(Special to The Telegraph.) Montreal, Sept. 23.—The directors of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company today issued a supplementary report showing the damages they think they have a right to secure from the Dominion Coal Company and the net earnings for the first quarter of the new fiscal year.

"As regards relations with the Dominion Coal Company, your directors are still ready to forward any arrangement which is just and equitable and likely to lead to a permanent settlement of the important question of coal supply, but anything that may be done in that respect should be under the control of the directors to whom the welfare of the Steel Company is the first consideration.

mountains and glaciers, we decided to operate a descent. Then the motor was stopped and drifting with the wind, we found ourselves over a glacier on which we decided to land. The descent was not an easy one, but by great good fortune we were able to reach the ground without materially injuring the frame and mechanism of the ship.

NO DEFENCE IN COLLINS' CASE

(Special to The Telegraph.)

Hopewell Cape, Sept. 23.—Contrary to general expectation, the defence in the Collins trial offered no evidence. Hon. Mr. McKeown began his closing address to the jury after luncheon at 2.15. It was raining all day and the court room was well filled with interested spectators. Mr. McKeown spoke for nearly three hours. His address was an able and eloquent plea for his client. During the whole time of its delivery the prisoner in the dock sat with flushed face and absorbed manner. At times he would lean back, and again with both arms on lid of dock resting his chin in his hands.

FATAL SHOOTING ACCIDENT NEAR
GRAND FALLS

Grand Falls, N. B., Sept. 19.—A fatal shooting accident occurred in Enishone, near here, last evening. Yesterday afternoon Albert took his rifle with him to a back field, where he was working and where deer were in the habit of frequenting. He was returning home near dusk he took a walk in the adjoining woods, evidently expecting to run across a deer or moose. However, about 7 o'clock the report of a rifle was heard by his family and when he did not return later, a search was instituted. He was found lying dead with a bullet hole through his breast. It is supposed that he tripped and fell and the shock of the rifle in striking the ground discharged the cartridge. Apparently he was carrying the rifle across his shoulder, holding it by the barrel, and was shot after he fell. The deceased, who is a son of Eli Albert, leaves a wife and family, and general regret is expressed over the sad occurrence.

GENERAL BOOTH The great captain who began his American tour in this city Saturday has confounded all the prophets who sought to measure his force and his mission when both were new to the world. He began seemingly poor, but really rich through his high power, his great constructive ability and his dauntless courage.

Here in the city honored by being the first in him to speak on this occasion, General Booth will receive a great welcome and an earnest hearing. This city, like every community he is to visit, will benefit greatly by his presence and his message.

REGULATION OR SOCIALISM Some 80,000,000 of Americans have just learned on the best of authority that Standard Oil's profits in some cases run up to 1,000 per cent, and that Mr. Rockefeller's personal takings during a few years amounted to $125,000,000.

It is not too much to predict that the next general election campaign the country will witness will be the most bitter and the most exciting in its history. There is nothing in that to be surprised at or complained of, for they are the great spending departments, and the matters with which they have to deal stand in close relation to the comfort and well-being of the whole community.

Just as Mr. Rockefeller's amazing profits are proclaimed throughout the country, thoughtful Americans are discussing a remarkable article dealing with these questions which appears in the current Atlantic Monthly. It is from the pen of Prof. E. A. Ross, who fills the chair of Sociology in the University of Wisconsin. He is not a Socialist. Like Mr. Roosevelt he would like to disarm that movement. He believes that the great business interests must obey public opinion as voiced by progressive laws governing the business world.

It is not likely that Canada will have to submit to unrestricted Japanese immigration until it is strong enough to fight Japan. It is not well, all the same, to be in any great hurry about denouncing treaties, Ottawa, London and Tokio, must give the immigration problem calm consideration. If London and Ottawa agree, Tokio is not likely to prove very unreasonable.

NOTHING DOING As was expected from the first the Minister of Public Works is unable to persuade Dr. Pugsley to follow up his Fairview generalities by specific statements. Dr. Pugsley explains that court proceedings must be begun within a year after the election. The Minister of Public Works evidently made a great mistake or used very sound judgment in waiting until three years after the election before asserting that he had knowledge which, if the only possible antagonist of Great Britain in Europe has been hopelessly discredited in naval strength, and the German naval programme, with which panic mongers have been busy of late, will require fourteen years for its completion.

LOOKING FOR A WAY OUT American journals in surprising number are discussing the plan of abandoning the Philippines, selling them or allowing the Filipinos to shift for themselves with the chance that Japan would take them in hand in a few years. Since the United States bought the islands, one reviewer argues, it has a right to sell them, a proposition not easily demonstrated.

WORDS IN SEASON A few words of counsel are addressed to Hon. Messrs. Pugsley and Graham by the Toronto Globe, chief newspaper spokesman for the government. The Globe says the general election "is only a few months off" and that when it comes the administration will be tried on its merits.

A PRIVATE SOLDIER Though reduced from the cabinet to the ranks Mr. Henry R. Emmerson is by no means discouraged or disheartened, if we are to judge by his speech in Westmorland yesterday. Mr. Emmerson at one time filled a large place in the public eye, he had a great many good friends, and his political opinions were widely sympathized with.

MILITARISM AND THE JAPANESE The Canadians who believe Japanese immigration should be restricted to narrow limits are much more numerous than those who explain just how the desired exclusion is to be brought about. From several quarters there is a demand for the immediate abrogation of our treaty with Japan. The Dominion appears to have signed that treaty without sufficient examination of its probable results, but it will not denounce it in the same careless fashion.

WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO DO ABOUT IT? Dramatic force, wisdom, keen knowledge of and great love for men, success—these are other things make General Booth a figure who attracts large audiences and who moves them deeply.

"The Dominion Trades Congress wants the Canadian-Japanese treaty abrogated. 'Japan may want the treaty obrogated. 'A nation that wants treaties abrogated must be prepared to back up its wants with the means of compelling respect for its wishes.

"Canada is one of the most helpless nations on earth in her lack of ways and means to support the demands of her diplomacy with the strength of her people. 'Militarism may be a hydra-headed monster. The Trades Congress has opposed military drill in the schools. Apparently its ideal is a nation of sheep. Canada, without either military power or naval strength, so closely approximates to the ideal that this country should not be either insistent or vociferous in its demands for the abrogation of treaties.

Hawke will receive with proper enthusiasm the announcement that Mr. Emmerson and his party in Westmorland are wedded for life and that even in death they shall not be divided. Politicians, one is persuaded, do not think enough about the weightier aspects of existence. It is well that the levity of their mental attitude should be corrected from time to time by one who considers not only the here but the hereafter.

BRITAIN'S LONG LEAD A study of the naval construction programme of the leading sea powers shows that in 1908 Great Britain will have a squadron of seven ships of the Dreadnought type, and that no other nation will be in a position to overtake her even by the most strenuous activity and expenditure. The New York Journal of Commerce concludes that Britain's commerce, her various alliances, and her great naval supremacy combine to make up an influence for peace far more powerful than the world has ever known.

$60,000 AMHERST CHURCH DEDICATED

Rev. Dr. Carman Preached at Both Services at New Methodist Edifice.

Amherst, N. S., Sept. 22.—The magnificent church building just completed by the Methodists of Amherst was formally opened and dedicated today. Rev. Dr. Carman, superintendent of the Methodist churches of Canada, was the preacher both morning and evening. The afternoon service was one of peculiar interest, being the unveiling of a large and handsome memorial window erected in memory of the late Rev. Wm. Isaac Black, the founder of Methodism in the maritime provinces. The church is of stone and cost about $60,000 and is one of the finest Protestant churches in eastern Canada. The First Sportsman—"I see they started shooting on the Moors before the Twelfth this season." The Second Sportsman—"Eh? Who? Where?" The First Sportsman—"Why, the French at Cooleshan."—"The Sketch. The Source of Crime. "How came you to this wretched place, where both bars predominate? What crime brought you to this disgrace And sentenced you to such a fate? The visitor in pity cried; And as he passed the convict spoke: "It was," and here he convulsed and sighed, "The puddings that my wife did make." "And you," the visitor returned, "What awful crime sent you to jail?" The convict's eyes instantly burned. But yet he did not flinch nor quail. "Come here," he whispered, "bend down low, The awful truth I'll not deny: It was," ah, crushing was the blow, "My wife's cast-iron apple pie." Then spoke the third: "I'm here," he said, "Because I licked the proper food. My wife's attempts to make her bread much unimproved what was good And then," he shuddered, "twas her cake, And doughnuts that forced me to crime: I lay it to the truck she'd bake "That I am here doing time." Another said: "I married young; My wife was but a siddy girl. She had a most unruly tongue, And kept things in an constant whirl. But that is not why I am here. "Very well, 'Liza," said the third, "In shabby convict garb arrayed, You see," he sighed, "I lived a year Upon the biscuits that she made." —Leo Adams Express.

BY FRANK GLOVER HEATON

(Concluded From Last Week.)

THE delegate convention which was to nominate a candidate for Mayor was only two days distant, and Mayor Walters was the only candidate so far brought forward. The Mayor had not asked for second time nomination—but the movers that had used him so successfully during his first term insisted upon his making the race again. A thoroughly reliable puppet—one that could be depended upon in any crisis—is not easy to find, and so, though the Mayor's experience during his first two years had been anything but pleasant, he had been forced into the race.

The nervous apprehension that had taken such complete possession of him during the earlier months of his administration had not worn away, and the brandy bottle in the locked drawer of his desk was still in frequent requisition. The lines of the Mayor's face, always pronounced, were drawn more deeply than ever; the gray hairs had thickened perceptibly about his temples, and his eyes had acquired a furtive expression. The change wrought in the two years since his election were marked so strongly that more than once some friend or old-time associate had commented wondrously upon it.

On this, the last evening but one before the convention that was to renominate him for Mayor, Walters sat in his private office talking over with Chairman Clark the plans for the campaign.

"I guess, old man, that everything's all right this time," he said, leaning back in his big revolving chair. "Not one of the papers except the Tribune has said a word, and nobody pays any attention to the Trib, anyhow. Even the preachers have kept pretty still, for a wonder. And Stone, I haven't heard a word out of him so far, except his usual reform guff, and I guess he's called off his dogs—at least I haven't seen or heard anything of 'em lately."

"But what do you suppose it does look pretty good, for a fact—a whole lot better than I expected. But I'll not feel safe until you've been nominated and elected, and I don't mind saying that Stone's the one I'm worrying about."

"He had me pretty nervous for awhile, too," growled the Mayor, "with his spies and his secret meetings, and our men going to him, and all. And, by hell, I'll have his hide for the once for it, one of these days, too—mark my words. But Billings and Staub and the rest of 'em swore to me that they never tipped a word to him, in spite of his trying to trap 'em, and I believe 'em. So what's he going to do?"

He's got nothing to work on; he's tried his four flushing and lost out, and now Stone's done."

Clark nervously shredded a piece of paper as he rejoined:

"Maybe he's left off camping on our trail and maybe Billings and the others never told him anything. But I'm not going to begin crowing until I'm mighty certain of it. He threw a big scare into me, all right, and I've not forgotten it yet," with a half shiver.

The Mayor's feet came to the floor with a crash at the sound of a rap on the office door. A night watchman thrust his head in at the door, and, with an apologetic "Note foli de Mayah," admitted a messenger. Mayor Walters shrank back in his chair as the blue uniformed clerk crossed the floor. "Hell," he whispered, as Clark received and receipted for the note. "Hell!" he muttered again, as the chairman laid the message on the desk. With trembling hands he tore open the envelope and hurriedly glanced through the brusque note:

"To Charles Walters, Esq., Mayor:

"Sir—You will be kind enough to call on me at my office immediately on receipt of this. Matters of vital importance to yourself make it imperative that this request be not disregarded."

"JOHN STONE."

"Hell!" growled the Mayor for the third time, as he handed the note to Clark. The Chairman read it and looked blankly at the Mayor as he said:

"What are we going to do—stand pat?"

"How the hell can we stand pat?" snarled the Mayor. "I've got to go, but Clark, you're going to go with me. I'll not walk into that devil's office alone, no matter what happens. Undiminished now of the chairman, Walters opened the locked drawer, drew forth the hidden bottle and drank deep.

"All right, Charley, I'll go with you," Clark answered.

"But what do you suppose it does look pretty good, for a fact—a whole lot better than I expected. But I'll not feel safe until you've been nominated and elected, and I don't mind saying that Stone's the one I'm worrying about."

"He had me pretty nervous for awhile, too," growled the Mayor, "with his spies and his secret meetings, and our men going to him, and all. And, by hell, I'll have his hide for the once for it, one of these days, too—mark my words. But Billings and Staub and the rest of 'em swore to me that they never tipped a word to him, in spite of his trying to trap 'em, and I believe 'em. So what's he going to do?"

cluster of incandescent Stone was seated. Two men prominently identified with the "reform" movement and close friends of the young attorney occupied chairs near the table. As Mayor Walters and Chairman Clark entered the office Stone looked up and nodded.

His course bolstered up by the brandy he swallowed, the mayor strode across the room and plucked himself before Stone. His hat was pushed back on his head and the veins stood out on his flushed forehead. Without returning Stone's greeting he exclaimed:

"Well, young fellow, your infernal impudent note reached me and I'm here. Now, what is this vitally important matter you're in such a hurry to get me to be wasted on young cubs like you?"

"Very good of you to come," responded Stone, never raising his voice. "The business will require very little of your time, I assure you. It is simply that you place your signature to this statement."

"And what may be the purport of this precious statement?" asked Walters, ignoring the slip of paper held out to him by the young attorney.

"Simply this, as you do not seem inclined to read it," Stone answered. "It is your refusal to permit your name to come before the convention and a declaration to accept the nomination if, in spite of this, it should be tendered you; that is all."

"For a moment Mayor Walters stood speechless. Then he burst into a torrent of profanity. His face purple and his frame quivering with rage, he howled:

"I'll see you damned first! Sign your infernal paper? No! I don't care what he is doing, and he thinks he does. You thought you had a smooth scheme cooked up, and you're not, you sneaking bunch of four flushes, didn't you? Bluff me into withdrawing and have an open field for yourself, hey? That's what you've been planning for—trying to gumshoe around and find out something from me, a man who's been in a chair or any of your crowd. Oh, I know all about your talks with Billings and Staub and the rest of them. But you got fooled, you infernal pup—you fell down, didn't you? And now you've fallen down again. What do I care for you and your spies? To hell with you, John Stone—to hell with the whole bunch of your four flushes!"

The Mayor's voice raised to a frenzied scream as he poured forth his stream of vituperative defiance. Through it Stone's face retained its imperturbable smile, and as Walters paused, out of breath, he said quietly:

"Have you quit?"

"The young attorney's calmness lashed the older man to renewed fury, and he raged about the narrow confines of the room, hurling curses and threats at the three men who sat so calmly at the table, until at last from very weakness he was forced to desist. Then Stone spoke again.

"If you have quit under any circumstances, permit yourself to be persuaded to act in a manner contrary to the statement you will sign—you will remove yourself permanently from further participation in or part in the politics of the city."

"I will not!" raged Walters. "Come on, Clark; he's crazy. Let's get out of here and start for the door."

"Just a minute, Mayor Walters," in Stone's calm voice. "I neglected to say that in case you persist in your refusal I have other papers that I will sign for you, and perhaps the Grand Jury and others, will be more than pleased to publish."

"What do you mean?" snarled the Mayor, whirling about, while on Clark's face was stamped an expression of dawning apprehension.

"What do you mean?" Walters asked, calmly as ever, as he drew from an inside pocket a bundle of documents folded and secured with a stout tape. Walters approached the table, where under the glare of the lights, he could read the endorsements on the backs of the documents.

"Affidavit of George Billings in relation to the passage by the City Council of the franchise ordinance of the Southern Railway."

This was what he read inscribed boldly across the top of the first of the documents. As Stone turned down one after another of the papers and the Mayor read the endorsements, the color fled from his face and his eyes became fixed on the matter of the Gas Trust's extended franchise, the third was endorsed. "Affidavit of Adolph Staub in the matter of the water company's application for franchise, the fourth read. And a fifth and sixth and seventh and more, each properly witnessed and bearing the seal of a notary.

Walters sank back in his chair. Every vestige of color had vanished from his face and his body seemed visibly to shrink within its clothes. His eyes stared in a terrified stare on the papers gripped in Stone's hand, he muttered:

"This is a trap—some—where did you get 'em, I say? Billings and Staub and the rest of 'em swore to me they never told you a thing. Where did you get those affidavits?"

"Mr. Billings and the others probably did tell you they had not told me anything—perhaps I should have done the same in their place," said Stone, his voice calm as ever. "But you see the affidavits, I assure you they have been seen by no one but myself and if you act as a sensible man and withdraw from the mayoralty one shall see them. But if you do not they go tonight to the newspapers."

Again he pushed the announcement of withdrawal across the table toward the Mayor. Walters gazed at him as if fascinated, while the stout stood out in huge drops on his forehead.

"But, Stone, and I've got to run a pleading tone, 'this'll ruin me. I've got to run—I can't quit. You don't know it all, Stone. I tell you I've got to run or be ruined."

"You'll be ruined just as sure as you do run," came the answer, while Clark, white to the lips, urged "Sign it and quit, Charley. He's got us. I was afraid of him all along. I'd told you how it'd be."

"But think of my wife, Stone. Think what a blow this'll be to her."

Stone's lips curled in a sarcastic smile. Not in the memory of the oldest society member had the names of Mr. and Mrs. Walters been coupled in the newspapers. For eleven months out of the year the Mayor's wife was visiting in the south, east or west—and the plea followed:

"Then give me time to see to the—see some of my friends," Walters begged, mopping his forehead with a hand that trembled so that he could scarcely hold the handkerchief.

"Not a minute," said Stone, and there was a note of decision in his indomitable voice. "Your signed announcement withdrawing from the race goes to the newspapers within the hour or I personally will see that these papers"—tapping the bundle of folded affidavits—"are placed in the hands of the different managing editors tonight. That's final." And he leaned back and regarded Walters steadily.

Shaking, almost whimpering with mingled terror, rage and the tumult of emotions that possessed him, Walters reached for the little, fateful slip of paper.

"You're a hard man, John Stone—hard as your name," he whispered, "but you've got me and I can't help myself. I'll sign. God help me, I've got to; I'm too old to go to the penitentiary. With Billings and the whole crowd gone back on me there's nothing else for me to do."

His hand shook until the signature at the bottom of the slip looked as if it might have been written by one half palsied, but it was the unmistakable signature of Charles Walters. To give the announcement added force the paper was pushed over to Clark for signature as witness.

As Clark and the Mayor left the little office Walters, covered and completely broken, sobbed:

"He's done it, Ed—he said he'd get me and he's done it, and I called him a four flusher."

The two men passed down the corridor down the stairs and out into the night. As the footfalls of Walters and Clark turned away Stone drew a deep breath and turned to the two friends who had been silent spectators of the brief drama.

"It was a lucky thing that the Council junket came just at this time," he said while a smile hovered about his mouth.

"Why lucky—what do you mean?"

"Why, it took Billings, Staub, Perival and the whole crowd out of town—they're a thousand miles away right now. If they had been here I couldn't have got away with this business as I did."

Taking the bundle of folded papers from his pocket Stone tore it across and carefully flung the fragments on the table. With a gasp of amazement the man at his right picked up the uppermost document, ripped it into two, and unfolded one of the fragments. His eyes opened wide as he glanced at it. Then he gave a long whistle of bewildered astonishment as he looked up and met the quizzical gaze of Stone's cool gray eyes.

"Haven't Walters and his crowd always called you a four flusher?" he queried.

"What if he had known—what if he had known?" And he looked the admiration he could find no words for.

"But he didn't know, and he couldn't find out," smiled Stone. "It was a four flush, but it was just as I knew it would. Yes," as the other unfolded piece after piece of the papers, "they're all alike—they're all just the same."

The papers, torn and scattered over the table top, were properly indorsed, witnessed and sealed on the backs, but inside the sheets were absolutely blank.

THE END.

THOUSANDS HEAR HEAD OF SALVATION ARMY

General Booth, at 78, Speaks for More Than Three Hours in One Day

Opera House Thronged at Meetings, Morning, Afternoon and Evening—Vigorous Story of the Success of the Army—Fine Staff Band Reaches the City—Busy Programme for Today.

St. John caught the Hallelujah spirit Sunday and General Booth was the centre of interest. The general himself, 'bought in his seventy-ninth year, was one of the hardest worked men in the city, as he addressed three large meetings, speaking in all about three hours and a quarter, and yet he did not show fatigue, although his voice was weaker than when he was here last. There was good attendance at the morning meeting in the Opera House and the afternoon and evening meetings hundreds were turned away from the doors.

Saturday was a quiet day for the general, though in the evening he led a meeting for soldiers and ex-soldiers in the new barracks, at which forty-seven repentant sinners came forward to the mercy seat.

On Saturday morning General Booth gave an interview to the representatives of the afternoon papers and at noon held a conference with Col. McIntyre, who arrived from New York to complete arrangements for the general's visit to the United States. The afternoon was also spent in business of a similar nature. From 7 p. m. to 9 p. m. the general attended a mass meeting of the representatives of the army in the new citadel, Charlotte street. Sunday the three meetings in the Opera House practically filled up the time.

A Fine Band.

A most favorable impression was created Saturday night and Sunday by Commissioner Coombs' staff band which arrived here Saturday evening in honor of the general's visit. Saturday night about 10 o'clock the band gave half an hour's programme on the south side of King square, under direction of Major Harry Morris.

There are twenty-one pieces and the band plays remarkably well. In one of the numbers was included a euphonium solo and it was given in finished style by the soloist, who is a son of Col. Pugmire. After two selections the bandmen sang 'Got Salvation and Be Happy. It was arranged in parts, sung without accompaniment and was given faultlessly. Hear-the reason they did not want to do anything unpleasant for His sake.

They thought it was perfectly proper for Christ to die to ransom the world, but they were slow to give their time or their money or their children to God's service. The world was filling up with backsliders. They professed but went back to sin. They had the religion of the passions or the worship of Mammon. In so many words they "chucked it" because they had not the right thing, the genuine article.

The general then enumerated the substitutes which many found instead of true religion. Some did not get beyond the theory, he said.

They acquired a knowledge of the majesty of God, the finished work of heaven and hell, but what good was the knowledge without the reality in their own hearts?

Others again let ceremony take the place of religion. "Of what benefit was form unless it brought a realization of religion to the heart? That seemed to be the religion of hell."

"I know lots of men who went through forms all their lives and were damned at last."

Some people got no further than profession. True Christians would profess Christ but it was possible to have profession without possession. There could be no satisfaction in this. Others built their hopes on morality. They kept the commandments but this was not religion. In Japan, which he had visited recently, were hundreds of thousands of moral people who made no pretence of being Christians. "If I have no interest in the Blood of the Lamb my religion is a mockery, a delusion, and a snare. Some missed the feeling of satisfaction through uncertainty. There was no comfort for the soul who said, 'Maybe there is a God, or a heaven or a hell. There is no satisfaction for the dying soul who is wondering would angels carry him to heaven or would devils drag him down to hell.'"

Some people never get past past longing for religion. They said "I wish and desire and hope and long to be good" and imagine themselves very religious, but these did not have the true feeling of satisfaction. Other classes were those who felt they ought to be good, those who were continually vowing, and those who lived on the memory of good actions on their part. All these were not satisfied, but thank God, there was a religion of satisfaction. "If you have it, hail Him with a thousand hallelujahs." To possess the satisfied feeling all that was necessary was to be conscious of the favor of God, be man-ter of self and feel benevolence and love for the rest of mankind. The terms were "Give up your sins and do what God would have you do," and these were alterable.

Afternoon Meeting.

Fully 2,000 attended the afternoon meeting. The general was closely followed and loudly applauded. In his direct style manner he laid down facts regarding the great organization of which he is the head and presented facts which gave some idea of the magnitude of the work being accomplished. Public opinion he declared favorable to the army and he thought had good reason to be from what had been accomplished.

When General Booth, with other officers, entered at 3 o'clock, the Opera House was crowded in every part, and he was greeted with a chorus of applause. Lieutenant Governor Hon. L. J. Tweedie was in the chair and on the platform were J. D. Robinson, M. P., leader of the provincial opposition; George Robertson, M. P., Mayor Saars, Aldermen J. B. M. Baxter, J. Willet, J. King Kelley, J. H. Sprout, E. B. Hamm, Rev. Camp, Rev. Chas. Comber, G. S. Mayne, Col. G. R. White, D. O. C. Mr. and Mrs. John F. Bullock and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bullock. Commissioner Coombs led the hymn and Col. David Lamb offered prayer.

In introducing General Booth, the lieutenant governor spoke of the occasion four years ago, when he presided at the general's meeting in St. John. At that time he had complimented the general that his eyes were not dimmed nor his natural force abated, and the same could be truly said of him today. With an apt quotation from Longfellow, the lieutenant governor closed by wishing the general welcome on behalf of the people of New Brunswick.

The Secret of Success.

When General Booth rose to speak it was some minutes before he could be heard, owing to the continued applause. His first words expressed thankfulness for the kindly reception given him whenever he visited St. John. Pasing on to his subject he said in part: "The subject, which I have given this afternoon is 'The Secret of Success of the Salvation Army.' The mere articulation of this theme suggests that we consider the army a success. I hope that no one will gather from this that we are doing any vain boasting. Instead of boasting of what we have done we regret that we have not done more."

"We do not wish to indicate that the army has been everywhere and at all times a complete and instant success. We are engaged in a real war, and in a war there are defeats as well as victories, and retreats and the same could be truly said of the army. We have had our setbacks, and all sorts of difficulties peculiar to that continent were met with. They were overcome, however, and today it is the unanimous opinion that the army has been a great benefit to the colonies, and the government are favorable to a grant of about 210,000 towards the social settlement scheme of the army."

"In the United States all kinds of opposition, misrepresentation and slander has been encountered and today the whole of that great nation looks with favor on the army, and I expect to be greeted by the president as his head should be."

"When I approached in the steamer that land described by poets as the land of the rising sun, I could not help feeling some trepidation for I am only human. After all, I expected a welcome from the soldiers of my army and their converts, but I was surprised when the whole nation from the emperor to the common people, whom I love most, rose to do me honor."

The Change in Germany.

"I could take you to nearly every country in the world and show you similar changes. I can not omit that solid German empire. When the king of the first entered Germany the police looked askance at us. They raked up forgotten laws which were never used, and they Berlin thousands strong under the protection of the police, and the emperor has showed his interest on my last visit."

"In the land that is so sacred to a city which has not done me honor. From the small towns and their acclaim to Oxford, where the highest degree was conferred upon me, and even to Buckingham Palace, from which the king of this great empire has expressed his interest, the Salvation Army is acknowledged to be a success."

"It may be asked why this honor and acknowledgment? What is there to warrant it? First there was the organization itself. It was so constructed and put together that earth and hell could hardly pull it apart. The question had often been asked: 'What would become of the Salvation Army when the general is dead?' To this I always reply, 'Don't worry, the general is not dead yet. The general has made his mind to live just as long as he can be of any use. If the angel of death should come tonight, however, the same message of electricity which would carry the news of his passing away around the world would take word of his successor. Arrangements, as complete as human mind could make them, have been made and the army is safe.'

A Wonderful Organization.

"When you ask it is worth while supporting? Is it worthy of existence? Remember the army is only in its infancy. Forty-two years ago I stood alone, and we braved earth and hell, saint and sinner, and came out ahead. Today our flag is in 33 countries and our territory is 12 different tongues. Other countries are clamoring for us to come but we cannot for want of men and money."

"We have 150,000 soldiers and 15,000 officers with 5,000 employees and 50,000 local members. We print 25 different newspapers in 17 different tongues. Our musicians number 20,000 and we have some of the best in the world, George Bernard Shaw, who may be regarded as an impartial critic, as he was not actuated by his love of religion, said that for religious music the Salvation Army were at the top of the tree. I will guarantee that you will

Young Dean Tells of Prisoner Showing Him a Lady's Gold Watch - Prof. Andrews Tells of Blood Stains on Door and Overalls - Sheriff Doubts Commode Was in Room When He Searched for Axe.

Hopewell Cape, Sept. 20 (Special)—Despite the fact that the third trial of Thomas F. Collins, charged with the murder of Mary Ann McAuley, is now proceeding, a new and interesting development may be expected tomorrow when Professor Andrews will again take the stand and give evidence of having tested a splinter of wood from the closet door in the hallway of the late Father McAuley's house with the result that he has found blood upon it.

William J. Dean and his son, William Dean, of St. John, arrived tonight and it is expected will be put on the stand tomorrow. William Dean was the young man who drove Collins from Fairville to Musquash on a load of lumber and who was with him with other witnesses in John Martin's house at Spruce Lake.

Three sessions were held today, the whole of the evening session was taken up with the reading of the late Father McAuley's evidence. The court adjourned at 10.30 p. m. and will resume at 9.30 o'clock tomorrow morning. The trial will probably be concluded before next Tuesday.

Morning Session. The first witness this morning, Michael Teahan, was recalled and his examination concluded. He stated that Mary Ann McAuley's body had been found in the hallway of the late Father McAuley's house, and that he had seen the splinter of wood from the closet door in the hallway of the late Father McAuley's house with the result that he has found blood upon it.

usual for lights to be seen there at that time of night. Mrs. Mary Morris, to whom Mrs. Williamson handed the $30 found in Mary Ann McAuley's room, gave the same evidence as on the last trial.

Mabel Williamson, who found the axe behind the commode in the priest's bedroom Dec. 27 while acting as his housekeeper, again took the stand today and made a statement in the court house and she related the manner of the discovery.

A New Witness. James Doyle, uncle of one of the previous witnesses, a new witness, told about the discovery of the axe in the room Monday before the body of the murdered housekeeper was found. He saw a man who looked like the prisoner getting out of one team into another near the priest's house.

Catherine Duffy, who was with James Doyle and Father McAuley the night the body was found in the woodpile, was next called and described the events of that melancholy time as on previous occasions. Detective Killen told the story of the capture of Collins and the subsequent drive to St. John. The statement made by the prisoner during the examination by Mr. McKewen was in evidence and counsel for the defence having no objection it was read. The solicitor-general asked the witness if the prisoner told him that the gold watch was to be found. He said he had and as a consequence of this he went to Lake Umbagog and searched the bushes from the main road and the Lake but could not find it. The search for the watch along the track and the unsuccessful search for the watch at Father McAuley's house were also told.

Sheriff Lynds also told about searching the priest's house for the axe and not finding it. Under cross-examination by Mr. McKewen he said in his opinion that the search was a thorough one. It did not, he said, seem possible to him that the commode could have been in the priest's room, as he had no recollection of it.

Wm. Heffernan next told the story of what happened in the hotel at Musquash the day Collins left in such a hurry. The court adjourned at 5.45 till 10 o'clock Monday morning. His honor ordered adjournment till the afternoon of the jury wished to attend service any tomorrow he should allow it. If the occupant of the pulpit or desk, after the hearing, should make any reference to the case they must get up and walk out. He also said that if any of the arguments should receive any attention on the case they should hand them to the sheriff and an investigation would be held.

The crown expects to rest its case Monday forenoon. At the morning session Prof. Andrews was the first witness. He proved that the silver cut from the broken door by Jacob W. Steeves, a jurymen, at the last trial, had blood upon it. He also proved that the stains on the overalls and mat were blood stains.

Peter D. LeBlanc, watchmaker, testified that Miss McAuley left her gold watch with him in the evening of August 21st. Under cross-examination by Mr. McKewen he said that as far as he knew Fr. McAuley had made no search in the house up to the time he drove to Williamson's.

Hopewell Cape via Albert, N. B., Sept. 21—Fourteen witnesses were examined in the Collins trial today and the crown expects to rest its case Monday forenoon. Contrary to expectation the evidence of Wm. Dean, who went on the stand in the forenoon, was devoid of sensational details.

In the afternoon Sheriff Lynds, of Albert county, referring to the search for the axe in Father McAuley's house, said he was of the opinion that the axe was in the room, he said he could not understand its being there as he had no recollection of it.

The solicitor-general then called William Dean. The evidence of this witness had looked forward to with a good deal of interest and considerable expectation as to its nature. The explanation of his absence from the previous trials which he gave was that he had not been served with a subpoena. He said he first met Collins one morning in the fall of 1906 shortly before he was arrested, two miles and a half from Musquash. At that time he was traveling from St. John carrying a piece of wood which he was taking to the mill. He said he saw Collins in the street and he saw him go into the house of the late Father McAuley.

FATHER GAYNOR ASSERTS INNOCENCE. Makes Lengthy Statement Relative to Matters of Recent Occurrence - Bishop Casey Declines to Discuss It.

Rev. W. C. Gaynor yesterday gave out a statement to the afternoon newspapers relative to the recent matters affecting him. His Lordship Bishop Casey was asked last evening if he would say anything after reading the statement but he declined to discuss it. The main portion of the statement is as follows: "You know that I am not an extreme churchman. I believe there is good in all men, and I have endeavored to carry out this idea throughout my ministry, and keep in friendly touch not only with the members of my own church, but with many members of other churches, and have taken part in any general work for the benefit of the community, such as the Lord's Day Alliance, and other associations, that were formed for the advancement of the moral and spiritual good of the citizens. This course of conduct has not been looked upon with great favor by some of the members of my church, but I considered it to be in the best interests of those for whom I was bestowing my ministry. It has been on the most friendly relations with the ecclesiastical authorities, and have not had any reason to complain of their conduct with reference to my ministry. I realized that my liberal views were not altogether in accordance with those of some in higher authority. "When the rumors to which you refer were first circulated I was taking some holidays. I was advised by those whom I thought were in touch with the head of the church in this city that I might leave the city for a few weeks, until the matters blew over, while my friends endeavored to get at the bottom of the matter, and ascertain the source of the rumors, as no one at that time suggested to me that there was any truth in them. In accordance with the views of my church, I went to my sister at Presque Isle, and was absent not quite three weeks, and returned to my home at Spruce Lake. I was surprised to find that I had been suspended. This, I thought, should not have been done in my absence—while it was my duty to be in my home, and where any communication would reach me. "As you are aware, many stories were circulated with reference to financial matters, as well as those touching more closely the moral character. "Some of these rumors were in regard to statements which I said were made by certain parties with reference to my conduct, and which rumors were interwoven with reference to financial matters. What the stories were, or others that the rumors in regard to the way they were made, was true or not, it was almost impossible to ascertain. "Under the advice of my counsel, I was taken to get at the bottom of the rumors. I received word that the government had been furnished with a copy of the charges made against me, and that I was to be held responsible for them, and who had no foundation upon which to rest them. "Having arrived at this stage, my comment felt that the next thing to be done was to apply to the bishop for a copy of the charges made against me, upon which my action was taken, and requesting that I be allowed to see them. I was in the best interests of the church. I do feel that in these days, when British freedom is something more than a name, and when no man is allowed to be condemned without having his accusers to face, and knowing what comments are made against him, it is my duty to be furnished with a copy of the charges. However, I do not wish to say anything at all that might be considered as a challenge against the bishop. I believe he is acting under the advice of those who think it right that I should be, in the dark, and such being the case, I can only state to you that I consider it unfair to me. "You will understand how I am handicapped in clearing myself from the charges made. I do not know, excepting what has been stated in the rumors, who made the charges. I have no knowledge of what those charges were, excepting from the same rumors. I desire to say that an entirely innocent of the charges made, and leave it to the public to say whether I have been fairly treated or not."

THOUSANDS HEAR HEAD OF SALVATION ARMY. English people may have shown them that here they may find homes and food and the things they need. "In the last few years we have sent 40,000 people out here and we hope to send many more. The supply is only limited to the number of people who are able to meet the requirements, because a large number of the settlers most desired are poor. About 15 years ago I pleaded with the Dominion government and argued with most of the other colonial governments that they were mistaken in wanting young farmers with 2500 or so, what was wanted was men who were willing to work and who were willing to settle on the land and support the wants of their families. Therefore I was not successful in my efforts. A great population is limited by the funds available and there is need of co-operation between the government and the army, so that the money which is expended in the Dominion can be used to the best advantage. We are limited by the amount of money, the want of men to carry on this work. Every man, woman and child who does so with every arrangement made for their moral and religious welfare as well as their needs in the matter of earning a livelihood. "We are limited by our determination not to send any who are not acceptable to Canada, and only those who will be creditable to the Salvation Army, and who will be likely to obtain a livelihood in the Dominion. "Asking regarding any new projects that he might have on hand, the general said: "I have new projects in the way of colonization and in many other directions but they are not ready for publication yet. We are always doing something new. "We have Japan now and are hoisting the flag in Korea and looking at China, and a step by step we are using our people for the care of their pauper and criminal population. Before I left London I received word that the government had been furnished with a copy of the charges made against me, and that I was to be held responsible for them, and who had no foundation upon which to rest them. "Having arrived at this stage, my comment felt that the next thing to be done was to apply to the bishop for a copy of the charges made against me, upon which my action was taken, and requesting that I be allowed to see them. I was in the best interests of the church. I do feel that in these days, when British freedom is something more than a name, and when no man is allowed to be condemned without having his accusers to face, and knowing what comments are made against him, it is my duty to be furnished with a copy of the charges. However, I do not wish to say anything at all that might be considered as a challenge against the bishop. I believe he is acting under the advice of those who think it right that I should be, in the dark, and such being the case, I can only state to you that I consider it unfair to me. "You will understand how I am handicapped in clearing myself from the charges made. I do not know, excepting what has been stated in the rumors, who made the charges. I have no knowledge of what those charges were, excepting from the same rumors. I desire to say that an entirely innocent of the charges made, and leave it to the public to say whether I have been fairly treated or not."

On the road from East Auburn to Turner (Me.) there is a chicken village, for there are a dozen little white peaked-roofed houses, and the house nearest to the road is built to represent a church. The steeple is as perfect as if the tiny building were really intended for a place of worship. Those miniature houses are nothing more or less than chicken coops.
