eroded through political expediency, through use being made of the fund's vote-catching possibilities which neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives apparently are able to resist. The principle of the fund has been extended far beyond its original scope. It has been extended to take in people whom it was never intended to cover under the original principle of the plan.

What has this brought about? It has created a public contempt for the fund from coast to coast. People see other people drawing benefits from the unemployment insurance fund to which in fact they were not entitled under the original plan, so they say, "If they can get it, why can I not get it"? As a result the fund has developed into a great and bottomless pork barrel into which everybody is trying to put their hand. We see it extended to business, to government, to pensioners and to the public generally, with everybody trying to get in on the act.

I had occasion not too long ago to try to establish a disability pension for one of my constituents who is afflicted with a steadily creeping paralysis. His employer, one of the mines in my riding, kept him on as long as he could possibly get to work, and they leaned over backward to try to keep his job open. When he finally reached the stage where he could no longer go to work and we were trying to obtain his disability pension, a government official advised him not to take it until his unemployment insurance benefits had run out.

Was the fund designed for that purpose? Are we supposed to care for our disability pensioners out of the unemployment insurance fund? Are we supposed to maintain our old age pensioners out of the unemployment insurance fund? Or should we establish a fund for these pensioners that would be adequate to provide them with at least a decent living?

The impression I got from the hon. member for Marquette was that we have an adequate system of social security plans without having to dip into the unemployment insurance fund. I do not accept that statement. If we did have such a system I do not think we would have this resolution before us today. In my opinion the only reason the resolution is before us is that there is a very definite need in this field, in that in many cases widows in this country are in very desperate straits. That is why the hon. member has brought this resolution before the house, and I commend him for at least that aspect of the thinking behind it.

I think we should face up to and accept our responsibilities as members of the house to try to provide some solution for this problem. However, as I said before, so far as the unemployment insurance fund is concerned I think we should return to unemployment insurance principles. I do not think there is any other piece of legislation on the statute books today that comes in for as many complaints across the country as does the unemployment insurance fund.

We hear cries from here and there that we should police the fund and try to do away with some of the many abuses that are being perpetrated against it at the present time, but I should like to say that policing is no answer. If we were to police the fund adequately we would need a police force larger than the number of civil servants we have today. The only answer I can see is some kind of massive educational program to get the Canadian people back on the right track so they will realize what the fund is for and will use it in that light.

I think it is time we did something to counteract the fallacy that has been built up in this country of a great benevolent father government granting funds to deserving children from some strange and mysterious source. I think it is time we told the Canadian people that the strange and mysterious source from which they get these funds is their own pockets and nowhere else.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is good Liberal doctrine.

Mr. Habel: What a change of policy.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): It is a good Liberal doctrine that was built up over 22 years and unfortunately has been carried on by the present Conservative government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are becoming reactionary.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I do not intend to speak too long on the resolution. However, there is one more point I should like to raise. I see a danger if we pass the resolution before us today, the danger that we will fool the public once again into thinking that this is an answer to the problem. Certainly this is not an answer to the problem of our destitute widows across the country. It is no answer to extend the unemployment benefits for six weeks or six months or even one year. It is certainly no solution to the problem. The danger is that if we pass this measure then, along with the hodgepodge of other measures we have at the present time, we will once more be fooling a certain number of the people into thinking that the job is being done when in fact it is not. This is no more an answer to the problem than the hodgepodge of social security measures we have across the country at the present time.

Instead of passing a resolution in this form in an endeavour to try to solve this problem, I say that we should first try to get the unemployment insurance fund back to unemployment insurance principles, and then devise a comprehensive social security plan that will replace what we have at the present time.

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, as the last two speakers have indicated, there would appear to be general support for the suggestion that widows in this country should be adequately provided for. However, that it should be done by means of the Unemployment Insurance Act is, of course, not as acceptable. For one thing, as the hon. member for Timmins has pointed out, it would not provide adequate protection for them to any extent and, second, such action would be absolutely beyond the concept of the Unemployment Insurance Act. In raising this matter at this time I think the hon. member for Megantic has directed our attention to what should be contained in the Unemployment Insurance Act and how it should operate.

The hon. member for Timmins has had a good deal to say about returning to unemployment insurance principles. However, in discussing this matter with people generally across the country I find that everyone has a different idea of what are unemployment insurance principles. For instance, the hon. member for Marquette compared unemployment insurance to some extent with fire insurance. I suppose a great many people have that idea, that it does compare with that in principle. However, there are many different features in unemployment insurance as compared with fire insurance. For instance, it would not make any difference whether a man had made only one premium payment to the fire insurance company; if his house burned down he would receive the entire amount of money necessary to rebuild it. The Unemployment Insurance Act has never operated in that way, because the benefits a man receives are directly contingent upon what he has paid into the fund. His own protection is related to his accumulation of credits. I do not believe that this should be the case.

Unemployment, of course, has been a serious threat to the workingman of this country, and indeed throughout the world, for over 600 years. He has struggled during the course of that time to promote legislation which will give him adequate protection against unemployment. I can only say I would be opposed to bringing anything else into this act until such time as every employable person in the labour force of this country is given adequate protection when he is unemployed through no fault of his own. This has not been done up to the moment. It is true that the present administration has made great steps forward in providing improved protection. However, the protection is not yet complete, because we have many people who are not covered by the act at all.

If the fund is going to be drained by people drawing out of it unnecessarily, then individuals are not going to be provided for properly. One of the things for which labour has struggled throughout the years has been recognition of the fact that a man who is unemployed through no fault of his own should be in a different category from those who are suffering other forms of hardship. During the long history of the unemployed this has been a difficult thing to achieve. As far back as 1300 there was unemployment and for 300 years after that time, generally speaking, the unemployed were treated as criminals. Then for the next 300 years they were treated generally as paupers.

During this century, in most countries in the world we have made some great advances in providing protection for unemployed men. However, the unemployed man has never achieved the main principle which I believe should be accepted, and that is that a man has a right to a job. He has the right to a job or he has the right to adequate compensation for the loss of that job. I envisage the Unemployment Insurance Act, therefore, as working generally in the same way as the workmen's compensation act works. Under that act a person is compensated for the loss of his job through injury. I can only say that as long as a person is ready, willing and able to work and is in the labour force, I believe he is entitled to compensation from society if he should lose his job through no fault of his own.

When we consider the great many ways in which a man can lose a job through no fault of his own we can begin to realize just how important a proposition this may be. The most outstanding example of this, of course, and the one about which we hear most these days, is automation and technological improvements. This is one way in which a man can lose a job through no fault of his own. Perhaps the decline or decay of his trade may be another example, or the bankruptcy of his employer. There are thousands of ways in which he can lose his job through no fault of his own. When he loses his job his family suffers hardship because, under the present set-up, when the man's benefits expire he then goes on some form of unemployment assistance. This means that he is required to meet a means test. He may lose his home and his assets, all the things for which he has worked during a lifetime, by reason of a situation which is beyond his own control.

I do not believe this should be the case. I therefore believe that the present act, instead of being opened to take in other groups as suggested in this resolution, should go forward and provide adequate protection for every employable person in this country. I believe that can be done very easily without causing any strain on the fund or upon the taxpayers of this country.

If the kind of benefits I suggest were provided, of course, there would need to be some limitations placed in the act. I would think the main principle to be incorporated in this act should be that a man is entitled either to a job or to adequate compensation if he is out of work through no fault of his own. I believe that every employable person in the labour force who is employed should contribute to the fund, regardless of his income or occupation. I say that because at the moment the contributors to the fund seem to be mainly those who are unsteady workers, and those who are steady workers seem to be left out. I think the civil service is a good example of this. The civil servants say, "We should not have to contribute to this fund; we work steadily and we are not out of a job." There are many civil servants, however, who are out of a job, civil servants who are employed on a seasonal basis.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is he speaking to notice of motion No. 3 or to notice of motion No. 44?

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Perhaps the hon. member's question would be better directed to Mr. Speaker. So far as I am aware, he is the one who will consider that question. I am glad to note that the hon. member for Port Arthur is showing some interest in the workings of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Fisher: I have the greatest number of unemployed in Canada at the lakehead.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Perhaps the hon. member will take advantage of the opportunity to show us when the time comes. Perhaps if some people who are now drawing upon this fund were prohibited from doing so this would reduce the number of unemployed in Canada. In fact I was noticing just the other day that almost half the total unemployed in Canada are young, single persons residing at home with their parents. I do not believe there are many countries in the world that would consider these people unemployed. Most of them should be in school learning a trade or a proper skill so they would be able to enter the labour force and take care of themselves adequately. Then again, we know that many of those who are drawing unemployment insurance benefits are married women. It would be very difficult to prove whether or not they are interested in obtaining jobs. When they are compared with the single women covered under the act, their record is certainly very poor.

I notice that information was given to the Senate committee on manpower the other day to the effect that 85 per cent of the married women registered in the national employment service offices in September were unemployment insurance claimants. Of course these women are listed as unemployed, and they help to build up the high statistical figure for unemployment that we have in this country as compared with other countries in which the same course is not followed. This report indicated also that 77.8 per cent of the married women who were registered for unemployment insurance benefits had husbands who were working full time.

Mr. Fisher: When?

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): At the time they were claimants. I do not believe the average person in this country feels that a married woman in that category should draw benefits from the fund. We do not even know, and we are not able to ascertain, whether she is willing to work, because in some instances there are not jobs to offer and it is a very difficult thing to determine whether a woman is actually out looking for work. Because of drains of this kind upon the fund we are not giving adequate protection to those who do need it.

I believe in this way the resolution before us today has a very direct bearing on the Unemployment Insurance Act, because provision for widows could in large measure be obtained by life insurance. That would be a more adequate and proper form of insurance through which to protect widows. However, the workingman in this country is not at all times able to provide adequate life insurance. It is one of those things he hesitates to take on because it is a payment he must meet every month. While he is working he may well be able to make those payments. However, with the uncertainty of employment hanging over his head all the time, he hesitates to take on those payments to provide for his wife and family, even though he could afford to do so if he were working all the time.

Therefore if we were to put ourselves in the position where we could ensure that the workingman of this country was going to have an adequate income, whether he was employed or unemployed, then he would be in a much better position to provide that kind of insurance for his family. He would know that his income was not going to stop entirely, or that he was not going to have to meet a means test which might require him to give up all his assets before he was entitled to receive benefit payments.

That is why I believe there should be some limitations upon the act. Again, I think, there are many other people drawing out of the fund unfairly. For instance, take the case of a seasonal worker. He pays into the fund for perhaps eight months. He may earn a considerable income in those eight months because, generally speaking, those employed in seasonal industries earn higher wages than those in the other fields of employment, because of the very fact that their employment is seasonal.

I was just taking a look at this publication, "Employment and Payrolls" for September, 1960. It shows that the average wage in Canada, according to the industrial composite, is $76.57 per week. However, that is only a national average, and when we come to consider the individual industries there is quite a large variation. For instance, in the mining industry the average wage is $93.50 a week. On the other hand, in service industries the average wage is $53.16 a week. There is quite a difference; that is almost half the average weekly mining wage.

So in actual fact a person might well be in a seasonal industry and earn as much in eight months as a worker in a different industry might earn in 12 months. It would be most unfair that the one man should pay into the unemployment insurance fund for 12 months while the other man who earned perhaps a greater salary in the eight months he worked should draw benefits out of that fund for four months.

For that reason I suggest there must be a limitation placed upon the amount which a man can earn and still draw from the fund. All these kinds of things are necessary if we are going to provide adequate protection. I believe that providing an adequate level of income for the workingman would overcome many of the other difficulties in which he is placed, including this one that has been brought to our attention today, of making adequate protection for his widow. Therefore I suggest that rather than dragging other people into the fund at this time we should place a limitation upon the amount of wages a man can earn and still draw benefit from the fund.

For the purpose of setting forth these principles that I think should be contained in the act I have used the figure of $4,000. The reason I use that figure is that it is just on the national average that I have already outlined. The national average weekly wage is $76.50. Four thousand dollars per annum, which is the figure I have suggested as a limit for the purpose of setting forth the principle, amounts to $76.90 per week.

It is obvious that here again a uniform payment across the country would not be fair or reasonable and it may have to be set on a regional basis, because when we come to look at the various areas in the country it can be seen from this same publication "Employment and Payrolls," September, 1960, that the average wage in British Columbia is $83.66 per week. On the other hand, in Prince Edward Island it is $53.72 per week. Therefore I think it would be unreasonable that the ceiling should be the same in Prince Edward Island and British Columbia. That would have to be taken into consideration in enacting the principles I have suggested. Having suggested that in my view a person who has earned in excess of $4,000, with the variation for regional differences that I have outlined—

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am very much interested in resolution No. 44, which has been placed on the order paper by the hon. member who is speaking. I am also interested not only in the resolution to which we are supposedly addressing our minds, but the next one and the one after that, which I hope we may get a chance to debate today.

I suggest, with all deference to the very fine speech the hon. member is making, that he is off the point of the resolution that is before us, which deals with amending the Unemployment Insurance Act so that the benefits payable to any Canadian worker would be payable to his widow. I suggest that if you look closely at resolution No. 44, which the hon. member has been able to give us in great detail, you will find he is making a splendid speech supporting that resolution. I submit that this is out of order. I hope we can hear him on this one some future date.

Mr. Thrasher: Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to discuss the Unemployment Insurance Act without discussing the whole act. It is very difficult to take out one part of the act or suggest an amendment to one part of the act and discuss it without bringing in the ramifications and effects it would have on the whole of the act, the original purpose of the act, the principles on which it was founded and the purposes it presently serves. It seems to me it would be very difficult if we attempted to confine the hon. member to the very narrow limits which this resolution encompasses. It seems to me that if we are to have a proper discussion of this resolution we have to take in the whole ambit of the act.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member who has the floor anything to say about the line he has been following, to which exception has been taken?

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have indicated that in connection with this resolution that is before us my feeling is that if the Unemployment Insurance Act carried out the principles upon which it was founded, and extended them to the level to which they should be extended, it would be unnecessary to undertake the course of action advocated by the hon. member for Megantic.

In order to demonstrate that, I believe it is necessary to indicate clearly how I feel the act should operate within its present principles, without extending it to bringing in this new class that would be brought in by the hon. member for Megantic.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I just say a word on this subject. One does not like to interfere with a speech in which an hon. gentleman is engaged, obviously with the desirability of making a constructive suggestion, but I think it is difficult not to accede to the intervention of the hon. member for Port Arthur.

We have before us a specific resolution, and of course thus far the debate has covered a very wide range. If we are going to allow that to take place we will want, of course, to discuss some very fundamental matters affecting the fund, matters that have already been raised in this house and to which the government has not directed its attention or given any proper response.

In addition, this is a device—possibly not deliberately employed by the hon. member —being very adroitly employed by him to circumvent the practice which has prevailed in regard to the methods used to give priority to resolutions that appear under notices of motions. The resolution now before the house is the resolution put forward by the hon. member for Megantic. The resolution to which the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has been addressing himself is the last resolution listed under notices of motion. In other words, as a result of what the hon. member has been doing he has been able to discuss his resolution ahead of all the other resolutions that precede it. Included in that number would be resolution No. 25, in my name, asking the house to give consideration to the following:

I am simply pointing out that I would be perfectly justified in rising to discuss that resolution which I am sure will commend itself to every member of this house. I should be amazed if the government were to oppose that resolution. If the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway can discuss his resolution, there is no reason why we cannot discuss our respective resolutions, nor is there any reason why we cannot engage now—and this might be a very desirable thing—in a real debate upon the fundamental point, namely that the fund which would make these various measures possible is in a very perilous state.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, hon. gentlemen say "order" but they did not say "order" a few moments ago. They only raise objection when some member of the Liberal party in particular seeks to put the house right.

Mr. Speaker: There is no doubt in my mind that the point of order is well taken. Without leave of the house the debate cannot be extended to embrace the other two resolutions, which are quite easily distinguishable and separate from the resolution now before the house. This is a very narrow resolution which calls for an extension of the benefits available to the worker under the act to his widow, and I must ask hon. members to observe the normal practice of debate and keep to the point which is before us.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I wonder if I might say a word on the question of anticipating a later resolution? It is quite evident that that resolution will never come before the house this session. It would therefore be impossible to use the argument that I am anticipating that resolution and debating it before it comes to the house. I might add that I think it would be impossible to discuss this question without going into the principles of the act. Otherwise one could only say "I want them in" or "I want them out". I do not see how it would be possible to present any arguments. However, I am sure the hon. member for Essex East will feel that he has achieved his purpose in preventing the proposals I have here being put before the house. I am sure he does not want to see them discussed.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot accede to the proposition which the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway is making. It is the rule of relevancy which is involved, not the rule of anticipation, and unless the house gives some direction that all three resolutions may be debated, or waives its customary practice in respect of relevancy in debate, the hon. member will have to confine his remarks to the matter which is before us.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Naturally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to obey your ruling. However, I find it difficult to visualize what that would entail because, as I say, I do not know what arguments can be presented in support of my contention that these people should not be covered as suggested in this resolution unless I am free to suggest how I think the act should operate. It is difficult to deal directly with the proposition I have been putting forward. I have indicated, however, that I feel that if the act were properly drafted it would be unnecessary to include these people, and I do not see how I can pursue that argument without being allowed to say how I think the act should operate. Perhaps Your Honour might offer some guidance. I do not think it is sufficient for me to rise and simply say that I am not in favour of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can help the hon. member. If he would look upon this resolution as calling for an amendment to the act in the particular which is mentioned, that is, to provide that in the event of the death of a member entitled to benefits his widow could have those benefits, he would see that the amendment would not open up the whole of the Unemployment Insurance Act, which deals with countless other propositions.

It seems to me that this is a clearly distinguishable and fairly narrow resolution, and I should not be doing my duty if I allowed the debate to stray from a course which can be clearly charted, particularly as objection has been taken.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): In the light of Your Honour's ruling I shall have to omit some of the remarks I had wished to make and reserve them until a later time. However, I do wish to say that in my opinion the act at the present time is not providing adequate benefits for the workingmen in this country. They are not protected for long enough, and they are not protected at a sufficiently high level. Before any other group is offered any further protection under this act I want to see the act provide, as it should for the working people of this country, adequate benefits at an adequate level.

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): I am rising to support the motion. It seems to me that this resolution is designed to give a measure of protection to a class of people who need it badly at a particular time. In addition, it seems to me, it is in keeping with the spirit of the act. I am aware that the Unemployment Insurance Act cannot be extended into the whole field of welfare, but this particular resolution is designed to deal with one particular aspect of it, namely making available to the widow the benefits which the husband would have received had he lived, benefits which he would have used in the support of his wife and family.

The intention is clearly to make it possible for the widow to receive the benefits for which her husband had paid while he was alive. For instance, if the man had paid contributions under the Unemployment Insurance Act and had qualified for benefit and died, this resolution would allow the widow to receive the benefits to which he would have been entitled. As hon. members know, the time immediately after death is a very awkward time for the family. It is immediately after the death of the breadwinner that assistance is needed.

I do not think I need go into the humanitarian aspects of the motion. Everyone knows the acute need which exists, particularly in the homes of those people who depend on daily work for daily bread. It has been suggested that the motion has sentimental value. I would rather say it is humanitarian in its intention and eminently practicable. I have great pleasure in supporting a bill which deals with this specific need and meets a specific lack in the present Unemployment Insurance Act.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, the principle of this resolution commends itself in some ways, but such legislation would be very difficult to apply because, when for instance the head of the family dies while working, the widow is entitled to the benefits provided by the workmen's compensation act, which applies in all this country's provinces. If that is not the case, a widow with children under 16 years of age may receive the pension for needy mothers, or an old age pension. Moreover, in the province of Quebec, when the pension for needy mothers or the old age pension proves inadequate, the person concerned can go to a social service centre where her case receives serious consideration and she is, under certain conditions, granted an additional monthly allowance in cash to supplement her revenue.

The hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) said a few moments ago that the widow is not entitled to an allowance until some time after her husband's death. I shall therefore remind him that, in the province of Quebec, the widow may appeal to a social service centre, and until she is able to get a needy mothers' pension or any other pension, the social centre will supply the amounts required for her own and her children's support.

To my mind, the formula advocated by the hon. member for Megantic will be difficult to apply even if it should apply to some special case.

If my memory does not deceive me and my information is correct, any employee, who retires at the age of 65, for instance, after regularly contributing to the unemployment insurance fund may, under a section of the Unemployment Insurance Act be authorized by the government to draw the unused portion of his benefits for several months. Now if the said employee happens to die during a period in which he was receiving unemployment insurance benefits, and before they are exhausted, the Unemployment Insurance Act might be amended so as to allow the widow of the beneficiary to draw the portion of benefits to which her husband was still entitled.

To my mind, the Unemployment Insurance Act should be completely amended and transformed, and even have its title changed into employment insurance act.

Recently, a distinguished canon of the diocese of Joliette, whom I shall not name, sent me an editorial, asking that such an amendment be introduced in this house. I shall later have the opportunity of dealing with this matter when we discuss the labour estimates.

I believe it will also be advisable to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act so as to allow farmers, hospital employees, seasonal workers, and even those who are working in a family business, to benefit under that legislation, and I strongly urge the government of the province of Quebec to approach the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) and suggest that employees of the department of highways in the province of Quebec, especially part-time workers, be allowed to qualify under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say those few words in connection with this resolution. I know that its aim is limited, and that it is somewhat difficult for us to speak in a more general way on the Unemployment Insurance Act. There would be a great deal to say on this matter in the interest of the people of Canada. But I shall limit myself to stating that the motion introduced by the hon. member for Megantic, is substantially good legislation and, even if it were very difficult to apply, certainly deserves to be discussed, and in some cases applied, so as to make unemployment benefits available to widows.

(Text):

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the speeches made by the hon. member for Megantic, the sponsor of this resolution, and the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, who spoke in support of it. I welcome this resolution because it serves to highlight a problem we have in Canada. It underlines the fact that we do not have a comprehensive social security system in this country. I regret that history has shown that we adopt our social security system by bits and pieces. Over the years new items of legislation have been introduced, but even today we realize that many people deserving of consideration on the part of society are not receiving the required consideration.

I have examined the social security systems in other nations of the western world. Only the Netherlands has a system that is more complicated and piecemeal than ours. In most nations of the world the problem of social security has been tackled in one fell swoop.

I regret that I must oppose the resolution now before us because it is a violation of the basic principles of the Unemployment Insurance Act. May I underline the word "insurance". I give the sponsor of this resolution full marks for having regard for the widows of men who die while they are enjoying unemployment insurance benefits. However, may I ask the hon. gentleman what consideration he would give those widows after the expiry of those benefits? After all, we know there is a limit to the number of months a man can enjoy benefits under this legislation. Worthy as her cause may be, to appeal on behalf of the widow for only those limited months during which her deceased husband would have been in receipt of unemployment insurance appears to be most inadequate.

If we had a transferrable, portable pension plan as advocated by hon. members of this group over the years, and if we had a comprehensive social security plan we would not have to worry about the idiosyncrasies of existing legislation. We would not have, in the light of important national problems, to move resolutions of relatively minor importance even though they may be of major significance to the individuals involved at the time. I am rather disappointed that a spokesman for the Liberal party attempts to involve this house in a day long debate on a minor resolution having to do with only one of our social security laws in order to obtain benefits for a very limited number of people. We in our group humbly submit that the time of this house could be put to better use and even the attendance in this house might be greatly enhanced if we were to engage in an all-out campaign to replace the existing piecemeal legislation that we now have with an over-all basic social security law.

We have pensions for the blind; we have pensions for the handicapped; we have old age pensions; we have pensions for those over 70; we have pensions for veterans; we have pensions for the burnt-out veterans; we have pensions for the youngster aged from zero to 16; we have pensions for this and pensions for that, each with its fantastically costly overhead and administration. I am sure if we analysed what the taxpayers of Canada are paying for social security at the present time, with all the overhead, all the red tape and the paper work involved, together with the means tests and all the rest of it, and compared that with the cost of a basic, comprehensive social security system as they have in the United Kingdom and in most of the other western nations of the world, we would realize that we are heading in the wrong direction with our little amendments here and our new acts there to look after another little category and the whole hierarchy of administration involved. I believe we would easily recognize in our investigation that we should offer to our people a basic minimum standard of living at a much lower cost. Therefore, we feel this is wrong in so far as the basic principle is concerned. It is also a violation of the intent of the Unemployment Insurance Act to introduce the amendment offerred in this resolution.

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution that I approve of but with reservations. The first question I should like to ask the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) is, how much would this cost the taxpayers? It is so much easier for opposition members to introduce amendments, bills or resolutions than it is for members on the government side to accept them because the government side has to find the money for them.

What the hon. member for Megantic is really doing is to add to the Unemployment Insurance Act a life insurance clause. What I should like to see set up is a separate fund for widows, to which management, workers and government would contribute, and from this fund would go benefits to the widow whose late husband has been entitled to benefits from the Unemployment Insurance Act. In other words, it would be quite separate from the act.

Mr. Regier: Another plan?

[Mr. Regier.]

Miss Aitken: Yes, another plan, not in the Unemployment Insurance Act. I make this suggestion because there are tens of thousands of Canadians contributing to the Unemployment Insurance Act who never have and never will collect a cent. They are the ones who bitterly resent the chiselling that has been exposed in regard to the Unemployment Insurance Act, and they are the ones who feel bitter when they are told by such a man as the economist Warren James, when he spoke before the Senate manpower committee, that nearly a hundred thousand people were not genuinely claimants for benefits but were collecting them. It seems to me it is grossly unfair to the honest contributors who will never collect from the fund that this should be going on, and it would be even more unfair to give benefits to the widows of unemployed men who were collecting benefits and not give the same pensions to all widows of men who had contributed to that fund. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, this would deplete the unemployment insurance fund in no time at all.

We all agree that the Unemployment Insurance Act is a fine piece of legislation; it is a bulwark against anyone actually suffering while unemployed, but it cannot be treated as an elastic band and stretched beyond capacity. That is why I say this resolution is a good one but I do not believe it should be implemented through amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. Instead, it should be a separate piece of legislation. I believe that a separate fund could be set up to which we would all contribute and from which widows of contributors might collect benefits for X number of weeks. This at least would alleviate some of the financial worries after the death of the breadwinner.

While on this subject, Mr. Speaker, may I say there seems to have been pretty general unanimity here this afternoon on the subject of benefits for widows, but I should like to point out that members of the House of Commons have not been practising what they preach. They have shown a very marked lack of generosity in regard to the widows of members of parliament. A man may serve his country for 25 or 30 years as a member of parliament and contribute to a pension retiring fund which is actuarially sound and yet when he dies his widow gets no pension. I do not believe the average Canadian appreciates the sacrifice that a politician's wife is called upon to make, both in the disrupting of family life and in being exposed to the rough and tumble of political life. I believe it would be a fine thing if we could set up a fund for the widows of men who have contributed to the unemployment insurance fund. I also think it would be a just act if we could extend the payments that members of parliament make to their pension plan so that their widows might also benefit.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a word on this resolution which no doubt has a great appeal to the Canadian people in general and more especially to the humanitarian aspect which is found in all of us. During the course of the debate this afternoon something was said about the danger that would arise in introducing changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act which, if the intent of the resolution is accepted, would place an additional drain on the fund.

The hon. member for York-Humber (Miss Aitken) favoured the establishment of a separate fund to take care of widows. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that in order to appreciate the intent of the resolution one should have an understanding of the Unemployment Insurance Act which was introduced in 1941 by a Liberal government. Under this act unemployment insurance is contributory and each of the contributory groups, that is, government, employer and employee, has a direct interest in the insurance fund. In dealing with individual claims the rights of all contributors must be considered. The receipt of a benefit is a statutory right of the claimant who has met the required conditions. In other words, when an insured person makes a claim he is asking for something to which he is entitled and is not asking for a gift. It is a right which cannot be attacked even by a court of law. By that I mean that it cannot be denied in any way or be subjected to garnishee by a court of law.

The moneys in the unemployment insurance fund may be used for only two purposes, namely for those who are rightly entitled to make claim for benefit and, second, by way of a refund of contributions if contributions were made in error. To be entitled to a claim for benefit, therefore, one must have been a contributor and establish proof of a contribution record of not less than 30 weeks. Another condition required is that the individual demonstrate that he is capable of and available for work but unable to obtain work that he can perform.

The suggestion contained in the resolution that the benefits legally due to a claimant based on his record of contributions be paid to his widow may be contradictory to the basic principles on which unemployment insurance was conceived. However, the resolution does not presume that upon the death of the insured the benefits would be paid to his widow if the employee had not been drawing unemployment insurance at the time of his death. The widow would only be entitled to the benefits until entitlement is exhausted.

It can be argued that if such an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act as would conform with the intent of the resolution were to be made it would be a precedent which, if extended, would ultimately impose a still greater drain on the fund which is now dangerously near being depleted without the assumption of additional burdens. Notwithstanding the fact that the widow could not be deemed to have made any contributions to the fund, nor could the interpretation be that she would have assumed the place of her deceased husband in the labour market, the benefits which she would receive under this amendment would be very modest indeed.

I fully realize that every insured person under the act is issued an insurance number for life. The number is not transferable and upon the death of the insured it is retired and never again used by anyone. The number, therefore, is positive identification which gives the insured person the right to benefit.

In spite of all the objections which have been raised this afternoon I would urge hon. members to examine the resolution carefully in the light of the humanitarian aspect of its intent, and I wish to commend the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) for introducing a measure for the consideration of the house which, if approved, would give a little lift to some of those who have suffered that irreparable loss which no material benefits can possibly replace.

Mr. Brunsden: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Badanai: Yes.

Mr. Brunsden: This is for clarification only. He speaks of the payment of unemployment insurance benefits by right or by need. I am just wondering whether he carries that principle into the payment of unemployment insurance itself regardless of the aspect of widows.

Mr. Badanai: The purport of the resolution is that an amendment would be introduced which would make it possible to pay to the widow the benefits accrued by the deceased if he was unemployed when he died. If he was working at the time of his death or before his death then the benefit would not apply. That is the point.

Mr. Murray Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the significant words of the resolution are "benefits to which a Canadian worker would have been entitled be made available to his widow". In discussing a resolution of this nature I feel that we must look not only at the specific words but at the benefits in general that are paid out of the unemployment insurance fund. In effect this resolution would introduce a new class of persons who would draw benefits from the fund. I should like to say that for a member who has placed the same resolution on the order paper on past occasions I thought that while his motives may have been sound and sincere he did a somewhat inadequate job of introducing the resolution. I feel that he could have clarified it much better and advanced many more arguments in favour of the resolution than he did.

For example, certain questions came to my mind immediately when I read the resolution. How long would the widow be entitled to draw benefits? Would she be entitled to draw them for the same period that her deceased husband would have been entitled to draw benefits? Would she be entitled to draw benefits for life? What would happen in the case of a man who died say next Monday and would have been laid off next Tuesday and thus be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits? What would happen to his widow? Would she be entitled to draw benefits? Where would the dividing line be drawn? If the widow is entitled to draw benefits for life, are we not in fact setting up a new pension scheme paid for by the taxpayers of this country? I feel that all of these questions should have been explained to us by those who advocate that this resolution be passed.

The hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) also mentioned that this resolution is in accordance with the general policy of the Liberal party. This was a rather frightful statement when we realize that those who were placed in a position to draw seasonal benefits by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) are responsible for some of the depletion of the fund today. Now we have a member of the Liberal party attempting to add another class of people to those entitled to draw from this fund, thus further depleting it. The hon. member for York-Humber (Miss Aitken) adequately pointed out that we must be concerned about the cost not only to the fund but to the contributors to the fund, the taxpayers of the country, the employees and employers of the country.

I was very pleased to hear the remarks made by the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin), for whom I have a regard almost equal to his vastness. He mentioned that the fund was designed for one specific purpose when it was originally set up and now, because of Liberal policy referred to by the hon. member for Megantic, we find the fund being spread across all the social problems with which we are faced today. As a result of this the public of this country, and particularly those who pay into the unemployment insurance fund, have come to think of this fund as an inexhaustible source of money which can be used for almost any reason. Indeed, this is no exaggeration when we look at the abuses that are heaped upon this fund today by employers as well as employees.

I heartily endorse the suggestion made by the hon. member for Timmins that the policing of the fund is no answer but rather that we need a system of education in this country to show the people that they have an interest in this fund and that it should not be abused. We should show the people why the fund should be operated on sound insurance principles for the benefit of the worker and the employer.

I was very sorry that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) was not permitted to continue his argument as to why the widow of a deceased worker should not be allowed to draw from this fund. When a person stands up and says he is opposed to this resolution that may be construed by some as being against any help whatever for widows. I do not believe any member of this house, regardless of where he sits, regardless of what stand he takes on this resolution, could in all fairness be said to be against relief for widows.

However, in considering relief for widows do we not have to go farther than the Un-Employment Insurance Act? Are there not other agencies in this country that have a part to play so far as pensions to widows are concerned, particularly widows of deceased workmen? If you consider the widows of deceased workmen, why not consider widows generally? Do not municipalities have a part to play? Do not the provinces have an obligation? Why must everything come from the unemployment insurance fund? Why set up another drain on the fund? Why should not other methods and means be explored? I, Mr. Speaker, am against this resolution for the reasons that I have outlined and also because I feel this government is possibly more concerned with the unemployed in this country than either of the parties sitting in opposition.

The speech from the throne contained the announcement that amendments would be made to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I believe this government is studying the whole operation of the act with a view to providing a comprehensive program that will embrace not only unemployed persons but those seasonal workers who are not drawing from the fund. This is my hope and my expectation as a believer in sound principles of conservatism. I think there is a great deal of merit in the suggestion that two funds should be set up. Indeed, there is a great deal of merit in the arguments put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway before he was prohibited, under the rules, from continuing his line of discussion.

There are many ways in which we could stop the drain on the fund. What about those who are coming into the labour market today? It has been advocated in some quarters that we should have a program of conscription in order to train the young people coming on to the labour market, and who are not able to find jobs. They would achieve the necessary skills after they had served their term in uniform.

Mr. Regier: Shame on that.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): The hon. member says, "Shame on that". His party is well known for their stand on pacifism and neutralism, but we will debate those subjects at some other time.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I sincerely hope some of the colleagues of the hon. member for Megantic, particularly the hon. member for Essex East, will endeavour to clarify some of the questions I have raised. I hope they will put forward some arguments that have a sounder basis than those that have been put forward so far.

It is all well and good to sit in the opposition and say that we must provide benefits for the widows of deceased workers. But what are the solutions to the problems? Where is the money to come from? How much is it going to cost the fund? Has any estimate been made of that? What happens in the case of the widow of a worker who dies a day or two before he is entitled to draw benefits? There are many aspects of this question that must be explored and many questions that must be answered. I hope some of the colleagues of the hon. member for Megantic will undertake this task on his behalf.

(Translation):

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I listened very closely to the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. He has repeated something that we have known for a long time, i.e. that the Conservative government has no other policy, to solve the unemployment problem, as the hon. member has just indicated, than to conscript the unemployed.

Mr. Johnson: That is not what he said. He did not say that.

Mr. Deschatelets: I do not know whether that idea reflects the policy of the Conservative party but, once again, it is not the first time that it is being put forward. Besides, if the hon. member who has just resumed his seat had nothing else to submit to us, he could very well have abstained from speaking on this resolution. I quite understand his general argument to the effect that the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) has not supplemented this resolution with sufficient details to provide for all cases.

This is not a bill. It is a resolution. The hon. member for Megantic is merely asking us to support a principle. And, obviously, if the majority of members voted in favour of the resolution, it would then be in order to draft a bill containing more details.

But, for the time being, we are concerned here with a principle, and, as a representative of a labour constituency, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for submitting that fine idea which is bound to benefit workers in general.

I am delighted that such an idea should have come from a Liberal member, as everyone knows that, from time immemorial, in the field of social security, the Liberals have always put forward ideas and principles designed to fight all forms of ignorance and insecurity. You will recall that last year in the industrial relations committee, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) introduced a motion dealing with unemployment.

(Text):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is out of order.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I am out of order, and I shall go on with my remarks so that you can judge by yourself.

Last year, the hon. member for Essex East asked that unemployment under all its aspects be debated and if such a discussion had taken place, we would have been able to examine this particular situation in which a family finds itself when the father is unemployed; but it was never discussed. And this is what brought up the idea behind this resolution.

Of course, when the father is unemployed, the family, the children cannot enjoy the same standard of living as other Canadians; they have to do without drugs, they are destitute and some of them cannot even continue their studies. It is quite easy to understand that if the father dies in such circumstances, the widow finds herself in an extremely difficult situation. Therefore, I feel that we, the legislators who should make possible a reasonable level of living for all Canadians, should give particular attention to those who are destitute. I think this is where lies the merit of this resolution to make available to the widow of a Canadian citizen the unemployment benefits to which the latter would normally have been entitled.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the workers in general and organized labour in particular will pay attention to the idea put forward by the hon. member for Megantic.

I do not think that we should vote against this resolution or extend this debate until ten o'clock without knowing whether the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) or the government are in favour of the principle of this resolution.

With unemployment at a record level in this country at the present time, the family should be given a measure of security, and I do not think the government should deal lightly with this question as did the hon. member who spoke before me. As I say, most Canadians would favour this principle which affects the working class.

The hon. member for Megantic is only asking that we declare ourselves in favour of this resolution and then, in due time, a legislation containing all the details that have not been explained so far could be introduced in this house.

(Text):

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to express briefly my views on the subject dealt with by this resolution. I assume that the mover, knowing how often widows are left in difficult financial circumstances, wishes to assist at least those whose husbands are entitled to benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. I, too, well realize the need. I know of many cases where widows are in very needy circumstances, where the husband was unable for one reason or another, to provide for his widow. Indeed I know of many cases where the husband was unable to provide for his own funeral expenses.

Some may feel that this is the man's own fault if he did not make this provision while living so that his widow and family would be provided for after his death. There may be cases where this is true; but, generally speaking, when a man fails to provide for his widow it is because he was unable to do so. Even if no provision was made through the man's own fault because he may have been a spendthrift, as was suggested by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk), that does not alter the fact that the widow is in real need of assistance. Therefore I think that the object which this resolution seeks to obtain is a worthy one and one which will meet with general approval.

I think we should realize that husbands, especially those in the lower income group, just cannot always make adequate provision for their wives and children because the income they earn must be used for the maintenance of the home and family. So that too often, and much too often, men die and leave their widows in desperate financial circumstances. I am referring to those who do not leave estates, as was referred to by the sponsor of the resolution in his remarks.

This is true not only when, unfortunately, a young man dies leaving young children, but it is also true of older men whose families have grown and have established homes of their own. I realize, of course, that in many cases some provisions are made by governments. If a man dies, leaving children under 16 years of age, the widow will receive mother's allowance from the provincial authorities until the children are 16 years of age. This has already been mentioned by some previous speakers. If the widow is 65 years of age she can receive old age assistance. There is also workmen's compensation, and so on.

But there are many who do not qualify for any of these benefits. If they are in need they can only apply for assistance under the social assistance act where this is in effect. I know that in my own province of Nova Scotia this is only paid if the municipality has agreed to share the cost, and certainly in Nova Scotia they have not all done so. Even where it is paid it is not the answer. There is still the idea of receiving public charity; there is no certainty that it will continue to be paid. I believe widows deserve better from their country. I think they should have that peace of mind, that feeling of security, which a pension gives when they receive assistance as a matter of right, not as charity and not as a favour.

Let us examine the situation which faces many women when their husbands die. At such a time there is always a need of money and often there is none. It is a time of severe emotional distress. Many adjustments have to be made, and it is at this most difficult time a widow has to face financial distress and make many difficult decisions. I know that younger women, if they have had special training before marriage, can often return to work. One sees them working as teachers, nurses, stenographers, office clerks and the like. But for a woman over 50 years of age it is another matter. She has spent her adult life as a homemaker. There is no possibility of employment for her; she has none of the skills or training necessary for a position in business or industry.

Personally, I believe the Canadian people have an obligation towards these widows, an obligation we should recognize and fulfil.

The amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act proposed by this resolution would not solve the whole problem. Yet it would be of some assistance to many widows, and it is for this reason I support it. I well realize it would not assist those widows whose husbands did not come under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Further, it would not help those whose husbands had used up their benefits, and these in all probability would be in a worse financial position than widows whose husbands had not drawn such benefits. Again, if a man prior to his death had been receiving benefits there might be very little left for the widow to receive.

I well understand also that the Unemployment Insurance Act was not designed to make the proposed payments, to widows; it was not meant to be life insurance. Indeed, it is more in the nature of sickness or accident insurance. I suppose some people feel that since they have made contributions under the Unemployment Insurance Act, perhaps for many years, and received no benefits, their widows should receive them. I do not think this would apply any more than one would expect to get back premiums under an accident policy if one did not have an accident.

I think if this amendment were adopted there would have to be an increase in the contributions made by employers and employees, and there may be considerable opposition to this. Perhaps it is not practical to amend the act as this resolution seeks to do. As to this I express no opinion. If it can be done and I repeat, if it can be done, I would suggest that all widows of men who made contributions be treated equally and that any benefits received by the husbands be disregarded. I would further suggest that all such widows receive a lump sum payment or a weekly payment regardless of whether the husbands had received benefits, or, indeed, had exhausted their benefits under the act.

I think the mover of the resolution has performed a very useful service in bringing this problem to the attention of the house. It serves the purpose of focusing the attention of this house on the gap, as it were, which exists in our social security system. We do not have provision for the widows left in poor circumstances I have mentioned. Indeed, we do not have provision, either, for those older unmarried women who are without adequate means of support and who do not qualify for any of the various pensions now in effect. I believe the Canadian people would welcome the opportunity to make provision for pensions for those unmarried women who need assistance, or who will need assistance long before they would qualify for old age assistance. I hope it will not be too long before provision can be made so that those widows and those unmarried women I have mentioned will be receiving some form of pension. The need is there, and the need is great.

In any event, the proposal before us would, if adopted, give needed assistance to some widows at least.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): The resolution with which we are dealing today is one which I believe should be considered from every possible angle, because I am of the opinion that all members of this house are sincerely concerned about any situation where a widow finds herself in financial difficulties as a result of the loss of the family breadwinner.

Most of us at one time or another have witnessed the very difficult circumstances in which some widows find themselves. I know we all feel very strongly that various means should be provided in order that these financial difficulties might be in some way alleviated. Fortunately the financial situation does not always present the same degree of hardship. As has been mentioned today there are various provisions for the assistance of widows. Some hon. members have mentioned widows' allowances, which are available if financial circumstances prove them to be necessary. I believe this is a very worth-while social measure. Other hon. members have pointed out that compensation is sometimes available. We must, of course, remember that generally compensation is only available if a death occurs as a result of injury or accident, in which case it is doubtful whether the Unemployment Insurance Act would be effective anyway because in a great many of these compensation cases death is caused while the person concerned is on the job in which case, of course, there would be no eligibility for benefit under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I notice one interesting point about this resolution. The hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) who proposed it specifically mentioned widows. As I say, that is commendable, and he is to be congratulated for having brought it to the attention of the house. However, there are many cases in close relation to this subject, which should, possibly, be given equal consideration. One that occurs to me is the case of a widower qualified to receive benefit, dies and has one or more small children. I think the situation there would be of the same nature as the one we have been considering, and the situation would perhaps be more difficult than the situation of a widow left with small children. Of course, there are many cases where as the result of the husband's inability to work due to physical handicaps the woman of the family is the only breadwinner. In the event of her death, if she were drawing unemployment insurance benefits at that time, you would have a widower who is unable to work and possibly dependent small children. I notice that these cases have not been taken into consideration in this resolution and it is a cause of some wonderment to me why this eventuality should not have been included.

This resolution—as is the case with one or two provisions now included in the regulations under the Unemployment Insurance Act—is in the nature of a definite departure from the original concept of unemployment insurance. The original idea which I think should be stressed and applied was unemployment insurance benefits for those people who through no fault of their own are out of work and available for work. The concept embodied in this resolution is a departure from that. As I said, some of the regulations under the act are in themselves a departure from the original intention of the legislation.

If we examine the regulations carefully I believe we will find that people who were drawing unemployment insurance benefits and are committed to hospitals or mental institutions probably through no fault of their own are still able to draw benefits and of course they are not available for work during that period of time.

The act is primarily designed to provide benefits to those who for reasons beyond their control have become unemployed but who are available to accept employment. Appealing as may be the subject matter of this resolution I am afraid I cannot agree with the hon. member for Megantic that the unemployment insurance fund should be used for social welfare measures of this nature. I believe that financial assistance should be made available to widows where proved necessary in order to assist them to avail themselves of opportunities for adequate training to allow them to accept work in many of the fields where work of a certain nature is available.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir), many widows in Canada today are accepting employment in business establishments and stores. Some who were previously registered nurses are again taking up this vocation. Some are accepting employment in secretarial work and many others as teachers. In some cases I have found that they are very anxious to get into their line of work as quickly as possible.

[Mr. Simpson.]

Although I do not believe the unemployment insurance fund should be used for social welfare I reiterate that some assistance should be available to widows to allow them to take special training so they may avail themselves of work that may be available.

Over the years a great deal of criticism has been levelled at the present government by the opposition in regard to the present state of the unemployment insurance fund. I have definite opinions about the contribution made to the depletion of the fund by measures such as the one we are discussing at this time. Although I feel that the amount in the fund should at no time be the determining factor as to whether widows should be entitled to receive the benefits to which their deceased husbands would have been entitled, I am wondering why a measure of this nature is introduced at this time by an hon. member supporting a party that, when it formed the government and as a result of an economy not of its making, had the fund built up to a lofty figure and still did not consider at that time that it was necessary to bring in a measure such as the one before us for consideration today.

The plight of widows in financial straits today is no different from that of widows during the past 20 years and so I am wondering why this measure is being introduced at this time when all hon. members of this house are vitally concerned with the condition of the fund. I do not believe that the unemployment insurance fund is the means by which parliament should increase the social welfare benefits which must of necessity be increased in Canada and because I feel this is not the avenue we should follow in this respect I cannot support this resolution.

Mr. R. C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson). I felt that his closing remarks relating to the depletion of the fund were highly appropriate and pertinent in the discussion of this resolution. At the same time, like the hon. member for Churchill, I agree that this resolution contains much merit. The group of people it is designed to assist represent a classification that presently does not come under the fund and certainly consideration should be given to that question in this light. However, as the hon. gentleman pointed out, the idea behind this resolution is more in the field of welfare than in the field of insurance and should therefore be considered from that point of view.

In the past few years the unemployment insurance fund has been extended to assist groups and classifications of unemployed in fields not previously considered, including fishermen and seasonal workers. This has placed the fund in a state of imbalance which has resulted in moneys being expended that were not accounted for when the original contributions were fixed as between employees, employers and government. As a result, great concern for the present state of the fund is being shown today by employees throughout the country.

In the light of these facts it is my opinion that consideration should be given to the setting up of a second fund, if that were feasible, in which could be placed such groups as seasonal workers, fishermen, farm labourers and possibly also married men who are seeking re-training in skilled occupations. Possibly this fund could be subsidized by the government, because all of these groups making contributions to it could not maintain it. Also possibly a percentage of the regular unemployment insurance fund could be used to help finance this second fund. However, I do believe that the significant amount that would have to go into it should come necessarily from the general revenue of the country. Everyone appreciates the problems that must befall the widow at the time of her husband's passing. I can think of nothing that is more tragic and no greater responsibility that is placed on a woman in her lifetime than in the losing of her husband.

It has been said that there are other means available to widows in those circumstances. However, we in government, I think better than anyone else, appreciate the red tape that is associated with any welfare payments that are available to the public. Certainly I will agree that in circumstances such as these civil servants make a determined effort to cut the amount of red tape to a minimum but red tape still exists. There are delays as well that make it most difficult, I would think, for a widow who was the wife of an ordinary wage earner, whose income through the years had been used up in providing the necessary essentials of life, leaving nothing available in the way of an estate to his family when he passed away. In these circumstances I would think that a payment such as is proposed in this resolution would be a Godsend to the wife for it would assist her to get over that period when things are most trying and allow her the opportunity to complete the necessary forms to enable her to qualify for other schemes which are available to her.

I cannot imagine how we could consider this as a proper type of measure to fall under unemployment insurance, as it was originally set up to establish protection for workers who through no fault of their own find themselves unemployed. It is a different type of scheme. Possibly the seasonal worker could also be considered to be not strictly within the original confines of the act and maybe the fisherman as well. Along with the fisherman, there is no reason why the agricultural farm labourer should not be in the same position.

All of these things seem to fit into a specific sphere that it was not the intention of the Unemployment Insurance Act originally to cover, but many of them do come under the act at the present time. If we were to place widows under the Unemployment Insurance Act we would just be going further in the direction that we find is causing us a great deal of difficulty today. What we must do is give consideration to a different scheme, something that will look after these most worthwhile categories but will not deplete the present fund beyond the point it has reached already.

Like the hon. member for Churchill, I wonder why the Liberal member did not bring this to the attention of his party and why they did not give consideration to it when they were in power. Certainly they were in power at a time when the fund was at a much higher level than it is at the present time. Undoubtedly it would have been much more feasible to undertake it at that time; that is, if they were considering this type of legislation or this type of individual. The fact is that probably the hon. member realizes that there has never been a government in power in Canada that has had a more humanitarian approach to the ordinary person in this country and more willing to listen and try to do something about the problems confronting the ordinary citizen than this government. Certainly, he was wise to bring this resolution before the house because he is sure, as are the widows of this country, that they will receive from this party and this government every possible consideration that can be given in the light of the existing situation.

Mr. W. L. M. Creaghan (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, in opening my remarks I feel it only proper to bring to the attention of the house the experience we had in the province of New Brunswick prior to June, 1957. If hon. members had had the privilege of attending political meetings in New Brunswick and had gone to a Liberal meeting they would have heard appeals from Liberal speakers addressed to the voters in this way: Please, do not vote us out of office or you will lose your unemployment insurance benefits; please do not vote us out of office or a Conservative government, when in power, will take away your family allowances and old age security payments. I believe that since then the people of Canada have been made well aware of the fact that this government believes in social security and social justice. Legislation passed during the past two and a half years should be ample proof of that fact.

The resolution introduced by the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) has a great deal of appeal to me as a member of parliament from one of the Atlantic provinces. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) put on the record the fact that the average weekly wage in British Columbia is as high as $83, while in the province of Prince Edward Island, according to the latest statistics, it is as low as $52. This fact encourages me to speak in favour of the resolution notwithstanding the fact that it was introduced by a member whose party had an opportunity for many years to introduce this type of assistance.

What I notice about the resolution is that perhaps it does not go far enough. I suggest to the mover of the resolution and to the house that the resolution may not be fair and just to all workers in the country. What about the widower? Should it not apply to him if his wife should die while entitled to benefits? What about single workers, male or female? They often leave unpaid debts when they die and many of them support parents who might be in need of assistance at that particular time just as much as a widow with children. What about a widower, whose wife has predeceased him, who dies and leaves infant children? There are also husbands to be considered, disability pensioners whose pensions are going to be increased but are still not entirely adequate or disabled husbands who because of their disabilities are dependent on wives who are gainfully employed.

All hon. members know that the unemployment insurance commission was established approximately 20 years ago. At the present time there are many local offices and about half a dozen regional offices located across the country. One of the large regional offices of the commission is located in the city of Moncton in the province of New Brunswick. This office serves the Atlantic provinces and because of the fact that large payments must necessarily be made to the residents of the so-called have-not provinces, the existence of unemployment insurance in the Atlantic provinces and in the other less fortunate areas of the country has done much to eliminate hardship and suffering. The existing payments from the fund, more than anything else in the form of social justice, have eliminated hardship, suffering and other unfortunate situations.

It is only in recent years that married women have been allowed to receive benefits. At the present time the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has a study under way to consider the advisability of including farm labour and agricultural workers as contributors to the fund. When and if the scope of the act is enlarged to allow for this type of contributor we will then witness, as we do in the case of seasonal benefits, an additional annual drain on the fund.

At the present time the widows of Canada do not have uniform protection. We have heard mention today of the widow's allowance acts which are provincial statutes. In some of the provinces, particularly the prairie provinces, there are generous disability pensions whether the recipient is a widow or otherwise. Some of the provinces, particularly the four in the Atlantic region, have a maximum of $55 a month for disability pensions whether the person is a disabled woman or a former working man. It is near impossible for these provinces to increase these provincial pensions because of the fact that their revenue from taxation is somewhat restricted.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Smith) criticized the resolution because the mover did not include a time limit during which the benefits might be received. At the resolution stage I do not feel it is appropriate or necessary for the mover to include every aspect of his intentions. However, under resolution No. 44 the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) has certainly given the house a great deal of information as to his intentions. It is unfortunate that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was not permitted to elaborate in his speech today on the intentions contained in his resolution. However, the principle was placed on the record and at this time I simply want to state that I am opposed to the principle of resolution No. 44 in so far as it would discriminate between residents of the poorer provinces.

Much has been said about the plight of widows. It seems to me that it would be relatively easy and would involve very little expense, if any, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to comply with this resolution. In recent years we have had an increase in old age security. I understand that the fund is almost carrying itself as a result of the amendment of the 2-2-2 formula to a 3-3-3 formula whereby 3 per cent of corporation taxes, 3 per cent of personal income taxes and 3 per cent of excise taxes are made available and allocated to the old age security fund.

By means of a simple regulation or amendment it should be possible to increase by a very small amount and allocate specifically a certain percentage of the contributions paid by the employer and employee in the purchase of unemployment insurance stamps. By doing so many more names might be added to the Martin statistics on unemployment. This could be remedied by putting widows who are not looking for work in a special category.

If the government should decide to implement the resolution, and to separate contributions in so far as widows are concerned, so as and to include these people in a separate category, perhaps at the same time the government should include other recipients in this classification. I suggest students attending technical institutes and vocational schools who can draw benefits although they are not, except by way of a fiction, available for work, and also older citizens in receipt of pensions.

I know a great many Canadian National Railways workers who on reaching age 65 retire on C.N.R. pensions. Because of the fact that they have made contributions to the unemployment insurance fund over the years they are permitted by law, and quite properly so, to draw benefits for a period up to one year. In many cases, however, they do not survive. If this particular type of employee on pension had lived his estate would have been increased in value to the extent of the benefits for one year. If one railway worker can draw benefits for one year while on pension I do not see why it would not be fair in the case of his co-worker who dies that his estate or family should receive similar treatment. I cannot see any difference.

Many workers in Canada have steady work year in and year out. Clerks in stores and office workers find steady work and contribute to the fund while so employed. On the other hand, some seasonal workers only work a minimum of 15 weeks during a one year period, make contributions of less than $1 a week and because of the legislation can draw seasonal benefits for a period of 13 weeks.

This does not appear to be fair in the eyes of the public. As a result, I want to say that I endorse the principle of this resolution and urge the government to implement it. The implementation of this resolution would not add very much to the administrative costs. It would not be necessary for the widows to register every week. They would simply prove that their husbands, had they lived, would have been entitled to benefits, prove the death and draw the amount to which the husband would have been entitled.

While speaking about widows I think it would be proper also for the members of this house to urge the Canadian Labour Congress, boards of trade and other national organizations to encourage amendments to many of the provincial statutes. As I stated earlier, in some provinces the widows are adequately protected by generous payments under widows' allowance legislation or under workmen's compensation. This is not the case in the poorer provinces.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, as a member from the Atlantic area I heartily endorse the resolution and note that most speakers coming from the poorer provinces have spoken today in favour of it.

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we have now spent several hours on this particular resolution. I think we have had an opportunity to discuss it very fully. There are other resolutions on the order paper that are of great merit and importance to the country, and it seems to me that the mood of the house is such that we should be getting on to those other resolutions.

Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton West, that this debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Howard: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and debate adjourned.

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE

PROPOSED EXTENSION TO UNMARRIED WOMEN AND WIDOWS AT 60

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of extending old age assistance to unmarried women and widows of 60 years of age.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this would appear to be a day for the humanitarian instincts of hon. members to rise to the surface. I am sure that the spirits of many departed members must be hovering above us and looking benevolently on those who are in favour of the resolutions which were being produced here this afternoon, particularly the one introduced by my good friend the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge). The same spirits I am sure will be looking down with disfavour on those opposing these benevolent proposals.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, prior to the adjournment at six o'clock I had the privilege of moving the following resolution:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of extending old age assistance to unmarried women and widows of 60 years of age.

Apart from unemployment, health and hospital care, the area of social welfare which receives government attention in Canada today has to do with security for aged persons unable to find even casual employment. Of these, the group which has been overlooked is undoubtedly the unmarried woman and widow of 60 years of age and over. During the years that I served as mayor of Fort William I was frequently approached for assistance by individuals, some of whom were out of work, others were incapacitated in some way and unable to obtain or qualify for employment.

Compared with the present time those were prosperous years, but of all these unfortunate people those who looked the most pathetic and who made the greatest impression in their appeal were the women who had reached their sixtieth birthday and were unmarried or widows. Here was a type of citizen who found it most difficult to obtain work anywhere.

I recall the time in 1949 when our telephone system was converted from a manual operation to a dial system, with the result that upwards of 60 women operators were laid off. While the city, which owned and operated the telephone system, gave each a generous severance allowance in accordance with the number of years they had been employed, the older women soon found themselves out of money with no prospects of finding employment in other jobs. These women were unmarried or widows and several of them came to the city hall seeking relief from our welfare department.

I have had this resolution on the order paper for the last two years and during that time I have received hundreds of letters commending this motion. Many of these communications were of a heart-rending nature.

To better emphasize the need and to illustrate my point I have selected two cases which I will endeavour to present in a very brief form. One case concerned a Mrs. A, we will call her, aged 62 who had five children. Her husband, formerly employed as a boilermaker, died after a lengthy illness, leaving $1,500 in an insurance policy, which money was used up to pay funeral expenses and doctor's bills. Mrs. A has since been unable to find employment anywhere, except for odd times as a dishwasher, second cook and baby sitter. Her children are all married and raising families of their own. The only remaining source of income she can look to in order to live is charity or city welfare relief.

The other case to which I wish to refer concerns an unmarried woman of 59 years of age who had been a store clerk and is now working only part time. She is now living on unemployment insurance. She made the statement that she was born six years too late, for if she were 65 she could qualify for old age assistance. For a woman to admit that she would rather be six years older than she actually is can only mean that a fearful future is the compelling reason for such an admission.

One of the saddest sights to look at is a destitute woman whose bloom of youth has departed with the years and where the frailty of the human body has visibly set in. As a consequence she is invariably seized with a spirit of dejection the like of which can only be found in people whose creeping despair reflects the extremes of adversity.

In the statements of Liberal policy adopted by the national Liberal convention held in Ottawa in January, 1958, in the resolution on social security there is a provision for the extension of old age assistance to unmarried women and widows of 60 years of age. The critics of this proposed legislation may point out the cost to the government if the recommendations contained in this resolution were to be enacted; it will certainly cost money, but I dare say that with a close examination of the facts it can be done.

I would propose that the present contributions to the universal old age pension fund of 3 per cent of income, 3 per cent of corporation tax and 3 per cent of sales tax, which was increased from 2 per cent to 3 per cent in 1959, be increased to 3½ per cent. This would enable the government to not only provide a pension for unmarried women and widows of 60 years of age, but would leave enough to boost the present pension of $55 a month.

At the same time, a higher contribution would have an anti-inflationary effect, thus keeping the value of the pension more stable, and with the development of the country and rise in national production it can be expected that pensions will be increased again in the future.

If and when the government proposes some changes in the old pension scheme, such as the suggestion made by Professor Robert Clark of the University of British Columbia, who made a deep study of the American scheme which is financed by workers and mangement contributions, it would be logical for the government to add the contributory phase so that pensioners could reap the benefit of their own contributions. The introduction of a contributory plan would make possible a reduction from the age of 70 to 65 for men and for women in general to the age of 60.

In any contributory plan, however, pensions should be made portable so that the worker would be able to bring to the new job the pension benefits saved during his or her earlier employment. This would reduce the pension costs to the new employer and make him more ready to hire the older man or the older woman. I wish to make it clear that by portable pension I mean that all the contributions made by both the employee and the employer are to be transferred from the former job to the new job.

The prospects for the future of our country are much brighter than they appear on the horizon at the present time, and with faith and good management there should be no depression in the vision of Canadians anywhere. Our country is going to grow and increase in wealth beyond the optimist's wildest dream, and it should be our purpose to make life a little bit easier for those who have made their contribution to the sum total of our national heritage and whose fortunes have not been commensurate with what they gave Canada. To these citizens, a reasonable standard of living should be provided by the nation.

Australia, Belgium, Denmark, Greece, Iran, Israel, the Union of South Africa and the United Kingdom; all these countries have set the minimum pensionable age for women at 60, five years lower than the age for men. In countries such as Brazil, the Dominican Republic, France, New Zealand, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Thailand and Turkey, both men and women retire and receive pensions at 60 years of age. In Russia and Japan men receive pensions at 60 and women receive pensions at 55. I have taken these facts from the International Labour Review of October 1955. In 1956 the United States brought the retirement age for women down from 65 to 62, the retirement age for men remaining at 65 in that country. Here I wish to quote from the same review at page 266:

> It is very important for the pensionable age to be adjusted to the security needs of older workers, since the essential purpose of old age pensions is to deal with such needs... The two main causes of involuntary loss of income on the part of aging workers are loss of ability to work and loss of ability to find a job even while still capable of working. Employment statistics often indicate that women tend to encounter difficulty in remaining in employment at an earlier age than men. Old age benefits have as a purpose not only the aiding of disabled and unemployed older workers. They should also enable all aged workers, if they wish to enjoy a period of leisure and rest following a long working life, to do so.

In answer to an inquiry sent out by the commission on the status of women of the United Nations economic and social council, one international group replied that some of its affiliates did consider earlier retirement for women, and I quote:

> A fair compensation for the special burdens connected with motherhood and care for the family carried by the majority of women, a burden which is particularly heavy for the great mass of women who live in poor economic circumstances.

Since age of retirement has a direct relationship to age of pension, the same reason could be given for women receiving the old age pension at an earlier age.

How can we justify the retirement of air force officers at various ages between 45 and 50 with pensions up to $6,000 and $7,000 a year at a time when most of these men have an opportunity of resuming a gainful career in other fields, while at the same time denying a miserly pension of $55 per month to destitute women of 60 years? I do not criticize a policy which was designed to guarantee certain changes and advancement for men in the services in time of war. I merely wish to call attention to a situation which should be rectified by bringing about a policy more in keeping with the times.

It could also be argued that it is possible to establish flexible pension provisions between pensionable age and retirement age. The method of applying this formula would be a reduction of pension when the person concerned continues to work.

It has also been said unemployment insurance can take care of persons when they are not of retirement age. My answer is that unemployment insurance can only deal with short term periods. Unemployment insurance is not organized to handle the problem of semipermanent unemployment because of age. Hence, old age pension benefits must be adopted to fill the gap.

It must be realized that the principal factor influencing the age at which men or women need pensions should be the difficulty they meet in finding and retaining employment as they advance in age. There is hardly any need for me to re-emphasize the accepted fact that, with the exception of nurses and domestics, women reaching 60 years are the first casualties in the labour market.

This resolution, however, does not recommend a pension for all women of 60 years of age. It limits the benefit to unmarried women and widows. However, I would certainly have no objection if the government would extend the same benefit to all women of 60 years of age regardless of marital status.

In a summary prepared by the United Nations economic council commission on the status of women the suggestion was made that if the age were lowered with respect to the eligibility of women for pensions professional women would be placed at a disadvantage to the point that an employer might be inclined to discriminate against them and dismiss a woman in preference to a man because she would be entitled to a pension. Another point made was that employers might replace older women workers with younger employees who would work for less wages even though the older women were quite capable of performing their work.

These and other objections are superficial as can be seen from the action already taken by several nations which I have already mentioned. In spite of arguments to the contrary, 19 nations of the world have lowered to 60 the eligibility age of women with respect to pension benefits and no less than 4 countries in the western world are paying pension benefits to women at age 55, namely Italy, Japan, Panama and Argentina. This by no means exhausts the list.

The humanitarian aspect of this resolution is such as should move not only this government but even a heart of stone. Its implementation would bring hope where there is now dejection, would lift the spirit of a human being from the dark recesses of despair to the heights of light and contentment in the declining years of a woman's life.

In conclusion, I express the hope that every hon. member of this house irrespective of where he sits will want to be counted as favouring this resolution not because of any political consideration but because he supports the view that beneath the exterior of a poor, destitute woman beats a heart as noble as any of those whose fortunes enable them to bedeck themselves with the finery which wealth can provide.

(Translation):

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank and congratulate the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) who amazed us with his pathos and in particular with the interest he showed for a category of citizens who seem to deserve official attention.

May I also thank him for having touched lightly—without political passion, at the beginning of his remarks—on the fact that Canada looks prosperous to him. We, on this side of the house, have never doubted it, and I could not help wishing that his party's horsemen of the Apocalypse were there on the front benches to listen carefully to his remarks.

Mr. Deschatelets: We will be in office a year from now.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, our friends in the opposition are putting forward a measure which, I think, has some merit. As a representative of the working class, of a constituency which has experienced misery, even during the most prosperous war years, when our Liberal friends were in office—

[Mr. Badanai.]

Mr. Deschatelets: You should try to find better arguments than those.

Mr. Valade: —I may say that I agree with the resolution now being considered. However, I wish the resolution went further and were considered without any political consideration.

I carefully followed this afternoon the remarks made about resolution No. 3, which has fairly close connection with that of the hon. member for Fort William.

At that moment I heard my good friend, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets)—who delights in applying a few nicknames to me—make some remarks of a political nature. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will try to discuss the problem objectively and submit to the house the social considerations I intend to put forward.

However, may I revert to the argument which the hon. member for Fort William most eloquently put forward when, in his opening remarks, he mentioned the case of the 60 year old Mrs. A who was utterly destitute.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I myself have in mind an identical case which was brought to my attention, but the person concerned was only 59 years old. Consequently, I wonder why the hon. member for Fort William put in that restriction in his resolution, and set a 60 year limit instead of extending it further.

Mr. Speaker, in this resolution I do not like the words "old age assistance". I would have preferred a more eloquent expression to recognize, as stated by the sponsor of this resolution, the merits and commendable contributions made to our country by those elderly people. I feel that to consider as old someone who is 60 is not in keeping with the respect I have for that category of people. As I say, I would have preferred a much more eloquent description.

Mr. Speaker, if the principle is basically excellent, it should be fully studied, for we would not like to see inadequate proposals or resolutions introduced in this house only for the sake of discussion, which could be used as a political stepping-stone and which would not have the immediate result of bringing any relief to the people concerned.

This seems to be somewhat characteristic of any legislation put forward by our friends opposite. For instance, when the unemployment insurance act was passed, great claims were made about the social and politico-social import of that legislation.

But it required the coming into power of a Conservative government, conscious of its responsibilities, to correct and amend that legislation, and adapt it to the requirements of our working class, by extending the benefits and making them more readily available to those who needed them.

The same, Mr. Speaker, could be said about the old age assistance act. There again, as stated by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) we have a measure, a piece of social legislation introduced by the Liberal party, but which, once again, had to be amended and improved by the Conservative party so as to make it beneficial for the people of Canada.

You know as well as I do, Mr. Speaker, what meager pittance our senior citizens were receiving under the Liberal regime.

We amended that legislation and increased the old age pension from $40 to $55.

Mr. Lessard: $46.

Mr. Deschatelets: Amend yourselves, amend yourselves.

Mr. Valade: I think my hon. friends are mistaken.

Mr. Habel: No, it was $46.

Mr. Valade: The pension was raised from $40 to $46, and we increased it to $55. That is a plain fact which our friends do not like to hear, but I believe it is my duty to point to the act itself. I would ask our friends to look up the statutes and see for themselves, as I did, the substantial improvements which the Conservative party had to introduce in their so-called social legislation.

Mr. Habel: One should be fair.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, in order to protect the public and certain classes of people, a legislation must be efficient and adequate. The needs of such classes must be carefully considered. There should be no groping in the dark when dealing with such significant legislation as this.

Since I have been sitting in this house, I heard on many occasions, little else but criticism from the opposition with regard to the enormous deficits registered each year by the Conservative government. As for the Liberals they boasted of having left the country with a surplus of nearly $900,000,000.

Mr. Deschatelets: It is true, it is true.

Mr. Valade: And all that time all our senior citizens were getting was a pension of $40 a month.

Mr. Lessard: Sorry, $46.

Mr. Valade: Forty dollars. The pension had started at $40. This proves, therefore, that when the Liberal party was in power, and the coffers were full, there was no thought at the time of the existence in our society of destitute classes needing special attention. It is then that the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) should have introduced this legislation.

An hon. Member: Quite true.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, with surplusses in their coffers, the Liberals preferred to finance the pipe-line.

As soon as the Conservative party came to power, it gave thought to improving social legislation and helping destitute Canadians. My hon. friend from Fort William should not forget that all provinces have some form of public and social assistance legislation. We too, in the province of Quebec, have a similar law. I refer to statutes 59-60, 8-9 Elizabeth II, chapter 73 and if you will allow me, I shall quote from section 22, as amended in March 1960:

> May be admitted to public assistance institutions, at the expense of the government, municipalities or public assistance institutions, needy persons who provide the authorities of the public assistance institution where they are admitted with evidence of their state of destitution, in accordance with the provisions of this act, as well as evidence of the incapacity of persons responsible for providing them with food or care.

There are other paragraphs dealing also with assistance given by municipalities to destitute persons, through the medium of the province. The federal government already contributes at the rate of 50 per cent.

From the bottom of my heart, I sympathize enormously with the intention which prompted the hon. member for Fort William to introduce this resolution. However, I doubt that this resolution has been given adequate and detailed consideration.

I should like to see the day, and I am sure the Conservative party will do everything in its power to achieve that end, when parliament introduces legislation to eliminate all human misery in Canada. I wonder why the hon. member for Fort William put a 60 year limit on the proposal he submitted to the house. Misery knows no age, regardless of matrimonial status, condition or sex.

I should have liked a motion introduced that would take into account not the age of certain people but their circumstances.

I appreciate that such a measure would perhaps appeal to certain newspapermen, sympathetic to a cause foredoomed to failure, the cause of the Liberal party.

I realize that in order to make up for the ill-starred exhibition staged by the Liberals in Ottawa early in January—

Mr. Deschatelets: The hon. member can hardly talk of something he does not know, since he was not there.

Mr. Valade: I can understand that the Liberals, in their attempt to deceive the electorate, proposed resolutions that were inadequate and discriminatory to other categories of needy people. Nevertheless, this legislation is not consistent with social justice because, while providing for the needs of some people, it overlooks the needs of others.

Mr. Speaker, I would be in favour of social legislation which would recognize the need for assistance of all categories of the needy, regardless of age or of marital status. The proposal being submitted today is obviously only fragmentary, it is makeshift legislation and offers no real solution.

The Conservative party has never favoured a group of individuals at the expense of some other group, as Mr. C. D. Howe used to do.

The Conservative party has gone the Liberals one better in the field of social legislation, and this puts the Liberals in an uneasy situation before the voters.

Human misery is not a problem that comes solely under federal jurisdiction. It is a problem that every class of our society must consider. There are social groups, welfare organizations; there are also municipal and provincial governments, which also have their responsibilities as far as social legislation and public assistance are concerned. Municipalities and provinces must also submit their problems in that field.

The Conservative party will adopt social assistance programs that will help all the destitutes; all classes of the needy will benefit from those programs. Then, when I go back with pride and dignity to the electors of my riding, I will be able to tell them that when I took part in the debate on their miseries, I did not do so in order to make political hay and to make a few newspaper headlines.

Mr. Speaker, those people know that, when the time comes to accept, adopt or propose legislation to eliminate human misery, I will be among those who cast an affirmative vote.

[Mr. Valade.]

Mr. Rodolphe Leduc (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, my first words will be to offer my sincere congratulations to the member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) for the resolution he submitted to the house and which reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of extending old age assistance to unmarried women and widows of 60 years of age.

I agree with the hon. member that if there is a group deserving of our consideration, it is indeed that of widows and single women.

During my political career, and more particularly in recent years, I have met many widows and single women who asked me: "Why do you not introduce legislation that would allow us to get our pension at the age of 60?" Then as now those women were asking for a pension at 60. Why? Because in most cases, they cannot find employment and in many cases widows, for instance, who have raised large families, are unable to do the work they are offered, I feel that society must assist those needy persons by means of a pension.

Besides, the Liberal party has always been concerned with the welfare of the needy. The social security legislation now on the statute books shows clearly that the Liberal party has always sought to help people most in need of assistance.

Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign of 1958, on February 10, 1958, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) made a speech entitled "Social Security". About old age assistance, he had this to say:

> Unmarried women and widows will be able to get old age assistance benefits at the age of 60 instead of 65.

Well, that suggestion, with many others in the Liberal platform, was laid before the electors, but it was not approved by the majority.

However, to show that the Liberal party has its heart set on giving such pensions to needy persons at age 60, let me quote clause 25 of the Liberal party platform during the provincial election held in the province of Quebec last June:

> Widows and unmarried women will be eligible, starting at age 60, for the pension now being paid to persons aged 65 to 70.

I am happy to see, Mr. Speaker, that an amount of $5,000,000 has been included in the estimates of the Liberal government of Jean Lesage for 1961-62.

The Liberal party in Quebec has found an expression which should certainly please my friend, the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) who does not like the expression "old age pension". Here we speak of "allowances for widows and spinsters aged 60 to 65."

Mr. Speaker, I am not pleading here for the widows and the unmarried women in my province—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I—

Mr. Leduc: —because in a few months hence, they will be receiving the pension provided for such persons aged 60 to 65.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Leduc: —I am rather speaking on behalf of all women, all the widows and unmarried women in the other provinces who do not and may not for a few years perhaps, enjoy the benefits of such a social welfare measure as the one which the Quebec government will be putting into effect during this session or the next.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question?

Mr. Leduc: I should like to see the federal government pass a bill under which all widows and unmarried women in need would receive a pension equal to the one which is now provided for persons aged 65 to 70.

Mr. Speaker, the government should, in my opinion, give serious consideration to this resolution and bring forward, during the present session, a bill providing help for all widows and unmarried women in Canada.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. member for Gatineau?

Mr. Denis: Later.

Mr. Pigeon: May I put a question to the hon. member for Gatineau?

Mr. Leduc: Yes.

Mr. Pigeon: Could he tell me whether the Quebec government is going to levy a special tax as in the case of hospital insurance.

Mr. Denis: Ask Mr. Barrette.

Mr. Leduc: Not being the minister of finance of the province of Quebec, I cannot answer that question.

Mr. Denis: People will be required to buy shares of the natural gas corporation.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to listen to the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) and to the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Leduc) who has commended the legislation scheduled to be introduced in the Quebec legislature.

I was right in putting that question to him earlier, because people in Quebec are a bit uneasy, and are wondering if there will not be a special tax levied to finance that increase in pensions, for they have already had their fingers burned. In fact, a provincial tax is being levied now to provide for hospital insurance. That is why I am putting that question, because people in Quebec are wary of their present government.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member seems to have got into another jurisdiction. We are debating matters within federal jurisdiction.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I carefully read the resolution introduced by the hon. memper for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) and I also listened very closely to his speech. In principle, his resolution is excellent, but in actual fact, one always wonders how to finance such a plan, where to find the money required, because, after all, the taxpayer always has to pay, and it is always the people of Canada who have to finance the social measures introduced in this house to improve their condition.

I have a suggestion to make, Mr. Speaker. It is common knowledge that I have put on the order paper a bill for the purpose of establishing a national lottery, the receipts of which are intended to raise family allowances, with rates increasing in proportion to the number of children, and also to raise pensions.

Would it not be advisable that the Canadian government consider the possibility of establishing a national lottery? I should like to point out also that certain newspapers mentioned this lately. I am thinking in particular of La Presse which ran several articles on the matter, and is now conducting a survey in this regard. Moreover, I must remind you that this project has the support of labour unions.

I am not against a provincial lottery, of course, provided there would be one in all provinces. Mr. St. Laurent himself objected to a lottery in only one province. Why? Because, supposing there were a lottery in Ontario only, and not in the other provinces, money from Quebec and other provinces would pour into Ontario to the prejudice of the other provinces.

I wonder whether it would not be important that the Canadian government consider the advisability of setting up a federal lottery, whose receipts would serve to improve our pension plan, and to raise pensions.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member is now dealing with a federal-provincial lottery. I should like to call your attention to the fact that a bill, namely Bill C-18, for the purpose of establishing a Canadian lottery is standing in his name on the order paper. In my opinion, the hon. member has no right to anticipate, and should confine his remarks to the resolution now under discussion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course, the hon. member may not discuss at length the establishment of a lottery, national or otherwise. Nevertheless, I believe it is proper to suggest that the purpose of the resolution could be financed through a lottery. I feel however that he has said enough on this matter and I would ask him now to suggest other means of financing, if he has any other to suggest.

Mr. Pigeon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me this opportunity to point out certain methods of financing. I might have been out of order at the beginning, but one should not be content to advocate a social measure. Also to be considered is the method of financing. That is why I made that suggestion to the house. I hope it will be possible to consider that plan in a not too distant future.

Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to call the attention of the house to the bill standing in my name on the order paper.

Mr. J. E. Bissonnette (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to seize this opportunity to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for having sponsored such a resolution. I am not so good at making a speech and I have no intention of wasting the time of the house by delivering a long one. However these measures are such commendable ones that I would not want to miss this opportunity of congratulating those who have decided at last to take notice of the ills of the people and to present resolutions such as the No. 3 resolution put forward this afternoon by the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) and the one which is now before the house and which calls for the extension of old age assistance to unmarried women and widows of 60 years of age. Such measures appeal to me.

Speaking as a physician, I may say that in the course of forty years of general practice, I have been witness time and again to the destitution and the extreme poverty not only of unmarried women and widows of 60 years of age but also of widows as young as 40, 35 and often 30.

I have therefore congratulations to extend to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) and also to the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Leduc) who seconded the motion. However, I have to blame them for one thing and that is for not going far enough.

I agree that we must help those in need. We are here for that. We are here to make laws for the people, to extend to them a helping hand in order not to be beaten in two or three years time by our opponents for having failed to care for the ills and the problems of the people, and for having withdrawn from them.

We want to live up to the excellent reputation which is ours. If we were elected in 1958 by such a great majority, it is because our program took into account the ills of the people. That is the reason why we are members of a government such as this one.

As a physician who sympathizes with the ills of the people, I am happy to say to my hon. friends in the opposition that I am in favour of welfare measures, but I must add: "You do not go far enough. Be more generous." I would suggest, even to the sponsor of the motion to present it again one day and to make it as generous as I would like to see it. In the meantime, I would ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) to go on with the assistance he is already giving, pending this more generous measure that will come from our hon. friends in the opposition. I would ask him to continue to the people the benefits of the Unemployment Insurance Act amended in 1957, while we are waiting for this more generous legislation that will perhaps be proposed by our hon. friends from the opposition.

I therefore urge them to be generous and bring relief to those aged 60, 40 and 30 years, and more particularly to the widows who, being left without means, with a family to support, and therefore being unable to work outside, need a generous piece of legislation such as only this government has been able to enact since taking over.

In fact, did this government not, as soon as it took office, raise the old age security pension from $46 to $55 a month, until it is hiked to $75 at an early date. I suggest that this government take this step and at the next general election I shall be happy to ask my government to double, if necessary, for people who deserve it, the rate of old age security pensions and widows' pensions, particularly for those who are suffering hardship because of their age and family obligations, and who are unable to earn a living.

The people will certainly realize and note that while we have no monopoly on social welfare, because politics should not be mixed with welfare, we do have, however, a monopoly on common sense, balance and private initiative. The people will also realize that a government should legislate and govern with the money from the people, with people's money, something we should always keep in mind. We might also recall at this time that the Leader of the Opposition recently blamed us for spending those $500 million of savings put aside by the Liberals when the people had just upbraided the latter for not looking after them. Today he asks us to lead the country into debt through deficits and to help the people.

Well, with all this good advice, you may be assured that I, for one, on behalf of my constituency of Quebec West, and as a medical doctor, have spent all my life trying to relieve human suffering, shall commend my government and urge its members to keep up its splendid policies, its good work for the protection of the poor, the sick, the afflicted, the suffering and the needy.

(Text):

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) for introducing this resolution. It is a fact that unmarried women and widows of 60 years of age and over constitute a class of persons who are very vulnerable to the vicissitudes of the economic facts of life.

It is difficult to find employment at that age and they must often be faced with difficult problems, problems which none of the existing federal social legislation can help solve. It seems to me this is an omission which ought to be rectified. Our nation has an enviable record in social and welfare legislation, but time brings changes, shows up weaknesses and makes evident where additional legislation can be brought in to round-out the social benefits and the welfare system which we have.

The resolution which is now before the house seems to me to be one of these things, the result of recognition of a need. It asks the government to consider the advisability of extending old age assistance to unmarried women and widows of 60 years of age and over. This resolution seems to me to be a worthy one and I hope it will be given serious and sympathetic consideration by the government.

In closing these brief remarks I would like to make one observation. I thought this resolution was as non-political as a resolution could be, but the ensuing debate has shown how wrong I was. For instance, I learned with a great deal of interest and dismay from the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) that the social legislation of the previous Liberal administration was nothing but wicked political devices, if I understood him correctly, which were transformed by some strange alchemy of Toryism into welfare measures.

I doubt whether the record of history will agree with this interpretation.

Mr. G. C. Fairfield (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, I am sure everyone must be very sympathetic to a resolution such as this put forward by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai). However, I think there are many questions that should be asked. The hon. member has brushed some of the questions aside as being not fundamental and of no value in any argument. For instance, there is the question that all widows with or without jobs, all unmarried women with or without jobs should have a pension at the age of 60. He brought up this matter of professional women practically forced into retirement at the age of 60, and the employed women whose employers desire younger ladies and may have a very good excuse to put the older women out of work. These are questions that, despite his quick desire to brush them aside as having no meaning at all, should be answered; and I have not as yet heard any answer from the opposition benches.

The hon. member states that the Liberal convention in 1958 first passed this resolution. I am quite sure that if our friends in the opposition thought it would gain them a few more votes they would lower the age to 50 and raise the so-called baby bonus to

40. Therefore we would have a gap of ten years for the New Party to fill up. The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) stated that this was being looked after by the new government in Quebec as no other government in Canada is doing. I think possibly he does not know about our Conservative government in Manitoba. In 1959 they passed an act, one of the sections of which reads:

> —the government of Manitoba and each of the several municipalities in the province may take such measures as are necessary for the purpose of ensuring that no resident of Manitoba, including an Indian . . . lacks
> (a) such things, goods, and services as are essential to his health and well-being, including food, clothing, shelter, and essential surgical, medical, optical, dental and other remedial treatment, care, and attention; and
> (b) an adequate funeral upon his death.

It goes on to state in this act that they will have a certain means test, of course, and that the social service officers will decide, through the minister of health and welfare, who shall come under the act. They even have an appendix to the act stating what are reasonable amounts for fuel, food, and so on. Saskatchewan has one of these social security acts, and I am sure other provinces have also.

So this is a statement which the hon. member has just drawn from out of the blue without any backing whatsoever. Our people in Manitoba do not particularly need any assistance, whatever the other provinces may need, in so far as unmarried women and widows of the age of 60 are concerned.

In the field of federal social security we have also passed an amendment to the unemployment relief and assistance act and it shows in the annual report for 1959 that after this amendment was passed we had almost a doubling of the amount of unemployment assistance from December of 1958 to January of 1959. I am sure that a great many of these people were 65 years of age. I will admit that. But there are a great many people who have come under this act and who have been helped by the federal government.

I wish to remind hon. members of the opposition of the words of their leader who stated something that I think they examine every time they go through a convention. It was put on the record on July 4, 1960, at page 5666. This is what he said, as reported in Hansard:

> May I conclude, Mr. Speaker, with one or two very general and very short observations. In recent years the asserted claims of the individual on the state have been matched by his protests against the state's interference in his activities and in his private life, an interference which his own demands have made easier and in some cases inevitable. The state cannot provide services and support for the citizen without acquiring the power and authority which is necessary and desirable for that purpose. Put it another way; more social security, desirable and even necessary though that is, may often be the means to greater state powers, and the latter persistently press against the freedom and rights of citizens who are to benefit from these powers.

It is true, that the citizens who receive this social security are helped, as indeed many of them should be helped, but those citizens who have to pay for it should have some representation in this House of Commons and should have someone to speak for them. I think the words of their leader should be taken well to heart by members of the opposition, namely that if you ask for social security you must ask for control. If, for example, this resolution was passed, there would in fact be some control over the employment of women who had reached the age of 60. We know that many of these women are deserving. Notwithstanding that, many are covered at the present time by provincial statutes and many, too, are quite capable of carrying on their work past the age of 60. They have many years of good work still within their power. So although I say that I am in favour of a resolution which specifies help where there is need, I certainly am not in favour of this resolution as it is presently worded.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I see that a noticeable improvement has been made during my absence from the house this afternoon. We now have before us another resolution, put forward by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) who is also a member of the Liberal party, and I must say it is a marked improvement on the resolution we had before us earlier today. This resolution is one which we can support fully, because unlike the wonderful province of Manitoba, unlike the wonderful situation which was expounded by the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa (Mr. Fairfield), there are many women affected by this resolution and who need this type of help in the province of Ontario and, I am sure, in many other provinces. I am even inclined to believe that if the hon. member looks hard enough he may find a few in that category in the province of Manitoba as well.

This resolution does point to a serious problem in our society, and that is the situation faced by unmarried women or widows at the age of 60 and over. While the employment situation is as it is in this country at the present time the people in this category certainly find themselves in an unenviable position. This might not be so bad if there were full employment and if jobs were available for everyone who wanted to work. Unfortunately, that is not the situation today, and I am afraid there have been few occasions in the history of this country when such a situation existed. Consequently women who reach the age of 60 find themselves in a very disadvantageous position on the labour market. However, I should like to make it clear that we support this measure only as a stopgap measure and not as a real answer to the situation. In fact, this is just another patch on the leaky tire of our social legislation in this country.

I believe the solution to this problem is one which we have suggested many times in this house, namely the implementation of a portable pension plan with some kind of joint survivorship clause so that if a woman should reach the pensionable age while single the pension for which she had worked all her life could be granted to her. If, on the other hand, the woman concerned was left a widow, her husband having worked over the years, then through this portable pension plan capable of being carried from job to job, and through the joint survivorship clause in the plan, her financial difficulties would be overcome and there would be no need to add another patch to the worn-out old tire of our social legislation. I think the fact that we have so many of these resolutions, each dealing with a certain weakness, a certain fault in our present social legislation, only bears out our contention that it is time we really tackled this job and came up with a satisfactory over-all solution to it.

(Translation):

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, today is a memorable date for the official opposition, two of their resolutions are actually being discussed at one sitting, on a Monday, which is private members' day. That is indeed a very rare occurrence.

These two resolutions deal with social security benefits. As I say, the fact that both resolutions were submitted by Liberal members certainly creates a precedent.

Mr. Speaker, we are very often accused of bitterly criticizing while not submitting any suggestions nor realistic recommendations to the government.

Well, today and every day, we formally deny these accusations. We have submitted two significant resolutions. If this government were to accept them, I would think that this country's position would become much more hopeful than it is at present.

Before starting to discuss the resolution itself, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out a few remarks made by some hon. members on the government side.

The hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade), told us in his speech, that in 1957 when our term came to an end, we had a surplus of $900,000,000. Of course, here as on other occasions, the hon. member is mistaken. First of all, we are dealing with the unemployment insurance fund which if I remember correctly, in 1957, amounted to $927,000,000.

That position is understandable. At that time, the unemployment situation was not as serious as today, when it is draining away substantial amounts of money every year. That year, the surplus was $152 million. It was put aside, as it always was in the past. The Liberal government was accumulating moneys that the Conservative government now spends the way we all know.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Mary, like many others, referred quite often to the last Liberal convention. As you know, the convention adopted a resolution to the same effect as this one.

It seems that this Liberal convention which drew so much attention in Canada, has given some concern to our hon. friends of the government. The evidence is that they often refer to it.

The hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Bissonnette), whose experience and sincerity we respect, said he was in favour of this resolution. He even wished it was more generous. May I remind the hon. member that he is a member of a government with the strongest parliamentary majority ever since confederation. During his speech, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) was in his seat. May I ask him why this project is not carried out if he thinks it is so good? Why does he not try to awake his minister who should have expressed his views on this resolution? Why not awake him and have him recognize the merit of this resolution?

I notice that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not in his seat at this moment.

(Text):

I wish to tell the minister that I observe he is keeping a very troubled silence. I think when such a proposal is under discussion the hon. gentleman should let us know where the government stands instead of sitting idly by while this measure is talked out by Conservative members. If the minister evades his responsibility, keeps his silence and does not tell us the position of the government before the expiration of our time at 10 o'clock this evening, we will let the Canadian people decide in due time what they think of this silence and evasion of responsibility.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago, the hon. member for Quebec West also dealt with social security projects. He said that on occasions his party might propose several projects of this kind to the people.

May I point out to him that if the hospital insurance act is now in force in the province of Quebec, while it had been refused by his former provincial leader Mr. Duplessis, it is due to a Liberal premier.

It is appropriate also to reply to hon. Conservative members today who try to pose as advocates of social security, that in this very house, no later than in 1944, their former political leaders opposed the adoption of certain social measures, such as family allowances.

An hon. Member: That is true.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker there is no doubt that during the last 25 years, considerable progress has been achieved in the struggle against misery and insecurity. Those things which seemed a little bit ridiculous and impossible at that time have been achieved since.

But there is still too much misery and distress around us not to give consideration to extending further the scope of social security.

When we deal with social security, I believe we should set our mind on providing a minimum standard of living to our citizens.

Today, with regard to this resolution concerning 60-year old single women and widows, I suggest—like the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai), whom I congratulate for his action which in fact gives effect to a resolution adopted at the recent Liberal convention—that such protection is needed by that group of citizens.

I am particularly interested in seeing it adopted.

I know that in my own constituency it will bring relief and a greater measure of welfare to a class of citizens who so far have not enjoyed any government protection.

I would be remiss in failing to mention the fact that in the province of Quebec, during the next session—there was something in the newspapers about this legislation—measures will be introduced to provide more help for unmarried women and widows of 60 or more.

I wish at this point to commend and give credit to the premier of the province of Quebec who has so much to do because very little has been done so far in that province. He tackled his important task splendidly and with great energy.

Mr. Speaker, the principle of this resolution commends itself to the hon. members and I hope the government will tell us before the end of this sitting whether it supports the principle and whether it is prepared to help that class of unmarried women and widows.

I sincerely hope that the minister who was here a few moments ago will break his silence and let us know where he stands.

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak tonight. But listening to the Liberal members, one might be led to believe that they alone are responsible for whatever good there is in the field of protection, etc.—

Mr. Denis: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Liberal members are a bit fidgety. When they calm down, perhaps they will be able to listen more placidly to what we have to tell them.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the present Conservative government has nothing to learn, in the field of social security, from the Liberals who ran the country for years and were finally driven out of office on account of their silence in the house—there are still a few of them left—and on account of their lack of action.

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to take the 1957 campaign, the Liberals claimed it was impossible to increase the level of old age security pensions because it would jeopardize the economy of this country and because it would be dangerous to pass such a measure. Today, when there is nothing they can do, they want us to believe that if they returned to power, old age security pensions, pensions for needy mothers and all kinds of pensions would be doubled and even tripled if necessary.

But hon. members opposite need not get excited, whenever old age pensions and pensions for the blind and widows are raised, they will again be raised by a Conservative government.

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to take a few minutes of the time of this house to examine certain facts. In 1956-57, under a Liberal government, the country paid out $379 million in old age security pensions. No doubt you know that under the present Conservative government, we pay out to older people the amount of $575 million a year. I therefore ask Liberal members who, when they were in power, did nothing but make long-winded speeches, to explain the increase granted under a Conservative government. As it would take them a little too long to find the answer to this mathematical problem, I shall tell them that we raised old age pensions by as much as 51 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, we Conservatives do not say: We shall do this or that. On the contrary, we raised the level of pensions and when circumstances allow, we shall raise them again; the Conservative government will be the first to propose such a move. Again I say we have no lesson to take from people who did nothing for 21 years and just let things go their merry way. We are moving forward and shall continue in that direction.

Referring to social security payments, we find that our Liberal friends have paid out $1.3 billion in the year 1956-57—

Mr. Benidickson: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Ricard: $1.3 billion. Under a Conservative government, in 1959-60, $2 billion were paid out.

It is easy for the Liberals today to promise something, when they know in advance that they will not have to fulfil their promises.

You, Liberals, could very well promise the moon, and that would not make things any more difficult for you, since you will not be required to fulfil your promises. Just go ahead, take the floor one after the other and try to make yourselves a little political capital.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, could the hon. member explain the difference between one million and one billion?

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I recall that a while ago, during a certain trial, a certain gentleman was very much confused between millions and billions. So I would not like to follow the example of that gentleman, and I will limit myself to my own speech, without having anything whispered to me by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska. Besides, I think it would be to his own interest to learn the difference between one billion and one million, for he could then reply himself to that question.

Mr. Speaker, were I sure not be called to order, I would recall that it was under a Conservative government that taxes were cut. That is our way of showing how we keep close to the people.

That is, Mr. Speaker, a fact that everyone knows. The Liberals themselves have recognized it, because they explained their defeat both in 1957 and in 1958, by saying they had stood too far away from the people. They are still very much aloof from the people, and as time goes, they will stand more and more aloof, while we are going to propose constructive measures which will be to the people's benefit.

Mr. Speaker, as I was listening a moment ago to the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Leduc), I thought for a while that he was going to propose to the house that 55 year-old people be granted family allowances and that those same persons also get the old age security pension. If he had carried on in that direction, I think he would have said so.

His remarks reminded me of an editorial published in Le Devoir, entitled: "Once a drunkard, always a drunkard".

Such an attitude very well shows that while listening to Liberals' speeches, we should always bear in mind that article of Le Devoir: "Once a drunkard, always a drunkard". This leads us to think, to ponder those words of our Liberal friends, and to remember that we must take them, as is often said, if my memory serves me right, "with a grain of salt".

Well, hon. members of the opposition, just go on dreaming; that suits you very well. As for us, our deeds speak for themselves.

(Text):

Mr. Benidickson: Will the hon. member for whom I have great regard permit a question?

(Translation):

I regret that my French is not too good—

(Text):

My question is, will the hon. member relate the increase of 33⅓ per cent in the contributions to old age security payments and increases up to 55 per cent in payments by employees under the unemployment insurance fund to the remarks he has just made.

Mr. Ricard: In my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I did not make any reference to old age security but to old age pensions.

Mr. Benidickson: In English, the old age security fund is the only fund that is entirely within the jurisdiction of the federal government. Is it not a fact that the present government has increased the contributions of those who might benefit by up to 33⅓ per cent in the case of old age security and up to 55 per cent in the case of contributors to the unemployment insurance fund?

Mr. Ricard: These two things are different, Mr. Speaker. I do not think we live in a world where we can hope to have everything for nothing. We have to pay somehow. This is what is happening in the province of Quebec right now.

(Translation):

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I did not have the misfortune of hearing the remarks of the distinguished member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade), but I was unfortunate enough to hear the speech made by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard).

As usual, the hon. member accused others of being nervous but, as you may have noticed yourself, Mr. Speaker, he was not exactly calm himself. He was so flustered, that I believe he made a slight departure from the truth when bringing forward a great many arguments to prove that social legislation had been introduced by the Conservative party. Needless to recall, Mr. Speaker, that all social security legislation passed in this country was enacted under Liberal administration. Family allowances, for instance, were introduced by a Liberal government, and that in spite of every objection raised by our friends opposite, in spite of the objections of their party leader, Colonel Drew, who said that family allowances were a baby bonus for the province of Quebec.

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member is straying from the resolution.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I also forgot to tell you that I had the misfortune of hearing the speech of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon). He preceded the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Bissonnette), I think. I noticed that those two hon. members were in every way like their ministers, which is to say that they contradicted each other within a period of two minutes. One of them said that it was difficult to pass that resolution, for where would we find the money, how were we to finance that new social legislation? And, immediately afterwards, the other hon. member, belonging to the same party, told us: "I am in favour of the legislation, but you are not going far enough, you are not generous enough", at least, if I correctly understood the hon. members, therefore, within two minutes, those two hon. members contradicted each other, just like their ministers. As a matter of fact, the press is full of their contradictory statements.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member said that the ministers contradicted each other. Could he prove his statement by quoting those contradictions?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. When the hon. member for Charlevoix rose, I thought he wanted to tell the house that the remarks made by the hon. member for St. Denis were not related to this resolution. Therefore I would ask the hon. member not to answer that question but to come back to the subject matter of this debate.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, then you agree with me that the hon. member's question was not in order; but so was the answer I was about to give.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member brought about that question by straying from the subject matter of the debate.

Mr. Denis: Unfortunately, I listened carefully when the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot spoke. He said that old age pensions had been increased by 50 per cent. We all know that these pensions were raised from $46 to $55. He claims that $9 represents a 50 per cent increase. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) was right when he asked the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe what school he attended and if he knew how to count.

The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and the hon. member for Quebec West are three government members and from what they say it would be the responsibility of the opposition to pass legislation. The first and second members tell us that it will cost too much and the third one takes us to task saying that it is not sufficient. It is not surprising that old age pensions should have doubled, Mr. Speaker. To live under a Conservative administration makes us grow old. There are now many more older people than there were before 1956.

An hon. Member: There are not only older people, there are those who are off their head.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The hon. member did not address himself to the resolution from the beginning of his remarks. He criticized the hon. member for Charlevoix and the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe. He addressed himself to his supporters. I submit that he should tell us what he thinks about the resolution before us.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, it is the only way for the hon. member to get a bit of personal publicity. Perhaps it is not the correct way, but it is his only way.

I refer to the resolution and to pensions such as they are. At present, they are granted at the age of 65 in case of need and at 70 to everyone. Under this resolution, it is intended to add widows and unmarried women 60 years old.

I can understand why that resolution is not to their liking, because since a Liberal government was elected in Quebec, the same resolution has become law—at least it will become so in a few weeks—in the beautiful province of Quebec. Yet, their friends were in power for 14 years and did nothing in that connection.

When the hon. member for Quebec West talks about all the hardships he saw as a doctor, I know he is telling the truth; I believe he is telling the truth. I know he sees hardships everywhere. He knows that hardships exist especially in large families. That is why he wanted the resolution to be more generous and not only limited to widows of 60 years, but to those of 40, 35 and even 30 years. But the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is against that, because he does not know where the money will come from.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The hon. member for St. Denis claims that I said things in this house which I never said.

Mr. Denis: I had told you so, Mr. Speaker, he is exactly like the members of the cabinet. He denies today what he said yesterday. Every time a minister makes a statement in the house or outside the house, newspapermen always seem to distort their words, and they take the floor to say they never said such a thing, that they have been misinterpreted, that statements are ascribed to them which they never made.

I have never seen such unlucky ministers. Either they talk through their hats, or newspapermen are not what they used to be.

An hon. Member: You are seeing yourself in a mirror.

Mr. Denis: Which means that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and the hon. member for Quebec West, before making any statement, rather than contradicting themselves, should at least consult each other before hand. As regards the ministers, they have a cabinet where they all meet; they could memorize their statements to avoid mistakes. As for the others, I excuse them somewhat, because they are not sitting on the same side of the house; they have a different outlook and do not go around with the same friends. Just the same, they have good friends on both sides. So, before taking the floor on any resolution, I think that members of the same party should agree to say the same thing. It is true that in the past few years, ministers have not been too consistent with one another in that connection. When some of them say yes, the others say no. Besides, I can tell from the answer given by the hon. member for La Malbaie.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I am the member for Charlevoix and not the member for La Malbaie as stated by my hon. friend opposite.

An hon. Member: He is so seldom in the house that he does not know.

Mr. Denis: Excuse me, and I hope that the population of La Malbaie will not be offended by the interjection of the hon. member for Charlevoix. In fact, I wonder whether I would not get more votes than he would in that riding.

Mr. Asselin: Just come and see.

Mr. Denis: At all events, I would be pleased to go there unless you decide first to quit politics.

Mr. Asselin: Oh, no.

Mr. Denis: So, I heartily support this resolution and, as the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) did, I ask the house to endorse it.

(Text):

Mr. Monteith (Perth): You do not agree with the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Bissonnette) though.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: I would like to ask the hon. minister whether he has done all he could to help the people who are so much in need of help. I believe he did what he could but, unfortunately, like the others, he is a member of a bad government and he will not have time to pass this resolution because it is the next Liberal government which will do so.

When the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) said that we were far from the people, I wonder whether he recalled the election in Labelle and the results of the by-elections in Russell and Niagara.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, for the last few minutes, the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) has been dealing with anything but the resolution before the house.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, look who is inquiring about the resolution. He knows much more about it than I do. He dealt with it a few minutes ago.

I will however tell him that it is on the order paper for Monday February 6, 1961, page 4. Does the hon. member wish me to read it?

Mr. Valade: You should read it.

Mr. Denis: Yes, I should perhaps read it to him, but I think he is acquainted with it. He is such a well informed person that he knows the Liberal party is preparing to take similar action in the province of Quebec and that does not suit him.

Let me say in closing—

(Text):

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I gather that the Liberal party in Quebec is following the lead of the hon. member for Quebec West.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: I am glad that with our remarks, Mr. Speaker, we succeeded in making the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) rise. It is probably his only contribution to the house. Well, since his department is concerned, I wonder if he knows what it is for a 60-year old widow to be penniless; I wonder if he knows what it is for a single woman to be without money and unable to earn a living, if he realizes the difficulty she might have? If he does not know, he should contact his colleague for Quebec West who is a doctor and who is much closer to the people than the minister.

I am sure that the Minister of National Health and Welfare after a consultation with the hon. member for Quebec West, would know much more and would welcome heartily the proposal of the hon. member for Fort William.

So I ask the minister to rise and tell us if he is in favour of this resolution; he might also tell us whether he expects to introduce a bill in the near future to do justice to those people in urgent need, to those widows and unmarried women of 60 years of age.

Mr. Valade: May I ask a question of the hon. member?

Mr. Denis: Please do.

Mr. Valade: Could he tell me what he thinks of this resolution?

(Text):

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, I was rising to ask a question of the hon. member for St. Denis who has just concluded his remarks.

[Mr. Valade.]

Mr. Jones: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to stop the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River but the Chair recognizes the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. H. F. Jones (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veteran Affairs): Mr. Speaker, tonight we have heard from the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Leduc) and the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis). They have talked a good deal about the new proposal in the province of Quebec. Perhaps we should remind them of a few of the facts of life. I wonder if they realize that the federal government is bearing a share of the cost of these benefits about which they have been talking through the medium of the federal unemployment assistance legislation. If I have the opportunity I intend to review some of the legislation that exists in other parts of this country and then hon. members will see that these proposals they have made tonight are ones for which we all have sympathy. We all want to help the people who are in need, and the Conservatives are especially desirous of helping those who are in need.

I looked at this resolution and found that it reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of extending old age assistance to unmarried women and widows of 60 years of age.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Jones: Would the hon. member mind? I have only about five minutes in which to speak.

Mr. Benidickson: You have ten minutes, but I think you are going to talk this resolution out.

Mr. Jones: As I have pointed out, the resolution makes no mention at all of one of the very seriously disabled groups, one that is well known to every person who has ever had anything to do with social welfare problems —I refer to the deserted wives. What about a deserted wife of 60 or 65 years of age? Why does the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) not include her?

Mr. Peters: Why don't you amend the resolution to cover them?

Mr. Jones: I am sure everyone will agree with the real intention of the hon. member for Fort William, and will agree that he has kindly intentions. I think that all members will agree that the question is whether or not the action suggested would, in fact, improve the situation in any way. There is already in existence a network of programs which meet the objectives toward which this particular proposal is directed. I think that an examination of some of these programs will substantiate this statement. I intend, if I can, to cover each one in the brief time at my disposal.

First of all, I want to say that those who have been very active in social welfare work over the years feel very strongly that the administrative machinery providing social aid should remain as flexible as possible. This flexibility has been provided by the various types of legislation, both provincial and federal, which are already on the books. I am not here to say that the legislation which is already on the books goes far enough. Certainly, improvements can be made. However, when we come to look at the resolution perhaps we will have to take into account some of these other programs.

The programs that are in existence already cover such things as old age assistance, blind allowances, disability allowances and the federal unemployment assistance act. The last of these measures is designed to give assistance to the provinces on these very points referred to in the resolution. This act has been amended since we came into office and I should like to remind my Liberal friends that it is a particularly progressive piece of legislation which helps the provinces and the municipalities carry out this essential work of assistance to those in need, no matter what their age may be, no matter whether they are married or unmarried or whether they are widows. When you are dealing with social problems, surely need is the criterion. We must look after those in need first.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Have you not got a big enough majority?

Mr. Benidickson: They are using it now.

Mr. Jones: The federal government reimburses the provinces for the payment made within the existing provincial framework of assistance. The scale on which the aid is given is determined by the provinces themselves. It is the provinces that determine the amount of aid, how it shall be given and to whom it shall be given.

I should remind hon. members that today Canadians throughout all the ten provinces benefit from legislation which the Conservative government brought into effect improving the former unemployment assistance act. I should like to turn to some of the assistance programs that exist in the provinces to show what has already been done and what is already available. I should like to point out, very rapidly, that in each province there is now assistance for women of 60 or over who qualify for it on the basis of need.

Before we go any further with this matter of providing aid we will have to discuss the situation with the provinces and get their concurrence. Flexibility has been the demand of the provinces because the provinces have jurisdictional rights over this particular form of aid. The provinces demand that they shall have the right to determine to whom these funds shall go and how much shall go to each person in the various categories. The provinces are the ones that have this right and they do not intend to have their powers usurped by a resolution proposed by the hon. member for Fort William or anybody else.

I should like to mention some of the provisions that exist in the province of Ontario. Women of 60 years of age and over may qualify for general assistance or an incapacitation allowance up to $60 a month under the general welfare assistance act. This assistance is administered by the municipality and rates are in accordance with the scale set by the province. The province reimburses the municipality for 80 per cent of the amount of assistance given. The rate of general assistance for a single person living alone is $48.50 for food, clothing, household sundries, fuel allowance for cooking with electricity and shelter. Extra allowance is made for special diets, fuel or shelter under special circumstances. This is an outline of the Ontario program. The program in Manitoba is slightly different and in Saskatchewan slightly different again. However, I point out that each of the provinces insist that they shall have the right to say how much and to whom these payments shall go.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Benidickson: May I ask the leader on the government side whether the business of the house will be the same for tomorrow as was announced on Friday.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): In the absence of the house leader I should like to announce that it will be as stated previously. Tomorrow we will start with item No. 9 on today's order paper, which is the resolution concerning the Pension Act. If this is concluded we will resume the debate on the budget resolutions. Wednesday we will take budget resolutions and Thursday second reading of the bill to amend the Pension Act.

Mr. Benidickson: Regardless of what happens, the Pension Act will be the first item of business on Thursday if it has passed the resolution stage?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Second reading, yes.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

SERVICES OF JOURNALISTS, C.B.C.

Question No. 67—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation use the services during 1960 of any of the following journalists: Pierre Berton, John Bird, Charles Templeton, Robert Weaver, Robert Fulford, Gordon Sinclair, Nathan Cohen, Ron Haggart, Mark Gayn, Peter Dempson, Ed Mahoney, Margaret Aitken, Mavor Moore, Frank Tumpane, Frank Drea, Thomas Richard Henry?

2. If so, on how many occasions for each, and at what remuneration?

Answer by: Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue):

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Twelve of the 16 persons named were engaged during 1960 as participants receiving a fee. The exceptions were Frank Drea and Thomas Richard Henry, who were not used. Miss Margaret Aitken appeared in a political broadcast; Mr. Robert Weaver, a C.B.C. employee, in an interview program. Neither received a fee.

2. The following are the number of engagements for C.B.C. programs during 1960 of the 12 remaining. Appearances referred to were on the television network, or locally on CBLT Toronto or CBOT Ottawa; or on the trans-Canada radio network, the dominion network, or locally on CBL, or CJBC Toronto or on CBO Ottawa. Length of contribution ranged from one minute to entire programs.

(a) Engagements for programs where contributor appeared as commentator, as discussion participant in opinion programming, as interview subject, or as speaker in general talks series:

Pierre Berton, 53; John Bird, 7; Nathan Cohen, 3; Peter Dempson, 16; Robert Fulford, 24; Mark Gayn, 29; Ron Haggart, 5; Ed Mahoney, 22; Mavor Moore, 13; Gordon Sinclair, 2; Charles Templeton, 3; Frank Tumpane, 55.

(b) Number of appearances as reporter in news or weather program:

John Bird, 2; Robert Fulford, 2; Mark Gayn, 3; Ron Haggart, 1; Gordon Sinclair—weather 143.

(c) Number of appearances as actor, panelist in light entertainment programs, interviewer, or master of ceremonies:

Pierre Berton, 46; John Bird, 1; Nathan Cohen, 49; Peter Dempson, 2; Mavor Moore, 37; Gordon Sinclair, 40; Charles Templeton, 47.

It is not considered to be in the public interest to disclose amounts of payments to individuals, as it would affect the position of the corporation in a competitive business in negotiating for services.

MILITARY COLLEGES—FRENCH AND ENGLISH SPEAKING CADETS

Question No. 73—Mr. Argue:

1. In each year since the opening of the College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean, what proportion of cadets entering the first year have been (a) French speaking; (b) English speaking?

2. In each year since the opening of the College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean, what proportion of cadets graduating from the second year and entering the Royal Military College, Kingston, Ontario, have been (a) French speaking; (b) English speaking?

3. In each year, what proportion of the cadets mentioned in question 2 and passing successfully into the fourth year at R.M.C. have been (a) French speaking; (b) English speaking?

4. In each year, what proportion of the cadets mentioned in question 2 and graduating from the Royal Military College on completion of the fourth year have been (a) French speaking; (b) English speaking?

Answer by: Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence):

1. In each year since College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean opened in September, 1952, the proportion of French speaking and English speaking cadets who entered the preparatory (initial) year was:

Year	French speaking	English speaking
1952	62.7	37.3
1953	57.9	42.1
1954	55.9	44.1
1955	52.6	47.4
1956	55.4	44.6
1957	48.3	51.7
1958	55.6	44.4
1959	60.1	39.9
1960	50	50

2. In each year, the proportion of French speaking and English speaking second year graduates from College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean who entered the third year at the Royal Military College of Canada, Kingston, Ontario, was:

Year	French speaking	English speaking
1955	46.6	53.4
1956	51	49
1957	54.1	45.9
1958	52.9	47.1
1959	45.9	54.1
1960	46.6	53.4

N.B.—The first of the College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean second year graduates entered the third year at the Royal Military College in 1955.

Questions

3. In each year, the proportion of French speaking and English speaking cadets mentioned in question 2 who passed successfully into the fourth year at the Royal Military College was:

Year	French speaking	English speaking
1956	33.3	66.7
1957	47.3	52.7
1958	51.3	48.7
1959	42.8	57.2
1960	41	59

N.B.—The College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean second year graduates who first entered the third year at the Royal Military College in 1955, subsequently entered the fourth year in 1956.

4. In each year, the proportion of French speaking and English speaking cadets mentioned in question 2 who graduated from the Royal Military College on completion of the fourth year was:

Year	French speaking	English speaking
1957	33.3	66.7
1958	47.3	52.7
1959	47	53
1960	43.7	56.3

N.B.—The cadets of the first entry into College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean in September, 1952, graduated from the fourth year at the Royal Military College in May 1957.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY—
ARBITRATION BOARD

Question No. 76—Mr. Argue:

1. Was an arbitration board appointed to inquire into claims made by contractors against the St. Lawrence seaway authority?
2. If so, by whom was it appointed, on what date, who are its members, what claims have been investigated?

Answer by: Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport):

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:

1. The answer is in the negative.
2. N.A.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY—
EXPENDITURES AND INDEBTEDNESS

Question No. 78—Mr. Argue:

1. What is the total amount of money which the St. Lawrence seaway authority has (a) borrowed; (b) paid on accounts, from the beginning of construction work until January 1, 1961?
2. What is the outstanding indebtedness of the St. Lawrence seaway authority as of January 1, 1961, and to whom is this owed?

Answer by: Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport):

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:

The current position is—

1. (a) as of January 1, 1961, $306,800,000, including temporary loans made during 1954/55 of $1,300,000, and repaid in 1955/56.
(b) $304,295,842.10, as of November 30, 1960.

2. Borrowed, $305,500,000; unpaid interest, $29,075,700; the Minister of Finance.

POST OFFICE CARETAKER, GRIMSBY, ONT.

Question No. 83—Mr. Argue:

1. Has a caretaker recently been appointed by the civil service commission in the post office in Grimsby, Ontario?
2. If so, who was appointed to fill this position?
3. Does this appointee have any other employment apart from that of caretaker?
4. If so, what are these employments?
5. Were there other applicants for the position who were unemployed?
6. If so, what are their names and for how long have they been unemployed?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 7, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

(Translation):

REPRESENTATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-65, to amend the Representation Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to change the name of the Charlevoix constituency into that of Charlevoix-Montmorency.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

(Text):

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MONETARY POLICY—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO BANKING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government would consider having arrangements made so that the question of monetary policy could be referred this session to the standing committee on banking and commerce for examination and report.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question was dealt with on an earlier occasion. I believe the Minister of Finance said some time ago that the report by Mr. Coyne, governor of the Bank of Canada, would not be available until March.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the decline in the consumer price index and the continuing rise in unemployment, will the Prime Minister tell the house whether it is the view of the government that monetary policy should be directed primarily to fighting unemployment rather than inflation?

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is a question on policy, Mr. Speaker, and is very improper.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the fact that the Prime Minister says it is improper likely makes it proper, but that is a matter for you to decide.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking the Prime Minister to express a view on a matter of policy, and if exception is taken by the government or by the Speaker questions on policy are not normally answered.

TRADE

PROPOSED U.S. RESTRICTIONS ON TOURIST IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): In the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce perhaps I can direct this question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister comment on President Kennedy's suggestion that United States tourists will be able to bring back only $100 worth of goods from abroad duty free? Will the Prime Minister say whether the Canadian government has made any representations to Washington in protest against this move?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the first portion of the question is concerned, it is naturally not considered proper for the parliament of one country to pass observations on the policies of another, and that applies also to anyone who is a member of the government of one country in dealing with matters particularly within the jurisdiction of the other country.

As to the second portion of the question, naturally the matter is receiving continued attention, as do all the changes in economic or other relations between our countries.

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister say whether any representations have been made to the government of the United States following the consideration to which he has referred?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be helpful at this time to go further than I have already gone.

REPORTED IMPORTS OF VEGETABLES FROM CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. As I am speaking there are 20,000 twenty-pound lugs of Cuban tomatoes on their way to this country by truck from Miami and, as is also reported in the newspapers, a shipload of tomatoes, cucumbers, etc., is due to arrive at an east coast port. Can the minister tell us whether this is a fact? If it is, what is the government doing to protect the hothouse growers of Ontario?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take this question as notice and look into the matter.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Has the Minister of Agriculture not been advised already that this action is contrary to section 56 of the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I know now where these questions originate.

DRUGS

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—INVESTIGATION INTO USE OF BARBITURATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice, but in his absence perhaps the parliamentary secretary may be able to deal with it. Will the minister report to the house on any inquiry being held in St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary on the use of barbiturates by inmates?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): There is a full investigation under way into this whole matter, and a report will be presented to the minister. I am certain that it then can be brought forward to the house at the same time.

BARBITURATES—REQUEST FOR RESTRICTIVE MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Romuald Bourque (Outremont-St. Jean): Mr. Speaker, in 1957 I brought up the question of goof balls—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bourque: —and was laughed at as I am laughed at today. At that time I was denounced, and it was stated there was no such a problem as the problem of goof balls. In view of all the murders that are being committed and the riots that are taking place at the present time in all the jails of Canada, I should like to ask the minister whether he intends to take any measures to curb this evil and place this drug under the narcotic drugs act.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Naturally I do not think I have anything to say with regard to the hon. member's preamble, but we have been making a special study of this particular barbiturate problem.

[Later:]

Mr. Bourque: A supplementary question. May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who has just stated that his department has made a considerable study of the goof ball problem—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bourque: Hon. members seem to think it is very funny when we talk about goof balls—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a supplementary question to clarify—would the hon. member resume his seat? The hon. member received what appeared to be a clear answer to his question, but if he has a supplementary question to ask I would, of course, give him the floor, though not to make a speech on the subject.

Mr. Bourque: I wish only to ask the minister if he would be good enough to table the studies which have been made in relation to the goof ball problem.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): At the moment, Mr. Speaker, we are in the midst of an intensive study of this particular problem. In the very lengthy preamble to his earlier question the hon. member made several statements which tempt me to debate the matter, but I shall reserve my observations until the estimates of my department are under consideration.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I might ask the hon. gentleman a supplementary question. Is this study a secret study?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): It is not completed.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROTEST AGAINST DIVIDEND TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister received a protest against the 15 per cent dividend tax from the director of the $100 million Anaconda development in northwestern Ontario, on which they have already spent $5 million? If so, have they indicated that they will suspend operations on the property, thereby displacing 100 men employed on the project?

Mr. Speaker: I raise the question with the hon. member whether this is not a matter that could more properly be dealt with on the resolutions which are to come before the house, or are now before the house. It relates to fiscal policy and normally I have not admitted questions on fiscal policy on orders of the day. I would permit, I think, a question with respect to whether the minister has received the communication. If it were limited to that I think it would be in order.

Mr. Badanai: Will the minister indicate whether he has received such a protest?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I have received no communication in writing from this company that I am aware of.

HARBOURS

VANCOUVER—REPORTED COMPLAINT AS TO DOCKING FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the statement made by Sir Colin Anderson, a director of the P. & O. line, as reported in the Vancouver press on February 3 and 4 on the occasion of the visit of the new P. & O. liner Oriana, to the effect that docking facilities in Vancouver are "among the poorest in the world", can the minister comment on this statement and indicate whether he will have the national harbours board investigate this condition?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have read the press comment on the visit of the Oriana, which appears to indicate that Sir Colin Anderson's statement was directed to criticism of the harbour facilities in general. We have assurance from Sir Colin that he was referring specifically to the passenger reception facilities on the particular pier at which the ship was docked, which incidentally is a privately owned facility.

Although it has not been requested to provide such accommodation, the national harbours board has been for some time interested in the possible provision of a deep sea passenger terminal in the port of Vancouver, and has approached local and Pacific coast shipping agents handling passengers with a view to modifying one of its existing piers for this purpose. Agents and owners have stated a preference for berthing their ships in a location where they may be readily observed and visited most conveniently by the largest number of people possible, and none of the existing board facilities meet these requirements.

It should be kept in mind that to date deep sea passenger traffic through the port of Vancouver numbers well under 20,000 passengers annually, a substantial number of whom arrive and depart on freighters and who consequently would not use a terminal created for the exclusive use of passengers. This circumstance imposes obvious and severe economic limitations on the construction of such a terminal. However, I can assure my hon. friend that this is a matter which is being given consideration by the Vancouver harbour planning committee.

TRANSPORT

SABLE ISLAND PONIES—ADOPTION BY PRINCE EDWARD ISLANDERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I should like to answer a question asked of me last Wednesday by the hon. member for Kootenay West regarding requests received from Prince Edward Island for Sable island ponies. The generous and kind interest of Prince Edward Islanders had already been brought to my attention by the hon. member for Queens, and I want to assure the house that we are giving the matter of these ponies close and continuing attention.

I think it might be well to point out that the ponies are completely wild and would not become manageable as pets without long and patient training. Another factor to be kept in mind is that as there is no harbour or wharf at Sable island, and also because the ponies are not tame, safe removal of a few or indeed any number without injury would be costly and would require special skills. However, as I say, we are keeping the matter very much in mind.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TAX SHARING—REQUEST FOR STUDY BY PROVINCES OF FEDERAL PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to comply with the request contained in a letter from the premier of Quebec to the Prime Minister that the federal proposals on tax sharing be sent to the provinces for study before the conference reconvenes?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I received a letter from the premier of Quebec along the lines suggested in the question. All I can say in that connection is that when a decision is made whether there should be an announcement of the terms or particulars in advance of the conference or whether the unveiling of the proposals should take place at the conference itself, the house will be made aware of the decision.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Can the Prime Minister say how many premiers have already responded to his letter, and whether a definite date has yet been fixed for the conference?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have not that information at the moment, but in general I think it can be said that those who have replied have been in favour of the February date.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could ask a further question. Will the Prime Minister follow the usual custom and, at his convenience, table the correspondence in the house and have it put on Hansard as has been done formerly so there will be a continuous record of this matter?

Mr. Diefenbaker: When I have heard from all the provinces, consideration can be given to the hon. member's suggestion.

WATER RESOURCES

WATER POLLUTION—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE CHANGE IN POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport, and I thank him for his answer to my question respecting his cronies and their ponies.

In view of the fact that the Navigable Waters Protection Act prohibits the disposition of rubbish and other material in navigable waters, and in view of the fact that under section 22 of the act a proclamation has been issued exempting the Labrador Mining and Exploration Company Limited from the operation of section 20 of the said act, would the minister inform the house whether this proclamation represents any change in government policy with respect to the pollution of navigable waters in Canada?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): It does not imply any change in policy.

COMBINES

INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION OF ELECTRICAL COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Justice. In view of the fines levied on eight electrical companies in the United States for bid rigging and price fixing, will the minister tell the house whether any investigation is being made or is contemplated by the combines investigation branch into similar practices by the Canadian counterparts of these electrical companies?

Hon. W. J. Browne (Acting Minister of Justice): I will take this question as notice and give the member an answer at an early date.

PUBLIC WORKS

LAKEHEAD—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF COMPLETION OF TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works arising out of a letter which I received from the minister on February 2 relative to the stage 3 contract of the lakehead harbour terminal. Can the minister inform the house whether all stages of construction of the terminal will be completed in 1961?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO SASKATCHEWAN, 1960

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State. When will the answer to my starred question having to do with matters in the Department of Finance and made an order for return on January 18 last be tabled?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): I am sorry, but I did not hear the number.

Mr. McMillan: It was No. 57.

Mr. Dorion: I shall make inquiries and give an indication to the hon. member.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SEAMEN'S UNION—INVESTIGATION INTO ALLEGED INTIMIDATION OR BEATINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question arising out of a speculative story in today's Globe and Mail about warfare amongst the unions. Has his department under study any information regarding alleged intimidation or beatings which took place in recent years relating to the activities of Mr. Hal Banks and the S.I.U. in the transportation field?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker.

MONCTON, N.B.—NUMBER OF UNPLACED APPLICANTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, notice of which I sent him yesterday. The question is this. Will the minister give the house the number of unplaced applicants for the latest date for which computation has been made in the national employment offices for the region supervised by the Moncton regional office?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member gave me notice of this question yesterday and I am able to give this information. On January 26 the figure was 110,635; on January 28 of last year the figure was 108,482.

SPRINGHILL, N.S.—IMPLEMENTATION OF WINTER WORKS PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of representations which I have received on behalf of the wives of 600 unemployed miners at Springhill, Nova Scotia, representations to which I should like to reply as soon as possible, is the minister in a position to give a report to the house on winter works projects planned or under way in this particular community?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): A similar question was asked last week, and I made the suggestion that if this were placed on the order paper we should endeavour to assemble the information required.

UNITED NATIONS

CONGO—REPORTED U.S. PLAN FOR PEACE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is Canada one of the countries that has been consulted by the United States with regard to its plan to bring peace in the Congo and preserve the integrity of the Congo, as announced by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs yesterday in Washington?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government welcomes the United States initiative. The new policy contains a number of important elements which Canada has always believed were necessary to a solution of the crisis in the Congo. For example, it implies an attitude of impartiality in the internal political affairs of the Congo. This is the attitude which Canada has maintained from the outset of the crisis, consistent with Canadian membership on the secretary general's advisory committee for the Congo and our participation in the force. As the hon. member knows, Canada is one of the 18 nations represented on this Congo committee, all of them having substantial forces in the Congo.

It implies a willingness to face realistically the fact that there are a number of contending political elements in the Congo, each with a certain strength, which cannot simply be wished out of existence. In the Congo debate in the general assembly just before Christmas the Canadian spokesman, namely the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), who is my parliamentary secretary, argued that no political solution was likely to be viable in the Congo which did not take these facts realistically into account.

The new United States policy will also presumably be an important factor in meeting the request which the secretary general once again made to the security council on February 1 for a clarification of his mandate. On this point also the parliamentary secretary, in defining Canada's Congo policy to the general assembly in December, pointed out that Canada believed the mandate should be properly defined and that member states could hardly complain at the way in which the secretary general carried out his responsibilities so long as the general assembly was unable itself to agree on what the role of the United Nations should be and left the task of interpretation to the secretary general.

There may now be grounds for hope that some of the limitations on past United Nations action in the Congo can be corrected. I sincerely trust that this will be the outcome of recent developments and the current security council debate. The Canadian government will continue to advocate and support all measures which are designed to strengthen the position of the secretary general and are consistent with a policy of strict impartiality in Congolese internal affairs.

In this way we believe United Nations influence in the Congo can effectively be brought to bear in order to assist the Congolese to resolve problems which are essentially their own.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the minister whether members of the United Nations withdrawing their forces from the Congo cease to be members of the advisory committee.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, to date I think the forces of only one member nation which is also a member of the advisory committee have been withdrawn. I refer to the United Arab Republic. The whole of their forces as yet may not be out of the Congo, but I know the bulk of them have been removed. Whether that nation will continue as a member of the Congo committee I cannot say at the moment. I would doubt whether the U.A.R. would be qualified to continue as a member.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not think the Secretary of State for External Affairs gave an answer to one part of my question, namely whether Canada had been consulted by the United States regarding this plan.

Mr. Green: We have been kept closely in touch with the attitude of the United States, and I expect to have a conference later today about this question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISARMAMENT—INQUIRY AS TO "BAN THE BOMB" MOVEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to ask the Prime Minister the following question. Does the Canadian government view with favour the efforts of the many so-called "ban the bomb" movements which exist in Canada?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I do not know the significance of the question. I will say this; that the attitude of the Canadian government to the question of disarmament has been very definitely placed before the United Nations and also before people throughout this country by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and myself. We believe every effort must be made to attain disarmament under, of course, appropriate controls, so that all nations agreeing to disarmament will be subject to inspection and to the control that is incidental to inspection.

Any group of people who desire to obtain disarmament are naturally welcome to express their views, which are, of course, in line with the views of the government. We believe in disarmament and its attainment. Until it has been attained we also think it is realistic to realize this fact, that our defences must be maintained.

GRAIN

FEED MILL PURCHASES—REPRESENTATIONS BY FARM ORGANIZATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising out of growing opposition to feed mills buying grain outside wheat board quotas, despite the minister's claim that this opposition comes from only a few organizations.

Has it been brought to the attention of the minister that the national farm union and the Saskatchewan federation of agriculture have requested by a resolution passed unanimously that the present policy be discontinued immediately?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, it has been brought to my attention. I should like to repeat what I have said earlier in the house; that a good many of the farm organizations, outside a few union locals and so on, have been sending in resolutions in support of what we have done.

Mr. Argue: My question is, is the government considering the request of this important body of farm organizations and, if so, what action is being taken by the government? Perhaps I might try it this way. In view of these important representations made to the minister, have the minister and the government under consideration the discontinuation of this policy?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): One thing the government has under consideration is this; letting the people of western Canada know all the facts. I think when the people of western Canada know all the facts this pressure play on the part of two or three prairie farm organizations will dissipate and fall apart.

Mr. Argue: It is not the farm organizations that will fall apart.

IMMIGRATION

RADIO AND TELEVISION TECHNICIANS—REPORTED ADVERTISING IN U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate inquired on February 2 with reference to advertisements appearing in British newspapers seeking radio and television technicians for employment in Canada. Reference was made to these in a news dispatch appearing in the Telegram of Tuesday, January 31. When I saw this news dispatch I immediately initiated inquiries of our London office requesting all available information as to the details of the advertisements reportedly appearing in the London Daily Mail and other newspapers.

We have not yet received full details on this matter from our London office, but I can assure the hon. member that the advertisements in question were not placed with the advance knowledge or approval of this department. We have, of course, no means of controlling the placing of advertisements by private concerns in British newspapers.

When requests of this kind are received from employers in Canada our practice is to refer them to the national employment service, which endeavours first of all to fill the order from available applicants in Canada. Only if it is established that persons with the required qualifications are not available in Canada does the national employment service refer the order for completion to its overseas office in London.

Employers who do not follow this practice but who, instead, advertise directly in overseas newspapers can have no assurance that candidates recruited directly by them without clearance with the N.E.S. will be allowed to come forward to Canada. All such applications are dealt with in accordance with section 20(a) of the regulations, which provides that a British subject by birth or naturalization in the United Kingdom must first establish as a condition of his entry to Canada that he has sufficient means to maintain himself in Canada until he has secured employment therein. If the conditions laid down in the regulations are met the applicant is, of course, allowed to proceed.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I might address a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour, and ask him whether to his knowledge there are any unplaced applicants in these particular categories to which the hon. lady has referred on the books of the employment service at the present time.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I am unable to give an answer offhand, but if the hon. member wishes to specify the type of applicants to whom he is referring and put his question on the order paper I shall be able to get that information for him.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, this information has already been in Hansard, and the question was first raised nearly a week ago.

Mr. Starr: The question the hon. member asks certainly has not been on the order paper. If he is very interested in this matter he will probably put it on the order paper.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

STATEMENT ON REPORTED U.S. ORDER RESPECTING AID SHIPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Peterborough asked me a question concerning a ruling made by the international co-operation administration, which is a United States government agency that channels foreign aid and which ruled that effective February 1, freight will be paid only on aid cargoes moving in United States ships. I now have an answer to that question, which is as follows.

Under general United States legislation the international co-operation administration has been required to ship at least 50 per cent of the gross tonnage of commodities purchased under its programs on United States privately owned commercial vessels. By a recent order the United States international co-operation administration announced that ocean shipping costs of all commodities, materials and equipment procured from mutual security program funds shall be eligible for I.C.A. financing only if transported on United States flag vessels except—and this exception, I think, is important—where foreign flag vessels are required to ensure timely delivery of merchandise and provided that such exceptions receive prior approval from the international co-operation administration in Washington.

It is hoped that these exemptions will go some way to meet the concern of the great lakes ports. I understand that the international co-operation administration intends to hold hearings on this order and to entertain all reasonable requests for exemptions on contracts that would be jeopardized by the new regulations.

The Canadian embassy in Washington is now exploring the situation which is still somewhat unclear. I shall report to the house further should this be warranted. I think the concern was that this might result in a decrease in shipping through the seaway in favour of shipping from the east coast ports of United States, but our belief is that this will not be the effect of the ruling. However, we shall be very glad to keep in touch with that development.

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING PAYMENTS, PERMITTING APPEALS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, December 12, 1960, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Churchill—Mr. Rea in the chair:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Pension Act to provide for increases to disabled veterans and their dependents; to permit payment of supplementary pensions in certain cases; to permit appeals from decisions of the former board of pension commissioners; and to provide for certain further changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Mr. Weichel: Mr. Chairman, as a disabled veteran of the first great war, an honorary member of the War Amputations of Canada, and one who has carried his disability for many years it gives me great satisfaction to take part in the discussion of this resolution. November 17, 1960 must have been a red letter day which stirred the hearts of disabled veterans and their dependents when hearing the speech from the throne in which our beloved Governor General included the following statement:

> Amendments to the Pension Act will be recommended which will include substantial increases in the pensions payable to veterans or their dependents.

Throughout the years the War Amputations of Canada, the Canadian Legion, the Army, Navy and Air Force association, the Royal Canadian Air Force association, the Polish legion, the naval veterans association and others have placed before the veterans affairs committee and our government amendments to the Pension Act and other worth-while legislation concerning their disabled comrades of world wars I and II and Korea. May I on behalf of these comrades express our thanks to the government, the veterans affairs committee, the Canadian pension commission and the Department of Veterans Affairs for their support in bringing about from time to time better conditions for those who gave so much at a time when their country was in urgent need of their devotion to duty.

It is a privilege for me to congratulate the former minister of veterans affairs, Hon. Alfred Brooks, on his appointment to the other place. This hon. gentleman throughout the years has been a real friend of all veterans, and his untiring efforts for the welfare of thousands of Canadians will long linger in our thoughts.

I understand that the total number of pensioners under the Pension Act as at December 31, 1959 was 185,536, as compared with 195,635 in 1950. This decrease is mainly due to the sad fact that world war I pensioners are steadily passing away. On the other hand the number of world war II pensioners has increased from 88,233 in 1947 to 122,296 in 1959, an increase of 34,063. It is interesting to note in regard to this group that the number of children in respect of whom additional pension is being paid is 176,409, an increase of 54,759 since 1947.

These figures were supplied by Mr. T. D. Anderson, chairman of the Canadian pension commission, to the veterans affairs committee on April 7, 1960. As these figures are placed before us we realize that in a few short years many of the disabled veterans of world war I will not be with us, and that time is also running out for many of our world war II and Korean war pensioners. At the amputations convention last year, tribute was paid to 130 pensioners who had died in the previous two years.

The people of Canada have been very sympathetic toward our veterans, especially the disabled. Canada's military performance in the two world wars and Korea is one of the chief reasons for the growth of her prestige and influence in world affairs. Canadian people realize that Canadians fought bravely and effectively in two wars and Korea, and that we had to fight these wars at such great cost. Part of this cost was paid by many in one grim payment, life itself. Others like myself and many with more serious disabilities are still paying in day by day instalments which will continue for the remainder of our lives.

The people of our country well understand the determination shown by our disabled veterans in obtaining and holding gainful employment despite their disabilities. We should, however, recognize that these people never know from day to day how long they will be able to continue working, particularly as they grow older and their disabilities become more difficult to bear. The courage of our veterans has never been questioned, be it in war, in daily routine or in recreation. Each year the amputees of Toronto, Hamilton and the Waterloo-Wellington branch enjoy a get together at which a softball tournament is arranged. Those participating must be amputees. Each player must run and bat for himself. My position has been that of pitching, which sometimes takes in 10 innings and two games. I could go on and mention many fine players despite their handicap?

Our greatest competitor under these conditions has been veteran Ed Wilkie of Kitchener, a triple amputee who lost both legs and one arm. His performance has been the talk of our community. He bats with one hand, walks to first base and, in stealing second, if late he will slide into that base. Of course this causes a delay in the game as he requires a few minutes to adjust his harness and pull himself together. I merely mention this to show that his splendid fortitude is an example to all of us who are more fortunate, and represents the challenging sense of determination. Men of his spirit are the backbone of our country. Yes, such veterans are contributing more and more to the economic, social and political life of Canada, and will continue to do so in future years.

Under the leadership of our former minister of veterans affairs our government has brought about important improvements during the past number of years. Some of these include amendments to the Veterans Insurance Act under which benefits are now available until September 30, 1962, after which all eligibility ceases. I understand that all possible means to publicize this fact have been used. Amendments to this act, along with Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act, have given valuable security to the dependants of many of our comrades. Much could be said of the amendments to the Children of War Dead Education Assistance Act. Over 1,800 children have been approved for educational assistance under this act up to the present time. This could be one of the finest investments that our government has ever made.

The changes in the Veterans Rehabilitation Act were largely administrative, and the changes in the War Service Grants Act dealt with re-establishment credits. The most important one could be the extension of the period of eligibility for benefits to September 30, 1962 or, in the case of Korean veterans, 15 years after discharge. The amendments to the Veterans' Land Act extended to those who needed it; the principle of supervised farms and substantial amounts of additional capital through which they will be able to extend their farm businesses and improve their net returns. Another change which I believe pleased all veterans was the decision to pay an annuity of $300 to all holders of the Victoria Cross who won this highly prized award while serving with the Canadian forces in world war II or subsequently.

Hospitalization and medical treatment are becoming more and more necessary. With this in mind our government have completed or started, or have now in the planning stage, various hospital projects. I understand that a new 300-bed wing at Deer Lodge hospital, St. James, Manitoba, was completed during the summer of 1958, and is now making a great contribution toward the welfare of veterans. Shaughnessy hospital at Vancouver officially opened a new 314-bed wing last year. I had the privilege of visiting this hospital some years ago, and was impressed with its location and the service extended to those comrades.

After the first war in 1919 I entered Westminster hospital, London, Ontario. Improvements have been made to this hospital from year to year, and construction started last year on a new wing which will accommodate 300 more veterans. The Queen Mary Veterans hospital in Montreal, Ste. Anne's Veterans hospital at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, and St. John's General at St. John's, Newfoundland, will be modernized at considerable cost. These improvements demonstrate that our government is intensely interested in the welfare of all veterans, especially those who are in need of medical care.

The War Veterans Allowance Act has been amended on several occasions, and in one instance consideration was extended to the widows of recipients of those benefits which is not extended to the widows of those receiving benefits under the Pension Act. Upon the death of a married recipient of war veteran's allowance, his widow receives allowance at the full married rate for one year following his death, as she should. The widow of a person pensioned under the Pension Act does not receive any such supplementary benefits. This should be changed. This point was brought up by me in my address during the discussion of the veterans affairs estimates in July of last year. Therefore I recommend again that widows of those pensioned under the Pension Act at the rate of 50 per cent or more should receive the full married rate of compensation in effect at the time of the death of the pensioner for a period of not less than one year following such death.

Another point which I brought up at that time, and which has given others and myself much concern, was the continuation of the allowance after the death of a pensioner in receipt of a pension of less than 50 per cent. The present legislation reads:

> In the case of those in receipt of less than 50 per cent at the time of death and whose death is not established as due to pensionable disabilities, no pension or allowance is paid.

In order to avoid further hardships, which have been brought to my attention on numerous occasions by widows in financial difficulties, I suggest to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the government that the allowances in respect of wives and dependants being paid to the pensioner at less than 50 per cent at the time of death be continued to the widow and such dependants as long as they remain eligible as otherwise provided under the act. Perhaps we should also use the plan that is now being used for the widow of a pensioner who has a pension of 50 per cent or over.

Our government and the Department of Veterans Affairs are continually working on improvements for our limb and arm amputees. Recently Messrs. Butler and McLachan, close friends of mine and leg amputees of the second world war, journeyed to the United States where they invested in a Hydra-Cadence artificial limb. Although these limbs are in the trial stages as far as Canada is concerned, the facility of movement in the walking of these gentlemen has improved over 50 per cent. This has been my personal observation. I understand that considerable progress is being made in the development of this Hydra-Cadence limb, and that plans are under way for the Department of Veterans Affairs to obtain some of these units for trial use. This is commendable, and our gratitude for such a move is extended to Dr. Crawford and his staff. I believe these limbs may be successful, and I am hoping that future tests may substantiate my remarks.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, this week Canada will observe white cane week. We as Canadians have always supported any worthwhile cause. With that in mind, I hope our financial efforts will be substantial. Among those who carry the white cane are quite a few of our comrades from world wars I and II. These veterans, along with the paraplegic cases and other 100 per cent pensioners, especially those living in the urban areas where the cost of living is high and who have disabilities in regard to earning power, are encountering many financial difficulties. May I recommend to the Minister of Veterans Affairs that when pension adjustments are forthcoming we make certain that the 100 per cent pensioner will not experience any financial worries in addition to his physical handicap. Let us be more generous to the 100 per cent pensioner who in most cases is unable to work because of his physical disability.

I believe that most Canadians have been satisfied with the governmental legislative programs which have safeguarded the welfare of our country's veterans. I believe too that over the years the presentations made by the different veterans organizations have been both reasonable and realistic. I feel sure that our Minister of Veterans Affairs and his department, the government and the veterans affairs committee will, when considering amendments to the Pension Act, realize the great importance of these amendments from the point of view of substantial increases in pension payments to veterans and their dependants.

It has been a real pleasure for me to be associated with my colleagues on the veterans affairs committee, and I wish to commend them for their untiring efforts and sincere deliberations on those important questions that pertain to the welfare of all veterans. Finally may I extend my sincere congratulations to our new Minister of Veterans Affairs. His distinguished war service and knowledge of veterans affairs will be of great value in filling this important governmental post. I extend to him my best wishes for his future success.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I should like to begin by expressing my congratulations to the minister on taking over this very important portfolio. I should like to take this opportunity to thank him publicly for the personal interest he has taken in those problems of veterans which I have already brought to his attention. I should also like to join with all those who have paid tribute to the former minister of veterans affairs, who has now departed for the more serene atmosphere of the other place. Colonel the Hon. Alfred Brooks served on the veterans affairs committee for approximately 25 years, and we always found that when it was a matter of the problem of our veterans he had a very sympathetic heart. I am sure the new minister is determined to continue in that tradition.

As recorded on pages 734 to 736 of Hansard, the minister in introducing the resolution outlined several of the proposed amendments, the chief one of which will increase the rates of disability pensions and supplementary pensions to disabled veterans and their dependants, and will also make supplementary payments available to veterans outside of Canada. The minister also listed other increases such as the increase in the grant for burial expenses, the increase in the rates of children's allowances, and an amendment which will permit children in receipt of pension allowances to have them continued until the end of the month instead of being cut off on their birthday. This small additional allowance will be an acceptable birthday gift, but as the minister told us it will not amount to any very great financial assistance because it is being introduced mainly for the purpose of simplifying administration. The minister also mentioned that payments to children will be made equal for each child rather than being on an escalator scale, and that the payment to each child will be a little better than the present average.

We also welcome the amendment the minister has indicated he proposes to introduce with respect to widowers who have to hire someone, an older sister, an aunt or some other relative, to look after the children when the mother has passed away. This is a very welcome measure and will also serve to take care of the problem of orphans, which I think has been a difficulty up to the present time. All these measures are welcome.

At this stage we are discussing the principle of these measures, and since the principle is to help our veterans we are heartily in accord with it. Before we can criticize the minister's legislation we will have to have the bill before us to enable us to see how it measures up to the recommendations that have been made from time to time by members of the house and by representatives of the Canadian Legion and other veterans organizations.

I was very glad to read the minister's statement, found on page 735 of Hansard, with regard to Canadian citizens who served in an allied force during world war I or II. This amendment will enable them to have the pensions they receive from the allied government supplemented up to the Canadian rate. In short, this measure will put those Canadians who served in an allied force on the same footing as Newfoundland veterans. We have not been satisfied, of course, with that status, and it is a matter of disappointment that the minister made no reference to the position of Newfoundland veterans when he introduced the resolution.

We have always maintained that our veterans should be regarded as though they had served in Her Majesty's Canadian forces. That status was outlined in the terms of union. We have heard a great deal about the terms of union and one of them, term 29, has received extensive publicity. But there were more than 29 terms in the terms of union. Actually there were 50 terms, and in addition there was a schedule which outlined the federal districts in the province of Newfoundland. The term that applies to Newfoundland veterans is term 38, and I should like to put it on the record at this time. Term 38 of the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada is headed "Veterans" and reads as follows:

Canada will make available to Newfoundland veterans the following benefits, on the same basis as they are from time to time available to Canadian veterans, as if the Newfoundland veterans had served in His Majesty's Canadian forces, namely—

Then there follow a number of paragraphs setting forth the various benefits. Paragraph (a) deals with the War Veterans Allowance Act; paragraph (b) with the Pension Act; paragraph (c) with the Veterans' Land Act; paragraph (d) with re-establishment credits; paragraph (e) with vocational and educational training and paragraph (f) with the Veterans Rehabilitation Act. I should like to quote in full paragraph (b), which has to do with the Pension Act as it would apply to the Newfoundland veteran. This paragraph reads:

Canada will assume as from the date of union the Newfoundland pension liability in respect of the first world war, and in respect of the second world war Canada will assume as from the date of union the cost of supplementing disability and dependents' pensions paid by the government of the United Kingdom or an allied country to Newfoundland veterans up to the level of the Canadian rates of pensions, and, in addition, Canada will pay pensions arising from disabilities that are pensionable under Canadian law but not pensionable either under the laws of the United Kingdom or under the laws of an allied country;

So far as the Newfoundland veterans are concerned, they fall into four categories. In the first category come veterans of the first world war, and in that respect there is no problem. The other three categories have to do with veterans of world war II. Category 1 would be the veterans who were already in receipt of pensions from the United Kingdom. Evidently those pensions would now be supplemented up to the prevailing Canadian rates, and that is quite all right. Category 2 would include Newfoundland veterans who had applied for British pensions and had been refused. Now these veterans would be eligible to apply to the Canadian pension commission for a pension and Canada would pay the pension according to this provision:

—in addition, Canada will pay pensions arising from disabilities that are pensionable under Canadian law but not pensionable either under the laws of the United Kingdom or under the laws of an allied country;

The veteran who had been turned down would be eligible to try again with the Canadian pension commission. With respect to the third category, this would include new applicants, people who had never applied to the United Kingdom. These veterans were to be treated, according to term 38, as if the Newfoundland veteran had served in His Majesty's Canadian forces. This is the plain wording of term 38, and term 38 is part of the British North America Act. It is part of our constitution and certainly should override any other legislation. Any legislation pertaining to veterans should be interpreted in the light of what term 38 says.

This has not happened. In so far as new applicants are concerned, they have not been treated as though they had served in Her Majesty's Canadian forces. They have been required to submit their applications to the British ministry of pensions just as they did before confederation. Now, no person who served in the Canadian forces has to apply to the British ministry of pensions, wait six or seven months to have his claim processed, and then find out whether or not he is going to get something. The veteran would then have to go to the Canadian pension commission and go through all that procedure again to get the pension supplemented if he were successful in getting a pension. The words of term 38 could not be clearer. They say that the benefits will be made available on the same basis as if the Newfoundland veteran had served in Her Majesty's Canadian forces. This provision relates to new applications.

We are glad to see that other Canadians who were getting pensions from allied governments are now to have their pensions supplemented; that is a good thing. However, we point out that, so far as Newfoundland is concerned, our case is different. These Canadians who were domiciled in Canada by-passed the Canadian forces. They did not have to go across to England or France to join up with the British forces; there were forces here in Canada that they could have joined. If they deliberately chose to by-pass the Canadian forces and enlist in the forces of another country, that was their choice. I do not believe their claim is so strong, although I am glad to see they are being given consideration. I think that is a good measure, and I support it.

This is not the case with Newfoundland. The Newfoundland veteran did not by-pass the Canadian forces. He had no choice but to join the imperial forces, because we came under the imperial war measures act. Term 38, which I just quoted, takes care of that.

I know that hon. members will say, why has all this time passed and nothing been done about it? This is a fair question. Nothing has been done about it because we did not know about it until 1955 or 1956. We did not get any complaints from the veterans. I suppose one of the reasons we did not get complaints was that the average veteran did not know about term 38. He did not know the actual wording of it. It was only when we began to get complaints about long delays being experienced in the British ministry of pensions that we began to dig into this question. It was only four or five years ago that I became aware of this problem myself, since I had to dig into it. The point is that it has been brought before the house on several occasions.

The former minister of veterans affairs acknowledged this problem, and I should like to read something he said in that regard on December 19, 1957, as recorded on page 2632 of Hansard. I had outlined the same problem to him as I have here today, and in reply the minister said this:

> With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo with reference to Newfoundland veterans, I think there is a real case there and I am very much surprised that the problem of the Newfoundland veteran has not been dealt with before this time.

Then further down the page we find this; I am not going to quote the whole paragraph:

> Any veteran who is a Canadian, whether he comes from Newfoundland or from any other part of Canada, should receive exactly the same treatment as that received by other Canadian veterans. That is my opinion and I think that would be the opinion of a veterans committee which might review the matter. I can assure the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo that it will be given every consideration.

Well, those remarks were made on December 19, 1957. We come now to December 12, 1960 and we still find nothing in the minister's statement that gives us any encouragement to believe that this problem is going to be dealt with at all. I submit to the minister that perhaps legislation is not required to deal with it because it is a matter of interpretation. I noted that, as reported at page 736 of Hansard, the minister made this statement:

> In some instances, the act and the interpretation of the act have limited the activities of the pension commission, and in the revision that is now going on it is our hope that some of the sections which have hindered the commission from time to time may be altered so that its work may become more effective.

I do not know whether there are any sections of the act that are hindering the Canadian pension commission from implementing term 38 as I have quoted it here today. But if it is a matter of interpretation, certainly term 38 is clear. I do not see how it can be put in clearer language. That was a definite commitment of the parliament of Canada to the people and to the veterans of Newfoundland. We are just asking that it be implemented even at this late date. As I said, possibly it is just a matter of changing the interpretation.

Toward the end of the resolution itself I note that there is a rather curious clause. A part of this resolution is going to introduce an amendment for the following purpose:

> —to permit appeals from decisions of the former board of pension commissioners—

The minister did not explain what that language meant when he spoke. When he replies I hope he will clear up any mystery that may be hidden in these words. I am fully in agreement that there should be provision for appeals from the decisions of the pension commission, but I think it should apply with regard to every commission and not merely the former pension commission. I think every board of pension commissioners are sometimes going to make mistakes. I believe there should be a right of appeal, and I think the right of appeal should not be confined merely to decisions of the former board of pension commissioners.

Returning to the problem of the status of the Newfoundland veteran, I have quoted previously, and perhaps I might quote again to the new minister, a precedent. If he will look back over his records he will find a precedent which I think could be used to clear up the situation in regard to Newfoundland veterans. That precedent arises out of a situation which arose during world war II. During world war II there was a time when Britain was short of flyers to man her aeroplanes and when certain Canadian personnel from the Canadian air force were transferred to the Royal Air Force. They served from, as far as I know, with the Royal Air Force for a considerable period and possibly until the end of the war. I cannot say how long they served, but in any event they served.

Some of these veterans became eligible for pensions. In the first instance they were required to go through exactly the same procedure as that which was required of Newfoundland veterans. In other words they were obliged to apply to the British ministry of pensions and try their luck there, and then to come back to the Canadian pension commission for a supplement. Then after a while the government of Canada made a deal with the British ministry of pensions whereby the British ministry of pensions would pay a flat rate to the Canadian government and the Canadian government undertook to supplement it in order to bring it up to the Canadian level.

But I submit to the minister that it is mainly a matter of putting into effect the plain terms of the agreement between Newfoundland and Canada with respect to our veterans; and those terms are that, as far as Newfoundland veterans are concerned, having regard to their new applications, they will be treated as though they had served in Her Majesty's Canadian forces. That is all we are asking. I hope the minister will give consideration to this matter, and that when he replies he will set our minds and our hearts at rest with regard to whether anything is to be done about it at this session.

In theory the purpose of a resolution, as I understand it is to enable suggestions to be made prior to the bringing in of a bill so that all these wise suggestions can be incorporated in the legislation. I think that is something honoured more in the breach than in the observance. However, with respect to matters pertaining to veterans and veterans dependents, this is the only opportunity we shall have to do anything about it. Once we get the bill before us it will not be possible for us to bring in any amendment because then we shall be ruled out of order on the ground that any amendment we might propose in order to assist veterans will be a charge on the public treasury and, of course, under our rules it could not be permitted.

Therefore, before I sit down I want to make a few more suggestions which are going to cost the government a little bit of money, but which I hope the minister will see fit to incorporate in the amendment that he plans to set before us.

One big disappointment is that nothing has been said about extending benefits to the Newfoundland foresters of world war II. The president of the Newfoundland overseas forestry unit, Mr. Thomas Curran, and the secretary, Mr. C. R. Baggs, appeared before the standing committee on veterans affairs on March 31, 1960, and presented a brief which in my opinion was well and sympathetically received by the committee. In that brief they explained to the committee that they had performed exactly the same services as had been performed by the Newfoundland foresters of world war I. In world war II they had done exactly the same work as that done by the Canadian foresters, who often worked with them side by side; that they had taken the same risks and undergone the same hardships, and that the only obstacle preventing them from receiving benefits is a technicality, namely that they were not put in uniform and organized as a battalion.

If we are interested in justice; if we want to do the right thing, surely we must realize that the right thing must be based on the merits of the case and not on technicalities such as whether a person had a uniform or whether he was recruited in a certain way. Certainly those technicalities should not be allowed to stand in the way of administering justice.

Then, of course, from time to time we have had requests from the merchant navy, from the rescue tug service and from the firefighters. All of them have very strong cases. If we are going to do justice to them we must base it on the merits of the service they perform and not on any technicality as to how they differ from the armed forces or things like that. These merchant navy people, the rescue tug service, performed services just as vital to the winning of the war as those performed by the other armed services, and in many cases the percentage of their casualties was higher.

Today in my own riding I have a number of crippled people who are incapable of earning a living and providing for their families because they contracted tuberculosis while cooped up in some freighter during the war, or because they were floating around in the ocean for 48 hours or 72 hours and contracted arthritis and all sorts of conditions and ailments arising out of the hardships which attended their service. Yet these people who served just as truly and just as nobly as did the others who were in the fighting forces are in this situation today, namely that they and their families must depend on public charity and public relief.

If Canada is ever going to find its soul, and if we are ever going to start to do the right thing, I do not think we should hedge about technicalities; rather we should do the thing that is right because it is right. I ask the minister if he will not try, even at this late date, to find some way of incorporating in his amendments measures which would do something for these people.

In closing I wish to support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Waterloo North with regard to continuing the pensions paid in respect of disabilities assessed at less than 50 per cent. In the case of the death of a veteran whose disability has been assessed at 50 per cent or more, the pension continues to be received by his widow and children; but in the case of a man who has suffered, let us say, a degree of disability estimated at 45 per cent, the widow and family find their source of income cut off.

There seems to be injustice involved here, because if the principle is good in respect of 50 per cent it should be equally good in respect of 45 per cent or 35 per cent. We are not asking the government to extend the payment in respect of 50 per cent disability but to widen the principle so that those people concerned at least would not lose their source of income abruptly and be cast upon public relief and public charity.

Mr. Sevigny: For many decades the members of the Progressive Conservative party have been the advocates of even better treatment for the veterans of our nation who served in the two world wars and also in other conflicts. While they sat on the opposition benches, the members of the Progressive Conservative party at all times asked that better pensions should be given to our veterans and that improved treatment should be accorded to those who had suffered from wounds resulting from their participation in action on the battlefield. They played a major part in securing from previous governments various improvements in the treatment of our veterans.

It is indeed gratifying to me to be an active member of a government which, ever since it secured power on June 10, 1957, has taken care of all those who served in those two wars and who, as a result of their devotion to duty were disabled on the battlefield. The former minister of veterans affairs, Hon. Mr. Brooks, devoted all his time and energies to improving the conditions existing in his department. He has, indeed, done a great job, and the veterans of this nation owe him a great many thanks and a debt of gratitude.

The work which he so ably performed is being carried on with efficiency and devotion by another veteran, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre the present holder of the portfolio of veterans affairs. As one who served during world war II, as a member of the War Amputations of Canada and of the Canadian Legion, I am pleased in the name of my fellow veterans to extend my thanks to the Minister of Veterans Affairs for the constant care which he shows for the disabled servicemen of this nation.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, on behalf of my colleagues of the War Amputations of Canada, and of all veterans of this country who, because they were wounded in various actions, must receive a government pension, I am very happy to thank the former minister of veterans affairs, Senator Brooks, and the present minister (Mr. Churchill), for their magnificent work on behalf of our nation's veterans and their families.

Surely, among those who deserve the people's gratitude, none are more deserving than those who fought for months, and sometimes even for years, on the battlefields where our Canadian troops were called upon to serve and who, because of their devotion and heroism, now have to bear the scars of glorious wounds.

I want to pay a very particular tribute to those who laid down their lives because they wanted to serve their country and the cause of democracy. As I want to pay them a well-deserved tribute, I shall borrow the following verses from the poet Victor Hugo:

Ceux qui pieusement sont morts pour la patrie,
Ont droit qu'à leur cercueil la foule vienne et prie,
Entre les plus beaux noms, leur nom est le plus beau.
Toute gloire près d'eux passe et tombe éphémère.

Those who devotedly have died for their country,
Should rightly see the people flock to their graves to pray.
Among the greatest names theirs are the brightest.
All glory, beside theirs, is fleeting ephemeral.

The heroic sacrifice of those who died at the front is equalled only by the sacrifice of those who, today, as victims of their duty, must still bear the pain of wounds received in action. For many of them, advancing years only add to their burden of suffering.

A moment ago, the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Weichel) mentioned that at the recent meeting of the War Amputations of Canada, 130 of our members who had died the previous year were missing at the roll call.

The veterans of the first great war are certainly due to disappear quite rapidly in the next few years, not only because the growing load of years affects them to a certain extent like everybody else, but also because, apart from that load, they have to bear that of their wounds which, in some cases, causes them to age before their time.

Several veterans of the second world war are now getting on in years. Some of them whom I know, find it impossible today to continue in their profession, which they had practised for many years, i.e. since the fighting ended in 1945.

Consequently, it is of capital importance to raise the level of veterans' pensions, and the action taken by the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the goverment as a whole is certainly welcome at this time.

This increase will be a protection against the destitution which unfortunately, threatens quite a few of our veterans.

And while I am on the subject of the fate of veterans, I should like to pay a very special tribute to the personnel of the Department of Veterans Affairs, and particularly to those of hospitals caring for those of our veterans who, for some reason or other, have to be hospitalized.

When I came back from the war in 1945, I was fairly discouraged, and if it had not been for the good care and encouragement I received in veterans hospitals, I wonder whether my convalescence would have been as short, and if I could have made such rapid progress as I did.

This is perhaps the first opportunity I have in this house of addressing myself to the personnel of those hospitals, as well as to all those who serve in that department. And I am delighted to pay them the tribute due to them, and to thank them for all they are doing to help our war amputees and other veterans. It is from the bottom of my heart that, on behalf of all my comrades in arms, I express our most sincere appreciation for so many services rendered.

Before closing my remarks, I should also like to point out that our veterans are an example for the rest of our citizens. In fact, those men who, when the time came to serve their country on the battlefields, did so without hesitation, continue today in civil life to serve their country with dignity and competence. Only rarely will you meet a veteran who, today, does not occupy an important place in our national life; not very often, either, will you see a veteran who does not play some significant role in our country's economy.

Our veterans have learned to serve their country. They have understood the meaning of discipline. They have understood the necessity of obeying certain rules and, above all, they have learned the necessity of having esprit de corps and spirit of unity because, as everyone knows, to wage war individual effort is not enough; it requires the effort of a group which, united and fighting for the same cause and the same objective, strives to achieve the same goals. Our veterans continue to put into practice, in civil life, the spirit of co-operation which they have learned while serving their country.

I am proud to say that our veterans can rightly be considered as the best citizens of this nation, because they have learned to understand the necessity of that unity while serving their country and fighting for the same cause and for the same objective. As a matter of fact, in their regiments never has race or religion separated one soldier from another; quite the contrary, regardless of their ethnic or racial origins, our soldiers fought hand in hand in splendid co-operation, realizing that it was in uniting themselves in battle, as they did, that they could achieve final victory, the ultimate objective, which was to save democracy as we understand it.

That national unity which our soldiers achieved in the service of their country, they still strive to strengthen through the efforts they make towards that end in their civil occupation.

I think the best example of that national unity can be found in such veterans' associations as the Canadian Legion, the Canadian War Amputations Association, the Paraplegic Society and other associations which maintain, in peacetime, that tradition of service and national unity for which so many of our people fought, for which so many suffered the consequences of glorious wounds or even made the supreme sacrifice.

I feel that the action taken by the government today constitutes an homage to those Canadians who fought in the army, the navy or the air force. For my part, I am proud to be a member of this government which gives such recognition to the services rendered by those veterans who have contributed to victory in two world wars and are now contributing to the establishment of peace.

(Text):

Mr. Chairman, my last remarks will be words of homage to those veterans who have died in recent years, and who were so eloquently referred to by the hon. member for Waterloo North. I believe that the finest homage which can be rendered to these men may be found in these beautiful verses which we repeat at our reunions and which move us so deeply as we commemorate the memory of those who fell on the battlefields, victims of their duty and of their desire to serve their country. These verses—and I hope my memory shall not fail me—are as follows:

They shall grow not old, as we that are left grow old:
Age shall not weary them, nor the years condemn.
At the going down of the sun and in the morning
We will remember them.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we all listened with a great deal of interest and respect to the words of the Associate Minister of National Defence. We all appreciate his sincerity, integrity and emotion so calmly reflected in his remarks in view of his distinguished war record and his trials and tribulations as a result of his wounds suffered in the active service of our country. I was interested in the verse with which the hon. gentleman concluded his remarks. We fight a war on two fields in our lifetime, one on the battlefield and one at home. I wish to add to the words used by the hon. gentleman. In my opinion homage is best expressed in the words of Rudyard Kipling. They are these:

Not as a ladder from earth to heaven, not as a witness to any creed,
But simple service, simply given to his own kind in their common need.

To me that epitomizes humanity and citizenship in time of peace and war. That is the approach I wish to take in my brief remarks at this time.

I appreciated the associate minister's remarks. I can understand his taking advantage of this opportunity to pay homage to those who fought, those who died and those who returned in safety and their dependants who suffer because of the sacrifices in war. I cannot, however, agree with the remark of the minister that this has been foremost and uppermost in the devotion of the party which makes up the present government.

We in this group most certainly welcome resolution No. 9 on today's order paper which is now before us, for which the Minister of Veterans Affairs is asking the support of the house. He will most certainly receive the unanimous support of hon. members to bring in a bill to provide for increases to disabled veterans and their dependants, to permit payment of supplementary payments in certain cases, and to permit appeals from decisions in cases which are not now covered under the existing wording of the act which is subject to wrong decisions or misinterpretation.

But there is one thing I should like to draw to the attention of the Associate Minister of National Defence before he leaves the chamber. We welcome this resolution and what it purports to do. With respect to the statement as to the devotion of the Conservative party to the veterans, we wish the minister would have recalled that this legislation was supposed to come before the House of Commons last year. I say that because of the statement made in the veterans affairs committee of the year before to veterans organizations that appeared before the committee, that the legislation would be introduced in the House of Commons last year. Whatever their devotion may be now, I am afraid they have been over a year late in fulfilling a promise given in the veterans affairs committee two years ago. I think this matter should be drawn to the attention of the Associate Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Read the committee report of two years ago and the statement of the minister. Recriminations are not important at the present time, but I had to draw this to the attention of he miniser.

We now have this resolution. I have received a great number of letters in regard to this matter, and this is why I rise in my place and speak at this time. Because of the language of the motion a number of us and many veterans are not quite certain as to how far it intends to go. It makes reference only to the Pension Act and to increases to disabled veterans and their dependants. The question I ask is, does this also cover changes in the veterans allowances? I refer to allowances to burnt out pensioners. My interpretation of this resolution is that it applies only to one act.

Mr. Churchill: That is right.

Mr. Winch: I thank the minister for nodding his head and saying that my interpretation is correct. Therefore I want to add my words to those of the veterans associations, and I am certain to those of many members of this House of Commons. It is absolutely correct that attention should be paid and is going to be paid to the disabled veterans and their dependants. Surely there should not be discrimination against those whose war services have been recognized in an act of parliament but who are not going to receive attention simultaneously with the ones who are covered in the resolution now before us and in the bill which will follow. It was because of recognition by parliament in the past of the effect of war on those who are not disabled, as they advance in years, that the veterans allowance act was brought into being. Their cost of living is the same as those who are disabled. For the life of me I cannot understand why, when by law these two groups of veterans are recognized for pension purposes, one group is left out when amendments are made to the Pension Act during this session of parliament.

There is not only this fact of discrimination now. They are already discriminated against because they have to face a means test. I think that should be revised upward right now. Even if no consideration is to be given to that surely the minister will give thought to those on war veterans allowance as well as those who are disabled. If there is a reason why there should be discrimination between these two groups of veterans, perhaps the Minister of Veterans Affairs will have the courtesy and the kindness when he concludes this debate to tell us why the discrimination should be permitted to continue at this time. Why do those on veterans allowance not need an increase in the same way as those who are disabled?

May I also add my words to those of the hon. member for Waterloo North and ask the minister whether in this resolution he has given any thought or will give any thought to those in Canada and, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, to those in his province in particular who went overseas in the forestry corps but do not receive benefits. Since the hon. member spoke of that matter in some detail I will not touch on it.

I am going to ask whether this resolution which deals with veterans gives any consideration to rectifying what I think is one of the most disgraceful things that has happened to those who went overseas and have never received any recognition. I refer to the recruiting of those who were asked to go overseas as firefighters. They were paid army pay but were never officially recognized in the same way as members of the active force on the battlefield itself, although they did serve under fire. According to statements I have received, they have never been recognized as eligible for veterans benefits and, I gather from the wording of the resolution, are not being recognized in the bill that is to be introduced following the passage of this resolution. I hope the new Minister of Veterans Affairs is giving some thought to those men who were under fire, who were recruited in Canada and did a necessary job overseas.

I said I was not going to speak at any length. There is only one other matter which I should like to place before the committee because it has been brought to my attention. I express the hope that the legislation to follow the resolution will give effect to the recommendation in the brief submitted to the Prime Minister and the cabinet by the Canadian Legion on December 12, 1960, with respect to a revised rate for dependant parents. If I may refer to that matter very briefly, on pages 7 and 8 of the brief the Legion points out that back in 1951 a widow received $75 and a dependant parent also received $75 whereas after the revision in 1951 the widow received $100 and the dependant parent $75. In addition, under the 1957 amendments the widow's rate was increased to $115 and the rate for a dependant parent to $90. As the Canadian Legion so aptly points out, there would seem to be no reason for this discrimination and the Legion recommends that the pension for a dependent parent be restored to its former basis whereby the rate of payment was equal to that in the case of a widow with, of course, a more adequate additional amount where there are two dependant parents.

When the bill is before us and we know its details we will be able to discuss all aspects of this most important matter concerning our veterans with far more thoughtfulness and understanding. When the minister closes the debate I hope he will tell us about his approach to the financial problems of those on war veterans allowance. I hope he will also indicate whether anything is going to be done for those who fought overseas as foresters or firefighters. In particular, and of the utmost importance, I should like to know what the view of the Minister of Veterans Affairs is with regard to all aspects of the recommendations made by that most responsible organization, the Canadian Legion, on December 12, 1960.

Mr. Montgomery: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on the resolution chiefly because I was unavoidably absent from the house when the estimates of the department were considered last year and, having had the pleasure of being chairman of the veterans affairs committee, I should like to say a few words at this time with respect to the work of the committee. Before I go into that, may I join other hon. members in extending best wishes to the minister in his work in this department. I should also like to refer to the great work done by the former minister and the interest he always took in and out of the house in our veterans.

As I have become better acquainted with the work of the department I have come to understand that its work is quite diversified and that it has to do with the interests of veterans in many fields. While the hon. member who has just taken his seat was speaking—

Mr. Broome: Who has just left the chamber.

Mr. Montgomery: —I could not help thinking that he lets his heart run away with his head, to put it in a kindly way. I think a lot of people feel the same way but matters having to do with veterans affairs should be approached in a logical, sensible and economic way. In particular, there is a great difference between veterans allowances and disability pensions, and if the hon. member wants to find out more about the matter let him talk to those members who earned their disability pensions on the battlefield. I do not think this is any time to discriminate or to bring politics and recriminations into the debate.

I have been a member of several house committees and I have enjoyed participating in the work of the veterans affairs committee more than in that of any other committee. In the veterans affairs committee members of all parties seem to get together and to want to do what is best for the veterans. They want to come to conclusions that will benefit the greatest number. There is no recrimination and backbiting in that committee or disagreements such as we find in other committees. I am very proud of the hon. members who were on the committee last year and in other years under the former chairman. I consider them to be friends and I have never yet heard them make remarks such as were made in the committee today.

Mr. Broome: The hon. member is not a member of the committee.

Mr. Montgomery: I do not think that makes any difference. Maybe if he were a member of the committee he would understand things a lot more. I wanted to refer to the committee before saying anything about the resolution. As chairman of the committee last year I appreciate having worked with those who were members of the committee and also on former committees when I was a member though not the chairman.

I also want to say that I think we have received the greatest degree of co-operation from the officials of the department. Prior to my experience on the committee I did not have the slightest idea of the broad field of work that comes under veterans affairs, including hospitalization, the Veterans' Land Act, rehabilitation, etc. You will find very few veterans in this country who are not ready to stand up and say that they appreciate what has been done for them.

I do not propose to talk very long. The resolution has to do with amendments respecting disability pensions. It is true that it may not meet the wishes of all of us. I am not sure what the increases will be but I have a feeling that whatever they are they will be satisfactory to the great majority of disability pensioners in this country.

There are one or two points about which I wish to say something. One of them has been covered by my colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo North. I have never been able to understand why a widow was denied a pension if her husband was not in receipt of at least a 50 per cent pension. I feel that the time has come when we should give consideration to wiping out that, what shall I call it, floor of 50 per cent. I believe that the widow should receive half of the pension the husband was receiving as long as she remains his widow. This has been my thinking for some time, and I am glad that the matter has been mentioned. If we find the bill contains no provision in this respect, then we will keep on pressing for it and I am sure our representations will be given consideration.

There is another matter about which I wish to say a word or two, and about which the Canadian Legion has been rather critical. What I am about to say is not by way of criticism. Last year and the year before, if you look at the minutes of the standing committee, you will find there was considerable criticism of the Canadian pension commission's interpretation of section 70 of the act. This is known as the benefit of doubt section. We have been asked to make that section stronger. I should like to say to the minister, to other veterans and to the Canadian Legion, that I have studied this section and I do not see how parliament can do much more.

Every once in a while cases are brought before the committee which indicate that some veteran has not received the benefit of the doubt. Nevertheless I believe we should be very careful about passing judgment on this exercise of discretion by the Canadian pension commissioners until we have heard both sides of each case. I presume that the members of the Canadian Legion who have criticized these cases have heard both sides of the story. I feel that the deputy chairman of the Canadian pension commission outlined the situation very well, as I think anyone learned in the law will understand, when he said that the discretion left with a body or with an individual is exercisable by that body or individual. If the commission is not exercising its discretion to the satisfaction of those who appear before the committee there is not much parliament can do about it. We cannot appoint a man to a position and then tell him what to do.

I feel that over the years the governments have appointed men to the Canadian pension commission in whom they had confidence. On the whole I believe those members have done a fairly good job. It may be that they are overworked. It may be that we need to appoint more members to the commission. It may be that we need an appeal board set up within the pension commission itself.

Last year I noticed a reference to the fact that a claimant had to wait for several months in order to get his case reopened. The decision of the pension commission is final, but if an applicant can secure new evidence it is seldom, if ever, that the case cannot be reopened. This reopening of the case does not mean merely a review, but the case is tried from the beginning. It might save time if we had, as we have in the supreme courts of the provinces, an appeal branch within the Canadian pension commission to which these cases could be referred. If after the final decision of the pension commission new evidence were procured the case could be taken directly to the appeal branch.

If I may return for a moment to the consideration of this question of discretion, I may say that I feel the pension commissioners have not been unfair. I suppose that if I were to take a number of cases to them and the commission turned them down I would feel they had not exercised their discretion properly under the benefit of doubt section. However, what may seem to me to be reasonable doubt might not seem to be a reasonable doubt to you, Mr. Chairman. This is our difficulty. I do not see how parliament can strengthen this provision because we have placed this discretion in the hands of the commissioners. The only thing we might do would be to impress upon the commissioners the fact that we feel they are not exercising their discretion in favour of the veteran. Perhaps if the commissioners felt we were not happy with the way they were exercising this discretion they would give these cases a second look, and they might take a more lenient view in the exercise of their discretion. I believe that an appeal board composed of men who had not heard these cases should be established so that these cases could be given further consideration.

In so far as veterans allowances are concerned, I have received few complaints in my area so I judge the people are happy about it. I just get the rare complaint. I do believe that at present the dependant parent of a deceased veteran, whose widow and children are receiving a pension can only get $40. I believe there is a point there to which we could give consideration. I do not believe $40 is sufficient. However, I will not go as far as some other hon. members. After all, this dependant's allowance is like the war veterans allowance and was given in lieu of the old age pension. If a married couple are both receiving the old age pension they can get $115. There are many points to be considered in this argument. I believe that governments, over the years, have been gradually more generous. I believe these cases must be considered from every standpoint. I do not like to see a member get up in the house and commence to rail about these poor people.

The veterans, especially the disability pensioner who was wounded on the battlefield, are not asking for sympathy. The pensions we are giving them for the loss of arms or legs or something like that are not sufficient to repay them for these losses, but these same pensioners will tell you that they would rather see the boys who did not get any recognition receive some pension than to get an increase in their pensions. These veterans who saw service are amongst the most generous citizens in this country.

I do not think I will take up any more of the time of the committee. Whatever increases are provided in this bill, they will be appreciated. No doubt there are other things to be tidied up. I have no doubt that our present minister is working on that matter with his officials.

There is another point that should be given consideration but it cannot really be raised or should not be raised on this resolution. I refer to the situation of a veteran who may be getting the veterans' allowance and the pension. He may not get the benefit from this legislation unless there is an amendment to another act. However, these things can not be handled together. Each must be considered on its own merits. I have all the faith in the world in our present Minister of Veterans Affairs. I am confident that these points we are raising will not be overlooked. Whether or not they can be dealt with at this session, I believe it is a good thing to mention them and I believe that they will receive consideration.

Mr. McCleave: Will the hon. member permit a question before he resumes his seat.

Mr. Montgomery: Yes.

Mr. McCleave: When the hon. member talks about the Canadian pension commission establishing an appeal board does he visualize that there would be older members serving permanently as an appeal tribunal that is apart from those who hear the cases in the first instance?

Mr. Montgomery: Yes. That is what I had in mind. The people who hear the cases should not sit in appeal unless it were in an emergency and even then persons could be selected who had not heard the case. There should be within this pension commission a nucleus of two or three members whose job would be to handle appeals from what we now know as the appeal board. I think we are going to be obliged to come to this procedure unless the exercise of the discretion under section 70 is used a little bit more broadly or loosely or in whatever way you want to think of it. Does that answer the hon. member's question?

Mr. McCleave: Thank you.

(Translation):

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity to say a few words in French about the resolution introduced by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill).

This resolution is made up of three parts: the first, to provide for increases in pension to veterans; the second, to permit appeals from decisions of the former Canadian pensions board and finally, the last, to provide for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act.

At the outset of my remarks, I should like to point out that the minister who introduced this resolution has rightly commended his predecessor, Colonel Brooks. He congratulated him for all the efforts he exerted as a member of this house and as minister of veterans affairs.

He said that the former minister, assisted by his deparmental officials, had sought to improve the lot of veterans. That is true and I commend him for it.

I believe, however, that it is fitting to recall that before Colonel Brooks, there was Colonel Lapointe, Colonel Gregg and others still.

Those ministers, with support of this house and of the committee, have worked without respite to set up what is called the veterans' charter.

They have also worked over the years to improve that charter with the help of circumstances and according to changes occurring in our economic life.

There is a point, Mr. Chairman, with which I particularly want to deal, and I am happy that the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Montgomery) raised that point. Before proceeding, however, I should like to refer the committee to certain parts of the remarks made by the Minister of Veteran Affairs. They are to be found on page 736 of Hansard of December 12, 1960. Here is the statement then made by the minister:

(Text):

The pension commission is anxious to administer the Pension Act in a manner which will ensure that Canada's veterans receive in full the benefits provided by the act.

(Translation):

And further on:

(Text):

In some instances, the act and the interpretation of the act have limited the activities of the pension commission, and in the revision that is now going on it is our hope that some of the sections whch have hindered the commission from time to time may be altered so that its work may become more effective.

(Translation):

I do not know exactly what the minister had in mind when he made that statement which, you will admit, is broad enough to cover all sorts of things. But I hope that it refers mainly to possible amendments—

The Chairman: Order.

[Mr. Roberge.]

(Text):

Order. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to leave the chair in order to permit the house to proceed to the consideration of private and public bills pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

PRIVATE BILLS

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. SD-1, an act for the relief of Jean George Lipsman.—Mr. McCleave.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that this bill and all the other divorce bills under these orders of private bills be allowed to stand today.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreeable that all of the divorce bills standing for second reading be dealt with in one order?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCleave: I would ask that they would be allowed to stand today.

Mr. Speaker: I am just getting concurrence that they all be dealt with at once. Is that procedure agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreeable then to accede to the request of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) that all of these divorce bills be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AURORA PIPE LINE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, January 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chown (for Mr. Woolliams) for the second reading of Bill No. S-2, to incorporate Aurora Pipe Line Company.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think it might be properly said that if the hon. member for Bow River speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in resuming this debate on the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Chown) for the second reading—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before I recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) may I inquire whether the hon. member for Bow River does not accede to that view. Perhaps I should hear him, otherwise it may result in his not being allowed to speak for some time if he is put in the position of waiting to close the debate.

The situation is that the motion for second reading stands in the name of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) but it was moved for him by the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Chown). Hence one or the other of them or perhaps both would close the debate if they spoke, in the strict view of the rule.

Mr. Woolliams: Your Honour, I took the position that as the motion was in my name, if I were to speak now I would close the debate. That is the position I take. I have discussed it with my colleague from Winnipeg South (Mr. Chown) and he is in accord with that view.

Mr. Howard: That raises another point, especially in the light of what Your Honour has just said. What is the position of the hon. member for Winnipeg South who moved the second reading on behalf of the hon. member for Bow River? Is he prevented from speaking again, or could he speak again on second reading without closing the debate?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has raised a hypothetical question but perhaps I might express my view even though the point does not have to be decided now. The rule is that members may not speak twice in a debate. I should think that if the hon. member for Winnipeg South attempted to speak twice he would still be in his role of spokesman for the hon. member in whose name the motion stands, and he would therefore close the debate. So they have to choose between the two of them which one closes the debate.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Again we resume the debate on the second reading of Bill No. S-2, an act to incorporate Aurora Pipe Line Company. I am interested in this particular bill because it seems to have aroused questions in the minds of those hon. senators who spoke on it in the other place. It has raised questions in the minds of all Canadians who have read this bill in the light of the attitude which this government has apparently taken.

This bill seems to me to personify some of the faults which are inherent in our present system, particularly in relation to primary industry. What is the Aurora Pipe Line Company? If we read what was said by the mover of this motion we find it is a subsidiary organization of the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited. One-third of the shares are held by the Hudson's Bay Company, and two thirds of those shares are held by the Continental Oil Company which is a large United States oil enterprise. Thus, I think it would be safe to say that Continental Oil, because of the fact that it owns Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas, and because the executive officers of the Aurora Company are executive officers of the Hudson's Bay Company, is a subsidiary of one of the largest oil companies operating either in Canada or the United States.

It has been said that this bill would be referred to two or three governing bodies charged in Canada with the regulations of gas, oil and energy. One of those bodies would be the national energy board, which will be asked to issue a permit for the exportation of the condensates which are the by-products of natural gas. In addition, the Alberta conservation board is to be asked whether it regards this company as a suitable one or not.

If these condensates were not being handled in any other way there would probably be some justification for the present application, but not long ago this house set up a company called the Foothills Pipe Line Company which has under its control Pembina Pipe Lines Limited. It seems to me that though it may be necessary at the present time to issue export permits because of the lack of a Canadian market for the products, this company having been set up with a prime interest in handling these products in Canada for the benefit of Canadians, it would be in our best interest to see that the wishes of its founders are acceded to.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask a question at this stage? These are the facts, though I have not yet had an opportunity to substantiate them—the information was communicated to me by telephone. In all probability the oil companies of which the hon. member speaks have withdrawn their applications in respect of this particular project before the Alberta conservation board. I wonder whether the hon. member has given any consideration to that?

Mr. Peters: We are very interested in this information and if it is correct I think it would have some bearing on what the national energy board might decide in relation to this pipe line. But that is not the problem. It does not really matter who gets this export permit. What really matters, in my humble opinion, is that we should be allowing this product to be exported at all before Canadian industry is satisfied and every advantage has been taken of opportunities for the establishment of secondary industry based on the primary resources. It has been said that this company only wishes to operate in a restricted field close to the United States border and that secondary industries are already established in the United States dependent upon these particular products, for which a sale is readily available.

It might be said that the point of view I am expressing is only the opinion of the official opposition in this house, that it does not represent the opinion of hon. senators in the other place, but I would refer hon. members to the proceedings of the other house when the bill was introduced. It was introduced by the Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson and in the course of his remarks he pointed out that this company is not a Canadian company, that it has strong connections in the United States and that the product would be used to the advantage of industry in the United States. He based his argument for the existence of this company on the fact that Canada is not at the present time in possession of industries which would use these particular products.

The Hon. William R. Brunt, speaking in reply to the motion for the introduction of this bill and representing, I believe, the Liberal party in the other place—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Peters: It is even worse if he represents the Conservatives. This is what he had to say speaking in the other place:

> It is my thought that this matter should be called to the attention of the Senate, for if the bill passes and becomes law and this company is set up, then starts to transport these by-products, we will have in Canada another industry which will have passed out of the control of Canadians into the hands of people who are not Canadians—in other words, it will have passed into the hands of a foreign corporation.

Then he went on to say:

> I think we should take a good look at this bill, because if it passes and the company goes into business another part of our Canadian industry will be controlled by people not residents of Canada but by a foreign corporation.

I was not aware that this senator belonged to the government party. If he does, hon. members opposite should give serious consideration to what was said by one of their senior statesmen. He had outlined in clear terms what I consider to be a fact. The time has come when we should give closer consideration to the question of establishing in Canada secondary industries to handle and process Canadian products.

There is in western Canada as well as in other parts of the country a great need for secondary industry. When developed here, these products will be just as saleable in the United States as they are when our natural resources are sent there in raw form to be processed in that country and to support secondary industry there. Parliament should be in no rush to pass this bill relating to a company which has no interest in developing Canadian industry as was the case of a company concerning which we recently passed another bill.

Aurora Pipe Line Company makes no claim about developing secondary industries. The company will take natural resources out of Canada and process them in the United States. This may be satisfactory to those who live in the immediate area where gas is produced and where there is no immediate need for the by-products of this industry but Canadians in general should give serious consideration to the question of keeping our products at home and processing them here to the fullest degree possible.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question. Is the hon. gentleman's party or the new party in favour of exporting natural gas or its by-products?

Mr. Peters: I am sure the C.C.F. is. I am not in a position to speak for the new party but I am sure that like the C.C.F. it will have at heart the interests of all Canadians and will not want to export our natural products until we have derived from them for the benefit of Canadians all the advantages we can derive. I am sure both organizations are more interested in the establishment of secondary industry in Canada than in exporting natural resources.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the hon. gentleman permit a supplementary question. Would that policy also apply to coal and its by-products?

Mr. Peters: I doubt, Mr. Speaker, if you would wish me to deal with the subject of the coal industry in this debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is nothing in this bill about the transportation of anything other than gas or oil or other gaseous or liquid hydrocarbons. I doubt that coal is a liquid hydrocarbon. If it is, the hon. member may deal with it.

Mr. Peters: I frankly do not want to deal with the coal industry. The problems of that industry are not necessarily those of the one we are discussing. We probably will not have time to fully discuss the gas and oil industry, so we should not be distracted by attempting to deal with another.

In a publication of the dominion bureau of statistics entitled "The Petroleum Products Industry, 1958", mention is made of a survey conducted in that year. It was found that during 1958, 106,458,959 barrels of imported crude oil and 133,547,168 barrels of crude oil and absorption gasoline from Canadian wells, or a total of 240,006,126 barrels, was put through Canadian refineries, this amounting to about 82.5 per cent of rated capacity. Of the total crude input about 0.6 per cent was imported from the United States and 43.4 per cent from other countries while about 56.0 per cent came from Canadian wells. This indicates that we are not now producing enough gas and oil for our Canadian refineries. We are importing approximately 44 per cent of our crude oil from foreign sources.

Mr. Speakman: What about natural gas? That is the subject matter of this bill.

Mr. Peters: If the hon. member wishes to make a speech we will be happy to hear it when the time arrives for him to stand up and reply. My point is we have not developed natural resources to their full potential. Canadian refineries are operating at about 82.5 per cent of their rated capacity. We are continually told we must have large export markets. This is true but we also must give thought to the question of developing our own industries. In some areas dependent on natural resources as a source of income it has been felt that some advantage can be gained by exporting our natural resources in their crude form but a great deal more secondary industry should be developed in Canada. Greater results would be realized if in conjunction with the exporting of our natural resources we had a policy under which secondary industry was developed to further process these products before sending them to market.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member will permit me to interrupt, I have very grave doubts about the relevancy of this debate in the line which it has taken. It is true that this bill is to incorporate a private company with power to transport oil, gas and other liquid hydrocarbons but only subject to the provisions of any general legislation relating to pipe lines for the transmission and transportation of gas, so that if the house passes the bill which only gives the company a power or capacity—it does not put it in the oil or gas business—in view of the other legislation which controls companies formed for the transportation of petroleum products in Canada I would think that with such a limited purpose or effect as there is in a bill of this kind, the house would be going beyond any reasonable discussion of such a bill if it discussed the industrial situation in the country even in the context of petroleum products.

It would, of course, be relevant to say that there are enough companies in this field and we should not create even another company with the powers that this bill would give, but my point is—and I think the point is important enough to raise it—that on every bill to incorporate a private company we would not want to open a full scale debate on the industry or the economy of the country in the field in which that company intended to operate. I do not believe the house would expect to follow that course.

I do not accuse the hon. member who has the floor of initiating this irrelevant debate which began the last time this bill was before the house but I do say that the bill relates to the desirability of giving to another private company the corporate powers to enter into the petroleum pipe line field rather than to the economics of that field into which it proposes to enter. I say this because the bill only gives a corporate power and does not put the company in business. It can only enter into the business, as the bill itself says:

> —subject to—the provisions of—any—general legislation relating to pipe lines enacted by parliament with respect to the transmission and transportation of oil and other liquid hydrocarbons—

Parliament must take notice of the licensing legislation which it has already passed.

Mr. Winch: I know we all fully understand the point you have raised but may I, sir, with all respect point out that although the bill itself speaks of incorporating a company, the act would be completely meaningless unless after incorporation the company could export. Therefore, in deciding on the fundamental principle of the House of Commons and the Senate granting an act of incorporation it is obvious that after the bill goes through all the various stages before the company can carry out its function it has to export hydrocarbons, methanes, butanes and condensates of the production of the gas field. The bill is meaningless unless the company can export. Surely the principle that we should discuss is the end result after the company goes through all its procedures and gets incorporation.

Mr. McIlraith: If you desire more on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say something. I feel that the question of the export of hydrocarbons is a matter of policy which has been settled by legislation of this parliament. It has been determined that it can be done provided that certain conditions are met, and those conditions have been embodied in legislation, namely the national energy board legislation. Whether or not that is wise legislation is not open for discussion on this bill. This bill merely asks the house to decide whether certain persons interested should have the corporate capacity and be created a corporation for the purpose of then exporting, if they meet the law. The law as to whether or not they are entitled to export is determined by other legislation that has already been passed. With great deference I submit it is not open, however much we may desire to do so, to argue now whether that was a right policy or a wrong policy. It is only open to us to argue on the suitability of those applicants to have corporate capacity.

Mr. Winch: For that purpose.

Mr. McIlraith: Corporate capacity for the purpose, but the policy is not open to be argued at all, because that has been settled and is governed by other legislation which is not before the house on second reading of this bill.

I did not want to interrupt the hon. member, but I think the debate—and I am not saying this in criticism of the hon. members—has been ranging away beyond the area that is permissible in the particular bill before the house at this time. Many of the matters that have been argued are matters of broad general policy which have no application to the bill before us to incorporate a private company.

Mr. Howard: On the point of order, especially in view of the remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa West who has just spoken, it seems to me that if we follow the suggested course of action we would be going completely contrary to the rules of the house, as I understand them as they apply to private bills. These rules have been in existence for quite a few years since I have been here and in many years before that. If we follow that reasoning, Mr. Speaker, it would lead us purely and simply to consider the company itself without any consideration as to its relationship with the economy and the industry within which it will function, or anything of that nature.

I do not think we should attempt now to reverse the precedents that have been followed in this house for many years. In the past we have given consideration to the effect of a particular bill upon the industry within which a company would be functioning after it became incorporated. In this case, we should give consideration to the industry within which this company will function after it is incorporated and passes the other obstacles of the national energy board, and so on.

It was not the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin), as you yourself mentioned, who initiated this type of discussion; it was the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith). The hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Chown) moved the motion on behalf of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams). The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Broome), along with the hon. member for Winnipeg South, initiated the discussion of the relationship of this company, after incorporation, with another company already incorporated, or two other companies, and with the industry itself, in an attempt to determine whether it is advisable or not at this time to give endorsation to the incorporation of this particular company. I think we must be allowed to follow that general relationship between the company we are now considering and others and especially its relationship to the industry and to other companies; otherwise, we shall just be blindly endorsing every application that comes before parliament without considering the effect it will have upon other sectors of the economy, including instances of incorporation by acts of this parliament itself.

With deference and respect, sir, I suggest that in this instance the debate should be allowed to continue on the same basis as have similar debates in the past and that we should be permitted to take into account the effect of this incorporation upon other parts of the same industry and upon our economy.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank hon. members who have assisted me with the problem which I raised myself as a point of order. I think it is clear, and hon. members will agree, that what we are debating is the principle of the bill before us on second reading, not the details. As I see it, the principle of the bill is whether this group of individuals petitioning parliament shall be given corporate capacity. I see no principle other than this involved in this bill, whether this particular group of individuals shall be given corporate capacity.

Now, from the giving of that corporate capacity under this bill when it is passed other consequences may flow. That is true; but whether they will flow or not is purely conjectural. This bill could be passed and nothing might follow. If anything follows it will be in accordance with licensing legislation which has been passed by this house in which this house has already declared its policy. For this reason I think the debate has gone beyond reasonable bounds in discussion of the principle which is really at stake, namely whether this group shall have corporate powers.

I can see the difficulty which arises because the hon. member who sponsored the bill went on to expound what the company's intention would be after it had been incorporated, and that put in issue some of the things that the hon. member is talking about. Therefore, I am not disposed at this point to say that there shall be no discussion of the probable effects of the activity of this company in the context of the oil transport industry; but I do say that ordinarily it is not a necessary part of the discussion of such a principle except to say that there are enough companies in the field, and this particular company should not be incorporated. I hope I will not do any injustice to any member in asking that the discussion be restricted to the plans of this company as declared in the debate and not to a general debate on the economics of the oil industry.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I am in particular agreement with one thing you said, namely that if this bill passes and nothing else comes of it we shall have a pipe line coming from some place and going nowhere for no particular reason. I do not want to question the argument because I think it is a sound one. However, I should like to read a part of the statement made by the sponsor of the bill in the other place. He referred to a press release that appeared in a number of newspapers, which release was in these words:

> Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited has filed an application with the Alberta government seeking permission to construct a 41 mile pipe line for transportation of unrefined condensate from gas fields in southwestern Alberta to the international border.
> The company's proposed line would cost an estimated $1,700,000. It would consist of 11 miles of 4 inch pipe from the Waterton-Castle river area to the Pincher creek field and 30 miles of 8 inch pipe from the Pincher Creek field to the international border near Carway. Maximum capacity of the line would be 32,600 barrels daily, and early movement would range from 4,000 to 8,000 barrels daily.
> The pipe line would connect at the border with a pipe line system being constructed by Continental Pipe Line Company, the wholly owned subsidiary of Continental Oil Company. Continental Pipe Line is constructing a pipe line from Cut Bank, Montana, via Billings to Platte Pipe Line Company's Byron station near Powell, Wyoming. It is planned to extend this system from Cut Bank to the international border to connect with the proposed Hudson's Bay system.

It is indicated here, Mr. Speaker, that this line will serve no Canadian purpose at all, that its only purpose is to connect two existing gas fields in Canada with a United States distribution system already in existence not far from the border and from which a line is already being extended to a point on the international border. I believe this raises immediately the question of whether this line should exist at all. I am of the opinion that it should not exist at this time or at any time until we have explored all the possibilities of establishing in what appears to be a new field in Canada the handling and processing of these condensates from the washing of the natural gas industry.

I have been told that if we were to establish in Canada an industry which would handle these condensates we would have a number of secondary industries established for the initial processing of the by-products, and this might then warrant eventually a line from these secondary industries to handle those by-products which could not be used in Canada. We might then find it in our interests to export to the Continental Oil Company of the United States. We might find it advantageous at that time to construct a line then solely for the purpose of joining our producing areas to the United States market through their distribution systems.

I believe that if we build this line at the present time we will be defeating ourselves and doing away with the opportunity to establish secondary industries in that field to use the by-products which would be available locally and which would have to be processed in that area if this export transmission line is not constructed. They would have to be processed in that area and we would be able to establish further secondary industries.

Mr. Nugent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in following his present line I think the hon. member is flying right in the face of the ruling you have just made. He is continuing as though you had not tried to restrict him to the point we are concerned with in this debate, and I would respectfully suggest that he should keep in line with the ruling you have made.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether the hon. member who has the floor may not be in order in this discussion by way of a reply to what was said by the hon. member for Winnipeg South in introducing the bill. Apart from that, I agree entirely with the point of order. The passage of the bill does not establish the pipe line which the hon. member is discussing and it does not bring about the situation which he is discussing. The passage of the bill brings about nothing except a corporate entity with the legal capacity of a natural person, in fact, a capacity which a natural person would not have under our legislation because it must be a corporate entity which applies for the further licences that are necessary before any of these matters which the hon. member for Timiskaming is discussing could come about. I think the hon. member should restrict what he has to say to an appropriate reply to what was said by the sponsor of the bill and beyond that deal only with the principle of whether this proposed corporate entity should be given the capacity which the bill proposes.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to relate my remarks not necessarily to what has been said in the house as to the purpose of the bill and the reason for establishing the company but rather to what was stated to be the intention by the hon. senator who introduced the bill in the other place.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member would be out of order in following that course because to my mind the principle stated by the hon. member for Ottawa West is the correct principle, and apart from the course the debate has already taken I would not have allowed the hon. member to continue. I do not think it is in order for him to set up a case from the other place and then try to use it when it would not be relevant if that same case were set up by a member of this house.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, in closing I should like to say that I am concerned about the fact that although the bill was studied by a committee in the other place no minutes of the proceedings of that committee have been made available for our perusal and study. I hope that this will not happen again. I am also concerned with what appears to be the opinion of Senator Brunt that if the bill passes—I am not saying it should not—two thirds of the shares of the proposed company will be owned by the Continental Oil Company of the United States, a foreign corporation. I agree with his view in that regard. If we are setting up this entity that you have mentioned, Mr. Speaker, that being the only thing we are actually doing, I say that this entity is not acceptable because we would be establishing a company controlled in the United States and having the avowed purpose of not working to establish industry in this country. For that reason I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin):

That bill No. S-2 be not now read the second time this day but that it be read this day six months hence.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, perhaps initially I might raise a point of order in that because of circumstances we may be assisted immeasurably in the consideration of this matter as a result of the moving of this amendment. In my opinion the amendment now before the house would allow the hon. member for Bow River to comment and perhaps he might be able to clear up some of the difficult points before us and thus bring about the early dispatch of the bill. Now that we have this amendment before us perhaps that would be an easy way to dispose of the bill. I only make this suggestion by way of a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bow River has not risen so the point does not arise.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): This amendment gives me a chance to participate in the debate again. I had certain complaints to make earlier in the debate and I have checked into these matters further. I find that although my previous criticism to the effect that we did not have sufficient information still stands, the sooner we pass this bill the better. I believe that the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is doing a disservice to the house by his statement and to the industry he is maligning. I do not want to be called to order for committing the same offence.

However, I should like to say that the effect of the passage of this bill will be to increase employment in western Canada. It will increase plant capacity in the way of facilities for scrubbing the gas. We do know that with our exports of gas which have been approved we will have more of these condensates than can possibly be used. It would be the same position if we said we should not export newsprint because we might want to have another newspaper. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the sooner we can clear this bill from the order paper by giving approval to this amendment which will enable the bill to go to a committee, the better. We can then find out the answer to one question that still bothers me, and that is why this company has not followed what I believe to be the intent of the national energy board by making a public subscription of its stock to enable general Canadian participation in this venture.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have just one comment to make arising out of the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Broome). I think it is extremely unfortunate and unkind when the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) suggests that there is not sufficient information during the initial stages of this bill to enable us to deal with it, when he approaches this question from the point of view of protecting Canadian interests, for the hon. member for Vancouver South to get up and level accusations against him. It was extremely unkind and unwise for the hon. member to take that course of action. It does not promote the type of comradeship that should exist between members of the house in considering matters of this nature.

I can easily understand, Mr. Speaker, that on matters of government policy there might be harsh differences of opinion because so many of these policies are foolish. However, in so far as private bills are concerned, in which government policy is only incidentally involved, I do not believe there is any need for this type of comment. I do not want to follow that line of discussion, but I thought it was appropriate to make a few comments of this nature.

Apparently we could have been assisted immeasurably if the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) had put forward in some detail the information which he has at his fingertips and which, apparently, was not available to the house a week ago. He did this, I understand, under the guise of asking a question of the hon. member for Timiskaming. Perhaps this is one thing that needs to be cleared up. As I interpret it, and the hon. member can correct me if I am wrong, he informed the house that the Foothills corporation had withdrawn its application before the Alberta natural gas conservation board. If this is so, and I have no reason to doubt it, it is completely new information. Individual members may have had knowledge of it, but it puts the whole question in a different perspective.

The last time I checked on this aspect of the matter, it was my understanding that the Foothills company or the Pembina people were scheduled to appear before the Alberta board today, February 7. This was the last information I received. Now some doubt has been cast on this fact, but merely by way of a query and not by way of a definite statement.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise to a point of order, at the risk of spending a good deal of time on points of order. I would refer Your Honour, first, to citations 482 and 483 in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition. I shall read what I believe are the relevant parts of these citations, but I give the reference to them in case anyone wants to pursue the matter.

Mr. Howard: Does this have to do with what I was saying?

Mr. McIlraith: It has to do with that very point. This citation refers to the second reading of a bill as follows:

> There is, however, a distinction between the second reading of a public and of a private bill, which should not be overlooked. A public bill being founded on reasons of state policy, the house, in agreeing to its second reading, accepts and affirms those reasons; but the expediency of a private bill, being mainly founded upon allegations of fact, which have not yet been proved, the house, in agreeing to its second reading, affirms the principle of the bill, conditionally, and subject to the proof of such allegations before the committee.

Citation 483 reads as follows:

> The house does not profess to decide upon the second reading as to the truth or otherwise of the allegations of fact upon which a proposed bill is based, and in conceding a second reading to a private bill, the house is regarded as merely giving its sanction to its general principle on the hypothesis that the committee to which it is afterwards referred finds those allegations proved.

Then it goes on to say that it is usual, therefore, to allow a second reading, except when the bill enunciates some principle which the house is not prepared to affirm. My point is that the hon. member is seeking to allege here certain facts in connection with the persons seeking incorporation and also certain other facts which are in doubt concerning other pipe line companies. These matters of fact can be dealt with properly only in the committee. They are not matters that can be inquired into on the second reading of a private bill in the house because there is no machinery for dealing with them, and with the whole matter that is now before us. Whether we should agree to the proposed incorporation would be a matter of fact to be determined in the committee and, therefore, for these reasons I respectfully submit the hon. member is going beyond what is permissible at this stage.

Mr. Howard: I would only comment on that by saying that the practice of the house itself, since I have been here, has misled me. It has been completely inconsistent with what the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) has said. If the citation to which the hon. gentleman has referred is correct—I can only say it has been the practice on each occasion to go into these questions if an hon. member desired to participate in such a debate on a private bill—and if that is the rule the house desires to follow, I think perhaps it would be unkind and unfair to some members, especially in view of what other hon. members have said before this matter was raised.

Mr. Speaker: I accept the authorities which have been cited from Beauchesne's fourth edition. I think it is a sound statement of principle. I also recognize that the practice in debating private bills has often allowed a wide-ranging debate without objection from the house. That fact, of course, does not alter the principle. The fact that the house goes beyond what is a proper debating course without objection being taken does not establish a new rule. That result would not follow unless exception is taken and the point is raised and dealt with. I therefore think that the hon. member should not rely too heavily on debates in which he has taken part or which have occurred in the past.

I have been looking at the previous discussions of this matter in order to see how far the sponsors have opened the facts as expressed by the people who are applying for incorporation. It was because of that initial discussion that I did not feel I could properly stop comment on what had been raised earlier in the debate on behalf of the sponsors. I still feel that way about the matter, although

I recognize the fact that the discussion has largely been ranging beyond proper debate on a private bill the principle of which is quite limited in that it only give corporate capacity and does not do any of the things which hon. members have been discussing.

Mr. Howard: From what you have said, Mr. Speaker, I gather that it is all right to stretch the rule a little bit as long as you are not caught or as long as no one objects to your doing so. It is my error in this regard, Mr. Speaker, in not paying stricter attention to what the rule stated but rather paying more attention to what went on in the house and taking one to mean the other. However, I find that is not exactly the way in which things operate.

In view of the point of order that was raised and dealt with, perhaps I might relate some of my remarks specifically to comments which have been made by other hon. members in a preceding debate. In this regard I would refer to page 1368 of Hansard at which point some remarks appear in the name of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner). Almost at the start he is incorrect, of course, and I should like to clear that matter up. He pointed out as follows:

> The last time this subject was debated hon. members of that group—

Meaning us.

> —indicated that they wanted more information on the subject, that they needed certain particulars dealing with the export of the product concerned, yet today they moved to close the debate so that it could not be re-opened in this house.

This is just not so, Mr. Speaker. He goes further and makes a similar comment to the effect that the particular move we made a couple of weeks ago was one of attempting to close the debate so that it could not be re-opened in this house. That, of course, is not a factual statement; it is not in accordance with the rules of the house and it is not in accordance with the true state of affairs existing. Whether the individual amendment, which was one to adjourn the debate, had passed or had not passed, the matter could still have been re-opened, as is now being done, and it would still come up for consideration in its normal way.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member give me that page reference again?

Mr. Howard: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. It is page 1368, the second or righthand column just following the listing of the names on a division.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You were doing practically the same thing that you are doing now.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Howard: Obviously my friend the hon. member for Acadia is out of time and out of place. If he had said these things today, he would have been correct. But as the situation stands, he said them two weeks ago. Of course, it is not my fault that he invariably gets things mixed up.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Not as mixed up as you.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get engaged in a cross-fire conversation with my friend the hon. member for Acadia. We know the irritating things he says from time to time; and it will merely mean that we shall be engaging in a debate that is not germane to the subject matter before us.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Anything to kill time.

Mr. Howard: I am afraid that my hon. friend would like to kill a great many other things but fortunately he is restrained from doing so. I will withdraw that remark about my friend, Mr. Speaker. As reported at page 1369 of Hansard the hon. member for Acadia points out something about the details and he states this:

> Some hon. members are bothered by the lack of full details. We have established a national energy board to look into the questions of Canadian ownership in these companies, the feasibility of the markets the companies wish to develop and explore and whether the product can be made readily available without injuring established pipe line companies and so forth. Certainly we should allow the energy board to do the job for which it was established.

This is a commendable approach to take, of course. Parliament establishes commissions, boards and agencies and gives them certain authority, as was done in the case of the national energy board and then expects a certain course of action to be followed by those boards and commissions within the confines of the authority given to them. However, I think it is dangerous for this or any other parliament to give up blindly, holus-bolus, any sort of thing to the national energy board or to any other board merely because we established them and gave them a certain authority to run things. This blind acceptance of their ability is one of the quick ways which is leading us into the bureaucratic control of things in the country.

I think parliament must examine these matters in the light of how they will affect others and how the corporation itself will function, regardless of the fact that there may be another public body before which the corporation, if it is established, will be obliged to appear in order to get certain permission to do certain things and before which it will be obliged to prove certain facts.

I am not like the hon. member for Acadia who wants to relinquish all rights and powers—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Do not put words in my mouth.

Mr. Howard: I would not dare to put words in the hon. member's mouth or anything else for that matter.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The matter can still be referred to a committee.

Mr. Peters: Why not help him take his foot out of his mouth?

Mr. Howard: If I may say so, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member gets his foot in his mouth regularly. I personally admit that I was off the point, but I am continually invited to get off the point by the irresponsible comments of hon. members on the other side of the house while sitting in their seats.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING PAYMENTS, PERMITTING APPEALS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Churchill—Mr. Hamilton (York West) in the chair:

That, it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Pension Act to provide for increases to disabled veterans and their dependants; to permit payment of supplementary pensions in certain cases; to permit appeals from decisions of the former board of pension commissioners; and to provide for certain further changes in connection with the administration of the act.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, when I interrupted my remarks at five o'clock, pursuant to the rule which says that private bills must be discussed between five and six o'clock, I had just referred to some remarks made by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Montgomery), and I was trying to relate his words to a statement the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill) made on December 12, 1960.

In that statement that at five o'clock I qualified as quite broad and which I could now call omnibus, I understood—I hope I was right—that there was some possibility that an amendment could be made to section 70 of the act. This section deals with the benefit of the doubt to be granted to veterans who claim a pension and I would like to put the text on record. Section 70 reads as follows:

(Text):

Notwithstanding anything in this Act, on any application for pension the applicant is entitled to the benefit of the doubt, which means it is not necessary for him to adduce conclusive proof of his right to the pension applied for, but the body adjudicating on the claim shall draw from all the circumstances of the case, the evidence adduced and medical opinions all reasonable inferences and presumptions in favour of the applicant.

(Translation):

The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton told us a while ago—and I hope I did not miscontrue his words—that it was almost impossible to improve the wording in order for the commission or "the body adjudicating on the claim" to be in a position, because of a new wording, to make better decisions. It is evident that veterans—because in most cases claims are examined by veterans—use their discretion, as they are allowed to do under the law. But there are some cases where we, who had to deal with similar cases, feel that they do not exercise discretion as they should.

The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton said that in his opinion it was impossible to improve the act. It is my humble opinion that it is always possible to improve an act and the Minister of Veterans Affairs should, with the help of his officials—if he has not already done so—undertake a special study of section 70 in the light of the cases which were submitted to the Canadian pension commission, and try at least to find a new formula or rewrite the law so that veterans be given full justice.

Mr. Chairman, I think of at least two cases at this time. The first is the case of a veteran of the 1914-18 war, who fought in the trenches with the formation now called the Royal 22nd Regiment and who, after spending days and nights and whole weeks in insanitary trenches, as they all were, is now suffering from rheumatism and other malformations but does not receive any pension. Why? Because the physicians who testified before the pension commission of the time could not state whether the rheumatism from which he was suffering at that time and from which he is still suffering today was really due to his war service hardships. Well, in my humble opinion, it is normal to assume that the disease which then affected him and still continues now was due to his war service. And yet he could not get any pension. That is a case where, I think the party in question should have been given the benefit of the doubt.

I am thinking also of another case which comes under subsection 2 of section 13 of the act since it has to do with peace time service. That young man who is now dead was suffering from a disease whose origin is now the physicians could not establish. Well the physicians cannot state whether the disease has resulted from his peacetime service or from other causes.

Well, if doctors cannot say that the illness is due to some other causes, I believe the widow of this young man should have received benefits, if he was otherwise entitled to a pension. This case is still pending and I hope that following my remarks, the minister or his officials will decide to bring in a new formula regarding section 70 of the act, so that dependents of deceased veterans might receive the benefits they are entitled to.

Mr. Chairman, our Criminal Code, relying on the theory of the benefit of the doubt, states that the accused is considered innocent until proven guilty. I believe the same should apply in the case of the benefits to be paid to veterans as well as to those who devote their energy and their health to the service of our country, both in time of peace and of war. Really, they should get the benefit of the doubt when it comes to finding the cause of the diseases they could have caught during their service either in time of peace or war.

Those are the main remarks I wanted to make on this matter. I am convinced that the Minister of Veterans Affairs, himself a veteran, will give them kind consideration. There is no doubt that our veterans, those young men who made the sacrifice of their life or their health for the defence of their country, are entitled to our consideration. There should be no party politics involved in this house or in the veterans affairs committee on this matter. We all want to cooperate for the welfare of our veterans.

(Text):

Mr. Broome: Mr. Chairman, because of the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver East I feel that I should place on the record at this time a part of the statement made by the present Minister of Veterans Affairs when he referred in this house to the record of accomplishment of this government under the previous minister as reported at page 734 of Hansard of December 12, 1960:

During Colonel Brooks' term of office $47½ million was added by the consent of parliament to the amounts already being received by our veterans in disability pensions, war veterans allowances, increases to widows and dependent parents, educational assistance to children, and increases for hospitals. Under Colonel Brooks' guidance the house increased the basic rates for war veterans allowances and raised the ceilings for permissible earnings. Residence requirements for allied veterans were lowered from 20 to 10 years; veterans with a year's service in the United Kingdom became eligible for allowances; that is, veterans of world war I. Equity in recipients' homes was raised; allowances may now be paid to veterans living abroad who had 12 months' prior residence in Canada; loans under the Veterans' Land Act were increased, as well as home construction loans.

The minister went on to point out:

From world war I there are now approximately 240,000 survivors. Of that number approximately 49,000 are pensioners; slightly over 25 per cent of the total number of survivors of the first world war. The veteran survivors of the second world war number 826,000, and of that number somewhat over 100,000, or slightly over 12 per cent, are pensioners.

At the present time some 5,000 children of world war I pensioners and over 160,000 children of world war II pensioners are receiving assistance.

In the standing committee on veterans affairs set up by this government I have heard it said by delegations who have appeared before us that this government has done more for veterans in the three years it has been in power than had been accomplished in any previous period of time. That is not to say that some of the points raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East should not concern us at this time just as much as they concern him.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, the chairman of the standing committee, we are concerned about the benefit of the doubt section. Let me quote briefly from a statement contained at page 10 of the brief of the Canadian Legion presented to the government on December 12, 1960:

Nearly 50 per cent of cases heard at appeal in the fiscal year 1958-59 were successful.

It is inconceivable that of the number of cases turned down after the first hearing half of them should have been allowed on appeal. It seems to me the benefit of the doubt is not being given to applicants. I support what the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton says to the effect that it is difficult to express in words what a commission shall do. You must pick good men and leave it up to them. Perhaps their hands may be tied in certain ways.

An amendment should be introduced to this section and according to the statement of the minister something is going to be done in this respect. Speaking in this house on December 12, 1960 as reported at page 736 of Hansard, the minister said:

> In some instances, the act and the interpretation of the act have limited the activities of the pension commission, and in the revision that is now going on it is our hope that some of the sections which have hindered the commission from time to time may be altered so that its work may become more effective.

Each of us will have to place his own interpretation on the words contained in that paragraph. We will not know what will be accomplished until the bill comes before us. I trust that some improvement will be brought about with respect to section 70. I also wish to refer to a statement in the Canadian Legion brief respecting conditions not recorded on enlistment:

> The Legion has on record cases in which the pension commission has pointed to the lack of record of a disability on discharge and has ruled that in view of this it must be accepted that in fact there was no disability present at this time. Why then should not the commission be bound by enlistment examinations? The commission rules a condition to be of a pre-enlistment nature and then draws a totally unwarranted conclusion that there was no aggravation during service in many cases where there is a disability recorded on discharge and none on enlistment.

This problem and this section of the act are linked together with the benefit of the doubt section.

We have heard a lot about the firefighters and foresters. The hon. member for Vancouver East was most eloquent in speaking of this group of people who went overseas and performed a very worth-while function but in my opinion the forgotten people in terms of our veterans legislation are the merchant seamen. Coming from a coastal city I am keenly interested in this group. Knowing that the merchant navy suffered over 25 per cent casualties and that the provisions in the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act are very limited in scope it seems to me our merchant seamen deserve better treatment. I sincerely hope that the merchant seamen who have appeared year after year before the veterans affairs committee will somehow or other be brought under the provisions of those acts which now apply solely to veterans.

There are other problems which are of a technical nature and which could be corrected at very little expense. I know that recently in Vancouver the minister spoke to a meeting of some 400 legionnaires representing, I would guess some 15 branches, during the afternoon. I know he also had different meetings with officials from various Legion branches who came up and discussed their problems with him. I know the minister was most sympathetic to them and will try to do what he can to bring about at least some of the changes which have been requested.

I might mention that some of these changes have to do with the regulations which limit the equity that a widow may have under the War Veterans Allowance Act on the death of her husband. I realize that this is not under discussion at the present time but it is bound up in this whole matter of veterans pensions. For instance, I know a person who was told she was $500 over the amount allowed. Her husband was a recipient of war veterans allowance. He died and as a single person she has too much money to the extent of $500 to qualify. When you consider that $2,000 is the top limit allowed you can see that it is not too much to take care of those extraordinary costs which are incurred at a time of sickness or to make major repairs to a house, and so on. But she has to get rid of this amount, and it seems to me to be a rather stupid bureaucratic regulation. It could be changed without amendment to the act.

There is another matter to which I should like to refer. Last year this government permitted pensions to be paid to veterans outside of Canada; but under the regulations, after having qualified to receive a pension outside of Canada, if the veteran dies his widow and children, if there are children, must return to Canada and live in this country a year before they can go back to wherever they had established themselves. This seems rather ridiculous to me. It is something that should never have been put in the regulations and it should be changed.

I do not want to take up too much of the time of the committee but I do believe that this government has more veterans than any previous government had, both backbenchers and members of the cabinet. This government set up the standing committee on veterans affairs. At least 90 per cent of the members of that committee are veterans. I do not say this is a good thing. I am one who believes that there should be a larger number of non-veterans on this committee. Some hon. members may think that if we had a committee dealing with medicine we should have only doctors on that committee. There is no reason why all the members of this committee should be veterans. The committee should have representatives from all sides of the house, regardless of whether they are veterans or not.

This committee has done a good job and this government has done a good job in regard to veterans legislation. We must never forget the debt we owe to the veterans of world wars I and II. It is something that we can never repay, but the requirements of this group of citizens must not only be considered in relation to the requirements of all other groups, but also taking into due account the tremendous service they have given to this country and what we owe these men and women. However, we still must legislate with justice to all. I believe this government has done this.

Generally speaking, we may say that veterans legislation is something on which we do not draw party lines. All members of the veterans affairs committee speak, not as members of different parties but as parliamentarians with the best interest of veterans at heart. But if veterans legislation is to be thrown into the political field then this government and this party can stand on their own feet and show a record that is second to none. This party can show that it has done more for veterans than any other party has ever done; this party can show that it has carried the torch, that we have kept faith. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that it would be very ill advised on the part of the opposition parties to challenge us on this phase of our program.

Mr. Granger: Mr. Chairman, I should like to endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo who spoke for all the Newfoundland members on this side of the house. I should like to congratulate the minister on his appointment and to thank him and his predecessor in the department for the courtesy and promptness with which they have dealt with the problems I have had occasion to send to them from time to time. The importance of the resolution before the committee is, I am sure, appreciated by all hon. members. The debt owed by the nation to its veterans is, I feel quite sure, completely understood and I will not presume to comment further on it or enlarge on this theme.

Beneficial measures designed to help the veterans must, of course, have our approbation. However, I feel that I should mention the forestry unit from Newfoundland which served overseas during world war II. Their desire is to be given the same treatment as is accorded to members of the Canadian forestry corps.

It has been pointed out by members of the forestry unit that they did not wear His Majesty's uniform but they did work side by side with the Canadian forestry corps, and many of them did serve in the home guard in the British Isles. I know that some of those men today are ill and in need, and the only assistance they can get is from welfare sources. I do not think these men should be the recipients of charity and I hope that provision can be made to bring the members of the Newfoundland forestry unit under the act and that arrangements can be made to have them participate in veterans benefits.

I should also like to ask for consideration for the merchant marine, the rescue tug service and the fire fighters. The reference made to the status of Newfoundland servicemen by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo is one which really deserves immediate attention. Under the law, Newfoundlanders became Canadians when Newfoundland entered confederation. Not only that, but it was clearly specified that their status was to be as if they had been always Canadians. For instance, if a Newfoundlander were asked to state the country of his birth he would have to say Canada although he was born in Newfoundland before confederation. Although we entered confederation in 1949 we have always been Canadians. That is the law. It does seem strange, therefore, that there is still a difference in the status of Newfoundland veterans vis-à-vis Canadian veterans. It just is not consistent. It is wrong and it is a wrong that should be righted.

There is another point I should like to mention. In marginal cases when decisions are being made as to whether the veteran deserves to receive benefits, the benefit of the doubt seldom is given to the veteran. At least it seems so to me. I think this is also wrong. The very spirit of the administration of veterans affairs should be to give the benefit of the doubt to the veteran. Imponderables which it is impossible to pin down as facts are often associated with veterans requests. In such circumstances, rather than risk an unjust decision which can leave a veteran in need or without medical aid it seems to me that it is the fair thing and the wise thing to "let mercy season justice".

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak very briefly on the resolution. I realize there are many other hon. members who wish to speak and none of us wishes to delay the implementation of this legislation. Because this is the first opportunity I have had to do so, I should like to compliment the Minister of Veterans Affairs on the assumption of his portfolio. His service in the two world wars of this century, in the first one as a very young man and in the last as the commanding officer of a fine regiment, and his deep understanding of the problems of his fellow Canadians have fitted him for this most important of portfolios and we wish him every success.

I should also like to compliment the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs upon his appointment. Those of us who have worked with the hon. member for Saskatoon in recent years realize how fair-minded, industrious and conscientious he is and I personally wish him well as I am sure we all do.

It has been said that Canada's veterans' legislation is second to none in the world but then that is only as it should be. Though I may perhaps be disagreeing slightly with one hon. member on my own side of the house, it seems to me that our veterans legislation is a tribute to all those in all parties who have served in previous parliaments because over the years members of all parties have tried to make our veterans legislation the best that it possibly could be, and that is as it should be.

In the last 62 years Canadians have gone forth four times from this country to fight our wars, the Boer war, the two great wars and Korea. Their service and sacrifice have done more than anything else, it seems to me, to raise us to the honoured place that we hold in the world today, and we do hold an honoured place. We owe a great debt to our veterans and to the dependants of our veterans, one which in many cases money can never repay.

I can well remember half a dozen or more years ago attending a Remembrance Day service at the national war memorial here in Ottawa. That year a change was made in the service from what it had been in the years before. A mother was asked to come on November 11 and place a wreath at the memorial on behalf of those mothers who had lost sons in Canada's wars. I believe the idea was that of the Very Reverend Dean Anderson, at that particular time dominion president of the Canadian Legion. I should like to give credit to him for it if indeed it was his idea. On this particular day a mother from Saskatchewan who had lost three sons in world war II, two boys in the air force and one in the army, took part in the service. As she stood there after placing her wreath I do not think there was a dry eye among the thousands who were watching. There is not enough money in the world to pay that mother or any other mother for the lads they gave to fight for this country.

The last revision of the Pension Act was in 1957, a welcome and generous revision, but I feel it is time that the act should be revised again, as is it being done. Civil service salaries have been raised and the pay of the armed forces has been increased. I believe and I am sure we all believe that this measure to increase veterans pensions and the pensions of dependents will be welcomed everywhere. It seems to me that the editorial pages of our newspapers mirror the thoughts of Canadians. The front pages are set up mainly to sell newspapers but the editorial pages usually tell us the truth. I should like to refer to an editorial in the Fredericton Gleaner of December 14, 1960, headed "Disabled War Veterans", which reads as follows:

> If there is one thing Canada can afford to do it is to reimburse her disabled war veterans for the hell they endured in the two global wars of this century. Debate has started in the commons on government legislation to boost their pensions. We hope it will not be prolonged, that the measure will be passed into law without delay.
> Canada's war veterans are entitled to a decent standard of living. They gave their arms, their legs, their eyes and suffered fearful wounds when duty called them to the colours. Now, in many cases, they are unable to earn their livelihood as whole men can. Canada should not hesitate in doing her duty to them.
> A moment's reflection is all it takes to realize that, were it not for these valiant soldiers, sailors and airmen, Canadians might not have the privilege of debating their country's problems at all.

One criticism we sometimes hear is that some veterans is getting a pension and does not deserve one. Perhaps that is true. Those of us who were in the services know that there were always fellows around who did not seem to be very much good. They were no good before they went into the services and they were no good as soldiers, sailors or airmen. Having worked with some of them after the war in the Legion and later as a member of this house it is apparent that they are no good now either. Perhaps some of them are getting pensions. That is possibly true. It has always been the policy of the pension commission and the war veterans allowance board over the years to lean over backwards in awarding pensions so that some deserving man will not be left out.

We hear a great deal of criticism about the "benefit of the doubt." My own personal feeling is that if there is any doubt at all the veteran does get the benefit of the doubt. I feel that Mr. Anderson and the pension commission and Colonel Cromb and the war veterans allowance board are bending over backwards to give the veteran a fair break every time.

When we read the Legionary we often see pictures with a caption saying why disability pensions are paid. I should like to tell hon. members very briefly about a case before I finish. It concerns a member of this house. He led his company of the North Nova Scotia Highlanders on D-day across the beaches of Normandy and then through some of the terrible battles that followed. Finally one day in the fields of Normandy a shell landed and shrapnel shattered his arm. His arm was hanging by a piece of muscle and he could not leave it like that. He asked his batman who was near him to cut it off for him but the man could not. I can see why he could not. So this officer had his batman open his clasp knife and he performed his own amputation above the elbow. Even after that he continued to lead his company in action until he finally collapsed from pain and loss of blood. He lay there for most of the day until he became unconscious. After being found he regained consciousness three days later having been given constant transfusions of blood and plasma. He is one of those who does not feel that this country owes him a living. By the way, I am speaking of the hon. member for Colchester-Hants. I think he is an example to all Canadians. He does not feel that this country owes him a living.

He has said more than once that all any veteran's pension should do is to compensate him for what he has lost. It is not intended to keep him completely, but it is intended to compensate him for what he has lost. I know that the people, not only in my own constituency but in the whole of Canada, will urge our very able Minister of Veterans Affairs and our very able government to be as generous as possible to the veterans and the veterans dependants of this country.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to speak again at the resolution stage as I spoke at some length prior to the Christmas recess when this resolution was first introduced. However, after listening to the hon. member for Vancouver South I could not resist rising for a few minutes to point out to the committee another indication of the contradictions and differences of opinion on the government side. Mind you, I am dealing with the words of the hon. member for Vancouver South as I heard them, and he made some reference to those who are best fitted to represent veterans on the veterans affairs committee, and who are able to understand veterans' problems. The hon. member has a perfect right to express an opinion.

However, I thought I recalled a speech in the last issue of the Legionary made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs sitting opposite which expressed a different opinion. I just want to mention this speech to indicate these contradictions which are constantly occurring among the members of the government and which are cropping out from day to day. I see the minister looking at me—

Mr. Churchill: There are no divisions in your party.

Mr. Herridge: —and I want to quote from his speech. What did the minister say?

Mr. Churchill: Are there any divisions in your party?

[Mr. MacRae.]

Mr. Herridge: Divisions here? This is the most united group in the House of Commons because, Mr. Chairman, united we stand and divided we fall.

An hon. Member: Behind whom do you stand?

Mr. Herridge: Behind our national leader, the hon. member for Assiniboia.

My reason for rising is that I want to quote from this excellent speech the minister made in Winnipeg at the time of the 35th anniversary of the Legion. I understand the dominion executive met there and the minister was guest speaker. I simply want to quote one paragraph with reference to his opinion as to who could best represent veterans. This is the minister's opinion, and I quote it just to indicate that these differences of opinion crop up between those on the government side.

> In the days of peace, only those who have experienced the hazards of warfare are qualified to judge the requirements of the survivors. The Legion, with its thousands of active service members, is the body best equipped to determine the degree of assistance that veterans require.

By quoting the minister I am not suggesting that other members are not sympathetic to the cause of veterans and are not qualified to judge the needs of the survivors of war. I quote those words particularly to draw to the attention of the committee again the contradictions that are arising from day to day on the government side of the house.

Mr. Broome: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Herridge: Oh, delighted.

Mr. Broome: Would the hon. member suggest that this means we have a certain freedom of expression on this side, whereas his group is regimented to such a degree that they all think the same and they are not allowed to have any difference of opinion?

Mr. Herridge: In this group, Mr. Chairman, we have complete freedom of expression and action. On that side there is sometimes freedom of expression, but when the vote comes the members vote as they are told.

I only rose because I could not resist doing so after listening to the otherwise excellent speech made by the hon. member for Vancouver South. I know his intentions are good and he means well.

Before I resume my seat, I do want to say that there were a number of questions brought up by members this afternoon, both on the government side and the opposition side, with respect to certain amendments required to the Canadian Pension Act to give justice to certain pensioners. Reference was made to the benefit of the doubt section and to the regulation which now denies a percentage of the pension to the widow if her husband's pension was under 50 per cent. References were made, too, concerning the needs of our burnt out veterans.

In conclusion, I simply want to say that I trust when the committee is studying the bill, which I hope will be introduced for for first reading tonight—I can see by the expression on the minister's face that he is very optimistic—the committee will have various veterans organizations, including the Legion, the national council of veterans and others before them to offer suggestions with respect to these amendments which are supported by members on all sides. These amendments are required to bring this act up to date to meet present circumstances. I hope the committee will have the power, not only to make recommendations with respect to the exact wording of the bill that will be sent to the committee for examination but on these other questions that have arisen with respect to the Canadian Pension Act.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak on this item I should like first to commend the Minister of Veterans Affairs for bringing this resolution before this committee. I should like also to congratulate him on his new appointment as minister of this department. I am certain that with his wise counsel and with his service record, the department will benefit from his leadership and his experience. At this time also I should like to take the opportunity to express the gratitude of the people I represent, the veterans of Swift Current-Maple Creek, to the previous minister, now a senator, for the concern, sympathy and understanding which he gave to the many veterans' problems with which he dealt during the time he held this portfolio. It was during his tenure of office that the standing committee on veterans affairs was established. I am sure those of us who have served on that committee, regardless of party affiliation, will agree that it was to a large extent as a result of his interest in the welfare of veterans that Canada's veterans legislation is considered to be the finest anywhere in the world, as the hon. member for York-Sunbury said.

This does not alter the fact, however, that this legislation must be kept up to date and adjustments made in it from time to time. The resolution before us is the forerunner of the bill to amend the Pension Act, and actually it is broken down into four distinct clauses. The first clause would provide for increased pensions to disabled veterans and their dependants; the second would permit payment of supplementary pensions in certain cases; the third would permit appeals from decisions of the former board of pensions commissioners; and the fourth would provide for certain further changes in connection with the administration of the act.

I trust that the measures to implement the first two clauses of this resolution will cover the ninth recommendation contained in the 1959 brief of the Canadian Legion wherein they recommend that section 13 (1) (a) of the Pension Act be amended so that a pension applicant who served in an actual theatre of war who is found to have a disability resulting from an injury or disease not recorded on medical examination prior to enlistment will be entitled to have such injury or disease presumed to have had its inception subsequent to enlistment.

I believe that recommendation deserves serious consideration by the minister and by his officials. As we all now know, and has been mentioned previously this evening, Mr. Anderson, who is now chairman of the pension commission, was a former official of the Canadian Legion. I hope that he uses his high office in order to influence the minister and the rest of the staff to implement this resolution.

In the time allotted to me I propose to deal mainly with the last two clauses of this resolution which are as follows:

> —to permit appeals from decisions of the former board of pension commissioners; and to provide for certain further changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Many of us who are members of some service organization such as the Canadian Legion have had some experience in establishing claims for pension on behalf of our comrades. My recollection is that the more conscientious the individual was during his term of service, the more difficult it was to establish his claim for pension. I do not blame any board or any officials of the department for this difficulty because they have no alternative but to follow the act and the regulations concerning that matter. I could say a great deal about the regulations with regard to any of these acts. I am quite sure that when the act was passed, if the regulations were then before the house, many of these regulations would have been changed because to my mind in many cases the regulations are more powerful than is the act itself.

Many of us know of cases of service personnel who would have to be flat on their back before they would report to their medical officers. As a result no record appears on their documents of any minor ailment they may have had because the doctors themselves did not report to their medical officer. In later years when these service personnel were back in civil life those ailments, through aggravation or other causes, forced them to seek medical attention. In obtaining medical histories of their patients the civilian doctors concluded that the source of aggravation was traced back to war services. In very few cases from my experience with the board of pension commissioners do they accept the civilian doctor's findings, stating there was no entry on the applicants' service records. The term N.A.D.—no apparent disability—used on discharge from a hospital oftentimes if the truth were known revealed the lack of experience of some doctors in diagnosing the case.

In trying to establish proof of claim at this late date the pension commission has requested veterans to contact their service medical officer who treated them during their term of service. If the treatment was minor and the patient was not a malingerer the medical officer could not be expected to recall any particular patient being treated 15 years or 20 years ago for a minor unrecorded ailment.

With the amendment to permit further appeal from decisions of the board of pension commissioners I am certain that many deserving cases should and will be reviewed, claim will be established and entitlement granted. Many service organizations and members of parliament here in this House of Commons today who have spoken on this resolution obviously feel that the pension commission have failed to extend the provisions of section 70 of the Canadian Pension Act, commonly known or referred to as the benefit of the doubt clause to applicants for pension. There appears to be ample evidence, as some of the members who have been on this committee have stated, filed with the department that the commission did not use this section in the manner in which many of us believe it was intended to be used.

Before we get off on the wrong track about what this benefit of doubt means may I say this. I have heard some statements here in the house today which do not apply to this section. The benefit of the doubt refers only to the medical records of the service personnel. We are not doubtful about whether the board has done the right thing or about whether they have leaned over backwards. The benefit of the doubt refers to the medical records.

I have always been an advocate of the principle that those who volunteer for service and were disabled by any means while in the service should be eligible for pension. I say that volunteers should be shown the respect that is due to them. It was no fault of theirs that they were not called for service in a theatre of war. They volunteered to go where the Canadian government wanted them to go. As I have said, the very fact that they volunteered seems to have been forgotten. My suggestion with regard to volunteers possibly would be more properly discussed under the War Veterans Allowance Act, as the minister will tell you, but I would ask the minister at this time to consider at an early date the eligibility of the first war veteran volunteer to qualify for assistance and I recommend that the present requirement of 365 days in the United Kingdom prior to November 12, 1918 be abolished. To my mind there appears to be no just reason to distinguish between the veterans who serve voluntarily in two major wars. In Canada it actually appears to be easier to qualify allied veterans or veterans that were allies of ours during world war I than it is to qualify our own Canadian volunteers.

I now wish to discuss certain personnel of the South African force and this is one point I want to make. In some cases they arrived at the theatre of war but did not disembark prior to the cut-off date. I use the term "certain personnel" because those that are still alive, it would appear from this Pension Act and other acts covering veterans, do not qualify to be classed as veterans or to be entitled to the term "military service". Section 2(o) of the Pension Act outlines military services as service in the navy, army or air force of Canada since the commencement of world war I. With this section as it now reads it can be seen that no South African volunteer has entitlement to pension under this act, nor any service status whatsoever under the Pension Act.

An applicant who falls into this category, I understand—there are only a few of them left—must apply to the British minister of pensions. The British minister will only entertain recognition of those Canadian volunteers who landed in South Africa prior to May 31, 1902. As I said, although there are only a few of them left, Canada has made no provision to assist in any manner those South African volunteers who cannot qualify under British regulations. There is no provision under the War Veterans Allowance Act whereby assistance can be given to an early Canadian volunteer, although the need may be great. I say that somewhere in our statutes such cases should be covered. It cannot mean too much money to the Canadian taxpayers. There numbers must be less than 100.

The final point I wish to raise at this time is in connection with the monetary award that accompanies gallantry awards. Although it may not come under the heading of the Pension Act, it may have to do with the contemplated change in an administration of the act, mentioned in part 4 of the resolution, which I read previously. When we inquired in the committee stage during the last session the reason recipients of gallantry awards in world war II received cash with their awards and those receiving the same award in world war I did not receive cash we were told that such awards in world war I were under British jurisdiction. The statement was made by the officials of the department during the 1958 session that negotiations were under way for the government of Canada to take over this jurisdiction. When agreement had been reached, it was thought that Canadians of world war I in receipt of gallantry awards would be compensated in the same manner as were those receiving the awards in world war II and since that time. Can the minister say whether those negotiations have been completed with the British ministry of pensions or other British bodies that have control of these matters? I am not quite sure whether it is the pensions ministry. I would ask the government to see that this matter is not forgotten. I would ask the minister, also, to see that the matter of the very few veterans of the South African war is not forgotten.

May I say in conclusion that I am certain every member of this house is aware of the importance of this resolution to Canada's veterans and their dependents. I hope the measure will have a successful passage through this house.

Mr. Tucker: I welcome this opportunity to comment on the resolution concerning veterans' pensions. I should like to associate myself with the view expressed by the Minister of Veterans Affairs on introducing the resolution when, as recorded on page 735 of Hansard of December 12, 1960, he stated:

> It is the desire of the people of Canada that veterans and their dependents shall receive reasonably adequate compensation.

Certainly this is the same sentiment as was expressed in slightly different terms by the subcommittee on veterans affairs set up at the recent Liberal rally, which resolved:

> The Liberal party reaffirms its continued concern for Canada's veterans, believing that the country wishes to treat them in a spirit of generous gratitude for their services so readily rendered in past times of national emergency.

In my opinion veterans are patriots, and patriotism is generally defined as love for one's country. A line from one of Horace's poems runs: It is good and glorious to die for one's country. Horace lived before the birth of Christ, but even in that period patriotism was not a new thing. As a matter of fact, some 500 years before the Christian era a noble band of Spartans died a glorious death for the sake of saving their country.

But the underlying sentiment which makes men patriots is the conviction of life itself which is the most precious gift of manhood. During the first world war, the second world war, or, as a matter of fact in any world war, how many patriots had we; men who left their provinces, their communities, their families, their homes and their friends and went out and fought, not for any personal distinction or any personal gain but for king and country; men who fought for their fellow countrymen so that they might live in peace and harmony without the fear of war hovering over their heads. How many veterans made the supreme sacrifice thinking they were taking part in a war to end wars? So, Mr. Chairman, let us show our gratitude to them. Let us show that they did not fight in vain. Let us show that their efforts on our behalf have been appreciated.

The principle of the resolution under discussion is, therefore, non-controversial. It is the responsibility of this government and of members of parliament irrespective of their party affiliations to see that justice is handed out to our worthy veterans. It is in this spirit that I wish to assure the minister that I shall be brief at this stage of the debate in order to expedite the introduction of the bill itself. When we have the bill in our possession we shall give it very close scrutiny, both in committee and in the standing committee on veterans affairs in order to ensure that the maximum benefit accrues to our worthy veterans.

It is, of course, unfortunate that the government was unable to bring in this legislation last year, thus complying with the plan of the former minister of veterans affairs as expressed in the issue of the Legionary of March of last year. It is unfortunate, too, that the former minister of veterans affairs, the Hon. Alfred Brooks, who no doubt worked so hard on this resolution, will not have the pleasure of guiding it through the house.

It is to be hoped that the revision in the pensions will compensate in a realistic manner for the rapid decline in the real worth of the dollar in recent years, a decline which bears heavily on those who, of necessity, have to live within the confines of an income fixed at a time when the dollar was worth a good deal more than it is today.

We welcome the provision outlined by the minister which attempts to mitigate the injustice done to those Canadian citizens who served this country well while on duty with allied forces but who do not yet receive comparable pension benefits. I share the hope so ably expressed in the speech of the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo that under this resolution provision will be made to place Newfoundland veterans on the same footing in connection with the payment of benefit as other Canadians. I endorse every word which my hon. friend said, and urge that an attempt be made to regularize the status of Newfoundland veterans. I ask the government to take into consideration the service given by the forestry units in world war II, the merchant navy and the rescue tug service. All those who served in these bodies should be brought under the veterans' charter.

The members of the Newfoundland overseas forestry units, having answered the call of duty served side by side with the Canadian forestry corps and performed their duties in a very creditable manner. They were exposed to the same hazards as were any Canadians from any part of Canada stationed in the British isles.

It was my duty to purchase the clothing on behalf of the Newfoundland commission government for the Newfoundland forestry units prior to their departure. As far as I can understand, the foresters have never been recognized as veterans because they did not wear a uniform and were not recruited in the same way as the other fighting forces. Surely the Minister of Veterans Affairs and his colleagues will find some way to overcome this technicality and show Newfoundlanders and all Canadians that this government is not going to treat them differently from other Canadians in any of the provinces.

For several years the Newfoundlanders who served with the forestry unit have been seeking through the Canadian Legion the same recognition as is shown other Canadians who served in similar capacities. It has been stated that the commission government of Newfoundland at the time did not recognize any obligation toward the forestry unit. Surely this does not mean that the obligation did not exist and as we all know two wrongs will never make a right.

I wish to conclude by placing on the record an extract from the speech made by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo as reported at page 6755 of Hansard of July 22, 1960:

> I should like to express the hope that the war veterans legislation will be amended at the next session of parliament; not only that the Pension Act will be amended to permit increases in the basic pensions and to confirm and regularize the status of Newfoundland veterans, but that other veterans legislation will be amended so that the Newfoundland forestry units of world war II, the merchant navy and the members of the rescue tug service can all be brought under the veterans charter.

I hope the minister will take into consideration the brief submitted on March 31, 1960 on behalf of the Newfoundland overseas forestry unit. I ask the minister not to show any preference to the Newfoundland foresters, but to see to it that the same rule and yardstick are applied to our forces who went out and did their work as well as they knew how, not to see that they are given any preference but to ensure that they receive the justice so well deserved.

Mr. Beech: Mr. Chairman, may I take this opportunity—as have hon. members who preceded me in this debate—to formally congratulate the new Minister of Veterans Affairs and wish him every success in that important portfolio. Thus far the hon. gentleman has given every indication of being a worthy successor to his predecessors.

The introduction of this resolution will be received gratefully by the various veterans organizations and by veterans generally. It has been known for some time that the government has been giving serious consideration to implementing the increases given in 1957 with a view to bringing them more in line with the recommendations made by the Canadian Legion and other veterans organizations. It was expected that these increases would have been made last year and I know that it was as great a disappointment to the then minister of veterans affairs and other members of the government, as it was to all veterans, when it was decided that these benefits would have to be postponed.

That is not to say that veterans were neglected in the meantime. In fact the benefits granted by the present government make up an imposing list among which are the following: a very substantial increase in war veterans allowances; eligibility for veterans who served at least 365 days in the United Kingdom during world war I and for the widows of these veterans; reduction of the residence rule for allied veterans from 20 to 10 years; eligibility for the widows of such veterans after they have resided here for 10 years, provided their husbands would also have resided in Canada for 10 years had they lived; raising from $6,000 to $8,000 the interest a recipient may have in the property in which he resides; veterans can now receive the veterans allowance regardless of domicile under certain conditions; the repeal of the section which prohibited the payment of an allowance to an orphan receiving benefits under the Pension Act.

All of these points have been contained in resolutions advocated for many years by various veterans organizations and the amendments introduced by the government have gone a long way toward meeting these points. The abolition of the deadline for the marriage or remarriage of world war I veterans, previously advanced to 1954, enabled many veterans to claim married status.

I hope that any increases approved will include payments to those veterans who come under section 25 of the Pension Act, the meritorious section. When the new changes recommended in this resolution are added to this list I believe we will have every reason to be happy in supporting the motion. There is, however, one matter that continues to give veterans organizations considerable concern and that is the continued practice on the part of the members of the pension commission of placing their own interpretation on section 70 of the Pension Act which reads as follows:

70. Notwithstanding anything in this act, on any application for pension the applicant is entitled to the benefit of the doubt, which means that it is not necessary for him to adduce conclusive proof of his right to the pension applied for, but the body adjudicating on the claim shall draw from all the circumstances of the case, the evidence adduced and medical opinions, all reasonable inferences and presumptions in favour of the applicant.

This concern has been expressed by various veterans organizations. It was expressed by the Canadian Legion in a resolution in the following words:

—that the government take action to ensure that the benefit of the doubt as set forth in section 70 of the Pension Act is in fact extended to all applicants under that act.

It was expressed by the army, navy and air force veterans of Canada in a resolution in these words:

Whereas the Pension Act states that in any application for pension, the applicant shall be entitled to the benefit of the doubt and the adjudicating body is directed to draw all reasonable inference in favour of the applicant; and

Whereas the pension commission, the pension appeal board and medical authorities acting on their behalf, are not in many cases giving the veteran the benefit of the doubt;

Therefore be it resolved by the army, navy and air force veterans in Canada, in dominion convention assembled, that this obvious violation of the Pension Act be again called to the attention of the various bodies who adjudicate upon pension applications and that they be duly reminded of their statutory duty to give to the applicant the benefit of the doubt according to the clear and specific terms of the section above mentioned;

I wish to place on the record some excerpts from a decision of an appeal board of the pension commission:

The doctor further stated that he agreed that the arthritic condition produced a technical difficulty in operational procedure. The board has further noted that the expert testimony adduced and contained in medical reports indicates that the pensionable condition may possibly have contributed to this veteran's death.

After a most careful and sympathetic analysis, however, of all the circumstances attendant upon death, this board can only conclude that whereas the pensionable condition may have contributed to this veteran's death the fact remains the immediate cause of death was from focal peritonitis following a gastro-enterostomy and the contributory factors cannot be considered material in this case. The advocate Mr. Harvey submitted that the medical evidence established that the pensionable condition contributed materially to death and further pointed out that although in his opinion there was no doubt of this, should any doubt exist in the minds of the board it should be resolved in favour of the applicant.

The board, after carefully reviewing the entire evidence, concludes that although the possibility exists that the pensionable condition may have influenced the disease processes leading to death, the probability of such has not been sufficiently established to bring this case within the provisions of section 70.

Here is a case where the board felt there was a doubt but it was not sufficient to bring it within section 70. Many cases similar to this may be found on the files of the pension commission, the Canadian Legion and other veterans organizations that maintain veterans bureaus. For many years this subject has been the subject of resolutions by these organizations based on the knowledge that as the years go by the disabilities suffered during war service, some of which were not apparent, or if they were, were not reported on discharge, would become aggravated to the extent that the ability of the veteran to earn a living was impaired. Furthermore, the difficulty of securing witnesses and evidence to substantiate their claims would increase with the passing of the years. These fears were well founded and parliament finally recognized the need and in its wisdom passed section 70 so as to remove forever the possibility that any veteran should be denied the right to compensation for any disability suffered as a result of service to his country.

The intention of parliament as set out in section 70 is clear enough; the difficulty is with the interpretation and it seems to me that members of the commission believe that the doubt mentioned means the doubt in their own minds; whereas parliament meant the doubt as to the completeness of the evidence produced on behalf of the veteran. I believe that if this matter can be cleared up, along with the addition of the new amendments, we shall be making more complete what is perhaps already the finest veterans legislation in the world.

Mr. Batten: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few brief remarks at this time. First of all, I should like to congratulate the new Minister of Veterans Affairs. In the few years that I have been in parliament I have come to have a tremendous respect for the members of this particular department. I believe that they are dedicated to their task, and the new minister takes over a department that I am sure is trying to do everything it can for the good of the Canadian veteran.

I should also like to pay tribute to the previous minister who not only as minister of veterans affairs but also as a veteran and a member of veterans committees over the years has done a tremendous job and has carried the torch for the veterans across Canada. He has now moved on to the other place, and I trust that his good work here will bring to him the satisfaction that sometimes is the basis of many years of good health.

I want to associate myself particularly with the remarks made this afternoon by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. This is not the first occasion when he has taken the opportunity to make a strong plea for the Newfoundland veteran who now apparently is not receiving the same consideration as his mainland partner receives. Whatever the legal interpretation of term 38 of the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada may be, it is my opinion that this term should not provide food for legal argument, but every effort should be made to find some basis for granting to the Newfoundland veteran the benefits which he so rightly deserves. I would have hoped that in this legislation some consideration would be given to this particular class of veterans. We shall know in a day or so when we receive the bill what its contents are, but if this present amendment does not contain some consideration for this class of veteran I hope that any amendments which are made in the near future will give the consideration which they so justly deserve.

One coming from Newfoundland could hardly make any reference to veterans without referring to the Newfoundland forestry unit. In March of last year a delegation was received by the veterans committee, and I was particularly impressed with the brief which they presented at that time. I know that all members of this committee are keenly interested in the affairs of the Canadian veteran and I would suggest to you, and particularly to those who are members of the veterans committee, that they secure a copy of this brief and give it the thorough reading which I think it warrants.

This Newfoundland unit of foresters was formed on November 18, 1939, just a month or two after the outbreak of the second world war. It is interesting to note that some of the communications between the government of England and the commission of government of Newfoundland encouraged those people to engage themselves as foresters and to join the forestry unit rather than the regular forces. For example, on page 2 of the brief which I hold in my hand there is a reference to the encouragement which was given to those men, and in section 2 (b) we find the following:

> By telegram No. 416 dated 9th November 1939 the secretary of state for dominion affairs impressed upon the Newfoundland governor the dire necessity for Newfoundland to send a labour unit immediately to the United Kingdom for the purpose of cutting pitprops in connection with coal production in the United Kingdom which was, in his words, "vital to the war economy".
> (c) The Newfoundland government felt duty bound to ask Newfoundlanders to be guided by what the United Kingdom government felt to be most advantageous for winning the war.

This leads me to believe, Mr. Chairman, that while those Newfoundlanders engaged themselves in the forestry unit, they were, at least by power of suggestion from the home office, doing what they considered to be their part in the war effort. Each individual signed a contract for the duration of the war, except for the first nine months of the war when the special contract was for six months.

It is interesting to note that in the following year, in the month of June, 1940, the contract was altered and by this change in the contract each individual had to undertake that he would not and could not be transferred to any other unit or to any of His Majesty's armed forces, and had to sign for the duration of the emergency. In other words, having been encouraged to enter the forestry unit these men were no longer free to decide whether they would or would not enter the regular forces. In reading the brief I was interested in something I found on page 7. In telegram No. 376 from the home office under date of May 16, 1940, I find the following:

> Need of men skilled in forestry is so urgent that we should be grateful if recruiting organizations in Newfoundland could be advised to exercise special caution in accepting any skilled loggers as recruits for Royal Artillery Regiment.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the committee that these men who joined the forestry unit did so because they were encouraged to make their contribution in this direction. I feel there is an element of unfairness when these men do not receive the benefits to which in my view at least they are perfectly entitled. I hope that at some future time when the minister is considering amendments to the legislation he will give all due consideration to the plea which these men have made to the parliament of Canada through the veterans affairs committee.

When the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada were being negotiated I do not think the problem of the Newfoundland foresters was presented in the proper way. I say that for this reason. When the Newfoundland foresters were in the United Kingdom they were under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Turner. During the months preceding March, 1949, when the negotiations were going on between Newfoundland and Canada, Lieutenant Colonel Turner was sent to Ottawa to discuss the affairs of the forestry unit. Unfortunately he died en route to Ottawa. As a result the actual facts with respect to his unit were not given serious consideration for some time, but I believe that their case has now been sufficiently well presented that parliament should give consideration to the request they have made.

Coming from a province like Newfoundland it is to be expected that I would also be particularly interested in the merchant navy and I am interested in the members of the merchant navy, not because they are a distinct class of veteran but because they are a distinct class of veteran who are not now receiving the benefits which I believe they should receive. Those of us who know the tremendous part that water transportation played in the winning of the second world war must realize that every merchant seaman was in a theatre of war and that many of them lost their lives as other veterans did on the field of battle and elsewhere. I believe that these men played a tremendous part in the victory won by the allied forces. I think they should be considered as full-time veterans and that under the Pension Act they should receive all the benefits that might accrue to a veteran of any other branch of the fighting services. I would also include the members of the rescue tug service and also the members of the fire fighter service.

I think we have come to the time in Canada when we should consider veterans legislation in the light of the contribution made and not in the light of any legal technicalities which may be the result of organizing these forces in a hurry when they were required. I say again that I am very happy to see this legislation come before the house. I know it is going to be given sympathetic consideration by members in all quarters of the house. There are parts of the legislation which will be of particular appeal not only to members of the House of Commons but to the veterans themselves. Again I would hope that on an early occasion in the future the minister will bring into the house an amendment which will give consideration to the problems that have been raised by four Newfoundland members today and I know would have been raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who is unavoidably absent this evening. I spoke to him about the legislation a few moments ago and he assured me that he was quite in accord with the representations made by the four members from Newfoundland on this side of the house with regard to the problems of Newfoundland veterans.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks this evening on the resolution now before the house. First, I should like to congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs on his appointment. We all know that he was very active with respect to veterans affairs while in the opposition as was the former minister of veterans affairs, the Hon. Mr. Brooks, who has gone to the other place. We know he will do an excellent job in the department in carrying on the good work which has been done in the past.

I should like to take this opportunity to pay a tribute to a former member of the house who sat on my right, the hon. member for Kings, Prince Edward Island, John A. Macdonald. Before he got into politics John A. was the leading spokesman for the veterans of Prince Edward Island. He served on the provincial command of the Canadian Legion and he served on the dominion command representing Prince Edward Island. His loss is indeed a great one to Prince Edward Island, to the veterans affairs committee of the house and to the house itself.

I should like to congratulate the government on the steps which have already been taken with regard to veterans legislation. As we all know, the veterans charter was established after the second world war and it set out the various legislative items having to do with our veterans. As stated by the former minister of veterans affairs, the aim of the government when it took office in 1957 was to take the various pieces of legislation, go through them one by one and make the necessary changes by way of amendment. This has been done since that time.

It was not possible to bring about amendments with regard to disability pensions until this year and I am very glad to see that this matter is now before the house. We know what the record of the government has been. The many changes have been set out by other members who have spoken on the resolution. Changes were made in the War Veterans Allowance Act. In 1958 changes were made in soldiers' insurance and in the Veterans Insurance Act as well as in the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act.

We are glad indeed to have these changes in the Pension Act before us. Various members have spoken about different sections of the act. Some have stated that there are other changes which should be made. I am one of those who believe that the act is not perfect. There are many sections in the act which are open to different interpretations and those who practice law know that is natural. As time goes on and it is shown that changes are needed they will be made.

One was mentioned by the hon. member for Megantic when speaking on the resolution, namely section 13 (2) of the Pension Act. This is one provision to which various interpretations are given by the Canadian pension commission and I believe that this section above all is one that should be clarified. As I have said, the government has taken action by amendments of different kinds to the various types of legislation.

I hope that the next step in this program will be changes in the War Veterans Allowance Act. We know that those who are in receipt of war veterans allowances have need of a proper amount in order to keep themselves as well as those who receive other forms of pension. No doubt the government will take this into consideration and that will be the next step in the program.

While referring to the War Veterans Allowance Act I should like to refer to a matter which has come to my attention, and no doubt to the attention of many members in this house. A veteran who is in receipt of war veterans allowance has his allowance cut when he receives the old age security pension. I believe there should be a change in this provision. There should be no cut when the veteran reaches 70 because he is entitled to his full war veterans allowance and his old age pension, just as are the other people of this country.

There was another matter mentioned by the hon. member for Swift Surrent-Maple Creek when he spoke this afternoon and that was the regulation concerning veterans who served in the first world war. As we all know they must have served 365 days prior to November 12, 1918. I feel that there should be a change in this regulation because the number of first world war veterans is getting less all the time. I believe there should be a reduction in the number of days. In my own constituency I know of a case, and no doubt many other hon. members have similar cases in their constituencies, of a war veteran who really needs help but who is seven days short of having served the required number of days.

There was a matter mentioned by the chairman of our veterans committee. Incidentally he does a wonderful job. The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton referred to the possibility of setting up an appeal section in the Canadian pension commission. As I understood him he meant that it would be a section which would deal with appeals from the Canadian pension commission and from the appeal board in the same manner as our appellate court. I believe that this would be a good step in dealing with some of these cases.

Finally, the hon. member for Trinity-Conception spoke this evening and dealt with the new platform of the Liberal party, as a result of this last rally, as it related to the veteran. He said this indicated the concern of the Liberal party for the veteran. I should like to say that concern for the veteran is also shown by the government and evidence of that concern is the many changes which have taken place in the three and a half years during which we have been in power.

Finally, I understand that after second reading the bill will be sent to the veterans affairs committee, at which time we will be able to go into the matter fully. We are all looking forward, as members of the committee, to investigating the various matters affecting the veterans of this country. May I again join with those who have commended and supported this resolution which is now before us.

Mr. Ormiston: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to be able to take this opportunity to say a few words on the resolution. First of all, I should like to congratulate the minister upon taking over this portfolio. I am sure we all realize the strenuous efforts which the minister put into his work in his former portfolio, and we now see the results of that work. I believe that in the last few days we have noted the great effort which our present Minister of Veterans Affairs has put forward on behalf of his department. This certainly augurs well for the veterans of Canada, to have such a dedicated minister in charge of the department. If the minister errs at all it is on the side of modesty. He does not seem to care too much for the headlines. Regardless of that fact, Mr. Chairman, the type of legislation which he has sponsored should be well received all over this country.

It is a matter of some regret that the former minister was not able to present this resolution. Colonel Brooks has served Canada well, and he has particularly served the veterans of this country. We all realize how indebted we are to Colonel Brooks, and we appreciate his appointment to the other place. We did feel, however, that perhaps there was some undue pressure brought to bear on him by some of the veterans bodies in this country.

I believe this point was mentioned by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin when he spoke on December 12. I am quite convinced, however, that it is the view of most Canadians that those who were disabled during the war should be compensated to the full degree of their disability and that the dependents of those who died as a result of service should be provided for amply. It has always been the expectation of the people of this country that the veterans legislation should be as generous in its terms as that of any other country. This legislation which will be coming before the house is an indication of the understanding this government has for veterans in general and I am very happy to be able to support the resolution.

Mr. Rogers: Mr. Chairman, I, too, first want to take this opportunity of congratulating the minister on his appointment as Minister of Veterans Affairs, and to wish him the same success as his predecessor, Colonel Brooks. The legislation being introduced, while it is not spelled out in the resolution, will certainly be approved by all Canadians and, I would hope, by the Canadian Legion and other veterans associations.

In passing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity of paying tribute to the Canadian Legion. Over the years, by sound leadership and dedicated service, the Legion has established itself as the mouthpiece of the veteran. One could point to the number of projects that they have sponsored. This evening, in the time at my disposal, I should like to especially commend the outstanding work being done by the service bureau. I have found this bureau particularly helpful since I came to Ottawa as a member of parliament, inasmuch as they have helped me in every way possible in resolving a number of contentious cases.

I think it is interesting to observe that along with the appointment of the new minister there have been other changes. For instance, a new chairman of the war veterans allowance board has been appointed in the person of Colonel Bill Cromb. He is well and favourably known across western Canada for his work with veterans, first as superintendent of welfare with the D.V.A. at Edmonton, subsequently as district administrator at Edmonton and Winnipeg and finally as regional administrator for the western provinces.

Then also, about a year ago there was a change in the chairmanship of the pension commission, in the person of Mr. Anderson. The comparatively new chairman came to the commission with a wealth of experience in veterans affairs inasmuch as he was previously secretary of the Canadian Legion. Moreover, other changes have been made in the pension commission and in the war veterans allowance board by way of superannuation.

What does all this mean? If we are to follow the usual pattern that is exercised in life—and I say this with no reflection on the past administration—I think this means new ideas. I think it means a different approach in the administration of these two acts which I maintain are complementary one to the other.

Mr. Chairman, if you combine this new administration with the proposed amendments, and the fact that our world war I veterans are on the average about 70 years of age, I think it is reasonable to contemplate that a more liberal interpretation of the Pension Act in certain areas and the War Veterans Allowance Act could be expected.

As one who has been in close contact with veterans for a number of years and who is quite well acquainted with many of their problems, I want to say this. It is one thing to make a serviceman out of a civilian, but it is quite difficult to adjust back into civilian life. Notwithstanding the fact that Canada, as has been stated previously today, has a rehabilitation plan that is second to none in the world, there are a number of servicemen who find it extremely difficult to adjust themselves back into civilian life. This is something that should never be lost sight of by all Canadians. The success of a serviceman being rehabilitated back into civilian life depends upon a number of factors such as, for example, his age; his education on enlistment; his length of service and type of service, combat or otherwise; the environment to which he returns, such as his parents and family; and, most of all, down to the ground, right from the heart interest and understanding by the public at large, particularly the community to which he returns.

While this resolution will be referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs where it will be discussed in detail, there are a few observations I should like to make. The first one is with regard to the method by which applications for pensions are received. If I follow the procedure correctly, the pension commission first refers the submission for entitlement to the medical advisory branch. In turn a report is made by a doctor with his opinion. Following this the policy that is laid down is that two or more members of the pension commission must adjudicate on the pension claim.

The question that arises in my mind is this, particularly in view of the department report for the fiscal year 1958-59 indicating that approximately 50 per cent of pension commission hearings were successful on appeal. Does the pension commission depend too much on the opinion expressed by the medical adviser? There may be an answer to this question, but on the face of the matter it would appear to mean that more time and study should be given to boardroom decisions.

In all fairness, I should add that when a case is appealed the commissioners have an opportunity to meet the witnesses and to assess the over-all value of the testimony. Be that as it may, in the few cases that have come to my notice the appeals, by and large, are successful on the same evidence by which the commission had previously ruled adversely.

My second observation is on the composition of the appeal boards which travel across the country. Originally the idea was that the board would be balanced; that is to say, a board would comprise one doctor, one lawyer and one layman, with the present composition of the present commission it is contended that a board comprised of two doctors with a layman or a lawyer, attaches too much weight to the medical aspects of the case.

My third observation is in connection with that common complaint which has been raised several times today—I refer to the interpretation of section 70—wherein it is contended that the pension commission relies to a great extent on the medical advisers and that, notwithstanding the weight of evidence in favour of the applicant, the benefits of this section cannot be resolved until a doubt has been created in the minds of the commissioners.

As has been stated here previously, I do not think there is much we can do to amend the act. After all, you can make an act and you can make regulations and they are just as good as is the administration. I am not complaining of the administration. I think the position in which the pension commissioners are placed by this section 70 is an extremely difficult one. The question arises whether or not they give the applicant the benefit of the doubt is debatable.

My fourth observation is with regard to pension advocates.

The Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock shall I arise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Benidickson: Will the leader of the government indicate the business proposal for tomorrow, the next day and as long forward as he can?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, if my voice will hold out. We will carry on tomorrow with the resolution stage of this bill. If we complete that business, we will take second reading on Thursday. Any time that develops on Thursday, subsequent to the pension bill would then be devoted to the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration which in any case will be the first item of business on Friday. Friday will be given all day to estimates. That is as far as I can go with regard to the business of the house.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, the comments of the house leader almost assume that the resolution stage would take all of tomorrow. I may be wrong in my idea of the rules, but should there not normally be a day between the completion of the resolution stage and the presentation of a bill or before we could go on to the debate on second reading of a bill? In this instance I do not think it matters but am I wrong in my assumptions respecting our rules?

Mr. Churchill: The resolution stage will likely be completed tomorrow and first reading of the bill given. Second reading would then come up for consideration on Thursday.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

BAGGAGE AND PASSENGER FACILITIES, DORVAL AIRPORT

Question No. 58—Mr. Argue:

1. Has the Department of Transport (a) entered into any agreements; (b) issued any charters, to persons, organizations, or companies, for the purpose of handling baggage and/or transporting of passengers at Montreal airport, Dorval?
2. If so: (a) what are the names of the persons, companies or organizations? (b) on what dates were these charters or agreements instituted? (c) what is the content of each agreement or charter?
3. Have any changes been made in any charter or agreement since it was instituted?
4. If so, what was the change made, its purpose, and the date?

Answer by: Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport):

1.(a) Yes, for transporting passengers; (b) other than entering into the agreement under (a) the department does not issue charters. Charters for public transportation facilities are issued by the Quebec provincial transportation board.

2. (a) Murray Hill Limousine Service Limited; (b) the limousine concession with Murray Hill dates back to August 1, 1947, but at that time the company's name was Murray Hill Taxis Limited; (c) the agreement contains the clauses and conditions outlining the terms of the agreement, such as the period for which the agreement was granted, the payments to be made under the agreement and other clauses considered in the public interest.

3 and 4. The payment under the original agreement of August 1, 1947, was $7,200 per annum. The rental was increased, effective August 1, 1951, to $9,360 per annum. The rental was again increased, effective August 1, 1952, to $12,000 per annum.

An agreement has been renegotiated and submitted for approval whereby the department is to receive $50,000 per annum effective December 1, 1960, for a period of five years, with the rental to be reviewed again thereafter.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—LAY-OFFS IN B.C. DUE TO FLOODS

Question No. 86—Mr. Regier:

1. For how many days was service on the main line of the Canadian National Railways discontinued to Vancouver because of recent floods in British Columbia?
2. (a) How many men were at least temporarily laid off by the Canadian National Railways as a result of this break in service? (b) how many of these men have since been re-employed? (c) when does the Canadian National Railways expect to re-employ all who were laid off as a result of this emergency?
3. Were any of these men offered alternative employment in the task of restoring the disrupted service, if not, for what reason?

Answer by: Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport):

The management of the Canadian National Railways advise as follows:—

1. Fourteen days. Service was disrupted January 15 and restored January 29.

2. (a) Two hundred and seventeen; (b) as of January 31 all re-employed; (c) answered by (b).

3. The employees involved were members of the mechanical and car departments. They were laid off because no trains were operating and no alternate work was available. Work rules of the craft organizations involved excludes the transfer of employees between crafts to exercise seniority or perform work belonging to another craft.

FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE—PROVINCIAL ACCEPTANCE

Question No. 89—Mr. Racine:

1. How many provinces have accepted the federal crop insurance scheme?
2. If any, which provinces did so?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture):

1 and 2. The province of Manitoba instituted a crop insurance scheme starting with the 1960 crop year and it is anticipated that the province of Saskatchewan will have a scheme in effect during the current year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 8, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAOS—EXCHANGE OF LETTERS BETWEEN PRINCE OF CAMBODIA AND PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Hon. members are aware that the chief of state of Cambodia, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, recently addressed messages to 12 heads of governments, including the Prime Minister of Canada, concerning the situation in Laos. Since the texts of the prince's message and of my reply have been made public in Phnôm-Penh, I should like, for the convenience of hon. members and by leave of the house, to table the texts of both messages, in the original French and in the English translation.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Prime Minister suggest that the documents which he has tabled be printed in Hansard?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I really had not suggested that; I would think not.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PARLIAMENTARY NURSE—CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the report of the civil service commission concerning the class parliamentary nurse, House of Commons, laid upon the table of the house, Friday, February 3, 1961, be now approved.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, before the motion is approved I wish to say on behalf of this group that we are very pleased to see this improvement in the salary for our parliamentary nurse who takes such good care of us all.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin) moved:

That the first report of the standing committee on agriculture and colonization, presented to the house on Monday, February 6, 1961, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

STARRED QUESTIONS

UNEMPLOYED AS PERCENTAGE OF LABOUR FORCE

Question No. 77—Mr. Pickersgill:

What was the number of unemployed for each year, 1931 to 1935 inclusive, measured as an average percentage of the civilian labour force?

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): The answer to this question is, 1931, June, 11.6 per cent; 1932, June, 17.6 per cent; 1933, June, 19.3 per cent; 1934, June, 14.5 per cent; 1935, June, 14.2 per cent.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he could supplement the answer he gave to my starred question in the same way that he supplemented the answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Norfolk last week for the years 1936 to 1940, with the figures that would have applied under the present definition of unemployed. In this way the information would be parallel in all respects for the whole period.

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): If the present definition of unemployed had been used, the figures would have been higher. There has never been any official estimate made.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman believe it would be more difficult to make an estimate for the first half of the 1930's than for the second half?

OPIUM AND NARCOTIC DRUG ACT PROSECUTIONS, EDMONTON—LEGAL SERVICES

Question No. 90—Mr. Howard:

With respect to the payments to the law firm of Main, Nugent and Forbes of Edmonton, Alberta, for prosecutions for offences committed under the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, what was (a) the full name and address of each of the partners in the said firm; (b) the full name and address of the payee of each cheque for each such payment?

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Minister without Portfolio): (a) and (b). There were four payments only to the firm of Main, Nugent and Forbes as listed below. The four cheques bear the endorsement "for deposit only to the credit of Main, Nugent and Forbes trust account":

February, 1958	$ 26.00
May, 1958	295.00
May, 1958	35.00
June, 1958	103.00

The names of the partners in the firm of Main, Nugent and Forbes are Sidney Giffard Main, Q.C., Terence James Nugent and George Forbes, and the business address is 209 Qu'Appelle building, Edmonton, Alberta. The remainder of the payments were to Mr. Giffard Main, Q.C., and as there are quite a number of them I would ask that they be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to have the remainder of the answer printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CAPE BRETON—ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR MINERS

Question No. 92—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Has the Prime Minister received a resolution from the Cape Breton joint expenditure board petitioning the government that no coal mine in Cape Breton be closed unless and until alternative employment is provided for the people in the area?

2. If so, has a reply been made, and what was its nature?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister):

1. Yes.

2. No. An announcement was made on January 9 regarding the payment of a special subsidy to keep these mines in operation until May 31, 1961. In the meantime the problems of the coal mining area are being kept under active review, and if any changes of policy are made they will be announced.

CLOSING OF CAPE BRETON COAL MINES

Question No. 93—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Has the government received a resolution from the Cape Breton district command of the Canadian Legion requesting that a meeting be arranged of government, union, and coal company representatives to deal with the closure of three mines in Cape Breton?

2. If so, have any steps been taken to arrange such a meeting?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister):

1. Yes.

2. The answer to question No. 92 covers this question.

WHEAT SHIPMENTS UNDER COLOMBO PLAN

Question No. 94—Mr. Argue:

1. Has any wheat, provided as economic assistance under the Colombo plan, been shipped from any (a) Canadian, (b) American, port since January 1, 1960?

2. If so, on what dates, from what port, what was port of destination and country consigned to, how many tons of wheat was contained in each shipment, the dollar value, and what was the name and type of ship, and its registry?

3. Were any of these ships oil tankers?

4. If so, which ones, what shipments were made and when?

5. On what date had each unloaded its oil cargo before taking on its wheat shipment?

6. What steps were taken to cleanse and prepare each tanker prior to taking on wheat?

7. Who pays the cost of transporting such wheat?

8. Have any complaints been received regarding the condition of the wheat after arriving at its country of destination?

9. If so, from whom were they received, on what dates, for what shipments, what was the content of each, and what action was taken?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs):

1(a) yes; (b) no.

2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. The Canadian government provides wheat for Colombo plan countries free at seaboard. Since ocean shipping arrangements are the responsibility of the recipient countries, the information requested is not available.

7. The recipient country.

8. Not by the Canadian government.

9. See answer to No. 8.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—CANCELLATION OF CONTRIBUTIONS

Question No. 95—Mr. Roberge:

1. How many claimants for benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act in Canada have had their contributions cancelled: (a) from July 1, 1957 to March 31, 1958? (b) during the fiscal year 1958-59? (c) during the fiscal year 1959-60? (d) during the current fiscal year?

2. For each period, how many claimants were relatives of the employer?

3. For each period, how many claimants were considered not to have a contract of service with an employer?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): The answers are as follows:

1. No record is kept of the number of claimants in respect of whom contributions were cancelled. However, the following are the number of persons whose benefit entitlements were cancelled as a result of cancellation of contributions found to have been not bona fide.

(a) July 1, 1957, to March 31, 1958, 296, (b) fiscal year 1958-59, 830, (c) fiscal year 1959-60, 3,156, (d) April 1, 1960, to December 31, 1960, 4,325.

2. No record.

3. No record.

POST OFFICE BUILDING, ST. LEONARD, QUE.

Question No. 96—Mr. Boulanger:

1. Since December 21, 1960, has the contract for the construction of a post office at St. Leonard, county of Nicolet, been awarded?

2. If so: (a) was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer? (b) to whom was it awarded, and for what price?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): The answers are as follows:

1. Yes.

2. (a) No. The company which submitted the lowest tender requested and received permission to withdraw its bid.

(b) The contract was awarded to the second lowest tenderer, Jacques Montplaisir Inc., of St. Leonard d'Aston, P.Q. for $19,000.

UNEMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Question No. 97—Mr. Granger:

1. What was the total amount paid to the provincial governments for unemployment assistance in the fiscal year 1959-1960?

2. How much of this amount is attributable to the abolition of the so-called threshold provided for in the original act?

3. What was the total amount paid to each provincial government in respect of the fiscal year 1959-1960?

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Minister without Portfolio): The answers are as follows:

1. The total amount paid to the provincial governments for unemployment assistance in the fiscal year 1959-60 was $40,166,426. This included federal contributions in respect of the fiscal years 1959-60 and 1958-59, and of the retroactive period of one year prior to the signing of agreements, for which claims may be submitted at any time. The total amount paid to the provinces in respect of the fiscal year 1959-60 was $36,579,658.

Starred Questions

2. It is only possible to make an estimate of the proportion of the amount paid by the federal government. It is estimated that this amount approximates $12 million. In making this estimate it is assumed that all provinces would have been participating in agreements during the fiscal year 1959-60 even if the threshold had not been removed.

In so far as part 3 is concerned, Mr. Speaker, federal payments to each province with respect to the months in the fiscal year 1959-60 are set out in the following table. Again, Mr. Speaker, there are quite a number of figures, and may I ask that they be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister consent to have the balance of his answer printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table referred to above is as follows:]

Newfoundland	$3,529,898
Prince Edward Island	113,912
Nova Scotia	664,878
New Brunswick	360,559
Quebec	6,085,922
Ontario	11,669,544
Manitoba	2,868,333
Saskatchewan	1,723,968

RECIPIENTS OF UNEMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE

Question No. 98—Mr. Granger:

1. How many persons, in each province, were beneficiaries of unemployment assistance at the latest available date?

2. What was the corresponding number of beneficiaries in each province for the corresponding date in the years 1956 and 1957?

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Minister without Portfolio): Under the terms of the unemployment assistance agreements, provinces may submit claims up to six months after the end of the month to which they relate. As a result the latest month for which complete figures are available is June 1960. The number of persons assisted, by provinces, for that month is as follows; and again, Mr. Speaker, may I have permission to have these figures printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister the requested consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Ontario	78,580
Manitoba	19,632
Saskatchewan	16,722
Alberta	18,844
British Columbia	47,230
Yukon	127
Northwest Territories	132
Total	339,918

Mr. Halpenny: In so far as part 2 is concerned, the number of persons assisted in each province in June, 1956 and June, 1957 is indicated in the following table. It should be noted that in June, 1956 only six provinces, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, were participating in agreements under the Unemployment Assistance Act. In June, 1957, Ontario also was participating but Nova Scotia, Quebec and Alberta were not.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I have quite a number of figures to read and I wonder if I may have permission to have them printed in Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ABBOTSFORD AIRPORT, B.C.

Question No. 99—Mr. Hicks:

1. What are the lengths of the three runways of the Abbotsford airport?
2. Can the large DC-8's and Trans-Canada Air Lines super constellations land and take off successfully from this field?
3. During recent foggy weather at Vancouver and Seattle, what was the greatest number of scheduled flights in one day into this field, and what was the revenue?
4. What were the total flights for January, 1961, as compared to the corresponding month, 1960?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The answer to part 1 is 7,000 feet, 5,271 feet and 5,272 feet.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Regarding part 2, the answer is yes, but both types of aircraft would be limited in the load they could carry depending upon the runway used. DC-8 aircraft would be reduced to a gross weight of approximately 270,000 pounds from its 310,000 pounds maximum on the 7,000 foot runway and could not use the shorter runways. The super constellation is not limited on the 7,000 foot runway but would be limited on the shorter runways to 128,500 pounds gross in a 15 knot headwind as against a maximum permissible gross of 137,500 pounds.

The answer to part 3 is that during the fog period January 19 to 28, the heaviest traffic into Abbotsford occurred on January 27 when 25 commercial aircraft, including three DC-8's, two Britannias and six DC-6's, used the airport. Revenue on that day totalled $918.20.

As to part 4, the answer is that total traffic for January, 1961, all types of aircraft, was 541 aircraft against a total of 483, all types of aircraft, in January, 1960.

HAINES CUT-OFF SURVEY

Question No. 100—Mr. Howard:

1. Is a survey presently being conducted into the feasibility of keeping the Haines cut-off open on a year-round basis?
2. If so, when is it expected that the survey will be completed, and will it be made available to parliament?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The answer to the first question is yes.

In answer to the second question, I may say it is expected that a report on this matter will be completed within approximately six weeks. A survey is being carried on by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources as part of an over-all appraisal of Pacific coast transportation problems. As this report is being prepared for an interdepartmental committee, it would not be tabled in parliament.

REMOVAL OF C.N.R. FACILITIES, SMITHERS, B.C.

Question No. 101—Mr. Howard:

1. Is the Canadian National Railways planning to move any of its facilities or works from Smithers, British Columbia?
2. If so, what facilities or works, to which other community, at what reduction in staff, how many personnel will be obliged to move, and when will the changes take place?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I wonder if this question could stand, since the Canadian National Railway management has not been able to get the information at this time.

Question stands.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—RECOMMENDATIONS FOR SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS

Question No. 102—Mr. Argue:

1. Have any (a) processing reports (b) recommendations, with respect to settlement of contractors' claims against the St. Lawrence seaway authority, been made to any government official by (i) Mr. D. Forgan (ii) Mr. W. B. Crombie (iii) any other person, since construction work began on the seaway?

2. If so: (a) who made them, on what date and to whom? (b) what was the contract number on the claim being dealt with, the name of the contractor, the amount claimed, and the amount of settlement recommended in each case? (c) what was the nature of each report or recommendation?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The answer to this question is as follows: The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises that the answer to part 1 is yes.

As to part 2, a number of contractors' claims were reported upon by Messrs. D. Forgan and W. B. Crombie, who were retained by the authority as consulting engineers for that purpose, and by other persons. All reports dealing with claims by contractors were made to the authority through the chief engineer. Such reports are departmental documents and are clearly privileged under the established practice of the house. As the reports themselves are privileged, it follows that details contained in them should not be produced.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—BAND EXPENDITURES

Question No. 103—Mr. Winch:

What amount was paid by the Department of National Defence in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, for the following (a) pay and allowances for band personnel (i) active forces (ii) reserve forces? (b) travel expenses for band personnel (i) active forces (ii) reserve forces? (c) purchase of musical instruments (i) active forces (ii) reserve forces?

Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question, as closely as it could be computed, is as follows:

(a) (i) $4,224,553, (ii) $1,054,538.

(b) (i) $401,338, (ii) $5,918.

(c) (i) $25,533, (ii) $13,470.

WINTER WORKS PROJECTS—EMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Question No. 104—Mr. Racine:

How many persons, not registered as unemployed with the placement offices, have succeeded in obtaining employment through the winter works projects carried out during 1960-61, as at January 31, 1961?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this information is not available. Figures supplied by the municipalities indicate an estimated total employment on municipal works projects as of last night of 95,245 persons.

WINTER WORKS PROJECTS—EMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Question No. 105—Mr. Racine:

How many unemployed persons, registered as such with the placement offices, have succeeded in obtaining employment through the winter works projects carried out during 1960-1961, as at January 31, 1961?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the number of persons who were placed in employment on approved municipal winter works projects through referral by national employment service offices in the period October 1, 1960, to December 31, 1960, was 30,583. Placement figures for the month of January, 1961, are not yet available.

It should be noted that while recruitment is carried out as far as possible through national employment service offices to ensure that unemployed local residents are referred to employers on these projects, this is not feasible in the case of those municipalities located some distance from a local national employment service office.

The unemployment insurance commission operates some 200 offices across Canada. Some 1,750 municipalities have to date engaged in municipal winter works projects. Figures supplied by the municipalites indicate an approximate total employment to date of 95,245 persons on winter works projects.

EMPLOYMENT IN MANUFACTURING, SASK.

Question No. 106—Mr. Carter:

According to dominion bureau of statistics figures, how many people were engaged in manufacturing in Saskatchewan, in the months of October, in the years 1944 to 1960 inclusive?

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, since the answer to this question requires 45 statistical figures and three footnotes, I wonder whether we might have the consent of the hon. member and of the house to having it printed in today's Hansard at this point.

Mr. Carter: Yes, Mr. Speaker; I agree.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo agrees. Does the house agree to the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—
CALCULATION OF GROWTH

Question No. 107—Mr. Pickersgill:

What is the basis of the calculation of the growth factor in the equalization formula referred to in the letter addressed by the Prime Minister to the provinces, proposing a resumption of the federal-provincial conference?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the basis of the replies that I have received from the provincial premiers I can announce that the meeting of the dominion-provincial conference will commence on February 23 and continue on February 24. Until the government's proposals are placed before the provincial premiers I feel that it would be inappropriate to give the detailed answer for which the hon. gentleman is asking.

NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT SERVICE—EMPLOYMENT OFFERS

Question No. 108—Mr. Deschatelets:

1. What is the total number of offers of employment received in Canada by all the national employment service offices of the unemployment insurance commission for the following years: 1953-54-55-56-57-58-59-60?

2. How many persons have obtained employment in Canada through the national employment service offices of the unemployment insurance commission for the same years?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in view of the detailed information requested I suggest that the answer might be taken as read.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member agreeable to that procedure?

Mr. Deschatelets: I agree.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

1. The total number of vacancies notified through all national employment service offices of the unemployment insurance commission for the years 1953-1960:

1953	1,289,162
1954	1,088,320

PROVINCIAL ROAD PROJECTS, NORTH-WESTERN ONTARIO

Question No. 109—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the government received any requests, queries, or suggestions from the province of Ontario, regarding the sharing under any federal program of the road location surveys or road-building in northwestern Ontario, for projects which would link Geraldton and Manitouwadge; Hornepayne and Manitouwadge; Ignace and Savant lake?

2. If so, when, and with what results?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that this question be made an order for return.

Mr. Speaker: Order for return.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, whether a question should be made an order for return or be published in Hansard is something that makes a considerable difference from the point of view of persons placing questions on the order paper. I should prefer to see this question answered on the Hansard record rather than made an order for return. The same comment applies to the next question.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is limited by the rule. Standing order 39, section 5, says:

If a question is of such a nature that, in the opinion of the minister who is to furnish the reply, such reply should be in the form of a return, and, during the question period on Wednesday, the minister states that he has no objection to laying such return upon the table of the house, his statement shall, unless otherwise ordered by the house, be deemed an order of the house to that effect and the same shall be entered in the Votes and Proceedings as such.

If the hon. member wishes to object, of course the matter is in the discretion of the house and I will call for those who are in favour of the matter being ordered for return.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to make this particular question an issue, but there seems to have grown up a practice, when information comes from more than one department, for the Secretary of State to make it an order for return. In this particular case there is nothing complex about the question or the information that would justify it going one way or another, and I think it is unfair—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless the minister wishes to alter his decision, he is complying with the rule in requesting that the answer be made an order for return. Unless the house otherwise directs, it will be so ordered.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order for return.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—INSTRUCTIONS RESPECTING DISPLACED PERSONS

Motion No. 42—Mr. Regier:

For a copy of all correspondence and instructions issued by the Department of Labour to the regional offices of the unemployment insurance commission having to do with displaced persons since January 1, 1957.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is not present in the house I would ask that this notice of motion for the production of papers stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CAPE BRETON—REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION AS DISTRESSED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance as suggested by a resolution of the Cape Breton labour council asking that Cape Breton be declared a distressed area or, as the minister said in the budget speech, a chronic unemployment area.

Can the minister say whether Cape Breton has been so designated and, at the same time, what other designated areas are in the government's mind?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this will be done, of course, in due course; but as I pointed out when I was last asked a similar question, this is a matter in which some expediting of the budget resolutions would assist very much.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister, does he not realize that now over six weeks have elapsed—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —does he not realize that over six weeks have elapsed—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —since the minister announced—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen here apparently do not want to assist the unemployed.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have taken no exception to the hon. member drawing to the attention of the minister the lapse of time, and I think the house should hear the question.

Mr. Martin Essex East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise the question of unemployment; that is the subject matter. I regret hon. members opposite do not want to hear it. Does the Minister of Finance not realize that over six weeks have elapsed since he announced in this house that the government proposed in part to deal with unemployment in this country by applying the principle of double depreciation to distressed areas? That being the case—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question is of course an argumentative one, presenting an argument in the form of a question. I think he would be within his rights in asking the ministry for an explanation of a delay, but not to go on to reinforce that with argument.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of the time that has expired—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Just a minute—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it the hon. member has completed his question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am well aware of the time that has expired. I do keep track of the calendar. Perhaps we may have some progress some day soon on these budget resolutions. We spent three days on one very short resolution last week. I hope we will have more co-operation from the opposition from this point on.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance now announce the areas to be covered by this measure so that municipalities can take the necessary preparatory steps? If the government is serious about its attempt to deal with unemployment—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is tacking on something which is improper to a question which I would be prepared to admit.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am prepared to admit the hon. member's question, but I tried to prevent him from attaching a rider. It is now open to the minister to reply.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member attempt to disentangle his little question from that mass of verbiage with which he clothed it, full of statements and misstatements?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to try and clarify a very simple question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the government's announced policy regarding double depreciation, and in view of the desirability of municipalities being prepared to take advantage of this provision, will the minister without further delay announce the distressed areas to be covered by the application of this proposed principle of double depreciation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I take issue at once with the hon. member's reference to distressed areas. That expressions has been employed by the hon. member with deliberate purpose. It was employed by another hon. gentleman opposite who asked a similar question not long ago. I did not refer to distressed areas in the budget speech at all. If the hon. member would amend his inquiries I think they would be more appropriate. Announcement of this subject will be made at the appropriate time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): At the end of the session.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no; not under the dictation of the dictatorial hon. member for Essex East, but at the proper time.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance referred to items in the budget resolutions. Which item in the budget resolutions has in any way deterred action on the part of the government with respect to accelerated depreciation to business people dealing with the depressed areas?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think we should anticipate the debate which will take place on the budget resolutions.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting all hon. members. The Minister of Finance suggested that the reason he was not in a position to answer the question of the hon. member for Essex East was that the budget resolutions had not been dealt with. My friend the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is asking which of the budget resolutions refers to this matter, and I think for good reason; because none of them does.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is not one seeking for information but for making a point. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is not satisfied with the answer which has been given and wishes to argue the point. I think the appropriate time would be when the budget resolutions are under discussion.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether it is the policy of the government not to designate any areas of chronic unemployment until all the budget resolutions have been dealt with?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not put it that way, Mr. Speaker. If the Leader of the Opposition will look at the answers I gave to the hon. member for Laurier when he first asked a similar question about a week ago, the hon. gentleman will find that I pointed out that I thought the house should pass on the budget before we attempted to deal piecemeal with some of the matters that I dealt with in the budget.

Since that time the house has resolved itself into committee of ways and means on the budget resolutions, but we do not seem to be making very rapid headway in the committee.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, this is now the second time the Minister of Finance has referred in the same manner as he did earlier to the so-called delaying tactics of the opposition in connection with this measure. The leader of the house has now had two opportunities to call the budget resolutions if he wanted to but has seen fit not to do so. We are ready to proceed with these, and the Minister of Finance should know that we are ready, without pointing his finger in our direction and accusing us of employing delaying tactics.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have noted from time to time that hon. members on both sides of the house have commented on the conduct of other hon. members with respect to the progress of business. I doubt if that is a matter of privilege unless there is some imputation of personal misconduct in any accusation of that kind. I do not think the hon. member for Laurier has a proper question of privilege.

Mr. Chevrier: Let us have an answer to the question, at least, sir.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Laurier knows that while he may ask questions he cannot insist on an answer of any particular kind. The minister concerned is free to make such answer as he sees fit.

REQUEST THAT RAILWAY UNIONS AND MANAGEMENT REOPEN NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a reply from the railway brotherhoods to his request to them and to the railways to renegotiate their difficulties in connection with wages?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what is the nature of the reply?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I can table it tomorrow.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. Has May 16 or any other date been set by the government as the date upon which the freezing of railway freight rates will be lifted?

Mr. Diefenbaker: When a determination has been reached on that question it will be brought to the attention of the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO SASKATCHEWAN, 1960

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon the hon. member for Welland asked me about the answer to be given to his starred question No. 57, made an order for return, having to do with the contributions made by the federal treasury to the provincial treasury of Saskatchewan in the calendar year 1960. In reply I am pleased to inform the hon. member that a number of departments authorize payments from the federal treasury to the provincial treasury of Saskatchewan, that all departments have been circularized for information on these payments, and that the return will be tabled as soon as all the information is available.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

DISARMAMENT—REPORTED INTENTION TO ORGANIZE COMMON POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, now that the flurry from the opposition benches is over I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister with all due and proper respect for parliamentary procedure.

In view of the most significant peacetime announcement by Right Hon. Harold Macmillan, Prime Minister of Great Britain, that he intends to attempt to organize a commonwealth policy on disarmament at the commonwealth conference of prime ministers to be held in London next month, can the Prime Minister inform the house whether the government has given consideration to this announcement and its response to the same?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have received no indication that the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, to use the words of the hon. gentleman, "intends to organize a commonwealth policy on disarmament". Such a course, I think, would be foreign to the relationship among the countries of the commonwealth. However, it is the practice of these conferences to endeavour to arrive at a consensus of opinion on various issues that are of importance to the various nations comprising the commonwealth family.

One of these issues is the question of disarmament, which I know will receive full attention from those in attendance at that conference. As I said the other day—I believe on February 3—in answer to the hon. member for Essex East, in our discussions I do not think it would be appropriate to attempt to arrive at a common policy applicable to all parts of the commonwealth. We will discuss, consider, and I am sure agree on the need of furthering every effort toward disarmament. That has been the purpose of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom throughout the last several years, particularly evidenced by the fact that he has sought the closest relationships between east and west consistent with the maintenance and preservation of freedom. That has been the attitude of this government, as I stated the other day, and that is the attitude of the other governments of the commonwealth. My hope is that in the discussions to be held all of us will be able to attain a unity in our objectives without in any way interfering with the basic principles of the commonwealth.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IRELAND—INQUIRY AS TO VISIT BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if it is still his intention to visit Ireland when he is in the United Kingdom attending the commonwealth conference.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I received an invitation from both governments on the island of Ireland and I am going to accept, because I am eager to visit that island in view of the relationship that prevails between their governments and Canada and in view of the wonderful contribution those of Irish origin have made in Canada.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister, as a question of privilege, whether in his visit to Northern Ireland he will take up with the publisher of the Belfast Weekly Telegraph an article which appeared in the edition of Friday, January 13 and, with what I can only describe as brilliant anticipation, referred to the Canadian Prime Minister as a former Canadian prime minister?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, everybody knows the present and the continuing Prime Minister.

WASHINGTON—ANNOUNCEMENT OF VISIT BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Will the Prime Minister tell us whether the press report stating that he intends to visit Washington before attending the commonwealth conference is correct?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. gentleman I would advise that I received an invitation from the President of the United States to be in Washington on the 20th of this month. It is an invitation I am glad to accept to enable a discussion to take place between the President and myself regarding such international problems as are of general interest to both our countries.

The announcement was made in Washington by the President at his press conference this morning. It would have been made in the House of Commons at the same time if it had been possible to do so. The reason it was not made in the house was that it was agreed that the announcement would be made on Wednesday, and I think it is only fair to advise the house accordingly.

Incidentally, the President said this morning that it was a good thing internationally for old friends to get together. I am looking forward to this meeting, which will be an informal one, free from any formal connotations. I think it is desirable that, as one of the representatives of Canada at the prime ministers' conference, I should be enabled to have at first hand the views of our close and highly regarded neighbour on the many questions which will be coming before the conference.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think all members of the house, indeed all Canadians, will welcome the announcement the Prime Minister has just made, will wish him well in the discussions he is about to have with the President of the United States, and will agree that it is most appropriate that he should have these discussions before the forthcoming commonwealth prime ministers' meeting. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom will be visiting Ottawa in conjunction with his forthcoming visit to Washington?

Mr. Diefenbaker: First I want to thank the Leader of the Opposition for his generous words. So far as the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom is concerned, I hope it will be possible for him to come to Ottawa if arrangements can be made on his part following the meeting in Washington. I know he is desirous of coming here. I hope he will be able to arrange to do so and that he will be accompanied by his great helpmate, Lady Dorothy.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of his forthcoming visit to Washington. Would he ask the new administration through the President to reconsider the United States attitude toward uranium purchases from Canada, especially in view of the fact that the United States atomic energy commission has asked domestic suppliers to increase their production?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this subject has been discussed between both governments, and I think a full report has been given on the question. If the facts are as stated by the Leader of the Opposition, naturally it is a matter that should continue to be discussed between our countries. However, within the time limit available to me on this occasion I am not certain that this will be one of the subjects discussed.

There are, however, meetings from time to time, not only regular meetings between the ministers of both governments but meetings between civil servants. This is a matter that naturally, now that the hon. gentleman has asked the question, comes to the attention of the government of the United States. As he knows, agreements were entered into some five or six years ago. Unfortunately those agreements were open at both ends in so far as the assurance of continuous purchases of uranium by the United States were concerned. The result of these open end agreements, of course, has been that the Canadian uranium industry has found itself in a difficult position. I am sure I do not need to tell the hon. gentleman this, but continuing representations are made on this subject.

TRADE

STATEMENT ON REPORTED IMPORTS OF VEGETABLES FROM CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Yesterday a question was asked by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska with respect to imports of tomatoes from Cuba. My department is aware of the current movement of Cuban tomatoes into Canada. However, the movement from Florida is by rail rather than by truck. These tomatoes do not compete with the production of Ontario growers, since there are no Canadian tomatoes on the market at present and marketing in commercial volume is not expected prior to the latter part of March.

Starting April 1, all imported tomatoes will be subject to a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem. This will continue until the seasonal specific duty of 1½ cents per pound is applied for a period of 32 weeks, usually starting in the latter part of June in Ontario.

In regard to the supplementary question, I would inform the house that these shipments have conformed to the provisions of section 56 of the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REPORTED LOSS OF TRACTOR SALE TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of a disturbing report in yesterday's Globe and Mail that Canada has lost the sale of 400 tractors to China because United States law prevented the Massey-Harris-Ferguson Company in Canada from making this sale. Would the minister care to comment on the report, and can he tell the house what action he is prepared to take to protect Canadian sovereignty and to assure that United States laws shall not interfere with employment in Canadian industries by preventing the sale of Canadian goods?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. I presume that no consideration was given by Massey-Ferguson Limited to exporting tractors from Canada because I am informed they do not make tractors in their Canadian plants and do not have tractor manufacturing capacity in Canada.

There was no discussion between the company and the Canadian government with respect to any effect of United States foreign assets control, or any need of relief from the effect of this United States control under the arrangements which exist between the Canadian and United States governments.

There would appear to be no interference with employment in Canadian industries as suggested by the hon. member.

AIRPORTS

CHARLEVOIX, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Is the minister in a position to tell the house when the Charlevoix airport will be in operation?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, according to the information I have received from my department it will be towards the end of July.

(Text):

UNITED NATIONS

DISARMAMENT—PROPOSED ADMISSION OF RED CHINA TO DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): A press report indicates that the United States administration disarmament experts are considering the admission of China into any proposed disarmament scheme. Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs in a position to tell the house whether the Canadian government would favour the admission of China to such proposed disarmament talks?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I suggest that this is a question to be discussed in the debate on external affairs, or on consideration of the estimates.

FIRES

QUEBEC CITY—POSSIBLE DESTRUCTION OF TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Bourbonnais (Vaudreuil-Soulanges): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Could the minister investigate to find out whether the fire that took place at the provincial parliament buildings in Quebec last Monday destroyed the plans and specifications for the future Ile aux Vaches location of the trans-Canada highway passing through Vaudreuil-Soulanges?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member seems to have gone a long way round about to bring this matter under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

THE CENSUS

REQUEST FOR TABLING NEW FORM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State.

On Saturday February 4, it was reported in Le Devoir that the amended census form was about to be printed. My question is this: Does not the minister think that it would be appropriate to table the new proposed form before having it printed?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but that question does not lie within my jurisdiction.

(Text):

[Later:]

Mr. Deschatelets: I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It has to do with the new census questionnaire that is about to be printed. Does the minister not think that the new questionnaire should be submitted to all members of parliament before its printing is proceeded with?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the new census form has been approved by the government.

Printing in both French and English is proceeding. The dominion statistician has advised me that samples in both French and English will be ready on Friday, and I have asked him to send copies of the form in English and in French to every member of the House of Commons and every member of the Senate as soon as they are ready.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce tell the house whether the new census form to be printed is an improvement over the one used in 1951 under a Liberal government?

Mr. Hees: I would think the house would agree it is.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Questions of fact and opinion sometimes get mixed.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

FORT WILLIAM, ONT.—MEETING WITH UNION REPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Has the minister had discussions recently with representatives of the workers at Canadian Car, Fort William, in regard to possible defence contracts and, if so, to what effect?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): I had the pleasure of meeting the representatives from local 1075 of the workers of the Canadian Car plant in Fort William. I am happy to say that because of the pressure we have put on—although we like to see industry absolutely free from government interference—they have kept this plant running for the last two years. When I met the representatives of the local I made several suggestions. Among others I offered at their disposal the representative of my department in Detroit in production sharing and other work that we were trying to secure, with the consent of their management, for the Fort William plant.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR DINING FACILITIES ON TRANSCONTINENTAL TRAINS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of the hardship recently caused C.N.R. passengers when a C.N.R. train lacking dining car facilities was trapped in the Fraser canyon for several days. In view of representations made by railway employees, would the minister discuss with the C.N.R. management the desirability of providing some dining facilities on all transcontinental trains?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I will be very pleased to take up the matter with the management of the C.N.R.

HIGHWAYS

HAINES CUT-OFF, B.C.—SUGGESTED YEAR-ROUND MAINTENANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, notice of which I have sent him. Has the minister received a telegram from the city of Prince Rupert inquiring as to the position of Canada regarding the maintenance of the Haines cut-off on a year-round basis and, if so, can the minister tell the house what reply was given in answer thereto?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I received the telegram on February 6, and I replied to it in the following terms:

> Re your wire of February 6. Firm decisions must await results of the survey now under way and formal approaches from the United States.

[Later:]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Skeena of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In view of the fact that the economic development of the Yukon, including an existing mining operation wishing to ship high grade copper ore over the road from Haines junction in the Yukon to the tidewater port of Haines in the state of Alaska, is being seriously retarded due to the continued closure of the Haines road during the winter months, would the minister recommend the urgent need for the all-weather maintenance of the Haines road?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, it was the interest of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources in the continuing development of the north that precipitated the study and survey now under way. I can assure the hon. member that I have requested that the study be completed as expeditiously as possible, and that the matter also be considered within the frame of reference of Canadian interests as well as the international aspect.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED INTENTION TO DISBAND CERTAIN CF-100 SQUADRONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of National Defence would care to comment on a press report based on a statement attributed to senior officials of his department to the effect that certain CF-100 squadrons will be disbanded in the current year, and that those that are retained will be used mainly for warning and identification purposes.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would not care to comment on this particular story, which I have not seen. However, I think the Leader of the Opposition will remember that my predecessor stated on two or three occasions last year both in the house and in the committee on defence expenditures, I believe, that the CF-100 squadrons would begin to be phased out in 1961.

[Later:]

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, in view of what the Minister of National Defence has just said about the phasing out of the CF-100, can he say whether they will be replaced as this process takes place and with what?

Mr. Harkness: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Garland: No, they will not; or no, he cannot say with what?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say.

TRANSPORT

CHIGNECTO CANAL—MEETING OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL ENGINEERING BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Michaud (Kent, N.B.): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Did the minister receive notification last week from the acting premier of New Brunswick that two departmental engineers have been named by the provincial government to act with federal engineers on a survey of the Chignecto canal? If so, can the minister tell the house whether a decision has been reached as to when the survey will get under way and when a meeting of the federal-provincial engineering group will be held?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker. After waiting since last summer for the new premier of New Brunswick to give us the names of engineers to co-operate with us in investigating the feasibility of the Chignecto canal, we finally received the names a few days ago. I can assure the hon. member that even at the present time the preliminaries to the study are getting under way, and a meeting between the engineers of the federal domain and those of the province will take place very shortly, we hope.

DRUGS

REPORTED CONSIDERATION OF FEDERAL INQUIRY INTO HIGH COSTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the great interest in the question of the high cost of drugs in this country, would the Prime Minister care to comment on the report in today's Ottawa Journal that the federal government is considering a public inquiry into the cost of drugs?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

FEED MILL PURCHASES FROM FARMERS, SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture based on complaints that have been received that feed mills in the Saskatoon area are purchasing No. 1 feed barley for 39 cents a bushel at the farm or 55 cents a bushel at the mill. Will the minister comment on these prices, and particularly will he indicate whether he thinks they are consistent with the objectives of the wheat board?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Before I answer that question, would the hon. member give me the name of the feed mill in Saskatoon?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Several complaints have come in and I have not the names directly in front of me, but I would be glad to give them to him. I have one here—well, I had better make sure of that. However, since the minister asks, perhaps I might read a letter that I have in this connection.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He has asked for it.

Mr. Speaker: The question and answer procedure is directed to those who are responsible for the administration. I think the hon. member was asked for a name, but I do not believe he needs to supplement his answer by reading a letter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister asked for some information, and this is a matter of great concern. I shall be very glad to read this letter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member would not be in order in reading the letter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Then perhaps the minister will give me an answer, since I cannot give him the source of my information. Will he give us an answer to this very important question?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): It is very important to me to end all these misrepresentations that go on concerning this feed mill issue, so I asked the hon. gentleman to name the mill because to use the indefinite expression "feed mill in Saskatoon" means nothing to me. I happen to know the name of the feed mill in Saskatoon, and I wanted to know whether the information came from an authentic or a non-authentic source.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister has certainly made a very serious allegation either against an hon. member of this house or against one of the farmers in western Canada. He has referred to this as misrepresentation. I hold in my hand now a letter from a farmer in Saskatchewan on this question, and the minister says that correspondent is guilty of misrepresentation.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I feel we ought to be able to put this on the record. In any event, the refusal of the minister to answer this question is a further indication of the lack of concern of this government.

Mr. Brunsden: Is the minister aware of the fact that the hon. member for Essex East and the hon. member for Assiniboia have been talking together lately?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING PAYMENTS, PERMITTING APPEALS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, February 7, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Churchill—Mr. Flynn in the chair:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Pension Act to provide for increases to disabled veterans and their dependents; to permit payment of supplementary pensions in certain cases; to permit appeals from decisions of the former board of pension commissioners; and to provide for certain further changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Mr. Rogers: Mr. Chairman, prior to the adjournment of the house last night I had been referring to pension advocates. I may say I brought this matter up as a member of the standing committee on veterans affairs. My opinion is that throughout all the years these pension advocates have never been brought together for a refresher course. I submit the minister should look into this aspect of the matter. If the pension advocates were brought in for a refresher course, they could brush up on pension law, and I believe that it would help a great deal in the work. This would be following a practice that most organizations find helpful. I think this is most important, because it means a lot to the veteran in the preparation and presentation of his claim. In general, the pension advocates are doing a good job, but if they were brought together and given the opportunity to exchange ideas they would go back to work with new confidence and new ideas and do a better job.

My final observation is in connection with the proposed legislation. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that at the outset I said that the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act were complementary one to the other. I would hope that certain amendments would be made to the War Veterans Allowance Act in order to conform with the increase in disability pensions. I have in mind a recipient who, for instance, is receiving a 10 per cent disability pension and at the same time is receiving war veterans allowance. Under the proposed amendment this recipient will receive an increase in the disability pension and under present regulations he will have his war veterans allowance decreased, a procedure which will in effect nullify the proposed increase. I hope provision will be made so that the recipients referred to will enjoy the proposed increases.

I do not suppose any provision is made in the proposed legislation or in the bill to come before the house, but I should hope that this matter will receive attention shortly so the recipients may enjoy the increase. If we do not do this, I think a great deal of confusion is going to be caused, and certainly a great deal of disappointment.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee on veterans affairs I wish to say a word of commendation on the introduction of amendments to the act which will provide for pension increases to disabled veterans and their dependents. I also wish to join with those who preceded me in this debate in extending to the minister congratulations on his appointment to one of the less controversial departments of the government. When I say this, I do not mean to convey the impression that there is always agreement. However, on the whole the humanitarian aspect of the Department of Veterans Affairs is such that it does not offer the same area of conflict in ideas, because the subject is protected by a universal appeal to the better instincts of the members.

During the last two sessions of parliament I had the privilege of serving on the committee on veterans affairs, and at the numerous committee meetings which were held during those two sessions delegations were heard and many recommendations relating to the Pension Act were placed before the committee. This was, of course, to be expected. It is only natural that the most important subject of discussion at these committee meetings had to do with compensation for disabilities suffered by men in the service of the country. Throughout the course of the deliberations the then minister—he is now a member of the other place—who was indeed friendly, patient and even sympathetic to the problems of veterans, made it clear then that the Pension Act would not be up for amendment, but he intimated that in 1961 the act would come under review. I am therefore pleased that at last the amendments are being made in a revision which I hope will result in a fair increase in the pensions of veterans in order to enable them to meet the present-day cost of living.

As a matter of justice these pensions should be under constant review, and should not be allowed to be dormant or fixed for years. The Canadian Legion and the war veterans associations have recommended an increase in pensions across the board. We on this side of the house feel that this recommendation should be considered along with the pension for the disabled veterans.

Then there is the question of the Hong Kong veterans. A delegation of this organization appeared before the committee and renewed their appeal for special compensation. It is a problem which should be well known to the government and which also merits special consideration.

One of the matters that illustrates the crying need for revision of the act is certainly the ceiling on a veterans income, which is $145 a month for a married man. I have in my constituency several cases in which veterans are being penalized because they have been able to supplement their meagre allowance with odd jobs, and in some instances because their wives are working part time, something they do only because it is their only means of meeting expenses and providing not luxuries but bare necessities. I could give details with regard to individuals who are sometimes compelled by circumstances to seek city relief, as outlined in letters which I have received. I have two letters, as a matter of fact, one is dated October 4, 1960, and from it I wish to quote as follows—

[Mr. Badanai.]

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. gentleman, who is dealing seriously with a serious subject. However, his earlier remarks dealt with an act which is not at present under review, namely the War Veterans Allowance Act under which a ceiling is placed on income. We are dealing here with the Pension Act, which has in it no such provision. I hope the hon. member is not going to get into a prolonged discussion with regard to the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that I have not been able to be present during a good part of the debate. However, I understand that hon. members who have spoken previously have ranged fairly widely over the whole field of veterans affairs. I would hope that my friend the hon. member for Fort William would have extended to him by the Chair the same tolerance that has been extended to other hon. members.

Mr. Churchill: May I just say that I agree that there has been a wide ranging debate to which I do not object. However, while the other members who have taken part in the debate have made reference to the War Veterans Allowance Act they have not gone into details by talking about the ceiling and giving actual examples of people who perhaps have some objection to the way in which that act operates. I think we should restrict such references.

The Chairman: I agree that the debate has been rather wide but only references have been made to the other acts concerning veterans. I would think the hon. member for Fort William is going a bit too far in discussing in detail an act which is not the subject matter of the resolution before the committee.

Mr. Badanai: Thank you, Mr. Chairman; I shall omit reading the communication which I intended to read. However, I should like to point out one single phase which I think is pertinent to the discussion of this subject. This particular veteran at one point, in view of his eyesight not being good, applied to the Department of Veterans Affairs at Winnipeg. This man lives in Fort William. He wanted to get a pair of glasses which cost $28 in Fort William. He received from the veterans welfare officer a communication which in effect said this:

> Our Winnipeg office advises me that you wrote to the director general, treatment services, regarding glasses. I understand that you have been advised that these cannot be provided unless you are prepared to go to Winnipeg at your own expense.

It would cost at least $100 for a man to travel from Fort William to Winnipeg, wait probably two or three days to obtain a pair of free glasses, and return to Fort William. He could buy these glasses in Fort William for only about $28. I am merely pointing out the seeming lack of liaison among the various offices of the D.V.A.

Of course no Canadian war veteran should have to apply for charity for himself or his family, and I express the hope that the resolution we are debating today and which has been debated during the past few days will precede the enactment of legislation which will make unnecessary the humiliating recourse to public welfare. I think this is important.

The recommendations placed before the committee during both the 1959 and 1960 sessions of parliament by several veterans organizations have been most helpful to the members of the committee. I can also say that these submissions were made with dignity and restraint. There was, for example, the resolution submitted by the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada which had been approved at their 1960 dominion convention. I wish to quote the resolution; surely this would not be out of order:

> Whereas the Pension Act states that in any application for pension, the applicant shall be entitled to the benefit of the doubt and the adjudicating body is directed to draw all reasonably inference in favour of the applicant; and
> Whereas the pension commission, the pension appeal board and medical authorities acting on their behalf, are not in many cases giving the veteran the benefit of the doubt;
> Therefore be it resolved by the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada, in dominion convention assembled, that this obvious violation of the Pension Act be again called to the attention of the various bodies who adjudicate upon pension applications and be duly reminded of their statutory duty to give to the applicant the benefit of the doubt according to the clear and specific terms of the section above mentioned;

I commend to the minister the suggestions contained in this resolution and express the hope that they will receive favourable consideration. They are suggestions which should be considered by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

During the course of the debate on this bill we will have another opportunity to review the exact amendments which are proposed by the government. At the present time we can only speak in generalities, and that is one of the reasons I have pointed out the complaints and suggestions which I have received from many of my constituents. We hope that the considerations mentioned in this house during the passage of the bill will meet with the approval and approbation of our veterans, especially those who are in need of assistance.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Chairman, in rising this afternoon to say a few brief words on this resolution I should first like to join previous speakers in expressing my compliments to the new Minister of Veterans Affairs. He is a man who has rendered great service to his country in two wars. He is well known for his interest in veterans affairs throughout his public life and even in his private life. Since taking over this important portfolio he has demonstrated that he has the interest of veterans at heart, and I am sure they can expect him to give very great consideration to the many problems which still face those who served our country in time of war.

I should also like to pay tribute to my old friend the immediate past minister in this portfolio, Hon. Alfred J. Brooks. He also gave great service to his country and throughout his public lifetime displayed a very personal interest in the problems of those comrades with whom he served and who fought for their country in the first and second world wars.

It is hard for me, as a pensioner myself, to define the term "disability pension". I would rather refer to it as an earnest desire by a grateful people to compensate others for a part of their physical being given up in service to the country.

The proposed increase which is before the house will be welcomed not only by pensioners but by their comrades the other veterans, and by all people in this country who take some pride in the fact that we still live in a free country. Not all pensioners will definitely need this increased financial assistance, in the sense of a necessity to put daily bread on the table. But I would point out that everyone in this country has a responsibility, including those who suffer from disability.

The pensioner, like anyone else, has obligations to his family, to his friends and to the community at large. A disabled person does not have the same chance to fulfil these obligations; therefore he or she must do other things to compensate for that deficiency. With an increase in remuneration, this money can go some way toward filling this gap. Not only will this proposal today benefit the pensioner himself, but it will bring great benefit to those around him and to the community at large.

There is one aspect of the resolution as explained by the minister which is very commendable. This legislation seeks to plug some gaps in the set-up. No matter how well things are set up to provide for the many, there are always the few who seem to be on the fringe and who are called upon to suffer under certain circumstances. I am very pleased to see that this resolution at least tends to plug some of those gaps. I would recommend that the minister and all those who are concerned with this or other veterans' legislation look into the many other gaps which still exist.

On other occasions in this house I have expressed my concern regarding the older veterans, the veterans of wars prior to 1939. These men have now reached the eve of their lives. Many of them do not have too many years to look forward to. Many are drawing small disability pensions supplemented by war veterans allowances. The implementation of this increased pension will not bring any fuller benefit to many of these people. I would therefore urge the minister to give every consideration to an early review of the War Veterans Allowance Act in order that some additional benefit may accrue to these people who because of age and infirmity are deserving of some comfort in their few remaining years.

I do not intend to take any more of the time of the committee at this stage. I am anxious as I am sure are all hon. members and the people of Canada to see what is contained in this bill. I will now resume my place and if there is anything further I have to say I shall bring it up when the bill is before us.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, this is legislation to increase pensions for disabled veterans and their dependents. The resolution further aims at adding new provisions and introducing certain amendments to the act.

At this time, we are being asked to approve the principle of those increases, without knowing their scope. When we have the bill before us, we will be in a better position to appreciate its scope and, if necessary, to criticize the bill if we find it inadequate to meet the veterans' present needs.

There is no doubt that, in principle, the resolution is welcomed by all hon. members in this house. We all have, in our respective constituencies, veterans of the two world wars, and of the Korean war. We are so much indebted to them that we should never miss an opportunity to provide the greatest possible security for them and their dependents.

In this respect, I would like to take the opportunity of this resolution to say a word or two on the present position of our veterans, a great number of whom—and I know the present minister is quite familiar with the situation—have had great difficulty in readjusting to civilian life and are in a sad plight because of present economic conditions and prevailing unemployment.

In that light, I think the government is not giving the veterans the help and support required to meet their needs and those of their families.

I followed yesterday with great interest and some curiosity the highly emotional speech made by the Associate Minister of National Defence. It was a fine piece of oratory, but I am trying in vain to find anything which might be of practical assistance to our veterans in dealing with their problems. It is certainly not with such speeches that their position will be improved.

The Associate Minister of National Defence was very cautious. He referred only briefly to the economic angle, as can be seen on page 1809 of Hansard, where he is quoted as saying:

> This increase will stave off the destitution which unfortunately threatens quite a few of our veterans.

We would have liked the Associate Minister of National Defence to elaborate on that point, because he himself is a veteran with a very distinguished record in the last war, of which he can rightly be proud. But that is not the point. Our responsibility as legislators is rather a question of enacting practical legislation to help a class of people—in this case the veterans—who are given a privileged position, and rightly so, with regard to employment in the civil service. However, when it comes to awarding jobs, it does not seem that we are doing enough at this time to help a class of citizens to whom we are so greatly indebted.

The Associate Minister of National Defence, as well as other members on the government side, rather skipped over the political aspect in yesterday's speeches. Indeed, on the basis of their statements, one might think the world only started in 1957. Now, with all due respect to the present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill) and to the former minister (Mr. Brooks), there have also been other ministers of veterans affairs in the past few years. There was the Hon. Milton Gregg who, if I remember correctly, was not only a veteran, but a recipient of the Victoria Cross. There was the Hon. Ian Mackenzie and the Hon. Hugues Lapointe.

They were all veterans, and today, it is simply a matter of amending a piece of Liberal legislation. Indeed, we took such good care of our veterans in the years preceding 1957, that the Associate Minister of National Defence, in his address, unconsciously recognized it when he said, and I quote from page 1809 of Hansard:

> When I came back from the war in 1945, I was fairly discouraged, and if it had not been for the good care and encouragement I received in veterans hospitals, I wonder whether my convalescence would have been as short, and if I could have made such rapid progress as I did.

He was thus paying tribute to former Liberal ministers of veterans affairs, and I am delighted to have this opportunity today to put the record straight.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in our constituencies we are very often visited by veterans. They are usually in trying and distressing circumstances, and we refer them to the veterans' office on McGill street in Montreal. Now, everyone knows that the staff of that office cannot do a thing to help them at the present time, for all their good intentions. So without minimizing the good effects of this legislation, I would have liked the many Conservative members who took the floor to laud the government for introducing this legislation, to soft-pedal their praise and recognize the hard fact that the first thing our veterans want is jobs. That is what they want. And they are the first to suffer from the situation in which the government has placed them for the last two or three years. That is what I should like the government, and particularly the Minister of Veterans Affairs, to keep in mind in introducing the bill which will follow this resolution.

Under present conditions, veterans' preference, as applied under the provisions of the existing legislation, does not mean a thing, because there are no jobs. Again, without minimizing the possible importance of this bill I say it does not go far enough, and that very special consideration should be given our veterans who are the first to suffer from the unemployment problem facing us today.

I hope that before introducing his bill, the Minister of Veterans Affairs will take these remarks into consideration.

(Text):

Mr. O'Leary: Mr. Chairman, from the year 1920 until 1957 veterans pensions have been increased on but three different occasions. Let me quote single rates. The first increase came in 1947 when the amount for a single 100 per cent disability pensioner was increased from $900 yearly to $1,128. Then in 1951 this amount was raised to $1,500 yearly, and finally, in 1957, it was raised from $1,500 to $1,800. Thus we see that over a period of some 37 years only three increases have been granted, or an average of one increase for approximately every 12 years.

If we take the increase of 1957 and the one proposed in the resolution before us we note that we shall have had two increases in a little over three years, or an average of approximately one increase for every one and a half years since 1957. I give these averages merely to indicate that the interest of the government on behalf of our veterans is steadily and rapidly increasing rather than diminishing as the years pass.

As further testimony of this fact we need only to mention the emergence of the veterans charter following world war II, the setting up of the standing committee on veterans affairs in 1958, and the work undertaken by that committee since its inception. Its review of some four pieces of legislation and subsequent amendment and improvement by this house all bear witness to the ever growing interest in the affairs of our Canadian veterans.

The present resolution before us and what it will mean for our disabled veterans are very warmly welcomed on all sides of this house and across the country generally. Like others who have spoken on this resolution, I warmly congratulate and commend the minister on having introduced it. Since I am mindful of the keen and broad interest which such a subject arouses and realize that every constituency in Canada will experience the favourable results, my words will be brief in order to assure time for many others who I know would like to make their comments.

Of the approximately 20 members who have already spoken on this resolution I have noted that the majority expressed some dissatisfaction with the pensions commission application of section 70, or the benefit of the doubt clause. I, too, very strongly feel that the commission is not carrying out the intent of parliament in many of its decisions which adversely affect our veterans. The purpose or intent of section 70, as set out by parliament, permits, if not instructs, that body to give the veteran the benefit of the doubt when further or more conclusive medical evidence is desirable before award. In many instances, as has already been pointed out, it would appear that instead of such interpretation the board has taken the view that sufficient and conclusive evidence should be presented to the degree that there can be no element of doubt in their minds that an award is justified. I sincerely hope that in the future the original and actual intent of parliament will be more carefully observed and that as a result a greater and a completely justified leniency will be shown the claimants.

I realize that at times the veteran, or the person or persons preparing and compiling his evidence, may be partially at fault in not doing a more thorough job. This necessitates appeals and abhorrent delays. Here I wish to pay a special word of tribute to the service officers at dominion command here in Ottawa for their efficient and excellent work on behalf of veterans of this country, and more particularly on behalf of veterans in my constituency, of which I have a first-hand knowledge. Identical words of praise go also to our district pensions advocate in the Halifax office.

I should like to devote some time to what I feel would be a consideration of desirable and timely changes in our war veterans allowances legislation. However, since it is the Pension Act which is before us, and with the hope that an opportunity will be provided us in the veterans affairs committee to consider this matter which is so closely and directly allied with pensions themselves, I will desist at this time.

In conclusion, I merely wish to say that as a veteran, as a member of the standing committee on veterans affairs and as a backbencher from a very important constituency I wish to thank the government and the minister sincerely for having introduced this resolution.

(Translation):

Mr. Parizeau: Mr. Chairman, I would like to join with previous speakers in expressing my best wishes to our new Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill). Because of his military reputation and because he took part in the last two wars, we are sure that the minister will give consideration to our veterans' problems and solve them by meeting their requests, which are justified since these people sacrificed their lives to protect the freedoms we hold dear.

At the same time, I want to thank the former minister of veterans affairs, Colonel Brooks, who, with the government, amended the legislation to give the veterans part of their due.

[Mr. O'Leary.]

I heard the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) say earlier that before we came to office, veterans had been well taken care of. Let me tell the hon. member that as soon as the Conservative party came into power, one of the first acts to be adopted was that which increased veterans allowances by 17 per cent, while during their three last years in power, our friends had granted them only an increase of a mere 3 per cent.

I will go further and say that during 1956 and 1957 their government spent only $130 million on that score, while in 1959 and 1960 our veterans and their dependents have received an increase of $149 million. We of the Conservative party are devoted to the cause of our veterans; I would even say that we are the first government of Canada to have in our ranks so many veterans.

The Hon. Mr. Brooks and his government have amended the act to allow the benefits to be paid from the special fund provided by the War Veterans Allowance Act, which means an increase of 410 per cent under our administration.

So, may I point out again to the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont that we did more during the three years we have been in office than the government of which he was a member did during the period from 1945 to 1956. Besides, by this resolution, we intend to increase further the allowances and benefits paid to those who fought for us during the last two wars. In fact, I notice that we want to authorize the payment of additional pensions in certain cases and permit appeals from decisions of the former pension board.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out to the minister that on several occasions veterans have come to me with their case. I am really surprised that the Canadian pension commission should refuse either an increase or a pension to certain veterans. The decision is always based on the famous section—I think it is section 7—concerning marginal cases. I think that a man who served in the Canadian army either during the 1914-18 war or during the 1939-45 war, who underwent intense training, who fought in France and Italy, certainly lost part of his health there even if he was not wounded. Therefore I repeat that I am surprised that the commission should never give those veterans the benefit of the doubt.

I should like to draw the minister's attention to one particular case. A certain Mr. Bergeron, a resident of my constituency, served six years in the army, that is, from 1939 to 1945; he served in France and in Germany, and during his period of service he was treated for rheumatism and was confined for 15 days. Now, the Canadian pension commission refuses to recognize that this man had to leave his job because he could not continue to fulfil his duties on account of his health, and the commission will not award him a certain percentage of pension although he contracted that disease while serving in the army.

I have another case, that of a certain Mr. Grandisson concerning whom a letter dated February 3 was addressed to me. This man receives a 40 per cent disability pension. He lost a lung as a result of a wound suffered in action and his doctors will not let him work because he cannot even handle a shovel. The pension commission refuses to award him an increase or find him a job at the veterans hospital.

I should like through you, Mr. Chairman, to draw the minister's attention to those two cases I have just mentioned, so that the Canadian pension commission would forget sometimes that the veteran making an application has no intention of obtaining money to which he is not entitled, but merely what is due to him for his sacrifices during the war as a compensation for losing his health while serving his country.

There is another point that I should like to raise. There are in our ranks and outside our party today people who fought in the last two world wars, the first from 1914 to 1918, and the second from 1939 to 1945. On their discharge, they were enjoying perfect health, but today, at the age of 55, 60 or 65, they are afflicted with certain illnesses. I am not asking for a pension on their behalf, because they do not want any. But those veterans should at least get free hospital care.

I am sure that after five or ten years of war service, the incapacities afflicting those veterans today are due in great part to their military service.

Speaking of hospitals, I should like to point out to you that several veterans who are friends of mine come and tell me that there is certainly room for improvement in the Ste. Foy hospital services in Quebec. If I did not shy from it, I would recite a case which concerns me personally, since I am a pensioned veteran, and which would show how we are sometimes treated by the authorities of the Quebec Ste. Foy hospital.

I therefore ask the minister to inquire into the matter for the betterment of the hospital services provided in the Quebec area for our veterans.

Mr. Chairman, let me conclude by saying that 1,250,000 veterans will surely be happy to see our government enact this new legislation. For my part, I support this resolution.

I am sure that under the command—I can use that word—of the minister, our veterans will be proud of the present and will continue in the future to enjoy any new legislation he will introduce.

If we can express ourselves freely today and if we can look forward to the future with confidence, we owe that privilege to those who fought in the Canadian forces, to those disabled veterans who suffered the horrors of war, but who, thanks to their sacrifice did enable us to preserve the liberties which we so dearly cherish.

(Text):

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief in my remarks. May I begin by stating, as other members have stated, that the veterans of Canada will indeed be very proud of this legislation and happy to know that their situation and circumstances have been recognized by the government. I congratulate the minister on bringing in this legislation at this time and also on the assumption of the portfolio in which he now finds himself where I am sure he will be as successful as he was in his former portfolio.

In a previous session I brought to the attention of the house the fact that certain inequities exist in the administration of pensions, and that is my reason for speaking today. I did so on July 10, 1959, and therefore I wish to put before the committee a couple of points I have in my mind. In order that I may be clearly understood in the beginning and not called to order as I probably could be, may I say that I trust the minister—and I am sure he will in the not too distant future—introduce similar amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act.

It was indeed somewhat of a disappointment to me to hear the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont make a political argument by way of interjection in the debate, and under the circumstances I think he should have been called to order as another member was for being out of order in the remarks he was making. This is a matter that concerns veterans and the Pension Act and certainly it has nothing to do with the subject matter that he was placing before the house. I might refer the hon. member to the discussion that took place in the house in 1946 when the minister and his parliamentary secretary were presenting legislation at that time comprising the veterans charter. On that occasion the minister particularly said that he appreciated the co-operation of the members of the Conservative opposition in making their views known in a non-partisan way. The interjection made by the hon. member this afternoon was anything but the type of co-operation that was sought at that time by his party when legislation and amendments were before the house.

The points I wish to bring to the attention of the house are simple and I will be very brief. The increase envisaged in the present amendment is certainly one that will be well received and I am sure it will raise the standard of living of those receiving medical pensions to a level which they justly deserve. In particular I hope that some consideration will be given in the legislation to the interpretation of the benefit of doubt clause, to which reference has already been made. I believe this matter was made very clear back in 1945. It has been pointed out to me on several occasions that the benefit of doubt clause was included for the clarification of particular cases in the minds of the pension commissioners. I do not believe that this is so. I think it was made very clear in the house on August 1, 1946 by Mr. Tucker, who was at that time the parliamentary assistant to the minister. He made these observations, as recorded at page 4179 of Hansard for that date, and I should like to repeat them now for the benefit of the committee:

> Mr. Chairman, just to put it as briefly as possible, the Pension Act provides that if a disability is due to service it is pensionable; if it arises during service it is pensionable; if there is an aggravation of a condition which a man had when he went into the service, and he has had service in a theatre of actual war, and the disability was not obvious, wilfully concealed, or recorded on medical examination prior to enlistment, he not only gets pension for the disability in respect of the aggravation but he gets it in respect of the entire disability. Of course that does not apply in respect of service in Canada only. If he did not serve in a theatre of actual war he gets the pension in respect of the disability, or the aggravation of the disability, as the case may be, to the extent that there is an aggravation. That is putting it, I think, as simply as I can.
> Now, in interpreting whether the disability arose during service or was due to service, we have the section which is in dispute today. The way it was worded before was:
> "Notwithstanding anything in this act, on any application for pension the applicant shall be entitled to the benefit of the doubt, which shall mean that it shall not be necessary for him to adduce conclusive proof of his right to the pension applied for, but the body adjudicating on the claim shall be entitled to draw and shall draw from all the circumstances of the case, the evidence adduced and medical opinions, all reasonable inferences in favour of the applicant."
> That made the language as explicit, perhaps, as the English language could make it, that if there was any doubt whether this disability was incurred during service or was due to service, or the aggravation was incurred during service or was due to service, the applicant was to get the benefit of the doubt. I really do not see how it could have been made much plainer; but in deference to the committee and in accordance with what the hon. member for Vancouver South—

This indicates very clearly how the benefit of the doubt clause is to be interpreted. As a previous speaker mentioned, it may be time now to discuss again with the members of the pension commission their interpretation of the legislation that has been brought down in the house.

I knew of one case in which a veteran was released from the service at the end of the first world war with a valvular heart condition. His own physician treated him for the entire period until he died in 1958 of a coronary. His widow did not receive any pension, so was advised to take the case before the appeal board. She did so and produced evidence from her husband's personal physician, but was again turned down by the appeal board. At this hearing before the board the man's personal physician stated, without any doubt, that the condition which the veteran had at the time of his discharge from the Canadian army resulted finally in his death. As a result of his ailment this man had been receiving a 49 per cent or 50 per cent pension, but on his death the board did not see fit to grant his widow any assistance. I feel this is an obvious case in which the benefit of the doubt clause was not used in its proper sense.

I feel, too, that it would be advantageous in considering the welfare of the dependents of pensioners in particular categories, possibly those with 50 per cent pensions or more, to study the possibility of granting the wife and the children under the age of 16 entitlement to hospitalization. If we are to accept the responsibility for the veteran in this particular category, and for his infirmities and disabilities, then I think we should be prepared to provide support in this way in so far as his dependents are concerned. I am sure some arrangement could be made by the Department of Veterans Affairs with the provincial governments to take care of the cost.

I should like to discuss other points that I had in mind, but most of them have been discussed by other members. I shall, therefore, wait until the second reading of the bill to make any further remarks.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, this is the first occasion on which I have had the opportunity, in my present capacity, of speaking on veterans affairs. I should like to say, first, what a pleasure it is to me to have been given the opportunity to serve this particular minister in this capacity. The record of the Minister of Veterans Affairs in service to his country, particularly in service to the military forces, is most outstanding as anyone can see by referring to his biography. He has had 26 years of service in the military forces and brings to his portfolio a thorough knowledge of veterans and their problems. He has a warm heart and a sympathetic understanding, which I believe are prerequisites of the minister of this department.

In so far as his predecessor Colonel Brooks is concerned, I should like to say how much all members of the house appreciated the efforts he made on behalf of the veterans. We wish him well in his career in the other place. May I say in regard to my own predecessor, who is now the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, that we extend our congratulations to him. I think I have the honour of being the first parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs who has a veteran for a wife.

The legislation which will follow this resolution, in addition to the increases in the pensions which have been referred to by the minister, will include provision for pensions on behalf of dependent children being continued until the end of the month in which the child reaches 16 or 17 and they will not stop on the day after the child's birthday, as is the case now. Then when the widow dies her pension and that of the children may continue to be paid to any person who is capable of assuming or has assumed the care of the children. Under the old legislation it could only be continued to a daughter. I am rather surprised that this amendment has not been introduced before now. I am glad to see it is being recommended to the committee.

If this legislation passes, additional pension may be paid to the woman who lives with a man for at least seven years and has been publicly represented as his wife. She may also receive the widow's pension upon his death, if she is otherwise qualified. This provision only applies in cases where the marriage cannot take place because of a previous undissolved marriage on the part of either party. I might point out that this provision has been contained in the War Veterans Allowance Act for some years.

Another of the resolutions which have been brought to the attention of the government by the Legion is that increases have been made in the last illness and burial expenses so that the maximum amount under this act may be available as under the veterans burial regulations.

I should like to say a few words about some of the resolutions which were drawn to the attention of the government by the Canadian Legion, particularly those that had been referred to hon. members in the course of the debate on this resolution. One of the resolutions put forward by the Canadian Legion is as follows:

> Therefore be it resolved that we continue to press our demands that the government increase the rates payable under Schedules A and B of the Pension Act to bring them more in line with the wage index and standard of living.

I am extremely pleased, as I am sure are all hon. members, that it has been possible for the minister to give assent to that request. In dealing with the Legion resolution might I say at this time what a happy and fortuitous event it has been that the president of the Canadian Legion happens to come from my own constituency, namely Saskatoon. Professor Mervin Woods, who has had a distinguished career in law and in the teaching of law and long service in the armed forces and in the ranks of the Legion will bring to his task the wisdom, energy and ability which that great post demands.

If I may do so I should now like to say a few words with regard to the Legion resolution relating to special problems involving Newfoundland. Several of the Newfoundland members have spoken in support of the resolution put forward by the Canadian Legion to the effect that a change be made in the Pension Act in order to make clear the status of Newfoundland veterans in accordance with the spirit of negotiations leading up to the terms of union.

Every since the union of Newfoundland and Canada in 1949, under article 38 of the terms of union a Newfoundlander who served not in the armed forces of Canada but in those forces raised by Newfoundland and the United Kingdom has been required if he sought pension to apply first of all to the United Kingdom. Then, after having done that, he could apply to the Canadian pension commission for supplementation which would bring the total he received up to the Canadian pension standards, the same as any other Canadian. At this point I might perhaps just refer to the article in the terms of union to which I have made reference, namely term 38. It reads as follows:

> 38. Canada will make available to Newfoundland veterans the following benefits, on the same basis as they are from time to time available to Canadian veterans, as if the Newfoundland veterans had served in His Majesty's Canadian forces, namely,—

I will skip paragraph (a) and go on to paragraph (b) which is the pertinent subparagraph, and which reads as follows:

(b) Canada will assume as from the date of union the Newfoundland pension liability in respect of the first world war, and in respect of the second world war Canada will assume as from the date of union the cost of supplementing disability and dependents' pension paid by the government of the United Kingdom or an allied country to Newfoundland veterans up to the level of the Canadian rates of pensions, and, in addition Canada will pay pensions arising from disabilities that are pensionable under Canadian law but not pensionable either under the laws of the United Kingdom or under the laws of an allied country;—

Hence the position of Newfoundland veterans was that if they were rejected for pensions by the United Kingdom they could still apply to the Canadian pension commission. This latter was a right which was not granted to Canadians who served in the allied forces up to the date of the introduction, and we hope eventual passage, of this particular resolution and bill. Up to the present time Canadians who served in the forces of the United Kingdom or in other allied forces could not apply to the Canadian pension commission unless the allied government granted them at least some pension. Once they obtained an award, they could apply to the Canadian pension commission to have that pension brought up to Canadian standards. However, if they were unable to qualify for a pension under the conditions laid down by the allied government those Canadians, unlike the Newfoundlanders, were precluded from applying to the Canadian pension commission for entitlement on Canadian grounds.

As was mentioned by the minister on December 12, as reported in Hansard on page 735, this form of discrimination will be removed by the proposed amendment. On that occasion the minister stated as follows:

Then with regard to Canadian citizens who served in allied forces during either of the wars, it is proposed to bring in an amendment so that they may claim entitlement from the Canadian pension commission when their claims have been rejected by the government of the allied force in which they served.

The Legion suggests in effect that article 38 of the terms of union be looked at in order to see whether Newfoundland veterans are entitled to go straight to the Canadian pension commission for a pension without reference to the United Kingdom at all and in effect to absolve the United Kingdom from any contribution at all to the pensions of Newfoundlanders who served in the United Kingdom forces—that is to say any of the new pensions—or alternatively, although I do not think this was suggested by any of the hon. members who have spoken, that some sort of financial arrangement be worked out with the United Kingdom so that in the event that the Canadian pension commission awarded a pension in the first instance, to which normally the United Kingdom would have made a contribution, that contribution would still be made by the United Kingdom to the Canadian treasury in compensation.

The nub of the matter in so far as the Newfoundland veterans are concerned is simply this and no more than this. It is simply that they wish to avoid the time it takes in first making application to the government of the United Kingdom. I want to assure the Newfoundland veterans that their problems, just as are those of veterans in any other part of Canada, are of vital concern to me personally and to the Department of Veterans Affairs. I have had friendly relations with Newfoundlanders for many years. During the last war on many occasions I had the good fortune to stop in Newfoundland while going to and from Europe. I always looked forward to and enjoyed those stops and I have kept up some of the contacts I made on those occasions.

As a matter of fact, on first coming to the House of Commons in 1957 I had the pleasure of rooming with the hon. member for St. John's East and immediately struck up a lasting friendship with him which carried forward into work. He and I started a research project into the possibility of establishing transshipment ports in Newfoundland in order that grain could be kept stored in marketable position. The research that we started at that time is still going forward and as a matter of fact is broadening in order to provide marketable storage positions for grain in other places as well.

Therefore my relations with Newfoundlanders have always been warm and cordial, and may I say to the Newfoundland members that they may be assured that I intend to ask at the earliest possible opportunity for a study to be made of term 38 both by the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Justice, in order that the fullest consideration may be given to the representations which have been made both by the Canadian Legion and by hon. members of this house.

The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, in a very thoughtful address, mentioned the problem of conditions not recorded on enlistment. He referred to the Canadian Legion resolution on this matter, to the effect that section 13 (1)(a) of the Pension Act be amended so that where a pension applicant who served in an actual theatre of war is found to have a disability resulting from an injury or disease not recorded on medical examination prior to enlistment, such injury or disease shall be presumed to have occurred or have its inception subsequent to enlistment.

This particular point was referred to by other members in the course of their addresses. I think some question has been in the minds of the Canadian pension commissioners as to whether or not this particular proposal would in fact result in facilitating more generous awards. But I think this particular problem affords us a good opportunity for review in this house and in the veterans affairs committee and to bring this matter to the attention of the Canadian pension commission in order to have as full an explanation as possible of their attitude in regard to this matter.

Many hon. members spoke about the benefit of the doubt clause, and indeed the Canadian Legion had a resolution on that particular point also. Their resolution reads:

That the government take action to ensure that the benefit of the doubt as set forth in section 70 is in fact extended to all applicants under that act.

As hon. members know, the Canadian pension commission is an independent body and is in no way responsible to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, although it reports through him and although he is charged with the responsibility of bringing before cabinet recommendations for changes in any legislation affecting that commission. He is but the spokesman for the commission. The Canadian pension commission is responsible directly to parliament. Because of this it is very helpful to have the suggestions of hon. members expressed here and in the veterans affairs committee for the continued improvement in the way it functions.

Many members have made very useful and thoughtful suggestions in the course of this debate which I am sure will be of great help to the Canadian pension commission when it considers the report of this debate. Particularly, as I have mentioned, hon. members have made reference and many suggestions in regard to the operation of this benefit of the doubt clause.

One question I myself have heard on many occasions over the years, and upon which I would like to have some comment, is whether, in awarding pensions for nervous conditions or mental illness resulting from war service, sufficient weight is given by the pension commission to section 70 in dealing with these matters. Argument is made that mental conditions are with one from birth and if such conditions be considered for pensionable purposes at all they should be considered as to the extent of aggravation of the nervous condition or mental illness due to war service. However, I would like to point out that my information is that this premise is not proved by any means. Much doubt exists as to the prime cause of mental illness, as well as some doubt as to the precise factors which increase its severity.

I would be very happy if the Canadian pension commission would reassess its stand in regard to this matter, giving full weight to sound, modern psychiatric knowledge and practices and to the benefit of the doubt clause. No veteran suffering from mental illness resulting from or aggravated by war service should be denied pension treatment unless there is no doubt that his illness did not in fact result from war service.

Another matter which might be considered in the committee is the resolution of the Canadian Legion to the effect that the additional allowances in respect of wife and dependents being paid to those pensioned at less than 50 per cent at the time of death be continued to the widow and such dependents so long as they remain eligible as otherwise provided under the act. Many members of the house have raised this question. It has been one of concern and one which I think would be capable of solution only by joining the experience of the members of the house and members of the committee with the experience of the Canadian pension commission.

The suggestion that allowances be continued to the widow and children after the death of the pensioner receiving less than 50 per cent pension is a new one in that particular term. It is of course closely akin to earlier suggestions that the widow and children receive pensions in cases where the pensioner is in receipt of less than 50 per cent disability pension and does not die of his pensionable disability. Might I suggest that this particular resolution receive, if it is considered appropriate by the veterans affairs committee, its attention for recommendation and suggestion.

The hon. member for York-Sunbury made a suggestion as to the composition of appeal boards. The Canadian Legion, too, had a resolution about this particular problem. The Canadian Legion urged the pension commission to ensure that all appeal boards are composed of one lawyer, one doctor and one layman, and if necessary reconstitute the board to make this possible. I understand that every attempt is made to follow the request contained in this particular resolution when appeal boards are being convened. The composition of appeal boards is, however, dependant upon a number of factors, including the composition of the commission itself. Under existing circumstances I am advised that it is not possible to abide by the request contained in this resolution at all times, but that, as I point out, the commission does try to follow the request wherever possible.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo made some reference to earlier pension commissions. I gathered from the remarks the hon. member made that what he wanted was a brief review of the history of the various bodies which have been clothed with jurisdiction in pension matters during recent times. I have here a brief list indicating the various bodies which have had that jurisdiction from 1916 to date, and if it would be helpful to hon. members and the members of the veterans affairs committee I should like to place this list on the record at this time.

Order in council P.C. 1334 dated June 3, 1916 created the first organization to deal solely with war pensions. It was called the board of pension commissioners and consisted of a chairman and two members. It was expressly provided that there would be no appeals from decisions of the commission, but dissatisfied applicants could present their cases either personally or by counsel before the full commission sitting for the purpose of hearing the complaints of those who may have been dissatisfied with decisions given in the ordinary course of administration.

The next change occurred in 1919 by way of chapter 43, 9-10 George V. Statutory provision was made for a commission to be known as the board of pension commissioners, consisting again of a chairman and two members. I will not go into the duties of that commission other than to say that provision was made for two or more commissioners to sit for the purpose of hearing the appeals of dissatisfied applicants or pensioners. This provision was repealed when the federal appeal board was created in 1923.

In 1923, by way of chapter 62, 13-14 George V, the federal appeal board was created, consisting of a chairman and not less than four nor more than six members. This was abolished in 1930 by way of chapter 35, 20-21, George V. In that year a pension tribunal was created consisting of a chairman and eight members as well as a pension appeal court consisting of a president and two members.

In 1931, by way of chapter 44, 21-22 George V, the pension tribunal was increased to a maximum of 12 members with a minimum of 9 members, one of whom was to be chairman.

In 1933, by way of chapter 45, 23-24 George V, the board of pension commissioners and the pension tribunal were abolished and the Canadian pension commission was created consisting of a chairman and not less than 7 members nor more than 11 members. I believe this is the point about which the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo was inquiring. Provision was also made in 1933 for the hearing of dissatisfied applicants by quorums of the commission holding public hearings at convenient places throughout Canada. The pension appeal court continued as the final court of appeal.

In 1936, by way of chapter 44, 1 Edward VIII, provision was made for the appointment of ad hoc commissioners if and as required and not to exceed five. The procedure was amended to first hearing, second hearing, personal appearance and appeal. The quorums were continued and the pension appeal court remained as the final court of appeal.

In 1939, by way of chapter 32, 3 George VI, quorums were abolished and the pension appeal court was abolished and its power of final decision transferred to appeal boards of the commission to consist of three members of the commission holding sittings at convenient places throughout Canada. The procedure established consisted of first hearing, second hearing and appeal. Perhaps that summary may be of some use to hon. members in relation to this matter.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt but I must advise the parliamentary secretary that his time has expired. Although I have recognized the hon. member for Lincoln, perhaps he would yield the floor to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I will not long detain the hon. member for Lincoln, but I could not fail to rise after the parliamentary secretary spoke to express my disappointment at what he had to say about the Newfoundland veterans. As my friend the hon. member for Humber-St. George's indicated last night when I was unable to be in the chamber, I concur fully in the representations made in their speeches by the other four hon. members on this side of the house from the province of Newfoundland. Our hopes were raised by the previous minister in 1957, the last time the act was opened. The then minister promised a study at that time and now the parliamentary secretary promises a study at this time of the same question. One wonders what has happened in the three-year interval.

Moreover, the parliamentary secretary did not say anything whatever about what, after all, is the largest single group of Newfoundland veterans who have what we think is a legitimate grievance. I refer to the forestry corps in Newfoundland. The mere fact that they were not enlisted men and did not wear a uniform in world war II, although they did in world war I, has created the curious anomaly that although the Canadian forestry corps in both wars and the Newfoundland forestry corps in the first war are pensionable, the Newfoundland forestry corps in the second war are not, notwithstanding the fact that in the United Kingdom they worked side by side with the Canadians, did exactly the same kind of work and were subject to exactly the same sort of hazards.

It may well be asked what right have I to get up and say anything on this subject because from 1953 to 1957 I was a member of the government and was the representative in the government of the province of Newfoundland. While I admit all that, as my friend the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo pointed out, this problem was not brought to our attention at that time by these people. I am not saying it would necessarily have been dealt with if it had been but if we did not do what was right then that can be no excuse for not doing what is right now. I appeal to the government. Instead of giving the stock answer "Why didn't you do it?" the government should do it and get the credit that we might have got if we had done as we should have.

Mr. Phillips: At least the hon. member is honest.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman expresses great surprise that a member of parliament should be honest.

Mr. Phillips: It is nice to see the hon. gentleman being honest.

Mr. Pickersgill: Honesty on the part of members of parliament does not surprise me. I think most hon. members on both sides of the house are honest. I was saying that this is an anomaly. It is something that is impossible to explain, except—as my friend the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo reminded me a moment ago before I rose to speak—by reason of the fact that the commission of government did not recognize these forestry veterans before confederation. It should also be remembered that the commission of government was not elected by the people of Newfoundland but was a government imposed on them. It was not a government representative of Newfoundland that failed to give this recognition.

I think it was unfortunate that it was not included in the terms of union. I am not saying there is any repudiation of the terms of union in not recognizing these forestry veterans. I am saying it is a matter of natural justice, of treating them on the same basis as they would have been if confederation had been in 1939 instead of 1949.

I am glad to see what the government is proposing to do for these older Canadians who enlisted in the United Kingdom and allied forces in putting them on a level with the Newfoundlanders but one must remember that the Newfoundlander's position is quite different. The United Kingdom forces were the Newfoundlander's forces between 1939 and 1945. They were the only forces they could be expected to serve in, particularly in the air force and the navy. There was no Newfoundland navy or air force. A lot of Newfoundlanders had the good judgment to serve in the Canadian forces, but many of them did what was in Newfoundland the natural thing to do which was to enlist in the British forces.

And when they became Canadians on March 31, 1949 they were supposed to have all the rights of other Canadians presumably right back to the time of their birth because, in the Citizenship Act, they are described as being born in Canada. Therefore their position, it seems to me, should be assimilated in every way that it is legislatively and administratively possible to do it to the position that they would have had if they had been Canadians at the time they served in the forces. That is all we are suggesting, and I do hope that three years from now, or two years from now, we will not be told that still another study of this problem is going to be undertaken, because it really does not need any further study as the facts are all very simple, what it needs and all it needs is action.

Having said this, that is all I wish to say on this resolution. In fact, it strikes me that this resolution has been talked pretty threadbare already and I would suggest that if the Minister of Finance is as anxious to get on with his budget resolutions as he professed to be earlier today we stop this debate and get this resolution through and get back to the budget resolutions which we are ready to debate.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): Mr. Chairman, like other hon. members I do not wish to delay the passage of this resolution so that we might get along with the discussion of the bill and find out what the minister is going to bring forward in the way of amendments to the Canadian Pension Act. For these reasons, I will be rather brief. However, I would be remiss in my duty if I did not at this time on behalf of the many veterans organizations in my riding extend to the minister and all members of his department our most sincere thanks and appreciation for the consideration that they are giving to the many briefs that have been presented by the Canadian Legion and other organizations.

In my riding we have many veterans organizations. We have some eight branches of the Canadian Legion, including two Ukrainian and one Polish branch. We also have a branch of the Canadian corps and a branch of the good old British Imperial veterans. I am pleased that this year I will be able to become a member of the veterans affairs committee and I am looking forward to some very interesting sessions as a member of that committee. I might repeat what has often been said, namely that the Canadian Pension Act and the Canadian veterans charter are the most generous of any in the world today.

At this time, on behalf of the British Imperial veterans may I extend to the minister and his department their appreciation of the many benefits they receive from the Canadian government, which in many ways are equal to those of Canadian veterans. However, there is always room for adjustments and improvements and the draft resolution which the minister has submitted seems to open the door to many ways in which improvements can be made to the act. I will mention several of them which have come to me during my dealings with veterans in recent months.

There is the subject of section 36, subsection 3, of the Pension Act, which has been mentioned in this debate, and which I am sure has been reviewed on many occasions by the Department of Veterans Affairs. However, I do feel that it should be considered again. In its present form it does cause some hardship and sorrow when the veteran with a pension of less than 50 per cent dies and his pension stops; in other words, is not made available to his widow, which is the way the regulations read at the present time. I notice that this matter has been mentioned by other members and I trust the minister will give it serious consideration.

There is also the question of distribution of drugs and medicines to veterans receiving home treatment. In recent years it has become the practice in the department in some areas to have those drugs distributed through regional branches of the Department of Veterans Affairs. This often causes delay and in some instances the type of drug prescribed by the local physician is not always available at the veterans affairs branch dispensary. This is a matter which might be given some consideration.

Then there is the matter of borderline pension entitlement cases, especially those veterans who served long periods in the theatres of actual warfare. They should always get the benefit of the doubt. Even though there is too little evidence to substantiate a claim for pension it always brings much more satisfaction to a veteran who saw a lot of hard warfare to get a pension for his disability rather than a veterans allowance.

I know that veterans allowances do not come under the Pension Act. Nevertheless, pensions for disabilities and for wounds and the veterans allowance for the burnt-out pensioner seem to go hand in hand. I trust that this part of the veterans charter will also be given consideration for amendment at this session of the house.

The matter of the British Imperial veterans who fought on the Afghanistan frontier in 1914 to 1919 and did not get victory medals and therefore are not entitled to veterans allowance might, I hope, be given further consideration by the veterans affairs committee during this session of the house.

I know that several other hon. members would like to follow me and I have quite a bit more that I should like to say. However, in order that they may be given an opportunity to voice their opinions at this time I am going to say that I appreciate the opportunity of speaking on behalf of all veterans and I am looking forward to learning more about the amendments to the Pension Act when the bill comes before the house.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I take great pleasure at this time in rising to make a few remarks in regard to the resolution to amend the war veterans' Pension Act. First of all I should like to associate myself with our many colleagues who have formally spoken on this amendment to congratulate the present Minister of Veterans Affairs. I am sure that if he carries on and creates the enviable reputation in his new portfolio that he did when he was the minister of trade and commerce he will make a very great contribution to this department.

I should also like to express my congratulations on behalf of my constituency and the great number of war veterans in it to the Hon. Alfred Brooks, the present minister's predecessor. I am sure they join with me in wishing him many happy years of contribution and benefits to the welfare of Canadians while he is in the other place.

I represent the constituency of Moose Mountain which has many active branches of the Canadian Legion. I feel it is my humble duty to support this very timely resolution before the house, even though it is widely recognized that the legislation on the statute books at the present time to assist war veterans, their widows and dependants, is the best in the world. Nevertheless, there is still room for certain improvements and these new proposals will certainly be appreciated by the million and a quarter war veterans in Canada today.

I suggest that since we are increasing the war veterans disability pension under the proposed legislation we should also, as soon as it is possible, endeavour to increase war veterans allowances by the same amount. Otherwise, as has already been pointed out by a large number of our veterans now receiving pensions, they would not benefit as they should under the proposed amendments to the legislation. I have had a number of representations from branches of the Canadian Legion in my riding emphasizing this point, and for the record I should like to quote one recently received from the Gainsborough branch No. 170. It is under date of January 23, 1961, and reads as follows:

> Whereas the hon. Minister for Veterans Affairs has stated in the House of Commons it is the intention of government to make a substantial increase in the war veterans disability pensioners' pension at this session of parliament; and whereas any increase in the war pensioners' pension will not benefit to the extent of one cent any disability pensioner who is also in receipt of a war veterans allowance unless the war veterans allowance is also increased by the same amount as the war disability pensions;
> Therefore be it resolved that the hon. Minister for Veterans Affairs be petitioned to ask parliament to increase the amount to war veterans allowance recipients as, if and when the promised substantial increase in war disability pensions is instituted and brought into force.

This resolution was moved by G. Meredith and seconded by J. W. Plumb and the communication is signed by their secretary, Mr. W. A. Slade. I cite this as an example of the representations made by a number of our Legion branches.

I should also like to say that like other hon. members I have had complaints from war veterans with respect to how the pension commission interprets what is commonly referred as the benefit of doubt clause. It would appear that at times the pension commission may be placing too much emphasis on or showing too much concern for treasury board rather than the needs of the war veteran applicant. I feel that the commission should try to get closer to the intent of the legislation than would appear to be the case in some instances now. In other words, the emphasis with regard to the benefit of the doubt clause should be transferred from the saving of money for treasury board to the needs of the war veteran applicant himself.

I could cover other suggestions that have been made by other hon. members but I feel that they made their points very effectively and that anything I might say would be superfluous. I should like to congratulate the new Minister of Veterans Affairs on introducing these amendments to the Pension Act. I am sure all Canadians will welcome this action of the government.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, this resolution has been anticipated by the veterans of Canada for some time. While increases in income have been granted to other groups in our economy, our veterans have been waiting patiently for their turn to come. It will be remembered that the former minister, the Hon. Alfred Brooks, hoped to have this legislation reviewed at the last session but it was found necessary to defer that review until now.

May I take this opportunity to join with other hon. members who have extended congratulations to the former minister, the Hon. Alfred Brooks on his elevation to a new sphere of responsibility and to wish him every success and happiness in his new work. I would also join with other hon. members in their congratulations to the new Minister of Veterans Affairs on his appointment to this important portfolio and in their congratulations also to the new parliamentary secretary to the minister. We wish them both every success and satisfaction in their new undertakings.

There is no legislation processed by the parliament of Canada which is received with greater satisfaction than that which aims to improve the standard of living of those who served our nation in its time of need. Military service in the army, navy or air force involves the offering by those in the services of their time, their talents, their health and, if necessary, life itself.

Veterans legislation in Canada dates back for more than 40 years to the days of world war I and to the promise that was given by the government and the people of Canada that the economic status of the survivors of that conflict and their dependents would be protected. This undertaking was extended to the veterans of world war II and to those of the Korean conflict and the resulting legislation became known as the veterans charter.

The survivors of world war I are no longer young and many require more generous assistance than they are receiving. These increases in disability pensions can do much to add comfort and peace of mind to our older veterans' declining years. It is 20 years since the disasters of world war II threatened the loss of freedom to Canadians as well as to our allies in the struggle. Those were dark days when neither the enormity of the cost nor the enormity of the sacrifice was permitted to stand in the way of an all-out war effort. We found ways to finance our wars. We should be ready to fulfil the obligations growing out of those wars. Let time not dull the public memory of our great wars. Many suffered the loss of loved ones. Many were totally or partially disabled and many are reaping more and more as time goes on the physical results of nervous tension and mental turmoil associated with war service. Our nation should not weaken in protecting the economic status of those whose sacrifice bought victory.

There are three particular matters in connection with this legislation which I should like to stress for consideration. I think all of them have been supported by other hon. members in this debate. I would suggest to the minister that consideration be given at this time to arranging for increases in veterans allowances. Many veterans in the lower percentage pension classes depend for their livelihood on a combination of a pension payment and a war veterans allowance payment. Since war veterans allowance payments are subject to a means test, increase in pension payments will result in decreases in their war veterans allowance payments. This is likely to cause hardship for some veterans, and I would urge the minister to take the necessary steps to avoid such a situation.

This will involve, I believe, changes in the war veterans allowance schedule and in the income ceilings under the War Veterans Allowance Act. I would urge that this matter be given immediate consideration to the end that increases in both disability pensions and war veterans allowances, which support each other, can be brought in simultaneously.

Another feature of the Pension Act which I find difficult to justify is that widows of pensioners who have been allotted a 50 per cent or higher disability are provided with widows' pensions whereas widows of pensioners who have been allotted a disability of less than 50 per cent are provided with no such pension. It is difficult to justify on moral grounds why this should be so and I urge upon the minister and the house that consideration should be given to amending subsection 3 of section 36 of the act so that all widows will be treated alike.

As the third feature which I wish to discuss I should like to add my support to those who have spoken in the debate and urged the full use of section 70 of the Pension Act which provides that in awarding pensions the board of pension commissioners shall allow the benefit of the doubt in favour of the applicant. I must say I would agree with the hon. member for Red Deer and others that an amendment to section 70 is unnecessary. What is required is a more generous interpretation of this section as far as the veterans are concerned.

I wish on behalf of the veterans, as well as of all citizens of Middlesex West, to express our appreciation to the minister and the government for bringing this legislation before parliament. We believe it is necessary to assist in bringing our national obligations to our war veterans more nearly into line with modern costs of living.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that all veterans in the house are very pleased indeed at the recent appointment of the new minister. Certainly, he is following a very able man. I would say that under Colonel Brooks we were, indeed, happy in the veterans committee and elsewhere, and I know that this situation will be continued under the present minister in the years to come. This was a good set-up because it must be a happy group that administers veterans affairs. The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador expressed the feeling of all hon. members when he said that inquiries which were directed to this department were handled with courtesy and promptness. This, in itself, is something which commends that department.

I should like to say a word about legions generally. I am proud to belong to the Legion. I am proud of the fact that we meet and that when we do, we remember. Those who attend these Legion meetings regularly must realize how wonderful it is that the veterans have banded themselves together. They perpetuate this wonderful spirit which has been developed by the veterans through two wars.

When the minister introduced the resolution he quoted some rather significant figures. He said that about $47.5 million have been added to the amount expended on veterans affairs. He referred to the changes in disability pensions, war veterans allowances, the increases in widows' and dependents' pensions, educational assistance and the increase in the cost of hospitalization. Apart from all these monetary increases, these various pieces of legislation which have come under review have been broadened extensively as to the classifications covered and the eligibility of the various classes.

May I also commend the parent branch of the Legion for the briefs that have been prepared. These have been of great assistance to all members of parliament, but particularly to those who have been members of the veterans committee and who have had the opportunity of welcoming the Legion representatives when these briefs were presented to the committee. All members of parliament have also received a large measure of aid from the Legion and from other veterans organizations. This help has been given voluntarily, whether it has been to trace a person or for any other matter. It has been given, of course, with good heart.

I was particularly interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer. He has a very broad knowledge of veterans affairs. Not only did he serve in two wars with distinction, but after these wars he turned to service in veterans affairs. During the course of that time he has dealt with many cases, and many veterans and their widows have come to him for advice. He summarized all the points very well. I am not overlooking the fact that many other members brought up points, too.

In so far as section 70 is concerned, it appears to me that the veterans committee must have a good look at it. We must ascertain whether it is necessary to have all these appeals, and why 50 per cent of them were granted. Anyone who has dealt with veterans or their widows must know that there is a period during which these people feel nothing is being done for them. They ask you right away, why cannot something be done about this? You say, there is a right of appeal, and it is this time lag that should be eliminated. The suggestions of the hon. member for Red Deer were excellent. He mentioned the need for a refresher course for pension advocates, and I believe that would be an excellent thing, to bring them up to date so that the handling of these cases will be more expeditious.

Surely, we must have reached the point now where a precedent has been set. If these precedents were followed, then the doctors and pension advocates would realize at once whether a case fell within the scope of these precedents and whether there was a chance the veteran would receive a pension.

I was rather surprised at the remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, remarks which would indicate that those who were speaking on this resolution were holding up the business of the house. He inferred they should sit down and let the house get on with other business. He said he had followed the debate with interest, but rather left the impression when he sat down that nobody else should speak. The majority of the members who have spoken on this resolution have been veterans, and have been members of the veterans affairs committee. When we get up and say these things we say them not in order to prolong the debate but because we feel that a multiplicity of voices will bring these matters to the attention of those in authority. We make these representations in all sincerity and we will not be shushed by one member.

I was very pleased to hear the minister's parliamentary secretary make a reference to Newfoundland during the course of his remarks. Certainly the members from Newfoundland, without exception, have put Newfoundland's case forward very well. Probably the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was the—

An hon. Member: Fly in the ointment.

Mr. Pugh: He may have been the fly in the ointment, but he was not very charitable. He was not as charitable as the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo who stated that there had not been time, since these representations were first made by the veterans, to have the necessary changes made. The act has not been revised since 1957. I would accept his statement as against the sort of vapid utterances that came from the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

I gathered from the remarks of the hon. member for Saskatoon that after this legislation is introduced no difference will exist, in essence, between the veterans from Newfoundland and the veterans from other parts of Canada. I am hoping that will be so. However, since the hon. member spoke, another hon. member brought to my attention the fact that it is not a good thing to make the Newfoundland veteran apply elsewhere for a pension. If there is a rejection, then he comes under our Canadian pension commission. Even if he is granted a pension over there he might not be eligible for a pension of the same extent as if he had been granted a pension by our own Canadian pension commission.

There are many other points I should like to cover, but they will be perhaps best covered after the bill has been introduced. I started out by saying that we are a happy group in veterans affairs. That is the situation. In my opinion the veterans and the Legion who follow these proceedings cannot help feeling that we are putting our best foot forward and are getting to grips with the many problems which are involved and the many anomalies which exist in the acts forming the veterans charter.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, this is my first opportunity to address myself to legislation under the new Minister of Veterans Affairs. He knows that I would be the first to acknowledge his gallantry in the last war and in the previous war and also to acknowledge with the same enthusiasm that he resembles his predecessor in qualities. I refer to the present Senator Brooks who had been in this Department of Veterans Affairs.

I think we have been fortunate in this particular department in that no veteran at any time, under one government or another, would have any feeling that he had not had a man of spirit or gallantry at the head of this department. I think of Hon. Ian Mackenzie, Hon. Milton Gregg, V.C. and Hon. Hugues Lapointe. Steadily in this department, one government or another has placed in this office soldiers of great quality in whom the entire country would have confidence. I have confidence in the new minister. To him, valiant soldier that he has been, I know the veterans can look with great confidence in the future.

On the other hand, it is our duty to examine in parliament legislation as it comes before us. In this instance we are looking at legislation that involves a decision of members of a government with respect to pension entitlement. While I commend the resolution coming in at this time, it is only to be expected that I would say that in the opinion of the minister's predecessor this date is late. Being late it has proved to be extremely costly to those pensioners to whom so many tributes have been paid today and yesterday in this House of Commons debate.

Hon. Alfred Brooks, the predecessor of the present minister, had indicated that this kind of payment out to pensioners who need it would be given a year ago. He made that statement, but apparently his colleagues in the cabinet did not agree with him. The result is that a year or more later we have this type of legislation. This situation is evident as will be found if anybody will look at the printed record of the standing committee on veterans affairs meeting on April 7, 1960. At that time the then minister of veterans affairs was the first witness before the committee. As it happened, I personally chanced to be the one who asked him about the delay in doing something about which there had been a previous public commitment. I refer my colleagues now to page 131 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of that committee on April 7, 1960. I stated as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I would just refer to the editorial in the March issue of the Legionary.

That is March, 1960. That is the Legion's monthly publication.

At the committee sittings I said:

I think the Minister has it in his hand.

I just happened to notice that he had the red-coloured magazine in his hand. I continued:

The editorial, of course, quotes from the minister's statement in the House of Commons last year which read this way:—

I want to quote back what the minister said then, and I quote now to this committee as follows:

As I told the president of the Canadian Legion when he visited our office, it is not our intention to make any amendment this year—

[Mr. Benidickson.]

That would be 1959.

—to the Pension Act. We plan to have it before us at the next session of parliament—

That would be the 1960 session of parliament.

—at which time we will go very thoroughly into all phases of the Pension Act.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to make everyone aware of facts, namely that the then minister of veterans affairs—I refer to Hon. Mr. Brooks—made this commitment in 1959 and I am sure that he made it in the utmost sincerity. However, I think that the present Minister of Veterans Affairs was at that time in the cabinet; and I think we are entitled to find out why, when a minister made that commitment in 1959 about something that was to be effective with respect to these deserving people throughout 1960, it did not become effective then. It only becomes effective in 1961.

In addition, I want to remind the committee that notice of this legislation came before us prior to the Christmas-New Year's adjournment. The committee on veterans affairs was set up prior to Christmas. I have been a member of that committee for a great number of years. As a member of that committee, at its initial meeting I raised the question, is there any chance that if we do not proceed to further meetings any veteran would be prejudiced by date of payment of any benefits under the new legislation?

In this resolution there is nothing to indicate whether a retroactive benefit is to be provided. However, I want to make it clear that in December, at its initial meeting, the veterans affairs committee indicated that it was willing to meet. As you know, Mr. Chairman, in normal circumstances members of the opposition do not want to have a committee meeting during hours when the House of Commons is sitting if that procedure can be avoided. However, at this meeting it was made clear that if any co-operation was required on the part of the opposition to meet when the House of Commons was sitting or otherwise we in the opposition were prepared to meet prior to Christmas if the government had no intention of putting in the bill a clause that would provide for retroactive payments to the veterans. On that day I asked the parliamentary secretary a question on this point and he said the contents of the bill could not be anticipated. But knowing the present minister and knowing his good will to veterans I am sure there will be no parliamentary prejudice.

Having read the speech from the throne, as all veterans have, I am sure the government will make it clear that any benefits shall have nothing to do with parliamentary debate procedure, and will be retroactive in a way that will be of the utmost benefit to the veteran himself.

I say this after emphasizing that there was one complete year of delay, based apparently on the failure of the cabinet to adhere to a commitment made publicly by the former minister of veterans affairs in 1959. Otherwise all these needy people would have had in 1960 what is now afforded in the bill for 1961.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, since there are only two minutes left before the house adjourns, may I ask you to call it six o'clock?

(Text):

The Chairman: Does the committee agree that it be called six o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: Why should we call it six o'clock?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will only be of perhaps one or two minutes' duration, and perhaps I could accommodate the hon. member by proceeding.

I would like to add my voice to those who have congratulated the hon. minister on his new portfolio. I know we had pleasant relationships with him when he was minister of trade and commerce and I am sure that warmth of feeling will carry over into his present portfolio. I wish him every success in his position in the cabinet. I also wish him success in following in the footsteps of his predecessor, and hope that he eventually reaches that delightful and serene place in which the former minister now resides.

This is in reality the fourth or fifth—I have lost count—miniature throne speech debate we have had in this house since the session started. I do not know whether it is necessary to completely beat this resolution to death, but because of the substance of it, it would appear that perhaps the most expeditious way to deal with the matter is to proceed to place the bill before us.

However, each member wishes to make his contribution, and I am sure that in future those who now insist they are doing things for king and country will keep their seats if they feel that someone is transgressing.

The C.C.F. has long been in the forefront of promoting the welfare and interests of veterans of this nation, and we will continue to be in the forefront so long as we have veterans in this country. I merely wish to indicate that I am in favour of the resolution and hope it receives expeditious treatment in the house.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the house leader could forecast the business for the rest of the week.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, what I would like to see happen tomorrow is this. If there is agreement on the other side of the house, we would continue with the resolution stage of this bill and then, by consent, distribute the bill and carry on with second reading. This is because it is our intention that after second reading the bill be referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs. Hon. members may think that over. If that is not agreeable, on conclusion of the resolution stage and first reading we would then deal with the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I could perhaps relieve the hon. gentleman's mind immediately. I think it would be much more preferable to adhere to the rules of the house, but there would be no difficulty in taking the bill on Friday and probably dealing with it very quickly.

Mr. Churchill: All right; we might do that.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, in order that the bill will be placed before the house as soon as possible and referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs, and in the interests of veterans concerned and their dependants, we wish to co-operate in any way we can to expedite it.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

OBSCENE LITERATURE AND ART—ENTRY RESTRICTIONS

Question No. 66—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has this government received communications in any form from any provincial attorney or his agents requesting that steps be taken to block the entry into Canada of any book, record, periodical, or painting which has been considered obscene or otherwise objectionable under the criminal code?

2. If so, from whom, when, about what particular items, to what effect?

Answer by: Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State):

1. No.

2. Not applicable.

ROAD PROJECTS, KENORA-RAINY RIVER DISTRICTS —FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Question No. 87—Mr. Benidickson:

1. To what road construction projects (except trans-Canada highway) in the Kenora and Rainy river districts in Ontario, has the government been asked by the government of Ontario, since July 10, 1958, to make a financial contribution?

2. To what road construction projects (except trans-Canada highway) in the Kenora and Rainy river district in Ontario, has the government made a financial contribution since July 10, 1958, (sessional paper no. 191A)?

Answer by: Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State):

Department of Forestry

1. The government of Ontario asked the government of Canada under the forest access road agreement for the period November 1, 1958 to June 30, 1959 to make a financial contribution to road construction projects in the Kenora and Rainy River districts of Ontario, as follows:

Kenora district: Sanford-Mutrie road, Raleigh road, Dryden road.

Rainy River district: Flanders road.

2. The government of Canada made a financial contribution for the construction of the following roads:

Kenora district: Sanford-Mutrie road, Raleigh road, Dryden road.

Rainy River district: Flanders road.

Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources

1. Minaki South—This 15-mile road from Minaki to Pellatt has been included in the roads to resources agreement with Ontario.

CLOSING OF R.C.A.F. STATION, AYLMER, ONT.

Question No. 92—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government reached a firm decision as to the date of the closing of the Royal Canadian Air Force station at Aylmer, Ontario?

2. Has any progress been made regarding its use as a trades or vocational training school?

3. Has any progress been made regarding its use as a minimum security institution?

Answer by: Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence):

1. Under present plans the training unit at R.C.A.F. station Aylmer will be disbanded in the fall of 1961.

2 and 3. While a final decision has not been reached, exploratory examinations are under way with regard to the possible future use of this station.

AUTHORIZED C.M.H.C. NOTARIES, DRUMMOND-ARTHABASKA

Question No. 93—Mr. Boulanger:

What are the names of the notaries in the constituency of Drummond-Arthabaska who are authorized to be engaged with respect to the execution of contracts between the purchaser and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or the builder under the National Housing Act, 1954?

Answer by: Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works):

During the last 12 months Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has engaged the following notaries for legal service in the constituency of Drummond-Arthabaska:—Claude Perron, Arthabaska; J. M. Feeney, Victoriaville; Antoine Fradette, Drummondville.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 9, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Second report of standing committee on standing orders—Miss Aitken.

BROADCASTING—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. G. C. Fairfield (Portage-Neepawa) presented the first report of the special committee on broadcasting, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

(Translation):

REPRESENTATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-66, to amend the Representation Act.

He said: The purpose of this bill is to change the name of the St. Mary constituency into that of Camillien Houde. It also seeks to avoid any confusion with the provincial constituency bearing the same name but with different dividing lines.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MONETARY POLICY—INQUIRY AS TO REFERENCE TO BANKING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he is in a position to tell the house whether the question of monetary policy will be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce when the annual report of the governor of the Bank of Canada is made available, rather than to a royal commission.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to answer the alternative, but will simply answer the first part of the question by saying that no decision has been made in this regard.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—REPORTED STORAGE IN AND TRANSPORTATION OVER CANADA IN U.S. PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. I wonder if the minister would care to comment on an article appearing in the St. John's Examiner, a copy of which I believe was sent to the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, in which it is stated that United States atomic weapons are stored at a number of bases in Canada, including Goose Bay, Labrador.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): I think the Prime Minister, on at least two occasions, has stated categorically that this report is incorrect. I can only repeat that there is no truth in this statement.

Mr. Argue: May I ask the minister a supplementary question. Would the minister comment on a further statement in the report to the effect that United States bombers carrying atomic bombs fly over Canadian territory from time to time?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Assiniboia is simply asking for verification of a press report which he is not in any position to substantiate himself, and unless he takes responsibility for the statement that is not considered to be good practice.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order you have raised, Mr. Speaker, I may say it is common practice for us to ask a minister to comment on a newspaper report. I will put it in that form if that is a more desirable form. It is something we have been doing every day in the week for many years.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it is a matter of form. If the hon. member asked whether the government had any information that such flights were being carried out, it would no doubt be regular.

Mr. Argue: If I may phrase it that way, then, I will ask the minister if he has any information to impart to the house on the statement that United States bombers, carrying atomic bombs, are flying over Canadian territory.

Mr. Harkness: I would refer the hon. member to two statements on this subject by the Prime Minister, one on June 3, 1958 and the other on March 17, 1959. These statements will be found in Hansard for these dates and they cover this question in considerable detail. The situation has not changed in this regard since that time.

REPORTED INTENTION TO DISBAND CF-100 SQUADRONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is it the intention of the government to reduce the number of CF-100 squadrons in Canada before a decision has been taken in regard to their replacement?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): As I indicated in reply to a similar question from the Leader of the Opposition yesterday, my predecessor stated some months ago that during 1961 we would begin to phase out the CF-100 squadrons. During the course of this year some four of these squadrons will be phased out in an ordered program.

Mr. Garland: May I say with respect that the answer to the question by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday does not cover my question. Would the minister consider answering my question?

Mr. Harkness: I think that statement answers the question.

Mr. Garland: If I may, I will repeat the question. Is it the intention of the government to reduce the number of CF-100 squadrons in Canada before a decision has been taken with regard to their replacement?

Mr. Harkness: I think the answer I have given answers that question.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

INQUIRY AS TO SALE OF AIR CARGO PLANES TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has his department made a new proposal to Washington for the sale of the Canadair CL-44 transport plane, and if so what is the nature of the proposal?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I presume the hon. member is referring to a couple of press articles which appeared earlier, one in this morning's newspaper, I believe, and one in yesterday's. These are both speculative stories and I do not believe it would be proper for me to comment on them, nor would it serve any good purpose to do so.

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. Did the minister write a letter, as referred to in the issue of the Montreal Gazette, to his opposite number in the United States, Mr. McNamara, in connection with this matter?

Mr. Harkness: I have written only one letter to Mr. McNamara, and that was to congratulate him on being appointed secretary of defence.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED THREATS TO IMMIGRANTS BY WELFARE OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has the minister received reports that welfare officers are threatening immigrants applying for welfare benefits with being reported to the immigration department, with the possibility of deportation? If so, can the minister assure the house that there is no truth whatsoever in these reports?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I saw this report in one of last evening's newpapers. I also had a telegram from one of the labour organizations in Hamilton. The hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Martini) and the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Smith) also were inquiring with respect to this rumour. I can assure all hon. members that there is absolutely no truth in it whatsoever.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST THAT RAILWAY UNIONS AND MANAGEMENT REOPEN NEGOTIATIONS—TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Laurier asked me whether I had received from the railway brotherhoods a reply to the request to them and to the railways to commence negotiations. I said that I would table the reply today. In doing so I would also table the correspondence that passed between the railway companies, the brotherhoods and myself in connection with this matter.

TRADE

RUSSIA—REPORTED ABILITY TO UNDERCUT CANADIAN MINERAL EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or, in his absence, to his parliamentary secretary. Has the minister seen the statement by the president of the Asbestos corporation before the Senate manpower committee that Russia is in a position to undercut Canadian exports of minerals to western Europe with low price offerings from communist sources? If so, has he any comment to make thereon?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce will be back tomorrow. The question will be taken as notice and will be drawn to his attention.

ELECTRONIC TUBES—REPORTED IMPORTS FROM JAPAN THROUGH UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): On Wednesday, February 1, the hon. member for Lincoln asked a question with respect to the importation of electronic receiving tubes coming into Canada from Japan through San Francisco.

I am advised by my officers that inquiries have revealed that substantial quantities of Japanese electronic receiving tubes have been imported into Canada after transshipment at San Francisco. With two exceptions, in mid-November and early December, involving relatively small quantities, these tubes were imported prior to the imposition of the voluntary embargo by the Japanese. The importer concerned has followed the practice of placing the tubes in a bonded warehouse in Vancouver, to be drawn from stock as required.

All such tubes are being valued for duty at the fair market value prevailing at the time and place of transshipment to Canada. This means that the value for duty will be higher than the Japanese selling price by at least the amount of the United States duty and the shipping charges accruing from Japan to San Francisco.

JAPAN—REQUEST FOR QUOTA ON STEEL FLATWARE EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance or, in his absence, to the acting minister. In the light of the fact that the Canadian stainless steel flatware industry of Niagara Falls has suffered a 75 per cent cut in employment because of heavy imports from Japan, can the minister say whether consultations with Japanese representatives for further voluntary export quotas are proceeding?

Mr. Richard A. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that negotiations have been under way with Japan for a period of time. When there is something to report to the house an announcement will be made.

Miss LaMarsh: A supplementary question. In the light of the statement attributed to Ukichi Takezaki that the Japanese industry will not accept further voluntary quotas, can the hon. gentleman say whether the government is prepared to accept this take it or leave it attitude and abandon the Canadian flatware industry?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): There is no such thing as abandonment of any industry on the part of this government. This government intends to stand behind all Canadian industry, and its record in that respect is well known.

U.S. FOOD DISPOSAL PROGRAM—THREAT TO CANADIAN EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of an article in the Financial Post of February 11, containing the statement that President Kennedy's food for peace task force has recommended that the United States food disposal program be stepped up from $1,500 million annually to $3,500 million. In view of this grave threat to Canada's agricultural exports, will the Prime Minister discuss with President Kennedy the possibility of co-operation between our two countries in our respective food export programs?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a question by anticipation. If I understood correctly, the article to which the hon. member referred is in an issue of February 11; I think that is what he said in his opening remarks.

Mr. Argue: The February 11 issue of the Financial Post.

Mr. Diefenbaker: However, may I say that on a number of occasions I have heard the hon. gentleman preach ruin of the agriculture industry and speak of the danger that would follow a distribution of food products by the United States anywhere in the world. We have consistently dealt with this matter with the authorities in the United States. The result has been that, in connection with policies on food distribution, Canada's views have received the fullest consideration by the United States, and I am sure that the same attitude will be shown by the present administration. We will do our part at all times to assure that while those portions of the world where want and famine exist shall not be denied the assistance from the free world, these policies should not unnecessarily or unfairly interfere with commercial trade or the rights of other nations.

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question. I wonder whether the Prime Minister is able to tell the house if he will be discussing the question of a food disposal program with the President?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the matters discussed will be reported to the house following the discussions that take place.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORTED NEW INTERPRETATION OF SERVICE CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Paul Racine (Beauce): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the numerous complaints of unemployed persons who no longer receive unemployment insurance benefits as a result of the new interpretation of the service contract, is it the intention of the minister to issue instructions in order to remedy what has become an untenable situation?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member gave me notice that he would ask this question. I immediately contacted the unemployment insurance commission, and they advise me that there is no new interpretation of the regulations with regard to the contract of service. The difference now is, so they tell me, that the regulations are being enforced.

[Later:]

Mr. Racine: Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer just given by the Minister of Labour I would like to ask him whether he is aware that the enforcement of the instructions now contained in pamphlet 13, where the commission defines "service contract", is detrimental to the campaign for winter works, particular in the renovation and home construction field.

Mr. Starr: I am not aware that it is having the effect which the hon. member says it is.

TRANSPORT

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF SUBWAY IN FEDERAL PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question with regard to a delegation that seems to have visited Ottawa yesterday, a high power one from that great city of Toronto. I wonder whether the Prime Minister can tell us what was the substance of the delegation approach and what conclusions were reached.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would not agree with the description of any delegation from Toronto as high power in the sense that they endeavour to overpower in any way. A presentation was made by a delegation from metropolitan Toronto, headed by the metropolitan mayor and the mayor of Toronto, asking for consideration on the part of the government to the inclusion of their subway plan in the general scheme which is today the law of this country whereby the Department of Public Works makes available assistance in connection with pollution and the like.

It was pointed out that at present, as the law now stands, subways do not come within the provisions of existing legislation. After a full and complete discussion of the matter the delegation was advised that when a decision was arrived at with respect to the request, the metropolitan area of Toronto would be advised accordingly.

WATER RESOURCES

CHICAGO DIVERSION—INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There is another bill this year before the United States congress proposing to divert 1500 cubic feet of water per second from lake Michigan into the Illinois waterway. I believe the bill was passed last year but was vetoed by the president. My question is, has the government made any representations to the new administration in Washington and, if not, is it their intention to do so?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there was no bill vetoed by the president last year. I think there was a bill in the house, but it did not get through the Senate.

As yet we have made no representations to the new administration. I think perhaps the time has not yet come to do that. But our position on this question remains the same, that we are very strongly opposed to any further diversion of water at Chicago.

COMBINES

STATEMENT AS TO INVESTIGATION OF ELECTRICAL COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. J. Browne (Acting Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, February 7 the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo asked this question:

In view of the fines levied on eight electrical companies in the United States for bid rigging and price fixing, will the minister tell the house whether any investigation has been made or is contemplated by the director of research and investigation, combines branch, into similar practices by the Canadian counterparts of these electrical companies?

I have here the answer. In the post-war period, as the annual reports of the combines branch indicate, there have been inquiries into certain aspects of the electrical industry, two of which have resulted in published reports and prosecutions. The combines branch maintains a continuing interest in this field, as in other fields and, in accordance with the usual practice, any information coming to the attention of the director indicating a possible violation of the Combines Investigation Act is carefully considered to determine whether the situation is such as to warrant formal inquiry. The general practice, however, is that no information is given out as to whether an inquiry is being pursued in a particular industry unless and until a report is published.

COPYRIGHTS

INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN ADHERENCE TO GENEVA CONVENTION

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion). Could the minister inform the house why the government has not acted upon the recommendations contained in the Ilsley report to the effect that Canada should sign the universal convention on copyrights passed in Geneva in 1952?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for her courtesy in addressing me in my mother tongue. With her permission, I shall consider the matter and give her an answer later on.

PRODUCTIVITY COUNCIL

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF SETTING UP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder, sir, if I might ask the Prime Minister whether he is yet in a position, or whether he can indicate when he might be in a position, to announce the constitution of the national productivity council.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the mobilization of those who will constitute this most important body is proceeding. When we are in a position to announce the full, complete personnel, it will be done.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could indicate how a national productivity council that does not exist is going to affect unemployment—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member certainly does not appear to be seeking information in the question which he is asking.

HOUSING

N.H.A.—REQUEST FOR LOWERING OF INTEREST RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Since the minister's statement on February 6, stripped of its ministerial embellishment, shows that only about 176 more housing starts were made in January, 1961 than in January, 1960, will the government give immediate consideration to lowering the N.H.A. interest rate in order to further stimulate house building, which would be in line with action recommended to congress by President Kennedy of the United States?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): We cannot take any suggestions or leads from President Kennedy in running this government. We are doing what appears best for Canada and he for the United States. And apparently what we have done has received commendation from the executive vice president of the National House Builders Association, who said just recently:

"Hon. David J. Walker, Minister of Public Works, should be given full credit. Revision of the act required a high degree of political statesmanship. Already it is having a healthy effect on residential construction."

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps it is a little late to attempt to establish the relation of the answer to the question.

Mr. Garland: Perhaps Your Honour might permit a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: If it is similar to the ministers' answer, I would think not.

Mr. Garland: If I may say so with respect, this is a matter which does affect job opportunities for thousands of people in this country. Will the minister give us an assurance that the government is giving consideration to lowering this interest rate, which in my opinion is the main deterrent—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member made his plea for lower interest rates in his first question. The supplementary adds nothing.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BROADCASTING

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MEMBER OF BOARD OF GOVERNORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask a very simple question of the Minister of National Revenue in his role as broadcasting authority. It arises from a statement which appears to have been made by Carlyle Allison, who is a member of the board of broadcast governors:

> It is interesting to note that none of our recommendations have been turned down by the government, which would indicate how much of an independent board we are.

I wonder if I could ask the minister whether the board of broadcast governors is still an independent board.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I am not responsible for the language used. The editor, having left his editorial sanctum in Winnipeg, has perhaps become less happy in his choice of words.

OLD AGE SECURITY

REPORT OF DR. CLARK—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT STUDY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has he concluded his study of the Clark report dealing with survivorship and other aspects of the United States pension system, or is that study still continuing?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The study is continuing, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question. Is it the intention of the minister to recommend the establishment of a royal commission to give further consideration to this matter?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

YUKON TERRITORY—REPORTED IMPORTATION OF UNINSPECTED MEATS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question to ask the Minister of Agriculture. Perhaps in his absence the hon. gentleman's parliamentary secretary could answer it. It is a question affecting the general health of the people of the Yukon. Is the minister aware that uninspected meats are being transported interprovincially from British Columbia into the Yukon Territory contrary to the Canada Meat Inspection Act? If so, will he take action to ensure compliance with the law in this regard?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): This matter has been drawn to the attention of the department and investigations have been undertaken, but some problems have been experienced with respect to the enforcement of this section of the act in this far northern area. However, I can assure the hon. member that additional means of enforcement are now being studied.

SHIPPING

REPORTED REQUEST FOR PROVINCIAL LICENSING OF SMALL CRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the Ontario government requested permission from the department to license small craft. If so, what consideration has been given to the request?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have no record of any special request from the Ontario provincial government with a view to giving authority to the province to undertake small boat licensing. In fact the federal government already has a licensing scheme in effect. However, there are a number of important questions relating to the safety regulation of small boats which can involve co-operation with the provinces, and these have been receiving the attention of my department. I hope to be able to make a further statement on this in due course, probably when my departmental estimates are under consideration.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question. In view of the great importance of this problem and the recent conferences which have been held, has the government given consideration to amending the appropriate act to meet the growing need for better regulation of small craft on inland waters?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the whole matter is under consideration at the present time. We had a very successful study period with representatives of the industry, and the whole matter is being considered.

FISHERIES

SINCLAIR REPORT—INQUIRY AS TO PRINTING AND TABLING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and ask him whether progress is being made with respect to the printing and tabling of the report of Dr. Sinclair.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as I already said some time ago, as far as complying with the order of the house is concerned, the printing is being expedited as much as possible, but it is a rather complicated job and we have experienced some unanticipated delays. I erred in my first estimate, and I should not like to make another error. I assure the hon. member that the report will be tabled and distributed as rapidly as possible.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

QUEBEC—REPORTED HOLD-UP OF MAIL TRUCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. According to the two o'clock news another important mail robbery involving a mail truck has taken place between Three Rivers and La Tuque. Is the minister aware of this robbery? I think it was a hold-up. There were five bandits involved and they stole all the mail in the truck. If the minister is aware of this robbery is he in position to give more details about it?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not seem to have been quite as close to this particular robbery as the hon. member, and there is nothing I can add at this time to the information which he has obtained over the radio.

Mr. Denis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the practice of the Post Office Department that every time there is an important new event or a piece of bad luck the minister is made aware of it?

(Translation):

AIRPORTS

OTTAWA—INQUIRY AS TO BILINGUAL SIGNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister tell me if he is aware of a report published in La Presse of January 28, 1961 to the effect that all the posters, except two, at the Ottawa airport are written only in English and, if so, does he intend to take concrete steps about this matter?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the article has been brought to my attention and I am considering the situation.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the term of office of the president of the Canadian National Railways expired as of September, 1960, is the minister now in a position to tell the house whether he has been reappointed?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The hon. member asked me a similar question earlier in the session, and I have nothing to add to what I said at that time.

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING PAYMENTS, PERMITTING APPEALS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Wednesday, February 8, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Churchill—Mr. Flynn in the chair:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Pension Act to provide for increases to disabled veterans and their dependants; to permit payment of supplementary pensions in certain cases; to permit appeals from decisions of the former board of pension commissioners; and to provide for certain further changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Mr. Best: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak briefly this afternoon on the amendments to the Pension Act now before the house. Remarks have been made by many members about the excellent prospects envisaged by the resolution and the importance it will have to the some million and a quarter veterans throughout our country.

First of all, however, before discussing the measure I should like to congratulate the new Minister of Veterans Affairs. I think we all must pay tribute also to Colonel Brooks, the last minister, a member of the house for some 25 years, during whose period of approximately three and one half years as minister of the department many important changes and improvements were made.

The resolution before us at the moment is, I think, an excellent one, and comments to that effect have been made by officials of the Canadian Legion and other interested bodies across Canada. I should like to make some comments on the purposes of the legislation. Following upon its announcement in the speech from the throne, it is proposed by this legislation to increase the rate of pensions payable to disabled war veterans and to the dependants of those who lost their lives in the service of Canada. Incidentally, the number who lost their lives in the first and second world wars total some 104,000 Canadians. This, then, is one objective of the legislation.

Second, its purpose is to provide for increases in the maximum grants for burial expenses of pensioners. The amendment provides that the rates of such grants will keep pace with similar payments for veterans who die in our treatment hospitals. The purposes and objectives of the legislation were outlined in some detail by the new Minister of Veterans Affairs on December 12, 1960 as found on pages 734 and 735 of Hansard.

A third aspect of the resolution deals with Canadian citizens who served in an allied force during either of the wars. It is proposed to bring in an amendment under which they may claim entitlement from the Canadian pension commission when their claims have been rejected by the government of the allied force in which they served.

Fourth, there are certain amendments which will affect payments to children. As the minister pointed out, the rates are to be increased. In addition there are certain technical changes involving the month in which a child becomes ineligible for such a pension during the sixteenth and seventeenth years. A further amendment will also provide for equalization of payments to all the children of a family rather than the present procedure whereby a greater amount is paid on behalf of the first child than on behalf of the second.

I am sure that these and other amendments will do much to bring a greater measure of fairness to this most important legislation. I am sure that some of the miscellaneous amendments and procedural changes in the Pension Act and its administration will also have a beneficial effect on our veterans and their dependants.

In this legislation we are concerned, of course, with our veterans. That goes without saying. Many members of our forces gave their lives and many others gave their health. In all cases they have given a considerable period of their lives to the protection of all of us here in Canada and, indeed, of the whole free world. The numbers of our Canadian veterans are very considerable. I mentioned earlier a million and a quarter people. The figures appear to indicate that from world war I we have some 240,000 survivors, and of this number approximately 49,000 are pensioners with disabilities exceeding 25 per cent. In the case of world war II the figure is 826,000 and the number of pensioners is some 100,000, or slightly over 12 per cent. To these pensioners we indeed owe a great deal. We cannot measure what we owe them, of course, in terms of dollars and cents, but we must try; and the process must be a continual one in order to bring about an increased measure of fairness in compensation to them for what they gave for us.

I thing we might look briefly at the past record. During the last three or four years the record has indeed been considerable. During Colonel Brooks' occupation of the portfolio of veterans affairs some $47½ million was added by consent of the house to the amount being received by our veterans in disability pensions and war veterans allowances, and through increases to widows and dependant parents, educational assistance to children and increases for hospitals. This is indeed a considerable figure. Other things have been done as well. The resistance requirement for allied veterans was lowered from 20 to 10 years, and additional funds were made available for the Veterans' Land Act as well as in home construction loans for veterans. In summary, I think the record of the last three and a half or four years has been considerable and important.

One thing that strikes me about the many veterans in my riding, and I am sure this is true across the country, is that they continue to render service. Their service is not just in wartime. They appear to take part in virtually every community activity that goes on in my area, and I am sure that is true of other places across Canada.

I think it is important to know what our veterans are doing and not beside the point we are considering at the moment, because if we know what they are doing we will know better what they need and what their wishes and requests are, and I think that has an important relationship to this legislation. We have many important veterans organizations such as the Canadian Legion, the war amputation associations and various service associations across Canada. These and other organizations presented to the veterans affairs committee established in 1958, for which the government must be congratulated, briefs and important requests as to what should be done with respect to our veterans affairs legislation.

In my own country, for instance, there are some 2,000 to 3,000 members of the Canadian Legion. We have important and major branches of the Legion in towns such as Acton, Georgetown, Milton, Oakville and Burlington. In these communities our veterans, and our Legion members in particular, have made most important contributions. In my own home town of Georgetown they have recently contributed some $10,000 to the new hospital. In every community in my riding, and I am sure across Canada, they are most active in children's sports activities such as baseball and hockey. In my communities with a population of from 4,000 to 10,000 or more, one finds that 300 or 400 or more children each week are organized into sports activities by members of the Canadian Legion. In the town of Milton in my riding they take part in a portable hospital equipment campaign which makes equipment available to people in their homes.

A new Legion building in the town of Burlington in my riding has added much to that area. As an example of the community spirit and the continuing service which has been rendered by these veterans, I recall that two years ago when a school burned down in the town of Acton, a portion of the Canadian Legion building in that town was immediately turned over to the school children for their classes. Winter works projects are playing a part in the Legion activities, and funds have been contributed toward various such projects in my area. The veterans, acting through the Legion and working in community activities, are doing many things on a provincial and national basis. One example of this which comes to my mind is the eye bank. I believe also that about $75,000 or $80,000 has been paid out each year in scholarships to children going to universities in Ontario. These are some of the contributions they have made, Mr. Chairman.

What do our veterans ask of us in so far as this legislation is concerned, and perhaps with respect to future amendments or administrative changes? In talking to the veterans in my riding I note that the first thing they request is a substantial pension increase to disabled veterans. I should like to look briefly at a recent issue of the Legion magazine, the Legionary, for January, 1961, pages 4 and 7. We find that some of the financial problems facing our disabled veterans are outlined there. For instance, in the period from 1920 to 1957, and indeed until today, the annual pension of a 100 per cent disabled single pensioner has been increased from $900 a year to $1,800. The amount was doubled in that period of about 40 years.

If one compares that, as this issue of the Legionary does, with what they call a composite average wage from the year 1919 to 1958, one gets a different picture. This composite wage in 1919 was $900, about on a par with the pension granted at that time. The composite average wage in 1958 was $3,600, or four times the 1919 figure. While pensions have doubled during this time, we find that the composite average wage has been multiplied four times. I think this is a measure of the plight of some of our veterans. We are most pleased to see our government taking important action in this field.

It has been pointed out by several members during the last two days that section 70, the benefit of doubt section, as applied by our pension commission needs some attention. The Canadian Legion has indicated, and these figures must be available to all, that nearly 50 per cent of the cases heard on appeal during the year 1958-59 were successful. I feel that this rather extraordinary record points up the difficulty that there must be during the first hearing, and suggests that some change is needed. There should be a clearer interpretation of section 70 in order to give the veteran the benefit of the doubt. Indeed, I think the benefit of the doubt should not be interpreted in favour of the commission but must be given to the veteran himself.

It is not unnatural that in certain cases, perhaps judged on the medical evidence alone, some doubt would remain as to whether such injuries or complications resulted during wartime or before or after. In a field such as medicine this sort of doubt is only natural, and that such doubt should occur in a large number of cases is only natural. If we are putting the elimination of doubt on this basis of medical certainty, then it is only normal that a large number of cases will be turned down. However, if the veteran were given the benefit of the doubt I think we would reach a more equitable solution. This is one thing my Legion members are requesting.

The next request is for some change in the appeal board situation, perhaps in the way of balancing the composition of the board with a doctor, a lawyer and a layman. I believe this was the original intention. This point has been mentioned to me on numerous occasions. It may be that with such appeal boards the medical doubt takes precedence over the doubt that may exist in other parts of the case, particularly if there is more than one doctor. If the composition of such boards were changed somewhat it might be that a more realistic application of existing laws would be made.

These, Mr. Chairman, are the matters that have been brought to my attention by the veterans in my riding. They are delighted at the prospects for changes in this legislation, and we are indeed looking forward to the spelling out of the details regarding pensions and other matters in the immediate future.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, one can never give enough praise to the government which concerns itself again with the veterans in putting forward amendments to the Pension Act.

Many veterans live in the constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm where we also have three branches of the Canadian Legion, at Joliette, Terrebonne Heights and Rawdon.

As other members have stated, veterans have made many a sacrifice in two world wars, and I wish to add my voice to that of the other members who made suggestions about the Canadian pension commission and the benefit of the doubt clause.

Many veterans are denied a pension after they have become ill or incapacitated following their service in the armed forces.

Moral evidence exists, but it is often hard to establish on medical evidence whether the illness or incapacity developed at the time the veteran was a member of the armed forces. Therefore, I would ask the Canadian pension commission to give the veteran the benefit of the doubt.

I should like also to make the following suggestion to the government: if my information is accurate, some crown corporations, such as Canadian Arsenals, do not give any preference to veterans for employment purposes. Therefore, I would ask the government to give them that preference, other things being equal, and when some employees have to be laid off veterans should be kept on.

Mr. Chairman, I only wanted to make those few remarks and to congratulate the new Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill).

(Text):

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, I just want to add a word before this resolution carries. I do not think anything needs to be added to the arguments or to the expressions of approval which have been given. I should like to say that in my own experience I think the Department of Veterans Affairs has shown the most admirable consideration for the veterans. I have always found that the pension advocates in particular really look after their clients as if they were being paid on the basis of the results.

I should also like to reiterate what has been said about the present minister and his predecessor, and to mention one or two names that I do not recall having been mentioned, inasmuch as we owe so much over many years to the men who have worked on these committees and have never relaxed their efforts to see that veterans were looked after. I refer to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the present lieutenant governor of British Columbia. Both of them, along with the others mentioned, devoted unceasing efforts to this cause.

Before I take my seat I should just like to add one slight bit of what I suppose might be called atmosphere. It might be of interest if it comes to the eyes of any of those who were around in August, 1914. It is extremely hard for people whose memory does not go back to that date to realize the feeling at that moment. I think there were two feelings. First of all there was the overwhelming feeling that war which up to that time in our memory had been rather a trivial thing—a brush on the northwest frontier of India—that lasted only a few days suddenly had become a real and terrible thing. But happily there were still those who could take it lightly. You meet them in every army. I refer to people who do not take things too seriously.

I should like to put on record one case about which I know, that of a young man who joined up in August, 1914. I think his chief fear was that the war might not last long enough for him to get into it. That did not prove to be the case. In those days the pay was dished out in a rather informal manner. The paymaster just came around with a wad of bills and handed them out here and there. When handing them over to this young soldier he was surprised to hear him say, "What is that for?" The paymaster said, "That is your pay". "My God," said the young recruit, "do we get paid to fight?"

I like to think there were people like that around. They are needed to keep up the spirit of every army. I do not know about the career of that young man during the war. However, I am quite sure that he was a good soldier. Perhaps one could compare him with those who are mentioned in lines from Tennyson's "Ulysses":

> —My mariners, . . .
> That ever with a frolic welcome took
> The thunder and the sunshine,—

Mr. McLennan: Mr. Chairman, may I just wish the minister well in his new portfolio. I trust that he will show real initiative in the interests and the welfare of our veterans.

I congratulate the minister and the government on bringing in this resolution. Although we do not know the amount of the increases the bill will suggest, I hope they will be as generous as possible. Although this resolution covers only disability pensioners, I hope the minister will bring in a resolution dealing with the war veterans allowance, and that it will be on the same basis and effective at the same time as this legislation.

Many veterans on war veterans allowance find themselves in embarrassed circumstances today. With reference to the veterans of world war I who are now in the twilight of their lives and who spent one to four years in the mud and rat infested trenches in France and Belgium under heavy artillery fire, may I say this. Although they may not have been wounded, they suffered physical impairment which was indiscernible at that time. When hostilities ceased they were mentally upset, and by the time they got settled down or reestablished they ran into the years of the world-wide depression. Many had a difficult time in scraping out a bare existence. Others lost their savings and their insurance. Others ran into debt which took them years to pay off. Those were their most productive years and the years of their greatest earning power. Many of them never had a fair chance to provide for their declining years. I hope they will get the same treatment as those who were on veterans pensions, the treatment they deserve. I repeat that I hope the minister brings in a duplicate resolution on war veterans allowance.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I want briefly to add my voice to those who have spoken with approbation of this resolution and who look with anticipation to the legislation which will follow. I think it would be gilding the lily to say much more than has been said already. However, I feel that if I remained silent I would be derelict in my duty to my constituency, in which there was a tremendous record of enlistments during the early part of the war, in which there has been such a large percentage of veterans who have rehabilitated themselves, both those who were pensionable and those without pensions, and in which there is a tremendous interest in the Canadian Legion, which has many branches in all parts of the Peace river country. Indeed, at many of the meetings I have attended parts of this resolution were the subject matter of keen and intelligent discussion. I certainly think the minister and the government are to be complimented on the introduction of the resolution.

Something has been said about the principle of the benefit of the doubt. It would seem to me that this is a term which has a definite and specific connotation in the minds of the courts and lawyers. In any case where there is a dispute between the crown and a subject or citizen, when all the evidence has been introduced and is before a tribunal, if it is difficult for the tribunal to formulate a firm decision then the benefit of the doubt must be given to the citizen as against the crown. That is something which has come down to us through generations and centuries of our legal experience in common law. I would think that the intention of those who drafted this particular section must have been guided to this particular phrase and its meaning. I certainly hope that from and after the introduction of this resolution that principle will be applied.

I want to deal briefly with something which I think should be mentioned at this time. It was raised by members from Newfoundland. Let me say first, as a condition precedent, that I had the privilege of serving both in this country and overseas with Newfoundlanders who were in the Canadian forces. They were the best of soldiers and the best of people. Certainly there is no reason, as the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo has said, why they should not be entitled to be put in precisely the same position as other Canadians.

However, there is a right way and a wrong way in which to achieve that end. When we come to consider the invitations which were extended by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and others, I suggest that they are in fact inviting this government to violate the sanctity of the British North America Act. I had the privilege of hearing the speech of the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. I also read what he had to say, and I did so carefully. He referred to section 38 or, as he called it, term 38 which, as he said correctly, is part of a schedule attached to the British North America Act amendment of 1949. As such it becomes part of our constitution and cannot be in any way amended or changed save by the method laid out and provided by practice and by the British North America Act itself. That is particularly so where this is in fact a contract between two parties.

The hon. member made that suggestion because there was not contained within the four corners of term 38 the provision that he considered should be there, namely that veterans who prior to 1949 had not applied for and obtained a pension should not be compelled to go to the United Kingdom, obtain the pension which would be payable pursuant to the regulations of that country, and then come back to Canada to have it supplemented to the same level as that of Canadian veterans. I think he has a case there. There is a point there, but that is not the question.

I have read term 38 quite carefully, and twist, contort and torture it as you will, you cannot at any time read that interpretation into it. I think it would be quite wrong for this or any government to be asked to place an incorrect interpretation, no matter with what laudable motive, on a portion of the constitution with the intention that it should achieve a desirable result.

The other alternative suggested was this. If you cannot interpret it in that way, why not introduce in these amendments to the Pension Act a section or a provision which would give this particular privilege, or would restore to these veterans the same privileges that apply to other Canadians? I take it that would be nothing but a unilateral declaration by the Canadian government as to part of the constitution. As I say, the motive may be quite laudable, but I am quite certain that no province, and particularly the province of Newfoundland, would welcome an attempt by this government to so deal with this particular matter.

It seems to me that if we are to achieve this result it may be necessary to seek a proper constitutional amendment. I suppose for the next 20 years this government may be compelled to pick up the bits and pieces of the legislation of the previous government and remedy its defects. I think we may as well start now, by doing it in a proper way when we have to do it. For that reason I support what was said by the hon. member for Saskatoon, that this is a serious matter which should engage the attention of the Department of Justice. When we attempt to achieve for the people of Newfoundland those things to which they are entitled, it should be done in the proper way.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. I listened very carefully to what he had to say, and I wonder whether he would tell the committee what there is now, either in the terms of union or in any legislation pertaining to veterans' pensions, that prevents the Canadian pension commission from interpreting the act in the way we say it should be interpreted. The hon. member made the point that if you want to put a different interpretation on it you must follow the proper procedure required to change the constitution. But our stand is this; that there is no need to do that, because the wording is quite clear and it is just a matter of how we ourselves decide to interpret those words. That does not require any amendment; that only requires an exercise of will.

(Translation):

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few brief remarks on this resolution to amend the Pension Act in order to provide for pension increases to veterans.

This legislation will certainly be welcomed by all veterans. There are five branches of the Canadian Legion in my constituency, and I know they will all be delighted to learn that the government has finally decided to more or less agree to the Legion's request made last year in the committee on veterans affairs.

There is one point, however, which I would like to clarify. I was somewhat surprised to hear members of this house, especially on the government side, shower fulsome praise on the new minister (Mr. Churchill) and, I might add, convey him all kinds of good wishes. There is no doubt that the Minister of Veterans Affairs will put all his heart into his efforts to solve the problems which will occur in his department. I would add, however, in all fairness towards the Canadian Legion, as well as towards its branches in my constituency, that the best watching over veterans rights is done by the Canadian Legion itself.

I am glad to say that the five branches of the Legion are most active in my constituency and deal enthusiastically with all cases submitted to their attention, either from the point of view of pensions or from the point of view of veterans' assistance.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

It would seem therefore, Mr. Chairman, that it would have been only fair and reasonable for the members on the government side to attribute greater merit to the Canadian Legion. Yet they preferred to commend this government which, after all, merely carries on the work begun by the previous administration, which brought forward the veterans' charter, for the welfare of these men and that of their families.

(Text):

Mr. Jones: I thought, Mr. Chairman, we might just clear up some of the ambiguities that seem to have arisen over these representations in regard to the status of Newfoundland veterans. Yesterday, February 8, as reported at page 1867 of Hansard, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said:

> It may well be asked what right have I to get up and say anything on this subject—

In other words the subject of Newfoundland veterans:

> —because from 1953 to 1957 I was a member of the government and was the representative in the government of the province of Newfoundland. While I admit all that, as my friend the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo pointed out, this problem was not brought to our attention at that time by these people.

That was the contention of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate yesterday, and he was referring to remarks made by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo on February 7 as reported at page 1806 of Hansard, as follows:

> I know that hon. members will say, why has all this time passed and nothing been done about it? This is a fair question. Nothing has been done about it because we did not know about it until 1955 or 1956. We did not get any complaints from the veterans. I suppose one of the reasons we did not get complaints was that the average veteran did not know about term 38.

And so on. I suppose with the passage of time memories grow short, but I would point out to this committee that on November 23, 1953, this very matter was brought to the attention of the Liberal minister of veterans affairs, Hon. Hugues Lapointe, by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who has now forgotten that he made this earlier representation. On that date he wrote a letter to the former minister of veterans affairs asking if something could be done. The minister at that time replied:

> —I suggest it would hardly be proper to place the Newfoundland veteran in a preferred position to Canadian veterans who served with the same forces, many of whom were born in Canada.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would state from what he is reading.

Mr. Jones: It is a letter dated December 7, 1953 from the former minister of veterans affairs, Hon. Hugues Lapointe, to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who was a member of the house at that time.

I refer also, to the question of the Newfoundland overseas forestry units. On June 16, 1952 representations were made to the former government in this regard. In order that there may be no doubt about this situation I should like to repeat what I said to the committee in this regard yesterday when I was speaking on this subject. I stated then, as will be found on page 1864 of Hansard:

> May I say to the Newfoundland members that they may be assured that I intend to ask at the earliest possible opportunity for a study to be made of term 38 both by the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Justice in order that the fullest consideration may be given to the representations which have been made both by the Canadian Legion and by hon. members of this house.

As has been pointed out in the course of this debate, it is necessary for a study to be made. Obviously, in the light of the reply which the minister of veterans affairs gave in 1953 to this question, such a study is necessary if it is to be determined with precision what exactly is the entitlement of Newfoundland veterans under term 38, or if it is to be expanded to include representations which were made to the government of that day and which have since been repeated in that regard.

Mr. Stewart: In rising to take part in this debate I have no intention of delaying unduly the passage of this resolution, but in view of the contribution made in both the first and second world wars by men and women from my constituency I feel I have a definite obligation to speak at this time.

I should like first of all to associate myself with what was said by the present Minister of Veterans Affairs when he spoke in this house on December 12, congratulating his predecessor, now a member of the other place, on the work he had done in connection with veterans legislation. Colonel Brooks, now Senator Brooks, was a distinguished member of the armed services in two world wars and a distinguished member of the opposition before he became minister of veterans affairs. I can assure this committee that at all times Colonel Brooks held the interest of the veterans as his first consideration.

It has been my privilege to serve as a member of the standing committee on veterans affairs for the past three sessions and again this session. We Canadians, and this parliament of Canada, owe a great deal to those men and women who, without considering the sacrifice, gave of their best in the cause of freedom. We do not discharge our obligations to them by erecting cenotaphs, monuments or placing marble plaques in our public buildings. These might bear mute though eloquent testimony to the memory of those they commemorate, but they do not compensate for the sacrifices which those people made incidental to the conflict in which they were engaged. I realize that we cannot measure suffering, hardship and sacrifice in terms of money. However, we can, as far as we are able, provide that those who suffered shall not be in a worse position than those who did not make sacrifices.

Many of our veterans—and a great deal of credit is due to them—came back from the conflict and were able to rehabilitate themselves satisfactorily. Others were not, and it is to them that we must be always ready and willing to lend a sympathetic ear and a helping hand. Since 1957 this government has been most arduous in its legislation and activities concerning pension benefits. I do not intend to review in any detail what has been done. Previous speakers have indicated some of the work which has been carried out by this government since 1957. We had a forecast by the Prime Minister some time ago that there would be an increase in pension benefits, and the resolution before us provides for such increases, provides for better appeal provisions and provides also for other fringe benefits.

This is not a problem which is lessening. The problem of veterans and their treatment is one which is growing and will continue to grow as the veterans become older. The former minister of veterans affairs, speaking to the Canadian Legion at its annual convention, said, as reported at page 12 of the pamphlet containing his speech:

> In 1920 there were about 570,000 veterans of what was then known as the great war. By 1945 this number was down to around 350,000 but world war II had added a million new ones.

Later in the course of the same speech the former minister said:

> In 1950 it was estimated that there were around 200,000 world war I veterans under age 60, and about 110,000 over that age. There were then about 35,000 war veterans allowances in payment, for which the annual liability was just over $24 millions.

Dealing with the present position he said:

> Let us look ahead now over the next 15 years, by which time we estimate that about 80,000 great war veterans will be living in Canada, and that around 200,000 world war II veterans will be over age 60.

Then to quote further:

> To peer further into the future is difficult, but we can predict fairly accurately, from mortality tables, the veteran population of Canada for any particular year. For example, we estimate that, in 1980, there will be 342,000 world war II veterans aged 60 and over; and that the largest number of veterans in that age group—515,000—will occur in 1986.

Hon. members will see from these figures that this is a growing problem and one which must be met from day to day. I would suggest, as others have suggested to the minister, that a similar resolution dealing with war allowance provisions be introduced in order that an increase in pensions may not mean, in effect, a decrease in war allowance payments. I would also suggest that the war allowance ceiling be raised so that those veterans who are desirous of earning more might be in a position to do so.

A great deal has been said about the benefit of the doubt clause. As hon. members have pointed out, this is quite a familiar phrase to those of us who are lawyers, but no judge has been able to define precisely or satisfactorily "what is a reasonable doubt." We interpret it as meaning that if after all the evidence has been heard there is any doubt on the whole case, or on any phase of it, that doubt must be resolved in favour of the accused person. I think the same interpretation should apply to applications for a pension before the pension commission. If there is any doubt on any phase of the medical evidence, and that is the prime factor, it should be given in favour of the applicant.

I should also like to suggest that the procedure on appeal be made simpler; that provision be made for the introduction of new evidence, if necessary, before the appeal board. I do hope that when the bill is considered in committee these and other matters will be dealt with. I want to assure the veterans of my constituency and veterans generally that any reasonable request by them will be given every consideration.

Mr. Phillips: Mr. Chairman, it is appropriate that I should say a few words on this occasion. My province had the highest percentage of volunteers of any area of Canada and my riding, of course, was very well represented in that regard. We have a very large number of legionnaires throughout the riding, and the Summerside Legion branch has one of the finest Legion homes and is one of the best branches in Canada.

I should also like to extend my congratulations to the new Minister of Veterans Affairs and his parliamentary secretary. The former minister, Colonel Alfred Brooks, was well known in my province, and I am sure that many veterans, as well as the members of this house, will wish him success in his new post.

A great deal has been said about the increased benefits that have been granted to veterans in the last few years, and I do not intend to review this other than to comment that they have been a source of great satisfaction to myself. This new legislation will add further benefits to those already granted. However, there are several remarks that I should like to make, and in particular I should like to refer to the veteran who receives a disability pension and the remainder of whose income is made up of a war veterans allowance. It is imperative that the War Veterans' Allowance Act be reviewed at an early date to permit deserving veterans to obtain the benefit of the legislation now before the house. I am sure that the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the government will listen to members from all sides of the house who have made this recommendation.

The remainder of the resolution deals with the benefit of the doubt and administration. I think possibly, sir, I can illustrate my feelings in this regard by referring to a number of cases about which I have been in contact with the Canadian pension commission. Here perhaps I can point out to my constituents that the pension commission is an independent organization and removed from the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The commission makes its own decisions and not the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

One case that I find most particularly annoying concerns a young chap who volunteered early in the war and proceeded overseas as a dispatch rider. He was injured in a motorcycle accident one evening; he was taken to an English civilian hospital, spent some time in hospital, returned to his unit and was on light duty. After his discharge he began to suffer pains in the back of his head where he had been injured in the accident. He got in touch with the Canadian pension commission for a pension. They took the attitude that the pains in the back of his head were imaginary, and he has been going back and forth for renewal hearings for the last 12 years. With the assistance of Colonel Brooks I was able to get him admitted to Camp Hill Hospital for an examination by specialists at that institution. He was examined by a neurologist, who reported that there was definitely trauma and that it was the source of the pain. However, six weeks later he received a phone call from another member of the medical staff who pointed out that in an interview with him the veteran had stated that he was in hospital a month and that was incorrect, and for no apparent reason the neurologist reversed his decision and the veteran is still attempting to get his pension.

Last year I wrote to the Canadian pension commission about this case. I referred them to the benefit of the doubt section and also to the earlier report of the neurologist, together with the fact that it has been impossible to obtain records from the English civilian hospital. After the renewal hearing they made the same decision. On checking his records, sir, at the renewal hearing I find that one member of the commission has sat on each of his several renewal hearings. I think that points up a number of things that have been mentioned by members in this debate, namely the apparent disregard for the benefit of the doubt, the need of a new system of appeal, and the numerous cases in which medical documentation is not complete.

Another case that I would like to refer to concerns another young chap who served in Italy in 1944. He began to complain of chest pains and shortness of breath. He was examined by a medical officer. In all fairness to the medical officer it must be pointed out that the examination was probably conducted under anything but satisfactory conditions. The doctor attributed the chest pains and shortness of breath to a nervous condition. The young man returned to Canada after the war and shortly after discharge he suffered a heart attack. He was forced to sell his business and his wife was compelled to go to work to earn a living for him. In this case the Canadian pension commission ruled that the cardiac condition was pre-enlistment and was not aggravated during service.

I am sure that a great many veterans who made the tour through Italy would disagree with that decision. In addition, the pension commission has completely ignored his complaints of 1944, which I think point to aggravation of a heart condition whether or not it was pre-enlistment.

Recently I had the opportunity of talking with a former medical officer of the Royal Canadian Navy. He was relating some of his experiences, and referred to the fact that he often wonders about the present documentation. He told me the story of a convoy arriving in Newfoundland after a very difficult crossing of the Atlantic, and in a short while he was expected to examine 140 men. He often wonders now about the documentation. He states that it was impossible for him to make an adequate examination and at the same time enter his findings on the individual's documents.

Therefore I submit that the pension commission must bear these matters in mind and not depend entirely upon the medical documentation. I am hopeful that when the legislation is presented to the house it will provide the means to correct these injustices, and I look forward to seeing the legislation.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take much time. I was a soldier in the first world war. I did not win the war, although I was there. I am pleased with the appointment of the new Minister of Veterans Affairs, because he is a man who fought in two wars and he knows what it is all about.

I am not going to take much time because I should like to see the bill passed. All I want is to see the allowance large enough so that the recipient will get a decent living. When we went overseas it was said that "nothing is too good for you" and afterwards the veterans said, "Wasn't it true? Nothing was too good."

I believe that the application of section 70 is wrong. There is always a doubt, and who gets the benefit of the doubt? The soldier is the fellow who comes off second best. Living costs so much today that the pension has got to be better than it is. When war veterans allowances are considered we should see to it that these men get enough money so they will not have to worry in their old age. They had to worry in the trenches. Politics did not count in those days. The fellow who laid alongside you in the trenches was not interested in whether you were a Grit or a C.C.F.'er or what you were. All he thought was that you were his buddy and you were there to help him and he was there to help you. Therefore I simply hope that the pension will be large enough so that these men can get a decent living.

Mr. More: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak briefly on the resolution I want to echo the congratulations extended by previous speakers to the new minister, his predecessor, the minister's parliamentary secretary and the other illustrious ministers who have been charged with the administration of this department in past years. I think it has generally been the case that capable men with the experience necessary to take charge of this department have always been found.

I wish to make a couple of observations. I am not a veteran. I was precluded from serving because of a serious illness, and I have always felt as I move amongst veterans today and meet them on the occasion of various celebrations that they have something of which I am very jealous. They have earned it and I did not, and I am pleased to have the opportunity from time to time to mingle with them, to listen to their experiences and their problems and to be as helpful as I can in bringing about justice for some of them where injustice seems to prevail.

From that point of view I think I can make an observation which I am sure will be fully supported. I believe that the grateful people of Canada desire that, through legislation passed by parliament, their gratitude and their regard for the veterans be shown in an adequate and substantial manner. I believe that has generally been the intent of parliament in the legislation that has been passed and revised from time to time in order to keep it up to date so as to meet the problems of the veterans.

We all must realize that as time goes on and veterans become older, their problems are greater. Some of them who have had companions to help them through life have lost them, and their present position in the twilight years becomes almost untenable without sincerity, sympathy and help being extended to them.

I raise my voice at this time because I believe parliament always intended that the benefit of the doubt should be given to the veteran. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that members are not wasting the time of the committee by speaking in numbers on this occasion. We are making the desire and intention of parliament known to those charged with the administration of the act. I cannot believe that these people have heard the voice of parliament in this regard and fully understand our desire. When some 50 per cent to 52 per cent of appeals from their decisions are allowed, it indicates to me a great lack of judgment in the initial consideration of these cases.

This is a serious matter to the veteran concerned. I have run across some of these cases which have been delayed for weeks and weeks and even months and months because of appeals and the fact that new evidence has been demanded. This is all right if the veteran is in a fair state of competence, but in many of these cases he has reached the point in the road which brought about the application in the first place, and the longer attention to and decision on the application is delayed the more serious the problem of the veteran becomes. In making these observations I do so in the hope that the addition of my voice to those of hon. members who have already spoken will bring about a more positive interpretation of the will of parliament by the administrators of the act.

I am very proud of the veterans organizations that exist in my community; I think they are among the finest in the country. The number of members of the house who are veterans indicates to me that, having served in war, they are not neglecting their responsibilities in times of peace and are discharging those responsibilities most efficiently.

The Canadian Legion, in particular the Saskatchewan command and our own Regina branch, has done an admirable job in so far as I am aware through my own work. They have gone to all lengths to properly attend to the demands made upon them by the veterans and their dependents. I do not know of a case in which they have let the veteran down. The results of their representations have not always been those for which we hoped, but at least I can say to all veterans and their dependents in Regina and in the province that they have been given the most adequate service through their Legion branches.

I should like to make one other observation, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the allowances. I do not believe it would be fair, reasonable or satisfactory if this part of the legislation were to be improved at this session and the war veterans allowances forgotten. I seriously urge upon the minister the bringing up to date of the war veterans allowances at this session.

Mr. Fane: I feel that the debate on this resolution could not possibly be complete without a few words from me on behalf of the veterans in the Vegreville constituency. There are a great many branches of the Legion there, and all are well attended. I can assure you that there is strong support amongst the veterans of this area for the present Department of Veterans Affairs.

Before I go any further I should like to congratulate our new minister upon his appointment to this department, the department about which there is the least controversy. It really is wonderful to find that when veterans affairs are being discussed everybody, whatever their political affiliations, wholeheartedly supports legislation for the benefit of the veterans. It is too bad that other departments could not receive the same treatment. At the same time I should like to convey my personal congratulations to the former minister, Colonel Brooks, on his elevation to his new post. He did a wonderful job when he was minister. He was always a great advocate for the rights of the ex-servicemen, and I am sure that everyone here wishes him well in his new post.

There is actually very little more to be said about this resolution, Mr. Chairman. Almost everything that could be said has been said and my remarks, therefore, will be very brief. When the minister brought this resolution before us on December 12 I was extremely pleased with its wording. I refer especially to the part which reads:

> That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Pension Act to provide for increases to disabled veterans and their dependents; to permit payment of supplementary pensions in certain cases; to permit appeals from decisions of the former board of pension commissioners; and to provide for certain further changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Those things are all good, and they are the things the veterans have been wanting. At the same time it must not be forgotten that in 1957 the war pensioners of Canada received an increase in pensions which amounted to some $47.5 million. These increases were granted to approximately 150,000 pensioners of the two world wars and Korea. It is gratifying to know that pension increases are being granted to the veterans, and I trust that these increases will be adequate to look after their requirements. The widows' allowances, allowances to dependent parents, allowances for educational purposes and so on, are also to be increased. I believe this provision will be of great help to these people who carried on their shoulders the weight of the actual fighting in the war. There will be increases also in the amounts paid for hospitalization.

I should like to conclude by saying that a good many veterans will be very happy when the War Veterans Allowance Act is reviewed and those people who have served their country well will become eligible for larger payments. I know that at this time we are not allowed to discuss the War Veterans Allowance Act, but when the time comes I will be here to say a few more words about it.

Mr. Matthews: Mr. Chairman, it is always a pleasure to take part in any activity that is in support of the future well-being of Canadian veterans. In rising to support this resolution introduced by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, I would say that this is no exception. As a member of the standing committee on veterans affairs I was very disappointed, along with other members, that changes in the Pension Act which would have benefited all veterans could not be dealt with during the last session.

Since coming to the House of Commons I have had the pleasure of being a member of the standing committee on veterans affairs, and I am looking forward to the meetings to be held during this session. We will all be pleased to work again with the deputy minister, Mr. Lalonde, and the other members of this very important department. We will, of course, miss having Hon. A. J. Brooks with us. I am sure all members of the committee will agree with me when I say that his work in support of the veterans has been valuable for many years. All members of the committee are aware also of the fine work of the present Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources on behalf of the veterans of Canada. I am sure that his interest and service to all veterans will continue, even though he will not be a member of this committee.

I am very happy to congratulate the new Minister of Veterans Affairs on his appointment. Hon. Gordon Churchill, D.S.O., served overseas as a Vickers machine-gunner from 1916 to 1919. From 1939 to 1945 he served with the Fort Garry Horse and was commanding officer of the First Canadian armoured carrier regiment in northwest Europe. I am sure all veterans will be pleased with his appointment. His understanding of the problems of veterans, and his interest in their welfare, will be of great value to all of them.

It is interesting to note that most of the members of the standing committee are veterans, and that many of them belong to the Canadian Legion. On checking the Parliamentary Guide I note that four members of the C.C.F. party, four members of the Liberal party and 45 members of the Progressive Conservative party are members of the Canadian Legion.

On Vancouver island there are thirty seven branches of the Canadian Legion, eight of them being in my constituency. In the constituency of Nanaimo there are the following branches:

Branch	Location
No. 191	Chemainus
No. 210	Lake Cowichan
No. 53	Duncan
No. 92	Salt Spring Island
No. 84	Gulf Islands
No. 171	Ladysmith
No. 256	Nanaimo
No. 10	Nanaimo

I am proud to be a member of Branch No. 256 in Nanaimo. All the Canadian Legion branches in my constituency take an active part in community work. They do not confine their services to veterans but also take part in any worthy project. It is interesting to note that these Legion branches support and sponsor all types of sports and do all they can to help the youth of the district with money, equipment and supervision.

I was interested to learn that the Department of Vetearns Affairs had a staff of 2,000 in 1939. In the training of the members of the organization at that time the staff were told that if they did not have the patience, the understanding, and the sympathy to listen to each veteran's problems and to take the time required to do so properly, regarding the individual's problem as the most important thing in life to him, then they were unfitted for the job they were called upon to do, and that the department would tolerate no such unfitness. I am quite sure that the standards required of the staff of that time are still the standards of the staff today and that a good job is being done.

It is the duty of all hon. members of the standing committee on veterans affairs to keep in mind those instructions given in 1939. It is a privilege and an honour to be a member of this important committee and any hon. member who is not interested enough to keep his attendance up should not be a member of it.

All veterans of Canada will be interested to know that since the Conservative government came into power in 1957 many things have been done to help them. The Pension Act was thoroughly reviewed. The last previous increase in pensions had been effective January 1, 1952 and a revision was desirable. The following items indicate what was done by the Conservative government. Amendments were made to the Pension Act and to the War Veterans Allowance Act. During the first session of the 24th parliament the standing committee on veterans affairs was set up and a number of important amendments were made to existing legislation, namely amendments to the Veterans Insurance Act, the Returned Soldiers Insurance Act and the Children of War Dead Act.

Continuing the promised review of active veterans legislation, two acts were selected for study during the second session of the twenty fourth parliament, namely the Veterans' Land Act and amendments and the War Service Grants Act and amendments.

I would recommend that the War Veterans Allowance Act be reviewed during this session. The benefit of the doubt should be given to veterans in cases in which some doubt possibly exists, as I am sure that there are veterans who should be getting more consideration.

I might add at this time the following illustration, just taking two veterans out of Canadian Legion Branch No. 10 in Nanaimo, namely, John W. Shorthouse and Matthew Gunniss. Those two veterans certainly are entitled to every consideration the department can give them. Both of these veterans were wounded overseas. When they got out of the army they worked for years. They actually worked when they probably should not have been working. However, they wanted to be on their own. They were extremely independent. However, age has more or less slipped up on them and they are quite old now. I certainly think that any benefit of the doubt should be resolved in their favour. In this instance I do not think there is any doubt at all. But if there is any doubt, I think the decision should be in favour of these two fine men.

In conclusion, I must say that I will support this resolution in full and I am sure that all hon. members here will give it every support.

Mr. Lambert: At the risk of incurring the displeasure and perhaps causing the discomfiture of hon. members whose interest in this resolution seems to be of a passing nature, may I say there are two items upon which I should like to comment. It is true that a number of the members of this House of Commons have spoken but in my opinion there are two things which should be underlined. First of all, there is in the Pension Act a provision which is of a mildly permissive nature whereby the department or the minister may provide domiciliary care for veterans who, for a number of reasons, are unable to look after themselves either because of age or illness. They are not men who are ill in the true sense of the word, in that they should occupy active treatment beds in veterans hospitals. In Edmonton we have one such home for veterans at the former government house.

I must draw to the attention of the members of this committee the fact that this is a well run and happy establishment. Unfortunately, however, it is only about a third of the size required, with the result that active treatment beds in our veterans hospitals in the region are occupied by men who would be far happier and far better looked after in such a type of establishment. I am sure that there are many other regions within the country where this could be done.

As a result of world war I we are now getting a greater number of men in this age category and in this particular category of chronic illness. They are the responsibility of society in one way or another. There is no way of trying to sweep their condition under any carpet. They are veterans. They served their country. Many of them are suffering from advanced age or increased disability because of the rigours of their war service many years ago. If we do not look after them in domiciliary care establishments, they must go on relief or they must be placed in some other public institution; but wherever they are they are still the responsibility of society. I would put it to the members of this committee that their true place is under the wing of the Department of Veterans Affairs. I would suggest to the minister that this is one area of fruitful inquiry in order to see whether the department could not extend its facilities for this particular group of veterans.

Before long there will also be an increasing number of veterans of world war II who may fit into this category. It is not merely a matter of a transitory stage where you can deal with a group of men over a short period of time.

The second point I wish to make is one that has been adverted to by a number of hon. members who have spoken this afternoon, I refer to the benefit of the doubt provision under the Pensions Act. Since my entering parliament in 1957 I believe 90 per cent of the cases of trouble with veterans pensions that have been referred to me have dealt with this difficult position of veterans of world war I where medical examinations on discharge were of a cursory nature, where records were scanty or practically nonexistent and where the initial work of the
