ROSS-HANLAN RACE.

On Wednesday—after five days waiting—the Kennebecis course proved sufficiently smooth for the Ross-Hanlan race which ended in another victory for the Toronto Champion, Ross being spotted out of his boat after one and one-eighth miles had been covered in six minutes and ten seconds.

The tug Hercules (the referee's boat) steamed away from Indiantown for the Kennebecis at 6.45 and arrived at Appleby's Wharf at 8.12—the course at that hour being in splendid condition. A large party came on board the tug, and it being decided the evening before that the race should be rowed at 8.30 next morning if suitable water could be had, much disappointment was expressed at the non-appearance on time of Sheriff Harding, the referee. After considerable delay he got aboard. By this time the water was getting considerably rougher, but it was decided that the tug should steam down to the starting point and the men should be called out. Five whistles were given at 8.40 as the signal. As soon as the last whistle was sounded Ross was seen to step in his boat at the starting point, stripped to the buff. A short blue trunk and a white handkerchief tied around his head was his attire. He looked in splendid condition, and his appearance indicated that he was prepared for a tough contest. Cheers and shouts went up from those who were on the tug. After being informed that Toronto had won choice of position, he objected to the way the buoys were placed, stating that the buoy from which he was to start was not in line with the other. Hanlan made his appearance about twenty minutes after Ross, rowing out leisurely from his boat-house at Torryburn Creek. He wore a sleekless blue shirt, blue trunks, and had on a scarlet skull cap. By this time the water was getting considerably rougher than when Ross made his appearance. The referee, seeing that the water showed every disposition to become more unsuitable, decided on calling the men into line immediately. This was done, but Ross and some of his backers objected—Ross stating that when he came out on the course the water was fit, but that then he could not row his boat. Hanlan said that if Ross wanted two lengths of a start he would give it to him. The referee said as he considered the water, though not perfectly smooth, yet smooth enough for all practical purposes, he would return from the position held by him, owing to the objections of Ross.

Everything for a race now looked bright. Both men went paddling around; Hanlan at one time lurching up to his starting stake and laying back in his boat, and at another time practising starts. He appeared to be anxious to row in any water and was only waiting for the word.

Mr. Davis, judge for Hanlan, informed him that the referee had resigned and ordered him to pull out to the boat-house. Ross was then called to the starting stake and everything for the time being was in a muddle. The judge's boat then steamed up to Appleby's and the referee went ashore and afterwards went to the city. It was plain that no race would take place in the forenoon at least.

The train which had come out in the morning loaded with rowers was soon on the way to the city with a large number, while others stayed around with the expectation of the time being set for the race.
