Nothing evidences that more clearly than the Federal Business Development Bank. It wants to say on the one hand that it is a bank of last resort meeting the needs of small businesses in a way commercial banks do not, and on the other hand it wants to say that it is competing. It cannot have it both ways, Sir. Inevitably there is a conflict in goals. However, because of this privilege, Crown corporations enjoy a special relationship.

In the minute or two I have left, I would like to discuss the company to which I referred earlier, Canertech Inc. of Canada. That company sent out a news release some time ago announcing that Wood Gundy is conducting a survey of all energy companies in Canada and wants those companies to provide information to Canertech so that Canertech can help EMR provide an information base. To whom will that information base be provided? Will it be provided to companies like Pacific Enercon which exist to provide competition to private enterprise companies? The Government, by way of a Wood Gundy report, is seeking information from private companies in order to help government companies compete with private companies. That, Sir, creates unfairness in the marketplace.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. Order, please. I hate to interrupt the Hon. Member but unfortunately his time has expired.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I wish I were able to conclude the comments of my hon. colleague. I too am pleased to rise to participate in the debate of this important Bill and this important subject and to face the problem of saying all I want to say about Crown corporations within a ten-minute time limit.

Bill C-24, known as the Crown corporations Bill, has been a long time in its making. The making of this Bill depicts the Government for what it is. It is flawed, ineffective and inoperative. Many here will recall that in 1979 the Progressive Conservative Government, in less than six months, introduced a Crown corporations Bill which followed very closely upon the very critical Lambert Commission report. We introduced that legislation so that it could be studied, improved and acted upon. But the Liberal-NDP coalition destroyed that opportunity. Almost five years later, the Government comes forward with this version of a Crown corporations Bill.

Quite frankly, Bill C-24 has virtually no chance of passing and receiving Crown approval, Royal Assent, during the present session. It has been introduced to deflect criticism of the fact that the Government has done nothing to rein in Crown corporations over the past five years. The last thing the Government wants is for the truth to come out about Canadair, de Havilland, Air Canada, the post office and a great number of other corporations already mentioned by my colleagues in their comments.

One way to keep the true story hidden is to introduce legislation at the last minute and then blame the Opposition for not passing it. We have a piece of legislation which promises much and delivers little. The issue is and clearly has been for several years that of accountability—accountability in, of and for Crown corporations.

Lawyers will always caution a client to read the fine print before a document or contract is signed. No lawyer would ever condone or recommend the signing of a contract before they saw or read the fine print. The kind of fine print we are talking about here is, of course, regulations. This Bill, with respect to almost every section of substance, allows the details to be written in later through regulations. Those regulations are subject to change at the whim of the responsible Minister.

Canadians may as well ask what the point of the legislation is if Crown corporations are going to be exempted from its provisions by regulation. It is worth noting as well that some 100 Crown corporations already in existence will not even be touched by this legislation. Their exemptions came early indeed. Neither does this Bill give Parliament any control over the creation of subsidiaries of Crown corporations, or the creation of a new or other subsidiary corporation where they are permitted in existing legislation. We will have proliferation in the growth of those corporations providing a safe sanctuary for retired or defeated Liberals in the years to come.

We on this side of the House have become increasingly annoyed by the growth of patronage appointments. Ability, competence and merit do not seem to matter any more. If there are not enough jobs to go around, the Government simply expands the creation of a good number of other sinecures.

This legislation would assist by redefining the board of directors of Crown corporations so that those boards would have a real and responsible purpose. In the private sector, the board of directors has a responsible chore; they have responsibility to the shareholders and to their directors. But here Cabinet would appoint the chief executive officer, set his tenure, fix his remuneration, and so it goes with the chairman of the board. The Cabinet would dictate dividend policy and, indeed, literally make all corporate decisions without the necessity of consulting with the board of directors affixed to that particular Crown corporation. What a farce! It is a long way around to provide a convenient resting place for government appointees.

It is interesting to note as well that Bill C-25, establishing the Canada Development Investment Corporation, allows the board of directors to appoint the chairman and the chief executive officer. Bill C-24 gives that responsibility to Cabinet. I am glad to see that there are now about five Government Members present. Confusion reigns on that side, as is so clearly evident among the present crop of leadership candidates.

Canadians are well familiar with the sinkhole some Crown corporations have become, filled in with taxpayers' money. The post office goes on losing hundreds of millions of dollars a year. VIA Rail is accomplishing the same feat. Canadair and de Havilland have shocked the nation through their losses. The Canadian taxpayer is left to wonder what really is going on in this Government. Someone has to be accountable for the excesses that have taken place. Accountability should be the cornerstone of any legislation dealing with Crown corporations. Government Members say "Trust us". The Government record speaks for itself—Loto Canada, Petrofina and the election promise of "Elect us and the price of gasoline will go down". Bill C-24 is simply an open invitation to continue this Liberal tradition.

My constituents are well and truly fed up with newspaper headlines screaming about multimillion dollar losses by Crown corporations. Controls and accountability are a must. The Government has been promising action since 1977. If Bill C-24 is the best that the Government can do after seven years, then move over and let us take its place.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, like most Canadians I do not know a lot about Crown corporations, but I have a number of impressions in my mind and I have tried to rank them in what I consider some sort of order.

The first thing that comes to mind is that it appears there is a large number of Crown corporations which keep proliferating one after the other in leaps and bounds. In 1968 there were 38 Crown corporations; in 1980 there were 130, but there were 213 subsidiaries and 126 associate corporations. An example of how these corporations grew so fast is the Canada Lands Corporation which was formed in 1982. Since that time it has spawned five subsidiaries. It reminds me of asexual reproduction, where bacteria split in half and then those two halves split again and then split again. Before we know it, we have hundreds and hundreds of these corporations. The impression I get is that we do not know how many Crown corporations we have. We keep hearing that we have at least 400. I do not know if that is right or wrong, but I have never heard anyone stand up and tell us exactly how many Crown corporations there are in Canada.

Another impression I have is that Crown corporations continue to lose vast amounts of money. I am sure some of them probably make money, but we do not hear much about the ones that make money. We continue to hear about the huge sums of money that are poured into Crown corporations using taxpayers' dollars.

A third impression I have is that there is a vast build-up of debt charged to Crown corporations. Again, I have never seen a total or a figure. I have seen some figures, but I do not know how accurate they are. However, I do get the impression that there are billions and billions of dollars in debt piling up in Crown corporations.

The fourth impression I have is that there are a great man's people employed by Crown corporations. I believe I read one time that there were more people employed by Crown corporations than by the Public Service of the federal Government. That might not be accurate but it is the impression I have.

• (1220)

The fifth impression I have is that there is a problem with the auditing of Crown corporations as well as accountability and responsibility. When something goes wrong no one seems to be in charge. Everyone runs for cover. We do not know on whose desk the buck will finally wind up.

The sixth impression I have is that many of the objectives of Crown corporations could be better served by the private sector.

Those are some of the impressions I have of Crown corporations and I dare say they are representative of what many Canadians think of Crown corporations. I apologize to Hon. Members for not having made an in-depth study of this subject and for not having more accurate knowledge. In any event, I felt when this Bill came forth that any thinking government would want to correct all of these impressions. Surely it would be an excellent plank on which to win an election.

Looking at Bill C-24, it appears that it is not what we had hoped it would be. There are many things which are left undone. For example, let me quote from the report of the Auditor General for 1982 with respect to accountability:

> A major theme of my 1982 Annual Report was the accountability of Crown-owned corporations. With the exception of my predecessor's warnings about the state of government financial management in the mid-1970s, no issue involving my Office has captured more public attention than that of the accountability of these Crown-owned corporations. The reason is obvious. A lot of public money is at stake. The accountability framework for what I have referred to as this "sub-government" is inadequate.

On February 28 the Auditor General wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He was laudatory of the actions of the Prime Minister and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) for bringing forward this Bill. He said, and I quote:

> I recollect that last June I wrote you, expressing my concerns about the need for a more effective accountability framework for Crown-owned corporations. I think it therefore only appropriate that I write again now when there is such tangible evidence of action that will help to alleviate my concerns.
> May I be permitted to express my sincere thanks for the personal initiatives that you and members of your Cabinet have taken in this endeavour. I wish you and Mr. Gray smooth sailing in the House.

I do not think what the Auditor General really wanted is in this Bill. It seems as if there is much left to interpretation, and I do not believe it is very clear cut as to what the Auditor General's role is going to be as far as Crown corporations are concerned. I feel the Auditor General has settled for half a loaf and I wonder whether after hearing these debates over the past days, the Auditor General is still as satisfied with this legislation as he appeared to be in February.

As far as responsibility is concerned, Mr. Speaker, there is still no one responsible when it comes to this Bill. The Minister is certainly not responsible. It appears that the Cabinet is still taking the major role of responsibility and there are 30-odd Cabinet Ministers. Of course, as soon as they get into trouble, they are going to run for cover. I believe we are going to be in exactly the same position as we are at the moment. This Bill simply does not designate who is responsible when we get into a problem. Over and over in this Bill, Mr. Speaker, one sees that items are left to regulations and to discretion. That is simply not good enough when we are dealing with billions and billions of dollars and such a vast number of corporations. These things should be spelled out very definitely.

As far as the matter of proliferation is concerned, it seems as if an "end run" has been made around Parliament. Crown corporations are still going to be able to spin off subsidiaries and that is where the real growth is going to occur. On top of that, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other items which this Bill does not address, for instance, the privileges and immunities of Crown corporations. The matter of their immunity from the Combines Investigation Act has not been addressed in this Bill. The question of whether or not public servants should be allowed to sit on the boards of Crown corporations has not been addressed in this Bill, as well as the creation of any kind of parliamentary oversight committee, a watchdog type of thing for Crown corporations.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, the Bill is filled with half measures. It does not go as far as it should. It needs to be amended in many areas. As I said, I certainly do not profess to be any kind of an expert on Crown corporations, but I am unhappy with the Bill and I feel most thinking people in Canada would be as well. It is not a good enough Bill to correct the problems which Crown corporations have caused our country.

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations. I do not intend to go into this Bill clause by clause mainly because of lack of time. However, I will cover what I consider to be the most contentious parts of this particular Bill. I would first like to point out that the Bill is certainly not what the Government opposite purports it to be. Second, it is a travesty of errors and omission. It does nothing to change the present situation or the status quo regarding Crown corporations.

As a small-businessman, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the very survival of the day-to-day operations of my business relies mainly on accountability. That accountability, Mr. Speaker, I do not see in relationship to Crown corporations and this is what I feel Bill C-24 should provide. It should provide legislation which would demand this accountability, which would point out this accountability and enforce it.

Let me cover a few points related to this accountability factor. The Auditor General on numerous occasions has pointed out to the Government opposite the lack of accountability, but the Government opposite merely ignores it. I know the Auditor General can defend himself and does, but it should be pointed out that Bill C-24 just further neutralizes his position and Parliament's position.

I would like to dwell now on some of the more direct issues and why we in the Opposition oppose Bill C-24 in its present state. I take the example of Crown corporations such as de Havilland and Canadair. Most Canadians who look at these corporations see the financial disaster of the century. Canadian tax dollars have been, and continue to be, sunk into these sinking ships. Government approaches these corporations on a hit and miss basis, Mr. Speaker. The dollars which these corporations have swallowed up would have saved most of the small businesses which went bankrupt in 1982.

We are given the story that we are maintaining our technology by these investments. There is no one in this House, Mr. Speaker, who wishes to preserve technology more than we do. But at what cost? Not at the cost of national bankruptcy, Mr. Speaker. We as a Party and myself as an individual have spoken many times in this House on unemployment. I realize the importance of the jobs in these two Crown corporations, and I will do what I can to protect those jobs, as will other Hon. Members of my Party. However, we are jeopardizing these jobs, instead of protecting them, through a lack of accountability.

I would now like to look at Cabinet's role regarding Bill C-24. How does Cabinet deal with the disastrous performance of these Crown corporations? Do they bring in meaningful reform? Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. Instead, this Bill gives more control to Cabinet. Cabinet is supposed to be running this country and every economic indicator shows it is having a great deal of difficulty. Its members should spend their time running the country instead of trying to run these Crown corporations. Just as a personal observation, as a small-businessman I would not hire one of the members of the present Government to run or oversee any of my businesses, not even a peanut stand. Therefore, why should we give them this ultimate power under Bill C-24?

Under this Bill, Mr. Speaker, the Cabinet would acquire much greater authority to overrule a board of directors. It could appoint a board and then overrule them before they start. It can deny information to Parliament without explanation. In this its members are consistent, Mr. Speaker: they operate as a democratic dictatorship; they exempt certain Crown corporations from general provisions of the Bill. If Cabinet wants to have a sideline, start a little gimmick, the provisions are there. It can fine-tune the application of the Bill by making regulations that need not be disclosed to Parliament. That is what the Cabinet is responsible for, Mr. Speaker, not disclosing to Parliament what it should. These are clear impediments to accountability and I fear the result will be the inefficient running of Crown corporations.

The Cabinet adopted auditing methods such that Liberal-appointed patronage auditors will audit the performance of Liberal-appointed executives of these corporations, supervised by a Liberal Cabinet. This is like taking all the foxes and putting them in with the chickens. It is bad enough that Canadian taxpayers have to subsidize the fees and salaries of these patronage appointees, but must they pay the bill for their mismanagement?

What is Bill C-24 really? I suggest it is ominous, creeping socialism. The Liberal appointees go to the boards, collect their honorariums and do what the Government tells them to do. Cabinet appoints the vice-presidents of some Crown corporations such as Canada Post and CMHC, and then appoints the auditors. It makes and approves the by-laws and sets the dividend policy. If the vice-president, the auditor and the board of directors are all appointed by Cabinet, there is a conflict of interest. But they would not understand conflict of interest because that is the way they operate. No one in Crown corporations will speak out for fear of losing their jobs, so the losses continue to grow. Even if they do speak out, the Government says nothing. The Cabinet makes the final decision.

There must be individual ministerial responsibility, Mr. Speaker, but this Bill places responsibility with groups of Ministers. That is one reason these Crown corporations have staggering losses which continue to grow. I cannot repeat often enough that accountability is the problem, not reorganization through CDIC and super-Crown corporations which will only result in greater mismanagement and greater dollar losses.

Yesterday I listened to the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston). The questions he raises concerning the money lost in Crown corporations are serious. The losses are horrendous. When we see the tragedy and despair of youth unemployment, the opportunity cost of that money is unforgivable; this from a senior Minister in the Government. Mr. Speaker, nothing this Government does can be viewed in isolation. Money lost by Crown corporations means less money for medicare, education and reforestation, to name just a few. This Bill does not address the problems facing this country. We will continue to slide backwards economically if we do not change this Bill.

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, unlike most of my colleagues I do not intend to deal with what Bill C-24 does, even though what it does is inadequate or wrong. Instead, I would like to focus on some of the many important issues with which, to my mind, Bill C-24 should deal but does not.

Contrary to what we have heard from the Government, this Bill is not an ambitious piece of legislation in any way, shape or form. It really does not cover anything new. Many of these issues have already received a great deal of public notice. For example, they have been covered in a series of reports from the Auditor General dating back to 1976. Some of these issues were canvassed in the blue book published by the Privy Council Office in 1977. Some were reviewed in the Estey Commission of Inquiry into Air Canada. They have been covered in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, particularly the Crown corporations report of 1978. They were studied extensively by the Lambert Commission in its 1979 report. Some of these issues were the subject of Bill C-27, the omnibus Crown corporations Bill formulated and tabled by the short-lived Progressive Conservative Clark Government in 1979.

I am disappointed in this Bill before us today because I do not think it really breaks any new ground at all. It is simply a haphazard amalgamation of selected recommendations, observations and reforms from a host of previous studies, reports and Bills. I suppose one reason Bill C-24 lacked any apparent over-all consistency is that the Government has chosen a set of supposed solutions without any attempt at overall rationality. I do not think the Government can make up its mind on what it really wants to do with Crown corporations. For example, why is this Bill in conflict or inconsistent in so many respects with the specific Crown corporation Bill, Bill C-25, dealing with the CDIC?

I have indicated that I want to talk about what Bill C-24 does not even purport to do, Mr. Speaker. First, a Bill such as this, which is long overdue, provides a wonderful opportunity for the Government to wind up several Crown corporations which are inactive, some of which have been inactive for some time. I have in mind companies such as Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Ltd., Loto Canada Incorporated, Uranium Canada Limited and others. It would have been good management, something which is apparently foreign to the Government, to wind up these corporations.

In addition, such a move would have prohibited the Government from reactivating these corporations at a future date as the public Works Land Company was in 1978, after a long period of inactivity, to administer the lands peripheral to Mirabel Airport. The reason such an old and dead Crown corporation was reactivated was to enable the Government to avoid any scrutiny or control by Parliament. Instead, the Government has added many of these inactive corporations to the schedules of Bill C-24. I hope you will forgive me Mr. Speaker, for suspecting that this is intentional and that the motivations are anything but honourable.

Second, Mr. Speaker, Crown corporations enjoy a long list of privileges and immunities by virtue of their ownership by the Crown. These are privileges and immunities not enjoyed by their private sector competitors. Bill C-24 says nothing about those privileges and immunities. For instance, when borrowing on the capital markets, many Crown corporations enjoy "sovereign status" and their rating and cost of money or, in other words, their interest, is roughly equal to that of the Government of Canada.

Most Crown corporations are immune to a wide range of federal and provincial statutes. As we saw in the uranium cartel case, for example, Eldorado Nuclear in my own constituency and Uranium Canada were held to be immune from the federal Government's Combines Investigation Act. That is certainly an inequitable position which should be dealt with in a comprehensive Bill such as this. Under the current Patent Act, most Crown corporations have full and unrestricted access to Canadian patents without the payment of royalties or fees.

I will not go on, Mr. Speaker. Time does not permit me to list the full range of privileges and immunities enjoyed by Crown corporations. The private sector has asked the Government again and again to remove at least some of these privileges and immunities from those Crown corporations which compete with private sector enterprises. Bill C-24 says nothing about that.

Third, Mr. Speaker, Section 45 of the Financial Administration Act provides that the borrowings of agent Crown corporations are to be recorded as direct liabilities against the federal Government's Consolidated Revenue Fund. Instead, the Government has engaged in an accounting sleight of hand by recording such borrowings as contingent liabilities, thereby understating the Government's gross direct financial exposure. The accounting community, the Auditor General and the financial markets of Canada have repeatedly asked the Government to straighten out this situation by either having the accounting practices reflect the law or the law reflect the accounting practice. If the Government had the courage of its convictions, it would have set the record straight one way or the other. Instead, Bill C-24 says absolutely nothing about this.

Fourth, Crown corporations are usually heavily debt financed. This practice too allows the Government to engage in some accounting manoeuvrability. As the Public Accounts Committee noted, the debt financing of the Canadair Challenger and the de Havilland Dash programs not only represented poor business judgment, but was also responsible in part for those companies' current chaotic financial situation. Debt financing makes it more difficult to compare the performance of Crown corporations with that of private sector competitors. Debt financing helps to keep Crown corporations tied to the public trough. Debt financing makes Crown corporations more susceptible to interest rate fluctuations and economic downturns. Again, Bill C-24 does absolutely nothing about this.

In many other ways which I have not had time to discuss, Sir, Bill C-24 should be drastically amended before it goes through the House.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the discussion on Bill C-24 in relation to Crown corporations. I would like to begin by saying that two separate and extremely critical issues have become the trademark of the Trudeau times. I am speaking primarily for all of western Canada. First, there is the ever-increasing budget deficit. Second, there is the irresponsible management and lack of accountability of Crown corporations. Bill C-24 concerns the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations.

In my own constituency I have found that Crown corporations are always the subject of critical comment. Perhaps this is due to a number of reasons. People are always poorly informed about Crown corporations. They never seem to be able to learn details such as why they exist in the first place and how long they might be expected to operate. Crown corporations are difficult for any politician to explain because in many cases they seem to serve such a nebulous purpose. They are also difficult to explain because there are so many Crown corporations in existence and they are so variable in their operations.

A few examples come to my mind from personal experience in my constituency. The one which is by far the easiest to recall is Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada operates a number of producing gas wells and pipelines on my cattle ranch in southeastern Alberta and has for a number of years. Petro-Canada did not explore and discover this gas field; it was purchased with taxpayers' money. That makes a tremendous difference in the feeling towards Petro-Canada in the western part of Canada, especially in the gas-producing area of the southern Prairies. In the case at hand Petro-Canada purchased its assets from Atlantic Richfield Canada Limited. The first visible result of this takeover was a marked increase in the number of employees and the number of trucks used to tear around the country in. At the same time there was a marked decrease in gas well drilling activities. Petro-Canada is the most visible evidence and reminder of the National Energy Program. This Program is still considered to be a total disaster in western Canada, especially in the last three years.

Further evidence of this disaster has been the collapse of the oil and gas well servicing industry centered around Brooks and Medicine Hat in southern Alberta. Brooks was a thriving small town. It has tripled its population in a very short period of time, due mainly to the interest in gas well servicing. Brooks had attained a population of about 9,000. Now it is a veritable ghost town. This is because of the harsh reaction of the National Energy Program and its backlash on the oil and gas wells, especially the gas well servicing industry.

There is now no evidence of a recovery in the natural gas industry in western Canada and there will be none until the export of natural gas from the southern Prairies to the United States picks up significantly. The only hope for better days in our natural gas industry in Alberta is increased gas export to the United States.

The most knowledgeable people in this field now indicate that that pick-up cannot be expected for two or three years. The only way there will be an increase in activity in our natural gas industry is by significant gas export increases to the United States.

There is another, totally different type of Crown corporation about which I want to comment. That is Canagrex. It is still a bitter memory for many of us. Presumably the Canagrex operation is now in place but there is no report of any real activities in finding any new markets for our agricultural products. Rather, just the opposite is taking place right now, especially in my own industry, the beef cattle industry. Other countries are now finding new markets here in Canada. Just last week, during the NDP opposition day when they were debating agriculture, the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was the second speaker. He drew attention to the two-way trade between some European Economic Community countries and Canada. Without going into detail, he gave me an opportunity to remind the Minister about excessive beef imports now coming in from such countries as the Republic of Ireland, Denmark and Holland. In the case of the Republic of Ireland, its beef is being imported into Canada presently with an import subsidy by Ireland of 50 cents a pound in Canadian currency. The same situation is occurring with canned pork from Denmark.

Our Canadian cattle producers, specifically the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, reminded both the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Regan) of this situation three months ago. At that time the cattle producers asked for countervailing duties to be imposed at the same amount of money that the import subsidies from the countries in Europe amounted to. Yet nothing has been done about this by either Minister to date. They have suggested that perhaps the whole situation should be investigated even further.

Very briefly, I want to comment on the post office in my own community. Our first-class mail takes much too long to be delivered. I speak with personal knowledge and I am referring only to western Canada. The post office facilities in Medicine Hat, especially for customer parking, are terrible. If we as Members of Parliament in the west had to depend totally on our post office for our constituency communication, our whole system would have collapsed long ago. The saving feature for all of us, of course, is the excellent telephone service that we are provided with and allowed to use extensively.

I want to conclude by referring to the excellent speech that opened this whole debate. It was made by our spokesman, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson). He said as reported at page 2385 of Hansard:

—we will never solve the problems of Crown corporations until they come under an effective regime of individual ministerial accountability—

Bill C-24 goes in the opposite direction. The individual Minister is nothing but a post box—

The real authority is, of course, exercised by Cabinet or Treasury Board; groups of Ministers rather than individuals. In being accountable to so many Ministers, corporations will continue to be accountable to no one.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the question of Crown corporations has been before the Canadian people for approximately 70 years. We are still faced with the same problem, which is that of accountability.

This Bill involves a simple vote to send this new effort on the part of the Government to a committee. I am saying in all seriousness that it is the most useless action that anyone could think of. The committee will discuss this issue at length and arrive at no decision.

Let me give the House some simple advice. If this House wishes to serve the country, let us abandon this Bill. We know that there is a dying government which has no intention of returning this Bill to the House in this session. Let this legislation disappear so that we can have a chance to spend two or three years to get at the basic problem.

My own positive contribution to the debate would be to suggest that one provision in particular should be included in any Bill dealing with the accountability of Crown corporations if it is to succeed. My advice simply is that if accountability is turned over to the Cabinet, as this Bill does, the same mistakes will be made as have been made during the last 70 years.

This subject was discussed in great detail during the period 1964 to 1967. At that time we were debating one of the biggest Crown corporations in Canada, Canadian National Railways, within the debate of the whole national transportation Bill. Members of the House discussed this at great length and I believe close to 70 amendments came from the floor of the House of Commons. All but two of those amendments were accepted by the Government.

It is interesting to note what those two exceptions were. One amendment concerned the question of accountability. I will not go through the whole debate at that time because it is not necessary. The Official Opposition made that recommendation about accountability but it was turned down by the Government and the NDP. The Leader of the New Democratic Party at that time, Mr. Lewis, held honestly to the view that once this immense power and wealth was turned over to a Crown corporation or any government agency, it should be entrusted to do the right thing since it would have no motivation except to help the country.

However, the grim experience in all countries that have had these types of organizations, including the U.S.S.R. and China, has led us all to agree, both in the socialist nations and so-called non-socialist nations, that there must be a better way than this to deal with the question of accountability in any form of government.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker? I want to deal with this proposal later.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order! It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

PENITENTIARIES

CONDEMNATION OF DAY PASS FOR SEX MURDERER

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my disbelief and outrage at the day parole privileges given to a four-time convicted sex slayer.

For a number of hours during the weekend while William Boden, known as "Strangler Bill", was still at large, the community of Dundas, which I represent, was terrified that what police described as "an extremely dangerous psychopathic killer" was making his way back to southern Ontario to visit relatives. Given his violent criminal background, there were fears that he would take the life of another Dundas girl in the same horrible way he strangled and multilated school teacher Elizabeth Ann Porteous.

I want immediate answers from the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and the National Parole Board on how it was that "Strangler Bill", whose trademark was to leave teethmarks on women's breasts after he raped and mutilated them, should be allowed a lovely lunch in a fashionable downtown Montreal restaurant. I demand to know how he got his own personal American Express card, and who gave him $300 in cash. I want to know how we are expected to believe the guard who fell for the oldest excuse in the world, right out of a Grade B movie, that the killer had to find the men's room.

I found it absolutely incredible that he was out of jail at all. I demand to know where, in the name of Heaven, is there any justice for society in allowing day passes for convicted killers serving four consecutive life sentences? It is an unbelievable subversion of the law.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS URGED FOR ATLANTIC FISHERMEN

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House the disastrous situation on the northeast coast of Newfoundland and in many areas of Atlantic Canada because of the incredible amount of ice located along the coastline of most of our Atlantic provinces. As well, this week fishermen in Atlantic Canada, some 15,000 in Newfoundland alone, will receive their last unemployment insurance cheques. Surely the Government of Canada, specifically the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), can go to Cabinet and see if he can get the unemployment insurance benefits extended for these fishermen who will be without any income next week.

I want to point out the attitude of provincial Departments of Social Services which are claiming that these fishermen do not qualify for welfare because they are self-employed. Really the buck stops with the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am asking him now, on behalf of the 15,000 fishermen on the northeast coast of Newfoundland, to extend the unemployment insurance benefits until the ice moves off.

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT SOUGHT OF SECTION AFFECTING FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, Section 31 of the Income Tax Act has been plaguing farmers for over 20 years. Finally, in a token reaction to public pressure, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) announced on February 15 that he was going to set up a consultative group to look into the matter. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is two and one-half months later and the Minister has not yet even named the members of this group.

In that two and one-half month interval, Revenue Canada could conceivably reassess a farmer, turn down his notice of objection, and garnishee his bank account. In other words, in that period of time Revenue Canada could bankrupt a farmer. Recently, in a ten-week period, the Progressive Conservative Party announced its Revenue Canada task force, conducted public hearings in 23 Canadian centres, and drafted and submitted an 80-page report, in both official languages, covering all areas of the Department's operations.

It appears as if the Section 31 problem has been put on the Liberal back burner. Who knows how much more time will be spent studying the issue and providing recommendations to say nothing of the interval the Government will take to act upon those suggestions? At the speed the Liberal Government is going, it will be another 20 years before this stupid and destructive Section of the Income Tax Act is amended.

Fortunately, it is more likely that the consultative group will be reporting to a Conservative Government, and farmers can rest assured that immediate action will be taken.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RECONSIDER AID PROGRAM

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the last report of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association showed that the total value of shipyard production dropped 38 per cent in 1983, compared with 1982. It seems that the industry is suffering as a result of imports of ships into Canada.

Recent measures announced by the federal Government are aimed at helping the industry. First of all, federal orders have been a godsend, because they represent 80 per cent of new orders received this year. Second, there is Bill C-16, that extends the customs zone to the edge of the continental shelf. However, I feel that this is not enough. I do not think the reasons for exempting fishing boats of between 30 and 50 metres from the provisions of Bill C-16 are very convincing. Furthermore, the Petroleum Incentives Program makes it possible to pay 80 per cent of oil exploration costs to Canadian drilling companies. I have nothing against this measure, except that it should apply only to what is produced in Canada.

I therefore urge the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to reconsider this part of the Energy Program and I also hope that the Shipbuilding Industry Assistance Program will be extended until June 30, 1987, because I feel it is hardly appropriate to terminate this program at a time when Canadian shipyards are in great difficulty.

FORESTRY

"THE SAGA OF SAHARA SAM"—NEED FOR GOOD MANAGEMENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, about a hundred years ago a scrawny little fellow named Sam showed up in an Ottawa Valley lumber camp. He asked for a job as a faller.

The boss reluctantly hired him, but was completely flabbergasted at the end of the day when he saw how many trees Sam had fallen. "Where did you learn to fall trees?" he asked. "In the Sahara", said Sam. "Go on, there aren't any trees in the Sahara," said the boss. "There aren't now," said Sam.

Sahara Sam finished his work in the Ottawa Valley and moved on to British Columbia, where he has been busy ever since.

This is National Forestry Week and it would be a good time for the federal Government to start taking seriously our forests and our forest industry, before our forests become desert.

Across Canada we harvest more than 800,000 hectares of forest each year, but 25 per cent to 50 per cent of that land is never regenerated, or it grows up in non-commercial species.

The Canadian Forest Service estimates that decent forest management would create 100,000 new jobs, increase product sales by $22 billion, increase exports by $12 billion, and generate an additional $3 billion in tax revenues.

If the Government gave proper attention to the needs of the Canadian people and to the needs of our economy—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

EFFECT OF DIVORCES ON CHILDREN

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have been impressed by the efforts of an organization in my riding called AEDA, the acronym for "Against Easy Divorce Association". Their concern is the deleterious effect that so-called "no-fault" divorce can have on the children of couples whose marriage ends in divorce.

This group points out that 40 per cent of all Canadian children of divorced couples live in single parent homes. The lifestyle of the children of divorced parents changes rapidly. The children are placed under social assistance rather than cared for by non-custodial parents or, if the custodial parent, usually the mother, works, the children for the most part are left without necessary parental supervision during their developing years.

Added to these indignities, children from easy or no-fault divorces are generally confused as to the reasons why their parents have split up, and children have not understood, even years later, why their parents' marriage ended. Indeed, there may be a link between the rising suicide rate, particularly among young people, and their growing suspicion and distrust of the actions of their parents. As far as children are concerned, their parents remain married forever. AEDA is correct. Too easy divorce can have serious consequences for children as well as for others indirectly involved.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

CHURCHILL FALLS POWER CONTRACT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the Supreme Court of Canada, in a unanimous decision, ruled that Newfoundland's Upper Churchill Water Rights Reversion Act was ultra vires. This legislation was passed in 1980 in an attempt to redress one of the most serious grievances in this country today, that is, the Churchill Falls power contract. The contract entered into in 1969 by Churchill Falls Power Corporation and Hydro Quebec locks Newfoundland into a situation whereby Churchill Falls power is sold to Quebec for less than three mills. That power is resold to the Americans, and indeed to other Canadian provinces, for up to 28 mills. In dollars, according to the Economic Council of Canada, this means $8 million a year for Newfoundland, and $800 million a year for Quebec.

This country cannot survive on a strict interpretation of the letter of the law. There has to be a spirit of the law. It is in that spirit that I call upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on behalf of the people of Newfoundland, to take whatever steps are available to him under the National Energy Program, or through amendments to the National Energy Program, to correct this most grave injustice. Failure to do so could have most dire consequences.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

REDRESS SUGGESTED FOR JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, during the course of their history most countries make mistakes which subsequent leaders are required to acknowledge and rectify. Such is the case today with respect to the treatment of our fellow Canadians of Japanese descent during World War II. The people who were unilaterally uprooted and forcibly relocated, and whose boats, farms, and possessions were expropriated, with very little and often no compensation, were full Canadian citizens. They were Canadians in all respects, and deserved all the protection that citizenship implies.

They were hard-working, lawful, and paid taxes like all other Canadians. Not one Canadian of Japanese descent was ever convicted of an act of disloyalty toward this country. The Government reacted to unsubstantiated fears and hatred. I call upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to reconsider the position of his Government and to set in motion immediately the proper process to address and deal with this serious issue.

DANGEROUS PRODUCTS

INCLUSION OF DIOXIN IN HERBICIDES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, one of the most deadly toxics known to man is 2, 3, 7, 8, -dioxin, dangerous traces of which found their way into 2, 4, 5, -T and the Agent Orange mixture that has been used as a herbicide in Canada. The severe damage caused by the compound 2, 3, 7, 8, -dioxoin came to light during the Vietnam War, and now further revelations have come out in the multi-billion dollar lawsuit taken against chemical manufacturers by thousands of former army servicemen. We also knew that Dow Chemical knew as early as 1965 that this deadly dioxin was finding its way into herbicide products in Canada, but to protect its lucrative sales in our country this evidence was kept quiet for five years.

The Government has done nothing to date to protect our citizens from the harmful effects of dioxins like 2, 3, 7, 8. The Government takes the position that all chemicals are safe unless proven otherwise. As the IBT scandal revealed, the Government relies on the bogus reports of the chemical manufacturers to trumpet safety claims to the Canadian people. We still continue the use of 2, 4, 5, -T which the United States banned in 1969. We know that deadly dioxins are seeping into Canada from old American waste dumps, but still the Government does nothing.

In conclusion, responsibility for pesticides and herbicides must be removed from Agriculture Canada. A special task force on pesticides and toxic waste must be established to tour the country and bring in a set of hard-hitting regulations for the future, and a serious plan for past errors. Corporate executives must be held legally liable for violations. A beefed up program to research and develop natural alternatives to toxic chemicals must be put into high gear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

EXTERNAL AID

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR AIRPORT COMPLETION IN GRENADA

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, a recent newspaper article revealed that the Government has decided to contribute $7 million in Canadian taxpayers' dollars to the interim Government of Grenada to complete the international airport at Point Salines. I do not object to Canada being involved in foreign aid programs, and I do not doubt that Grenada is in need of this assistance. However, it is obvious that the Government has lost sight of its priorities when it comes to making multi-million dollar expenditures for projects of this sort.

Pitt Meadows Airport in my riding requires an extension to its main runway. Many other airports in Canada do, as well. The cost of completing this project is estimated to be just over $1 million. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) claims he does not have the funds to complete this project in my riding, and I believe him.

The completion of the Point Salines airport on the Island of Grenada was described by Canadian External Affairs officials as "an important psychological factor for investment needed to bolster the local economy". In my riding, where unemployment has reached 47 per cent, crisis proportions, the same can be said of the need to complete an airport. What are the Government's priorities?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF BUDGET PROVISIONS

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: This is a very impolite way to treat a new Member of the Queen's Privy Council.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: A little more decorum, please!

[English]

My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last Thursday the Minister of Finance said he knew of no serious analyst, either in Canada or in the United States, who was warning of significant increases in interest rates. The very next day Henry Kaufman, respected chief economist for Solomon Brothers, said: "Before the end of the current cyclical interest rate period peak is reached, interest rates will move spectacularly higher." I know that the Minister of Finance views Mr. Kaufman's statements with respect and concern. In light of this very dramatic statement by Mr. Kaufman, is the Minister contemplating revising his budgetary statements? If so, can he tell the House to what point mortgage and other interest rates must rise in Canada before he will consider such a change in course?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Kaufman indeed made a statement later in the week after I spoke in the House. I do not think there is any relationship between the two statements. I remind the Leader of the Opposition that the view held by Mr. Kaufman is very much a minority view in North America, in the United States in particular. Mr. Kaufman has proven to be wrong in the past. I hope he is wrong again. Obviously it is a matter of speculation as to what will happen in 1985 in particular, as Mr. Kaufman has indicated. I certainly have a lot of respect for the views of Mr. Kaufman, but it is a matter of trying to predict what will happen in the course of 1985 in particular, and much later this year.

Once more, Mr. Kaufman's view is certainly not a view that is shared by most other analysts. I submit that his view in this instance is not going to be proven right in the course of the next year.

I would like to remind the Leader of the Opposition that, during his absence, we tried to make progress on a number of Bills dealing with the last Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: We succeeded in getting some agreement with his spokesman on early consideration of Bills, but we have not been able to get the necessary co-operation.

MINISTER'S ECONOMIC PROJECTIONS

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I hope, and I say this with some degree of kindness, that the Minister of Finance is not putting his reputation in the international investment market up against that of Mr. Kaufman, because he will find they will chose Kaufman ten times out of ten. There is nobody in the international investment world, or in the OECD, who pays any attention to this guy. They are even having serious questions in the OECD.

Mr. Trudeau: What about your Party?

Mr. Mulroney: Notwithstanding the generous efforts of the Prime Minister, there are grave doubts arising in the OECD.

Mr. Trudeau: You do not want a Canadian in OECD?

Mr. Mulroney: The Prime Mnister is retiring. He should be polite. The Prime Minister should not be angry with me; he should be angry with all of his Cabinet colleagues who are devastating his legacy every day of the week when campaigning for the leadership of the Liberal Party. I have been out there defending the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: On February 15, in his economic documents and projections, the Minister of Finance said at page 15:

> A crucial aspect of the medium-term projection is the underlying view of moderate sustained declines in interest rates—

He went on to say:

> If nominal and real rates of interest were to rise significantly from current levels, the recovery itself could be at risk—

Those were his words. Since that time interest rates for five-year mortgages have risen a point and a half. The bank rate has gone up 1.13 per cent in less than three months. In the words of the Minister of Finance, the recovery is already at risk. In light of this, will the Minister of Finance acknowledge that the projections have not worked out as he hoped they would, and will he bring in a new financial statement that will relieve the pressure on hundreds and hundreds of thousands of Canadians who need relief from the burden of high interest rates? Will he do so today?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the lighthearted comments of the Hon. Member. I would like to suggest that, if he is to worry about someone's future, he should worry a great deal about his own future rather than mine. He may have noticed that during his lengthy absence some worrisome results were coming out. I would suggest to him that he should begin to look behind his back because he may end up the way so many other Tory leaders, including the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead, ended up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: We went from—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair hesitates to interrupt, but the Chair does suggest that perhaps the questions and answers are straying from the usual procedures of the House.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker I would just say—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member rising to ask a second supplementary question?

Mr. Mulroney: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Leader of the Opposition for a further supplementary question.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that if the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance believed those numbers, let them call an election right now because the people of Canada want one.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: What about the polls?

Mr. Mulroney: This is going to be dangerous, because he is now being coached by the Prime Minister. I have been out conducting my own poll and I have bad news. There are at least 70 Liberal Members who will not be back after the next election.

REQUEST FOR NEW BUDGET

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Minister's reference to the situation in the United States, there are four very key areas to be addressed apart from the interest rate burden, these being more robust recovery in employment, more industrial production, more real income, and an effectively milder recession by any objective criteria. I think the Minister of Finance would agree that that is the case in the United States vis-à-vis Canada.

Apart from the overwhelming burden of rising interest rates in Canada, could the Minister indicate his actions to the House, to Canadians, and particularly to those who are running and small and medium-sized businesses who are now being crippled and are alarmed? These businessmen are alarmed as well by the Minister's use of the word "panic" in terms of rising interest rates. Can he tell the House whether or not he will be bringing in a new budgetary document of any kind designed to correct the misapprehensions which have arisen out of his Budget and to reduce the burden of interest rates on the ordinary taxpayer? Will he do that right away?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is looking more and more like a man who is whistling in a graveyard. I would like to tell him that, indeed, an election will be called in due time and he had better get ready because he will be dumped and buried in the graveyard in which he is whistling at the present time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: As far as my hon. friend's question is concerned, I would like to remind him that in 1983, for instance, Canada knew a rate of growth higher than that in the United States. Canada grew at a rate of 6.6 per cent versus a rate of 6.3 per cent in the United States last year. I would like to remind him that the growth rate in Canada was larger than that in every other industrialized country during that 12-month period to which I have referred.

I would also like to remind my hon. friend that, in terms of job creation, Canada's record compares favourably with that of any other country, including the United States. I also remind him that last year labour growth in Canada was some 50 per cent higher than it was in the United States. This is why we have not been able to reduce the unemployment rate as much as we would have liked. In the meantime all of our efforts are concentrated on creating jobs as fast as we can and on keeping our interest rates as low as possible in the current context.

As far as small business is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I remind my friend again that we have put forward proposals whereby the taxation of small businesses would be very significantly reduced. We would do away with two-thirds of the legislation dealing with small business income tax, and this would generate a tax saving of some $150 million for small businesses. I would hope we would get co-operation from Tory Members to have these pieces of legislation passed quickly rather than the foot dragging on their part that we have been facing for the last several weeks.

Mr. McDermid: Introduce the Bill!

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP RACE—POLICY STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF STATE FOR ECONOMIC AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is a supplementary one. The Minister of Finance complains that his policies are not working because there are too many Canadians looking for jobs. I would like to ask a question of his colleague, the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. In Halifax on the weekend, the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development said that he would call on his fellow candidates to put their cards on the table. He went on to say:

> Instead of propping up run-down trucking firms, bankrupt computer companies and over-staffed government Departments, we should be investing more money in our people.

The Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development chairs a most important Cabinet committee and I would like to ask him if he has been successful in persuading his Cabinet colleagues to adopt these spending priorities. Since the obvious and self-evident answer to that question is no, how can he reconcile his continuance as a member of the Cabinet?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I think that the policies are clear. Just look at the last Budget, Mr. Speaker. Look at the tax incentives for research and development. Look at the investment in the East Coast fishery, for goodness' sake. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that that is not where taxpayers' dollars should be spent? Those are priorities, and those investments are being made.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, did I quote the Minister correctly in my previous question? If so, does this account for the reason why Canada has fallen so far behind the United States in terms of job creation and in terms of consumer spending? The dollar is down, unemployment is up, and consumer spending is down because Canadians are saving more as they have no confidence in the future because of the policies the Minister supports.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, included in the comments I made in Halifax was the statement that that is utter rubbish. I would like to requote myself on that. The Hon. Member for St. John's East always prefers to see the glass as being half empty instead of half full. He is preaching gloom and doom at a time when the object for all of us should be to stimulate the confidence of Canadians in the economy. The economy is growing and a recovery is under way. Jobs are being created and important investments can be made. Our job is to spur that on. That is the job of everyone in the House, including members of the New Democratic Party. We have had enough of this nonsense. Let us tell Canadians how good the economy is, rather than trying to camouflage the strengths upon which we all must build.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Last week in response to a question that I asked the Minister of Finance regarding mortgage interest rate increases, he responded by saying that there is no automatic relationship between the Bank of Canada rate and the interest rates charged by the banks.

Given that we have seen increases in the bank rate over the months of February, March, and April, amounting to 1.13 per cent, given that we have seen increases in the mortgage interest rates charged by the chartered banks amounting to 1.75 per cent, and given that we now see interest rates for mortgages at a level of 14 per cent, which effectively excludes 85.5 per cent of all renters from entering the housing market, is the Minister either incompetent or is he not telling us the truth?

● (1430)

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I might refer the Hon. Member to the answers he gave himself and which indicate a gap between the increase in the Bank of Canada rate and mortgage interest rates, answers which apply directly to his question.

Furthermore, I can inform the Hon. Member that, for instance, the prime rate has remained at 11.5 per cent for several weeks, while in the United States it rose to 12 per cent.

In addition, the Hon. Member mentioned the figure of 14 per cent. I might remind him that mortgages are available for less than 14 per cent, provided they are for periods shorter than five years. If my hon. friend would take the trouble to check mortgage rates for one-year mortgages, he will find that his figures are all wrong. In that respect, the Hon. Member has decided, as usual, to pick the worst figure for the consumer instead of finding out what the possibilities are as far as interest rates are concerned.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, while the Minister points to the United State prime interest rate as being higher than that in Canada, he fails to acknowledge the fact that the United States has taken steps to establish a mortgage interest rate which is pegged and is well below the prime rate now being charged in the United States.

EFFECT OF MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES ON POTENTIAL HOME BUYERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Since the Minister says that I am overstating in using the figure of 14 per cent, surely he recognizes that even at the 12 per cent level which is currently available for one-year mortgages, that rate effectively excludes 80.7 per cent of all of the renters in Canada who might have to qualify for the average mortgage currently available. Does the Minister believe that it is reasonable in this country to have interest rates which effectively eliminate 80.7 per cent of all of the potential home owners from the marketplace? Does the Minister not feel that it would make more sense to protect home ownership, and to move to establish a rate which people in Canada can afford?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party is back to its usual rhetoric, without suggesting a solution to the problem the Hon. Member is referring to. I am happy to hear my hon. friend admit it is even possible to borrow money at 12 per cent. For his information I may add that even 11.75 per cent is possible today. If the Hon. Member would like to check, he will find a large number of financial institutions that are still offering one-year mortgages at 11.75 per cent.

Now, for the more general issue he is raising, the Hon. Member is aware of the programs that exist under legislation passed by this Parliament, and I am referring to programs set up by the federal Government and aimed at promoting the housing industry in Canada, and more specifically the purchase of homes by Canadians.

I may remind him, however, that we have said many times that we deplored the fact that interest rates are as high as they are, not only for housing but also for small businesses, farmers and anyone in our economy who has to borrow. Nominal and real interest rates are high, and they are much too high in our view. Of course the problem is that we and the rest of the industrialized countries, except for the United States, are in a situation where we depend very much on what happens in the United States. We have made exactly the same complaints as the Hon. Member has today. These views are shared by industrialized countries, who are now making representations to the United States, urging that country to adopt measures that will bring about a reduction in real and nominal interest rates in the United States. If this were to happen, we would feel the beneficial impact immediately. The issue was discussed at the last meeting of the International Monetary Fund, and I am sure it will be discussed again at the next meeting of the O.E.C.D.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, rarely have I sat and listened to such absolute nonsense.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I want to say to the Minister, first of all, that, even at 10.75 per cent, he knows that 75 per cent of all of the renters in Canada cannot qualify for the average sized mortgages currently required in order to purchase a home.

REQUEST FOR CEILING ON MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I ask the Minister if he does not recall that up until 1968, under the Bank Act, there was ceiling on mortgage interest rates which guaranteed that Canadians working in Canada could affort to buy a home in Canada? Why, therefore, does the Minister not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect to the Hon. Member, the Chair has concern about the length of the questions—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: How about the answers?

Mr. Speaker: —the length of the supplements—will Hon. Members allow the Chair at least to make a remark?—and the length of the answers. We have now had our third questioner and the net result of this will be a lack of opportunity for other Hon. Members to participate.

Mr. Deans: It might be more useful if you talked to the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Deans: Fifty per cent of what he said was absolute nonsense.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: At this stage the Chair is inviting the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, on his second supplementary question, to be brief in putting his question.

Mr. Deans: I now ask the Minister, as I was about to ask the Minister, will he not move to establish a ceiling on mortgage interest rates which is both reasonable and fair, both from the point of view of the investor and of the Canadian family who must purchase a home in order to live?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was quite wrong in his statement about the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You agree in everything else.

Mr. Lalonde: The Leader of the Opposition is usually wrong in 95 per cent of what he says.

Mr. Epp: That does not beat your 100 per cent.

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the question itself is concerned, I want to remind my friend that, indeed, the issue of an artificial ceiling on interest rates was extensively studied at the time when the Bank Act to which he referred was revised.

This issue has been studied extensively over and over again, repeatedly, every time that interest rates tend to go up. All those who have studied this subject have come to the conclusion that it is wrong to set some artificial ceilings on interest rates, for the good reason that the net result in the end tends to be that funds going into that area end up being very limited and there is not enough to meet the demand. I believe, therefore, this country would be much better served—

Mr. Deans: By driving people out of their homes.

Mr. Lalonde: —by relying on the rules of the market and trying to keep interest rates as low as we can, generally, to all Canadians, whether they want to buy a home, farm, small business, or borrow to buy a car or some appliances. I believe that the best solution remains one whereby the consumers will have the choice to allocate their borrowings according to their needs, rather than making the artificial decision for them.

MORTGAGE INTEREST PROTECTION PLAN—ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that rising mortgage interest rates are of continuing concern to the Canadian home owner and the housing industry. Last week the Minister assured the House that everyone who has taken out a mortgage since March 1 will be eligible for the mortgage interest insurance protection plan. In the absence of the legislation, which has been promised for almost two months now, can the Minister explain to the House just what that eligibility is going to mean to the average Canadian home owner?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that we have proceeded with extensive consultations with the housing and construction industry, as well as consumer groups, and that those consultations have been concluded. We should be able to introduce a Bill by the end of this month which I hope will receive prompt consideration by the House.

As to the nature of the proposal, I have indicated that all home buyers since March 1, 1984, would be eligible for the program and, second, I released at the time of the Budget an extensive document which provided for the nature of this particular program, to which I invite my friend to refer.

I must say that the consultations we have had, which have been quite extensive across Canada, have indicated very broad support for the measure we have put forward, and it is expected that the Bill to be introduced will be substantially along the lines of what was proposed in the Budget.

BASIS OF PROTECTION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Minister that the problem will not be with the concept but with the mechanics.

Mortgage interest rates have risen almost 2 per cent since March 1. Can the Minister assure the House that a Canadian home owner who renews his or her mortgage after March 1, 1984, will receive mortgage insurance protection based upon the rate in effect on March 1, 1984? Or will the protection be based upon the prevailing rate at the time the application is approved? There is a 2 per cent difference right now.

• (1440)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question of the Hon. Member as a representation. He will have to wait for the Bill, which he will see at the end of the month, to reach his own conclusions in that regard.

FARM FUEL TAX—REQUEST FOR ABOLITION

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. We on this side of the House are delighted that three Liberal leadership candidates, namely, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and the Minister of Agriculture, have decided to co-opt the Progressive Conservative proposal to abolish the 9 per cent federal sales tax on farm fuels.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Better late than never.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): In light of that important and noteworthy conversion on their part, can the Minister indicate to the House that he and his colleagues are prepared in fact to do so, which would mean a saving to Canadian farmers of $250 million?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I already answered this question last week. Furthermore, as the Hon. Member is aware, the Government brings down a Budget each year, and I think he should wait until my next Budget.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very much within the capacity of the Government, if it is so inclined, to introduce interim measures at any time. Therefore, why is this not happening? Is it because the Ministers I have named have no influence in this particular Cabinet, or is it because the rest of their colleagues are insensitive to the plight of Canadian farmers?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I come from a family which has had eight generations of farmers before me. I have two brothers who are active farmers. Representations along the lines mentioned by the Hon. Member are well known to me. The fact is the Hon. Member knows the Government of Canada is providing support to farmers to the tune of several hundreds of millions of dollars a year. That support is very extensive and takes the form of many, many programs. It also includes a rebate on the federal sales tax on fuel consumed on the farm, of which the Hon. Member is aware. Every time I meet farmers I sit down and discuss with them the notion of sharing the burden of taxation fairly between all Canadians. Other Canadians are also paying high taxes in various forms. I must say that farmers, when you discuss it with them, are very reasonable people and recognize they also have to share the burden with others.

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM—DOME CORPORATION'S REQUEST

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. He has recently received correspondence from Mr. Fred McNeill, the chief executive officer of Dome Canada Ltd., requesting that the Government bend the rules so Dome can obtain another $30 million of taxpayers' money under the Petroleum Incentives Program to continue drilling dry holes in the Beaufort Sea. Given the rather disastrous record of this company in that area, would the Minister assure the House that Dome Petroleum will not receive this additional $30 million of taxpayers' money, and that there will be a review of Dome's performance in that area before any further action is taken?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must admit I have not read Mr. McNeill's letter, to which the Hon. Member is referring. However, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources obviously approves of exploration projects and investment by various companies in the oil sector, especially on Canada lands, and I am also sure the Department will want to examine very carefully any proposals that may come from Dome Petroleum or other companies.

Actually, I am rather surprised at the Hon. Member's comments of the news in the papers this morning. A multinational company announced the discovery of a major oil pool in the Beaufort Sea on the Alaska side, I admit. I therefore think it is rather surprising that my hon. friend should jump to the conclusion that there is no future in exploration in the Canadian Arctic, while they seem to be able to find oil on the American side, right next to the area where we are drilling now.

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE REVIEWED

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, we have been calling on the Government to open its eyes and stop squandering billions of dollars in an area which has produced nothing but dry holes. The Japanese have pulled out, and now Dome is pulling out of the Beaufort, and requesting one last hurrah to the tune of $30 million. In light of that, will the Minister of Finance guarantee that we will not squander another $30 million, and that there will indeed be a review of this program which has produced nothing but dry holes on the Canadian side of the Beaufort Sea?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is repeating his original question. The Hon. Minister of Finance.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is so much misinformation in the question, it is pretty hard to answer. First of all, the Japanese have not pulled out. They have loaned a few hundred million dollars in that area. They have indicated they were not planning further investment, but they have not pulled out. They made a commitment, and the money they invested has been spent for exploration.

In addition, the record in the Arctic has not been one of dry holes. There have been a number of discoveries; the question is whether we will be able to make discoveries leading to a development of commercial value. Oil and gas have been discovered in the Canadian Arctic, as the Hon. Member knows.

Finally, I am amazed that the Hon. Member wants to put forward as a philosophy or policy in the energy field the idea that we should go only for wells which will produce. The history of the oil and gas sector is one of a large number of dry holes, with a few discoveries. If you want to have discoveries you have to drill, and you will not be successful most of the time. You will be successful a number of times, and this is how the industry has developed in Canada and around the world.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION—ADJUDICATION PROCEDURES

Mr. Jim Schroder (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Last night the television show W-5 was very critical of the adjudication process established under the Pension Act. The show suggested that some veterans are not receiving due consideration from the Canada Pension Commission, and that changes to the adjudication process are required. Will the Minister comment on the subject matter raised on that program, and the action he proposes to take to determine if the allegations are true and how they can be resolved in the best interests of disabled veterans?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by thanking the Hon. Member for his question. As he knows, the Pension Act establishes the process by which entitlement to disability pensions is determined. It is a quasi-judicial process and was developed by veterans to serve veterans. Over the past couple of years we have taken steps to speed up the administrative process by which veterans' applications for disability pensions are handled. We have not, however, looked at the basis for the adjudication process under the Pension Act.

I have taken action not only to meet with the War Amps of Canada and their representative, Mr. Chadderton, a couple of weeks ago, but I further examined whether or not the adjudication process continues to meet the needs of veterans in the 1980s. As a result, I determined to establish a working committee, and I will be asking veterans' organizations to examine the adjudication process and recommend ways and means by which the Pension Act can better serve the needs of veterans.

PENITENTIARIES

DAY PASS RELEASE OF MULTI-MURDERER

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General has caused an investigation to be made, and apparently has an answer ready, as to why Wayne Clifford Boden, a convicted multi-murderer, would even be considered for a full parole, day parole, or even a day pass, bearing in mind that Mr. Boden, immediately upon his escape on Friday in Montreal, was classified by both prison and police authorities as being "extremely dangerous". I understand the Solicitor General has an answer for us. I would like to know what that answer is.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I had the Commissioner of the Correctional Service in to see me this morning. I must tell my hon. friend that I am not satisfied with the explanation I have of what went wrong in this case. It appears to me there were a number of breaches of long standing policy. I want to hear more from the Correctional Service about the steps they intend to take to be certain that the policies which were presented to me, and which I have approved, are complied with.

I do not see any humanitarian basis in this case for allowing the individual out on a temporary absence, even though he was reported to have been under escort. There is no excuse for his having been given $300 by the person who was responsible for his escort, even though it was his own money which he had earned inside the institution. Policies do not permit sums like that to be given to individuals under those circumstances. They should not have had lunch in a bar where the inmate treated the escorting officer to lunch. He should not have been permitted to go to the washroom without the escort accompanying him.

I am pleased to be able to tell the House that, thanks to good police work and to an anonymous tip, this individual was apprehended very shortly after he escaped. However, it is a matter which concerns me very much. I would like to assure the House that steps will be taken to ascertain that the policies of the Correctional Service of Canada are complied with in every case.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, surely that is not good enough. The Minister has already caused an explanation to be given to him. I think Hon. Members of the House are entitled to hear from the Minister exactly what that explanation was which he has not given to us.

He mentioned a custodial officer. In actual fact it was an art instructor from a maximum security prison. If the Minister is going to attempt to slough off the accountability to his officials, I think the public is entitled to know exactly what the explanation is that the Minister has received and to which he referred.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I intend to have further discussions with officials about this in the next day. I am glad to remind the Hon. Member that I am appearing on my Estimates tomorrow before the Justice Committee. I would be very glad to discuss this whole policy.

This was a case of an inmate who had served 12 years behind bars, who had undergone sexual therapy treatment at a regional psychiatric centre, who was reported to have been making good progress, and who was about to be downgraded from a maximum security to a medium security level. I agree that the House is entitled to a further explanation and further assurances. I am very pleased that I will have the opportunity to appear before the Justice Committee tomorrow. I will be there with senior officials. I hope that the Hon. Member and other interested Members will attend.

DAY PASS POLICY

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Solicitor General. Will the Minister report fully to the House on how this convicted sex slayer obtained his own American Express credit card?

Mr. Nielsen: Do not go anywhere without it.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): This calls into question the whole matter of convicted killer day passes. Can the Minister assure us or himself, if he doubts his officials, how many other convicted killers may be out having lunch today with privileges similar to those offered to Mr. Boden?

Mr. Nielsen: Do not leave jail without one.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have tried to track down the credit card feature in the story. I do not see any evidence, and neither can my officials find any, that he did in fact have a credit card. I do not know if I have the whole story. By the time of my appearance tomorrow I hope I will have the opportunity to find out about that.

There is no such thing, Mr. Speaker, as a killer day pass policy.

Mr. Stevens: What do you call it?

Mr. Kaplan: There is a policy of humanitarian releases which are available under very special circumstances, under escort. I do not see any justification for one in this case, even though the explanation I have is that this was out on a humanitarian day pass under full escort. With regard to the escorting official, all of the staff in maximum security institutions receive security training. They are all eligible to handle escorts. I do not have more information about the particular escorting official. However, I know he was trained for that job.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—UNITED STATES MILITARY PRESENCE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I would like to assure him that we in this corner join him in welcoming the President of Mexico, Senior de la Madrid, to Canada for an official visit.

In his meetings with the President will the Prime Minister take care to state clearly Canada's growing concern about, and opposition to, the increasing size and permanence of the U.S. military presence in Central America? Will he also assure the President of Canada's full support for the efforts of the President, and the Contadora group generally, to halt and reserve the U.S. militarization of the region?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already been discussing these very subjects with the President of Mexico, Mr. de la Madrid. I indicated that it was Canadian policy to try to put an end to the ideological struggle between East and West, between Moscow and Washington, in the area. I repeated the policy often, stated by our Secretary of State for External Affairs, that the problems in those areas are more of a socio-economic nature and should not be turned into a cockpit of ideological confrontation between East and West. That meant regretting any military presence, not only from Washington but from Cuba interposing itself for the Soviet Union. Perhaps in that regard we have a different policy from the NDP in that we regret the ideological use of that area by both the superpowers, not only by the United States.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, this Party also regrets it on both sides. I would only remind the Prime Minister that, so far, not a single shipment of arms, that the Americans keep saying are coming from Nicaragua, has in fact been identified.

REQUEST THAT CONTADORA FOREIGN MINISTERS BE INVITED TO CANADA

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Members of the U.S. Congress, including Senator Edward Kennedy, have invited the four Contadora Foreign Ministers to Washington to discuss with them the recent peace proposals made among the Contadora group at their meeting in Panama.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has considered inviting the four Foreign Ministers of the Contadora group to Ottawa subsequent to their meetings in Washington, in order that the Canadian public, as well as the Canadian Government, can become more fully informed about and more involved in the Contadora process?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, today I had discussions with the Foreign Minister of Mexico, who is a leading member of the Contadora group. Recently, during my visit to Colombia, I had discussions with Mr. Lloreda, the Foreign Minister of that country. I met with the Foreign Ministers of several of the Central American countries. I will continue that process of consultation as the opportunity arises.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—REBATE PROGRAM INQUIRY

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and is with regard to Farm Credit Corporation mortgage interest rates. When these interest rates were in the range of 16.75 per cent to 20 per cent the Government, under considerable pressure, instituted the interest rebate program, which was subsequently abandoned, of course. Now that these rates are on the rise again, at what level of interest rate for a Farm Credit Corporation mortgage will that interest rebate program be reinstituted?

● (1500)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Government is carefully following developments in this area. As the Hon. Member pointed out, the Government did not hesitate to intervene the last time we had a substantial increase in interest rates. I would like to make it clear to the Hon. Member that my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, myself and my Cabinet colleagues are giving careful attention to developments in interest rates, and if any steps must be taken, I shall certainly inform the House in due course.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION ON INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday the Minister indicated that the program was abandoned, to use his words, "because of a significant decline in interest rates". Would he tell us in absolute terms what is his interpretation of a significant increase in interest rates, at which time I would imagine that the interest rate program would be reinstituted?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that we have known a period when interest rates went as high as 20 per cent and even more. We have succeeded in bringing down interest rates significantly, both in Canada and in the United States. In the last few weeks there has been some increase in the interest rates. I hope that those interest rates will not grow more significantly, but obviously we will monitor the situation. If such were to be the case, we would not hesitate to take steps similar to those that we have taken in the past.

PETITION

MR. KILGOUR—MEASURES TO COMBAT PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to present a petition on the subject of pornography signed by approximately 200 members and friends of Strathcona Baptist Church in Edmonton. Among other things, the petition expresses concern about easy access to pornography and violence to women and children. The petition calls on the House to pass effective measures to combat pornography, including passing Clause 36 of Bill C-19 amending the Broadcasting Act and, finally, amending the Criminal Code.

The salary and other remuneration paid to the above-mentioned persons is approved by the Governor in Council. For salary ranges of Governor in Council appointees, please refer to the Report on Governor in Council Appointees tabled in the House of Commons on November 17, 1983.

STATISTICS CANADA—TRAINING PROGRAM FOR INTERVIEWERS

Question No. 763—Mr. Hawkes:

Is there a training program for Statistics Canada field interviewers and, if so, during it are they instructed (a) not to mention that many survey questions need not be answered (b) that the easiest way to get financial information is to have respondents show their income tax forms and, if so, are they instructed in how best to probe for sources of "hidden income" (c) that anyone who does not willingly answer all questions probably has something to hide?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

Statistics Canada conducts a variety of interviewer training programs appropriate to different survey subjects.

(a) Interviewers are trained to try to obtain a response to all questions which are applicable to a given respondent.

(b) For selected surveys where financial information is sought from the respondent, interviewers are instructed to suggest to respondents to refer to their most recent income tax returns to assist themselves in completing the questionnaire. In conducting the interview, questions are asked to enable the respondent to include all sources of income required on the questionnaire.

(c) No.

EXEMPT STAFF OF MINISTER OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

Question No. 789—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Are any exempt staff employed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and, if so, what are their (a) titles (b) positions (c) names?

2. Do any of the staff mentioned in part I receive income, financial assistance or other benefits related to their employment from sources other than the ministerial budget and, if so (a) which members (b) what are the details of the income, financial assistance or other benefits?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): There is no department of Regional Economic Expansion in the Government of Canada.

1. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion currently employs eight exempt staff:

(a) and (b)	(c)
Executive Assistant	P. McGuire
Special Assistant	L. Branch
Special Assistant	A. Denis
Special Assistant	P. W. Fitzpatrick
Minister's Driver	D. Gaudet
Special Assistant	G. Lalonde
Special Assistant	J. P. Morgan
Special Assistant	D. A. Proudfoot

2. No.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned at one o'clock, I was laying down the background for a positive proposal to be made with respect to any legislation dealing with Crown corporations under the Financial Administration Act. I pointed out this morning that this is not a new subject and that efforts were made some 15 years ago to give the House some form of responsibility for the accountability work that must be done with these Crown corporations. We are dealing with the same suggestions 15 years later.

When one examines this Bill more closely, it is evident that accountability will be given to the cabinet. All common sense dictates that since the Cabinet has enough to do, it will delegate that responsibility to civil servants who will oversee the accountability of other civil servants. In effect, the same mistakes that have been made over the last 70 years are being repeated.

The one positive suggestion whose precedents I believe made it workable was that suggestion made in the House approximately 15 years ago by the Member for Peace River at that time, Ged Baldwin. I seconded that motion and I believe we made a fairly good argument for it. However, it was turned down by the Government and the NDP. They argued quite sincerely and honestly that if this power was given to civil servants they should be trusted and permitted to run the corporation as they saw fit. This willy-nilly type of thinking has proven to be a disaster.

I put my proposal forward quite seriously in the hope that, if this legislation goes to committee, a suggestion will be made to remove the proposal that accountability be put into the hands of the Cabinet. I suggest that that is a useless form of accountability. My proposal is to use the experience of the Australian Parliament where important subjects in that country are referred to a statutory committee as distinct from the ordinary standing committee that we have. The statutory committee meets automatically and draws its power from Parliament and is not subject to the whims of Cabinet. Such a committee is comparable to the Public Accounts Committee in our country. However, this statutory committee includes competent people who work for the parliamentary committee and who can scrutinize these Crown corporations that are made accountable to the committee. While this cannot be done for all Crown corporations, I certainly believe that the major Crown corporations should be under some form of statutory committee.

Another precedent that I wanted to mention comes from the Province of Saskatchewan. When the CCF first came to power in 1944, the Province of Saskatchewan had a large number of Crown corporations. That legislature took an important step in appointing a Committee of the Whole House to scrutinize Crown corporations. However, one of the regulations in that provision was that the legislature itself could not adjourn until that committee was satisfied that it had received all of the information it required from a particular Crown corporation. When the Crown corporation civil servants realized that they would be kept there until they answered, they would provide the information. That was a successful form of accountability which even led in some cases to dismissal and reprimands to those in charge.

I can give further examples but I believe I have made it quite clear that a positive suggestion for this legislation is that accountability not be put into the hands of people who are too busy and unable to carry it out. This pertains to a single Minister, as we discovered with Transport, or to the Cabinet as a whole.

I believe that a committee working full time, completely independent from Cabinet and whose recommendations Parliament must heed, would be able to act on the recommendations or warnings of the Auditor General before they are two years too late.

I suggest these views are held by many people in the civil service. Let me quote from a report which I do not believe was ever made public. It was given as a seminar paper to the Canadian Transportation Commission some nine years ago and was written by one of the last old-fashioned mandarins who believed in giving honest judgment and advice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I sincerely regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. If it is the mood of the House to grant the member a one-minute extension, it will require unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will read this quotation:

● (1510)

In spite of the long slow move to greater recognition of the importance of normal economic processes, recent trends to strengthen the role of the bureaucracy at the expense of the operator, of Parliament, of the regulatory agency and even of the cabinet cause concern. The trend is typified by the increasing concentration of power, as defined by statute or regulation, in the hands of Governor in Council or the Minister. This means, more often than not, the advice of the bureaucracy is leading to a bureaucratic discretionary authority that in some cases should belong to the legislator or, in other cases, to the regulatory agency rather than departmental officialdom. This, if unchecked, could lead to a greater interference with normal processes in transportation.

I quote that in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, to show that these are views of able, sincere and experienced men warning us that if we continue to take this power away from Parliament and put it into the hands of Cabinet or other forms of the bureaucracy, we will be destroying the very system we are trying to maintain.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-24 before us today is an important Bill to amend the Financial Administration Act as it pertains to Crown corporations. The legislation, I am afraid, is a great deal of smoke and mirrors. What this legislation reflects is the concern which the Liberal Government has now about the public's attention to and its suspicion of those Crown corporations which the Liberals set up. This Bill reflects a mechanism which the Liberal Government is hoping to use in an election campaign to indicate to the public that there is concern among the caucus and the Cabinet. As a result the Government through this Bill is going to deflect some of the anger, frustration and bewilderment which the public presently has toward Crown corporations, Crown corporations which Canadians do accept and do understand are a part of the mixed economy we have and have had for some time.

The public is concerned over the revelations about Canadair and de Havilland and the massive debt those corporations have accumulated over the past few years. People are concerned that the Government did not seem to understand that these corporations were running up large deficits until it was revealed that Canadair had a deficit of $1.4 billion. The public is concerned that Canada Post Corporation has not met the level of efficiency expected. Everybody has examples of mail service inefficiency, examples of letters being lost or mail misplaced for months and months.

Then there is the concern about Petro-Canada, a corporation set up with a great deal of public support. Indeed, this was a corporation which the pbulic hoped would be a window on the oil industry. But we are finding that the public is becoming very disenchanted with Petro-Canada, and I think rightfully so. Petro-Canada is operatinmg much like any other corporation in the oil industry, in a great deal of secrecy, with very little public input in terms of the service people can expect of it, its pricing policies and access to information about its financial position and the investments in which Petro-Canada is involved.

This legislation is really an appeal to the public in an election period. If we look at some of the terminology in the press release of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) announcing the legislation, we cannot argue with its intent. What do we have? We find terminology to the effect that Crown corporations should become more accountable to the public, that Crown corporations should operate under sound management procedures. A Crown corporation should produce a mandate for the pbulic and Parliament to understand what it intends to do, plans should be filed, and the objectives should all be placed before Parliament and government. All of these terms are commendable and supportable. There is a little bit of suspicion, particularly on my part, that we are getting into legislation which does not meet all those criteria, as with much of the legislation which the Liberal Government passes.

Why have these policies not been implemented in the past? Why do we wait until this particular time? Every Crown corporation should be operating under sound management. The public should be aware of the mandate and the objectives of a Crown corporation. We have waited until 1984 because it has been divulged that the public mood toward Crown corporations is changing.

In terms of this legislation, I wonder whether we have the resources in Parliament and in the provincial legislatures to deal with the number of Crown corporations that have been set up. In Schedules B and C, for example, there are some 50 Crown corporations listed. These Crown corporations have some 129 subsidiaries. They have assets of some $47 billion and employ 209,000 people. That covers only the 50 corporations and their subsidiaries; there are far more Crown corporations than that. The kind of mechanism proposed in this legislation does not give us the opportunity to deal with those Crown corporations and their function adequately without some kind of parliamentary assistance.

In the short time I have left, Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about the fishing industry. My Conservative colleagues are somewhat critical of the number of Crown corporations there are, I think rightfully so. We have to assess the value of those corporations. I know that in the fishing industry we have a number of Crown corporations. In Schedule C, for example, we find the Canadian Fisheries Products Company, the Canadian Saltfish Corporation, the Fishwater Fish Marketing Corporation and the St. Anthony Fisheries Limited. These corporations were not set up particularly because government wanted to get into the processing sector of fishing industry. All of these corporations were set up because the private sector was unable to operate effectively and efficiently in the fishing industry whether on the Prairies through the Freshwater Fish Marketing Coporation or in Atlantic Canada through the Saltfish Corporation. These companies were set up by the Government in order to protect jobs in the communities, those jobs benefited and the fishermen who were dependent on one of the only resources in the northern parts of the provinces of Saskatchewan or Manitoba, or on the East Coast. Those corporations are serving public policy and those communities. They will continue to serve them because the private sector could not function or support those industries themselves.

However, if we look at the restructuring of the Atlantic fishery, we get an indication of how the Government really feels about accountability and openness in Crown corporations. We passed a Bill restructuring the Atlantic fishery in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. That Bill was expected to be passed within a couple of days effecting an expenditure of $138 million. Parliament was not given adequate financial information concerning that restructuring, a restructuring that put massive amounts of Canadian funds into the Atlantic fishery. That is not accountability as far as this Parliament is concerned.

If we are to have accountability, there must be some initiative on the part of the Government to provide Parliament and its members with adequate information to make decisions about Crown corporations. I have some suspicion that that will not happen. When we see a major restructuring with a day long debate in committee and without adequate access, how are we expected as Members of Parliament to deal with the hundreds and hundreds of Crown corporations if there is not that sincerity, accountability and the willingness on the part of the Government to allow Members of Parliament to look at the financial structure of Crown corporations, particularly in the commercial field? Without sincerity and accountability, Members of Parliament will not achieve anything more through this legislation than they have under the present legislation.

With that in mind, I think we have to be convinced that the Government, through legislation and some amendments to this present Bill, will really allow Members of Parliament and this House to have the information to make the directors of the Crown corporations accountable to the Canadian public.

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this important and utterly inadequate Bill before us, C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations, I must admit to a continuing sense of bewilderment about the business of this House. I know that I have been a Member of this Chamber long enough that nothing should surprise me, but it does. I cannot overcome the Alice in Wonderland sense of disorientation in which this Government seems to fulfil its legislative obligations.

Here we have a Bill which supposedly will restore accountability to the management of our Crown corporations. According to its sponsors, Ministers of the Crown will be responsible for these corporations and they will have the duty of reporting to Parliament. At exactly the same time that these proposals come before us, we have the spectacle of the Crown corporation de Havilland paying unheard of bonuses to its executives for the sterling job of having lost $236 million. Ministers of the Crown have been more than rigorous in defence of these bonuses.

At the same time we have the spectacle—the word "spectacle" hardly does the phenomenon credit—of Liberal leadership candidates and Cabinet Ministers criss-crossing the country, disavowing any personal responsibility for the unholy mess they collectively have made of our economy. I need hardly reiterate for this House the flabbergasting performance of the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development (Mr. Johnston) just this past weekend. Whom are we to believe? Who truly speaks for the Government? The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) who, in introducing it, expounded that this Bill would clarify the responsibilities and relationships of Crown corporations and Ministers? Is it the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) who has no nobly defended de Havilland and CDIC bonuses? Is it the Minister for Economic Development who would have us believe the question is really academic since he will be cutting these Crown corporations loose just as soon as the June convention is concluded? Whose voice is the voice of authority? It is like the old game show, "To tell the truth"? Is it Minister number one, Minister number two or Minister number three? The only difference is that on the game show you eventually found out who was telling the truth.

My colleagues who have spoken on this Bill have outlined thoroughly and convincingly why this Bill is so inadequate. In particular, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) did so in his rebuttal to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) who spoke on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board. My colleague showed the many ways in which this Bill is deficient in the purpose for which it was intended; the subsidiaries of Crown corporations which are exempt from the control of Parliament, all 150 or so of them, the built-in closure to cut off debate on the creation of a new Crown corporation after only seven hours and 30 days in committee, and the possible power of the Governor in Council to by pass Parliament altogether in creating new corporations.

To be sure, Bill C-24 promises regulations to make Crown corporations accountable to Parliament, but it does not specify what those regulations are to be. What we have is a set of conditions and circumstances in which such regulations may be suspended or even subverted entirely by the removal of a given Crown corporation from one schedule to another. Is it any wonder that we on this side of the House must treat this Bill with suspicion? Is it any wonder we question the accountability of Crown corporations under this Bill when the Bill itself so obscures the process of accountability as to make it invisible?

Under this Bill, boards of directors have no authority but to act as a rubber stamp. Cabinet picks the chairman and the chief executive officers, the vice-presidents and even the auditors. What has a board of directors to do but to clock in for their per diems and expenses? What, then, is it accountable for, and to whom?

As far as my colleagues on the Progressive Conservative task force on Crown corporations can determine, there is no clear chain of command either up or down. Any one of a half dozen interested Ministers can get in on the act and give their orders, but when it comes to carrying the can, what do we hear? Cabinet is collectively responsible; it was a decision of Cabinet.

Even that we could live with if we could believe it, but how can we when half the leadership candidates, Cabinet members, daily undermine that collective responsibility with impunity? The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) and the Minister for Economic Development all question openly and publicly the policies they are responsible for and yet cling so tenaciously to office. One or the other. There is no honourable or honest middle ground.

Of course, it may be that it is we on this side of the House who are wrong. Perhaps we should not complain about the inefficiency and mismanagement of de Havilland and Canadair. Perhaps we should not worry about all the political appointees to these six-figure plums. Perhaps we should be unconcerned about the secrecy, the Orders in Council which pervade the Crown corporations, the post-midnight manipulations such as that performed very early last Wednesday morning when at the stroke of a pen the sports pool became a lottery.

Perhaps we simply should not concern ourselves that the Parliament of Canada is now, and under C-24 will remain, powerless to demand an accounting of either Crown corporations or their nominally responsible Ministers. After all, Crown corporations now employ 263,000 people, 25,000 more than the Government of Canada. Last year they lost $4 billion. The Government of Canada lost $25 billion. That is small solace to the taxpayers who must underwrite such losses, the people who are owed accountability by all of us in public life, not just at election time but every day that we sit as Members of this House.

That above all else is the principle that Bill C-24 ignores. That more than anything is what is missing from this legislation—the obligation to see that these Crown corporations answer to their stockholders to no less of a degree than would the board and administration of any publicly-held and traded corporation or business enterprise.

These Crown corporations—Canadair, Canada Post, the CBC, Air Canada, Petro-Canada—do not exist in a vacuum. They are the very real property of the people of Canada, from the desk Knowlton Nash sits behind to the corner gas station with the Petro-Canada logo. If Members opposite forget, they should be reminded that it was their policy to have the latter, Petro-Canada, spend millions to convince us with their slogan "Petro-Canada, it's ours". Yes, it is ours, for better or for worse. The Crown corporations of Canada belong to the people of Canada. They are their property. The Government is only the steward of those investments, with no less responsibility to give a full and accurate accounting than any executor or trustee of an estate required to pass the accounts before the court each year.

That is the accountability which is required, that and nothing less. We, the 282 Members of this House, not only represent the people of Canada; we represent and hold the trust of the people of Canada. The court before which the accounts of Crown corporations, of government in all its form, must pass is this Parliament. We have not only the right but the duty to demand a full and complete report, not this pitiful sham called C-24. Nothing less can or will do.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill C-24 today. The expanse of the proposed legislation is such that one could speak under the old rules for 40 minutes over and over again. It is quite restrictive to speak for only ten minutes. I will restrict myself to that.

I begin by saying that I am not opposed to Crown corporations. I do not think anyone on this side is opposed to Crown corporations when they are utilized to the extent and the need where private enterprise cannot provide the service. I am opposed to Crown corporations that abuse the public system and abuse the taxpayers' funds.

The purpose of this Bill is to amend the Financial Administration Act to provide greater Cabinet control over Crown corporations and greater accountability to Parliament. The statement of that purpose is one which I would have liked to have written myself because I feel that it is indeed the purpose of this Bill. The only question I have is whether or not the Bill follows up on that purpose.

Perhaps I may quote the words of Mr. J. Robert S. Prichard, a Professor of Law at Harvard Law School, who on November 29 to December 1, 1983, made a representation to the Conference on "The Board of Directors: Coping with Changing Expectations" sponsore by the Conference Board of Canada in Toronto. I am sure that government Members listened to and received copies of his comments. At that time, he said:

> My concern is that the accountability mechanisms are failing us with the result that the viability of the Crown Corporation as a policy interest is being threatened.

He went on further to say:

> —in attempting to respond to demands for increased accountability, the government has resorted to a complex web of multiple bureaucratic approvals, attempting to make Crown Corporations accountable to everyone in sight—Parliament, Treasury Board, Finance, Ministers, committees, officials, etc. In the course of making Crown Corporations nominally accountable to so many, they are in fact truly accountable to no one.

His comments caused me great concern, Mr. Speaker. He went on to make some recommendations to which I would have hoped the Government had paid attention. The first of those recommendations reads as follows:

> First, reduce the problem to a manageable size: ... reduce the number of Crown Corporations that need to be kept accountable.

He went on to recommend the following:

> Second, encourage—indeed mandate—processes that will clarify objectives for Crown Corporations: Without objectives we cannot derive performance standards. And without performance standards we cannot achieve accountability.

Later on in his speech, he recommended the following:

> Third, follow Lord Macaulay's dictum: "Choose Wisely and Confide Liberally": That is, we should try to ensure that appointments to the Boards of Directors are of the highest quality—

The Government did not listen to that recommendation.

> —and then, having chosen the directors wisely, we should confide liberally in the Board, giving it both the responsibility and the necessary power to do its job.

Another recommendation reads as follows:

> Fourth, emphasize regular, reliable and timely reporting and disclosure policies: The current haphazard situation is utterly unacceptable and the case history of Canadair provides compelling evidence of the inadequacies of the current legislation.

He went on to make the following two recommendations:

> Fifth, to the extent possible, minimize the bureaucratization of the interrelationship of Crown Corporations and the government—
> Sixth, resist the temptation to achieve accountability through relying primarily on after-the-fact audits,—

Professor Prichard's final comment that day was the following:

> Whether or not we move in that direction has now become a question of political will. And whether or not our government possesses that will is a judgment on which I can make no special claim to competence.

Has the Government addressed that problem, Mr. Speaker? Has it exhibited the will to which Professor Prichard refers? The legislation before us applies directly to about 183 Crown corporations and subsidiaries wholly owned by the federal Government. Parent Crown corporations are held accountable for all of their subsidiaries, investments and mixed enterprises. Definitions of relevant terms are substantially clarified. That is a general over-view of the Act.

Looking at this Bill in the light of accountability and fairness, I do not think that we could even stretch a curve in order to give this Bill a passing grade. The Bill provides the Governor in Council too much regulation-making power. We must bring more of the mechanics of regulations to the Bill. The Ministers have responsibility but no power under Bill C-24. Power over the appointment of directors and the approval of plans and budgets still resides with Cabinet.

Bill C-24 provides for an insufficient role for boards of directors to play. More power should be given to the boards of directors, particularly in the appointment of CEOs and auditors and the setting up of by-laws. We should create an onus of responsibility on the boards of directors.

Above all, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-24 provides for an insufficient role for Parliament to play. It states that all new parent Crown corporations will be formed only by special Act. However, it provides for no control over subsidiaries of parent Crown corporations. That is our greatest problem at the present time. As well, many existing Acts will allow for the establishment of Crown corporations of the parent type.

The clause in the Bill dealing with special investigations and comprehensive auditing is totally confusing. What is a special investigation? Who dictates what special investigations will take place? Who carries out those special investigations? Who reports them and to whom? Who finalizes them before they are reported to the House, Mr. Speaker?

Dealing with directives, Bill C-27 provided for compensation. Bill C-24 provides for none. Mention of the FBDB, the EDC and the Farm Credit Corporation should be added to Clause 99(7) of the Bill. Our interpretation of the Act is that it is not binding on the Crown.

After reading the clauses which refer to annual reports and trying to understand what is meant by them, one finds that the Treasury Board will still control the form and content of all annual reports of Crown corporations. That is the accountability which is contained in the Bill, Mr. Speaker. Accountability is still spread all over the place and is still not given to Parliament. No Minister of the Crown can be truly held accountable for the Crown corporations for which he is responsible.

I return to the final comment made by Professor Prichard and I will read it again, Mr. Speaker, as follows:

> Whether or not we move in that direction has now become a question of political will. And whether or not our government possesses that will is a judgment on which I can make no special claim to competence.

I wish Professor Prichard were here to read this Act and to see the lack of political will displayed by the Government.

I would like to carry on, Mr. Speaker, but I see that my time is running short. If I had more time, I would discuss the issue of fairness as it relates to this Act and to Crown corporations. I do not believe we see Canada Post exhibiting fairness when it is entering the field of Consumers Distributing and competing with private enterprises and small corner hardware stores. What about the fairness of a Crown corporation like Air Canada and the fairness of the way the Government is treating employees of Nordair and people who wish to purchase shares in Nordair? I do not think that we see any fairness there, Mr. Speaker.

I could mention many aspects of this Bill and try to relate the accountability contained within the Bill to the issue of fairness to people in private enterprise and to Members of the House. There is no fairness in the Bill, Mr. Speaker, so I ask the Government to reconsider the Bill and to reconsider the need for accountability of Crown corporations before it imposes this on the people of Canada.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues in putting forward my concerns about the Bill which is now before the House. I do so because it creates the sense that it satisfies one of the legitimate concerns of Parliament, that is, the accountability of Crown corporations to Parliament. I do not believe that the Bill achieves that very noble and necessary objective. Certainly it will have the effect of making Crown corporations more the instruments or the creatures of the Government. I do not suggest that that is a bad thing. It is a good thing. Having had some limited experience in that regard, I believe that the Government should have more direct day-to-day control over the running of Crown corporations. That is the function of government. But I suggest that it is the function of Parliament to hold the Government and agencies of the Government accountable for the day-to-day spending activities of the Government, of Crown corporations and of agencies. Parliament has the responsibility of holding the Government and its agencies accountable for the money that we vote for them every year. I do not believe that this Bill satisfies that basic objective.

I remember the special committee on parliamentary reform, the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, which made ten reports to this House. One of the reports dealt exclusively with the question of accountability. One of the recommendations in that report called for the establishement of a standing committee of the House to deal with Crown corporations. It called for a special standing committee of the House which would have the power to deal exclusively with Crown corporations, their day-to-day activities and how they conducted themselves in terms of the mandates that they were given by Parliament. Unfortunately, that report remains on the Table of the House. It has not been dealt with by Parliament. Like so many of the other excellent recommendations of that committee, we have chosen to set it aside and relegate the responsibility to some future Parliament. I would say that that is a great pity.

I suspect that the genesis of this Bill stems not only from the growth in the number of Crown corporations, their size and financial strength, but also from the comments made by the Auditor General in his annual report of 1983. I would like to quote from paragraph 1.61 of that report. It reads:

> The sheer size of the Crown-owned corporations makes the matter of accountability important. Crown-owned corporations employ over a quarter of a million people. With revenues of $40 billion in the fiscal year ended 31 March 1983 (up from $31.9 billion in the previous year) and expenses of $44.2 billion ($33.7 billion in the previous year), Crown-owned corporations form a huge segment of Canada's total affairs. Their very massiveness demands a proper accountability framework.

Nothing could be more clear, nothing could be more precise, than what the Auditor General said to us in that report. He went on to say, in paragraph 1.63:

> In my view, it is a situation which must not be permitted to continue. While it does continue, parliamentarians are losing part of their fundamental right to be the representatives of their constituents in the crucial decisions of how tax dollars are to be deployed and accounted for.

Parliament—not the Government, but Parliament—was the concern being underlined by the Auditor General, the ability of Parliament to exercise its ancient and very important function of holding the Government accountable for how it spends taxpayers' dollars.

Other Members of the House in speaking on this Bill have made reference to the sheer size of Crown corporations, to the growth in the number of Crown corporations—and I underline this because it is important to emphasize it—and the growth in the number of subsidiaries and agencies of Crown corporations. I emphasize that because this Bill will not exercise any degree of statutory control in terms of accountability over subsidiaries of Crown corporations. Again I refer to the Auditor General's report of March 31, 1983, from which I found out that there were 72 parent corporations in Canada. Those 72 parent corporations controlled 114 subsidiary corporations. There were also 106 corporate investment subsidiaries, for a total of 292. As has already been outlined by my hon. colleague from Leeds-Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt), Crown corporations directly employ more people than the Government of Canada. According to the Auditor General, they employ a total of 263,000 people. The 72 parent corporations, at the end of fiscal year 1983, had assets of $71.7 billion. What is even more important is that they had total liabilities—here again I refer to the 72 parent corporations—in fiscal year 1983, of $64.3 billion. Clearly, it is a situation which is out of control.

What concerns me—and I go back to my opening comments—is that the Bill creates the perception that the Government somehow is addressing the concern expressed by the Auditor General, which has been expressed in many other public forums and also in this House, that not only has Parliament lost control over Government spending but that Parliament has no control whatsoever over Crown corporations and their subsidiaries.

The danger of involving oneself in this kind of rhetoric is that one could get carried away and say that all Crown corporations should be done away with. I, for one, would be the last to put that position forward. Crown corporations are a unique part of the Canadian way. If they are a unique and important part of the Canadian way, then somehow they have to be made accountable to Parliament. I would like to suggest ways in which that could be made possible. For example, why not have Crown corporations report directly to Parliament instead of to the Government? After all, we as Members of Parliament represent the shareholders of Crown corporations—the taxpayers of Canada. Why should they go to the Government first? They should come to the shareholders in terms of being represented by the Members of this House. That is number one. The second suggestion is: why should the Government not move now? It does not have to wait for the recommendations and bring in the entire report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. It could bring a measure now, through the good offices of the Government House Leader, and establish a standing committee of the House to deal with Crown corporations. In that way, Parliament would have a vehicle by which to exercise some degree of control over Crown corporations.

Indeed, I would suggest that these two very simple suggestions would go a considerable way in strengthening the Bill to allay the fears of people and in ensuring that this Bill addresses the concerns of the Auditor General and Parliament, and that we will somehow take control of Crown corporations.

An Hon. Member: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick).

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss briefly some of the matters in this Bill relating to Crown corporations. The proposal before us would allow an amendment to the Financial Administration Act and, in essence, would give Cabinet greater control over what are sometimes referred to as Crown corporations. To a certain degree it would give greater accountability to Parliament but, through a number of loopholes or ways in which the Bill could get around the basic premise—and there are a number of them Parliament and the Members of the House of Commons and the Canadian people would not be made aware of what is going on in Crown corporations.

There are, according to some estimates, 183 or 186 Crown corporations of which the federal Government has 100 per cent ownership. The Government also has interest in about 315 other listed corporations, some of which are mixed enterprises, some are subsidiaries and some are associated with the subsidiaries or other types of ventures. There are 55 associated corporations which are less than 50 per cent owned by the Federal Government. It has 17 point mixed enterprises. It has 23 other corporate entities, which are not explained. It has 148 subsidiary corporations, and there are 72 parent Crown corporations. That makes a total of 315 listed Crown corporations. There are, however, disputes over certain other corporations as to which no one seems to know whether they are, in fact, Crown corporations.

The unfortunate thing about this Bill, Mr. Speaker, is that it provides so many loopholes and so many exceptions and the federal Government and the Cabinet can interfere so much. A number of Crown corporations, such as the Bank of Canada, the Canadian Wheat Board and the international development research centre, are going to be exempt from this entire structure set up under the Financial Administration Act. However, that is for now. Others can be exempted later by statute.

As all of us are aware, in the last few clauses of almost any statute or Bill that has been passed there are a few clauses which deal with regulations such as, "The Governor in Council can make regulations pertaining to . . ." I am sure many times in the future regulations will sneak in to exempt such and such a corporation from the Financial Administration Act. It is done all the time and we are only too aware of it. I feel it would be better, frankly, for Cabinet, as the shareholder, to vote its shares at the annual meeting, to elect the directors and then leave it up to the directors to run the company, unless there is something of massive importance to the Canadian nation and to society for which it must give direction. I do not believe the Government should be involved in the day-to-day running, decision-making and reviewing of by-laws of each of the parent corporations and 114 subsidiaries.

Under this proposal the Cabinet makes the major strategic decisions. Parliament merely approves the creation, and if it comes around to it, the disposal of a Crown corporation. Budgets, although they may be put before Parliament, are always put together in such a flimsy form and with such lack of detail because of alleged commercial confidentiality, that it really must be considered a bit of a laugh.

The unfortunate thing today is that although most of the major corporations in this country and in other countries really try to select the appropriate directors and go to great pains and effort to try to get the right mix of directors so they can give the right direction as need be to the management, the only prerequisite in a Crown corporation is that a person have connection to the governing Party, which in this case is the Liberal Party which has been in power for so many years. Therefore, we see intelligent people such as Pierre Goyer, who, however, was a bit of a disaster as a Minister in this House, being appointed a director of Canadair where there is another disaster taking place. It would seem to me that a person should have proven himself in the corporate commercial world before being appointed director of a Crown corporation. However, such is not the case. It has become a patronage tool. Cabinet has taken away most of the issues which directors should be discussing and has left the directors with certain criteria and guidelines which may be inappropriate. Cabinet has taken away the powers of the directors to direct and it has asked the directors to develop and implement the corporate plans, which I really believe is a management prerogative, and if management does not carry it out then the director should have the right to change the management.

Of course, under the terms of this legislation, Cabinet chooses the management, not the directors. Therefore, the directors are really toothless tigers, which is an unfortunate situation. For example, directors should appoint the auditors, whether it is Touche Ross Limited, Thorne Riddell Inc., Price Waterhouse Associates or whatever accounting firm is competent and capable. That is a normal every day obligation of the directors, a decision which is usually approved at annual meetings. But in this case they must consult the Minister or the Cabinet, which is just another way of allowing the Cabinet or the Ministers to interfere and to porkbarrel, making sure that their Liberal friends—as has been the case for so many years—are in there to mess around with the Crown corporation.

The Bill says they are to consult with the Ministers and Cabinet in other management affairs. Again, that is not what shareholders are allowed to do. As a shareholder in any one of our Canadian companies, one cannot go in and involve oneself in management affairs on a daily basis. All that shareholders can do is to wait until the next annual meeting or special meeting and vote, and by the pressure of their vote make their concerns known to the directors, who will, in turn, pass them on to management. Management would be unwise to ignore the interests of the shareholders, and I think any intelligent management would take cognizance of the fact that they have certain views. However, under this legislation, Cabinet has a right to meddle on a daily basis with the management affairs, and I feel that is wrong.

Cabinet can give directives, which are to be tabled within 15 days in Parliament unless the appropriate Minister feels that this would be detrimental to the commercial interests of a Crown corporation. We have heard, Mr. Speaker, the excuse that this is detrimental to the commercial viability of so many things, whether it be a FIRA application or a person applying for a grant under the RDIA program, formerly the DREE program. Unless you had a copy of their application in front of you, even though they were constituents, you would not be allowed to discuss it because, we are told, security is needed to protect the commercial nature of the project. Right there we have an exemption which, although directives can be given and Parliament is supposed to hear about them within 15 sitting days, is allowed just on the whim of a Minister.

There are many other areas I would like to speak about, Mr. Speaker, but unfortunately I see my time is running out. All I want to say is that I know our Party was so concerned at the proliferation of Crown corporations and the bad administration involved, it set up a task force, which has set forth a very good report. I think the Government would have been wise to have read the report of that task force before it undertook the appointment of more Liberal appointees in the system.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm)—Canadian Development Investment Corporation—(a) Status of orders for Dash-8 aircraft manufactured by de Havilland (b) Financial assistance offered to airline companies; the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath)—Provincial Affairs—Churchill Falls power contract—(a) Government position (b) National Energy Board Act; the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers)—Western Grain Stabilization Act—(a) Size of announced pay-out (b) Contributions to fund.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, it is embarrassing to confess that with respect to Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act, I find myself not only confused but bewildered. I know some of my colleagues might allege that this is a permanent state of affairs for me, but I frankly do not understand what went on in the developmental process leading to Bill C-24. I am the first to acknowledge that we are in what is likely to be the last or penultimate session of this Parliament, what we normally call our pre-election session, when Government has historically been cautious in its legislation, bringing forward only that which it thinks is in its own best political interests. That is understandable. I sometimes deplore it but I think we have been living with that for well over 100 years and none of us should be too surprised at it. But what confuses me is that I did not think, and I still do not, that there was any political downside to an Act dealing rather substantively with Crown corporations. I do not see where the political risk is. In fact, I think it is a good political issue no matter what side of the House you are sitting on.

In my view, Bill C-24 could have been a very substantive, tough and realistic piece of legislation without any political risk whatsoever. I do not want to be harsh, but I think we are dealing with a cosmetic Bill, one that might be termed, were it dealing with some other subject matter, a political Bill in the last session of the House before an election.

The Government has certainly had lots of time. I can recall that when I first came here 12 years ago, the Government commenced the study of Crown corporation control and accountability. More than seven years ago, this Government promised legislation to reform Crown corporation control and accountability. If, Sir, this is the result of over a decade of Government study, then frankly, to be as charitable as I can, it is extraordinarily disappointing.

There is a multitude of flaws in this Bill. One could take almost any one of a dozen aspects, but time is limited and I want to deal with something that others in the House have dealt with. Because I find it so incredible, I think the point needs reinforcing, that is, Mr. Speaker, the role and responsibility of the board of directors of Canadian Crown corporations. I admit that a Crown corporation has certain unique elements, but if it is engaged in commercial or quasi-commercial activity, then surely it must bear some resemblance to a corporation undertaking the same thing in the private sector. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), in opening the debate for our Party said that: "In effect, Bill C-24 would convert board of directors into advisory boards with little or no power". I absolutely agree. If I had any quarrel with that, it would be that the Hon. Member was being a little too charitable to the Government. I am not sure that these boards of directors should really be called in the truest sense advisory boards whose advice would, as a rule of thumb, be given some credibility even if it were not followed. Frankly, an advisory board gains its reputation by its clout, power or prestige, of which obviously there is none in these Crown corporations as proposed by Bill C-24. Frankly, Sir, I cannot see anything very prestigious about the proposed boards of directors of Canadian Crown corporations. The greatest flaw is the inability of a board, Mr. Speaker, to choose the chief executive officer, establishing the tenure and supervise him or her. I have always believed that to be a hallmark of any board of directors. However, in this legislation Cabinet, not the board, appoints the chief executive officer. Cabinet establishes tenure. Cabinet sets the remuneration. With respect to some Crown corporations, Cabinet not only appoints the CEO, it appoints others at the executive level. Also, the election of a chairman of the board is not made by the board from among its members. Cabinet appoints the chairman. Cabinet appoints the auditors as well. Cabinet establishes the dividend policy of the corporation.

I suppose the question is, Mr. Speaker: Why the flaws? Again, trying to be as charitable as I can, I presume no one directed his or her mind to the principle of responsibility when the legislation was drafted. If one had started with the Minister responsible for a particular Crown corporation, then I think there would have been a natural flow. The Minister has to be put in the position, if he is to exercise his judgment with any degree of responsibility, of being able to say, "I am responsible, my job is on the line, and I am going to go out and get the very best board of directors I can find". He is not going to give them seven, eight and nine year terms. If they do not measure up to the standard which the Minister needs to protect him or her as a Minister and to discharge his or her responsibility, they should go. That to me would seem to be the logical flow, Mr. Speaker. At that point the board is going to say, "We had better get the best chief executive officer we can find in this whole country to run this Crown corporation. Unless we do, we, the board of directors, are going to be gone". If that had been the starting point, Mr. Speaker, we would never have got into this mess.

As I say, it is inconceivable that there is a downside. I do not understand why any Cabinet Minister would want to proceed in that direction. Obviously there are political appointments and everyone has his input on the Government side, particularly Cabinet Ministers. But when your job is on the line, I would think it not only behooves you, but it is, in the most crass way, in the self-interest of a Cabinet Minister to get the very best board he or she can get his or her hands on and say to them: "You are running this company, so find a chief executive officer and other executives who will make sure that you and I look good". Obviously that was not the starting point. I do not know what was. I do not know whether this was a bureaucratic Bill that no one thought through in a business or political sense. I do not believe the Government has done a good political job here.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are signalling that I have one minute left. The analogy to a commercial corporation is not perfect. I understand that. There are no shareholders in the sense in which we know them. One could say that every taxpayer is a shareholder. I do not think that destroys the natural analogy to a company in the private sector. If I were the Minister, I would say that I am the trustee for every shareholder and that every taxpayer is a shareholder. As a trustee I would be very careful because a trustee's responsibilities are even greater than those of a Cabinet Minister.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are signalling for me to conclude. I would like to go on for another hour, Mr. Speaker. However, I am not going to ask for unanimous consent to do that. I thank you for your patience. I deeply regret that this Bill, which I thought was very very important, has turned out to be such a disappointment for all of us.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a few minutes to speak on the Bill before us this afternoon. This Bill could be a very important development in the life of Crown corporations in this country. Unfortunately, the way it has been put before the House of Commons, it will certainly not be anywhere near adequate. I do not think it will come as a surprise to Members of the House that we in this corner of the House have a very positive position with regard to Crown corporations. We recognize that they are a very important part of Canadian life. We recognize that many years ago governments in our country realized that with Canada's great geographical area and small population there were many services that the private sector either could not or would not provide. Therefore, it became incumbent upon the governments to put forward this bill having to do with Crown corporations.

Since that time the Canadian economy has evolved into what we refer to in this country as a mixed economy, with a large private sector and a substantial public sector in the form of Crown corporations and other government bodies under Crown control or partly owned by Crown corporations. Unfortunately, in recent years the credibility of Crown corporations has been called into question. I believe we can lay a lot of the blame for that on the Government. It has not kept an adequate control on the Crown corporations.

What has been the purpose of some of these Crown corporations, Mr. Speaker? In some cases, such as that of PetroCan, they have provided a commercial entry into an area of the economy. In other cases, their purpose has been to develop a certain part of the country. In many instances, they provide a service. One example is provincial telephone companies, which in much of Canada are Crown corporations. I believe that electric companies in the entire country are Crown corporations. In some parts of Canada, automobile insurance has been taken over by Crown corporations with great success. There are a lot of very good success stories about Crown corporations. I would say that most of them in the country have been successes.

When my friend, the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller), was speaking earlier this afternoon, he made reference to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. I am very familiar with that Crown corporation, Mr. Speaker, since a large part of its business is done in my constituency. I would like to relate its experience very briefly.

This corporation moved into an industry which was in terrible shape in the late 1960s. At that time it was controlled by a number of private corporations, which were not acting at all in the best interests of the fishermen, the people for whom the industry should be providing the most benefit. These private corporations were operating in a dog-eat-dog fashion. They basically controlled the fishermen through their initial payments and, in most cases, lack of a final payment, and through the provision of start-up fees for getting into the business at the beginning of each season. In many ways they were endangered employees. Most of them were fairly poor as a result of that.

In the late 1960s, provincial Governments asked the federal Government to step in and fix it up. The federal Government moved in and provided a very successful corporation. At the present time, fishermen in most of western Canada who come under that body are able to earn at least an adequate living, if not a great living. I certainly do not want to give the impression that this is a perfect corporation. It is not. There are many improvements which could be made. However, there is no arguing with the fact that the situation for the workers is vastly better than it was previously.

What happens to so many corporations? In recent months we have heard much about the computer company which lost hundreds of millions of dollars. We have certainly heard of the scandalous situation of Canadair and de Havilland. We all know the story of Canada Post. I am most amused by the quarterly reports which we receive from the Chief Executive Officer of Canada Post, Mr. Warren, informing us how much things have improved since he took over the corporation. Almost ironically, within days of receiving a quarterly report I often receive a letter from a constituent telling me a horror story he or she has experienced in getting mail delivered.

What should we do, Mr. Speaker? In his opening comments last week my friend, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), said that we must give these corporations a clear mandate with public responsibility and public direction. We then must ensure that they stick to that mandate and operate within the objectives which this House gives them when the corporation is established. That does not mean that we are going to interfere in the day-to-day operations. Indeed, if this piece of legislation is to give the Cabinet the right to interfere in the day-to-day operations of Crown corporations, then I think the Bill has to be changed. The responsibility for day-to-day operations must be left up to the board of directors and the chief executive officer. However, we must ensure that Crown corporations, like any other corporation, operate with sound management in the best interests of the shareholders, who are the taxpayers of the country.

I would like to make a few comments on the parliamentary reform committee that the Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) was talking about a few moments ago. You well know what I am speaking of, Mr. Speaker. You were one of the leading members of that committee. You are aware that we debated at some length the need for controls and government accountability in many different areas, including Crown corporations and Departments. We received some degree of accountability through the fact that government Departments must now submit their reports to standing committees. However, we also identified the fact that there are many corporations which do not put out annual reports. There are many corporations which are partially owned by the federal Government that should be accountable to the Parliament of this country.

As the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) pointed out, we called for the establishment of a committee to which all Crown corporations, quasi-Crown corporations and partly owned corporations will report. As the Hon. Member said, it is lamentable that this report still lies on the Table of the House and that nothing has been done about it. It calls the good faith of the Government into question and begs the question as to whether the Government has something to hide about the operation of these Crown corporations. We would certainly hope that is not so, but when we see the scandals of recent weeks, notably that of Canadair and de Havilland, after their huge losses, having had the nerve to grant bonuses to some of their senior executives, we think it is time that Members of the House of Commons, who are the representatives of the shareholders, have a say in how those corporations are run.

In closing, I think that most Members would agree, and certainly we in this Party believe, that Crown corporations are too important to the well-being of this country to be left alone. It is very important that they maintain their credibility. For that reason we believe that through this piece of legislation and amendments to it, through the adoption of the recommendation made by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures for a standing committee, Crown corporations will be made accountable to the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the tired, old, worn out Government has given us another useless, pitiful and disgraceful piece of legislation. It is all smoke and mirrors without any true substance at all. This is evident when one sees de Havilland, Petro-Canada, the CBC and Canadair. I could go on with a list of 420 Crown corporations.

Mr. Foster: The tories set up the CBC.

Mr. Cook: If they remained silent, they might learn something, but that would be asking a great deal. The Government has been studying Crown corporations since 1972 and has been promising reforms since 1977. We have read the various reports of the Auditor General and of the Public Accounts Committee. We have had the Lambert Commission and various reports by academics. There is a consensus that something must be done in Canada to bring Crown corporations under control. However, Bill C-24 is totally inadequate. I do not know why the Government has bothered with it.

Bill C-24 entails a clear and major erosion of Parliament's control over Crown corporations. Of course, there was not that much control to begin with. Parliament will have no control over the creation of subsidiaries by Crown corporations. A Minister need not get parliamentary approval for the creation of a Crown corporation if he or she already has the power to do so through an existing Act of Parliament. There are at least 12 pieces of legislation that give Ministers such power.

Bill C-24 gives immense regulatory power to the Government. Virtually every clause of the Bill contains a regulation-making power by which the Government, in effect, defines how that clause will operate or which Corwn corporations will be exempted from the requirements imposed by that clause. In effect, the Bill states that regulations can change the clause, so the Government is offering nothing to the people of Canada except to ask then to trust it. That has been the problem with Crown corporations in the past.

There are few, if any, criteria in the Bill which constrain or establish a framework within which the Governor in Council may make regulations. Bill C-24 converts boards of directors into advisory boards with little or no real power. In the private sector, the principal role of the board of directors is to recruit the chief executive officer and to supervise his stewardship of the corporation. According to Bill C-24, the Cabinet appoints the chief executive officer and sets his tenure and remuneration. Cabinet also appoints the chairman and the auditor, and it approves the by-laws and may even make laws for the board of directors.

The basic problem is that the Crown corporations do not know to whom they are responsible. Real authority is not exercised by a Cabinet Minister but by Treasury Board, groups of Ministers or the Cabinet as a whole. It is certainly not exercised by an individual Minister. As a result of being accountable to so many ministers, Crown corporations are accountable to no one. However, I suggest that this is probably to the Government's advantage, because what Minister would want to be totally responsible to any Crown corporation after the mess that has been made of them over the years?

The proliferation of Crown corporations has meant that the task of ensuring their accountability has become much more difficult and really much more important. No matter how good a government's accountability regime, it will not work so long as the trend to the creation of more Crown corporations continues.

The first step under Bill C-24 should have been to reduce the number of Crown corporations that we need. Every means should be utilized, either by selling them, giving them away, winding them up or making them smaller. However, we certainly do not need the present number of Crown corporations.

The increase in Crown corporations has not been accompanied by a comprehensive overhaul of the legal and administrative machinery for ensuring their accountability. We have not heard the objectives of Crown corporations properly clarified. Boards of directors should be obliged to articulate their understanding of their corporations' objectives on a regular basis. If the Government does not agree with those objectives, it can exercise its power as the sole shareholder to direct a change.

It is not clear to me from this Bill to whom the Government wants the Crown corporations to be accountable. Is it Parliament, Treasury Board, Finance Ministers, standing committees or various government officials? They are nominally accountable to many but truly accountable to no one which, I suggest, is evident from the scandals of the last few years. There should be regular, reliable and timely reporting and disclosure policies for all Crown corporations. Why is that not set out clearly in the Bill? Appointments to boards should be of the highest quality, and the Government must have the will to forgo patronage. Directors' terms should be for one year, not multiple years, and performance, not presumption, should govern the appointment and reappointment.

Boards should be given responsibility and the necessary power to do the job. Furthermore, interrelationship with Government should be streamlined, simple, expeditious and effective. There should be no ambiguity in these objectives.

I think an analogy with the private sector is worth-while pointing out. The private sector involves shareholders. In the case of Crown corporations, the shareholders are the people of Canada, and through them, their elected representatives. I am a shareholder in every Crown corporation, but those Crown corporations do not give me the information that I would receive as a shareholder in a private company. The board of directors should select the chief executive officer, as it does in the private sector. While I admit that the Government can appoint the board of directors, the members of any board of directors should have some ability to operate those corporations.

Every Crown corporation should make a quarterly report as well as provide financial statements. Their financial accounting should be conducted in the same way as is done in any other company and they should not hide the truth from their shareholders, the people of Canada, as they do now.

The Canadair, de Havilland and other scandals have cost me as a taxpayer million of dollars. I find the attitude of this Government in this Bill C-24, which is its mirror image, does absolutely nothing to clean up the horrible mess it has created. It is shameful to bring this Bill before the House in this form. All I can say to this tired old Government is, for heaven's sake, in this case in the interest of all Canadians, why not withdraw this Bill, clean up the act and make Crown corporations accountable to the House of Commons? Let us get some facts out on a quarterly basis so that we can save a dollar now and then for the taxpayer, about which this Government does not seem to care. What's a billion? Canadair can tell you what a billion is. The taxpayers of Canada as voting shareholders will have a chance to tell you, Members opposite, in terms of your tenure as the board of directors of this country what they think. You, over there, have to be thrown out for the benefit of all.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words. The Government opposite has a tendency to wait until the later months of spring as we get into the time of adjournment to bring in a whole host of complex and overdue pieces of legislation, such as Bill C-24, to create the illusion of progress and activity on behalf of the people whom they have poorly represented these past 14 years. That is what Bill C-24 is all about. It is the same in the case of Bill C-19, the omnibus Bill which purports to amend so many aspects of the Criminal Code including sentencing, computer crime, drinking drivers, fire arms, and a whole long list of important measures of reform. They have all been thrust upon this House in the dying moments of a dying Government merely to create the illusion of action. Here we are once again faced with a piece of legislation. Suddenly the Government awakened to the realization that the Crown corporations, which it has created in abundance over the past 14 years, perhaps 15 years under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), have been disastrous in their consequence to the people of Canada. It has not mattered whether these Crown Corporations have been in a form to regulate and their regulatory powers have run out of control. It has not mattered whether they were corporations created to fulfil some great and important national purpose by way of providing a monopoly service to the people of Canada, which then became deficit ridden and top heavy with bureaucracy. It does not matter whether we are talking about the Crown corporations that were created to generate a positive industrial climate by developing new initiatives in different areas in which Canada had not previously been engaged. In all of these cases the Government opposite has failed miserably to bring these Crown corporations under control, to make them accountable to the people, who, after all, ought to be considered as the shareholders. If the Crown is to operate corporations in the name of the people of Canada, what better place to make them accountable than in this House of Commons where those who represent the people of Canada are empowered and should be welcome to overview the management of such major enterprises? As other Members have pointed out we have now created, at last count I think, over 450 corporations of this sort in Canada. We cannot count all of the subsidiary little creatures that have spun off from the major corporations, because they are being created virtually day after day without the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada being invited to scrutinize the rationale, the raison d'être for the creation of these new agencies.

If we look at Bill C-24 in detail, we can see that it will not go too far to resolve this fundamental question of accountability. One of the reasons Crown corporations have not been held accountable is that the legislation under which they were created, where indeed that legislation has been debated in the House of Commons, is more or less just a shell, a framework in which broad powers of discretion are granted to the Governor in Council. If we look at the detail of this Bill, we see no means of bringing this lack of direction under control. In fact, the regulation making powers of the Governor in Council will be enhanced under the provisions of this Bill.

We have also pointed out that the boards of these corporations and their chairmen are not directly accountable to Parliament. Under existing legislation, most of the boards are accountable to responsible Ministers. But under the proposals contained in this Bill, Mr. Speaker, that level of responsibility—accountability to a specifically designated Minister—would be diminished and the corporations and their boards would be asked to report to a Cabinet committee, thus the direct responsibility to the House of Commons and to a responsible Minister would be diminished even further.

If we were to prepare a Bill of this nature dealing with the necessary structure and framework under which Crown corporations were required to operate, it would begin with the notion that no Crown corporation has the perpetual right to existence. We would begin with the notion that Crown corporations would be required to come annually to Parliament to justify their financial plans and their borrowing requirements. Members of the board would be called before parliamentary committees to demonstrate their expertise in conducting the affairs of a corporation. When such a corporation was established under legislation to serve certain aspects of a national interest, that is to say to provide transportation in remote parts of the country, which was the original mandate for the CNR and Air Canada, then it would be incumbent upon the directors of that corporation to come before Parliament annually and point out the extent to which that national interest was being served.

The question in the case of Air Canada of meeting the convenience and the necessity of an affordable service to the travelling public, for example, would have to be addressed by the chairman of that corporation. He would be accountable to Parliament for the continuation of his responsibility, not accountable to the Cabinet or the Prime Minister.

The system of politically appointing the chief executive officer or the chairman of a Crown corporation and his board—I should correct that slightly, the chief executive officer is not supposed to be a political appointee, although in many cases he is, but it is quite evident that the chairmen or chair persons of major Crown corporations are appointed for political reasons—that practice must come to an end, Mr. Speaker. If a Crown corporation is to be accountable to the taxpayers of Canada in whose interests it is supposed to operate, then the Parliament of Canada—just as in a private corporation where the board of directors is selected by the votes of the shareholders—the Members of this House of Commons, should have the right to examine the proposed occupants of the key positions on the board of a corporation, and indeed in some case this House should vote on those positions.

Another area where Crown corporations should be brought under control is their almost unlimited ability to borrow money privately in the name of Her Majesty without adequate overview by the people's representatives here in the House of Commons. In other words, the extent to which Crown corporations incur financial responsibility must be strictly controlled. There ought to be a relationship drawn between the equity, the asset value of the Crown corporation, and the amount of liability it incurs. Those liabilities should be permanently entered on the books of that corporation as a liability to be cleared from the earnings of that corporation, unless the chairman and board of directors can justify the deficits from the point of view of fulfilling some element of the national need.

There is no provision in this legislation to restrict the ability of Crown corporations to spawn subsidiaries. There is no provision to prevent Government Ministers from creating Crown corporations merely as a smokescreen, to remove from their area of responsibility a corporation that is going wrong, as was the case with CDIC. The responsible Minister did not want to have to account for the disastrous and tragic mismanagement of Canadair, de Havilland and Eldorado Nuclear. Therefore, the Government hived them off into a new subsidiary organization, CDIC, whose purpose to this date has not been clearly stated in this House of Commons. It appears to be a ruse to deny parliamentarians the right to scrutinize those corporations by removing them one step from the overview of this Parliament.

When we look at the track record, we see that Canada Post is incurring annually a deficit in excess of $500 million. We should look at the deficits incurred by the CBC. We can turn on the CTV television network and obtain virtually the same quality programs without incurring a deficit of half a billion dollars a year. We have to ask if this Bill is adequate.

In conclusion, it is obvious to the people of Canada that a major overhaul is essential in the management of our Crown corporations. This Bill will just not fill the bill.

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in joining with my colleagues in speaking to this Bill I wish to spend my allotted time on Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act dealing with Crown corporations, by addressing one very crucial aspect of this legislation, one that is fundamental to my Party's view of financial accountability. It is important because, while it demonstrates a gaping flaw in Bill C-24, it is characteristic of the current Liberal's inclination to snub a tradition of trust with the electorate at the same time as it takes steps to legislate sloppiness and protect bunglers. This Bill legislates against the tradition of ministerial responsibility.

As the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) outlined in his speech opening second reading, this Bill once again ducks the whole notion of ministerial accountability. We have heard from political commentators that the so-called Trudeau era ushered in the practice of collegial decision-making. I suggest that Bill C-24 provides eloquent testimony to the failure that this practice has been in terms of public policy formulation and the efficient operation of the Government of Canada.

Collegiality might better be viewed as the attempt to protect the slender reputations of political appointees who found themselves stuck in ministerial roles demanding far more managerial moxie than they could ever muster. Except for geographical coincidence, they should never have been considered ready to manage anything more than their golf scores. Even then, they would have needed to have a foursome.

The Hon. Member for Calgary South outlined my Party's position on ministerial accountability. He said:

> —we will never solve the problems of Crown corporations until Crown corporations come under an effective regime of individual ministerial responsibility. C-24 goes in the opposite direction. The individual minister is nothing but a post box. The real authority is exercised by Cabinet or the Treasury Board—groups of Ministers, rather than individual Ministers . . . In being accountable to so many Ministers, Crown corporations will continue to be accountable to no one.

The Government maintains that this Bill seeks to address the problems of the accountability of Crown corporations, as pointed out in various studies ranging from the Auditor General's report, the Lambert report, and its other self-appointed experts. This is nonsense. What this Bill does is to enshrine all the worst inclinations this Government has demonstrated in unnecessary bureaucratization of a process that clearly demands the hands-on intervention of responsible Ministers held accountable by Parliament. In Bill C-24 we are offered regulation instead of responsibility, mud instead of stone, and spinelessness instead of gumption.

Let me offer a case in point, one that illustrates the often useful vehicle of a Crown corporation which has gone sour, and worse. During 1966 and 1967, the federal Government was busying itself creating the National Museum's board. As originally envisaged, the board was to offer centralized services to the National Museums and Galleries. However, in settling on a model for this board, the Government chose the structure of the British Coal Board to oversee the best interest of Canadians in housing and exhibiting their heritage in an educational fashion. Think of the example of the British Coal Board. Needless to say, what Canadians actually got was a messy bureaucratic structure which takes up nearly three-quarters of all monies allocated in the federal budget to museums. That way we see the current administration able to hide away the National Museums Construction Board, which will not be audited until 1989, which is hell-bent on building new galleries and museums before the Minister, who should be responsible, has even begun to devise the programs by which they will be run.

The viability of the Crown corporation as a vehicle for public interest is being threatened by the tendency for Ministers to hide behind bureaucracy rather than to send clear signals to that bureaucracy and then be prepared to stand in Parliament and defend them. This Bill demonstrates no newfound desire to open Crown corporations to public scrutiny, to let the interest groups regularly and systematically react, whether it be through the vehicle of parliamentary committees or whatever. On the contrary, Bill C-24 has the seeds of even more blatant attempts by our collegial federal Cabinet to spend its way into the political hearts of Canadians while it eats its way into the future of their children and grandchildren.

There are many illustrations. When talking about responsibility, I think not only of the responsibility in cultural areas but of the responsibility in public transport. In the last few days I have been reviewing the service of VIA Rail into the Kitchener-Waterloo area. I spoke to passengers about that Crown corporation, the funding for which is still a $1-vote in the Estimates. It is a corporation which is impossible to influence even though the citizens are directly affected by it. I regularly found that the insensitivity of this Crown corporation is such that all of the advertisements in the Kitchener-Waterloo area relate to national travel and it is impossible for passengers wishing to travel from Kitchener-Waterloo to Toronto to find those trips advertised by a government agency in their own newspaper.

I could go on. My colleagues have been outlining the failure of this Bill to meet the reality of what we see as being a substructure of Government running amok. Each of us could spend hours illustrating this from our own experiences.

Let me conclude my remarks by indicating that not only is the lack of ministerial responsibility one of the fundamental shortfalls of the Bill but, as well, the scope of the Bill is very limited. Bill C-24 does not cover many of the major structural problems related to Crown corporations as a whole. It is, for example, silent on the matter of internal government organization and on the matter of privileges and immunities of Crown corporations. It is silent about whether we will find more Crown corporations hiding behind the Combines Investigation Act and whether public servants should serve on the boards of Crown corporations. It is silent about the extent of the Government of Canada's accounting entity and the creation of parliamentary oversights. In addition, the Bill covers only wholly-owned corporations. It does not apply to the more than 100 mixed and joint enterprises that exist.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that the public is not being fooled by this cosmetic effort. Bill C-24 demonstrates that the Government is out of step with the thinking of Canadians and their desire for accountability of the tax dollars that are spent. I join with my colleagues in asking the Government to withdraw this Bill and return to Parliament with something which will really tackle the serious concerns which have been reflected in the House.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to participate in today's debate concerning the control and accountability of Crown corporations. Crown corporations have played a very long and valuable role in the development of Canada. As long ago as 1841, the joint Governments of Upper and Lower Canada, the Government of the United Provinces, set up a board of public works to build canals in the country which was known as Canada at that time. As long ago as 1906, Ontario Hydro was established as a Crown corporation which had a monopoly on producing electricity in the Province of Ontario. That corporation was set up by a Conservative Government in 1906.

Many provinces have found it useful and necessary to set up Crown corporations, most of which have been patterned after a monopoly, with regard to the offering of telephone services. As an example of that, I cite the Government of my own Province of Saskatchewan and the Government of the neighbouring Province of Manitoba. In terms of providing services for the new airline industry, for example, Trans-Canada Air Lines was established as a Crown corporation to provide service right across the country.

I suppose there are many different ways to look at Crown corporations, because there is a great range of work that can be done by Crown corporations and a great many ways in which Crown corporations may function. Some very useful and beneficial Crown corporations do exist. Corporations which are often thought of as Crown corporations, such as the Canadian Wheat Board, have been very useful. The Canadian Wheat Board does an excellent job of marketing farmers' grain in western Canada, the area for which it has responsibility, and it does so in the most efficient manner possible. Without extracting a profit from its users, it returns all of its benefits and all of its surplus funds back to the farmers who use the Wheat Board. When Crown corporations function in that way, they provide a benefit to the users and a benefit to the economy as a whole.

We have seen examples of Crown corporations being created to bail out investors who have done a poor job. We saw this happen in 1919 when the Borden Government established the Canadian National Railways by rolling three nearly bankrupt railway companies into one. The shareholders of those companies were protected because the Government took over the liabilities of those railways and kept on paying dividends by way of interest. The CNR had a great deal of difficulty functioning because what had happened was that the Government had in effect taken over the assets of those railways for far more than their market value.

A similar example occurred a few years earlier when the Liberal Government of Saskatchewan began to establish a government grain elevator corporation, the establishment of which was against its will. The farmers insisted on having a government-operated elevator company in order to avoid some of the practices in which the free enterprise elevator owners were engaged. The Government of the day did not want to enter into the elevator business but was forced into it, by the farmers. Consequently, the Government chose to buy all of the losing elevators across the country. It bought the poorest elevators in the poorest locations with the worst managers and combined them all. By golly, the Government was right. The Government could not run an elevator company. Since that time, many other corporations have been set up by the Crown that have not followed that route but have been very efficient and effective. It is simply a matter of what the mandate of a Crown corporation is and what the written and unwritten agendas of the management of the Crown corporations are.

I believe that a Bill which would attempt to make Crown corporations more accountable and would set out rules for them to follow would be of some use to the country. The effects of the proposed legislation have been indicated several times in the speeches we have heard up to this point. Given the few moments left to me, I would like to point out that we have some questions regarding the ability of this legislation to provide the necessary control and accountability, given the fact that there now exist Crown corporations which act as holding companies.

The proposed Canadian Development and Investment Corporation would act in effect like a little Argus or Power Corporation. There would be a great many other second, third and fourth-ranked Crown corporations under that corporation. Under this legislation, the Parliament of Canada would only be setting out accountability provisions for the granddaddy corporation, the CDIC, and would not have very much say or control over what goes on in the second, third and fourth-level corporations.

As well, another form of involvement of Crown corporations which we are seeing quite often is the entry of Crown corporations into joint ventures and the setting up of other Crown corporations in which the parent Crown corporation is a one-third or one-half shareholder. This legislation does not make clear at all how the Parliament of Canada will be able to control those assets, which are under the name of the Crown and managed by a Crown corporation but exist beyond the control of Members of Parliament and beyond the accounting process that is set up by this legislation. We do not think that those questions have been adequately answered at this point in time.

We believe that the legislation should take those kinds of real life, current-day problems into account when it goes to committee. We feel, therefore, that the legislation needs some further amendment and further strengthening if indeed parliamentarians will be able to make the Crown corporations of the country accountable to them on behalf of the people of Canada who act as the shareholders of these corporations.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO REINSTATE CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved that Bill C-214, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (death sentences), be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I hope it is the intention of the House to pass this measure, because the people of Canada are getting tired of waiting for the reinstatement of capital punishment.

I want to deal with the problem today from the viewpoint of the man on the street, and from the viewpoint of 85 per cent of the people who sent me here. First, I think the terms should be defined. In the Bill, capital punishment means the death penalty for the murder of another human being that is deliberately planned and executed, and where the person committing the act is found guilty beyond the shadow of a doubt. I want to make it clear that if there is any doubt whatsoever, the execution should not take place, in order to do away with the suggestion that we may hang the wrong man.

The first point I would like to deal with is that it is time the long moratorium on capital punishment ended. The people want it to end, and I think statistics will show that it should end. Canadians are angry. They believe in democracy and they want to know why the Government of Canada is not reflecting their wishes.

What are their wishes? According to the polls, the vast majority of people want the death sentence reinstated for first degree murder, where there is no shadow of a doubt. In 1972, the polls showed that 63 per cent of the people wanted the death penalty reinstated. In 1975, it rose to 69 per cent, and 79 per cent if it involved the death of a police officer. In 1983, the polls showed that 85 per cent of the people wanted capital punishment reinstated. When 85 per cent of the people of the country want something done, surely it is the responsibility of the government in power to reflect that thinking in the legislation. That many people cannot be wrong.

We live in a democracy. I do not accept the theory that the Government is providing leadership. His the people whom we are representing. When I knocked at doors in my own riding, more than 85 per cent of the people wanted capital punishment reinstated. If I did not stand for that, I would have had to tell them so, and I am doubtful if they would have elected me.

Why is the Canadian public feeling terrorized? Why are women afraid to walk in the streets of our cities after dark and sometimes before dark? Why is it not safe to put your can in an underground parking lot, or even in a parking lot above the ground in some cases? I think there are a number of reasons. There are too many murderers walking the streets. We do not know when those who are in prison are going to get out.

There was a very definite example of that just in the last day or so with a man who strangled four women. One of them was a schoolteacher in Calgary; the other three women, I believe, were from Quebec. He strangled them. A sex maniac. What happened? He was supposed to get a life sentence, but he was out at a fancy restaurant for dinner without enough guards to look after him. He went to the washroom and he escaped. He could have killed another woman. Fortunately, he was caught before he did that. It is not good enough for the Minister to say, as he did this afternoon, "I am not sure what went wrong". I know what went wrong. The man should have been executed after he murdered the first or second person. We should not have waited until he murdered four people.

How many times does this happen in Canada with murderers committing their second, third and fourth murder? The bleeding hearts of the country say, "We are rehabilitating them". I would have laughed, if it were not so sad, when the Hon. Minister said today that the chap took sexual therapy. Well, sexual therapy did not do Boden much good. I am doubtful if it is doing anyone else much good. What is wrong is that we are catering to our murderers. We are giving more attention to the murderers than we are to the victims. The people of Canada are getting fed up with it.

Another case—and I do not want to deal with this in detail because I would like to deal with it at another time—is that of Clifford Robert Olson. He murdered 11 young people, people who were in the spring of their lives. He deliberately planned and murdered those young people. What he did to them before he murdered them God only knows. I do not say that in a profane way. Of course, Olson knows the abuse to which he may have submitted those young people before he murdered them and before he buried them. Then he bragged that he killed at lot more than 11 people. He tells us that he killed several more in the United States. Now he wants to write a book and make money from the deaths of the kids. It has gone too far and the people are getting fed up with this bleeding heart business.

Let us look at Brown and Peters in my own riding. They went out and searched to find a woman or girl whom they could sexually abuse, mutilate and then cover with gasoline and burn the evidence. One young married woman who ran out of gas happened to be their victim. It could could have been your daughter or your wife, Mr. Speaker, who happened to be on that road that night. But it was a young lady. If that was not enough, a short time afterward they watched stores to see if they could find a young girl who was left alone. Finally they found a store, went in the back way and took her out. They mutilated, abused her, and then covered her with gasoline and burned her. What happened to them? They got life. I would not be surprised if they are out on parole right now. There are so many bleeding hearts in this country who think that such men can be rehabilitated, men who are deliberately committing murder, who get their kicks out of murder. The kick they should get is at the end of a rope, and it should be their last kick.

There is also the Shearing case in British Columbia, that of a man who murdered three generations all in one night. He killed them, burned them and tried to destroy the evidence. It was carefully planned. He did not know the two families. It might have been you and your wife in the trailer, Mr. Speaker, but it happened to be those two particular families. Who knows what other murderers are lurking beside some national park waiting for the same thing to happen? In the way these murderers are treated afterward, there is certainly no deterrent. They are put in prison and they are given special attention. They are guarded from other prisoners. The other prisoners would not stand for it. There would be another murder if Olson was ever let loose in a prison. But do not worry, he will get out. "Life" does not mean a life sentence any more. Life means 20 years or 25 years, if it means that much. The prisoner is then supposedly rehabilitated. Yes, just like Boden. We are fortunate that Boden did not commit another murder. No wonder the Canadian people are terrorized. "Life" does not mean life. If it did, perhaps 85 per cent of the people of this country would not want capital punishment returned. "Life" does not mean life; it means 15 years or 20 years, and less than that in some cases.

Shearing got 25 years, and what did the judge say? I quote from part of his comments when sentencing, "... this senseless, brutal, cold blooded murder of six innocent people, three generations, murdered". For what? So he could have their trailer. That is how he views human life, and we make sure that he lives and we as taxpayers give him the best to eat. The prisoners are receiving the best of food, particularly those like Olson, Shearing, Brown and Peters, who are put into special protective areas. They eat a lot better than people on relief and a lot better than people who are unemployed, I will tell you that, Mr. Speaker. If you do not believe me, go to the prisons and see what they are eating. In the Calgary remand centre a short time ago prisoners went on strike because they are getting too much turkey. Well, I know people in my riding who are lucky if they get turkey once a year. That is why the Canadian people are angry.

People say the death penalty is not a deterrent. I happen to believe it is a deterrent. I respect those who think it is not, but I cannot follow their logic. People love life and people will do anything to stay alive. It is only the exceptional person who wants to die. We struggle to remain alive. Some people say that capital punishment is not an effective deterrent, that it is never used. We are told that it did not produce results. Well, it has been a long time since we have had capital punishment, and people knew they would be hanged or executed if they committed a murder. It was in 1961 or 1962 that the last person was hanged in Canada. After that, every murderer was pardoned by a royal pardon. It became a policy of the Government, both Liberal and Conservative, to pardon the person who took another's life. It is too bad they could not bring back the lives which were taken.

How do people know that the death penalty is not a deterrent? From 1961 to 1967 murders kept increasing. In 1963, murders went up 1.04 per 100,000 per year on an average. In 1966, they went up to 1.2. In 1969, they went up to 1.67. In 1972, they went up to 2.05. In 1975, they went up to 2.46, and that was the peak. That was also the time when the death penalty was abolished altogether. Many people tell us to look at the years from 1978 to 1981 when the number of murders dropped from 2.46 to 2.38. But I do not believe that proves anything. I do not really believe statistics prove a great deal either. How many of us know how many murderers would be deterred if they knew they were going to be executed? They love life.

It does not matter what kind of law you have, some murders will be committed, murders of passion which happen in a moment over a family fight, a love affair, or many other instances. It just simply happens. It is not planned and deliberate. Those are a different type of murder. I speak now of those murders which are deliberately planned and executed by these people who know they are not going to be executed but are going to be given number one treatment in our jails, and that is what we are giving them.

In my view, the death penalty is a deterrent. It is an effective tool which pinpoints law and order. I respect the views of people who do not believe in capital punishment, even though I cannot follow their logic in light of things which are happening today. The abolitionists appear to have no objection to punishing a child for stealing or a grownup for committing rape. There is no objection to punishing them. But when someone is murdered, the worst of all crimes, then the appropriate punishment is objected to, namely, death to the killer. Violent crimes are becoming all too rampant throughout Canada. Elderly men and women are afraid to walk outside after dark in some of our cities. But we are more concerned about the criminal, in rehabilitating him, than we are about the victims of the crime. The rights of law-abiding citizens seem to be eroding with the increasing leniency toward crime in prison sentences and punishment.

When we get these people in prison, what rights do we take away from them? The only punishment is that they are locked behind bars. That is all. They have better food than many people outside of prison who are honest and clean living. They have entertainment. They are even provided with movies, which many of us would not go to see, blue movies. They have the best of pool tables. Oh, yes, we treat them wonderfully well. We are rehabilitating them. We give them sexual therapy, and what happens? We are now providing conjugal visits at the expense of the taxpayers for prisoners serving a life sentence. We do not even stop with those who are married; we even give this privilege to those who are not married. That is the way we are operating our prisons. Common law wives can go in for conjugal visits at the expense of the taxpayer. Sometimes I wonder why we do not take the prostitutes away from our main hotels and put up a sign in front of our prisons saying, "March up and down here. Government will provide a trailer for you". I hope that is not the next program because it is almost that bad now.

Yes, we must provide food, clothes and shelter, but let us forget about all this bleeding heart business on the pretense of rehabilitating these people. If they did not know what they were doing, that is one thing, but when they know what they are doing, death is the proper punishment. I make no excuse or alibi for advocating that very thing.

I believe that the death penalty is a just punishment when someone deliberately plans to take the life of another human being and carries that plan out, particularly when the victims are young children and women. That is the kind of man Olson was, a yellow dog. He could not pick on a man his own size; he picked on kids or on women. The death penalty, in my view, is a deterrent. We have not given it a chance. We have not had the sure penalty of death on the books long enough for people who deliberately plan and kill and are found guilty beyond the shadow of a doubt. It has not been on the books long enough to show whether or not it is a deterrent, and I believe it is.

The death penalty prevents a second, third and fourth murder, as in the case of Boden. The school teacher in Calgary would still be teaching youngsters, helping people, if she had not been strangled by this man they call "Strangler Bill". The death sentence is a basic of justice in law. The death penalty is final because there can be no change after a murderer is executed. The courts must be sure that a person is executed only if and when that person is proved guilty beyond the shadow of a doubt to have murdered a child, a woman, a man, a guard, a policeman, another human being. If there is any doubt, then the murderer should be put in prison and not executed. What are we going to do with all these murderers as our prisons get fuller and fuller? Some day we will have so many murderers in our prisons that we will have to start building more prisons, another expense for the taxpayer.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that people who kill should get their desserts: execution. Let it be known across the land that that is what it is. I believe that then the number of deaths will decrease because all human beings love life.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on the issue of capital punishment. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has introduced a Bill to reinstate the death penalty for first degree murder, and I wholeheartedly disagree with that suggestion. I am disappointed that a man of his stature should have killing as the thrust of his speech. The psychology of killing appears to pervade an increasing proportion of our society. We see it in the killing of the unborn and those who are born with abnormalities. We see the thought pervading hospitals when they bring in a person with a broken hip who appears to have difficulty in orientation and in understanding what is going on. The thrust of this psychology of killing is really that we are seeking vengeance, and the more vengeance we seek, the more we promote the concept of killing.

In our system of justice, which is of very high calibre, there have been two cases of people found guilty of murder, and later their innocence was proven. Fortunately, they had been put in prison and not executed. It would have been a sad reflection on our system of justice had we lost those two men.

In 1976, Parliament had a free vote on capital punishment. The result was approval of the Bill officially bringing capital punishment to an end. Instead, as the Hon. Member for Bow River indicated, we have a imposed sentence of life imprisonment with no parole for at least 25 years for first-degree murder and 10 to 15 years for second-degree murder. However, it appears that that vote did not settle the matter. Since then there has been a stream of Private Members' Bills, motions and proposals for a national referendum on the subject. What has this accomplished? Absolutely nothing. Just a lot of window dressing about procedures governing appeals and executions.

There is only one point to be debated here, that is whether or not we want to bring back capital punishment. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we have to ask ourselves why this particular subject keeps coming back. We have to look at it in perspective. We have heard, and probably will hear, numerous arguments about the effectiveness of capital punishment as a deterrent. Statistics can be marshalled to show that the murder rate has not increased since capital punishment has been abolished. Reference will be made to trends in other western abolished. Reference will be made to trends in other western countries. However, I would like to deal with the moral question, because I think that is the key to understanding why this issue keeps coming up. It is perhaps also the key to determining whether or not the matter should once again be put to a vote in the House.

First, Mr. Speaker, every time those who favour capital punishment raise the matter, they inevitably give lurid and emotional examples of murders which have occurred recently. We hear examples of cold-blooded murders in individual ridings. Members do surveys of their constituents and find that a significant percentage are in favour of capital punishment. What these samples illustrate is but one side of the moral issue, namely, that everyone is outraged and horrified by such extreme crimes. No one wants to see a criminal get away with his crime. Every time a murder is committed we hear demands that the death penalty be brought back. Thus it is clear that for the anti-abolitionist the central issue is a moral one.

However, this is stating only one side of a difficult moral question. Those who keep introducing motions to reinstate capital punishment tend to ignore the other half of the problem, that is, whether the state has the right to take a human life deliberately. The right to life is given explicit recognition in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is not sufficient for anti-abolitionists to argue an eye for an eye. In other areas the state does not punish a crime in the same way it was committed. For example, we do not mutilate those who have been convicted of the crime of mutilation. I seriously question whether the appropriate punishment for the crime of murder is a corresponding act of murder by the state, and I have yet to hear any persuasive arguments to this effect from the other side.

I note the statements by those in favour of hanging that crime is on the upswing and we have lost our morality, that we must do something about these crimes. Well, if indeed Parliament, the criminal justice system or this Government did nothing about crime, then obviously it would be acting immorally. The fact is—and I think we can take some comfort from this solid fact—that Canadians enjoy an effective, sophisticated criminal justice system. The great majority of criminals, including killers, are apprehended by the police. The penalties provided in the Criminal Code for serious offences are severe, and I have noticed no reluctance on the part of the courts to impose such sentences. In 1977, capital punishment was replaced with a mandatory life sentence without eligibility for parole for 25 years. We certainly are not coddling criminals or acting immorally in handing out such sentences, but I hasten to point out that unfortunately in Question Period today details were presented to us by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) indicating that in a particular situation the implementation of such sentences is wanting. However, he has assured the House that this is an exception and will be fully investigated and appropriate measures taken.

Those who are in favour of capital punishment have the burden of proving that this form of execution by the state is justified. It seems to me that this ultimate penalty carries with it the seeds of severe injustice through its potentially unequal application to the poor. It is very rare that we see the rich, well supported and knowledgeable people go on to an execution. Usually they are able to get the support of the best criminal lawyers in the country. Through the use of their status in life, the support of their friends and the very skilful use of the laws, they are able to have their crime dealt with by a sentence other than execution. If you study the records, you will see that it is usually the ignorant and uneducated who are found guilty and who in so many cases have been, and in some countries still are, executed. So there is a very definite potential for error. This was demonstrated lately in the cases which have been mentioned. This has happened despite elaborate safeguards and guarantees built into our criminal justice system.

The definition problem also makes it difficult for the state to impose the death penalty fairly. However shocking some of the particular examples described, it is likely that many of these crimes would not constitute first degree murder given the emotional element of the crime and the lack of premeditation. These aspects of a crime are very difficult to prove and errors can occur. Moreover, I have heard it argued by retentionists that those who kill are sick, incurable souls. We do not execute the sick. We try to control them, through incarceration if necessary, in order to prevent repetition of their crimes.

It is often suggested that the majority of Canadians want capital punishment, the conclusion from this being that the Government must respect their wishes. The results of the Gallup poll which the Hon. Member has given us are certainly most impressive. However, he was not able to give us the circumstance under which those polls were taken. What were the factors that stimulated such a response at that time and place?

I believe that we must confront the moral issue, particularly in terms of our roles as MPs. Certainly the majority of Canadians do not want to pay taxes, for example, but no one is suggesting that we stop taxing. Our democratic system does not require that each MP vote every time according to the wishes of the majority of his constituents. That is not our role as Members of Parliament. This is particularly true of moral and philosophical issues like this one. His or her decisions must be based on reason, evidence and a sense of the morality of the issue. I believe that this principle of parliamentary democracy was articulated centuries ago by Edmund Burke, and I am willing to be guided by that well-known conservative.

There also appears to be a trend in the United States in favour of executing people by pills or lethal injections, as though this made execution somehow more humane, as if it was simply a matter of putting someone out of their misery.

The first such execution was carried out in Texas in December of 1982 on a prisoner named Charlie Brooks. In effect, they gave him a massive drug overdose to kill him. Whether we kill someone by hanging, shooting or by passing 2,000 volts of electricity through his body, we cannot sidestep the fundamental moral issue of whether or not this meditated killing by the state is justified.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I have chosen to emphasize the moral question in this capital punishment controversy. The 1976 free vote was a culmination of years of public debate on the issue. Approximately half the Members of the House at that time spoke on this matter. I know that many of them agonized over the moral question. Ultimately, Members voted according to their conscience, and the result was a majority in favour of abolition. The issue has not changed since this wide-ranging debate in 1976. I cannot see what would be gained by returning to the issue in a free vote.

Yes, there will continue to be horrifying examples of murder. I stress that these incidents will probably occur regardless of whether or not we have capital punishment. Members can conduct public opinion polls of their constituents, but it is not our role collectively to vote strictly according to public opinion surveys. The issue keeps coming up because it is a moral issue. It seems to me that in the 1976 debate the moral questions, from both sides, received a full and fair hearing.

I do not have the time to deal at length with the huge subject of deterrence, which is a moral question in itself. I would like to quote from an essay by Albert Camus, the Nobel Prize winner and passionate opponent of capital punishment. He said:

> It cannot be denied, however, that men fear death. The privation of life is indeed the supreme penalty and ought to excite in them a decisive fear. The fear of death, arising from the most obscure depths of the individual, ravished him; the instinct to live, when it is threatened, panics and struggles in agony. Therefore the legislator was right in thinking that his law was based upon one of the most mysterious and most powerful incentives of human nature. But law is always simpler than nature. When law ventures, in the hope of dominating, into the dark regions of consciousness, it has little chance of being able to simplify the complexity it wants to codify.
> If fear of death is, indeed, a fact, another fact is that such fear, however great it may be, has never sufficed to quell human passions.

The proof of this argument is that capital punishment has never succeeded in eliminating murder. I suggest that our strong and fair system of justice, including the criminal law, has shown itself to be a better approach to deterring criminal acts. It imposes appropriate punishments but, perhaps more important, it fosters respect for the law. The Government has also implemented firm gun control measures and is embarking upon crime prevention efforts that I believe will result in significantly reducing the opportunity to commit crimes.

I have heard no compelling reasons for reopening debate on an issue which has received as much House time over the last 30 years as any other single matter.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-214, an Act to amend the Criminal Code. I feel very strongly that we need a review before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in order to review some of the more recent statistics we have as a result of the abolition of capital punishment.

I would like to take a moment, Mr. Speaker, to discuss a couple of points that were brought up by the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki). First, there seems to be an inclination among members of both the Liberal and the New Democratic Party to refer in the House to cases in which people would have been hanged. They talk about two cases in which a person who was found guilty would not be alive today if the death penalty were in force. These people have since been found innocent. I remind both of these Parties that in both occasions, and in particular in the Don Marshall case in Nova Scotia, the charge was not first degree murder but second degree murder. The courts did not find the murder to be premeditated in the case of Donald Marshall. That person would not have been hanged had the law implementing capital punishment for premeditated first degree murder been in place.

The other point that was made by the Member for Hamilton West was that there was one strong point to be made, to paraphrase his comment, which is, that murders have not increased since the abolition of the death penalty. I would like to take this opportunity to point out to the Hon. Member that according to the statistics of Statistics Canada, it is the number of first degree murders committed while in the act of committing a criminal offence that have increased. That means murders while robbing a Beckers, a Mac's Milk or actions of that nature. The deterrent to carry a gun is not there, particularly a loaded gun.

Therefore, it is grossly unfair to say that, because we do not have capital punishment and because there is a decrease in first degree murders, we do not need capital punishment. If we could decrease the number of first degree murders that have occurred while in the act of committing a criminal offence by the deterrent of carrying a loaded gun, that would go a long way. I remind the Hon. Member that the number of first degree murders was decreasing when capital punishment was in place according to a great number of Statistics Canada figures. First degree murders were on a decline and they are still on a decline, thanks to the improvement in society. It still does not answer the question of when constituents feel that there needs to be a review of this very important question.

With respect to deterrents, there are those like myself who feel that it would definitely be a deterrent and there are those who feel differently. With all due respect, there are people who are probably far more expert in analysing the pros and cons of capital punishment than are most Members of Parliament, including myself. We cannot afford the disadvantage of not reviewing such an issue from time to time. Simply because we abolished capital punishment in 1976 does not mean that it should be abolished forever. There have been many types of legislation that have been put in place and either have not been implemented by the Government or have been overlooked or else have been amended as time have changed.

As far as violence while in the act of committing a criminal offence is concerned, I am sure the Hon. Member who is in support of abolition was horrified by the Barbara Turnbull case. She is an 18-year old girl from Mississauga, who was a Beckers' store clerk and also a volunteer worker with terminally ill cancer patients, who was shot in September, 1983, and now is paralyzed for life. I am sure he is also aware of the Nizam Ali case. He was an 18-year old boy who was stabbed to death recently while he worked the overnight shift at a fast food dispensing store. Constable David Utman is another example. He was a 38-year old Nepean police force officer who was shot to death at a west end shopping centre on October 14, 1983. The accused, one Peter M. Collins, escaped in June from the regional detention centre where he was awaiting trial on several robbery charges. I am convinced that bringing in capital punishment for premeditated first degree murder would deter us from carrying a loaded gun.

I am not picking on the Member for Hamilton West but he is the only member on the government side who has spoken on this issue so far. I would like to make one other point in response to his comments. During his remarks in reference to the remarks of the Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) who introduced Bill C-214 he said that he "could not substantiate the poll". I challenge the Member for Hamilton West to take his own poll. Let the Member ask a very simple question of the constituents in his riding. Let him ask if they support capital punishment for premeditated first degree murder, yes or no. I challenge him or any other Members of the House to take the same poll.

Surely, when Gallup takes a poll, it is a national poll. They do not look for the riding that has just experienced a most horrendous murder. They do it on a regular basis, and there has never been a poll taken in Canada that has demonstrated the support of abolition by a majority of people.

I believe that we as Members of Parliament have a certain obligation to our constituents who send us to Ottawa to represent them. It is not satisfactory simply to say that we abolished the death penalty in 1976 by a majority of six votes and so we have abolished it forever.

I remind Hon. Members that when we abolished the death penalty for first degree murder in 1976, I am sure that a great number of those in the House today who were here then have perhaps changed their minds. I know that I used to be an abolitionist. I am the son of a United Church Minister who fought long and hard for many years to see the death penalty abolished. When I came to Ottawa in 1979, I was still an abolitionist.

However, there comes a point in the conscience of every Member of Parliament when he or she must determine on many of these issues whether he or she will vote one of three ways; either for the position taken by the Party, on what he or she believes to be the majority wishes of the constituents, or on his or her own conscience. I found it very difficult as a Member of Parliament to satisfy my conscience when I voted against 87 per cent of the constituents in my riding. I did not ask that question if the people in my riding at a time when there was a horrendous murder case described on the front pages of any daily newspaper in Canada. In fact, I pointed out to them that I thought that the people in my riding might have changed and that there was a feeling that there might be a desire to maintain the abolitionist viewpoint. I was prepared to listen to my constituents, 87 per cent of whom voted to return to the death penalty for premeditated first degree murder.

I would be remiss if I did not take this opportunity to answer some of the questions that are so often asked of Members of Parliament who support capital punishment for premeditated first degree murder.

In addition to what has already been stated, the following points illustrate why it is favourable, in my humble estimation, to have capital punishment for premeditated murder reinstated. First, public opinion appears to be in favour of the death penalty. In a democracy, the will of the majority should be respected.

Second, the alternative of life imprisonment or 25 years of mandatory imprisonment may be harsher and more cruel punishment than death. Some prisoners in the position of facing this kind of alternative have voiced this kind of opinion publicly.

Third, in response to the argument that the state does not have the right to take a person's life, think what the state can do in wartime. One will see that the state has established the right to take another man's life.

Fourth, the victim's family should be a major factor in fitting the punishment to the crime. Next, the rate in Canada of homicidal offences generally and murder incidents in particular has more than doubled from 1961 to 1978. At a time when violent crime is increasing, the focus should be on the maximum possible protection of society rather than on the treatment of the criminal.

The final point is that in 1956, the parliamentary joint committee, after serious study, recommended retention of the death penalty.

I would say that the principle of democratic representation is a greater one than that of any single cause, whether or not, for the best of reasons, Members are convinced of their own rightness of action which is contrary to the clear opinion of the majority of their constituents. I for one do not quibble with, or seek to argue, the rights or wrongs of the case, although I have my own opinion about that. What I seek to defend is the right of the people to exert their will. This right, I feel, should supersede the right of government within the limits of order to exert its will if that is contrary to the peoples' will.

Finally, the principle of a free vote is far preferable to the muzzle which has been imposed on certain sections of seats in this House when it suits the purposes of certain interests. I say that with good reason. We had an Opposition Day motion to be considered publicly not as a vote of confidence or non-confidence in the Government two years ago in the House. It was introduced by the Conservative Opposition. We asked for no more, no less than that the subject of capital punishment be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and legal Affairs in order that we could review up-dated information, perhaps so that we could convince the abolitionists that we should have capital punishment or perhaps so that we could convince those in support of capital punishment that we should retain abolition. That is the democratic process. All government Members plus five Members in Opposition voted against even talking about it. That says something about Government and its lack of credibility in representing constituents when 80-some per cent of constituents in most polls and 70-some per cent of constituents in national Gallup polls support capital punishment for premeditated first degree murder.

What I would like to see happen with this Bill brought in by the Hon. Member for Bow River is to see it referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in order that expert witnesses from the John Howard Society and organizations that speak very strongly in support of abolition could be called so that all Members of Parliament would have a better understanding of the pros and cons of capital punishment. Failing that, Mr. Speaker, in order to carry the case before the House of Commons, we have to resort to Opposition Days, asking questions in the House, making statements under Standing Order 21, through Private Members Bills and through statements on motions as well as every other means we can conjure up so that someone can give some fair representation to constituents who send Members here to Ottawa to represent them.

It is seven minutes to six o'clock. I do not want to be accused of talking out this Bill. I am sure that if I sit down now there will probably be no other speakers and we could refer the subject matter of the Member for Bow River's Bill to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time in my years in Parliament that I have spoken on this question. I have voted on this question three times. I voted for abolition on each occasion. The people of my constituency who are part of that large majority which the polls tell us favour capital punishment knew my position and had the opportunity to end my career as a Member of Parliament if they thought that this was an issue that was so important and an issue on which I was so at odds with them that I ought not to continue to be a Member. But I am still here, Mr. Speaker.

I want to remind those Members who have spoken in support of capital punishment, and I respect their right to hold their views, that we have had three votes on this question. The last time we had this vote, the vote for abolition was supported by the Leaders of all three Parties, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the present Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), and the Rt. Hon. Member for Bow River, who was then the Leader of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise—

Mr. Orlikow: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I meant the Right Hon. former Prime Minister. He is not the Member from Bow River. Let me remind Members of Parliament that the Gallup polls in Great Britain show a similar support for capital punishment. I remind Members of Parliament here that the British Parliament recently had a free vote.

Mr. Domm: Good.

Mr. Orlikow: The British Parliament has a majority of members who are Conservative. The Government is led by the Prime Minister who is a supporter of capital punishment. The British Parliament again voted on the question and again rejected bringing back capital punishment.

Mr. Domm: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Orlikow: In virtually every democratic country, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Domm: Except Canada.

Mr. Orlikow: —Norway, Sweden, Holland, Denmark, Belgium, France, Spain, Australia, New Zealand, and Israel, all of them have abolished capital punishment. The State of Israel has the kind of problem that we will never have. It has terrorists operating almost daily. When Israel wanted to execute Adolf Eichmann for the millions of deaths for which he was responsible, Israel had to pass a special Act which applied only to Adolf Eichmann.

Mr. Domm: You will never get that chance in Canada.

Mr. Orlikow: Those countries have abolished capital punishment. The countries which have not abolished capital punishment are the military dictatorships of South America, communist countries—

Mr. Domm: The United States.

Mr. Orlikow: —such as the Soviet Union, China. Those are the countries which have capital punishment. I see no reason that I should follow the example of those countries on the question of capital punishment or on any other question. I see every reason for following the example which we have seen in virtually all democratic countries which have abolished capital punishment and which, incidentally, have among the lowest rates and numbers of murder of any countries in the world.

We have figures for the number and rates of murders which have occurred since the abolition of capital punishment. The facts are pretty clear, Mr. Speaker. The numbers and rate have decreased. In 1975, we had 701 murders. This figure includes manslaughter and infanticide. In 1980, the last year for which I have figures, that number is down to 593. The rate was 3.07. That figure is now down to 2.48. The rate is determined on the basis of offences per 100,000 of the population.

All the evidence is that capital punishment does not work as a deterrent. If it does not work as a deterrent, the only argument for capital punishment disappears. That being the case, I would vote again, as I have on earlier occasions, for abolition.

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me the floor. I suppose I could speak to this subject for at least half an hour, but since we only have one minute left until six o'clock, I have no objection if the House agrees to call it six o'clock, I think it is not really worthwhile to start a speech with one minute left. Could the House give me its opinion?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): In order to do that, we need unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, we do not have the unanimous consent of the House to interrupt the debate, and we only have about thirty seconds left. I wonder whether I should start my speech. Actually, the abolition of capital punishment was adopted by the House on July 14, 1976, for a variety of good reasons and after lengthy debate.

• (1800)

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the Bill presented in the House by the Hon. Member—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but it is now six o'clock.

The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION—STATUS OF ORDERS FOR DASH-8 AIRCRAFT MANUFACTURED BY DE HAVILLAND. (B) FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE OFFERED TO AIRLINE COMPANIES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to enter into the record information concerning the Dash-8 aircraft and the sale of this aircraft by de Havilland to three domestic Canadian airline companies. In telephone conversations today, I was advised that there is very little now standing in the way of the Government of Canada co-operating through the Crown corporation, de Havilland, so that these $60 million to $100 million worth of Dash-8s are sold to the three Canadian airline companies.

What good is an aircraft company in Canada if we cannot sell the aircraft to our domestic airlines? Atonabee Airways, a Peterborough company, has now moved its headquarters to Toronto. What is standing in the way of the sale of millions of dollars of aircraft by de Havilland to Air Atonabee, Time Air of Lethbridge and Norcanair of Saskatoon? It is very simple.

Competition in Ireland has come in with a comparable aircraft. It developed in its private sector an aircraft that seats 36, the same number of people, flies at less cost per mile and costs $2 million per aircraft less. It will sell to the Canadian passenger aircraft industry for over $2 million less per unit. In addition, it will sell with an interest rate of 7 per cent to Air Atonabee in Toronto.

What does the Government have to do in order to save the industry? I would point out that a loss of $100 million worth of business to de Havilland represents an immediate lay-off of 400 employees. It means cutting the work force from 2,450 to under 2,000 and a forecast of future lay-offs. The Canadian Government has dumped $700 million into de Havilland to build an airplane that cannot be marketed because of poor management on the part of a Crown corporation. That Crown corporation is directly accountable to the Cabinet. Regardless of whether or not the Economic Development Minister says we should get rid of it, the point is that we have put a lot of money into de Havilland and Canadair. Those who go on the air to talk about getting rid of these two companies have little compassion for the 2,450 employees at de Havilland.

We are not interfering, as the Minister would have us believe, with our GATT agreements when we offer to subsidize interest rates in order to compete on the international market in a domestic situation. We in the Opposition are asking the Government to take a very close look at the situation that now prevails. An Irish firm is offering 7 per cent interest to Atonabee Airways on the purchase of planes for $2 million less. We have invested $700 million in de Havilland and the Government is not prepared to subsidize the interest rates. Where is the justice that is required on behalf of those employees?

If that is not bad enough, Jack Austin appeared on Canada AM just last week and stated that we should be subsidizing interest rates to the tune of 2 per cent. I do not know what he meant by that. There is no one with any sense to answer for him in the House of Commons. All the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has said is that we are not in the business of subsidizing these industries in order for them to sell aircraft. If we are not in that business, then why did we dump $700 million into a company so it could build an aircraft that we cannot market?

I plead with the Government of Canada and with the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary who will respond to me to answer the question. Are we going to susidize Air Atonabee and de Havilland aircraft so that we can sell the Dash-8s or are we going to let $100 million go out the window through Time Air, Norcanair and Air Atonabee, and satisfy ourselves by saying that we have some strange agreement with GATT? This is a domestic matter. Another country has entered Canada and has undercut our own Crown corporation. I plead with the Government to meet the interest rate. If it can do it to build monuments in Algeria, it should be able to do it to sell aicraft.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) is to be congratulated for keeping this matter before the House. He does make a good point. When he has asked what good the aircraft industry in Canada is if we cannot sell to airlines in Canada, he makes a very valid point indeed, and one which we must take a very good look at. Unfortunately, the time that is available to me will not allow me to respond to all of the matters raised by the Hon. Member. It is too bad that we could not have a full-scale debate on this issue because I think it is one that is worthy of that kind of consideration.

When this issue first arose a few weeks ago, a great many false impressions were created regarding the status of potential purchases of the Dash-8 by Air Atonabee of Peterborough, Ontario, Time Air of Alberta and Norcanair of Saskatoon. Let me correct the record.

First, Air Atonabee had then and has now five conditional contracts for the Dash-8. There have been no cancellations of contracts. Second, Time Air had a contract for four Dash-8s. The contract was conditional on the availability of satisfactory sales financing. Time Air gave notice of cancellation because of a lack of this financing. The two parties are now discussing a new contract. Third, Norcanair has not signed a contract but is currently negotiating a contract for three Dash-8s. In the last two weeks, representatives of all three airlines have witnessed demonstration flights of the Dash-8. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, they really like that plane.

I hope that this will clear the air on the current status of de Havilland's dealings with those companies. All of these airlines would prefer to buy the Dash-8. That is why they are pressing so hard for financing concessions. They are tightly run enterprises with limited margins and must be extremely conscious of costs. This means that competitors offering low-interest sales financing have great appeal for Canadian regional operators. What Members have seen is a public lobbying effort to get a government decision on the type of competitive sales financing de Havilland may be able to offer. The pressure reflects the fact that these operators would sooner buy the Dash-8.

Embraer Brasilia is an example of what we are up against. Brazil has offered 10-year 90 per cent financing at interest rates as low as 7.5 per cent in Canada. This may be compared with the roughly 13.5 per cent interest rates which domestic carriers can negotiate with Canadian financial institutions.

The 360 Short aircraft has been named publicly as one that is taking customers from de Havilland. I must tell the House that this aircraft is not comparable to the Dash-8. It is unpressurized, which means it cannot fly above 10,000 feet and therefore cannot climb to avoid turbulence. It is also slower than the Dash-8. It is unlikely that the flying public would want to use this plane for any but the shortest flights.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS—CHURCHILL FALLS POWER CONTRACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last, that is May 3, the Supreme Court of Canada brought down a unanimous decision respecting the Upper Churchill Water Rights Reversion Act. They declared that legislation to be ultra vires, that is to say unconstitutional. That was a Bill which was brought in and passed by the Newfoundland legislature in 1980 to give the Government of Newfoundland the authority to withhold the water that was the source of power for the Churchill Falls Corporation Limited. The legislation was referred to the Supreme Court of Newfoundland by the Government of Newfoundland, in order to be sure it was on clear constitutional grounds. It was ruled by that court, in fact, to be constitutional. The Government of Newfoundland then referred it on to the highest court in the land, the Supreme Court of Canada.

I might have raised the question that day, to the Government of Canada, as to what steps it proposed to take with regard to the impact and the consequences of the decision. I did not because I wanted to wait 24 hours so as not to be seen to be emotionally shooting from the hip or, more precisely, to have an opportunity to examine the judgment and the consequences flowing from it. I raised the question on the following day, May 4. It can be found at page 3412 of Hansard. I put the question to the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Pepin). I served notice that I would be raising the question, because I knew that the Prime Minsiter (Mr. Trudeau) would not be in the House that day and I wanted the acting Prime Minister to be fully briefed. I put the question to the Acting Prime Minister as to what steps the Government of Canada intended to take to see that justice was done in this case. The Supreme Court of Canada addressed itself to the strict points of the law—to the letter of the law. They said that someone else would have to deal with the social and political ramifications of the legislation.

The genesis of Newfoundland's Upper Churchill Water Rights Reversion Act goes back to 1969, when the Government of Newfoundland through its agency, the Churchill Falls Corporation, entered into a long-term agreement with Quebec Hydro. It was a 65-year agreement for the sale of power from the Churchill Falls development to Hydro Quebec. The Quebec Government of the day made it very clear to the Newfoundland Government that if they did not sell the power to Quebec they would not be able to sell the power to anybody. In other words, Newfoundland would not be able to transmit its power through the Province of Quebec. Therefore, Newfoundland was forced to enter into a 65-year contract to sell that power for 2.5 mills.

That power is being sold today to New York State and to some of the New England states, as well as to the Province of New Brunswick and, to a lesser extent, the Province of Ontario, for 28 mills. The Economic Council of Canada estimated the income to the Province of Quebec to be $800 million. The income derived from that power to the people of Newfoundland—the owner of the resource—has been estimated to be $8 million. It is clearly a situation that cannot be condoned and cannot be allowed to continue.

The Acting Prime Minister, in reply to my question, said that it was a provincial matter. Clearly it is not a provincial matter because it deals with interprovincial trade, it deals with international trade, it deals with the National Energy Board and it deals with the National Energy Program. Under the Constitution all of these are clearly within federal jurisdiction. While the Acting Prime Minister was saying that it was a provincial matter, his colleague, the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Rompkey), was saying outside of this House that he felt the federal Government should have been involved in this matter.

How can the federal Government get involved? There are a number of ways. First of all, it must recognize that this injustice cannot be condoned and cannot continue. Second, it must recognize that we cannot hope to achieve justice from a government in Quebec that is dedicated to the separation and the breaking up of this country. We cannot expect to get just treatment from a separatist government in Quebec. Third, the Government must recognize that this power belongs to the people of Newfoundland, and should enjoy the same rights of passage as natural gas coming from the western provinces. When the Government of Canada builds a pipeline, it does not have to ask the Province of Manitoba or the Province of Ontario for permission to build the pipelines in order to get the gas into the markets of Montreal. We demand nothing less in terms of hydro power.

The purport of my question on Friday was to ask the Government of Canada in the name of justice, in the name of simple justice, if it would invoke the powers it has under the National Energy Program, specifically under the National Energy Board, to treat the transmission of hydro electric power in the same way as we treat the transmission of other sources of energy, for example, gas, in terms of declaring it in the national interest that common carriers carry this power across the Province of Quebec and into the markets of Ontario and New England so that Newfoundland could enjoy the revenue.

We are a poor province, Sir. We have had a number of blows. We pay the second highest domestic electric rates in the country in St. John's, Newfoundland. I believe Charlottetown pays the highest. The City of Montreal, I believe, pays the lowest domestic electricity rates. That is because of the power it enjoys from a Newfoundland resource.

I said to the Prime Minister that this was a festering sore on the face of Canada and unless something was done to correct it, unless there was remedial action, there would be dire consequences. The people of Newfoundland have been much harder hit by this decision than by the decision with respect to the offshore oil and gas. Clearly this is perceived by every man, woman and child who has the power of judgment and rationality to be a gross injustice to the people of Newfoundland. I can only say to you, Sir, that if corrective steps are not taken it will fan the fires of separatism of which I hope the Government will take notice.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in order to add to the remarks made on May 4 by the Minister of External Relations (Mr. Pepin), I would make the following comments: trade in oil and gas and in other commodities which involve the bulk transfer of a natural resource between a source province and a number of receiving provinces lends itself readily to the concept of a common carrier for transportation. Electricity trade, on the other hand, has generally involved interchanges between complex electric power systems that include generation facilities and customer loads. These systems usually involve multiple transmission linkages, making it technically difficult to identify definite paths for a specific flow of power and energy. For this reason, interchanges within power pools and between individual utilities have quite generally in North America been handled through a series of contractual agreements for "wheeling", by which is meant the transfer of electricity over transmission systems.

The power conferred upon the National Energy Board, under its Act, provides for the authorization of construction of designated interprovincial and international transmission lines. This would provide, for example, the assurance that interconnections could be built even if provincial statutes did not provide powers for the province to authorize such facilities for extra-provincial purposes. These powers do not envisage common carrier facilities. No application has yet been received for interprovincial lines and there is no proposal to make any changes to legislation at the present time.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT—SIZE OF ANNOUNCED PAY-OUT. (B) CONTRIBUTIONS TO FUND

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, on April 3, I directed a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) which is recorded at page 3681 of Hansard as follows:

—my question is supplemental to those asked of the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the Grain Stabilization Fund. When is this pay-out going to be made?

The Minister of Agriculture replied:

—I am sure the Hon. Member knows that the legislation has to be changed, et cetera. The formula has to be approved by the House through the necessary procedures. Unless we have the speedy concurrence of the House, we would be very lucky to make one in 1984. However, we want to do it in 1984.

Then as recorded at page 2711 of Hansard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) this question:

The Prime Minister is aware of the growing concern of western grain farmers because of the Government's delay in carrying out its commitment to amend the Grain Stabilization Act to permit desperately needed cash payments this spring. Will the Prime Minister prod his lethargic Ministers to bring down the legislation so that hard-pressed grain farmers in western Canada can have the assurance right now of desperately needed cash flow at this time?

The Prime Minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, I would be in a better position to give that assurance to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition if he were to assure me that his Party would co-operate with the Government House Leader in getting through that and many other pieces of legislation which the country needs.

Then as recorded at page 2713 of Hansard the Leader of the Opposition said:

It is typical of the Government that when the interests of western Canada are involved, it is always tied to something else. You can't get a straight answer from the Government.

The Hon. Otto Lang proposed this legislation to the House of Commons. We told him at that time it would not work, but he was stubborn, would not listen, and now western grain producers are suffering the consequences. On April 4, the Prime Minister said that the legislation passed by the Liberal Government in 1976 had to be corrected. We are still waiting for the amendments.

The western grain producers are not asking for something which is not theirs by right. There is $1 billion in that fund, a third of which was contributed by the producer. That was the agreement, however, inept it was, that the Government of the day made with western grain producers. We had a promise of a pay-out in October, but the farmers need it now. The pay-out is supposed to be in the vicinity of $300 million. That is less than one third of the balance in that account. That means that even with this pay-out the Government is not giving back to the farmers even the amount they put into it. It is unfair, unjust and it is frustrating for the western grain producer.

This year, Mr. Speaker, the western producers will probably contribute about $50 million to this fund. There is now $1 billion in this fund, which means that at 10 per cent interest there will accrue to the fund probably $100 million. That is a total of $150 million, subtracted from a $300 million pay-out, leaving a pay-out of only $150 million in fact. The fact that the producer has to wait until the fall to receive this money just creates more distrust and disharmony in the west.

I wanted to bring to your attention and the attention of this House how unjust the Government has been, and is currently in its treatment of the prairie grain producer. There is absolutely no wonder, Mr. Speaker, why the Government cannot generate any trust or good will in western Canada. If the Government would make they pay-out immediately, then of course the farmer would be getting it at a time he justly deserves it.

Thank you very much for allowing me to bring this to the attention of yourself and this House.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Western Grain Stabilization Act was enacted to provide income insurance for those prairie grain producers who wished to be covered. It was designed to be actuarially sound. Normally producers contribute 2 per cent of the value of their grain sales and the Government of Canada contributes an additional 4 per cent. This money is deposited in an interest bearing account, the western grain stabilization fund, for use when prairie grain incomes are depressed.

Because of the actuarial mechanism, contributions were reduced on January 1, 1984 to 1.5 per cent for producers and 3.5 per cent for the Government in light of large fund balances. Proportionately, therefore, producers have benefited more from this, with a 25 per cent reduction, then has the Government, with a 12.5 per cent reduction.

Pay-outs under the original Western Grain Stabilization Act are triggered when net cash flow, which is essentially receipts less cash costs, fall below the previous five year average. Despite lower grain prices over the past two years, total receipts have not fallen because volumes sold have been increasing so that pay-outs have not been triggered.

The intention of the Western Grain Stabilization Act was to have an actuarially sound producer-contributory program. Even in its proposed amended form, it is important to note that the actuarial soundness will be preserved. It would be imprudent to amend the Act in such a way as to undermine its actuarial mechanism, as would be the case if all producer contributions to date were simply reimbursed. This could seriously deplete the fund, leaving inadequate amounts available in case pay-outs are triggered next year or beyond.

The Government intends, however, to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act to make it more responsive to the needs of the prairie grain economy. Under the proposed payout mechanism, participating producers will receive larger and earlier payouts than the existing Act would provide. The actuarial soundness of the program will, however, be maintained so that the funds will continue to be managed in a responsible manner.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Speaker: I have not yet received all the details on the tragic events at the Quebec National Assembly, but I am sure that all Members of this House will join me in expressing our heartfelt sympathy to the families of the victims. To those who were wounded in the course of these events, I want to say that our thoughts are with them and that we wish them a prompt and speedy recovery.

I wish to inform the House that I have asked the Sergeant-at-Arms to review all aspects of our security policy and procedures.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF LOTTERY FOR FARMERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Western grain farmers have amassed a jackpot of nearly $1 billion, and even though the Tories have told the Government to give it back to the farmers, the Government does not appear to know how to make a pay-out. Since the Government is determined to run lotteries, the agricultural reporter for the Calgary Herald, John Schmidt, has come up with a solution.

Since Liberal politicians are wringing their hands because they don't know what to do with the money, the trustees of the Chancellor War Memorial Hall in Bow River are suggesting that the $1 billion be sent to Chancellor and be put into a big pot called the Lotta Crow, that the 150,000 Wheat Board permit books also be shipped to Chancellor, and that a nationally televised draw could be made on April Fool's Day, by Otto Lang.

There would be 500 prizes of $1 million, and 1,000 prizes of $500,000. The grain growers could become so independently wealthy that the new Crow rates would never bother them at all. This could be the world's largest lottery pay-out and this Lotta Crow would be more exciting and create more publicity about the gamble of growing wheat than the small payment planned by the Government in the distant future. The trouble now is that the farmers keep paying into the fund, but the Government uses every excuse in the book not to make a pay-out.

Don't you think, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers have a big enough gamble already, what with the weather, the grasshoppers, and this Liberal Government? Do we have to add another gamble for the farmers to get a pay-out?

MINING INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR POLICY DETAILS CONCERNING USE OF ASBESTOS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, at a time when the use of asbestos is being thoroughly reviewed in the United States, an Ontario Royal Commission of Inquiry has now published a report that may worsen the situation considerably. Not only does the report fail to clarify the issue, it also raises a number of questions, including the fact that it is more dangerous to remove asbestos from buildings than to leave it in place.

On the other hand, in recent years the Government of the Province of Quebec, which owns two asbestos mines at Thetford Mines, and our own Government, have authorized and paid for programs to remove injected asbestos from certain buildings.

The four years of study and investigation required to prepare this report have produced only one result, which is to heighten and add to the controversy around the use of asbestos. This controversy, which has existed for a number of years, has had very tragic consequences for the producing region and thousands of workers. I may remind Hon. Members that these workers are just as concerned about their health as the rest of the country.

Mr. Speaker, in the circumstances, it is now imperative that our Government announce its official position on asbestos, in order to inform Canadians and Americans as well.

On behalf of the people working in the asbestos mines and on my own behalf, I say that we can and should use asbestos and can do so without risk. Now that the Government of Quebec has failed to clarify this issue—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

LOCATION FOR PROPOSED AGRICULTURAL LABORATORY IN ONTARIO

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw a priority matter to the attention of the Government, and particularly to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). My statement is an earnest suggestion regarding the location of the $10 million Agriculture Canada laboratory which is proposed for southwestern Ontario. The County of Oxford will be most pleased to relieve the tension and indecision which the Members from London East, London West, and London-Middlesex have displayed in prior discussions which had seemed to establish the site in the City of London.

As Oxford's Godfather, the Minister of Agriculture will be aware of the many attributes of Oxford pertaining to agriculture. Woodstock, the county seat, is known as the dairy capital of Canada, and many agriculture-related facilities are established within Oxford's boundaries, such as the Agriculture Campus of Fanshawe College, and the head office of the Ontario Flue Cured Tobocco Growers' Marketing Board. Its geographical location, just a few kilometres from the University of Western Ontario, and equidistant from Toronto and Windsor, would seem to indicate that I am offering an ideal site for this project.

I would also suggest that an acceptance of this proposal to establish a laboratory in Oxford would confirm the Government's expressed impartiality when locating projects of this magnitude.

IMMIGRATION

ASSISTANCE FOR AGENCIES AND ORGANIZATIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the recommendation of the House of Commons Committee on Visible Minorities that the proposed Ministry of Multiculturalism should provide increased and extended funding to ethnic groups and broadly-based community organizations, has received strong support from many such groups.

A number of organizations now serving immigrants receive assistance from the Department of Employment and Immigration under ISAP, the Immigrant Settlement and Adaptation Program. The Ontario Council of Agencies Serving Immigrants speaks for many in voicing its concern that the Department of Employment and Immigration is contemplating a redistribution of the ISAP budget to tie ISAP assistance to intake of new immigrants, without regard to the question of continuing to meet the needs of existing immigrants. These agencies and organizations are hard-pressed to remain in existence, and any effective reduction in their funding is indeed cause for concern.

• (1410)

Until funds are available from another source, such as the proposed Ministry of Multiculturalism, I trust the Department of Employment and Immigration will not take any steps which would have the effect of lowering existing levels of assistance to agencies or organizations serving the immigrant community.

NEEDS OF IMMIGRANT CHILDREN

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in major cities across the country, including Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, and Vancouver, a substantial and growing percentage of students attending schools come from families in which the language spoken at home is neither English nor French. These children are attending schools in Canada because the immigration policies of the federal Government in recent years have permitted and encouraged their parents to come to this country. It is now becoming increasingly evident to teachers, parents, and community groups that problems are developing for these students because they are not getting the services they need. They require assistance in order that they can fit into Canadian life on an equivalent basis with young people born in Canada.

Equality Now, the report of the Special Committee on Visible Minorities in Canadian Society, made a series of very good recommendations urging the federal Government, through the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal), to encourage provincial Governments and school boards to develop and implement policies to improve race relations. The provinces, which are responsible for education, are finding it increasingly difficult to provide local educational systems with sufficient funding to meet those special needs.

I urge the Secretary of State to give consideration to the federal Government sharing the cost to the provinces of funding to meet the needs of immigrant children in Canada, considering that this may be the only possibility which would allow these services to be provided.

CANADIAN COAST GUARD

ADDITIONAL ICE BREAKING SERVICES SOUGHT FOR NEWFOUNDLAND REGION

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House the great need for better ice breaking services along the coastline of Newfoundland. I checked today and I discovered that only one of the four ice-breakers assigned to the Newfoundland region is presently operative. We have two new ice-breakers coming on stream shortly which have been assigned to the western region, to Vancouver.

The Maritime region has no problems; it has lots of ice-breakers. The Quebec region has no problems; it has lots of ice-breakers. However, on my coastline there are boats stuck in port with people out of work because of that, ferry systems to four islands are cut off most of the wintertime, large ships are unable to get into port, and 11 long-liners have been stuck for the past 37 days, with 60 men aboard. I do not think this is good enough. I ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) to intervene to give the Newfoundland region more ice-breaker services on a permanent basis.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RAPE CONVICTION SENTENCES—CALL FOR APPEAL

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in October last year in Hall Beach, Northwest Territories, three adult men took a 13-year old Inuit girl to the home of one of them. All three had sexual intercourse with her, as a result of which she became pregnant.

The crime which was committed is viewed by Parliament as a most serious one, and one for which Parliament has prescribed a maximum penalty of life imprisonment. However, on April 21 the convicted persons were sentenced to only one week in jail each, of which only a few days were actually served. So light a sentence almost condones the criminal behaviour of the guilty parties. The public of the Northwest Territories, especially those organizations representing native women, are outraged, as am I, at what can only be described as a miscarriage of justice.

The sentence of the court must be appealed so that confidence in the administration of justice and the court system be maintained. The law ought to be applied equitably and fairly without regard to race, and a sentence of only one week's imprisonment for what is commonly referred to as statutory rape ought not to be allowed to stand.

PARLIAMENT

ATTENDANCE DURING ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT OF MEXICO

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, it was indeed an honour and a privilege to sit in this Assembly earlier this day to hear the President of Mexico, His Excellency Mr. de la Madrid, address this Assembly, the nation, and indeed the world. This was an historic event.

The President's message was important and laid guideposts and stepping stones on the road toward more harmonious relations within and between the nations of the two American continents. What was not so pleasant was the extent to which chairs in the Assembly were empty during the President's remarks. Even more disrespectful was the late entry of many Members into the Assembly. In my view the honour, dignity, and pride of this Assembly trembled today.

THE ECONOMY

STATISTICS CANADA ANALYSIS—REQUEST FOR NEW BUDGET TO HELP UNEMPLOYED

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. As reported in Hansard of April 6, 1984, the Minister of Finance stated the following at that time:

—we expect the unemployment rate to fall during the course of this year. I still expect this to happen, and I am not considering at the present time making any changes to the Budget—

Yesterday Statistics Canada reported in its economic analysis that there is a slackening of employment growth and that, because of the slowing down of the recovery in the United States, the rate of recovery in Canada may not be sufficient to reduce unemployment substantially in the first half of the year.

In view of the fact that the Minister's forecast is again incorrect in that unemployment rates are higher than he forecast, and the Statistics Canada forecast is even worse, will the Prime Minister direct the Minister to bring in a new Budget containing some changes to help the 1,541,000 people here in Canada who are unemployed? The Prime Minister is a lame duck, and he is now raising his wing toward the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the best way to create growth and reduce unemployment would be to begin by passing the legislation that is before the House which deals with a number of measures aimed at creating jobs and stimulating growth which were contained in the last Budget. I would hope that the Opposition would gather its energy together, muster its will, and agree to give early and quick passage to that legislation.

Mr. McDermid: Where is it?

Mr. Lalonde: It is right before the House. There are something like six Bills for immediate consideration which are before the House now.

Mr. Wilson: Bring them in now.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, here is a nice example of the ignorance of members of the Opposition. They do not even know which Bills are before the House at the present time.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, on February 17, 1984, the Minister of Finance said that his new Budget is not having any effect on the Canadian economy and that that makes him happy. How can legislation stemming from the new Budget have any effect on the economy if the Minister has already said that the Budget has had no effect on the economy? So much for his legislation.

INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CHARTERED BANKS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Today the chartered banks have increased the prime bank rate to 12 per cent. In the United States, banks have raised interest rates to 12.5 per cent. So much for Mr. Kaufman's forecast. He is 100 per cent more accurate than the Minister of Finance. Given these increases in interest rates, what action will the Minister now take to try to get the economic recovery moving along again here in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, not only do Members of the Opposition display their ignorance, they are also intellectually dishonest in their analysis of the situation and the statements which have been made. I never said that my Budget would not have any impact on the economy. What I did say was that the Budget was aimed at sustaining the basic trend of the economy which was in full recovery after last year's April Budget, I mean a stable and continuing growing trend in the coming months. The latest figures made public seem to indicate that indeed we have achieved that stable and continuing growth to which I referred in my Budget.

As to the increase in interest rates, the Hon. Member knows for instance that the bank prime rate went up half a percentage point in the United States today, up from 12 to 12.5 per cent in most American banks. It was inevitable and understandable that certain Canadian banks would raise their prime rate, to 12 per cent in this case, which still leaves Canadian interest rates half a percentage point lower than what they are now in the United States.

Personally, I deplore this latest increase in interest rates, particularly in the United States. That does not leave us the choice to keep our rates much lower than those now prevailing. This concern is shared by most industrialized nations and their Ministers of Finance whom I met with recently. We will have another opportunity to discuss this issue at next week's OECD meeting which will be attended by American Government officials, of course. Together we will try to see whether there is any possibility of finding ways to reduce interest rates, or at least prevent them from rising even more.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the OECD will not need the Minister for his forecasting ability.

On March 12 the Minister said, and I quote from the Ottawa Citizen:

> Interest rates will remain stable for most of 1984 and drop towards the end of the year.

Interest rates have gone up one percentage point since. So much for the forecasting ability of the Minister or for his scrupulous truthfulness.

How can anyone in Canada, whether an economist or other citizen, have any confidence in the Minister after he has made these consistently wrong forecasts just weeks before interest rates go up, unemployment goes up, and the Minister promises they will go down? How often can the Minister cry wolf without Canadians being completely gobbled up? How long is the Minister going to continue in his portfolio after this astounding display of incompetence?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have taken extra care to mention every time I have spoken on this subject that the forecasts were what they were, that is, they were an estimation of what might happen in the economy at a particular time. I have indicated many times that they should be seen as such. They were estimations of what could happen and the evidence is systematic—

Mr. Crosbie: We cannot believe a word you say.

Mr. Lalonde: —including the forecasts when the Hon. Member was Minister of Finance. The fact is that the world economy usually develops in a different way than most forecasts, anyway.

Mr. Crosbie: Resign now!

Mr. Lalonde: I can show to the Hon. Member—

Mr. Crosbie: Do you have his resignation, Mr. Prime Minister?

Mr. Lalonde: I can show to the Hon. Member, for instance, that last year Canada knew a rate of inflation which was lower than the one I had forecast, and a rate of job creation which was higher than I had forecast—

Mr. Crosbie: Tell the unemployed.

Mr. Lalonde: —and we knew a rate of growth in the Canadian economy in 1983 which was higher than the one I forecast in my Budget. Therefore, sometimes in those forecasts you will have results which are better than those you have anticipated, and sometimes they will be worse than you have anticipated. What anyone must do is try to work on the basis of the best advice you can get in that regard.

Mr. Crosbie: You are a travesty.

Mr. Lalonde: I refer my friend to the forecasts which have been made internationally, and those which have been made by dozens of national agencies in the private sector, and he will find out that the forecasts made by myself as Minister of Finance are very much in line with the average forecasts made in the private sector of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Crosbie: God help the OECD.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION REGARDING FUTURE OF HOUSING CONSTRUCTION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am always rather fascinated by the remarks made by the Minister of Finance, to whom I would like to direct a question about what he has done and what he intends to do in the months to come, considering the problems Canadians will be facing as a result of high interest rates.

As far as the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is concerned, the Minister of Finance is aware that in recent months there were over 27,000 fewer housing starts than during the last three months of last year. The person responsible for statistics at the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is very concerned about the effect high interest rates will have on the construction industry. Does the Minister of Finance have any suggestions he might like to make to the House for avoiding the same problems this vital sector of our economy was experiencing only two years ago?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member raised this point. I may remind him that according to the forecast, this year the number of housing units built in Canada will increase at a higher rate than it did last year. We expect that between 160,000 and 170,000 housing units will be built this year.

The Hon. Member may recall that early last year, a number of federal and provincial programs aimed at stimulating construction were operational at a time when we had experienced a very substantial slow-down in the Canadian economy.

Since the Hon. Member is asking whether we have any measures in mind, I would like to ask him, as soon as the Bill is introduced at the end of May, to support our measures to provide insurance against rising interest rates for homeowners with mortgages. I also invite the Hon. Member to support the amendments we shall be proposing to the Interest Act, to ensure that borrowers will be able to pay off their mortgages early if they decide it would be to their advantage to do so. These measures were announced in the Budget and will be introduced in the House in the form of legislation at the end of May. I hope we shall have the co-operation of the Opposition so that these measures can then be adopted forthwith.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS FROM MINISTER

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I certainly would like to accept the Minister's invitation. However, he said that his projections would give us 160,000 more housing starts, but according to the results for February, March and April, we have had 26,000 fewer housing starts than last year. Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will understand that the Canadian people may have some doubts about the Minister's projections.

In the circumstances, I would ask the Minister, since he referred to his mortgage insurance program, what the maximum would be for insured rates? That is the kind of information we must have as soon as possible if we want to prevent the recession in the construction industry from getting worse. In the circumstances, I would like to invite the Minister to introduce his Bill as soon as possible, because of the drop in housing starts in Canada.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have two things to say to the Hon. Member. The first one is that last year, there was a rise in housing construction during the first few months of the year because we had a home ownership stimulation plan that expired at the beginning of the year. Later on, there was a slow-down in the construction industry. This year, we seem to be seeing the reverse, since we had a slow-down in the construction industry at the beginning of the year, and now we hope and we believe that construction will pick up in the months to come, in 1984. That is why we expect to see at least as many housing units this year as last year.

Second, as far as the Mortgage Rate Protection Program is concerned, I must say the Opposition's homework is pretty hopeless. The Hon. Member asked me what the insured rate would be. I indicated this in my Budget. I also tabled in the House a paper providing all the details of this program, and I would invite the Hon. Member to read this paper. He would realize that the program provides insurance and security for both mortgagees and mortgagors, that the program is quite clear and provides the assurances the Hon. Member is seeking.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF CORPORATE MERGERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate to give credit where credit is due. As a result of government policy we have seen considerable economic activity in a certain sector, namely, the corporate takeover and merger sector. Corporate mergers in 1983 were higher than they had ever been in Canadian history. Because this is occurring largely as a result of government policy, I ask the Minister of Finance what benefits do average Canadian citizens receive as a result of government policy which encourages and rewards corporate takeovers and mergers?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have taken steps over the years to ensure that the takeovers and mergers are not going to be detrimental to the Canadian people. We have done this, first of all by ensuring that foreign takeovers are controlled. Contrary to the view of the Conservative Party which would like to do away with the protection we have for Canadian industry and ownership, we have taken steps to maintain the existence of control of foreign ownership in this country. The Hon. Member knows what the Leader of the Opposition has said in that regard where, for all practical purposes, he would do away with that kind of control of Canadian ownership in this country.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You had better check with John Turner.

Mr. Lalonde: With regard to takeovers and mergers, the Hon. Member knows that this process is occurring all the time in a free economy. This is a normal process. There are laws under the Competition Act to prevent undue detrimental impact on the Canadian public. My colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, has introduced a Bill for which she has asked early consideration. This Bill will provide for additional measures in that regard. Again I invite the Opposition to take note of the Bills before the House, to give them support, and to ensure that we have laws on the books which are completely adapted to the needs of today.

TAX POLICY—EFFECT ON CORPORATE TAKEOVERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, although that answer was very elaborate, I would like to repeat my original question. The Government of Canada has tax legislation which encourages and rewards corporate takeovers and mergers. In other words, it makes it an attractive process. How do mergers and takeovers assist Canadians? In other words, government policy which encourages this must be in place because it is going to have an over-all benefit to Canadians. How do Canadians benefit from corporate takeovers?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say that, contrary to what the Hon. Member has said, we do not have a fiscal or taxation policy which favours or encourages takeovers or mergers. We are trying to establish a policy which is neutral in that regard and will not favour or discourage takeovers or mergers.

As far as the question raised by the Hon. Member is concerned, I think we will have to spend time on a first year course in economics. Surely he has heard about rationalization in the industry whereby firms are merging, or are taken over, in order to become more efficient and competitive in world markets. That is how large firms have been built which, in Canada or other countries, are carrying on large shares of the export market and world trade today. You are not going to take over a large share of the world trade if you continue with corner shop operations. You must have large units which are able to compete in world markets. Surely my hon. friend knows that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister of Finance's hon. friend does not know that.

RATIONALE FOR TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote to the Minister of Finance from Mr. McKinley of the Combines Branch of his own Government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. On a second supplementary question, quotations from documents should be absolutely minimal.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I will not quote from the document. However, officials in his Government suggest that there is no evidence to suggest that the economies of scale that result from corporate takeovers have benefited Canadian society. A major report coming from the United States suggested that, out of 200 reasons that corporate managers have for corporate takeovers, economies of scale rank 198 out of 200.

Based on evidence available which indicates that corporate takeovers do not result in net benefit to Canadian citizens, why does the Minister keep tax legislation in place which encourages and rewards this kind of economic behaviour, this paper shuffling, as opposed to real job creation and economic development?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I already answered this question when I clearly stated that our fiscal legislation neither favours nor promotes corporate takeovers or mergers, but that its objective is to establish a policy which is neutral, allowing the marketplace to decide whether it would benefit from a particular corporate takeover or merger. There is, however, in our tax legislation no provision which would systematically favour or promote corporate takeovers or mergers. We try to make our system as neutral as possible.

FINANCE

MORTGAGE RATE PROTECTION PROGRAM—TIMING OF APPLICATION TO MORTGAGE RENEWALS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The details of the Mortgage Rate Protection Program in the budget papers state:

> The interest rate to be protected will be the market interest rate prevailing for the relevant mortgage term at the time the mortgage protection is taken out.

The Government has delayed the introduction of this legislation for almost two months, and interest rates have gone up almost 2 per cent. Will the Minister admit to the House that his Department is misleading the Canadian people when it suggests, as it did on the telephone today, that the insurance will be available at the rate at which the mortgage is taken out or renewed, rather than the rate at the time the application is approved?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I told the Hon. Member yesterday that he would have to wait until the bill is introduced in the House. Then, he will be able to find out for himself what legislative provisions are taken in that respect.

[English]

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Minister that people who are renewing mortgages want the truth from the Department now. Each day's delay in bringing in that legislation is affecting housing starts, which are dropping. Each delayed housing start costs Canada's housing industry two and one-half jobs. Each day's delay, while mortgage interest rates rise, costs Canadian home owners. On March 20 the Minister said a few weeks. Last week the Minister said the end of May. Why is the Minister delaying in bringing in that legislation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I answered this question yesterday. I indicated that we had extensive consultations with all the private sector people and organizations in this regard to ensure that the Bill which would be introduced would be a piece of legislation which would address the situation appropriately and would meet the needs of all parties concerned. We have concluded those discussions and are in the process of finalizing the drafting of the Bill.

I am happy to see that, for once, the Opposition will co-operate when this Bill is introduced. I am looking forward to seeing this happen because there are now five or six financial Bills before this House which would be beneficial to Canadian citizens and Canadian industry.

An Hon. Member: Bring them forth.

Mr. Lalonde: They are before the House at the present time and the Conservatives have reneged on an agreement to pass those Bills expeditiously. That is what the Conservatives have been doing in this place.

Oral Questions

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

IDENTITY OF GUNMAN INVOLVED IN QUEBEC NATIONAL ASSEMBLY INCIDENT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Defence. Can the Minister of Defence confirm that the gunman involved in the very distressing situation at the Quebec national Assembly is in fact a member of the Canadian Armed Forces, and is a member of the security detail attached to the government bunker at Carp near Ottawa?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to join with you and other Members of the House who offer their condolences and express their views relating to this tragedy.

As I understand it, the gunman has now been captured and is in the custody of the QPP. My information is that he is a member of the Canadian Forces. However, I do not have details relating to the unit. I cannot confirm the unit to which he belongs at this time.

ACQUISITION OF FIREARM—MENTAL STABILITY CHECKS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, we certainly join with the Minister in offering condolences to those who lost family and those who were injured in that most unfortunate incident.

I realize it is a very short time after the event. However, I would like to ask the Minister whether he can advise the House how it was possible for a private soldier to get a semi-automatic or automatic rifle from the armouries, with ammunition, which is guarded quite carefully. Did his position in fact allow him to have possession of this ammunition and rifle? This would be the case if he were attached to the security unit at the Carp bunker. What kind of security checks are made to determine the mental stability of individuals who are responsible for protecting the Cabinet, Cabinet facilities, and the ultra secret equipment that is a component of that important part of our emergency measures operation? Can the Minister enlighten the House in this regard?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Because I cannot confirm which unit this prisoner belongs to, Mr. Speaker, I cannot determine what security checks he would be subject to or what definite duties he would carry out.

Yet, I can say to the Hon. Member that we are well aware that military personnel have access to weapons of war which by their very nature are dangerous, and that we are taking every necessary precaution to ensure that the people who are using these weapons are mentally stable people. For the time being, that is all I can say, because no other details concerning this unfortunate affair are available.

LABOUR RELATIONS

INCREASES IN CORPORATE EXECUTIVES' SALARIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I am sure that the Minister knows that in recent years the average increase in wages and salaries for most Canadians ran behind the increase in the cost of living. Last year the average increase in wages and salaries was more than one per cent less than the increase in the cost of living. This is partly because of the recession, and partly because of the kind of lecturing that the Minister has given to Canadians, urging them to show restraint.

Yesterday we were given the news that Canadian executive salaries jumped last year by 12.5 per cent. Dome Petroleum increased them by 42 per cent, Genstar by 86 per cent, and McIntyre Mines by 71 per cent. I suppose it is too much to ask the Minister to plug some of the loopholes in the Income Tax Act, but may I ask him if he could make a speech in the next while urging Canadian executives to show the same kind of restraint that he has asked Canadian workers to show?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first, contrary to what the Hon. Member has said, over the last several years the average increase in wages has been higher than the cost of living. I invite my friend to look at the figures, both in terms of the average salaries and in terms of the disposable income, which is the income after taxes. He will find that, as an average over the last several years, increases have been higher than the cost of living, not lower.

As far as executive salaries are concerned, he mentioned a few specific cases. Obviously I do not have the detailed information on individual firms, but I will be pleased to send him copies of the speeches I have made already on this very subject that have, indeed urged management in the firms to ensure that increases in their level of renumeration were showing the same restraint in line with the restraint that we were asking of workers. I have stated quite categorically that it would indeed be extremely counterproductive and prejudicial if increases in senior management renumeration were to exceed those that they were ready to concede to their workers in general.

I will be happy to repeat those admonitions at any opportunity that I have. I can take this opportunity today to appeal to senior executives to make sure that they will show the same kind of restraint that they are asking their workers to show during these difficult times. I would hope that indeed we will see that average increases like the ones mentioned by the Hon. Member are not happening as a rule among Canadian industries.

DOME PETROLEUM—EXECUTIVES' REMUNERATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Dome Petroleum continues to function as a company today thanks to the bank loans which were guaranteed by the Government. Yet in 1983, Dome, a company which is close to floating in red ink, gave its executive officers a 42 per cent increase in salary and benefits. Does the Minister believe that such extravagance by a government supported corporation is justified and, if not, what is the Government prepared to do to see that executives in Dome and other corporations bring their salaries into line?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about a government supported corporation. I remind him that the Government has not invested a penny in Dome or has not provided any particular support to Dome. There has not been one dollar of specific support given to Dome in that regard under the agreement that was reached with the banks.

Mr. Orlikow: What about bank loans?

Mr. Lalonde: That bank loan guarantee has never been called, and the Hon. Member knows that. Again, the Hon. Member would have to examine exactly what transpired in terms of the executive remuneration because as he knows there has been a change of management at Dome. The company was in very serious difficulties and, as a matter of fact, had to go outside of the country to find the kind of management that it needed.

While I do not know the kind of remuneration that it had to pay in this particular case, one would have to look not only at the level of renumeration itself but compare it with what existed before, for instance, with the previous management when there were stock options and other features concerning fringe benefits that are probably very difficult to calculate. I would invite my friend to exercise some restraint himself in reaching conclusions about the particular figures he mentioned.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY—IMPACT OF TAXATION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Canada's petrochemical industry is a high tech, state of the art industry which upgrades our natural resources into higher value products and sustains more than 200,000 jobs. Yet the petrochemical industry is suffering from excessive taxation which the Liberal Government has imposed on the energy industry. The Minister is aware that this industry has made representations to Cabinet for some sort of tax relief. Is the Minister going to bat for these 200,000 jobs with his Cabinet colleagues, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? Is he seeking reduced taxes in both the oil based and natural gas based sectors of the industry?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government commissioned a task force made up of private sector people from both management and labour in the petrochemical industry. It made its report several months ago. That report is under discussion now by various Departments within the federal Government.

The Hon. Member also knows that the major recommendation in that report is seeking a reduction in the industrial gas price, which is the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, as well as the producing provinces. My colleague has had several discussions with his counterparts in the provinces, and I am sure that when he returns to the House the Hon. Member can ask her question then and probably get a more appropriate answer.

Miss Carney: I regret that the Minister has told us nothing which we cannot read in the newspapers.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

REJECTION OF JAPANESE PROPOSAL TO INVEST IN BRITISH COLUMBIA COAL PROJECT

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, again dealing with jobs within the Minister's area of responsibility, Cabinet reviews all the decisions made by FIRA In regard to the plans of foreign companies to invest in Canada. Therefore the Minister must have been involved in the rejection by Cabinet and FIRA of the proposal by Sumitomo of Japan to invest $10 million in a joint venture with Petro-Canada in a B.C. coal mining project.

Considering the fact that British Columbia has a bleak economic future and has the highest unemployment this side of Newfoundland, what steps did the Minister take to ensure participation of Sumitomo and Petro-Canada in this job creating coal mining venture? Why did he reject it?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I fail to see that this is a supplementary question; this is a question about a FIRA application as opposed to the petrochemical industry inquiry in her original question. But I am pleased to answer the Hon. Member.

First, the Hon. Member knows that it has been a policy of the Government for a long time with respect to new coal mines that a minimum of 50 per cent ownership must be maintained by Canadians. I am surprised that the Hon. Member would be against this particular policy. We did advise the applicant of that requirement by the Government of Canada, and also that Canadian ownership would be respected as required by government policy in regard to additional new coal mines. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, based on some of the comments I have heard regarding FIRA from the Hon. Member's Party, I cannot be surprised at this particular question.

PLIGHT OF ATLANTIC FISHERMEN—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF BENEFITS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister knows, heavy pack ice on the northeast coast of Newfoundland and other parts of Atlantic Canada is preventing fishermen from being able to get out and fish this year. The fact of the matter is that unemployment insurance benefits will be discontinued as of May 15. Would the Minister give consideration to extending the unemployment insurance benefits for thousands of fishermen so affected? The ice is an Act of God, but this can be seen as an act of leadership.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Show some leadership, John.

Mr. Crosbie: Move over, Pierre.

Mr. Nielsen: The iceman cometh.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his accurate assessment of my qualities but, even more important, I want to thank him for drawing to my attention and to the attention of the House this very serious question.

An Hon. Member: He didn't know about the ice.

Mr. Roberts: I did know about the situation because Hon. Members on this side of the House, in contrast to those on that side of the House, drew the matter to my attention.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Tories don't care.

Mr. Roberts: It is a serious situation. I will examine how we may be able to respond to it. I understand that some similar situations have arisen in the past, I think in 1974. There may be some other solution which may be equally appropriate, but I will discuss with my cabinet colleagues how we might respond to the situation which the Hon. Member raised.

POOLS

SPORTS POOL—PROVISION OF FUNDING FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. When the Government introduced legislation setting up the sports pool, one of the recipients of possible profit from the pool was to be medical research, a kind of moral component in what many of us feel is a very questionable enterprise.

Today when the chairman and members of the Medical Research Council appeared before the appropriate committee, they were asked how much money they had been promised from the Government from profits realized from the sports pool. We were told that there were no promises made nor was any money forthcoming. Could the Minister give an estimate of how much money medical research will get from the sports pool, in view of the fact that this was one of the selling points the Government used to set up the sports pool in the first place?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to reply to this question. As we all know, Bill C-95 was introduced in the House and voted on. The purpose of this legislation is to provide assistance for various activities, including the Calgary Olympic Games, arts and culture, as well as medical research. Needless to say, we shall have to determine the share each recipient will get but we believe at this stage that the direction to be taken first is the direction which we, as the Government, have taken, namely to make sure that the 1988 Olympics in Calgary are a great success. The first amounts will probably be directly assigned to the 1988 Olympics.

[English]

REQUEST FOR FIVE-YEAR FUNDING PLAN

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. He said in this House that medical research was going to get money from the sports pool. Today he showed very clearly there will be no money for medical research from the sports pool, that it is a secondary consideration.

In view of the fact that medical research has to have long-term planning, such as five-year plans, and if we are to keep medical researchers in Canada we have to put those kinds of plans in place, does the Minister have any plan for the next five years concerning how much money medical research will get from the sports pool?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, medical research is as important for us as amateur sport, arts or culture. It is obvious that we shall take priorities into account. We are committed to help medical research, and we shall support this sector. We are committed to help arts and culture, and we shall support arts and culture, as we are now doing and shall continue to do. We are already providing assistance for medical research. If the Progressive Conservatives want to give us their support, with the tremendous profits that we make, we shall be able to help medical research even more. If the Members opposite want to co-operate to help amateur sport and medical research, it will be a success for all of us.

FINANCE

MORTGAGE INTEREST LEVELS—REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF CEILING

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, if he would return to his seat. The Minister is well aware of the fact that recent increases in mortgage interest rates, particularly in longer term mortgage interest rates, are having a crippling effect on housing starts at a time when record numbers of building trades workers are already unemployed and drawing unemployment insurance or welfare. Given the fact that these high interest rates also effectively deny home ownership to hundreds of thousands of renters, why is the Minister still acting as a lackey of the banks and refusing to cap mortgage interest rates immediately at levels which Canadians can afford, and at levels that will put building trades workers back to work?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): For an obvious reason, Mr. Speaker: the solution advocated by the Hon. Member is both naïve and counterproductive. Should he care to review the situation, he would realize that imposing artificial ceilings is not likely to renew the confidence of investors in the construction field. What we hope to do is to keep interest rates at the lowest possible level throughout the Canadian economy as a whole, be it in the construction sector, in the agricultural sector, in the small business sector or in any other sector.

I think that the Hon. Member should instead support the Government in its efforts to keep Canada's interest rates below the prevailing American rates, and support as well its efforts and those of other industrialized countries to convince the United States to stop if not reverse current rising interest rates.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I will get back to you. Hold it. The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY BANKS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance appears to be agreeing with the recent statement by the Leader of the Conservative Party that Canadian banks are doing a fine job in serving Canadians, which I suppose is not surprising considering the donations of over $250,000 a year which the Canadian banks give to both the Liberal and the Conservative Parties.

Given the fact that a senior official of CMHC this week noted that at current interest levels on a two-year mortgage a person would need an annual income in excess of $34,000 in order to purchase a house, a level far beyond that of my constituents in Burnaby, if not of just about everybody in this country, how much longer is the Minister prepared to stand by and allow Canadian banks to gouge consumers and charge these exorbitant interest rates, before he finally takes action to lower interest rates to levels which Canadians can afford?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will always marvel at the hypocrisy of the NDP.

Mr. Stevens: What about your hypocrisy?

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member talks about the high interest rates charged by the banks. He could also talk about the high rates charged by the credit unions, the caisses populaires, and the other financial institutions. He does not do so. He knows, or certainly should know, that interest rate levels at the present time are very much influenced by events in the United States which affect Canada and practically every other country in the world. If the Hon. Member were here this morning, he could have listened to the President of Mexico who addressed this House, and he could have taken the trouble of talking to the Minister of Finance for Mexico who indicated that a rise of 1 per cent in interest rates in the United States means $500 million more in interest rate payments for Mexico, which is facing severe difficulty and trouble—

Mr. Stewart: We are not Mexico.

Mr. Lalonde: —and just by an increase of 1 per cent in interest rates Mexico loses all the gains it is making by increasing exports. This is the type of situation and the kind of difficult world in which we are living. I invite my friend to come down to earth, realize what difficulties we are all facing as industrialized countries—

Mr. Stevens: You just cannot cope.

Mr. Lalonde: —and as developing countries at the present time, and encourage and support all Governments to try to convince the American authorities to take steps to reduce their interest rates.

Mr. Stevens: At least the Mexicans are coping.

Oral Questions

METRIC CONVERSION

DROPPING OF APPEAL BY TORONTO SERVICE STATION OPERATORS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, we all learned today that in Toronto Jack Halpert and Ray Christiansen, the two independent gasoline service station operators who are fighting for the freedom to choose between metric and imperial measurement, have announced that they can no longer proceed with their appeal case in the Ontario appeal courts and they will forfeit their award of $41,000 from the Crown because they cannot afford the appeal.

I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who has consistently looked for fairness in her assessment of the right to choose imperial measurement, whether she feels satisfied as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, responsible for the Metric Commission, that the decision to revert to metric only, because a small independent gasoline operator in Toronto cannot afford to go to appeal, is a fair decision on behalf of the Canadian people?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that the appeal had been withdrawn. I will have to consult with my officials for more information.

LEGALITY OF IMPERIAL MEASUREMENT SYSTEM

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is aware that the appeal has been withdrawn because Mr. Halpert and Mr. Christiansen cannot afford $25,000 to get the $41,000 they were awarded by Judge William Ross in their first case, and now that the federal Government intends to go all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada to win this fight for mandatory metric, let me ask a supplementary question. Would the Minister, on behalf of Canadian people, in order to do what she said she wanted to do, that is, come up with a fair judgment under the Charter of Rights on whether or not it is legal to use imperial measurement, suggest to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada that funds be made available to these parties as they have been made available to other parties in the interest of the federal Government to win federal court cases?

• (1500)

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I will examine the facts and report back to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Edmonton North on a short supplementary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OLYMPIC GAMES

PARTICIPATION OF SOVIET ATHLETES IN 1988 OLYMPICS

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. It is a very serious question, the fact that today the Soviet Union has pulled out of the Los Angeles Olympics.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Faites attention; faites attention.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has been given the floor.

Mr. Paproski: Today the Soviet Union has pulled out of the Los Angeles Olympics. In view of the fact that the lottery was set up to help the Calgary Olympics in 1988, what guarantee do we have from the Minister that the Soviets will not pull out of the 1988 Olympics? Has he had contact with the Soviet Embassy?

Mr. Smith: That is not a supplementary; it should not be allowed.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, to answer one part of the question asked by the Hon. Member, I simply want to state that, in my opinion, it is unfortunate for the athletes throughout the world that some countries have decided to withdraw. These countries made their own decision. With respect to the lottery, I must tell the Hon. Member opposite that this is not a lottery, but a sports pool. In reply to the third part of his question, I will tell him that I leave it to the Winter Olympic Games Organizing Committee (OCO'88) to reach the decision and answer his question.

PETITION

MR. BRADLEY—TAXATION OF TOBACCO PRODUCTS

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and honour to present a petition signed by some 182 farmers and residents of the Province of Quebec who are extremely concerned with the effects federal taxes are having on tobacco and its related industries in the country. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that the federal excise tax placed upon tobacco products is a serious threat to employment and economic viability in the tobacco industry in the communities involved.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition, Mr. Speaker, you will find the petition in order and that you will exercise the discretionary powers vested in the office of the Speaker of the House of Commons to allow discussion and referral to a committee at the earliest possible time, in order that employment and economic viability in that region of Canada may be preserved.

COSTS OF RENOVATING AND DECORATING STORNOWAY

Question No. 560—Mr. Althouse:

1. During the residence of (a) The Right Honourable Pierre Elliot Trudeau in 1979 (b) The Right Honourable Joe Clark in the period 1980 to 1983 (c) Mr. Brian Mulroney, M.P., to the end of 1983, what, if any, was the cost of renovating and decorating Stornoway, the house used by the Leader of the Official Opposition?

2. In 1983, were any expenses incurred due to the staffing and operating requirements of the residence and, if so, what were they?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) $133,934.91, (b) $36,443.84, (c) $150,555.34.

2. (a) The Official Residences Act authorizes the Leader of the Opposition to appoint a steward or housekeeper and up to three other employees to manage his residence. Moneys appropriated by Parliament for the operation of the House of Commons may be used for the remuneration and other expenses related to the employment of such persons. Questions concerning these payments should be addressed to the Speaker of the House of Commons.

(b) Operating cost—$43,019.69.

RIVIERA MOTEL, TRACADIE, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 738—Mr. Waddell:

1. In 1975, did the then Department of Regional and Economic Expansion make loan guarantees totaling $315,000 to a trust company for the construction of the Riviera Motel in Tracadie, New Brunswick and, if so, did the company subsequently exercise its power of sale on the property and did the Department pay the company $315,000 as guaranteed?

2. In 1982, did the trust company mentioned in part I dispose of the motel by means of public auction and was this contrary to its agreement with the Department and, if so, did the agreement stipulate (a) the method of sale (b) whose consent was required for the sale (c) the requirement for court action against the owner and, if so, in each case, what were they?

3. Did the Department take any action to recoup some of the value of the loan guarantee prior to the sale of the property at public auction and (a) if so, by what methods (b) if not, for what reason?

4. To the knowledge of the government what was the selling price of the motel and did the Government take any action to ensure that the Crown's interests were protected in this sale and (a) if so, what were they (b) if not, for what reason?

5. Since the sale of the property at public auction did the government take any actions to recover some of the lost loan guarantee and (a) if so, what were they (b) if not, for what reason?

6. Was any action taken to reprimand those responsible in the Department and, if so, what action?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): 1. Yes. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion made loan guarantees totalling $315,000 to a trust company for the construction of the Riviera Motel in Tracadie, New Brunswick; yes; the trust company exercised its power of sale on the property. Loan guarantee claims in the amount of $300,000 and $15,000 were paid on July 7, 1982 and September 1, 1982, respectively.

2. Yes. The trust company disposed of the Riviera Motel by public auction. The agreement called for the sale of security by public tender or private sale with the prior written consent of the Minister. By virtue of the Property Act of New Brunswick, a power of sale is given to a mortgagee (the trust company) to sell by public auction subject to compliance of certain advertising requirements prescribed in the Property Act. The trust company chose this route of disposal rather than public tender or private sale as specified in the guarantee agreement. The Property Act does not require that, in the event of sale by public auction, a consent from the guarantor is required.

3. No. Prior to the sale of the property at public auction, liquidation procedures were the responsibility of the trust company.

4. To the knowledge of the Department, the selling price was $200. The Department relied on the trust company to ensure that the assets securing the loan guarantees were sold for adequate consideration.

5. Yes. The Department is currently considering a course of action including, but not limited to, legal action to recover some of the lost loan guarantees.

6. A departmental review of this case indicated that this is an isolated incident and, therefore, no specific action has been taken against officials of the Department. The Department's procedures for processing loan guarantees have been amended to include a review by senior departmental officials. In addition, a new form of agreement has been instituted providing for a stronger provision when the lender is deemed to be negligent in the administration of the loan.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

The House resumed from Monday, May 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating the federal Government's Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. In essence, the Bill recognizes belatedly that the Government has lost control over the hundreds of Crown corporations which it operates. Indeed, some months ago, when asked how many Crown corporations the Government had, the then President of the Treasury Board was unable to answer that question even to the nearest hundred. As it turns out, the Government in fact owns and operates some 500 Crown corporations.

Those companies vary greatly in size. On the one hand there are the huge conglomerates like Canadian National, Air Canada and the CBC which employ thousands of people. On the other hand there are those like the Canadian Saltfish Corporation, which in the private sector would be viewed as a small business, employing somewhere in the vicinity of a dozen to a couple of hundred people. Together, whatever the size of the company, government Crown corporations constitute such a large part of the economy that the Auditor General has termed them a sub-government, rivalling the Government itself in economic might and impact. The truth is that under the present Government Crown corporations have been allowed to multiply like rabbits and grow like elephants. They are all but out of control.

It is bad enough that there are as many Crown corporations as there are, for all the good many of them do, but many have given rise to the creation of others, often without any authority to do so beyond themselves. Certainly Parliament has little control over their activities, a fact of growing concern to the Auditor General and to many Hon. Members of this Chamber. Now like the proverbial deathbed repentant, the Government has introduced this Bill in an effort to blunt swelling criticism about its lack of action.

Specifically, the Bill seeks to tighten control over Crown corporations by giving the Auditor General the authority he has sought. Moreover, henceforth Parliament will be required to approve the creation and operation of Crown corporations, and more information will be required concerning these companies. In the final analysis, however welcome may be the reforms in question, the Bill merely scratches the surface in holding Crown corporations to account. The legislation gives the appearance of action without delivering any genuine solution.

It is ironic that at the very time the Government was heralding Bill C-24, The Globe and Mail, Canada's national newspaper, was releasing confidential Cabinet documentation making it clear that de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited, a granddaddy of Crown corporations if ever there was one, will require hundreds of millions of dollars more in government subventions in the years ahead. Even with such support from the taxpayer, however, the principal product of the company, the Dash-8, is not expected to be marketable unless all kinds of questionable conditions prevail. For example, according to the confidential Cabinet document, interest rates will have to be very low and certainly much lower than they are now. The relevant unions at de Havilland will have to be prepared to accept generous wage concessions that in many instances they will not likely accept. As well, not only the federal Government but the provincial governments and perhaps even some municipal governments will have to agree to buy the product at a premium price.

The Government was not prepared to share such vital and important information with Parliament or with the taxpayers. The information had to be stolen from the Government by the media. Parliament and the taxpayers of Canada were expected to approve blindly the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars without having access to any of the basic information upon which judicious decisions may reasonably be made.

Between them, de Havilland and Canadair have soaked up more than $2 billion in federal aid. We on this side support the aerospace industry. We are in favour of research and development and in favour of many other such fields of endeavour. We want to protect and strengthen the jobs in those areas.

However, we are puzzled that the Government would announce to the country in March that it was prepared to bail out Canadair by assuming $1.5 billion in debt accumulated by that company through sheer bad management after the plane manufacturer had reported a loss of something like $540 million in 1983 alone.

We have now learned that in the case of de Havilland, rather than firing the top managers, the Government paid them fat bonuses of something like $13,000 each on top of their already generous salaries in the neighbourhood of $125,000 a year. In the case of Canadair, every single member of the board of governors was reappointed even after the responsible Minister, Senator Jack Austin himself, blamed the company's problems on the managers who were being reappointed.

Sir, what is lacking is not the authority to bring Crown corporations under government or parliamentary control, but rather the political will to do so. The Government simply lacks the desire to do anything about the problem. It has no intention of holding Crown corporations to account. The legislation we are debating today is simply window dressing. The Government is so accustomed and inured to spending money and wasting hundreds of millions of dollars that it has long since ceased to know what fiscal responsibility means.

No amount of tinkering with legislation of the kind that is before us today will matter one whit. The process in which we are engaged is nothing more than a charade. Frankly, Sir, every single one of us in the House and in general will be contributing to that charade by voting for this legislation. What is needed is a new government which is genuinely committed to reform, ready to shake up Crown corporations from the ground up, and prepared to abolish those companies whose usefulness has long since passed. We need a government that is courageous enough to expose all Crown corporations, large and small alike, to the harsh scrutiny of auditors and parliamentarians. We need a government and a cabinet that is sufficiently insulated—yes, Sir, insulated—from former policies that they may be hospitable to fresh ideas and approaches.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that instead of experiencing that which I have just described, the very creators of the mess in which we find ourselves are disguising themselves as reformers. That is like hiring the town arsonist as fire chief. Bill C-24 is a sham. The Government's policy on Crown corporations is a sham. If the public wants real reform in this area, it will get it only through the election of a new government. In my view, such an event could not happen soon enough.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with my colleagues in opposing this legislation because it is simply inappropriate for the times. If the Government wanted to introduce a Bill which would have Opposition support, it should have introduced the former Bill C-27 which was authored by the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). That Bill offered real accountability.

I would like to put an argument to my colleagues opposite who are not participating in this debate. We are discussing an area of public life which will affect us for many, many years into the future and one which will affect individual Canadians dramatically. Yet Liberal Government Members are not participating in the debate. I would like to see them stand and answer the concerns that I and other Members on this side are raising because that is what this place is for, Mr. Speaker. It is a place in which we may debate the issues. The opinions of both sides are revealed in this place and out of that comes a collective wisdom that is better for the country. However, Government Members are not standing. Once again, it is a case of the Cabinet making a decision and the individual Members not performing what in my submission is their responsibility as imposed upon them by their constituents.

I always find it wise to go back and look at an issue in its historic context. In the development of Crown corporations, there was a period of time that was known as the infrastructure period and this occurred from about the year 1800 to the year 1930. For 130 years the Government was involved in Crown corporations which dealt with ports, new harbour commissions, a few canals and the CNR. For 130 years those were essentially the only Crown corporations that existed.

After the restrictions and cutbacks caused by the Depression, a few more Crown corporations were formed. For example, the Bank of Canada, a farm loan board, the Canadian Wheat Board and the CBC were set up during that time in response to national sentiments and to counteract actions taken by the Government of the United States.

One might describe the third phase of Crown corporations as the war phase. At that time, the Hon. C. D. Howe set up numerous Crown corporations in order to cope with the demands of war. As well, those corporations were set up in part to avoid bureaucracy during the war and to attract managers who worked as the one-dollar-a-year type of manager. You will probably recall those events, Mr. Speaker. During the war phase, the strategic area of atomic energy was nationalized as well.

During the 1950s and the 1960s, a few Crown corporations were set up, most of which acted in the interests of patriotism. Such Crown corporations as the Canada Council, the CBC reorganization and Expo 67 were set up at that time. I suppose that from 1800 to about 1970 there was a maximum of about 50 or 60 Crown corporations in existence.

Since 1968 we have entered a new phase in the growth of Crown corporations. We have entered a phase of an absolute proliferation of Crown corporations which has given the Government and its executive control over broad areas of our society. I believe we should describe this phase as the socialist phase, and I mean socialist in terms of economics. I do not see socialism existing only in terms of social areas. I have no problem with having us collectively agree that we want to fund schools or hospitals publicly. However, when we start to move into the creation of wealth and the economic side of society and begin to nationalize and socialize through Crown corporations, that is when we become inefficient and block the natural market price signals which cause appropriate change where necessary. That is the problem with socialism and that is what has happened since 1972. There has been almost unlimited growth of marketing boards and nationalization of industries, under which Canadair and de Havilland fall. We have the situation of public servants going out and incorporating companies on their own, without even the Minister of the Department being aware of what they are doing; but the taxpayers have to jump in and get those companies off the hook. There is an example of this in British Columbia and it cost taxpayers something like $750 million.

Every few years Parliament has to write off $400 million, $500 million, $600 million or $700 million for the CNR. Air Canada, which is a well-run company, gets all sorts of privileges. When a company becomes an agent of Her Majesty, it can then obtain money more cheaply than private competitors can obtain it in the marketplace. Air Canada also has a monopoly. While it is well run , it is only succeeding because it still has some 5 per cent debentures in its annual report, and it has an absolute monopoly of many of the major points across the country, including the setting of rates. Therefore, it surely should succeed when it has that type of advantage. We might look at the Dungarvin Forest Service Company, which was set up under B.C. law. That company went belly-up and cost the taxpayers $750 million.

All of these Crown corporations—and there are over 400, including the subsidiaries—have the effect of distorting the marketplace. I know that my friends in the NDP dislike this profit motive and the concept of the invisible hand of Adam Smith. Adam Smith did not create the law. He was simply describing the phenomenon that if we do not change the times, and if we do not adopt new technology when our competitors do, the competitor will be able to provide a service to the public at a cheaper cost, and that service will be bought. If we do not change, we will go down.

That principle applies whether in a socialist country, a communist country, or here in Canada. We have not been prepared to face the changes that have occurred in the world. It is as if South Korea does not exist. That has been the public policy of this country. It is as if Japan has not come on. There seems to be a reluctance on the part of the Government to realize that we have to compete in the world and to make that case with Canadians, so that we can adopt high technology and change our educational system. That is what the invisible hand of Adam Smith is. He simply described, as did other scientists, the law of gravity. We might not like the law of gravity, but we still are faced with it as a reality. That is the invisible hand that Adam Smith described. We must always in public policy keep on the cutting edge.

Crown corporations, by virtue of being creatures of government and without the discipline of the marketplace, never fail. For example, we know that if 100 private companies are set up, at least 40 per cent of them will fail, either because of under-capitalization or inefficient management. But, Mr. Speaker, have you ever seen one Crown corporation fail? Never, Mr. Speaker; they simply come back and ask the taxpayers to kick in the money. That is the problem.

When Crown corporations are set up, they should be told: "Here is your mandate; either you make it or you die". I could live with that. But when Crown corporations continuously survive as a result of the infusion of public moneys, I take issue with that and I object to that. Those public moneys are coming out of the pockets of our mothers, fathers, sisters and brothers—taxpayers who are having a very difficult time meeting their mortgage payments and properly educating their children. I disagree with digging deeper into people's pockets to save a Crown corporation.

The reason we are saving Crown corporations is that if the Minister responsible sets a corporation up and that corporation fails, it affects the perception and success of the Minister. Therefore, he will not let that corporation fail. That has been the traditional response of government. When a government sets up a Crown corporation, it ensures that that corporation will succeed even if it takes every cent from every Canadian because it is the reputation of the government or the Minister which is at stake. We must cut through that.

This Bill is purported by the Government to give better accountability. When one looks behind it, in fact it does not perform that duty. I say to my colleagues opposite that they should adopt Bill C-27 which was presented during the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) in 1979. That Bill was vastly superior in terms of accountability and setting forth the duties of directors.

When the Cabinet appoints a chief executive officer, the directors are nothing but an advisory, honorific body—a way to transfer money to more government supporters across the country. There should be a statute which puts the responsibility on the board of directors. They should hire the chief executive officer and monitor that chief executive officer day by day. If he does not cut the mustard, they can fire him because it would be their responsibility in law. Even that one change would be a major advance.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations. As I watched the debate on this Bill unfold, I could not help but ask myself: Why is the Government pursuing this Bill? I asked that question because my colleagues in the Official Opposition have already demonstrated that the Bill is seriously, if not fatally, flawed. It does not, for example, address many of the issues and recommendations of the Estey Commission of Inquiry into Air Canada. Had C-24 been in force in 1977-78, we would not have avoided the débâcle that occurred with AECL at that time. In my opinion, if Bill C-24 had been in force, we would still not have avoided the chronic problems we are facing today with Canadair and de Havilland.

It seems to me to be quite obvious that the present Government has little or no real faith in Bill C-24 as an effective curative to the problems we have faced as a nation over the past ten years. On the one hand, Bill C-24 is pointed to as a solution to the problems we face when dealing with the financial management and control practices of Crown corporations. On the other hand, only a few days after Bill C-24 was tabled, the Government tabled the CDIC legislation. This Bill, Bill C-25, is in many important respects in direct conflict or inconsistent with the changes listed in Bill C-24. I ask the House, if Bill C-24 is so good, then why is it not good enough for CDIC? These two Bills must have been drafted at approximately the same time, undoubtedly by the same people. Why the inconsistency? Is it an oversight, or is the Government still uncertain about the best way to proceed? I suspect it is the latter and, therefore, the best solution is for Bill C-24 to be withdrawn until the Government can make up its mind.

We must ask ourselves: Why is the Government pressing on with this Bill at this time? The Government had the problems of managing Crown corporations brought forcefully to its attention as far back as 1974. In the period between 1974-76, I served as the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. The new Auditor General for Canada at that time, Mr. James Macdonell, minced no words about the Government's over-all mismanagement of its affairs. That was ten years ago. Why wait until the eve of an election to bring in a hodge-podge of legalese to deal with one of the most important problems in Canada, namely the over-all management of Canada's Crown corporations? As a nation we cannot continue building up our massive public debt with annual deficits ranging anywhere between $25 billion and $31 billion due to the mismanagement that we see at the top.

In the report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons for the fiscal year which ended March 31, 1976, these words appear in his Financial Management and Control Study:

> I am deeply concerned that Parliament—and indeed the Government—has lost, or is close to losing, effective control of the public purse.

● (1530)

In the previous year, the same Auditor General stated, and I quote:

> The present state of the financial management and control systems of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada is significantly below acceptable standards of quality and effectiveness.

He stated that he based this conclusion on:

—a comprehensive examination of financial management and controls in 28 departments and agencies of government. The examination resulted in 34 recommendations for strengthening and improving financial controls at the central government-wide level and in hundreds of observations and recommendations—

He continues in his 1976 report by stating:

> During this second year of the massive special study of financial management and control throughout the Government of Canada which was launched in May 1974—

And, as I say, Mr. Speaker, that was more than ten years ago:

—our examinations have been concerned mainly with the Crown corporations—

At that time Mr. Macdonell reported his findings in these words:

> In the majority of Crown corporations audited by the Auditor General, financial management and control is weak and ineffective. Moreover, co-ordination and guidance by central government agencies of financial management and control practices in these Crown corporations are virtually non-existent.

That was not a very pleasant statement to read, Mr. Speaker. It was an indictment of the present administration. The full results of the two-year study led him to state, in his report to the House of March 31, 1976, as follows:

> Based on the study of the systems of departments, agencies and Crown corporations audited by the Auditor General, financial management and control in the Government of Canada is grossly inadequate. Furthermore, it is likely to remain so until the Government takes strong, appropriate and effective measures to rectify this critically serious situation.

The Auditor General, Sir, may just as well have been baying at the moon when one considers the lack of attention given to his recommendations. Surely this Government is not going to try to pull the wool over the eyes of the Canadian people by stating that this Bill represents strong, appropriate and effective measures to rectify a critically serious situation. Unfortunately, it falls far short of providing greater cabinet control over our Crown corporations, and far short, Sir, of providing greater accountability to Parliament.

During my public career I have never been persuaded that the requirements for good financial management and control in Government need to differ at all when compared to those in any other corporation in the country, with one exception. I believe management and control over government corporations should be more stringent, because governments are dealing with what I regard as trust funds provided to them by the taxpayers of Canada to finance operations, whereas in the private sector, many times shareholders put up their own money knowing very well that they face a major risk when so doing.

When I look at the wording of Bill C-24, I can come to only one conclusion, namely, that it is a crass attempt to defuse the Crown corporations issue. In other words, it is simply a political exercise. I cannot believe in all sincerity that the Government would want this Bill to become law. It is simply too full of fundamental defects.

Bill C-24 covers some 183 Crown corporations and subsidiaries wholly owned by the federal Government. Some schedules are revised, some corporations are dropped, while others are rearranged into three categories. However, with all of this magician's hocus-pocus, this waving of the magic wand and holding up of a sheet, Parliament will still see only summaries of corporate plans, operating budgets and capital budgets as they are tabled by the appropriate Ministers. I say to you, Sir, that there is no time limit for the tabling of these Crown corporations' documents and the Treasury Board controls their form, content, budgets and summaries.

In view of all the faults I have listed, I hope that the Government will withdraw this Bill and eventually replace it with one more in keeping with the recommendations which were made by our Auditor General. I could cite some suitable recommendations, Sir, for the consideration of this Government, but that is really unnecessary. When James Macdonell tabled his report—and I was privileged to assist him in its preparation—there were many helpful suggestions put forward. It was a matter of some concern to me, having worked with the Auditor General very closely during those years, that all of that work appeared to be in vain. It still appears to be in vain even at this late date, more than ten years later, because the actions which he had hoped to see taken, the recommendations which he had hoped would become law, are still being divided and subdivided in this Bill.

Mr. Macdonell laid out the course very clearly. He pointed his ship of state toward the area in which it should go, namely, financial management at the top. In his view, if that course had been followed, we would not be faced with the conditions with which we are faced today in this country, where our dollar is debased, our unemployment is at the million and a half figure and rising, where we have massive deficits and a constantly growing public debt. He hoped to avert all that by assessing the operations of these Crown corporations and by putting forward hopeful suggestions.

In conclusion I say through you, Sir, to the Government that I hope the Auditor General's work was not all in vain and that the Government will withdraw this aberration which is before the House and bring forward a Bill more in keeping with the recommendations which were made by Mr. James Macdonell when he was our Auditor General.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act dealing with the whole subject of the accountability of Crown corporations. I welcome this opportunity because of the importance of the subject. First of all, it is important simply because of the sheer bulk of Crown corporations in our economy and in our daily lives. Both provincial and federal Crown corporations affect the daily lives of people in all parts of Canada, and there is widespread concern that there is neither financial nor social accountability built into these Crown corporations. Unlike private corporations which exist primarily to make a profit for their shareholders, Crown corporations are supposed to serve a public purpose. The public purpose, as we all know, can be defined in several different ways.

I was interested to read the remarks of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) regarding this Bill when he introduced it in March. He talked about the creation of the CNR by the Conservative Government in 1919, and about that he said, and I quote:

> The objectives were to safeguard the Government's large investment in the railways, to protect Canada's image in foreign capital markets, and to avoid potential damage to large segments of the Canadian economy if the three companies (then on the brink of bankruptcy) did not continue to operate.

Beneath those very nice phrases, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that the accumulated companies which were brought into the CNR had accumulated debts of something like $1.3 billion. Through the Act which incorporated the CNR, not one investor lost any of that money, even though they had been investing in worthless stock, in effect. Therefore, basically what was defined as the "public purpose" at that time was to protect the investment community which had been speculating and had made some very handsome profits out of Canadian lands and grants.

The Canadian National Railways was formed to protect its interests and not the public interest. However, at least today it is publicly owned and it could be made to conform with public policy. The concern of our Party is that the CNR and all Crown corporations should be made to conform with public policy in the largest sense of the word. This does not always happen. For example, Canadian National owns property in the Cowichan Estuary, Lot 160. It is presently involved in some major development on that land which will have a detrimental effect on the estuary and its ability to serve as a fish habitat. When we talk about public accountability, we want to see the broadest kind of accountability whereby Crown corporations will serve not just to earn money or provide transportation, as in the case of the CNR, but also to serve the public interest; in this case to protect the fish habitat. But we are having a great deal of difficulty finding out exactly what CNR's plans are for that area because they are very secretive. We believe that at the very least a Crown corporation, when possible, should be open to public scrutiny. There is absolutely no reason, in this particular case, why they could not be open.

We have a similar situation where the CNR is involved in double-tracking through Indian lands. Again, Indian people are having difficulty finding out exactly what is happening. Therefore, we say it is simply not enough that the CNR was nationalized; we would like to see it socialized as well. We would like to see the corporation serve community interests. Basically, we are concerned that this Bill does not help very much in moving in that direction.

There are many similar examples, and I have a very striking one in Petro-Canada. That corporation is involved in exploration in the area which the Lubicon Lake Band of northern Alberta is claiming. Last December the task force on the churches and corporate responsibility wrote a letter to the Chairman of Petro-Canada Exploration Inc., Mr. Albert Hopper, and I quote from that letter:

> We have recently received reports that your Company and others are engaged in exploration, production and development on lands claimed by the Lubicon Lake Band. We understand that this industrial activity is proceeding despite the fact that the ownership of land is in dispute. Moreover, this activity apparently causes irreparable damage to the Band's way of life and livelihood and hence to its cohesion and its ability to survive as a band.

The letter goes on to ask a number of questions:

> (1) Has your company adopted certain principles governing its concepts of corporate responsibility?
> (2) Do these principles pertain to the impact of your company's activity on the social well being of people in areas of your operation?
> (3) What factors have influenced your Company's understanding of its corporate responsibility when faced with the plight of the Lubicon Band?
> Would your Company accept the proposition that its corporate responsibility goes beyond what are strictly legal or regulatory requirements and accept, as many other companies do, a responsibility towards predicaments similar to those of the Lubicon Band?
> (4) Would you comment on the charges that the activity of your Company (and others) has the effect of causing irreparable damage to the hunting, trapping and fishing economy of the Lubicon Band? Could you tell us what efforts your Company is making to minimize this damage so as not to destroy the Lubicon Band's sources of livelihood?

(5) A Globe and Mail article (18 November 1983) states that the Band's legal costs are financed through a bank loan. Should your Company and others press to have the court costs assigned to the Band, the Band's diminished resources might make it impossible for it to appeal the court's decision.

Would your Company contemplate such a step, or would it expedite an appeal to a higher court as a necessary part of a multi-faceted process through which it will be determined if the claims of the Lubicon Band have just cause?

The response from Petro-Canada was very legalistic and did not deal with the substance of the questions that were asked. In other words, Petro-Canada does not wish to be brought to the bar of social responsibility and have to face up to questions about social responsibility.

We have to ask whether that kind of action on the part of Petro-Canada really serves the public interest. We in this Party believe that Crown corporations can serve a very positive role in the economy and in society. Generally we support them but we want to see financial and social accountability built in.

I was rather interested to hear the Conservative Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) talk about his concern that Crown corporations wanted to create wealth by using some of our natural resources and that this wealth would be used to finance social services. We ask: What is wrong with that? What is wrong with the public being involved in developing our economy and using the wealth that is generated to provide a better life for everyone? For our part, we support that principle. We feel that the Government is not doing that, but we support the principle.

The Hon. Member also talked about Crown corporations distorting the marketplace. He made a rather incredible statement which implied that he still believed in Adam Smith's myth of the invisible hand. He does not seem to recognize that the marketplace in today's world is manipulated by giant corporations, that we live in a world of administered prices, and that large corporate takeovers have absolutely nothing to do with the concept of the invisible hand.

We want to see Crown corporations made accountable, because too often they act like other corporations in our society; they end up serving their own interests rather than the public interest. They end up serving Liberal Party patronage rather than the public interest. We find in our constituencies that many people are frustrated and fed up with large impersonal systems and corporations which operate in a blind manner so that ordinary people cannot seem to get a handle on them. Even the management of some of these large systems do not seem to be really in control. We suggest that Crown corporations offer the possibility of an alternative model which could be open, accountable and could serve community purposes. Instead, we have the kind of arrogance typified by de Havilland which has incurred large debts, which have been followed by bail-outs and lay-offs and, incredible as it might seem, by bonuses paid to members of the executive.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) pointed out last week that de Havilland has top-heavy management. For example, in 1981 there were 3,500 employees on the shop floor and 1,900 management employees. In 1984, there are 1,300 floor employees and 1,400 management employees. There is a slush fund for management retirees and nothing for the workers except lay-offs.

I received a letter from a constituent who was very concerned because he is fighting to keep a small business operating, at a time when de Havilland is giving bonuses to executives who have lost money.

This Bill does not go far enough, Mr. Speaker. We want to see full financial and social accountability on the part of our Crown corporations. We support the concept of Crown corporations, but they must be made accountable to the Canadian people.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, many Members of this House have had experience in committee with executives of Crown corporations and with the Ministers responsible in this House for Crown corporations. We find that in many cases Crown corporations are not answerable to the House or to parliamentary committee and, I dare say, in most cases are not even answerable to the Government. This Bill is at best a feeble attempt to try to address that issue. However, Mr. Speaker, I say that Bill C-24 does not go far enough.

The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) believes philosophically that the more Crown corporations you have, the better for the economy. I do not subscribe to that viewpoint. When one examines the amount of money that is generated by Canadians in goods and services and the percentage of those goods and services which are taken by governments at all levels, one sees that we have moved well beyond a mixed economy and are moving dangerously close to the point where government will be the chief architect of the direction and planning of the economy. That is a trend which I personally would like to see reversed.

In part, Mr. Speaker, Crown corporations have had a historical value. For example, the Member spoke of the creation of the Canadian National Railways. He will recall that the CNR actually grew out of a number of private railway corporations which were created in the second phase of railway development, especially in western Canada. Those corporations did not find financial success, and the Government essentially created the CNR out of them.

It is interesting to note that not many years ago in the House there was a write off of CNR liabilities. The argument of the NDP was always that the CNR would make money if it were not burdened with these historical debts and if we would write off in excess of $800 million. When we look at the CNR accounts we see that, through the Western Grain Transportation Act, the CNR will have a further windfall of money to enable it to show a profit. I know the same thing applies to the CPR, but I constantly hear the NDP raising the point that Crown corporations can deal with the conditions of the marketplace as well as turn a profit. However, in most cases the evidence is directly opposite. Therefore, if there is not a social value to Crown corporations, I believe we should seriously question their economic viability.

Let us take a look at the way the Northern Canada Power Commission operates. Due to bureaucratic red tape and the decision-making process, the NCPC cannot take advantage of the market or project ahead by making provision to meet the demands of the market. In the Yukon and the Northwest Territories there is economic potential, especially in the mineral field. However, we do not have the infrastructure through NCPC to develop that resource because we do not have the power to do so. There are corporations today considering how that kind of corporation could be privatized in order to develop the social goals which the Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands and the NDP generally say are valid. We accept the validity of the goals, namely, the creation of jobs and of an economic basis in Yukon and the Northwest Territories. However, Crown corporations generally are unable to take advantage of the economic realities of the moment and in many ways have not served the developmental aspirations of that part of Canada.

More important, Mr. Speaker, my constituents do not understand how the Government can create more Crown corporations and spin-offs of those Crown corporations and pour money into them and then come before the House and ask for additional financing for them, as in the case of de Havilland. I defy anyone in the House or in the financial markets to know exactly how much more de Havilland or Canadair are going to need over the next 10 years. Our constituents ask us why taxes have to be at certain levels when they are struggling with their farms and small businesses trying to maintain a tax level to stay in business. They read daily about Ministers making statements that Crown corporations will need new infusions of capital.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that in that regard Crown corporations are competing directly with the private economy. If you take a look at borrowings today you will find that 93 per cent of borrowings in Canada are made by Government. What does that leave the market economy? That is another way in which the Government and Crown corporations compete directly in the marketplace with small business and farmers. There is a double standard, Mr. Speaker. Crown corporations can come to Parliament and get additional funds to support companies that are not viable on the basis that jobs will be lost if this is not done. If you flip the coin, you will find that we are possibly losing many more jobs. Small businesses are not viable. They are not being created because the tax load is such that a person cannot make that kind of investment.

In my experience in the House, Members and Ministers opposite have not told us the number of jobs that are being lost because the Government is in the competitive financial market as well as competes directly with private enterprise in the same field. We also hear the argument that we do not want to be thrown out of the aeronautical field. That is true and I accept that argument. However, if that is the case, why are European countries looking at the cost of joint ventures? They are looking for new financial arrangements in order not to be a burden on the taxpaying public of those countries. We in Canada somehow feel that the financial resources are limitless when it comes to Crown corporations.

Those of us who have been sitting in committee have seen executive members of Crown corporations come before committee. We know the answers we are getting are not complete. I am not saying the answers are false; I am saying they are not complete. They may say that they cannot give more information because it would destroy their competitive or commercial advantage or commercial information. How can you have it both ways? On the one hand Crown corporation executives come before committees and say they are answerable to Parliament. On the other hand, they say they cannot answer questions put by Members of Parliament because it might jeopardize their economic or commercial position.

Until the Government presents a Bill which will make Crown corporations answerable to Parliament, and through Parliament to the people of Canada, who are paying taxes and struggling to develop resources and jobs in the economy of Canada, I suggest to Members of the House that Bill C-24 should not be passed.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on Bill C-24 my thoughts go back a number of years to the period in time when we were dealing with AECL. At that particular time, one of the members of the committee decided to ask Government officials exactly how many Crown corporations the Canadian Government had control of. The answer to the first question was that it was in the vicinity of 100 or so. Day after day those officials kept coming back for further questions. Every day they came back they had a few more Crown corporations. They were embarrassed. The more Crown corporations they had to announce to the committee, the more embarrassed they were. I would think that today any responsible Government would be terribly embarrassed to count the number of Crown corporations that the Canadian Government has to service 25 million people. After all, Mr. Speaker, what are Crown corporations for? They are not there for their own purposes but, rather, to give service to the people. We now see that the whole system is getting out of control, to the point where it will be a horrendous task for any government to regain control of the Crown corporation system in Canada. Crown corporations are multiplying like rabbits.

Eventually, the sunset clause with regard to any legislation must be reinstated so that legislation can be brought back to Parliament and sustained for the benefit of the people in Canada. Otherwise, the entire system will get completely out of control. This is what has happened to government officials who have attempted to determine the number of Crown corporations that exist in Canada. I do not think that anyone really knows what the number is today as a result of subsidiaries multiplying so quickly.

Let us consider Petro-Canada, which was supposed to be a window on the industry. The House will recall what the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said at the time, that this was the reason this corporation was being established. It was primarily because the Leader of the NDP at the time, Mr. David Lewis, was harping on the subject of corporate welfare bums. Canadians finally became upset about this and decided that perhaps there was something taking place of which they were not aware. However, I maintain that it is not necessary to have a Crown corporation in order to have a window on an industry. That is the responsibility of the Government. We have the vehicle available to us to be able to delve into those situations and determine whether an individual or corporation is making excess profits. This can be dealt with accordingly through the taxation structure.

Instead, the government of the day decided to set up a so-called window on the industry. Some window! According to the latest figures I have, Petro-Canada has 54 subsidiaries under its control. That is how quickly it has multiplied since its inception.

Let me quote from a statement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) to the Ottawa Citizen. He said, "Petro-Canada's latest spending spree, its partial takeover of BP Canada Limited", British Petroleum Canada Limited, "for $347 million is simply a good commercial deal". I suggest that the Hon. Minister made a mistake. The Government did not really want to have a window on the industry. What it wanted was to get into the oil business. We now find that Petro-Canada wants to sell off 400 of its service stations in eastern Canada because it does not have any use for them and they are making it go broke.

If Petro-Canada had to operate within the same structure as does any private corporate entity, it would have gone bankrupt long ago. Hundreds of millions of dollars have gone into Petro-Canada to buy Petrofina and then BP. All of the interest was paid for out of the revolving term loan of the Canadian ownership account. It must be great to have a sugar daddy like that, and I am sure that William Hopper is delighted to be fed cash to enable him to continue paying those debts. He must be pleased that he does not have to show his debt equity relationship.

The facts would come out if we had appropriate legislation. This is why the Government must be held accountable for the Crown corporation legislation. We cannot allow the current situation to continue because it will bankrupt us.

I stand to be corrected but I believe that Mr. Hopper is the director of some 23 subsidiaries that are related to Petro-Canada. The latest figure also shows that Petro-Canada has at least 6,900 person years. This massive corporation is just one example of the Crown corporations with which we must cope. Canadians in the future will face havoc if the Government continues to get itself into this dilemma by promoting Crown corporations without having any sunset clauses.

Let us examine Canagrex, one of the most recent Crown corporations. It was brought in by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I have talked to people within the Department of Supply and Services who were satisfied that they had all the necessary facilities to accommodate the export industry that Canagrex could possibly generate. Such duplication of services only causes an overlap, which is a major cause of problems for our country. There is too much overlap between departments of federal, provincial and municipal governments, which only creates much frustration.

For example, when two or three corporations are involved in a single project, one cannot make a decision and accomplish something without the approval of the others. This is a situation that is taking place in the country today. It also happens between the federal and provincial governments. For example, it was reported several years ago that there were 600 meetings between the federal Government and the provincial Government of Alberta alone at the ministerial level, employee level and throughout the system. This is what people mean when they talk about a heavy government overburden on the taxpayers. This duplication and overlapping of services must not continue.

I know that I am expressing the opinion of 100 per cent of my constituents as their Member of Parliament in the House of Commons when I say that they would be very happy if the Government were to take the opposite approach and cut down on the number of Crown corporations and the overburden of Government that has been allowed to take place in Canada. Only then will we be able to create a situation in which the taxpayers will be able to carry the load that the Government thrusts upon them.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer)—Railways—Grain freight rates (a) Interim adjustment costs (b) Request that Minister review figures; the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson)—Northern Affairs—Lobby against fur trapping industry; the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson)—Housing—Mortgage rate protection plan.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take part in this debate on Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

In looking at this Bill, we find that it is virtually a skeleton Bill because most of what will really happen concerning the Government's intentions on Crown corporations will depend on regulations which have not yet been drafted.

We have rejected this unparliamentary approach to legislation so many times in the past that it is hardly worth-while wasting one's breath or devoting a lot of time to it now. Needless to say, this Bill attempts woefully, I suggest, to deal with a problem which is crying out for meaningful reform. All this Bill contains is cosmetic changes that will do nothing to revamp any Crown corporation meaningfully.

The Minister states that Bill C-24 is designed to strengthen the control and accountability of Crown corporations. However, he neglected to tell us that the Bill does not affect all Crown corporations. There are now some 315 Crown corporations under federal jurisdiction, but this Bill, woefully, will deal with only 183. Really, Mr. Speaker, any child can see that this Bill does not come to grips with and does not accomplish what the Government promises. It really does nothing to strengthen the control and accountability of Crown corporations. There is really no comprehensive plan of action to deal with an extremely serious situation. This Bill could have provided the opportunity for a long awaited and necessary reform in an area that is in great need of meaningful changes. But simply put, Mr. Speaker, it does not do the job that it sets out to do.

I am not going to deal with specific examples of the inadequacies of Crown corporations because we have too many examples of this already in the record enunciated by many speakers in the debate. The record of Crown corporations in Canada is anything but good. Very few of them ever show a profit. In fact, last year they lost a total of some $4 billion, which is underwritten by you and me, the Canadian taxpayers. Crown corporations are good examples of why governments should not be involved in business. I grant you that there may be a few essential areas where government must be involved, but really, Mr. Speaker, 315 Crown corporations? That is ridiculous. If this Bill is to be passed eventually, Mr. Speaker, it should be amended, completely overhauled and completely restructured if it is to do the job and do it properly.

It seems to me that in Bill C-24 the Government is trying to have itself perceived by the people of Canada, and is trying to convince Canadians of it in the Bill, as having finally gained control over Crown corporations. Crown corporations have been totally uncontrolled for many years, running their own show and oblivious of the fact that they are responsible to the people of Canada. Unfortunately, gaining control over Crown corporations with Bill C-24 is just an illusion and nothing more. It is a bluff by the Government that will not go unnoticed by Canadians. With this Government, Mr. Speaker, government by Order in Council has become a way of life and Parliament has been turned into a rubberstamping organization. That is why we have Bills such as this before us. That is why this Bill gives all the power over Crown corporations not to Parliament, but to the Cabinet. Only rarely does this Government really seek the approval of Parliament when it comes to the expenditure of taxpayers' dollars. That is why we are looking for accountability in this Bill.

There are many deficiencies in this Bill. This Bill shies away from presenting policy on matters of internal government organization. There is no reference to the privileges and immunities of Crown corporations. The Bill does not specify whether or not public servants may sit on the boards of Crown corporations. This Bill sidesteps the suggestion that a parliamentary overseeing committee should monitor Crown corporations. If this were done, Mr. Speaker, the Government could easily avoid the threat of cover-up accusations. It is common sense that if all Parties are involved, there is bound to be less suspicion of underhanded tactics on the part of the Government or Cabinet.

It is our hope to have the opportunity to make amendments to this Bill, which would institute the necessary checks and balances to prevent the Government from running wild. What Bill C-24 now presents nowhere near gives the answers that all Canadians would like to see in bringing some semblance of control over and accountability to Crown corporations. Let us hope that the necessary changes will be made to Bill C-24 that will result in a meaningful Bill, one which it will be possible for all Members of all Parties in the House to support in order to bring Crown corporations at long last under the control of the representatives of Canada's taxpayers.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations. I must say that in listening today to the various speakers I could not help but think of the individual who purchases a bag of apples from the store and, because there is a bad apple somewhere in the bag, takes the whole bag and throws it out. I have listened to speaker after speaker this afternoon, mainly Conservatives, saying how horrible Crown corporations are and how they have failed to serve the people of Canada. I cannot help but think of the eight Conservative Governments that exist across the country and, in terms of total assets, have more in Crown corporations than the federal Government has altogether. I do not understand in a sense the theme of the criticism—

Mr. Blaikie: It is called hypocrisy.

Mr. Riis: As the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) says, maybe there is some ring of hypocrisy in the comments. However, I will not say that necessarily, Mr. Speaker. One of the very earliest Crown corporations in this part of the world, in central Canada, goes back to 1906 when the Conservative Government in the Province of Ontario decided that a Crown corporation should have a monopoly over all the power generated in the Province of Ontario and that that was in the best interests of the citizens of Ontario. The Government essentially established Ontario Hydro at that time. Because of the obvious advantage, I suppose, in having a Crown corporation responsible for such a critical energy resource, we saw similar things in British Columbia under the Social Credit Government, again the establishment of a Crown corporation to oversee hydro developments. There were similar acts across the country. I suppose that one of the most recent was the Conservative Government takeover of Pacific Western Airlines a little while ago, again in the best interests of Western Canadians, as Premier Lougheed said at that time. It was said that the service being provided by the private airline was not adequately serving Western Canadians, at least in the mind of the Premier of Alberta. He decided that PWA should become a Crown corporation.

One could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, and list literally hundreds of Crown corporations that Conservative governments, as well as Liberal and Social Credit governments, have created for one reason or another in the best interest, at the time of creation, of the citizens of a province or, as far as the federal Government was concerned, in the best interest of the people of Canada.

The tradition of Crown corporations is as Canadian as the beaver or the hockey stick. Crown corporations have been part of the economic fabric of the Canadian economy virtually since their inception. I refer to the origin of Crown corporations which goes back to 1841 when the joint Governments of Upper and Lower Canada decided, in the best interest of Canada at that time, that an integrated canal system would benefit Canadians. The Governments of Upper and Lower Canada got together and established a board, which was essentially the forerunner of Crown corporations in the transportation industry. Most recently, of course, and the most obvious is the creation of the Canadian National Railways, again created by and large in an effort to bail out some financially pressed transportation companies, three railroad companies that had grown up at the second stage of the railroad era in Canada and which found themselves in financial difficulties. Because the Government of the day felt it was appropriate that these rail lines be maintained, that the service they provided and the development, particularly of western Canada, was very important, the creation of the CNR as a Crown corporation took place. Since then, Mr. Speaker, we have seen many other examples of Crown corporations created to serve Canadians in one way or another.

While I do not want for a moment to suggest that the Bill before us is adequate, that the Bill before us will resolve the problems attached to Crown corporations, I will say that it is at least a step in the right direction. What we have found in Crown corporations is that while certain areas might have been nationalized, they have not been socialized. While Crown corporations are intended to represent the views of Canadian society and to reflect social and economic policy, in more cases than not they act no different from their corporate brothers in the private sector. Their motives seem to be profits only. Their motives appear to be the shareholders, in this case the people of Canada, as opposed to being an arm or a vehicle with which to develop economic policy in the best interests of Canada.

I should like to refer to some Crown corporations which tend to be glossed over in the criticisms Hon. Members have raised in the last number of days. I refer to corporations such as the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, the Medical Research Council, the National Museums of Canada, the National Research Council of Canada, the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, the Science Council of Canada, the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, the Canada Council, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Farm Credit Corporation, the Export Development Corporation, and Teleglobe Canada. One could go on and on listing Crown corporations, which are not perfect by a long shot but which provide a very valuable service to Canadians.

First, I will refer to the Export Development Corporation. In what position would Canadian exporters be today, in what position would Canadian firms be today, if they did not have an organization like the Export Development Corporation standing behind them to assist in ensuring for their commodities, as they move into overseas ports, some type of supportive financing? In every exporting country in the world today, there are Crown corporations providing that kind of supportive system, the type of financial support needed to compete on international markets in today's competitive world.

I do not understand the critics of this particular Bill. I do not know whether or not the Conservatives would like to do away with the Export Development Corporation. Are they saying that we should do away with the Farm Credit Corporation? It is not perfectly clear, and I do not want to put words into their mouths. While there is a great deal of room for criticism, let us not throw out the baby with the bath water or throw out the whole bushel of apples because one or two are a little rotten or sour.

It has become perfectly clear that Bill C-24 does not go far enough. It is inadequate. When we lump Canadair and Canada Council in the same Bill and say that they are to be approached in a similar way, it misses the point as to how different are those two Crown corporations. For example, it is imperative that Canada Council remain at arm's length from this institution. When Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent brought in the Canada Council Act, the point he made was that it was important for Canada to encourage the development of the cultural arts at arms length, not to control the development of the arts in Canada. That distinction is very important.

When it comes to accountability, I sat through the sessions when Canadair appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, only to hear those corporate directors misrepresent and mislead. I would not go so far as to say that they would lie to us, but they certainly misrepresented the information they were presenting. They refused to tell us all sorts of points when specific questions were put to them.

If they are to be accountable, this Bill before us must be altered. While we have a tendency to support the concept of this Bill, the principle of Crown corporations, we certainly have grave reservations about it in its existing form and will certainly be suggesting amendments at the appropriate stage.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I rise, as have other Hon. Members, to speak on Bill C-24. I should like to say at the outset that I share the many concerns of my colleagues in the Opposition on this whole matter.

The concern I want to express today, however, relates to the lack of accountability of Crown corporations to Parliament. During the Crown corporations hearings before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts in January-February 1978, a committee member expressed the frustrations of many Members of Parliament with Crown corporations. He said:

> When it comes to Crown corporations, I feel like I am in a bus, with the windows painted black and the bus is taking me helter-skelter to God knows where.

The essential ongoing role which Parliament must play with respect to Crown corporations is to hold Crown corporations to account for their handling of the public trust and to hold the Government to account for the exercise of its shareholders' prerogatives. To do so requires that Members of Parliament have information about Crown corporations which is relevant, accurate, comprehensive and provided on a timely basis. What happens all too often is that Members of Parliament do not receive any information at all or, when they do, it is irrelevant, inaccurate and too late.

In his 1982 annual report to Parliament, the Auditor General found that "timely" information on Crown corporations is often not made available to Parliament. Under the Financial Administration Act, Crown corporations are supposed to provide their annual reports to the Minister within three months of the end of the fiscal year. The Minister then has to table the report in Parliament within 15 days.

The Auditor General has found that in 1982, 64 per cent of the annual reports of Crown corporations were tabled after this deadline. It took 54 per cent of Crown corporations over six months to have their annual reports tabled after the end of the fiscal year—54 per cent took six months or more! Is that timely information? The Auditor General also found that in 1982 only two capital budgets of Crown corporations were approved prior to the year to which they applied and were tabled in Parliament. Most capital budgets of Crown corporations were approved during or after the year to which they applied. The 1982, capital budgets of 10 Crown corporations were never tabled in Parliament, according to the Auditor General's 1982 report. Is this the way to provide timely, accurate, comprehensive information to Parliament? What penalties or sanctions were taken against those Crown corporations or Ministers who failed to fulfil their statutory duties to provide information to this House? The answer is none, absolutely none. That demonstrates how serious the Government's commitment really is to reforming Crown corporations.

Since 1976, the Auditor General has frequently been critical of the quality and integrity of information provided by Crown corporations through their often glossy and expensive annual reports. The Government alleges that Bill C-24 would result in Parliament receiving much more and much better information about Crown corporations. What nonsense, Mr. Speaker. In fact, in many respects Bill C-24 goes in precisely the opposite direction.

Let us take a look at the facts. Under Clauses 99 and 154 of the Bill, the Minister can withhold from Parliament a directive to a Crown corporation if, in the Minister's opinion, the directive contains "commercially detrimental information". The Minister alone makes that decision. There is no appeal.

Under the current Financial Administration Act, all Schedule C corporations and some Schedule D corporations are to submit operating budgets for approval by the Government and for tabling in Parliament. Under Clause 131 of Bill C-24, only those corporations requiring a parliamentary appropriation are required to table an operating budget in Parliament.

Under the current Financial Administration Act, all Schedule C and D corporations are to submit capital budgets for approval and for tabling in Parliament. Under Clause 132(2) of Bill C-24, all corporations which fall under Schedule C-1 must submit capital budgets, but corporations which fall under Schedule C-11 need submit capital budgets only if the Treasury Board so directs.

Under Clause 130 of the Bill, corporate plans from all Crown corporations are submitted for the approval of the Government. However, only summaries are prepared by the corporation and tabled in Parliament. In other words, the corporations and Ministers will decide what Parliament should or should not know about the content of corporate plans.

Under Clause 154(5) of Bill C-24, Orders in Council approving, first, the incorporation or acquisition of subsidiaries; second, remuneration for directors, chairmen and chief executive officers; and third, corporation plans, are exempted from the authority of Sections 24 to 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act. This means that they are not public documents and are not automatically referred to the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments.

Although Bill C-24 goes to some length to define deadlines by which reports, budgets and plans are to be tabled in Parliament, it provides for no sanction whatsoever for a Crown corporation which ignores or breaches those deadlines. The situation identified by the Auditor General to which I alluded earlier is therefore completely ignored by Bill C-24.

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, to say how Bill C-24 diminishes Parliament's access to relevant, accurate and comprehensive information concerning Crown corporations. In that respect, Bill C-24 proposes a regime that is worse and not better than the status quo. In tabling this Bill, the Government has once again demonstrated its contempt for Parliament and its penchant for secrecy.

I have only one paragraph left, Mr. Speaker. To return to the metaphor I used at the beginning of my address—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member can only be allowed to continue his remarks with the unanimous consent of the House because his time has expired. Is there such agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for their generosity. To return to the metaphor I used at the beginning of my address, Bill C-24 paints the windows of the bus even blacker and hurries us toward a precipice of more Canadairs, more de Havillands, more AECLs, more sports corporations and more money being wasted by Crown corporations, with little or no scrutiny or control by Parliament.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be afforded the opportunity to address the House on Bill C-24 this afternoon because it is a Bill which deals, at least in part, with a very important issue. What I regret very much, however, is that the Government, apparently being cognizant of the problem, has failed to go far enough in its attempt to resolve the problem.

The problem is that Canadians are deeply distressed, first, by a general lack of accountability that they believe permeates the entire parliamentary process and, second, by the growing number of Crown corporations which have appeared in recent years and by the fact that those Crown corporations appear to act in a manner which is almost beyond the comprehension of most Canadians and perhaps even beyond the comprehension of most parliamentarians. The difficulty causing this problem is that there is a lack of information being made available to the public regarding the nature and number of Crown corporations, regarding their methods of operation and, indeed, regarding the very purpose of their being.

I find it almost unbelievable that there is a lack of awareness among the public about the number of Crown corporations which exist, because these Crown corporations are in themselves economically significant. In many cases, they represent a drain upon the public purse. As well, new Governments which have come to power have found it difficult for a number of days and indeed for a number of weeks to determine exactly how many Crown corporations and their subsidiaries exist. This indicates that there has been an unfortunate failure on the part of the Government to make available to the public sufficient information to permit the public to appreciate the purpose and operations of Crown corporations.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Bill that is before us today addresses the administration of only 183 Crown corporations out of the total number of Crown corporations which exist. Members who have spoken today have referred to the fact that there are 315 Crown corporations in existence. I have heard other Members on other occasions use different numbers. The public is left at sea. It is simply unaware of how many Crown corporations exist.

I believe that the Government has taken a tentative step in the direction of trying to convince the public that Crown corporations will be more accountable, but it has failed to ensure that there will be sufficient accountability for the public to feel confident about the Government's administration of this problem. Many Canadians would be quite content if there were some way for us to reduce quite substantially the number of Crown corporations which exist. In fact, many Canadians would like to see that happen. One of the reasons why they are so opposed to Crown corporations is that they believe that these institutions have failed in the past to be accountable to Parliament and to the public.

As well, Canadians are deeply distressed by the fact that they know very little about the affairs of Crown corporations, including the highly publicized ones like de Havilland and Canadair, two Crown corporations which have been in the public eye in recent weeks. It has become apparent to Canadians, who believed that they understood the financial doings of such Crown corporations, that they are in fact unaware of important statistics and have perhaps even been misled by those who are responsible.

What we need is a complete overhaul of the entire structure of all Crown corporations which exist. We need an intensive examination of the reasons for their creation in the first place. We need an intensive investigation to determine whether or not they are fulfilling the purposes for which they were intended. We need an opportunity to determine whether or not Crown corporations are being operated in a proper administrative manner that is, in a competent and business-like manner. We also need to determine whether or not they are, in fact, fulfilling some important function.

Some of the better-known corporations are very much under public scrutiny. The lesser-known corporations, of course, operate almost in ignorance—the public is almost ignorant of their very being. This Bill unfortunately does very little to offset public concern. For example, the Bill will ensure that it is Cabinet rather than Parliament which will have access to vital information. There is nothing in this Bill which will compel Cabinet to make the information available to Parliament and hence to the public at large. Unfortunately, this Cabinet and other Liberal cabinets in the past have demonstrated a very definite inclination to ignore Parliament and to ignore public opinion. Whereas Cabinet responsibility under an older political system would have ensured parliamentary awareness of important and vital decisions, we do not have that kind of assurance any longer.

What we need is a system whereby the operations, the day-to-day administration and the books of Crown corporations worthy of public support, are open to public scrutiny. That means, of course, that they must be fully accountable to the Parliament of this land. It is not enough for summations of financial statistics to be made available to Parliament. Detailed estimates should be made available to the appropriate parliamentary committee. As well, we need the assurance that no new Crown corporation will be established without parliamentary scrutiny and without parliamentary approval. Hon. Members of this House know that it is possible under the proposed legislation for new subsidiaries to be created under existing legislation without reference to Parliament. Also, new Crown corporations could be created with only a minimum amount of reference to Parliament and, hence, to public opinion.

Therefore, there is nothing in this legislation which will dispel the immense amount of public antipathy which exists. There is nothing in the legislation which will reassure Canadians that someone is responsible to Parliament and hence to the public, that someone in fact is in charge of the ship. If we use the analogy of the rudderless ship, there is a feeling that somehow or other the whole concept of Crown corporations has gone astray from its original purpose.

Previous speakers have referred to Crown corporations which were introduced early in Canada's history, at a time when there was widespread appreciation of the need for such particular institutions. However, those Crown corporations were created in response to a specific need. They were created at a time when the purpose and the administration of those Crown corporations were subject to public scrutiny. today, we have a situation whereby individuals operate in secret and have the capacity to create new Crown corporations that are permitted to continue to operate almost beyond public reproach. As a result, as has been stated, those Crown corporations were permitted to accumulate an operating deficit of approximately $4 billion last year. As a result of the method in which those Crown corporations have been permitted to operate, without being subject to parliamentary and public scrutiny, we are virtually unaware of the reasons for those losses. The public remains unaware as to why the losses were incurred and in what enterprises they were incurred, and they have no awareness of the economic or perhaps social benefits which could be derived from such government activity.

One of the reasons why I think there is so much dissatisfaction with the entire political process today is that we have permitted an immense bureaucracy to evolve within Canada. I think that Crown corporations are part of that bureaucracy in a general sense. We permitted the public bureaucracy to evolve within Canada and we permitted it to operate in such a way that the public, unfortunately, has lost confidence in it. As a result of the public's having lost confidence in that bureaucracy as well as in the Crown corporations, the public is growing extremely apprehensive about the entire parliamentary and political process. The danger in permitting that lack of confidence to continue is that, without support for this institution, the very essence of the democratic process is in danger. The essence of democracy is the principle of accountability. We must do everything to ensure that that principle continues.

Therefore, this Bill is a bad Bill because it misleads the public into believing that henceforth, if the Bill is passed, it would ensure that accountability. This Bill does not go far enough. It is bad legislation and must be amended before it can be improved.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-24 is indeed an important piece of legislation. It is important in the context of the tremendous number of Crown corporations in Canada. In fact, I am given to understand that the Government does not know precisely how many Crown corporations it has. If the Government does not know how many Crown corporations it has, then it becomes all the more important that the legislation be effective to deal with their operation.

I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) who spoke previously. He is a very distinguished and senior Member of this House. He referred to information being relative, accurate and too late. It reminds me of the story of the economist who was good in handing out information that was relative, accurate, but totally useless. That is how many of us view the legislation in front of us. It is not simply that we want to be critical of the Government for the sake of being critical, but many speakers, on this side, in fact the spokesman for our Party, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), laid out some very useful and helpful suggestions on ways in which the Government could use legislation like this effectively to bring about its intended purpose.

The name "Crown corporation" has an interesting connotation. The Bill begins by saying:

> Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons—

I am not sure that Her Majesty, if she knew everything that was being carried out in her name, would be very pleased about it. One cannot help but make that kind of observation. What is most important for anyone, including government, to bring to his job is the right attitude. If the Government really wanted to control Crown corporations and to see that they function according to their purpose, it would have had a different attitude. I would like to cite VIA Rail as an example. VIA Rail was created on a $1 vote. We do not have a Bill which is called, "VIA Rail". Therefore, there is no precise, easy-to-look-at terms of reference for VIA Rail. What is VIA Rail's mandate? In the last Estimates we saw that it is costing the taxpayers of this country $700 million or $800 million.

That does not require an Act of Parliament; it simply requires a change of attitude on behalf of government as to how it views and how it wants to make use of Crown corporations.

It is fine to have legislation. I do not think this is, by any means, perfect legislation. It is flawed in many ways and there have been many speakers who have pointed out why the legislation is flawed and why we are concerned about it. But even if it were first rate legislation that did not have the flaws, which we have tried to point out to the Government, the most important thing we could bring to any venture would be our attitude. I would like to suggest that that is one of the most important things which is lacking in this Government—the attitude which it takes toward its job. Its job is to see that the tax dollars which it collects from the many citizens of this country are spent in the best possible way.

I would like to talk about the regulations in the Bill. There is another point which needs to be made, and that is, that the more any government tries to do, the less control people have over it. If a government tried to do everything for the people, and they still had only one vote every four years by which to judge that government, that would mean that the people would have one vote to judge it on everything. The point is that the more a government attempts to do on behalf of the people of this country, the less control citizens of the country have over it, because they only have one vote on average every four years, or thereabouts, to pass judgment on everything the government does. Therefore, the more government does, the more that one vote at election time becomes diluted over all the issues with which the Government has dealt in the ensuing term. That is a concern. And when you see the amount of regulation being put in place with this Bill, which hands over the real power to Cabinet and by Order in Council, it further dilutes the control of the people, because it takes away what we should be doing in this House and in committee.

Over two years ago we began a process in this House which was designed to improve accountability, to improve the functioning of the House, and to improve the way the committee system works. I was part of that Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure which, I believe, in many ways, made some very useful suggestions as to how this place should conduct its affairs in a more appropriate and efficient fashion. Yet what did we see? We saw in many cases the recommendations of that committee thwarted by the present Government simply because of the attitude it took toward some of the changes which were recommended.

That is what is happening here, Mr. Speaker. When you have a committee of Cabinet which is able to appoint the board of directors, the chief executive officer, and, in the case of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and Canada Post, even appoint the vice-chairman of a Crown Corporation, what does that do to the accountability of that Crown corporation to the House of Commons? It does absolutely nothing.

It was pointed out previously by the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) that one of the ways to control anything in this world is to have a handle on the financial matters. One of the ways to do that with Crown corporations is to regulate the amount of borrowing which they are able to do. Clause 100 in the Bill gives, at least on first blush, control of the borrowing power of any Crown corporation over to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). However, Clause 135(4) states:

> The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, make regulations
> (a) exempting a specified Crown corporation or a Crown corporation of a specified class from the application of subsection (3)—

Subsection (3) simply says that a Crown Corporation cannot borrow unless the Minister of Finance approves. Yet the subsequent subsection dilutes the whole provision so that, with the approval of Cabinet, that Crown corporation can borrow and incur debt and carry on its affairs in spite of what appears to be a good clause, Clause 100, which would limit the amount of borrowing by any Crown corporation. Those are some of the things which are disconcerting about Bill C-24.

VIA Rail is an important institution in this country. It is important because the railways have played a historic role in the settlement of our country. Many of us from the west feel particularly strongly about it because distance is greater in the west, and when we see a Crown corporation like VIA Rail, which can operate without any mandate and incur the kinds of deficits it has without any instructions from the Government on what its mandate should be, it really makes one wonder how serious the Government is about addressing the problems of this Crown corporation without bringing forward, first of all, a VIA Rail Act.

It seems to me we can make the same case with CDIC. If the Government was really serious about doing what it should do with Crown corporations, it would, first of all, approach some of these Crown corporations and give them a mandate so that we may know how to judge them and what kind of guideposts they can be measured against. In the specific case of VIA Rail, we see that without a mandate it can abandon some of its passenger lines and then talk about bringing them back. How is this Bill going to affect VIA Rail when its executive officers ask for additional money to provide the services that we understand the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) is going to ask VIA Rail to provide? How is it going to be affected by this Bill? We are not told. We are simply turning over more regulation, more power and more latitude to the Cabinet to make regulations by Order in Council away from the House of Commons regarding the manner in which some of these Crown corporations should carry out their affairs.

I would like to suggest in closing, Mr. Speaker, being aware of the attitude of the present Government, that what this Bill is really going to do is to make Crown corporations if anything more exempt from examination by the House of Commons, more autonomous and independent of the committee system, and it will give them wider latitude in operating free of Parliament and free of the control of the ordinary citizens who vote and send us to this place to represent them.

Financial Administration Act

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-24 is a rather pathetic attempt to come to grips with what is a very serious governmental problem, namely, the fact that Crown corporations are basically out of control. Billions of dollars of taxpayers' assets are tied up in these Crown corporations, yet to all intents and purposes they have no democratic control over these Crown corporations. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), earlier related to the House the difficulty the Government had in even establishing the number of Crown corporations, let alone in controlling them. It did not even know the number of its own Crown corporations.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, one has to ask oneself how the heck this happens? Why are there so many Crown corporations? Why have they been allowed to proliferate as they have? I believe that if one asks oneself that question and looks for the answer, one will find that the fundamental reason is that Crown corporations are a wonderful thing for an irresponsible government. They really are a wonderful thing because, if perchance a Crown corporation does something which is good and beneficial, or is perceived to be good and beneficial, the government can take credit. If, on the other hand, the Crown corporation fouls up, well, it is not a part of government. It is there on its own. The Minister avoids any acknowledgement of its existence.

Let me give you, Mr. Speaker, two examples in that regard. I recall the time when the leadership candidate, the current Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), was Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and Canadair produced this marvellous executive jet called the "Challenger". You could not watch a television program, see a magazine or a newspaper which did not have a picture of the Minister in front of a Challenger jet talking about this wonderful Crown corporation which was at the peak of technology with this tremendous product which was going to make us billions of dollars. A few years later, when the Auditor General pointed out exactly what Canadair was doing and how many billions of dollars we were going to lose, you could not find a Minister of the Crown who would admit having heard the name "Challenger", let alone accepting responsibility for that foul-up costing billions of dollars.

I would like to point to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, Mr. Speaker. I recall when I was debating the Petro-Canada Bill, the royal commissioner Donald Macdonald was talking about how marvellous Crown corporations were and he talked about Atomic Energy of Canada Limited which had just sold a reactor to Argentina. He said, "You reactionary Tories, can you not see how wonderful Crown corporations can be?" When the Auditor General pointed out three years later that that deal was going to cost us $250 million, that there was no profit, and that an illegal bribe was made to get the contract, again you could not find a member of that Liberal Government who would admit to knowing the name of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, let alone accept the responsibility which should be theirs.

That is the fundamental reason, Mr. Speaker, that we have so many Crown corporations. It allows that irresponsible bunch over there to avoid the responsibility of the depletion of the Treasury and the wasting of billions of dollars of our money. That is why Crown corporations exist and that is why we need something much better than Bill C-24 to bring them under control.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Shall all orders and items preceding No. 100 stand?

Some Hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Stand, by unanimous consent.

• (1700)

[English]

Before we proceed to the motion, may I draw the attention of the House to the fact that last week the Chair expressed some reservations as to the content of certain motions proposed for debate during Private Members' hour. Again today before the House is a motion which contains detailed provisions which might more properly be advanced during the course of debate. The Chair will propose the motion to the House so that debate can proceed. I would, however, invite all Hon. Members when drafting their motions for the Order Paper to pay particular attention to citation 423 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, which reads:

A motion should be neither argumentative, nor in the style of a speech, nor contain unnecessary provisions or objectionable words. It is usually expressed in the affirmative, even where its purpose and effect are negative.

GARRISON DIVERSION

ADVISABILITY OF ENSURING SAFETY OF CANADIAN ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of taking those measures necessary to ensure that there is no damage caused to the Manitoba environment by the completion or construction of the Garrison Diversion Unit in the State of North Dakota and, that such measures to be considered include:

1. Continuation of diplomatic action to have the Garrison project amended so as not to affect the environment of Canada;

2. The offer of legal and technical assistance to those citizens groups in Canada now striving to halt the progress of the Garrison Diversion; and

3. The bringing to trial in the World Court, the government of the United States, should Canada be unsuccessful in its efforts to receive satisfactory assurances regarding the future safety of the Canadian environment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure once again to rise on a motion in this House to discuss this issue, which is very important to all Manitobans. This motion is similar, if not exactly the same, as the one I had on the Order Paper throughout the last session of Parliament. Indeed, it was debated on at least two occasions. I must admit that from what you have said I am not quite sure what is wrong with the motion, but I will get some direction from you on that at another time so as not to make the same mistake again.

I would like to point out, before I get into debate, that if I were submitting this motion again I would very likely take out the third point regarding the world court. I would hate to have to see us ever resort to that, because it would be an admission of complete defeat, at which time the Manitoba ecology would be subject to the kind of destruction we do not want to see happen. In addition, given the recent American attitude towards the world court, it may not be an effective move.

In any event, I would like to point out that the very first time I took part in debate in the House of Commons back in October or November of 1979 when I first came here. I asked questions, during Committee of the Whole, on a fisheries motion having to do with the Garrison issue. It is a subject matter to which I have paid attention and which I debated in this House on a number of occasions over the years. A lot of things have changed in that time Mr. Speaker, but one thing I can say has not changed is the fact that I am still as strongly opposed to the completion of the Garrison Diversion unit as it is presently designed as I was five years ago. This issue, I believe, is probably the single most important regional issue I have dealt with during my time in the House of Commons. There is a lot at stake here. Manitoba's fishing industry could be severely damaged if the project were to go ahead as planned. Jobs could be lost in that industry and in the tourist industry. The ecology of Manitoba's lakes and rivers could be irreversibly transformed. Needless to say, it will have a lasting effect, perhaps a disastrous effect, on my riding if it goes ahead as presently planned.

In preparing for the speech today, Mr. Speaker, I looked over my previous questions, statements under S.O. 43 and speeches, etc. on the Garrison. I discovered that I had risen in this House on 14 different occasions concerning this subject. As well, I have attended countless meetings in the Province of Manitoba and travelled to Washington on, I believe, four occasions to discuss the issue with members of the American Congress in order to share my concern and the concern of all Manitobans, regardless of political stripe, on this very important issue.

Over the years, Mr. Speaker, all of us have become increasingly aware of the very delicate balance which exists between nature, our ecology, and the industrial society we have created throughout most of the northern world. We have learned how fragile our rivers, streams and forests are, and how easily damaged they can be. Of notable concern is an issue which has received a lot of attention in Canada in recent years. We have seen in recent years acid rain turn living bodies of water into stagnant and worthless cesspools. Most Canadians concerned about acid rain have really wished over the years, as we continue to wish today, that our neighbours to the south shared the same concern about it that we have here in Canada. The same thing applies to the Garrison issue, Mr. Speaker. It must be dealt with between the Governments of Canada and the United States. We can see that more Canadians than Americans are concerned about this issue. They do not seem to share our particular concerns about Garrison.

Unlike the acid rain issue, Mr. Speaker, the effects of Garrison would be not largely the result of chemical pollutants but, rather, of the transfer of fish and bacteria into Canada's waterways by means of man-made lakes and canals constructed as part of the Garrison Diversion unit. Let me just backtrack for a moment and give a very brief history or description of the project.

It was initially conceived in the 1940s as a way to counter the serious effects during the depression of the drought on the State of North Dakota and its agricultural industry. Basically, the Garrison is a gigantic irrigation system which travels across the northern central part of that state. As currently designed, its aim is to irrigate 250,000 acres of North-Dakota soil by means of reservoirs and dams, which would eventually, through human engineering, do something that nature never intended to be done, that is, link a southern flowing drainage system with a northern flowing drainage system, specifically, the waters of the Missouri-Mississippi system with the waters of the Red River-Lake Winnipeg-Hudson Bay drainage system. We Manitobans have no quarrel with the Government of North Dakota or the U.S. federal Government planning to build such a massive and complicated irrigation system in that state. We do not object to anything the American Government wants to do on its side of the border. However, as it is now designed, the Garrison Diversion unit will not only irrigate land in North Dakota. As I have pointed out, it will cause water to flow from the Missouri River system into the Red River system. It will thereby introduce strange fish, water, bacteria and, likely, a certain amount of chemicals into the rivers and lakes of our province. That is what we object to. These objections are not only based upon a purist, naturalist obsession about our province, although we are certainly proud of our clean air and waters. Our objections are based just as strongly on the reality of the lost livelihoods which could result from the completion of this project. These livelihoods would be lost mainly in the fishing and tourist industries. There will also be problems with the water supplies of many towns and rivers which lie along the Red and Souris Rivers in Manitoba.

There are 700 commercial fishermen in my constituency, Mr. Speaker. They have families and they support other industries such as trucking and fish-packing. I consider these people to be an important component of my constituency. Obviously I believe that it is my job to represent their interests and concerns here in Ottawa. Over the years I have tried, to the best of my ability, to do just that, to make Members of this House and of the American Congress aware of our concerns with regard to the Garrison Diversion unit.

As I have pointed out, the environmental impact of Garrison would be the introduction of these various fish species into Manitoba waters. The Lake Winnipeg fishing industry in particular could be destroyed if these larger and often predatory fish were allowed to compete with the indigenous fish population for space and food in that lake.

I have said before, and will say again, that this is an emotional issue for me. That is not just because I have made it one of my priorities in the time in which I have been a Member of the House of Commons. It is also because I have often been frustrated by some of the things which have occurred during the course of the battles we have fought over the years. It has not only been Members of this House and government officials who have been involved in this fight, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of private citizens in the Province of Manitoba who, unlike those of us who are politicians and government officials, do not get paid for their efforts in opposing the hazards of the Garrison Diversion unit. I refer to people such as Jerry McKinney, a Manitoban who on a number of occasions has led delegations to the City of Washington, most recently in April of this year, to talk to Members of the House of Representatives and Senators. He uses his own money and time to take on the bureaucracy and the legislative branch of government in the United States. Another such person is the Mayor of my home town, Gimli, Manitoba. Ted Arnason has worked long and hard against Garrison. He spends a lot of time educating a whole generation of young people throughout the province about the potentially devastating effects of Garrison. Recently on the CBC show The Fifth Estate, Mr. Arnason pointed out that this issue is not just for today's townfolk but for the future people of that small town. All of them depend in some way or another on Lake Winnipeg for their livelihood.

I must admit that I have occasionally been frustrated by some of the setbacks we have encountered in our opposition to Garrison. I have also been tremendously encouraged at all times by the perseverance of those who work in this fight. I believe that progress is possible, otherwise I would not stay in the fight. I believe that the joint efforts of the Governments of Manitoba and Canada, as well as the lobbying efforts of the citizen groups, have had some effect.

One thing which has been on our side in recent years is the fact that the costs for the Garrison Diversion unit have skyrocketted. The cost has become well over $1 billion now. More and more American politicians and more of the American media have come to see that it is perhaps a waste of money. In the current issue of Esquire magazine it was described as a massive boondoggle of which a few persistent Senators refuse to let go because they think they can win votes by pushing ahead with it.

As well, there has been some meddling in this issue, leading to its continuation in recent months. Last fall, a well known American syndicated columnist, Jack Anderson, wrote a column pointing out that the Department of the Interior and the Government of the State of North Dakota had meddled in studies having to do with wetlands and wild life habitats which would be affected by Garrison. They had cooked some of the results which were being used to determine what kind of effect it would have in those areas.

More recently, Mr. Speaker, we have learned of another kind of meddling which is taking place, this time in the Province of Manitoba. The proponents of the Garrison Diversion unit have hired a public relations firm in the City of Winnipeg to circulate the pro-Garrison side of this issue to Manitobans. From time to time in recent weeks articles, which are unsigned and are not accredited to the Garrison Diversion supporters, have shown up in Manitoba newspapers. These articles are designed to make Manitobans believe that Garrison will not be a threat to their waterways.

I am skeptical, Mr. Speaker, about anything that is designed to placate Manitobans. We do not want to be placated. We do not need to be placated. We want to have the plan changed. We want the U.S. Congress to re-examine the project. We want the Department of the Interior to come up with a new concept for Garrison which will not have anything to do with Canada's rivers or lakes. As long as the only plan around is the one currently on the books, Manitobans will feel threatened.

Recently, some good news came out of Washington. It was probably the best news we have had on this issue in quite some time. After a recent trip to Washington by officials of the Governments of Manitoba and Canada, we learned that the Department of the Interior and the State Department, along with some Canadian supporters in the American Congress, agreed to put forward proposals for the funding of alternative designs for the Garrison Diversion unit. This is a very important step. I made a statement about this in the House last week, Mr. Speaker. It is a small but very important step. It is the first time that the American Government has publicly admitted that it is willing to spend money to find ways of altering Garrison. It is the first time it has publicly admitted that Canadians do have legitimate concerns with regard to the present design of the Garrison Diversion unit. We received that news in good spirit and look forward to the studies being done in the very near future.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I was very disappointed to learn, a few days after hearing that news, that Senators Burdick and Andrews from North Dakota have thus far objected to using any of this year's money to conduct these studies to look for alternatives. They have also objected to a proposal which would have used some of next year's money now to carry out these proposals. I would point out to the House that Senator Andrews has often been interviewed on CBC Radio. I heard him approximately a year ago on The Food Show on Saturday morning, I believe, criticizing Canadian Politicians and Canadian government officials because, he said, there have been no studies conducted that would prove the Canadian points. He said that Canadians were unwilling to study alternatives to Garrison and that we stick to only one point, that is, that we want the project stopped. That is clearly untrue. We have always stated that we have no problems with what they do on their side of the border.

• (1720)

The recent action of Senators Burdick and Andrews is very disappointing. It begs the question as to who is really dealing in good faith and who is looking for a way whereby Americans and North Dakotans could have the benefits of Garrison while Manitobans and Canadians would be protected from the bad effects of Garrison.

Let me point out quickly that the member of the House of Representatives from the State of North Dakota has been very supportive of the alternatives proposal.

In conclusion, let me just say that I am pleased to have had the opportunity to present this motion to the House yet again. It is an ongoing and very critical issue in the Province of Manitoba. At times it might seem that we belabour it too much and that the issue is always around and will not go away. I am not sure that it will ever go away in the sense that I am not sure that we will get a clear-cut victory. However, it is an issue for which I strongly believe we must continue to fight to the best of our abilities in order to prevent the serious harm that might come to the Province of Manitoba. It is far too important for our province to let it lie or for us to roll over and let the proponents of Garrison proceed to construct it as it is currently designed.

I pointed out that we have seen an important development. Let us hope that there are many more important developments. Members of the House and the Government of Canada must continue the very strong and, I would suggest, the very good fight we have been carrying on for the last few years.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to announce a change in House business for the remainder of the week. I have just talked to representatives of the two Opposition Parties to inform them that tomorrow we will proceed with Bill C-17, an Act respecting bankruptcy and insolvency. There is no change for Thursday. On Friday, we will be debating Bill C-32, which was supposed to be debated tomorrow. However, debate on Bill C-32 is postponed until Friday and will be replaced by Bill C-17 tomorrow.

The back-up Bill tomorrow, in case we conclude second reading of Bill C-32, will be Bill C-10, the Divorce Act. As I have indicated there is no change for Thursday. It is an Opposition Day.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Government House Leader if he could give the House an idea as to when he will be presenting the Bill to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act? Could he tell us now when he believes that Bill will be introduced?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, there is not question that the minute notice is given, we will be able to introduce the Bill within the normal delay. There is no link to be attached to any other legislation to be passed, depending on the introduction of the Bill referred to by the Hon. Member.

I indicated in my answer last week that we would likely do that this week. I have very good reason to believe that the notice will be given before the end of the week. I hope to be able to introduce the Bill, as the result of pressure from Members on both sides of the House, as early as possible.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I have heard suggestions that the Bill may in fact be introduced in the Senate. Could the Government House Leader comment on whether it will be introduced in this place or in the other place?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, our intention would be to introduce the Bill in the House of Commons.

GARRISON DIVERSION

ADVISABILITY OF ENSURING SAFETY OF CANADIAN ENVIRONMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sargeant:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of taking those measures necessary to ensure that there is no damage caused to the Manitoba environment by the completion or construction of the Garrison Diversion Unit in the State of North Dakota and, that such measures to be considered include:

1. Continuation of diplomatic action to have the Garrison project amended so as not to affect the environment of Canada;

2. The offer of legal and technical assistance to those citizens groups in Canada now striving to halt the progress of the Garrison Diversion; and

3. The bringing to trial in the World Court, the government of the United States, should Canada be unsuccessful in its efforts to receive satisfactory assurances regarding the future safety of the Canadian environment.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) on his persistence and his concern about this very important matter. I can assure him that this matter is not only a concern to him and his constituents but it is a concern to all Canadians. It has been a great irritant between Canada and the United States for a number of years.

I welcome this opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member's statement on an appropriate strategy for managing the long-standing garrison issue. The Hon. Member is advising the Government in his motion before the House to consider the advisability of taking necessary measures to ensure that no damage is caused to the Manitoba environment by the construction of Garrison project features. His recommendation in particular is that the Government continue current diplomatic action, offer legal and technical assistance to anti-Garrison citizen groups and, should these measures fail, that the Government bring the United States of America to trial at the International Court of Justice in The Hague.

I might point out to Hon. Members that this motion is substantially the same as that introduced by the Hon. Member on February 9, 1981, and debated again in the House on November 2, 1983. However, while the motion is substantially the same, the Garrison Diversion unit we are facing in 1984 is substantially different from that which was envisaged in 1981, or so I have been advised. In response to persistent representations by the Canadian Government based on the conclusions of the International Joint Commission's 1977 report, in 1982 the United States undertook a major redesign of the full 250,000-acre project into two phases in order to proceed with the construction of only one phase, which would not affect waters flowing into Canada, while deferring indefinitely construction of phase II, which would affect waters flowing into our country. Further project revisions and technical modifications have been introduced by the United States Bureau of Reclamation engineers over the past half year, largely as a result of the technical consultative process developed last fall by federal and Manitoba officials and agreed to by the United States at the November 21, 1983 consultations in Ottawa.

The considerable success achieved by the Canadian Government in securing project modifications and safeguards for phase I features was evident at the most recent round of consultations held on April 25 in Washington. The Hon. Member is himself aware of the very positive results achieved by the Canadian delegation through the technical consultative process, and has gone so far as to stand in the House a week ago on May 1 to portray the April consultation as "good news" and even as "a breakthrough".

I believe that the Hon. Member's statement on May 1 is a more accurate and timely reflection of the success and status of government efforts to resolve the Garrison issue than is his motion which dates back to 1981. I agree, however, with his view that the April consultations represent an important step forward rather than a complete victory. I can assure him, therefore, that the Government will indeed continue diplomatic action through the technical consultative process to the point where no Garrison feature which potentially could damage or pollute waters flowing into Canada is constructed or contemplated. That said, I see no reason at this stage for the Government to adopt additional and unproven measures when measures already in place have already proven effective to the satisfaction of federal and Manitoban representatives.

The process to which I have referred a number of times already is one that is being pursued together by federal and Manitoban officials. It has two clear objectives: first, to ensure that technical modifications and safeguards for phase one Garrison features are fully adequate; and second, to obtain clear, credible and publicly convincing assurances from the U.S. Government that phase II as planned will never be built. These two objectives are based on recommendations of the International Joint Commission's report, which is and always has been the foundation of Canada's position on the Garrison Diversion unit.

With respect to project features defined by the United States as phase I, Canada has requested technical modifications and safeguards to eliminate the risk of accidental, inter-basin biota transfer, pursuant to the following recommendation of the International Joint Commission:

> If and when the Governments of Canada and the United States agree that methods have been proven that will eliminate the risk of biota transfer, or if the question of biota transfer is agreed to be no longer a matter of concern, then the construction of the Garrison Diversion Unit which will affect waters flowing into Canada may be undertaken providing the following conditions are met:

● (1730)

> (a) Any agreed modifications or other measures required to resolve the inter-basin biota transfer issue are incorporated into the project—

Canada is categorically opposed, as the Hon. Member knows, to those project features defined by the U.S.A. as phase II, and has requested tangible evidence from the U.S.A. that its assurances on that score are in fact credible, bearing in mind the International Joint Commission's recommendation that:

> —those portions of the Garrison Diversion Unit which would affect waters flowing into Canada not be built at this time.

Canada proposed the technical-consultative mechanism to the U.S.A. side at the November 21, 1983 consultations. This was an attempt to shift management of the Garrison issue back on track toward mutually agreeable solutions, after a long period of protracted and often interrupted consultations.

Canada had always valued general assurances provided by the United States at the policy level not to construct Garrison features which would affect adversely Canadian waters, and had always welcomed the commitment of successive United States administrations to the principle of consultations. At the same time, however, the Government realized that if it was to be successful in its determination to protect Manitoba's commercial and native fishing interests and prevent the pollution of Hudson Bay drainage basin waters by foreign biota from redirected Missouri River water, then it must fashion some instrument for translating general assurances from the United States into technical assurances and have safeguards built into the specifications of Garrison engineering plans and drawings.

Further to the requirement for a bilateral mechanism at the technical level was the requirement to institutionalize bilateral consultations at the senior officials' level. Canada was seeking above all else a fail-safe mechanism for preventing a recurrence of the Lonetree Dam fait accompli, which in August 1983 had aroused deep concerns if not suspicions in the minds of many Canadians that the United States intended to proceed with construction in advance of consultations.

Against the background of these considerations, Canada presented the United States with two alternatives: either to resolve to manage jointly the Garrison issue in a manner that reflected the two nations' mutual commitments to the 1909 Boundary Waters Treaty and to recommendations of the International Joint Commission, or to allow matters to devolve along separate tracks, with the risk that the inevitable environmental and political consequences would dominate the issue, undermine Canada-U.S.A. efforts to manage our joint tenancy of North America, and make a solution to the Garrison issue even more difficult.

It was evident at the November consultations that both countries preferred the first course of action to the second. The technical-consultative mechanism they agreed to comprises a senior officials' consultative group with representatives from the Canadian, Manitoban, American, and North Dakotan Governments, and the Garrison Joint Technical Committee of technical experts from these respective Governments. The United States readily supported the establishment of a technical committee, in particular, which hopefully could move the Garrison issue from the arena of political rhetoric to the domain of disinterested professionals of impartial judgment. To ensure that the technical committee did not work in total isolation from the policy and political process, while respecting the impartiality of due technical process, the technical committee was made accountable to the senior officials' consultative group, which would next meet in April and, as the Hon. Member knows, it did meet at that time.

The Garrison Joint Technical Committee has been mandated by the consultative group to carry out two prime functions. The first function is to examine Canada's immediate phase I technical concerns, which were communicated formally to the United States in Canada's diplomatic note No. 473 of October 3, 1983. These are recapitulated, item by item, in the technical committee's terms of reference. To this end, the committee is tasked with obtaining all relevant technical information, project plans, specifications, construction schedules, secondary source material and information from on-site inspections in order to assess Canada's concerns and American-proposed solutions. The second and longer term function is to act as an early warning signal to alert the federal and Manitoban Governments should it appear that phase II construction might proceed. Specifically, this function tasks the technical committee with monitoring the plans of the United States for future development and advising the consultative group on technical considerations related to whether and how phase II might be developed outside the Hudson Bay drainage basin without damage to Canadian waters. In this respect, as with phase I concerns, the consultative group technical committee's interface provides Canada with an effective bilateral mechanism for narrowing the gap between general assurances at the policy level and actual project modifications at the technical level.

In my opening remarks I mentioned that in the May 1 statement of the Hon. Member he portrayed the April consultations as good news and a breakthrough. I would like to emphasize that the outcome of the consultations, which was very positive indeed, was no accident but was, rather, the product of a lot of hard and concentrated work by the technical committee and its task forces. In the short space of time between its establishment in January, 1984 and the April consultative group meeting, the technical committee met four times in Winnipeg, Bismarck, again in Winnipeg, and in Denver to examine those phase I technical concerns for which engineering plans were available and to monitor bureau of reclamation construction schedules and budget documents relative to the intentions of the United States for future development of the Garrison project. At its first meeting in January, the technical committee established a supportive task force structure in the fisheries and biota, wildlife mitigation and engineering fields, which comprised representatives of the Canadian, Manitoban, the United States and North Dakotan Governments. Arrangements were also made to establish a fourth task force. These meetings and consultations went on endlessly and are continuing.

Hon. Members who have followed closely the Garrison debate over the past year will be familiar with the two key issues which were uppermost in the minds of the Canadian delegation as the consultations approached. The issue of whether or not the United States would construct the McClusky Canal Fish Screen had been a subject for consultation in November, with inconclusive results, and deferred to the April consultations when the report of the technical committee on the biota situation in the Missouri and Hudson Bay systems would be available. Of equal concern was the issue of the intentions of the United States regarding phase II, that is, the continued construction and the need to secure tangible evidence that assurances of the United States were credible.

The McClusky Canal Fish Screen was not included in original designs for the Garrison project, but was added shortly before 1975 in response to concerns, mainly from Canada—one can see from this that the matter has been going on for at least ten years—that diverted Missouri River water would convey undesirable fish species, fish disease, and other biota via McClusky Canal directly into the Lonetree reservoir. From there it would enter into all associated water systems of the Hudson Bay basin. However, at a bilateral technical meeting in Ottawa on July 20, 1983, the United States made available to Canada the final supplemental environment statement prepared by the Department of Interior which reported that the fish screen was no longer contemplated. Canada was told that this decision would be made final only after the consultations anticipated for the fall. This kind of thing went on.

Canada's request for construction of the fish screen was raised by the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) when he met with Secretary of State Mr. Shultz for their bilateral discussions on October 16 and 17 in Halifax. The same issue dominated the agenda at the November 21, 1983, meeting. You can see, Mr. Speaker, that this has been a matter of concern to both sides at a high level for quite some time. I suppose the cost of this project was really one of the problems, because the cost for the Fish Screen Project is $40 million.

In April, the consultative group reapproached the question of the fish screen, this time equipped with the results of the technical committee's study of the fish and biota situation in the Missouri and Hudson Bay systems. Canada built its case for the fish screen on the technical committee's finding that there had been no significant change in the distribution of problem fish species in the Missouri and Hudson Bay systems which would cause different conclusions to be reached from those in the 1977 International Joint Commission, reinforcing its case with the technical committee's conclusion that downstream movement of rainbow smelt and other Missouri species into the Lonetree reservoir was certain without the fish screen while the fish screen, though unproven, would provide a first line of defense against any such movement.

The second major issue dominating the agenda for the April 25 consultations was the question of U.S.A. intentions regarding phase II. Canada has taken every opportunity to communicate its unequivocal opposition to phase II, and did so once again at the consultations. As anticipated, the United States repeated earlier assurances provided in diplomatic notes and at bilateral discussions that phase II would be undertaken "only if it could be implemented consistent with the United States obligations under the Boundary Waters Treaty", and that no contracts would be let until Canada had been afforded "an opportunity to consult with the Government of the United States on specific features, and adequate assurances had been given that Canadian waters would be protected, as recommended by the IJC".

Canadians, Manitobans in particular, have always valued such assurances and appreciated the fact that the United States is proceeding with construction of only phase I features, which will not transfer Missouri water to the Hudson Bay basin and which are subject to the modifications and safeguards introduced through the technical consultative mechanism.

What the Canadian side had in mind was a study of viable alternatives to phase II, construction outside the Hudson Bay drainage basin which could not affect adversely waters flowing over the border into Canada. In response, the United States agreed to support and broaden initiatives to study such alternatives. This agreement is a good example of the kind of positive results which emerged from the April 25 consultations and which motivated the Hon. Member to speak as he did about the breakthrough last week.

The McClusky Canal Fish Screen and phase II were the most significant but not the only concerns addressed at the April consultative group meeting. The consultative group reviewed and concurred with 17 recommendations and conclusions submitted in the technical committee's report for resolving a substantial number of Canada's detailed engineering and wildlife mitigation concerns which had been outlined in Canada's note No. 473. For example, the consultative group agree with the technical committee recommendation that the municipal and industrial outlet from Lonetree Dam be sealed with a bulkhead/frange/steel plate structure considered technically superior to the concrete plug agreed to in November, and so on.

Canada approached the April consultations with the twin objectives of ensuring that phase I technical modifications and safeguards are fully adequate and obtaining tangible evidence that United States assurances respecting phase II are indeed credible. The United States agreement to construct the McClusky Canal Fish Screen and to support studies of alternatives to phase II marks a significant advance toward both these objectives and reinforces, in particular, the utility of the technical/consultative process as the most effective mechanism for resolving any remaining or newly-emerging concerns.

I hope my remarks will satisfy the Hon. Member to some extent and that no further motions on this subject will be necessary.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to listen to the comments of the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) with respect to his motion. He mentioned that there were two valid reasons, given other circumstances, for his being inclined to strike out paragraph No. 3 in his recommended conduct with respect to the Garrison Diversion project. It occurred to me that there was one very valid reason for striking the recommendation to bring to trial in the World Court the Government of the United States. It is simply that the provision is offensive and objectionable when dealt with in the fashion the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake would bring it.

He mentioned that he spoke about this issue 14 times in the House. He said that he had even gone to Washington to deal with this important matter. Let it be clearly understood that the matter of the Garrison Diversion project is serious. It has, if it proceeds, a most detrimental effect upon the welfare of this country, in particular the welfare of the people of Manitoba who live in the immediate vicinity of the project. So long as the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake and his colleagues in the House persist in attacking the Government of the United States, its representatives and the nation of the United States, as though they were Canada's bitter enemies, there is little likelihood that they can, under any circumstances, convince the administration of that country that it should deal with this serious matter as it affects Canadians in a manner which will be beneficial to Canadians.

I am not suggesting for a moment that in pursuing our goals, as they relate to the welfare of the environment and the economic well-being of the country, we ought not to be persistent and determined. However, it does us no good in advancing that cause if members of the New Democratic Party in Manitoba, in particular the minister responsible for the environment of Manitoba, attend meetings at which symbols of the United States are burned in effigy. In the event that people are legitimately concerned about the welfare of Canada and genuinely believe that something should be done to prevent this project from ever proceeding, we must advocate our positions in a strong and determined but friendly fashion.

The United States is not the enemy of Canada. The United States has defended freedom and liberty. It has the same kind of system of government as we do in terms of permitting the people to determine how the country is run. It has, through its defensive mechanisms, protected the entire North American continent. I know the Hon. Member who brings this motion and his colleagues would prefer at every opportunity to attack that friendly neighbour to the south, attack it for involving itself, as it should, in preserving freedom in the Americas, attack it for being unfriendly to a communist regime in Nicaragua or for not treating as a friend the communist government in Havana, Cuba. Quite frankly, the real issue which should be dealt with when we are concerned about the environment of this country should not be intermingled with contempt and open hatred for the Government of the United States and the people of that country. Accordingly, I examined the original draft of this motion and, as I indicated at the outset, was offended by the suggestion that the United States be brought to trial in the world Court like some criminal.

We have disputes with the United States. There is no doubt that we have disputes with respect to the establishment of a boundary off the Grand Banks. Quite frankly, that dispute is now being adjudicated. It is a matter which has a direct bearing upon the welfare of our fishermen off the East Coast. We have disputes with the United States with respect to matters of pollution such as acid rain. It would appear—and I say that because I do not think it has been convincingly established as yet—that Canada has decided to go it alone, at long last, with respect to this issue, as indeed it should, and abate a pollution problem for which we are in large measure responsible as well.

We need the co-operation of the United States. In the event the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake goes to Washington, he should go there as a legitimate ambassador speaking to a friend, not someone shaking a fist like an enemy. In my view these problems with the administration of the United States could best be solved if men and women of good will, recognizing a common problem and desiring not to harm a friend, negotiate for the purpose of ending this project, ending the problems of pollution which jointly confront both our nations and working out, as friends should, the difficulties which are bound to occur when two developed nations have areas of disagreement between them. If they are legitimately concerned about the issue raised in this motion, I would urge members of the NDP, both in the Government of Manitoba and in this House, to approach the matter in the fashion that I have decribed rather than by wielding a battle axe and chanting anti-American slogans.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a very difficult problem which goes back almost to the 1930s. I will try not to wrap myself in the Canadian flag as the Hon. Member for York-North (Mr. Gamble) has done.

Nothing really happened with the Garrison Diversion until 1943, and we have been debating the problem ever since. One thing is clear, Mr. Speaker. The goal of connecting the Mississippi River with the Hudson Bay drainage system is not in Canada's best interests. It is only in the best interests of the United States. The Americans wish to achieve the goal of connecting those two waterways solely to irrigate North Dakota.

We in Canada have some legitimate concerns about this goal. If the Hon. Member for York-North wishes some American input, I might suggest to him that he read the 1977 IJC report. That report was prepared by equal numbers of Canadians and Americans and it indicated that as of 1977, the technology for the McClusky screen referred to by the Hon. Member from our side was not adequate. All this time we were being told by American politicians, who were not really acting as judges but more as advocates, that we in Canada should not be concerned. Well, we are concerned.

We are concerned about parasites getting into our water system. We are concerned about fish eggs, fish, chemicals and everything else that comes from that drainage system which may interfere with our commercial and sports fishermen, our drinking water and our recreational facilities.

While we in Canada were being told not to be concerned, an impartial report was prepared in the United States by the Environmental Protection Agency. Again, I would suggest that my friend, the Hon. Member for York North read that report, because he seems to be very prone to American studies. In that report, the EPA indicated that it could not conceive of a program which would adequately police human and wildlife activities to prohibit transfer of undesirable fish species. This report was in existence at the same time as we Canadians were being told not to be concerned.

My hon. friend referred to the great things that Canada and the United States are doing together. He referred to the achievements made with regard to solving the problem of acid rain. In August, 1980, Canada had a written memorandum from the United States regarding acid rain. That is much more than we have now. Daniel S. Greenberg, a respected and responsible writer for the Washington Post, said about the Reagan administration's feelings toward that written memorandum that the Reagan administration was of the opinion that the memorandum of intent carried only "moral rather than legal force" and so, without consultation, the Reagan administration went its own way. He went on to say:

> We have double-crossed the Canadians plain and simple.

That was the fate of our 1980 written memorandum. Fool me once, foolish you, but fool me twice, foolish me.

We are now expected to believe, without even a memorandum like the one we had in 1980, that all these great things will be done regarding the Garrison Diversion. The Americans informally say that they will police fishing at the reservoir. I can see them trying to police fishing. If they cannot even police chemicals. How can they police fishing? They say that the screen for which they are paying $40 million will work. It has not even been tested. They tell us not to be concerned about phase two, and at the same time they have allocated approximately $5 million for 1983, I believe, $20 million for 1984, if my memory serves me correctly, and approximately $40 million for 1985, in order to go ahead with the project.

Who from Canada has gone to the United States to discuss our concerns? We have sent federal-provincial representatives, farmers, fishermen, municipal people and native people to the U.S. The Right Hon. Howard Powley sent wires to all Congressmen. The Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) has expressed his concerns about new mechanisms. The Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) has said that we do not want phase II to go ahead. A resolution, which I believe was passed unanimously by the House, resolved to refer this matter to the World Court. Lawyers from Canada and the United States have suggested a uniform trans-boundary pollution reciprocal access Act, which the Americans scoffed at. However, the Hon. Member for York North tells us to trust the Americans.

Mr. Gamble: Are you kidding? What were you listening to?

Mr. Irwin: I heard Nicaragua mentioned.

Mr. Gamble: Yes.

Mr. Irwin: I heard many stories about the American flag.

Mr. Gamble: Yes.

Mr. Irwin: However, I did not hear much about the issue itself.

Mr. Gamble: I told them how to negotiate.

Mr. Irwin: I did not hear much about the issue, and the issue is that we in Manitoba are concerned that we should be addressing the matter as a federal House and not leaving it for a few MPs and MLAs to discuss and not leaving it to periodic dialogue in the House.

I think the public perception of this issue in Canada is much like it is in North Dakota, that is to say, 5 per cent know about the issue and want it, 5 per cent know about the issue and do not want it, and 90 per cent do not know about the issue and do not care. That is the perception in Canada of the Garrison Diversion.

I believe that if our responsibility is to the entire country, we should learn a little more about the situation and not talk about communism in the United States. We should talk about the very important fishing industry of Manitoba.

Mr. Gamble: Obviously you were not listening.

Mr. Irwin: There have been some compromises made. First, the United States invited Canadian scientists to study the matter. I think we should have taken them up on that invitation. However, the decision not to do so was a political decision. I believe we erred by not accepting that invitation.

The Americans then proposed a closed waterways system. To their credit, the Americans have suggested compromises for our benefit. Unfortunately, at the time of the proposal of the closed waterways system, the Americans wanted to save millions of dollars by doing it on the cheap, and therefore the closed waterways system was not very safe. As a matter of fact, it turned out to be worse for us than what had been suggested in the first place.

If those are the proposals of the Americans, they do not give us any great faith in them. The Americans proposed the formation of a technical committee, and I give them full credit for that proposal because it seems that they are going to go ahead with the project notwithstanding what was done in Canada. This joint Canadian-American committee has been formed and it assures us that it will stand on guard, for want of a better word, because it cannot do much else. It assures us that it will stand on guard against the malfunctioning of the screen, the implementation of phase II, and the introduction of parasites into Canada. However, such treaties have existed with the United States since 1909. I believe it was in 1909 when the original trans-boundary water treaty under which the IJC functions was introduced. Since that time, not only the Americans but also the Canadians have polluted the water system.

I will begin with the pollution that originates in Ontario. Ontario puts 263,000 tonnes of liquid industrial waste into the water system per year. Every day, Ontario puts 34,000 tonnes of dissolved solids, 127 tonnes of heavy metals, 18 tonnes of phosphorus, 118 tonnes of oil and grease, 12 tonnes of phenol and 3,000 tonnes of chlorides into the water system. In Thunder Bay, millions of tonnes of asbestos fibres are being put into the water system. In the St. Mary's River, there are phenols, oils, cyanides, sulphides, zinc, ammonia and iron. The St. Clair River system contains ammonia and lead.

With all this going on, I commend the motion of the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party because someone must stand on guard. I am certainly not going to leave it to the American Government.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

RAILWAYS—GRAIN FREIGHT RATES—INTERIM ADJUSTMENT COSTS. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW FIGURES

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to further amplify a question I put to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) last Thursday concerning the recently announced transportation rates for western grain. I asked the Minister why the Government was not going to assume its share of the costs. This will involve some explanation; I will try to be explicit and speak in some terms so that the Government will understand exactly what I am saying. I am not at all certain that the Minister understood the question which I posed to him.

Let me begin by saying that the rates that western farmers are now paying for grain as a result of the demise of the Crow on January 1, are made up of three components: the first is volume, the second is an adjustment for the previous crop year, and the third is an increase in costs, if any, that the railways say they incur. I would like to deal with the last component first—the increase in costs which the railways claim.

The Minister said that the railways did not have very much of an increase in costs. We agree with that. Effectively, that means the increase in the rates was not very great, if any, attributable to the costs the railways say they will have this year over next year.

Volume should not be a factor because volume is down. When the crop year started on August 1, the estimate for the year was 32.8 million tonnes. It looks like the railways will move 34.55 million tonnes this year, but the estimate for the coming year, to which the rates apply and about which I am concerned, is less than the estimate for this year. The two factors I have mentioned, an increase in costs that the railways say they have, and an increase in volume, should not be part of the increase in the rates the Government has just announced.

The increases are substantial. They are 33 per cent. The average rate for shipping a bushel of grain from the western provinces to export position is something like $7.70 a tonne. That is increased $1.94 over the previous year, which means almost a 33 per cent increase. That tells me that the total, almost exclusively, reason for the increase in rates is the interim adjustment. The interim adjustment comes about as a result of the rate setting mechanism and the way it is established.

Very simply, at the beginning of the crop year, which is August 1, an estimate is made of the amount of grain that will be moved. If the amount is greater, the railways have to be paid more because they have moved more. If the amount the railways move is less then they will get a refund, because they move less grain. The adjustment in this crop year is amost exclusively the result of an underestimate in the volume. If the railways move more than is estimated, they will get paid more. It is that simple.

But, this is a special year because the Bill did not come into place until January 1. That meant that for the previous five months, from August 1 to December 31, the Government was responsible for the increases in rates. The producer then was responsible for the next seven months, January 1 to July 31. That meant that for the first five months, which is five-twelfths of the calendar year, the Government should have been responsible for the increases in costs that the railways charged to the producers.

The difference that the railways should have as extra compensation for the extra volume they moved is $60 million.

What I would like to know from this Government is why it is not picking up its share of the increase—Five-twelfths of $60 million is $25 million. There is no doubt in my mind that the Government is overcharging producers to the tune of $25 million.

• (1805)

We raised this issue with the Government at committee when the Bill was being put through. I would like to quote from an exchange I had with Mr. Kruger in committee. I said:

> The railways are not going to be short-changed, they are going to get their additional increases, except in this case it is all going to come from the Government up until January 1.

That is January 1, 1984. Mr. Kruger replied:

> Yes, it will, but not under this Bill. The Government will be seeking authority from Parliament under the next Supplementary Estimates to make a further installment—

I went further to ensure that he understood my question. I was asking him if the producers were going to be expected to pay more. He replied:

> No. That is a matter between the Government and the railways as to whether the railways are to be compensated for their losses in the first five months of this crop year or not.

Clearly, what Mr. Kruger said is that the Government is going to take up with the railways the issue as to whether they are going to be compensated for their losses, if they have any, as a result of the increase in volume, and that it is not going to be the producers' responsibility. The announcement last week of the new rates, indicates to me that the Government is deliberately overcharging the producers by $25 million.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will confirm this evening that the Minister understood my question, and that he is now going to announce that $25 million will be deleted from the producers' share of that increase in rates, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of the Western Grain Transportation Act, the producers have to pay for any rate increase resulting from traffic movements in excess of a preset volume. Because the 1983-84 crop was underestimated by nearly three million tonnes, that increase is quite considerable. That underestimation is offset through a rate structure interim adjustment. As a result, the Government paid too much and the farmers did not pay enough. Rather than distributing the Crow profits on the basis of 34.7 million tonnes, the Government did so on the basis of 31.9 million tonnes. However, those profits were paid out on the basis of total grain movements for the year, hence the one payment in excess.

When the people involved in the Gilson project were trying to find a producer and Government contribution formula with respect to future freight rates, they had to decide how best to allocate the Crow profits. In their opinion, the best way to protect the producers was to make the Government responsible for the highest possible percentage increase in inflation-related costs. Under a legislative provision, for the first three years the Government will pay for any inflation-related cost increase over 3 per cent, and for anything else over 6 per cent in the following years. In exchange for that protection against inflation, they suggested that the producers be held responsible for future increases in the volume of shipments. This is a wise choice because the increase in volume is tied to the productive capacity of the land, and also because an increase in volume means higher incomes for grain producers. Fortunately, increases due to inflation were not very high this year. However, the volume of shipments was badly underestimated, so much so that payments had to be adjusted under the formula contained in the legislation. We agree that producers are now facing cash problems, and that is why we are amending the Prairie Grain Advance Payment Act and the Western Grain Stabilization Act. There is no way to solve the problem raised by the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) without amending the Western Grain Transportation Act. I think that the current formula will be effective in the long term and cannot be changed every year to account for short fluctuations in volume and inflation rates.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—LOBBY AGAINST FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, Canada's oldest and most honourable industry is under attack. I refer, Sir, to the fur industry, a business which really started Canada. For many years the fur trade was the most important industry in Canada and had it not been for the fur trade which encouraged people to go out to the hinterland, Canada might even today be only a few small scattered settlements along the St. Lawrence Valley. Even today, the Fur Institute of Canada estimates that about 100,000 Canadians are involved throughout the industry which, I might add, considerably aids Canada's international balance of payments. Not only are trappers involved in the industry, but all manner of traders, merchants, pelt processors, auction house employees, manufacturers and retailers.

In northern Canada trapping today remains the most important part of the local economy. In the Northwest Territories, for instance, we annually produce $3 million to $5 million worth of raw fur which would have considerably more value once it has been processed and upgraded. But that value represents production in excess of any other renewable resource industry such as fishing or lumbering. Many people in northern Canada, particularly in my constituency, are dependent for their livelihood, either wholly or partially, on the trapping industry. What is probably more important is that it is a way of life. It is a means for independence. You do not have to be a wage slave if you can go out and get yourself some fur once in a while.

This has all been threatened, Mr. Speaker. There is a concerted attack on the industry by well financed organizations like Greenpeace and other animal welfare rights organizations which are invariably supported by city dwellers, people who do not really know what the trapping business is all about. They tend to play to the hilt the cruelty aspect, even though the degree of cruelty involved in the industry is debatable. In my opinion it is not at all comparable with the cruelty to animals in industries, such as the veal industry in this part of Canada. Animals are kept under what I would consider cruel conditions throughout their short and I assume rather miserable existence. At least the animals harvested in the fur trade have an opportunity for practically all of their lives to live in the way wild animals were intended to live. I have seen the signs on buses here in Ottawa playing up this kind of thing. Also there is the use of high pressure and sometimes illegal tactics. I think back to the shenanigans going on at the Frankfurt Fur Fair a couple of years ago where valuable fur coats were sprayed with paint and the young women who were modelling the coats were assaulted.

I asked questions of the Minister last Thursday and he was sympathetic to the cause of the trappers, but the answers I received were not really detailed enough as to what the Government was doing to combat this attack. In my opinion the case for the trapper must be equally as well organized and financed as that of the anti-trappers. A strategy is needed to combine the efforts of trappers themselves, their organizations and native organizations. I know a lot of work has been done here already and I cite as an example the Winnipeg conference organized by the Native Council of Canada not too long ago. I would also include in that group the provincial and territorial Government who legislate with respect to trapping methods and have under their jurisdiction fur bearer management, as well as the federal Government, especially the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I am not satisfied the Government has done all it can on this issue, Sir. We must not lose on this issue the same way we lost on the white coat issue. Sir, the trappers of Canada must not be blackmailed out of existence.

● (1815)

Mr. René Gingras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, during the Question Period on Thursday, May 3rd, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) raised the issue of the ecological lobby and of the threat its activities represent for the Canadian fur industry and the way of life of northern hunters, especially the native people.

As the Minister stated at that time, it is a fact that this lobby poses a serious and unwarranted threat. The seal pelt boycott initiated by the European Economic Community in 1982 clearly reminds us that ecological groups can have a crucial influence on the market. If foreign fur markets give in to this threat, the Canadian fur industry will be seriously affected. In addition, native and northern hunters will be most affected by a possible slump in the fur trade. The consequences of one lost hunting season could be disastrous for the communities.

Because of this, in December 1983, the Ministers of Environment (Mr. Caccia), External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) submitted to Cabinet a three-part federal strategy based on consultations with all the parties concerned both within and without the Government. This strategy involved, first, a national and international information program using the most effective approach to both prevalent opinions; second, an education program for hunters to make sure that Canadian hunters are better informed about all aspects of the issue; and, third, a research program to develop more humane trapping methods adjusted to Canadian conditions.

Cabinet approved the use of an amount of $5 million to develop and implement the federal strategy during the upcoming three years. Cabinet also asked the Departments of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Environment and External Affairs to assume responsibility for the development of the federal strategy in consultation with the other Departments, the Provinces and representatives of the private sector.

I would like to point out that, before taking any direct action about information campaigns, the federal Government intends to assess fully public opinion both in Canada and internationally in view of the sensitive nature of this issue.

Abroad, to make sure that the Canadian Government will make timely interventions, for instance, at the recent Frankfurt fur fair—

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but if I had a few seconds more, with unanimous consent—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I am sorry, but there is no provision to extend the allotted time. The time of the Hon. Member has expired.

HOUSING—MORTGAGE RATE PROTECTION PLAN

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on May 1 I asked the Minister of Finance when he expected to introduce legislation to give effect to two measures announced in the last budget speech; first, the mortgage rate protection plan and, second, the proposal to give borrowers the right to prepay their mortgages at any time. In his reply the Minister said he hopes the legislation will be introduced this month. He stressed that there have been extensive consultations with the housing and construction industry, with consumer groups and financial institutions. The Minister also said that those who have taken out mortgages since March 1 would be eligible under the new program.

I am pleased that there has been such extensive consultation, because the measures will depend for success on the active participation of all involved, in particular the financial institutions. We have heard of at least one trust company which is now asking people renewing mortgages to waive any rights they may acquire under the new legislation. There is no lack of funds on the money market for mortgage loans at this time, and there is no need for borrowers to agree to waive their rights since many other financial institutions are willing to co-operate with the Government in enhancing security and opportunity for homeowners.

The Budget encouraged Canadians to anticipate stronger rights for mortgage borrowers, a wider choice of mortgage instruments, a more flexible mortgage market, greater stability in mortgage costs and fewer risks in taking out a mortgage. These measures are eagerly awaited not only by homeowners and prospective home owners, but also by realtors, construction workers and those involved in producing the goods associated with new homes, such as furniture and appliances.

The consultations and discussions to which the Minister referred have, I trust, removed potential problems and ambiguities in what admittedly is a complex undertaking. I trust that we will soon have the legislation before the House in a form which will facilitate general acceptance and speedy passage.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has indicated that he anticipates that legislation for the mortgage rate protection program and for amendments to the Canada Interest Act will be introduced in the House of Commons toward the end of this month. Over the past several weeks, the Minister of Finance, the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation (Mr. LeBlanc) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) and their officials have been actively involved in intensive consultations with the provinces, with the housing industry, with consumers' representatives, with lenders and with life insurance representatives. This consultative process is surely the best way to develop and implement these budgetary proposals.

The basic purpose of the government's proposed mortgage rate protection program is to offer security against severe financial disruption due to sharp increases in interest rates. By limiting an individual's exposure to extreme volatility in mortgage rates, the program will add to stability in mortgage costs and thereby increase the ability of individuals to plan their financial affairs with confidence. The degree of protection provided by the program can be very great if mortgage rates should increase dramatically.

The proposed amendments to the Canada Interest Act will ensure that mortgage borrowers have complete disclosure of all terms and conditions regarding their mortgages, including those relating to the prepayment of their loans. This initiative responds to the needs of borrowers for full information, and will improve competition in mortgage markets by helping consumers to compare the terms and conditions of mortgages offered by various lenders. The amendments will give borrowers the right to repay their mortgage at any time, at penalties that are fair to both borrowers and lenders. In addition, the proposals in the Budget would facilitate the introduction of mortgages with terms of more than five years and increase the number of alternative mortgage instruments that are available to borrowers.

In considering these measures, the various Ministers involved have attempted to ensure that the mortgage market remains as viable and responsive in the future as it has in the past. We certainly would not want to approve measures that would have the effect of increasing the cost of mortgages, decreasing the availability of mortgage funds or reducing the range of instruments available. Indeed, the various measures in the budget related to mortgages are expected to improve the security of home owners and prospective home buyers and increase the flexibility of the mortgage market.

The Minister has indicated that the mortgage rate protection program and the amendments to the Canada Interest Act are well advanced. Because of the extensive consultations, it is hoped that legislation could be passed expeditiously. In addition, the mortgage rate protection program legislation is to be retroactive to March 1, 1984, so that the delays resulting from the consultation process would not prevent home owners from obtaining protection.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.25 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

of

HIS EXCELLENCY MIGUEL DE LA MADRID

President of Mexico

to

Both Houses of Parliament

in the House of Commons Chamber, Ottawa

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

The President was welcomed by the Right Honourable P. E. Trudeau, Prime Minister of Canada, and thanked by the Honourable Maurice Riel, Speaker of the Senate, and the Honourable Lloyd Francis, Speaker of the House of Commons.

Hon. Lloyd Francis (Speaker of the House of Commons): Order, please. The Right Hon. the Prime Minister of Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Senor Presidente, Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, Hon. Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons.

Canadians consider it a mark of special distinction for them, Sir, that you have chosen Canada for your first official visit North of the Rio Grande. We welcome you with open hearts to our country, as Mexicans have warmly welcomed Canadians. The generosity of your people is matched by the splendour of your country, as in the words of Octavio Paz:

[Translation]

Mexico rises between two seas as an enormous pyramid: its four sides are the four cardinal points, its steps are the climates of all its regions, its high plateau is the house of the sun and the constellations.

[English]

Mr. President, Canada is honoured by your presence in this Chamber. All Canadians are pleased to welcome you to Canada and to afford you an opportunity to speak directly to us at this Special Session of both Houses of our Parliament.

Early in your term of office, Sir, you earned our admiration and respect for the vigour and determination with which you strove to ease the crushing burden of indebtedness which Mexico, like so many other countries around the world, faced during the deep recession of recent times. Courageously you made difficult decisions which required heavy sacrifices by the Mexican people.

You have proved, as you said you would, that both the people and Government of Mexico are vigorous and mature, capable of responding to crisis and overcoming adversity. We admire such strong and determined political will. I am glad that Canada and Canadian financial institutions were able to play a part in assisting you.

Thus I welcome you as a neighbour and good friend. Mexico and Canada are no longer separated by time and space, living apart in their own labyrinths of solitude, to borrow again from the moving thoughts of Octavio Paz. In dramatic ways, technologies of transportation and communications make it possible now for nations everywhere to draw together. Government leaders in our two countries, and increasingly people in private walks of life, have shown very clearly their strong desire to draw together, to know each other, to co-operate in the arts, science, technology, energy and commerce.

Your visit today is contributing to this growing tradition of community and consultation for we have much in common and much to say to one another. When I became Prime Minister in 1968, the Government decided that Canada must systematically enlarge its relationships with Mexico and other key countries of Latin America. This we have done, with a reciprocal commitment from the Mexican Government. I have had the pleasure of making two official visits to Mexico and of welcoming two of your predecessors to Canada. These visits and the frequent meetings between our Ministers attest to our mutual determination to make our bilateral relationship successful.

Mr. President, the links between Canada and Mexico go back for many centuries. In fact, Samuel De Champlain visited a flourishing settlement in Mexico City, nine years before he founded Quebec City and fourteen years before travelling past the site of Ottawa, where we are today, during an expedition on the Ottawa River.

Canadians will recall with pride the constant collaboration with Mexico within United Nations agencies and other institutions during the creative post-war years. At the time, we worked together to prepare for a world order to be founded on a common vision of the need to reinforce gradually international law and to establish effective economic co-operation. In a word, we tried to provide a solid basis for peace.

Unfortunately, since then, man has seemed to take a perverse pleasure in developing military technology, while political institutions designed to safeguard peace crumbled.

As international tensions rose, Canada and Mexico, conscious of their responsibility and of their own resources, have always tried, each in its own way, to persuade the parties concerned to reconcile their differences. The perseverance we have shown in the past is needed even more urgently today, because the dangers that threaten us now are so much greater.

As you know, Mr. President, Canada has, out of a concern for deteriorating relationships between East and West, taken the initiative of trying to bring these essential relationships on a more constructive level. On that occasion, I found that both sides had a number of points in common, and I urged Eastern and Western heads of State to set aside their differences and concentrate on what draws them together. In fact, we all have the right, in fact we have a duty, to try and reduce the risk of nuclear war.

[English]

Mexico and Mexicans have earned international credentials for independent viewpoint, fair mindedness and common sense. That is why I am encouraged that Mexico is currently spokesman for the Group of 77. You no doubt regret, as I do, Mr. President, the present state of North-South dialogue after the strenuous efforts Mexico and Canada made in recent years, especially in Cancun, to stimulate progress. We hope that Mexico's moderation and restraint will help to move the dialogue back on to a constructive path. Success in that endeavour would serve the cause of peace in a very fundamental way.

In the same spirit, I congratulate Mexico and the other Contadora members for their imagination and courage in seeking a regional solution to the potentially explosive situation in Central America. Your approach to this web of most difficult problems is above all realistic in its aim of building a consensus on a set of socio-political security objectives for Central America.

As a consensus develops, Canada will be prepared to help with whatever political or economic support we can effectively offer. We are consulting closely with the three Contadora working commissions. We will also be in close touch with the Action Committee for Socio-Economic Development—CADESCA.

Canada's approach to these problems, as frequently enunciated in Canada and in the region by my colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs, is to recognize that the basic causes of instability and conflict are economic and social in nature. We look to Governments in the region for advice on how enduring solutions are most likely to come about. We are firmly persuaded that these are problems which must be seen, as they will be solved, in the light of the human needs of the people directly affected, and not in terms of ideological arguments. The imposition by force of external ideologies is seldom motivated by a genuine concern for the needs of the people.

Amid the international tensions and violence of our times, the right to speak becomes a responsibility, the need to hear a duty. That is why we are gathered in this Chamber today to listen to your views firsthand.

Each of our political parties, in its own way, is apprehensive about the dangerous deterioration in the security situation in the neighbouring regions that you know so well. Therefore be assured, Mr. President, that you are now welcomed eagerly by an audience, both here and in Canada at large, who will be heeding your words of counsel with an open mind and sympathetic heart.

[Translation]

To speak clearly, to dialogue, and to work together in the quest for viable solutions marked by human values and common sense—these are the urgent tasks of our area. The entire world today is trapped in a prison of dilemma, mainly dominated by the nuclear threat, and yet no less dominated by the tyranny of false and outdated ideologies on how society should evolve. As nations, we all search for the way out of such a prison, while remaining faithful to our own traditions and giving loose rein to our hopes and dreams in order to enjoy the fruits of the amazing human mind. I firmly believe that humanity will find its way; it has no other option.

It is with great pleasure that we welcome today the President of Mexico, Mr. Miguel de la Madrid Hurtado.

Senor Miguel de la Madrid (President of the United Mexican States): Mr. Speaker, distinguished Members of the Canadian Parliament, Mr. Prime Minister, Ladies and Gentlemen.

It is a great honour to accept the invitation extended to me by this distinguished body which represents the people of Canada. The Canadian Parliament combines the quest for the democratic perfection of the nation and the desire for its people's active participation in the tasks of the State. This forum confirms the validity of the desires and hopes with which the Founding Fathers of this country viewed its future.

Canada has forged its history and its future in a continuing effort to build a system of life that is firmly sustained by values and principles. The vigour of its political institutions and relations of peaceful coexistence stem from its perseverance in the practice of democracy as their mainstay.

Constitutional balances and counterbalances, the fostering of representative assembly, respect for social diversity and the opinions of the citizenry, and the active support of one's chosen party are constants in public power based on a broad and firm community foundation.

No democratic State can stand on the fragmentation of its society. On the contrary, political legitimacy must be based on the sentiments of the nation, on the co-ordination of action and needs of different sectors and groups; on maintaining a balance between the social distribution of responsibilities and the scope of governmental powers.

In putting its authentic values into practice, each country manifests its unique nature. Canada and Mexico are the result of unique and untransferable experiences. Their histories make it impossible in our times for them to accept that devious attempts be made to impose or force assimilation of foreign systems whom them.

We do not, however, believe in the Utopia of an autarchic system and we assert our identity without shutting ourselves off from enriching contacts with other peoples. We want to join in united efforts, but we refuse to accept any attempt at uniformity that denies the historical foundation of peoples and cultures, that harms the individual values of each society and closes off genuine channels of co-operation and solidarity.

Canada and Mexico are becoming increasingly associated with each other through initiatives and common viewpoints and through their responsible participation in international affairs. Today there is particularly strong need to make our continent a place of converging ideals and an area privileged with understanding and progress, and to establish new relations that are more dynamic, more productive and more just.

This is so because today the international community is immersed in increasing uncertainty in the face of power politics, hegemonic zeal, political intolerance and profound economic imbalances that are so harmful to developing countries.

The world would seem to be skidding down the slope devised by the promoters of the use of power. Technological development has relentlessly built up a deposit of destruction and terror. Both usable weapons and the leftovers of war are employed in attacks on the survival and dignity of mankind. While innumerable people are afflicted by hunger, unhealthy conditions, ignorance and death, millions are being spent to build an apocalyptic arsenal that is becoming increasingly difficult to control and presents a great risk of thoughtless use. We are witnessing an irrational cult to the capacity for self-destruction and to excessive spending to build power.

Mexico has categorically repudiated the validity of doctrines of deterrence and nuclear balance which have jeopardized the legitimate aspirations of nations to live in peace, to seek economic development, political stability and social progress through just and equitable co-operation.

It is imperative that measures be taken to prevent the destruction of all that represents the cumulative efforts of modern civilization. The aberrational idea that not acting is equivalent to avoiding risk must be abandoned. Eluding responsibilities multiplies the effect of lack of foresight and, sooner or later, the price of remaining passive must be paid.

In this context, Mexico has followed with particular interest the development of the peace initiatives recently undertaken by Prime Minister Trudeau, which led to his interviews with leaders of the superpowers and with those of other countries that possess nuclear weapons and of numerous industrialized and developing nations. We congratulate this outstanding contemporary statesman who, with his political imagination, courage and capacity for leadership, has successfully furthered the cause of peace and development.

Mexico fully supports all action aimed at halting the arms race and reaffirms its commitment to complete and universal disarmament and to dialogue and negotiation as Sole means of achieving understanding.

We do not want a return to the dark days in which the alternative to confrontation was an unstable peace, subject to cycles of dependence on armamentism. On the contrary, we want constructive times of stability and progress through co-operation. The crisis that is now shaking the very foundations of world order makes this an ideal time to re-examine our course and adjust our objectives. The current problems affect us all and also tend, although in varying degree, to increase for us all. In looking toward the future, each country must decide whether it will act in favour of a collective effort or to pursue sterile and egotistical interests in isolation.

Two indivisible imperatives weigh on mankind's aspirations, peace and development. We recognize, with concern, that the instruments for achieving them are becoming more and more fragile. In addition to political tensions, we are faced with economic uncertainty, breakdowns in negotiation and the outright obsolescence of models and systems that have not provided the answers required today. Once again, the burdens of the crisis and of adjustments are being transferred to the developing countries and the lack of equity in the international structure is becoming more serious.

It is not enough to recognize that interdependence has only exceptionally led to the level of understanding and co-operation required. It is also necessary to prevent the lack of dialogue between the North and the South on behalf of world economic recovery from becoming part of the vicious circle of confrontation between hegemonic powers, or of irreducible opposition between East and West based on unilateral and ideologically motivated views, that violates sovereignties and delays or cancels out any real hope of independent progress.

The economic crisis is making inequality more acute, increasing contradictions and undermining the foundations of the international order. Recession and generalized inflation, the contraction in trade and the reappearance of protectionism, monetary and financial chaos, and the foreign debt are all manifestations of a divided world, incapable of achieving cohesion and rationality.

Sustained recovery will not be possible if it does not extend to every member of the international community.

The crisis that is affecting the developing world will not be settled without the concerted action of the international community. The problem of the debt is of a global nature. It affects all of us, and we should all contribute to solving it: industrialized and developing countries, debtors and creditors, and public and private financing institutions. To meet their loan payments, debtor countries need to regenerate their capacity to pay, and that will only be possible if their export products have access to the markets of the industrialized countries. At the same time, such access is the only possibility for strengthening their purchasing power abroad and re-establishing world trade flows. Attempts to do otherwise are not only unfair but also unrealistic. We trust that this point will be fully understood.

If the protectionism of the industrialized countries does not give way to the logic of reality, meeting demands for generating foreign exchange to cover development needs will prove an extremely complex task. Eventually an illogical situation would arise that would lead to undesirable forms of involution as a substitute for progress.

Renewing confidence and resuming the course of progress implies an immediate strengthening of immediately strengthening the specific mechanisms and activities of co-operation among States and thus a return to the original meaning of interdependence.

For both Mexico and Canada, the continental scope of such co-operation is fundamental. Imbalances in the world economy have dealt serious blows to the countries of Latin America. Long decades of growth and growing expectations have been replaced by regressive forms of development that affect not only aspirations for progress, but also employment, consumption and the well-being of extensive groups of the population.

It is thus imperative to establish new continental relations that provide room for production, exports, the distribution of income and the political and social progress of all peoples. It is a question of expanding economic co-operation, and with it, development and stability; of broadening political communication with respect for plurality and, with it, the true security of all nations.

Latin America has revitalized its own endeavours. We have co-ordinated actions under a joint strategy aimed at renovating our approaches, criteria and mechanisms. Our goal is to bring about a system of collective economic security supported by regional integration, the strengthening of our forums and organizations, and the co-ordination of common stands. This is the meaning and the objectives of the Quito Declaration.

To supplement these actions, we Latin American countries have responsibly begun making adjustments in our economies—in a necessary effort to rationalize them—that have a painful social impact.

In Mexico's case, we have organized with determination to overcome the obstacles arising from adverse circumstances. Firmly united, the Mexican people have brought their combined sacrifice, work and trust to bear on the common task of reordering the economy. The National Development Plan we have drawn up is designed to respond to the most pressing problems, such as inflation and the fiscal and foreign economic imbalance. At the same time, the Plan involves a readjustment process designed to make the structural changes essential to improving the production base by guiding it realistically towards feasible priority areas of national development. Despite the great difficulties that Mexico has faced, we have maintained a reasonable level of spending and social investment with a view to fulfilling the binding commitments inherent in the history of our nation's development and to alleviating the suffering of the people.

Distinguished Members of Parliament, Canada has been outstanding among the countries of the industrialized world in its sensitive understanding of international realities and its commitment to dialogue, development and detente.

We have observed its growing interest in Latin America and, particularly, the attention it has been directing toward the Central American crisis. That interest has been effectively demonstrated by this Parliament with satisfaction. The establishment in 1981 of the Subcommittee to study Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean is indicative of its desire to strengthen ties between our countries. Another outstanding example is Canada's decision to double, over a five-year period, the economic assistance it provides to Latin American and Caribbean countries.

Mexico and Canada agree that the major cause of the Central American crisis is the area's lack of economic and social progress. This is why Canada's contribution to the program of the Committee for the Support of Central American Economic and Social Development, created under the auspices of SELA (Latin American Economic System) is so important. Canada's experience in designing and implementing development projects, together with its financial and technological capacity, will unquestionably prove very useful.

Canada's commitment to stability in the region is also reflected in the support the Canadian Government has expressed in different forums for the peacemaking efforts of the Contadora Group. Today, with growing threats to peace in the region, the voice of Canada and its political and moral weight are particularly valuable.

Today, we are reiterating our conviction, that the only path to firm and lasting peace is full respect for law and for the principles and norms of peaceful international coexistence.

It is the unavoidable obligation of Central Americans to staunch their wounds and regain stability by revitalizing the age-old concept of unity and settling differences among brothers, while it is the duty of other countries to respect the free determination of these peoples and to abstain from the use or promotion of force as a means of solution. Fortunately, countries like Canada, and almost all the Latin American nations, have taken specific steps to demonstrate their full support for diplomatic negotiations. This build-up of the international desire for peace strengthens the possibility that law and reason will ultimately triumph over generalized violence and war.

Distinguished Members of Parliament, in today's world, characterized on the one hand by East-West tension—a sterile force that endangers the very existence of mankind—and on the other by the profound imbalance between the North and South and the instability bred by injustice and inequality, Mexico and Canada share the common goal of promoting dialogue, reducing tensions and furthering international co-operation for development.

In practice, Canada's and Mexico's foreign policy, as expressed in different forums, has often been the same and they have both promoted initiatives and striven for solutions to the serious problems that afflict mankind. This is not unusual. We have both always upheld the importance of international organizations for the maintenance of peace, security and co-operation, in the conviction that such organizations represent the values of peaceful coexistence among States and the supremacy of law over might.

I have come to Canada to reaffirm the high priority the Mexican Government confers on its relations with this country. We know that distortions in the world economy, which are also affecting Mexico and Canada, have slowed the pace of our exchange activities. Nevertheless, experience in recent years has shown the numerous opportunities for co-operation in such diverse areas as agriculture, industry, energy, communications, fishing and transportation.

Economic and political relations between our two countries are not a matter of momentary circumstance, but of interests of a much vaster scope: similarity of political concepts and values, complementary economies and a common willingness to foster dialogue and co-operation on the basis of respect, trust, friendship and mutual benefit. We Mexicans and Canadians want to be increasingly closer friends.

Ladies and Gentlemen, under the threat of grave nuclear escalation, the increasingly acute ideological confrontation and the economic crisis that overshadows the world's atmosphere, there is a ray of light for the peoples of the American continent. Peace, respect for law, justice and co-operation must and will take their proper place as indispensable ideals of our community of countries. Those values are not negotiable, nor can they be fragmented without threatening the stability of all and violating the humanistic sentiment that permeated the enterprise of civilizing the New World.

It is my hope that through the untiring efforts of people and government, of organizations and individuals, future generations on our continent may find a safe, harmonious and just place in which to live together and grow. I trust that Canada and Mexico will be able to meet the challenge of making to-day's dream, a reality.

Thank you very much.

Hon. Maurice Riel (Speaker of the Senate): Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, Mr. President of Mexico, Mr. Prime Minister of Canada, fellow parliamentarians.

Today we have had the great privilege of listening to an eminent statesman in the person of the President of Mexico. It is a great honour for me, as Speaker of the Senate and on behalf of my fellow senators, to thank the President for his wise words and to salute him as the leader of a country with which we maintain numerous cultural ties and ties of friendship, in addition to important trade relations.

Mr. President, you are also particularly welcome as the leader of a nation with which we share the larger part of the North American continent.

[English]

We in Canada have been impressed by the skill and the strength with which you, Mr. President, accepted the challenge of these difficult circumstances and have put your nation on the long and arduous path to recovery. In this, Mexico has given us all a praiseworthy example of confidence in the future.

A concern for the future has been evident too, Mr. President, in your commitment to the peace and well-being of the peoples of your region. We in this Parliament, indeed in this country, have followed the efforts of the Contadora Group with an intense interest and a profoundly-felt hope for their success. We realize that, as never before, we are all, literally and figuratively, "a piece of the continent, a part of the main". We ask you today to take back to your colleagues in Venezuela, Panama and Colombia our earnest wishes for the realization of your vision of a Central America in which conditions will permit its peoples to progress towards peace, stability and good neighbourliness.

Mr. President, we are all delighted to have you and your ministers visit Canada. Frequent meetings at the highest level, among heads of State, ensure an abiding respect for the best interests of all concerned by consolidating bilateral ties between countries. Therefore, we earnestly hope that the ties that exist between Canada and Mexico will continue to grow for the greater good of both our countries.

Finally, I wish to thank you again, Mr. President, not only for your address, not only for having come to Canada, but also for your efforts to restore peace in our hemisphere. Rest assured that Canadians, like all people of good will, are grateful to you for this and urge you to continue. In this as in all other things, Mr. President, we wish you the best of luck!

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Francis (Speaker of the House of Commons): Mr. President of Mexico, Mr. Prime Minister, Members of the Senate and the House of Commons.

It is a great honour for me, on behalf of Members of our Houses of Parliament and guests assembled, to express our appreciation of the Address we have heard from the President of Mexico. We welcome him to Canada as the leader of a friendly nation which shares Canada's commitment to peace and development in the Americas.

[Translation]

Continuing with the warm friendship developed between our two countries, we have the honour of welcoming our distinguished visitor to our capital.

[English]

Canada and Mexico have enjoyed diplomatic relations for 40 years. Our two nations are linked by many important treaties and agreements in such areas of common interest as energy, culture, industry and agriculture. The past several years in particular have witnessed a very welcome increase in the number and level of official contacts between our Governments.

[Translation]

In 1983, a delegation of Canadian parliamentarians visited Mexico to consolidate our friendship, increase our knowledge of each other's country and explore further avenues for co-operation between our two countries. All delegates came back delighted with their visit.

[English]

Hundreds of thousands of Canadians visit Mexico every year, and the number of Mexican visitors to Canada continues to increase. The beautiful Spanish language is heard spoken more and more often in the corridors of this building as touring groups follow guides across Parliament Hill. Such exchanges foster better mutual understanding and good will. We hope that they will thrive and expand.

[Translation]

Mindful of the cordial relationship between our two countries, we wish to thank His Excellency for his visit and his kind words. Thank you.

METRIC CONVERSION

TORONTO GAS RETAILERS—WITHDRAWAL FROM APPEAL PROCESS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, Jack Halpert and Ray Christiansen, two independent gas retailers who have stood up in defence of freedom of choice, can no longer afford to fight the federal Government in the courts. In November, 1983, the pair were awarded $41,000 by a court when they were found innocent of any charges relating to dispensing gas in imperial gallons. To date they have not received a penny of that court ordered settlement. For this reason they are unable to raise the necessary $25,000 for the current appeal before an Ontario County Court, and therefore must default. This appeal was initiated by the federal Government.

We appear to have a double standard alive and well here. If a person owes money to the Government through its agent, Revenue Canada, he or she must pay up immediately, and haggle about the levy or the amount later. Yet the federal Government with its unlimited resources, is able to delay or avoid paying this $41,000 by proceeding through the various appeal stages, including the Supreme Court of Canada. Any ordinary Canadian citizen cannot counter that.

Justice must not only be done, it must be seen to be done. The Canadian Charter of Rights was supposed to accomplish that.

BRAVERY

REQUEST THAT MR. RENÉ JALBERT BE AWARDED DECORATION

Mr. Robert Gourd (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Argenteuil-Papineau, speaking personally as well as on behalf of my constituents, I wish to offer my sincere condolences, after yesterday's tragic events at the Quebec National Assembly, to the families of the victims and to the Government of Quebec that experienced this terrible tragedy. Mr. Speaker, personally and also on behalf of my constituents, I want to ask the House to recommend the Sergeant-At-Arms of the National Assembly, Mr. René Jalbert, to the Governor General of Canada for this country's highest award, for the bravery and presence of mind he showed in the course of these tragic events.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP RACE—CANDIDATE'S PLEDGE TO CUT DEFICIT BY $15 BILLION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, a headline in The Globe and Mail of May 8 reads, "Economists skeptical of pledge to cut deficit by $15 billion", the pledge made by one of the Liberal leadership contenders. Economists say that pledge would require major surgery on government programs, or major tax increases, or both.

The candidate refuses to spell out in detail how he would accomplish his goal, but mere mention of his intention to go after social programs has already had a damaging effect. For while economists may be skeptical about his statement, hundreds of thousands of Canadians who have to get by on the guaranteed income supplement and social assistance, are now worried that their payments will be radically reduced.

William Mackness, vice-president of the Bank of Nova Scotia, said that that proposal would mean major cuts in transfer payments for health care and post-secondary education, an end to the principle of universality for old age pensions, and the imposition of user fees for medical services.

This is the prospect a Liberal leadership candidate puts before Canadians, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) endorses his candidacy. Such hypocrisy from that Minister, in the face of her utterances in the past year, is beyond belief. She is now willing, it appears, to let lower income and elderly Canadians pay the cost of Liberal ambitions. That is shameful, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S INTERVENTION

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, the federal Minister of Transport has accomplished a great deal on the North Shore in the way of providing airports and docks. I would like to point out that the Canadian Air Transportation Administration should consider the importance of 3,000-foot landing-strips to small villages on the middle and lower North Shore, to Kegaska, La Romaine, Tête-à-la-Baleine and La Tabatière, to help people out of their isolation.

Mr. Speaker, I may add that Quebec has always refused to build roads in this isolated and distant area but I think that after building major regional airports at Blanc-Sablon, la Chèverie, Natashquan and Havre-Saint-Pierre, we should be able to give these isolated communities an adequate air transportation service. Since Quebec continues to delay construction of proper roads in the area, I think the time has come for the Administration to start immediately on the construction of 3,000-foot gravel air strips so that planes of the Otter, Twin Otter and DC-3 type can serve those communities.

ANNOUNCED WITHDRAWAL OF SOVIET ATHLETES FROM 1984 GAMES

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on the regrettable decision of the Soviet Union to withdraw its team from the Los Angeles Olympics. As in 1980, New Democrats oppose such a boycott. At that time my colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett), said:

> We regret also the decision to single out our athletes to bear personally the total burden of our anger. No comparable sacrifice is asked of others. Furthermore, crippling the games in Moscow probably signs the death warrant of future Olympic Games as well.

The same still holds true, Mr. Speaker. Athletes, many of whom have worked for many years for this one chance, will again be the big losers. Whether they be from countries that participate in the boycott or those who do go, they will never know if they competed against the best.

• (1410)

A second consecutive boycott by a major participant would not bode well for the continued well-being of the international Olympic movement. I call upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to act in the interests of the world's Olympic athletes and of the movement itself, by expressing Canada's displeasure with such a politicization of the Games, and I ask him to call upon Chairman Chernenko to reconsider his nation's decision to withdraw, and on President Reagan to give his personal guarantee ensuring the total security of the Soviet team.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR SUBSIDIES

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Mr. Speaker, Davie Shipbuilding in Lauzon Quebec City, which formerly employed more than 2,500 workers, now has hardly 1,500 employees and may have only a few hundred left by the end of 1984, if the company fails to get substantial orders in the next few months. However, one wonders how this shipyard will be able to get the contracts it needs, if nothing is done very soon to make it competitive once more. And competitive it must be, otherwise it will never be able to hire back the hundreds of workers it has had to lay off in recent months. However, to become competitive, it must modernize facilities and equipment, at whatever cost. Since the requisite investment cannot be made without Government assistance, I urge the Government, and more specifically the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, to approve the application for a subsidy of nearly $9 million submitted not long ago by Davie Shipbuilding, a company whose operations are vital to the economic well-being of the Quebec City area.

PLIGHT OF MANITOBA FARMERS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, according to a recent survey by the farm newspaper Manitoba Co-Operator, an estimated 200 farmers in my home province have not been able to obtain enough credit to put in a crop for this year. As well, the survey reveals that 350 Manitoba farmers have left farming during the last two to three years for reasons other than retirement. This figure has been given credibility by current Canadian Wheat Board statistics on permit books. According to the Board, permit holders in Manitoba have declined by 490 since 1980. These two revealing statistics are but the tip of the iceberg. Last year Manitoba had a record 62 farm bankruptcies, up 106 per cent over 1982.

Another area of concern which further highlights the severity of economic conditions facing the western farmer is the report by the Farm Credit Corporation which says that arrears on loans owed to the FCC by Manitoba farmers have increased by more than 50 per cent. In fact the increase this year alone amount of $14,660,000, $5 million more than in 1983.

What will it take for the Government to understand the immediate needs of the western farmer? The recent announcement of pay-outs in the fall under the Grain Stabilization Act is much too late. Payments late in the year will not assist those farmers presently faced with a cash flow problem. Interim payments are needed before the end of the summer, and I urge the Government to take action now.

CONDEMNATION OF LIBERAL PARTY'S POLICIES ON WOMEN'S ISSUES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian embassy in Tokyo is trying to promote Japanese tourism in Canada by running a so-called beauty contest, in which Japanese women are being asked to send photos of themselves, and their physical measurements, to the Canadian embassy. The winner is to be awarded a tour of Canada. While it is a worth-while endeavour to promote tourism, this approach is entirely offensive and hearkens back to the dark ages.

It does, however, point once again to the glaring gap between the platitudes the Liberals pay to women's issues and their policies and actions. For instance, the Government was willing to make companies which had contracts with the federal Government comply with the six and five program when it came to wages, yet it will not bring in contract compliance to promote affirmative action programs within those same companies.

The Liberals are willing to intervene and regulate the broadcasting industry when it comes to ensuring Canadian content. But when it comes to protecting women against sexually abusive broadcasting, the Government says it is the CRTC's responsibility. A warning to all Canadians, but in particular to Canadian women: to be a Conservative is to reveal nothing at all about one's policies; to be a Liberal means to preach one thing and practise another.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ACCEDE TO DEMAND FOR AID

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Last April 10, Mr. Speaker, some Government Members were pleased to see that the Minister of Agriculture had met with the association of Quebec producers concerning the huge loss incurred by Quebec farmers as a result of bad weather conditions last summer. The Minister said that financial assistance would be available to Quebec farmers on the condition that the Quebec Minister of Agriculture—or the Quebec Government through its Minister of Agriculture—make direct representations to Agriculture Canada. On April 16 last, the Minister of Agriculture of Quebec did make the necessary representations to explain that Quebec farmers deserved that assistance, considering that the federal Government had been extremely generous for western farmers in 1980. Given those circumstances and the fact that the Canadian Minister of Agriculture has received that very clear and straightforward message, I dare hope that Government Members will make every effort to convince the Minister of Agriculture of Canada to respond favourably, keeping in mind the good faith and good will shown by Quebec's Agriculture Minister in the interest of farmers. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge the Minister of Agriculture to give a positive response to the request of his Quebec colleague, in the interest of Quebec farmers.

Mr. Dubois: Did you read Mr. Garon's letter?

FINANCE

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND REPORT—SIZE OF EXTERNAL DEBT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Canada has set another record. We have now been singled out by the International Monetary Fund as one of the industrial nations which has an unwelcome set of options, and whose problems are among the worst of those nations which have a rising government debt.

In 1973 our total external debt was $16.4 billion owed by the Governments and the people of Canada, outside Canada. Today it is $127.4 billion. The IMF says that, in relation to the current value of national output, by far the largest interest payments are those of Italy and Canada. They are equal to 9 per cent and 7 per cent of the gross domestic product.

What steps does the Government plan to take to resolve this fantastic debt problem which we now have in Canada, which originated in 1973 when Mr. John Turner was Minister of Finance, and has continued with every Minister of Finance since? When is the Government going to cease putting this country in hock, and reverse this situation? Is the outrageous debt record of the Government not the basic reason for the weakness of the Canadian dollar today?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must tell my hon. friend that his slip is showing. Frankly, his fears are appearing rather obviously, in face of the outstanding candidates who are vying for the leadership of the Liberal Party.

Mr. McDermid: Just name one.

Mr. Lalonde: I addressed this issue in my last two budget speeches in particular, and in the economic statement I issued in November of 1982. As I have stated, it is important that we proceed to a gradual reduction of our deficit so as not to find ourselves in a situation where there would be some crowding out, or where a large part of the federal Government's expenditures would be for interest payments. I have indicated a step of a gradual reduction in the deficit.

I can inform my friend, for instance, that we have performed even better than I had anticipated in that regard. Last year, for instance, I had foreseen that the federal Government would have financial requirements in excess of $26 billion. The most recent figures indicate that we will have achieved an amount that will be $1.7 billion lower than the amount I had anticipated. We have achieved this by careful management, while caring for the unemployed and the people who are in need.

• (1420)

Mr. Crosbie: I am pleased to see that the Minister is concerned about whether he will be in the next Cabinet, and that he is worried about Mr. Turner who has promised to cut the deficit by $15 billion. I can tell him that John Turner would not touch him with a ten-foot pole.

SUGGESTED OPTIONS FOR CANADA

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the International Monetary Fund is concerned about Canada, not just Zambia, and not just about Abyssinia or Ethiopia. It is now worried about Canada and has said that our options are unpalatable. Either we have to raise more tax revenue or we have to cut public spending, or the additional charges will be pyramided into a faster growth of debt in a vicious circle of interaction between interest expenditures and indebtedness. Will the Minister tell the House which of these options he will pursue? Will he continue allowing this vicious circle of interaction to continue so that Canada goes down the tubes? What is he going to do?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that the IMF has singled out Canada. I invite him to read the report and, as a matter of fact, I will send him a copy of it. I invite him to read what the IMF has been saying about the situation in the United States. That would be some thoughtful reading for him. Before he makes a statement like the one he has made, he will want to read the document very carefully.

I have said that the issue of the deficit is important, but I also want to point out that this has to be read correctly, contrary to what the Hon. Member is mentioning. For instance, if one takes the gross public debt in Canada and compares it to the GNP, Canada ranks third amongst the seven major industrial countries. If one takes the net public debt—that is after the deduction of the interest payments that the federal Government is receiving—the net public debt ratio to GNP, Canada ranks third out of the seven industrial nations. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I mentioned third before. It was fourth with respect to gross public debt to GNP ratio. It is third with respect to net public debt to GNP ratio. Only France and Germany have a lower net public debt to GNP ratio than Canada. We are ahead of the United States, Japan, the United Kingdom, and Italy in that regard. My hon. friend could get those figures as well if he wishes.

Mr. Crosbie: As it is so often, the Minister becomes gross when he is grasping for an answer.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that total Canadian external debt at the end of 1973 comprised 13 per cent of our GNP, just $16.4 billion owed abroad. Today it is 33 per cent of our GNP, which is $127 billion. That is the worst record in the OECD except for Italy.

The IMF pointed out that interest payments and past debt are still mounting, and this poses a threat to the ability of Governments to initiate policies that would foster economic growth. It is concerned about Canada. What plan of action does this ruptured, lame duck Government have to reverse this trend, so that we have some ability to initiate policies to foster economic growth? When are you going to show concern and take some action? The world is alarmed about this Government.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not take very great advice from that intellectually bankrupt Party across the aisle. I have indicated what we were planning to do. I have indicated the steps we are taking in my last two Budgets. I have informed the Hon. Member that we have performed even better than had been anticipated in terms of reducing the financial requirements of the Canadian Government, to the tune of $1.7 billion better in 1983 than what we had anticipated. Indeed, I want to continue along the lines because, just as we must be concerned about the size of the deficit, we must also be concerned about the plight of the unemployed and about the necessity of coming to the help of those people in need in this country during the difficult times we are facing. This is the policy that this Government is following, and we intend to continue following it.

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT BORROWING

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Government has presided over an increase in the deficit from about $10 billion to $30 billion. Recognizing the clear link that this report, referred to by my colleague, establishes between the burden of heavy government borrowing and our apparent high level of employment, is the Minister prepared to admit now that not only did his Budget completely misjudge the current weakness in the economy today, but it also sidestepped the main issue of excessive government borrowing, which is at the heart of our high unemployment problem and the slow economic growth we are suffering today?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): First, Mr. Speaker, this is not at all what the IMF report states. Second, I totally disagree with my friend's analysis.

Mr. Wilson: It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister does not understand the problems and the responsibilities that he is faced with as Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the IMF report states that the high level of interest servicing charges in Canada is 7 per cent of national income compared to 4.5 per cent for most of the other industrialized countries. That charge is a tremendous burden on the economy and it uses up the spending power of the Government which could be directed at creating jobs, creating economic growth which would create a climate of confidence in this country. Because this practice has led to an unemployment rate in Canada of 11.3 per cent compared to 7.8 per cent in the United States, why have the Minister of Finance and previous Liberal Ministers of Finance always regarded excessive government borrowing as next year's problem, and avoided taking action today when it is necessary?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making a very strange assertion indeed. If his statement were right, you would have, for instance in England today, a lower level of unemployment than in Canada.

Miss MacDonald: Higher or lower?

Mr. Lalonde: The level of unemployment in the United Kingdom, as the Hon. Member knows—

Mr. Stevens: Has been coming down.

Mr. Lalonde: —is significantly above the Canadian unemployment numbers. The Hon. Member should know also, if that statement were true, you would have a lower unemployment level in the Netherlands today than in Canada, Mr. Speaker. The unemployment level in the Netherlands today stands at over 18 per cent.

Mr. Crosbie: What about the United States?

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member cannot establish the kind of relationship that he is trying to establish, and he knows it.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, over the last few days we have been watching interest rates increase. The prime rates for the chartered banks have been established at 12 per cent, and every reputable economist in Canada tells us that if this trend continues for much longer our fragile recovery is about to end. Yet the Minister of Finance stands up daily in the House of Commons and tells us there is nothing he can do, that he is helpless, that Canada must track the interest rates of the United States.

Is the Minister saying to Canadians that he, as Minister of Finance, is indeed helpless and must look to people like Paul Volker, a bureaucrat in the United States, to dictate our policy here that will determine whether or not our recovery is successful?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have answered this question a number of times. We are in a situation of very close interdependence with the American economy. This applies not only to the Canadian economy but also to those of other industrialized countries, and even developing countries, at this time.

U.S. interest rates are having a very considerable impact on the movement of interest rates in all industrialized countries. European countries are facing the same problems we are at this time, in terms of upward pressures on their own interest rates.

I have pointed out that we were hoping the industrialized countries would be able to agree on measures that could at least arrest, if not diminish, the rise of interest rates. I said that these issues would undoubtedly be discussed sometime next week, at international meetings of Ministers of Finance. Once again, however, I must emphasize that, in the circumstances, we must always consider what is happening in the United States. The Hon. Member is also aware of certain statements made by spokesmen for the U.S. Administration yesterday, and I hope that these statements will be followed by concrete decisions by the U.S. authorities.

[English]

AGRI-BOND CONCEPT—REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S SUPPORT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly clear that the Minister of Finance is attempting to focus our attention on the United States, to launch his crusade for bringing pressure on the United States to lower rates, and while one might applaud that effort, there are things which the Minister could be doing today. One of the concepts that I feel should be introduced in the House of Commons is being considered by the Finance Committee at the moment. It is called agri-bonds. It has been referred to the Finance Committee; it is before that committee. The Government has done nothing with that concept.

• (1430)

Will the Minister of Finance say: "Yes, we can provide assistance to food producers in our country"? Agri-bonds have been proven in other parts of the world. Why does the Minister of Finance not stand up and say that this will be a priority of the Government and that we will see this legislation passed in the House of Commons before the end of June this year?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have answered this question before by saying that the issue had been referred to a parliamentary committee in order to examine the implications, the advantages, and the draw-backs of that specific measure. Also I have indicated that there were possible alternative measures which might be more effective and more useful. I hope the parliamentary committee will examine those various alternatives. I am awaiting its report to see what would be the best steps. Contrary to my hon. friend's view, I am not reaching conclusions before matters have been studied.

Mr. Riis: Perhaps one of the reasons the Minister has not given a concept like agri-bonds the appropriate attention is that he would like to introduce legislation to assist the foreign banks in Canada. We in this Party feel that, rather than giving priority to the foreign banks legislation, we should be assisting Canadian farmers and food producers by introducing a concept such as agri-bonds.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER IMPOSE TAX ON CAPITAL OUTFLOWS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my final question refers to a concern which the Minister has raised time and time again, that the necessity of tracking United States interest rates is to keep capital in this country so that there will not be a haemorrhaging or flowing of capital out of Canada seeking better interest rates in the United States or in other countries.

Has the Minister of Finance considered, as an alternative, the lowering of interest rates in this country and, to keep capital in Canada and to stop the movement of capital out of the country, imposing something like a speculator's tax on excessive amounts of money which would be moved out to take advantage of higher interest rates abroad?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have two things to say to the Hon. Member. First, he knows that the measure I have introduced dealing with foreign banks resulted from a parliamentary committee's unanimous report. It was supported by the New Democratic Party. He knows that I have acted on the basis of the parliamentary report.

On the issue of agri-bonds, I will do the same. I will act when the parliamentary committee has reported. I will examine the alternatives, as I have done in the case of foreign banks. Also the Hon. Member knows that these measures are not to help foreign banks. They are to help Canadian consumers and Canadian businessmen by introducing more competition in the banking field. He knows that, because he studied the issue and recommended that we do away with the ceiling on foreign banks. He knows what the issue is and what needs to be done.

As far as his particular suggestion is concerned, I have also answered this question before by saying that I did not think this was an appropriate step to take in terms of introducing, directly or indirectly, foreign exchange controls at the present time.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We understand—and I would appreciate confirmation from the Prime Minister—that the Government has finally agreed to introduce in the House of Commons the amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act and that those will be coming forward later this week, but that the Government will not permit them to be debated later this week. This is a matter of great urgency in western Canada. I ask the Prime Minister for a clear undertaking now that we can have that measure before us for debate at the beginning of next week.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should remember from the time that he was Prime Minister that House business is discussed between House Leaders of various Parties. There is ongoing discussion on that Bill at this time. Members on this side, and I believe Members on the other side too, would like that Bill to pass into law, but there are other Bills on the Order Paper which are in the interests of Canadians. I would remind the Hon. Member—perhaps he did not know—that we did have a written agreement to pass a certain number of financial Bills, but his Party reneged on that agreement.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not true.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You know not of what you speak.

Mr. Trudeau: We have it in writing. If the Hon. Member—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Get your amanuensis to get it right.

Mr. Trudeau: I am not dealing with the Hon. House Leader. I am dealing with the Hon. Member for Yellowhead. I am telling him that, if he wants to see the written agreement, we can show it to him. The Party to which he belongs reneged on that agreement. We want to see the Bill on grain stabilization passed, but we want to see other legislation passed too. That is why the negotiations are going on.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What I remember, and what I wish the Prime Minister would remember, is that it is the Prime Minister of a Government who sets the priorities of a Government. This Government has consistently been giving western Canada second, third, or fourth place. It does not rank among the priorities of this Government—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —even though there are Canadian prairie farmers going bankrupt now, and even though the delay in this legislation was caused because the Minister of Agriculture was too busy running for the leadership of the Liberal Party. This delay is cutting off the access of Canadian farmers to their own money.

REQUEST FOR INTERIM PAYMENT PROVISION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister two questions. First, could we have a guarantee that his Government will begin to care about western Canada and bring in that legislation for debate next week? Second, could he tell us, if he knows, whether the legislation that will be tabled on Friday contains a provision for an interim payment right now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the difference between that Party, as it was led and as it is presently led, and this Party, is that we can deal with several priorities, not only with one. We believe that western grain farmers are one priority. There are other priorities in the country. The ability of a Government is shown in its ability to deal with several priorities, not only with one at a time.

Mr. Gustafson: How about the CPR?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has clearly indicated that the concerns and bankruptcies of Canadian western farmers are a priority way down his list. It is not way down the list of this Party or of this Parliament, and it should not be way down on his.

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE PASSED BY MAY 18

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister now has a chance to prove that he cares about western Canada, that he cares about the region he once told me somebody else would have to worry about. He has a chance to prove that now, and he could do it by bringing in that legislation for debate and completion next week. Will he do it? Will he do that for the West?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House will remember that we have taken four days, lost four days, on the Crown Corporations Bill, which is also one of the priorities of the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Lost!

Mr. Trudeau: The House will know that in Parliaments where they have more civilized Oppositions, they deal with Bills at second reading in one day, and they do not just try to talk those Bills out. That permits Governments in such Parliaments to deal with several priorities at a time.

The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead seems to think that because we want to deal with other Bills we are downgrading western farmers. That is an example of politics which, in the long run, did not even benefit the Hon. Member. Otherwise he would not be sitting in that seat, he would be sitting in that one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe.

Mr. McDermid: You have got to get in the cheap shots.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is better than sitting in that art deco house in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe has the floor.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL REVENUE

PROVISION OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS TO CREDIT BUREAUX

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Could he confirm that, contrary to Section 241 of the Income Tax Act, his Department has been giving taxpayers' social insurance numbers to private credit bureaux. If so, how extensive has this practice been?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members often ask questions and we often enquire about the use of social insurance numbers on some Departmental documents.

I must admit that I was not aware that taxpayers' social insurance numbers were being passed on to private credit bureaux. I will gladly find out and advise the Hon. Member accordingly.

● (1440)

[English]

DEPARTMENT'S DEALINGS WITH CREDIT BUREAUX

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not recall the letter that he signed on April 30, 1984, addressed to my colleague from Calgary West, in which he said:

> Further to an investigation into this matter by my officials, it has been determined that, on occasion, officials of my Department have used the services of the credit bureaux in identifying taxpayers by making reference to the social insurance number.

If the Minister does not remember that, will he refresh his memory? Second, will he tell the House how extensive is the giving of confidential information contrary, as he points out, to Section 241 of the Income Tax Act, and precisely what use is being made by his Department of private credit bureaux?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): As I said, Mr. Speaker, there are times when we have to quote social insurance numbers in our communications with private agencies to ensure that bookkeeping data are correctly recorded in our computer system or that debits or credits in the account of a taxpayer are accurately posted. That is why we are using social insurance numbers in our dealings which is not contrary to the specific provisions of the Income Tax Act prohibiting the release of confidential information.

As far as this particular case is concerned, however, or how extensive has the practice been, again I will be glad to find out and to report to the Hon. Member.

Oral Questions

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT SAWMILLS BE REOPENED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister is certainly aware, the economic situation on Quebec's North Shore is critical, especially in the forest industry. For instance, in the village of Sacré-Cœur, the main employer, a lumber mill, closed down 16 months ago, leaving well over 400 workers without jobs. This is a modern plant manned by young and qualified workers. Now that the sales in this sector are going up again, does the Minister intend to meet with the management of this plant and others in similar situations so that operations may resume in that area?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for asking his question in French and showing such interest in the fate of French-speaking Quebecers on the North Shore of the St. Lawrence River. I can tell him that I would certainly be very anxious to deal with this situation. I wonder whether it would be better for me to meet personally with the people concerned, but I could and would like to have talks with the officials and this could be considered a preliminary step before holding an actual meeting. Indeed, such a gathering may not be necessary if we find another way of solving the problem.

FORESTRY

AUXILIARY OTTAWA-QUEBEC AGREEMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister responsible for Forestry. Where is the Minister, please? The auxiliary agreement between Quebec and Ottawa—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Supplementaries should be directed to the same Minister. Hon. Members are not entitled to direct another question to another Minister.

An Hon. Member: Rightly so!

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary, not another question.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same subject and is addressed to the Minister concerned.

The auxiliary Quebec-Ottawa forestry agreement involving an amount of $300 million expired a few weeks ago. Can the Minister tell us—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is striving to ask another question.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TAX STATUS OF TORONTO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA'S MUSICIANS

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Musicians of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra have been very concerned about a recent National Revenue ruling stating that these musicians were employees and not self-employed. The Minister undertook to review this matter. Some time has passed. When will this review be completed?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member on his continuing interest in this matter. I am happy to tell Hon. Members that we have completed an in-depth review of the situation. Musicians in the Toronto Symphony Orchestra will maintain their self-employed status.

DELHI RESEARCH STATION—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It pertains to the problem in the tobacco industry. The Minister knows the problem, and he knows the statistics. I do not have to tell him that there are some 8,000 to 10,000 jobs at stake here. He knows why the problem exists, one of the biggest factors being the taxation by the federal Government. Since the federal Government takes some $1,140 million in taxation from the tobacco industry and returns some $1.6 million to the research station in Delhi, and since most tobacco growers will have to go into some other crop in order to survive as they are pushed out of tobacco by the Government, is the Minister prepared to increase the funding and the manpower at the Delhi Agriculture Station in order that they can do some research into substitute crops for the tobacco industry?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that in practically every province the provincial Government receives more revenue from cigarettes than the federal Government. He also knows full well that the Province of Ontario has as much responsibility to the tobacco industry as I do, if he is going to compare. Actually, we spend more on research. We spend more giving assistance through interest-free payments and advance payments on storable crops. The tobacco growers are able to take advantage of that program. We do much more for them than does the Province of Ontario. The Province of Ontario has the main responsibility.

The Hon. Member talked about research. He knows that we have demands, and that I could spend twice as much money on research in all of Canada. I would love to be able to do that. His Party continually tells us to cut back on expenditures, telling us not to spend, yet at the same time he asks me to spend more money.

TOBACCO GROWERS' DEMANDS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, the producers and the people who work in the Delhi research station will be disappointed with that answer by the Minister.

One week ago today, some 2,000 tobacco producers gathered in Delhi and sent two resolutions to the Minister, which will have been received in his office by now. They called on the Government to introduce an amendment to the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act which would permit the consideration of the establishment of a national marketing agency for tobacco, and, second, would enable the National Farm Products Marketing Council to commence public hearings immediately to investigate the establishment of such an agency. How did the Minister respond to those demands? Can those producers expect to hear something positive prior to the recess of this Parliament?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that I met with the Chairman of the Tobacco Marketing Board of Ontario last week, and also representatives of the industry, to discuss the problems that he is bringing to the attention of the House. I understand that the Chairman of the Ontario Marketing Board is in Prince Edward Island today to discuss this issue with the tobacco producers in that province. I discussed it with the producers in Prince Edward Island when I was there last week.

I am surprised at the noise the other side is making when they maintain that this is such an important issue. Amendments to the National Farm Products legislation are being drafted. We are advised by the legal authorities that, due to the Charter of Rights, we cannot eliminate anyone from that Act. At the present time some of those people can probably lay claim to being discriminated against because it limits certain products that could use supply and management under that Act. The tobacco producers know that, when amendments are made, all groups, whether they are tobacco producers or whatever, will be included. Mrs. Menzies, the Chairman of the National Farm Products Marketing Board, has authority to hold hearings without any direction from me. However, I did talk to her about it, and she is proceeding along those lines.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

UNEMPLOYMENT ON RESERVES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Four years ago the Minister promised a $345 million economic development fund. It was promised again in 1981, and he and his Cabinet colleagues promised it again in 1982 and 1983. As I believe the Indian people across the country know, not one dollar of that $345 million fund was ever put in place.

Would the Minister confirm that the economic development policies of his Department, along with those of his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, have created a situation where over the last four years, the level of unemployment among native people on reserves has gone up rather than down?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member was aware that there has been a substantial increase in funding by the Government to the Indian people over the course of the last four years. This is not even taking into account the increase in expenditures emanating from my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Millions of dollars have gone into housing alone. One year we tripled the budget for housing. Now it is doubled. The Hon. Member can understand the tremendous employment which that generates, and that is just one item.

I would also indicate that there have been great expenditures in the whole land claim area, which lays an economic underpinning for many of the Indian communities. As the Hon. Member knows. That in turn generates employment.

Ms. Jewett: For whom?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Therefore, I cannot agree with the premise of the Hon. Member at all, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Members of this House are aware that the level of unemployment among native people is now between five and six times above the national average.

EVALUATION OF MEGAPROJECTS' IMPACT ON NATIVE PEOPLE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is in the same area. The Minister last year terminated megaproject impact funds. I wonder if he would stand up and tell this House why, even though it has gone through Treasury Board, not one dollar has been released in terms of evaluating projects like Kemano-II, B.C. offshore drilling, the damming of the Stikine River, and Klappan coal? The list goes on all across Canada. As the Minister knows, the World Council of Churches describes the kinds of developments which are going on in norhern Alberta as being genocide. Where is the money? What is all this rhetoric which the Minister is peddling across the country?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, about the "rhetoric" I am peddling across the country—

Mr. Nielsen: Neither does anyone else.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —but if the Hon. Member is talking about the economic development fund he should be aware by now, after all this time, that the Minister responsible is not the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but rather the Minister responsible for small business.

Mr. Crosbie: No one is responsible. Nothing but excuses.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The Hon. Member might be able to access that fund better on behalf of his constituents if he were aware of the right Ministry, to start with.

Mr. Crosbie: Not even Mr. Trudeau is responsible.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): As far as what the Hon. Member is talking about is concerned, it is quite true, Mr. Speaker, that the Indian people in northern British Columbia—

Mr. Crosbie: Eugene Whelan should be responsible.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —do have some very serious problems with regard to the social impacts of various projects taking place there. I can tell the Hon. Member that I have talked to the Indian people as recently as two weeks ago, and it is considered a priority in terms of getting them that type of funding. That is one of the key priorities across the whole nation as far as myself and my Department are concerned.

FINANCE

FUEL TAX PAID BY FARMERS AND FISHERMEN—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Two days ago in answering my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris, he asked the farmers and fishermen to share in the burden of taxation when paying the fuel tax as it applied to farmers and fishermen. That, as the Minister knows, generates a 100 per cent profit of $250 million for the federal Government, and is a direct cost of food production passed on to the consumers. Only the Government benefits from this. Will the Minister revise his concept of "sharing" and think of sharing the $250 million profit the Government makes, with consumers, and remove that tax from the farmers and fishermen?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has a strange notion of taxes. He seems to be scandalized by the fact that taxes mean revenue for the Government. That is what they are by definition. Indeed, there are a number of taxes which bring revenues to the Government. However, we are facing a situation where, in spite of our revenues, we still have a large deficit about which the Hon. Member's Party complains all the time, including today.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And the "Member from Bay Street".

Mr. Lalonde: I would suggest, therefore, that the Hon. Member should talk to his colleagues and get their act together.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How about the "Member from Bay Street"?

Mr. Lalonde: Do those Hon. Members want to have a larger or a smaller deficit? They do not seem to be able to get their acts together at all. I would also like to tell the Hon. Member that he should mention in his question the large amounts of money which the federal Government is transferring to farmers in the form of grants or support for their activities. I have indicated that these amounts are in excess of a billion dollars this year—and that is not bad—from the federal Government.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

INUVIALUIT AGREEMENT—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, if I can get his attention. The Inuvialuit agreement which has been negotiated, and which has been cleared through Cabinet, is now going through the ratification procedure with the Inuvialuit in the Northwest Territories. The Minister, I believe, on the weekend said, and I am paraphrasing, "If you do not accept this, you are not going to get anything". Does the Minister not think, Mr. Speaker, that that is a form of blackmail, forcing the Inuvialuit to accept this agreement, because he said if it is not accepted there would be no renegotiation of the agreement?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember saying—and I see he has a press release from me in his hand—"you are not going to get anything".

Mr. Epp: It is probably someone else.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am prepared to talk to him about various programs of one kind or another. However, if he is referring to the agreement, I would tell him that this is an agreement which the COPE organization wanted, asking me to go to Cabinet to get it approved in terms of the final agreement. This was after working out many problems with respect to the CYI and the Dene Metis, all the overlapping questions, and everything else. We worked it out and got it approved on the terms they were prepared to accept. They have taken it back to get final approval.

Is the Hon. Member suggesting that we should open up an agreement every time there is some difference of opinion? If that were the case we would never get any comprehensive claims settled in the entire Arctic. Of course, it would weaken its position very drastically if the Government indicated it was prepared to be flexible every time we reached a final agreement with the native people on the terms they wanted. If there was no finality to it, it would undermine the whole comprehensive claims process.

Of course, if the Inuit are not prepared to accept the final agreement that their own political organization negotiated, then that is the end of that agreement. I suppose they may want to make representations to me or to the next Government, on starting up some process again, and that can be judged at that time. However, there is one final agreement which has been approved.

Mr. Crosbie: Come on! Speech! Speech!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): They asked that it be approved, and it is out there for approval.

Mr. Crosbie: Order.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Surely the Hon. Member would not be suggesting any other course of conduct.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I have just a short supplementary question. I would like to quote the Minister. He said:

—renegotiation of the claim settlement would not be considered by this Government.

Therefore, when the Minister makes a statement like that, does he not see that that is a form of threat to the Inuvialuit who must now take a look at that agreement and decide whether to ratify it or not? Coach him, Pierre!

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the view of the Opposition would be on this but, when there is a final agreement, it is a final agreement we are negotiating. We cannot have negotiation going on indefinitely. It is they who want this agreement. Their negotiators agreed with it. It is final.

Mr. McDermid: Why do you make threats like that?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It is not a threat, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McDermid: Sure it is.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The problem with the Hon. Member is that he is so lacking in intelligence, he cannot make a distinction—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: You are seeing red, John.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —between reality and a threat.

Would the Minister indicate to the House if that scientific observation meant that he felt that they had some use in the industrial world?

NATIONAL MARKETING BOARDS—APPLICATION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In an earlier answer today the Minister of Agriculture left the impression that for those farmers who produce products under national marketing boards there is a question relative to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms as to whether they are in violation of the Charter. Is that the interpretation which the Minister places on the Menzies exercise?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in our discussions regarding amendments to the Act we were speaking about allowing certain products to be in the Act. Our legal adviser said we could not do that, that it would have to be left wide open so that farmers, producing any product and who wanted to enter into a national scheme, would be able to do so.

PENITENTIARIES

ROLE OF PAROLEE IN RECAPTURE OF ESCAPED SEX MURDERER

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I believe the allegations made in Montreal today have been brought to his attention regarding Strangler Bill Boden, who was arrested the other night in a bar solely and simply because of information given to the police that Boden was there, by an ex-convict. Earlier, that ex-convict had been approached in the bar to determine whether a gun could be obtained for Boden. That particular ex-convict was out on parole. Apparently, he has now been detained and his parole is in jeopardy.

My question to the Solicitor General is: has he investigated the matter? Does he think it fair that a convicted sex killer can treat his art instructor at an expensive restaurant and almost manage to escape, whereas an ex-convict, who believes in attempting to prevent bloodshed, is now in danger because of his actions in bringing information to the attention of the police?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Hon. Member was unable to take the trouble to attend the Justice Committee meeting last night because a lot of the information which he requested was covered at that meeting. I certainly expressed my opposition to Boden being out on an escorted temporary absence, and indicated the steps that would be taken in that regard.

As far as the source of information leading to Boden's apprehension is concerned, according to newspaper articles and the information that I have, it was an anonymous tip. I can assure the Hon. Member that I do not consider it proper to suspend someone's parole solely because they co-operated with the police. If that is his allegation, I agree with him. I have requested a report on it. I would want to know if his parole was suspended, and whether there were valid reasons for doing so, other than the reasons which the Hon. Member has suggested.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. BLAIKIE—SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION OF MR. KEEPER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order relating to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) and your ruling that his supplementary question was out of order. As you, Mr. Speaker, know, it has been quite acceptable in the past for Members to ask supplementary questions of a Minister other than the Minister to whom they asked their first question.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Blaikie: My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that if you intend to change that practice you owe it to the House to give Members some notice. When Members rise to ask a supplementary question—and they have traditionally done so without any interference by the Chair—they should have some expectation of what your ruling will be. Mr. Speaker, if you have changed the rules with regard to Question Period and now regard it differently from what has been the practice in this House, would you kindly enlighten us as to what you have in mind?

Mr. Speaker: In quoting from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) has raised a point of order on which the Chair will rule. Subsequently, other Members will be recognized.

The point raised by the Hon. Member relates to supplementary questions. In Beauchesne's, Citation 371 reads in part:

> The extent to which supplementary questions may be asked is in the discretion of the Speaker.

That has been established for some time. The Chair is concerned with the growing practice in the House of raising questions which are not supplementary and which are directed to another Minister. In some situations it is very difficult for the Chair to make a decision, especially as the Chair must do so on the spot.

However, as a general rule, a supplementary question should be asked of the Minister to whom the original question was put. There are exceptional circumstances where there is a shared responsibility, or where perhaps the Minister indicates that it is not his responsibility but some other Minister's responsibility. There are circumstances in which the Chair will respect that practice. The Chair is attempting in Question Period to discourage the practice of asking different questions of different Ministers.

In this particular situation the Chair will review Hansard carefully. If there are grounds, with respect to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James, for recognizing that the two Ministers had a shared responsibility, then the Chair will review the situation. It is not the intention of the Chair to discourage supplementary questions, but the Chair will discourage supplementary questions which are not supplementary but additional questions.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the opportunity to address this matter briefly. I understand the spirit in which you have addressed your remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Speaker has not yet—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair is prepared to accept some brief interventions at this time, but they must be brief. I will certainly hear the House Leader for the Official Opposition on the matter. But the Chair has indicated the views and the procedures that, in the opinion of the Chair, should be observed in the House.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The point which I would like to make very briefly is that I appreciate very much that it is within your discretion to allow supplementary questions to be put. There is no question about that. I would like to assist you by saying that in making your assessment of whether a matter is an appropriate supplementary question, it should not be based upon whether it is addressed to one Minister and only one Minister but, rather, it should be based on the subject matter. A supplementary question can indeed affect more than one Minister in dealing with one particular topic.

Accordingly, the citation from Beauchesne's to which you referred states that supplementary questions are within the discretion of the Speaker. But this refers only to the extent to which supplementary questions may be asked. The citation referred to by Your Honour indicates that supplementary questions may be addressed to "a" Minister, not "the" Minister, not the Minister to whom the original question was posed but to a Minister.

I fully understand, Mr. Speaker, that it is your responsibility to ensure that the questions are indeed supplemental. I take no argument or issue with that particular point. However, the concern which I have, and which I think Hon. Members of my Party have, is that you were making a ruling that Members may not ask a supplementary question of a Minister other than the one to whom it was first addressed.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is perfectly clear. The general rule is that the supplementary question should go to the same Minister. There are circumstances—

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Dick: You are not a dictator yet.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) will want to think about that a little bit.

The Chair is indicating a general rule. The Chair is making it quite clear that there are circumstances in which there is a shared responsibility between Ministers, or in which a Minister may indicate that he does not have the responsibility and that the question should be directed to another Minister. There are situations in which supplementary questions can be directed to another Minister, but they should be supplementary—as the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has clearly stated—arising out of the question which was asked. That is the key. As a general rule, it does not give the Hon. Member asking the question licence to go hunting and to ask questions of any Minister who happens to be in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Point of order—

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West. There are one or two other Members who would like to speak. The Hon. Member and I do not have much difference of opinion on the subject, if any. The Hon. Member for Simcoe North.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Based upon the year and a half in which I organized Question Period, I would like to suggest that we can only agree with your submission that it has to be by subject matter. However, I urge on you the view that there are often occasions when the subject matter is the same but it comes down to what you just said, a shared responsibility among Members. It is our right and duty to ask questions, and often we have to use that tactic. I urge upon you that that tactic continue to be allowed.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: If there is an additional point of order, the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that I be heard on this question.

Mr. Pinard: Why?

Mr. Keeper: Since the ruling directly affects my behaviour in this House.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has indicated it will review Hansard carefully with regard to the Hon. Member. I suggest the Chair will be quite prepared to listen privately or discuss—

Mr. Keeper: Privately?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has made a ruling with respect to the Hon. Member. The Chair is prepared to review Hansard. As I have indicated, they are close and difficult situations to call. The Chair does not wish to violate the rights or privileges of any Member of the House, but in the interests of everyone there has to be more discipline in terms of the nature and scope of the supplementary questions which have been asked. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Point of Order—Mr. Blaikie

Mr. Keeper: Point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West has been recognized.

Mr. Keeper: A point of privilege.

Mr. Dick: Privilege is first.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I submit that the Chair is perfectly in order to rule Members out of order when they are trying to bootleg a question on a different subject matter. I submit that it is clear that the precedents and practices of this House, and I have been through three Speakers here over 16 consecutive years—

Mr. Blaikie: And you will be through a few more.

Mr. Keeper: You will be through another one, too.

Mr. Benjamin: The established precedent has always been that an Hon. Member may direct supplementary questions to another cabinet Minister on the same subject matter. I submit that it was perfectly clear today that the question submitted by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) was on the same subject matter.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will realize, since he has put in 16 years—and the present occupant of the chair has put in just a little more than that—that he is reflecting on a decision of the Chair, and he cannot do so.

It appears that there is no fundamental difference of opinion. I have tried to indicate the general guidelines I will attempt to observe. I have also said to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James that I will review Hansard and the subject matter. If the Chair has done him an injustice, the Chair will make note of it. But the Hon. Member will at least, I am sure, allow the Chair an opportunity to reflect, as he may himself.

Mr. Keeper: On a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James says, "privilege". Privilege is a very special matter. If he wishes to argue privilege, will he argue his point of privilege?

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I could just as well argue a point of order if you would allow me to be heard. That is the basis of my point of privilege. You have ruled with regard to the admissibility of my supplementary question without even hearing what I have to say. I consider that to be a derogation of my privileges as a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member should realize that he is not establishing a case of privilege. The admission of a supplementary question is within the discretion of the Chair. The Chair made a decision not to allow a supplementary. There is no appeal from that, and it is not a matter of privilege.

The Hon. Member for Athabasca.

MR. SHIELDS—VISITORS BARRED ENTRY TO MEMBERS' GALLERY

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, mine is a different point of order. The Treaty Six Alliance members of the Coalition of First Nations are in Ottawa this week. In fact, they are guests of mine in the Gallery today. They were stopped at the front door and not allowed to proceed to the Gallery area even though each had in his possession a guest pass signed by myself. I am wondering if there has been some change in the rules, or could the Speaker look into this situation for me?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will certainly give an undertaking to the Hon. Member that the situation will be investigated.

Mr. Blaikie: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill on a point of order.

MR. BLAIKIE—PRESS CONFERENCE OF MR. BLAIS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my point of order relates to the fact that, as I understand, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) is at this moment having a press conference concerning the incident which occurred in the Quebec Legislature yesterday. I would like to submit that if the Minister had something to say about this very important issue, particularly something which affects Parliament and its security, he ought to have had the decency and procedural integrity to make that statement in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows he does not have a point of order. We have not yet proceeded to Statements by Ministers, which would be an appropriate time for a Minister to make a statement.

Mr. Blaikie: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member did not establish a point of order. Does he have another matter?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to make a statement in the House in the time allocated for Statements by Ministers when you are down in Room 130-S talking to the press, so let's not kid around.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest the expression "not kidding around" applies two ways. The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have been given some special responsibilities by my Party to hold a particular Minister accountable. That Minister is responsible—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is not making a point of order.

Mr. Dick: A point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

MR. BLAIKIE—SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION OF MR. KEEPER

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if perhaps the Speaker could assist me in one area of the point of order dealing with supplementary questions. I understand that the criterion for a supplementary is that it be on the same subject matter rather than that it be put to the same Minister. Now that that has been established, I was wondering—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is raising a matter that we have discussed at some length today. I would be quite prepared to reply privately or in other circumstances to the Hon. Member, but the matter has been dealt with today.

Mr. Benjamin: No, it has not.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a new point of order?

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member has a point of order, will he please state it?

Mr. Dick: Thank you. If you would give me an opportunity to speak, I will, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: I prefaced my remarks by saying what I understood you to say, and I wanted to make sure I was not in error. I was wondering how, in circumstances where you do not even listen to the question, you would know what the subject matter was?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member should know better.

Mr. Dick: It is true.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting Reports from Standing and Special Committees.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

PRESENTATION OF FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fourth report, Statutory Instruments, No. 23, of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, in both official languages.

Petitions

PETITIONS

MR. ALLMAND—THREAT TO PEACE IN CENTRAL AMERICA—CANADA'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition with respect to Central America signed by thousands of Canadians to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that global peace is threatened by the growing conflict in Central America. Central America is being turned into a war zone by the arming of privileged elites against the pressures of social change. Canada, by taking decisive public action, can reinforce the threatened prospects for peace. Peace in Central America must be founded on the basis of non-intervention and self-determination, and that Canada can and must do more than praise the Contadora peace initiative. Militarism, repression and—

Mr. Speaker: The rules regarding petitions do not permit the reading of a lengthy petition. Would the Hon. Member state the purpose of his petition?

• (1520)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I cleared this beforehand with certain officials and was led to believe that this was proper. However, if you wish, I will get to the conclusion of the petition.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray that the House of Commons will recommend that the Prime Minister state publicly and clearly Canada's unequivocal opposition to the United States military intervention in Central America; press publicly for immediate concrete initiatives to demilitarize Central America, including the end to all foreign military aid, the withdrawal of foreign military forces, and an end to the covert war against Nicaragua; urge the United States to open unconditional negotiations with the opposition in El Salvador; suspend Canadian bilateral aid until Honduras renews its neutrality; establish a Canadian embassy in Managua; and initiate immediate and sizeable humanitarian and bilateral aid.

MR. HALLIDAY—MEASURES TO COMBAT PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and duty to present a petition signed by residents of the town of Tillsonburg and the surrounding area who call for stricter laws governing pornography. This petition is signed by over 4,000 men and women, Mr. Speaker. I would urge the House to bear in mind their concerns.

MR. MITGES—COMPENSATION TO JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition from the Grey presbytery of the United Church of Canada, which represents 8,000 members and 36 congregations of the United Church of Canada within Grey County in Ontario. Its members would like the federal Government to apologize formally and to make appropriate compensation to those Japanese Canadians who suffered during Word War II as a result of being uprooted by the federal Government with a loss of their property, lands and many other possessions.

MR. COOPER—CUTBACKS IN FUNDING FOR HANDICAPPED

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present a petition to the House on behalf of a number of people from the Peace River country who are particularly concerned that funding has been cut back for a program which was providing job opportunities for mentally and physically handicapped people in that area. Their particular concern is that the Minister responsible, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, has become increasingly invisible and partisan in his handing out of funds. They are wondering why they cannot have funds for this simple project.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 384, 409, 410 and 769.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

Question No. 384—Mr. Howie:

What is the estimated cost to (a) Canada (b) the provinces of the adoption of the uniform maximum age of 18 years under Young Offenders Act?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): The federal Government is currently involved in detailed negotiations with the provincial governments concerning federal financial assistance to juvenile justice services administered by the provinces. Estimates of the costs to, (a) Canada, (b) the provinces, of the uniform maximum age provision of the Act will not be available until these negotiations are concluded. The initial evaluation by the federal Government of the cost impact of the legislation indicates that the Act will not result in an untoward increase in over-all criminal justice costs for either Canada or the provinces.

STUDIES RELATING TO INCARCERATION OF CRIMINALLY INSANE

Question No. 409—Mr. Howie:

Did the Solicitor General undertake any studies relating to the incarceration of criminally insane persons and, if so (a) were these studies conducted by outside consultants (b) in what time frame were the studies to be conducted (c) was any amount allocated to the studies and, if so, what amount?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): No. (a) to (c) Not applicable.

Question No. 410—Mr. Howie:

Did the Minister of Justice undertake any studies relating to the incarceration of criminally insane persons and, if so (a) were these studies conducted by outside consultants (b) in what time frame were the studies to be conducted (c) was any amount allocated to the studies and, if so, what amount?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): The Ministry of Justice has undertaken several studies dealing with criminally insane persons. The main effort in this area in the mental disorder project which began in the fall of 1982 as part of the Criminal Law Review. This study involves research on both the legal and social science areas relevant to the mentally disordered offender. Following the publication and distribution of a discussion paper last summer, extensive consultations were conducted with provincial governments, with major national and provincial organizations and associations, and with Lieutenant Governors' Advisory Review Boards. At present, officials within the Department of Justice are formulating recommendations based on the information obtained through research and consultations.

In addition to departmental study, outside consultants have been retained. A complete list follows under the heading mental disorder project. In addition to this extensive study a number of smaller projects relating to the mentally disordered offender have been sponsored by this department. This list, entitled "Discretionary Federal Projects—Mental Disorder", follows as well.

DVA—GRANTS OR LOANS TO ROYAL CANADIAN LEGION

Question No. 769—Mr. Towers:

1. Is the Government contemplating making grants or low-interest rate loans to those branches of the Royal Canadian Legion wishing to build a facility for veterans?

2. Is any financial assistance now available to branches of the Legion and, if so, what assistance?

3. Does the Department of Veterans Affairs draw on the local insight of Legion branches for information on current national programs and, if so, by what means?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. No.

2. The Department of Veterans Affairs provides an annual grant of $9,000 to the Dominion Command Royal Canadian Legion. The purpose of this grant is to assist the Royal Canadian Legion in the administrative costs associated with the operation of the Legion Service Bureau.

3. Yes. Through departmental participation at zone, provincial and national Royal Canadian Legion conventions and through regular contact between Branch Legion Service Bureau officers and departmental field representatives, considerable insight is gained on local concerns regarding national programs. Department of Veterans Affairs Regional and District offices have a continuing responsibility to maintain good liaison with the Royal Canadian Legion and all veterans organizations in their area.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order once again to ask when the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to provide a reply to Question No. 368, which deals with the increase in the defence budget for each fiscal year from 1970-71 to 1979-80.

I would like to point out that that question is now three years out of date because it has been over three years since I asked the question. There is no reason in the world that the Department of National Defence cannot produce the answer to that question. A long line of Parliamentary Secretaries have promised they would do something about it. I hope forever that each new one, as he comes along, may indeed fulfil his promise.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, the representation has been noted.

Mr. Speaker: The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall notices of motions for the production of papers stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INSOLVENCY ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-17, an Act respecting bankruptcy and insolvency, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

She said: Mr. Speaker, the House is now asked to proceed with the second reading of an extremely important piece of legislation and to refer it to committee. As I am sure Hon. Members know, the proposed revamping of our bankruptcy and insolvency legislation has been in the making for quite a number of years, long before I came to the House. In fact, it has been some 18 years, depending upon when one started counting.

Although Bill C-17 is the sixth Bill on bankruptcy presented to Parliament, it is the first time that, as current sponsor of this particular Bill, I have the opportunity to address the House on it. In the previous session of this Parliament, a predecessor Bill, Bill C-12, was well under way. Second reading had taken place in the House, with an extensive explanation of the content of the Bill given by my predecessor, who is now the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet). Good, substantial speeches were made at that time by Hon. Members on both sides of the House.

The Bill was finally referred to the House Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs late in September, 1983. The Finance Committee was quick to start its study of the Bill. On October 25, I was the first witness. Soon thereafter, departmental officials were heard. The committee was then poised to start hearing from some of the numerous associations which had expressed interest in the Bill. Unfortunately, before it could do so, the first session of the present Parliament came to an end and Bill C-12 died on the Order Paper.

I think it would be a shame, Mr. Speaker, if the unbelievable amount of work done to date were to come to nothing. I am very pleased that I was able to re-introduce the Bill as soon as possible in the present session, on January 31. That is the Bill now before us. Unfortunately, it did not move too quickly because there was no agreement at that time from the New Democratic Party to bring it forward. That agreement has now been reached as a result of some very effective work done in committee the other day, and we now have the Bill before us.

I do not intend to speak at length on the content of the Bill because I stand behind everything my predecessor said in the House on May 19, 1981 when he spoke on second reading of Bill C-12. With the co-operation of Hon. Members on the other side, I am anxious for the Bill to go before the Finance Committee for a good public debate to take place there on the many concepts contained in the Bill. I am told that the steering committee is already poised to move in this direction as soon as the Bill clears the House.

To all intents and purposes, the Bill which is before us today is exactly the same as the last Bill, but with some technical amendments which were approved in the session that was held prior to the Bill dying on the Order Paper. You will also notice, Mr. Speaker, that the French text of the current Bill is quite different from that of its predecessor. It expresses in better French what the first text was saying. I am told that the language is now quite precise and indeed quite eloquent and elegant.

I would like to say a word about some provisions which you will not find in Bill C-17 as it now stands. Additional provisions have been drafted which I propose to table when I appear before the committee. They deal with measures which, in my opinion, will improve the lot of some of our citizens who must be better protected in bankruptcies and insolvencies. Hon. Members know that I am talking of wage earners, suppliers and farmers.

An Hon. Member: What about fishermen?

Mrs. Erola: Yes, fishermen are included as well. Fishers, be careful. I know there is not unanimity in or outside of the House to—

An Hon. Member: Fishers is not a word.

Mrs. Erola: Yes, it is a word which exists. It was indeed a biblical term.

• (1530)

I am asking Hon. Members opposite to make it possible for this Bill to go to committee so that there may be an opportunity to disclose publicly the approach that I want to follow. Of course, Members will be free to agree or disagree with my approach on some of the details of the Bill, but this will advance the debate and eventually enable us to put the best insolvency Act possible on the statutes to respond to the needs of our times.

While Bill C-17 is a good Bill, I welcome proposals for improvements. Many of its numerous provisions represent a reasonable compromise between opposed interests. Indeed, every word of the Bill has been debated at great length in many forums. In fact, at the moment while I am speaking a seminar is being held by the Canadian Insolvency Association of Toronto at which the representatives of, I believe, six organizations that represent thousands of people will be expressing their views on this Bill. Of course, they are anxious to appear before the committee.

I agree that not everyone is pleased with each of its measures, but if one believes that the Bill should not be proceeded with at all for that reason, it would be a great disservice to our society. Therefore, I urge both Opposition Parties to support this Bill and let it proceed to committee without further discussion in the House. Let us get on with the new Act dealing with bankruptcy and insolvency because it is long overdue.

Insolvency Act

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has stated that the new insolvency Bill is a good piece of legislation. By and large I agree with her, and therefore, since it was introduced as Bill C-12, our Party has given the utmost co-operation in seeing that the legislation is passed.

Although there are many areas in the provisions of the Bill with which I disagree, I have received the assurance of the Minister that amendments will be heard after experts have been called. I believe that all sides of the House want to see Parliament draft the best possible Bill.

One of the great reservations that I have with respect to this process and the tremendous amount of work that has gone into this Bill is that for at least 15 years assiduous work has been done in drafting the new legislation, which is of great social and economic importance. The first bankruptcy Bill was drafted in 1919. The only significant amendments were made in 1949. At that time, there was absolutely no departure from the philosophy of the Bill in 1919.

Modern commercial, economic and social policies have changed dramatically since 1919 and 1949. There is a profound need for us to deal with modern commerce as it exists on the streets. Having said that, the concern that I wish to express applies not only to the bankruptcy Bill but to many other Bills for which the Minister is responsible. She has heard my criticism and I believe that it is valid.

In the last eight Speeches from the Throne we have heard of the Government's intention to put forward legislation with respect to competition. Indeed, legislation does come forward, but there is not the political will to ensure that it becomes reality by being passed into law. We have heard promises with respect to copyright legislation. We have seen important proposals with respect to copyright, but nothing seems to get done. There were promises with respect to the Patent Act, but we will not see it. I hope that we will see amendments made to the Interest Act before the end of this session.

The point is that we are now in the month of May discussing second reading of a Bill which is of great social and economic consequence. This Party wants to see the matter get into committee as soon as possible. We understand our obligation to allow individuals and interest groups to tell Members of the House the good and bad aspects of the Bill. We cannot deny people the right to appear before committees. In this case I am talking about the Canadian Bar Association, which has certain concerns and I am talking about trustees and the Canadian Insolvency Association which the Minister has mentioned. It will take time to hear these views. As well, we must advertise for them to come to the committee. Although many briefs have already been submitted under Bill C-12, other briefs are to follow.

I am pleased and I applaud the fact that we are proceeding with this Bill, but the reality is that by the time the committee commences its meeting, in two or three weeks it will be June. I hope that I am wrong, but I do not foresee this good legislation being passed.

As I have said, we have done everything to co-operate in this regard and I want to see this Bill passed with refinements and amendments. I hope that the Minister is receptive to certain changes to particular measures in the Bill. I hope that it is made law because of its social importance.

Let me give an illustration of why it is socially and economically important. Commerce and the means of banking have changed very dramatically. Until the mid-1960s we were regulated by the Bank Act. Bankruptcies had a certain significance which they do not have today.

Insolvency means going broke. There are three ways of going broke: by formally being declared bankrupt or being petitioned into bankruptcy; by receivership by which the creditor, through a floating charge debenture, is able to realize upon the security of the debtor; and, finally, by simply closing the doors of a business.

The fact is that until the change in the Bank Act in the mid-1960s, banks could only take certain action. According to Section 88 with respect to security, banks were only entitled to take accounts receivable and inventory. Unless there was a default, they could not get any other security. However, with the advent of the change in the Bank Act and the new commercial instrument which is now called the floating charge debenture, a debtor in a commercial enterprise is tied up lock, stock and barrel. Unfortunately, the rights of debtors and unsecured creditors are not sufficiently protected.

This is a lengthy Bill which consists of over 300 pages. If I were asked what the most important pages were, I would say that in my view the five pages pertaining to receiverships represent the most significant commercial advancement that we have made. The reality is that all the big insolvencies in Canada today are not bankruptcies. Many people are not petitioned into bankruptcies but go into bankruptcy in order to extinguish their own liability.

What takes place today is that when a bank calls a note, it realizes upon its security, but not by way of the bankruptcy but by way of a floating charge debenture, which is the chief means by which commercial lenders realize upon their security.

People who are in a secured lending role have certain obligations. Some of the important and beneficial measures in this Bill concern the provisions of Clause 355 under receiverships, which make it incumbent for a creditor to act honestly, in good faith and to deal with the property of a debtor in a commercially reasonable manner. We all know of situations where that has not happened.

I am not talking about the large firms but, regrettably, there are receivers who have acted to the detriment not only of the debtor but also of the unsecured creditor. Items have been sold as if at a fire sale, which has caused, quite properly, a tremendous amount of bitterness to the debtor because he did not receive what was commercially worthwhile. In other words, he did not get credit for the amount of money that should have been due if the receiver had acted in an honest and commercially reasonable manner.

I applaud this particular provision with respect to receiverships. However, there are certain matters with respect to receiverships that I very strongly oppose. One of them is not with respect to the powers of the court to intercede under the provisions of Section 356.2, which I think are good, but with respect to the emasculating provision in subsection 4 which, as I see it, limits the courts' jurisdiction. I hope the Minister—and I have brought this point forward on a number of occasions, and Mr. Goldstein who appeared before our committee was a very impressive individual—will take a look at the provisions of Section 356.4(a). That is the provision whereby, in order for the court to intercede, the order would have to affect a creditor materially and particularly. That is a very important emasculating feature of some of the good provisions that are in this Act as it affects receivership. I will be saying more about it in committee, but it is one of my prime concerns.

There are certain matters that I find good about the Bill, Mr. Speaker. I want to speak about the Bill in terms of the matters that I think are socially important. I applaud the abolition of Crown priority. The existence of this priority in the present Act has served, in my view, as the worst disincentive to ordinary creditors becoming involved in a bankruptcy. Presently, creditors do not work to maximize the realization on the assets because the fruits of their toil are applied to Crown assets. I think it is a significant advance with respect to this Bill that we see the abolition of Crown priority.

I am very happy to see consumer bankruptcies treated very much differently from commercial bankruptcies. There is a world of difference between them. In consumer bankruptcies there is a social ingredient that is very important. Anyone who has been to Osgoode Hall in Toronto or has gone to Montreal on discharge day and watched the judicial process with respect to consumer bankruptcies knows that it is just a farce. I am glad to see that that is to be stopped. We are still going to protect the creditor. If there is any wrong-doing by the debtor who is looking for a discharge, the creditor will still have a right to intercede. Otherwise, it will be automatic, and that deals with the realities.

I think also that the consumer arrangements are important. What we might find is that the impoverished debtor will retain a certain sense of self-respect. Instead of declaring bankruptcy with the arrangements that can be made, it may very well be that he would pay off a certain portion of the debt and maintain his own respect rather than declare bankruptcy. There is not the social stigma of bankruptcy in 1984 that there was in days gone by.

Probably two of the matters that will cause the most debate when we get the Bill to committee and that have caused the most debate so far is the question of super priority. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that to some of the Members of our caucus to whom I spoke with respect to super priority—and I am talking about the time the insolvency of Maislin occurred and the Bank of Commerce bounced workers' cheques of about $12 million—the question was of great significance. There is no right and there is no wrong when it comes to priorities with respect to who is going to take the assets of an insolvency or a bankruptcy. We have to make a choice. That is the question. How are those assets to be distributed in an equitable and a fair manner? For reasons which I stated in 1981, our Party has supported the whole notion of super priority. I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to other Members in the House that the notion of super priority is not new.

Super priority has been in the Bank Act under what was known as Section 88.5 since I can remember. I now believe it is Section 271. When the banks, prior to 1967, wanted to realize upon the securities, they had to pay the workers. That provision is still in the Bank Act. The whole notion of super priority is not something that really concerns me. But there were certain limitations on what the bank could do, as Hon. Members will recall, with respect to accounts receivable and not really with respect to fixed assets or land.

I must tell the Minister that, as a result of representations made to me and to the committee, there are certain problems about which I am very concerned, namely, super priority as it affects real estate. I think there probably should be a pecking order. This was something suggested by Mr. Goldstein when he testified before our committee with respect to current assets, fixed assets, and real estate. Why it is so important with respect to real estate is that people are entitled in the provinces to rely on a registry office system. They are entitled to take a look in the registry office at the books and to make their judgments based upon what is in public documents. I can foresee circumstances where, if real estate is not exempt, we could get ourselves into some serious trouble. But I am not an expert in this particular matter. I am prepared to listen to experts. I want to hear what the Canadian Bar Association has to say with respect to this. I want to hear what the Insolvency Association of Canada has to say. I am sure the Minister will have an open mind so that we can make this particular area, super priority, a workable feature in this Bill.

There is one other area that gives me concern with respect to super priority, and that is, the stipulated amount of $4,000. We have had a great deal of criticism with respect to that, especially concerning labour intensive industries. Again, I am very anxious to hear what witnesses will have to say. I can say that our Party has an open mind with respect to the quantum amount.

There is one other area that gives me some personal concern. It has to do with the right of suppliers to take their goods within ten days of an insolvency. I understand the rationale for that, but I am not sure one can set an arbitrary date. I know that under the law of the provinces title passes under the Sale of Goods Act at a certain point in time, usually at the time the contract is entered into or on other occasions at the time of the delivery of the goods. However, what I am really concerned about is the intermingling of goods. How can you say to a person, who might have sold his goods nine days prior to the insolvency, that he can have those goods back, but say to another person who sold his goods 15 days before that he cannot do so? I want to hear also what experts have to say concerning whether or not this is commercially workable.

There are so many areas in this long and complex Bill that I would like to speak about, but I will not do so today because I do not think it is necessarily appropriate. What I want to tell the House, the Minister and the country is that there is an urgent need, in my view, to pass new insolvency legislation. The Minister will know from our conduct in the past that we as a Party have done absolutely nothing to obstruct this Bill. As a matter of fact, the converse has taken place. We want to see this Bill passed into legislation. We want it to be a reality. The only thing I ask the Minister is to keep a very open mind on many of the amendments which this Party will put forward so that all of us in this House can make a significant contribution on an important piece of economic and social legislation.

My friend and colleague from Bruce-Grey will be speaking today concerning certain important features involved in the amendments which the Minister will present dealing with farmers and fishermen. I just want to say that I want to give the Minister some notice that there are certain provisions on court formulated arrangements as they appear in Section 120, on which we will be asking for certain changes. We note under Section 120 that if an insolvency exceeds $1 million, the state has an interest in it and therefore the court has certain powers which it would not have in a private insolvency. I think quite frankly—and this may sound ludicrous to some people—that $1 million is far too low. It probably should be closer to $5 million. The truth of the matter is that insolvencies of $1 million right now are commonplace. I applaud what the Government is trying to do. For example, if a fishing village is going down as a result of the insolvency of a fish-packing plant and there is more than $5 million involved, there should be some type of public interest in it.

I will make certain representations with respect to the amount or the quantum being increased. I will also put forward some amendments with respect to what should be the power of the court as it affects matters of insolvency in excess of $1 million, $5 million or whatever figure is set. These matters are important because I think the court needs guidance.

I practised in the courts for 15 years. One of the criticisms of judges about legislators was that we never said what we thought. We have a duty to be precise. We have a duty to know our own minds. I do not see in this particular area of insolvency the requisite guidance which ought to be given to the court. I know some people practise civil law, however, I come from a common law jurisdiction and I admire precision. As a legislator I want to ensure that the courts understand what is intended by Parliament.

In conclusion, our Party will co-operate in every way. I hope we are not deluding ourselves. I hope we make new insolvency legislation a reality. I say to people who want to testify before the committee that they are welcome. There are many areas in which legislators have to be educated. If we are doing something which will hinder commercial practice, I want to know about it. On the other hand, we are giving notice to interest groups that we are serious about this important Bill. With that, I will say no more and reserve my more specific comments for committee.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to make a few remarks on behalf of the New Democratic Party in debate on this very important piece of legislation. I agree with the suggestions of both previous speakers that change is certainly long overdue in this important area of the law. Obviously the present legislation, the Insolvency Act, which I believe was last changed in 1949, is seriously flawed in a number of important aspects.

The predecessor legislation, Bill C-12, was introduced some three and a half or almost four years ago in the House. As the Minister pointed out, there was considerable debate at second reading of that legislation. A number of my colleagues spoke in the House, expressing their concerns about a number of aspects of the predecessor Bill. As well, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs heard a number of witnesses in the last session and a number of recommendations were made for improvements to the legislation. In January of this year, the Minister tabled Bill C-17, which is currently before the House.

It was of considerable disappointment to many of us to note that Bill C-17, unfortunately, did not reflect in any material respect the very significant criticisms which had been made of Bill C-12. There were no significant improvements, for example, in the area of the protection of workers' wages. There were no significant improvements with respect to the whole question of the position of farmers and fishers, as the Minister refers to them, in the event of a bankruptcy.

For those reasons it was obviously important, before agreeing to facilitate speedy passage of this important legislation to committee and effectively giving the Minister a carte blanche, to ensure that the Minister was prepared to bring forward badly-needed amendments to the legislation which she tabled in January of this year in a number of important respects. It was for that reason that there has been some delay in bringing the Bill before the House for second reading. As a result of the representations which have been made by this Party, the Minister has made commitments to improve and strengthen significantly a number of key sections of the legislation.

I do not intend to speak at great length on this Bill, but certainly I want to make a few remarks to flag our areas of particular concern as the Bill makes its way to committee, hopefully in the very near future, where there will be an opportunity to hear witnesses.

Perhaps the single most important weakness in present bankruptcy law is the extent to which working men and women who are victims of a bankruptcy are too often left out in the cold, as in most cases banks and other secured creditors swoop in and seize any available assets. In many instances this means that workers, whether they are organized or unorganized, fail to receive anything but a small percentage of the wages and other benefits owing to them. Recently we saw the example of the Maislin bankruptcy in which workers received something like 30 cents on the dollar. That was just in the actual wage package; it did not include benefits. For every Maislin, of course there are many other bankruptcies throughout the land which are not reported and in which workers lose literally thousands of dollars to which they are entitled. I could give many examples of instances of bankruptcy across the country. Certainly the statistics are a matter of public record.

In 1983, the last full year for which statistics are available, there were over 10,000 business bankruptcies reported in Canada. Over 1,000 or 1,279 of those bankruptcies were in the Province of British Columbia alone. It is not just the absolute figures which are of grave concern to all Hon. Members of the House, but the dramatic increase in the number of bankruptcies in Canada in recent years. We know that the failures of the Government's economic policies, whether it be its high interest rate policy or the tremendously high level of unemployment, have contributed to the current levels of bankruptcy. For example, again in the province of British Columbia, in 1981 there were 501 business bankruptcies and in 1982 that number more than doubled to 1,042. The total number of consumer bankruptcies in calendar year 1983 was over 26,000 or close to 27,000. In many of these cases we are dealing not just with the harsh financial reality but with the personal tragedy involved in bankruptcy situations.

In terms of the existing legislation, the single biggest area of concern has to be the failure of bankruptcy legislation to protect adequately the position of workers in a firm which goes bankrupt. I could make the point no more eloquently than by reading from a letter sent to me by one of my constituents, a young man who graduated from Burnaby Central Senior High School in 1982. I will quote from this letter because it sets out very clearly the problem which we as parliamentarians must address in looking at revisions to bankruptcy legislation. It reads as follows:

> During the summer months I entered the work force in hopes of obtaining sufficient funds to attend Simon Fraser University this spring semester. I was able to receive employment with Truwall Construction (Alberta) Limited of Calgary. Truwall met with some financial difficulties and was forced into receivership. I obviously felt bad for all those involved, but felt that reimbursement of wages to employees would most definitely be top priority. Today after several months of correspondence with the Alberta Employment Standards Branch I was rudely awakened to the fact that it was not me, the employee, whose concerns were met with first, but those of the Royal Bank of Canada.
> I find this to be a gross injustice to all those employees, including myself, who were affected in this manner.
> I ask you, my parliamentary representative, to assist me with this matter and to explain to me why those least able to defend themselves are hardest hit.
> My hopes of paying my own way through university, at least for this year, are futile. My only recourse is to burden my more than willing parents with this.
> Please consider my complaint.

That letter, signed by Brad Gilmour of Burnaby, repeats a complaint of thousands of workers all across Canada in the event of bankruptcy who, in many instances, lose long accumulated pension and other benefits as well as wages which are owing to them.

In response to the very serious concerns of workers, the Minister has recommended a system of super priority. She suggested that wages should be placed at the top of the pecking order and that this will adequately protect the claims of workers in the event of bankruptcy.

I would like to take a few moments to indicate why we in this Party believe that while super priority is clearly a step in the right direction, it falls far short of the kind of protection which should be accorded to workers' wages. In raising these concerns, we are echoing the concerns not just of the Canadian Labour Congress, which has carefully examined this question, but of virtually every group and individual who has studied the question. They have all come to the conclusion that a clearly formulated system of wage insurance makes far more sense and guarantees far greater protection for workers' rights than does the system of super priority.

Before addressing that specific concern and that debate, I would like to note that the definition of wages in the Government's Bill falls far short of what is acceptable to this Party and to workers across this country. It is unacceptable that the Government is restricting the definition of wages in such a way as to exclude severance pay and as well to exclude significant benefits, in particular the unpaid pension contributions in private pension plans.

I have here a letter signed by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) addressed to Mr. Fred Randall, business manager of the International Union of Operating Engineers with headquarters located in Burnaby. It is an astonishing document. I quote from the Minister's letter:

Dear Mr. Randall:

This is further to your letter dated February 21, 1984, requesting that unpaid pension contributions in private pension plans, which are a part of the wage package, be given the same priority as the wages in the traditional sense.

That possibility has been carefully examined by myself, and by officials of my Department in the past few years. The present Bankruptcy Act seems to protect wages on the basis that they are urgently needed to provide the daily necessities of the unpaid employees and their families. That approach ignores the fact that nowadays, more and more employees trade wage dollars for future benefits and I agree that their rights to a decent income in their retirement years should not be jeopardized.

However, with the great expansion of private pension plans in recent years, I believe it would be imposing a heavy burden on other secured and unsecured creditors. In order to achieve a proper balance between the rights of wage earners and those of other creditors, and to preserve the lines of credit of business enterprises, especially the labour-intensive ones, it was found necessary to exclude, for the time being at least, those benefits from the definition of wages in the proposed insolvency legislation (Bill C-17).

That is an incredible document. On the one hand the Minister acknowledges that more and more workers are trading wage increases for improvements in benefits. In the next breath she suggests that she wants to ensure that the banks are properly looked after. So much for the concerns of the working people, so much for the full and adequate protection for workers' wages. I can assure the Minister that we will be proposing amendments in committee to strengthen and broaden the definition of wages to include these benefits of severance pay and the unpaid portion of private pension plans, all of which have been earned by workers and which should be a first claims in the event of bankruptcy.

I referred earlier to the question of the debate between those who are advocates of super priority and those who are advocates of a system of wage insurance. I know that the Minister and the Official Opposition, the Progressive Conservative Party, have taken a position in support of the super priority scheme. I would note that the super priority concept has been rejected by virtually every independent study which has been conducted, including a study by the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce which unanimously recommended that the proposal for super priority be rejected in favour of a carefully drafted system of wage insurance. As well, a special committee was established by the Minister's predecessor to look into the whole question of super priorities versus wage insurance. That was a very respected committee, the representatives of which included a chairman who was a former Superintendent of Bankruptcies and Dean of Law at the University of Ottawa, Mr. Ron Lang. He was a member of the staff of the Canadian Labour Congress. It also included Mr. George Hitchman, the Deputy Chairman of the Bank of Nova Scotia, and Raymond Dufour, Vice-President of a major bankruptcy firm. This is a broadly representative committee. Their unanimous conclusion was a clear and unequivocal rejection of the super priority concept. They strongly recommended the establishment of a wage earner's insurance scheme which would be self-sustaining and which would be maintained by minimal monthly contributions from all employers in Canada with more than six employees. It would in fact be a guarantee that in the event of bankruptcy, workers' wages would indeed be paid.

There are two or three fundamental objectives in ensuring that workers' wages are paid in the event of a bankruptcy. They include certainty of payment, promptness of payment to the wage earner, ease and simplicity of administration, and the maintenance of the ability of a borrower to obtain financing for his business operation. I suggest that on each of these counts the super priority concept falls far short.

With respect to the question of certainty of payment to the wage earner, there is no certainty whatsoever that wages owing to a bankrupt will be paid under a super priority concept. In a number of instances, there will be insufficient assets even if the workers' wages take top priority. In a number of instances, as well, there is no doubt that sophisticated lenders might stipulate that their loans will be made to an associated holding company which owns all of the assets of value, which would once again leave workers out in the cold. I am also very concerned that in response to representations from the bank and possibly from the Conservative Party, the Minister might water down the existing proposals for super priority to exclude all assets, specifically real estate.

We could certainly examine the question of the pecking order, but I would suggest that any attempt to water down even the minimal provisions with respect to super priority would be very rigorously resisted by this Party.

The second concern with respect to a super priority scheme is that there is no guarantee whatsoever that payment to the wage earner would be made promptly. In many instances it would mean protracted legal hassles and disputes before such payments were in fact made. When dealing with workers who have to pay bills on an ongoing, day-to-day, week to week basis, obviously promptness of payment is essential.

Another difficulty is the problem with the administration of this proposal, for example, the allocation of the burden of super priority among various secured creditors. The courts would no doubt be clogged with bitter disputes over the relative burden to be shared by the creditors. Also, while those arguments are taking place, workers once again receive nothing whatsoever.

The final and major concern with respect to the super priority concept is that it may very well have the opposite impact from that which is suggested by the Minister, that is, to reduce the credit which is available in labour-intensive industries and to motivate credit-granting institutions, banks in particular, to pull the plug that much earlier on a firm. That would drive the firm into bankruptcy and throw the workers out of work before they might otherwise lose their jobs.

The clear and unequivocal conclusion of the Landry Committee to which I previously referred—and I might say, it is rare indeed when a committee made up of representatives of the CLC and the banking community are able to agree strongly on a proposal—was that a wage insurance scheme would be the most appropriate way to proceed. That does not mean that we would not be prepared to accept some kind of super priority scheme as an interim measure; but certainly the establishment of a wage insurance scheme such as those which have been successful in a number of other countries—France, West Germany and the United Kingdom—is one of the major amendments which we will be proposing to this important legislation.

I would like to deal very briefly with a couple of other important concerns that we have with the legislation. I will not take the full time allotted to me because I know that my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), would like to have some time to deal with the serious concerns that our Party has with respect to the silence of this legislation on the important question of bankruptcies which are facing farmers and fishermen in Canada. There are record levels of bankruptcies facing the farming community, fishermen and women across the country. Both of my hon. colleagues from Humboldt-Lake Centre and from Prince Albert have been outspoken and have worked very hard to urge the Government to take action on this. The Government should have moved a long time ago with respect to this important question.

Of course, what we are proposing, in essence, is that there be some sort of orderly, formal process whereby heavily indebted producers and farmers can obtain some relief from the threat of losing their farms and their livelihoods as a result of their inability to meet their obligations. This process should include the ability of the courts to step in if the producer is not satisfied that his or her position is being adequately addressed on a purely voluntary creditor basis. The Private Members' Bill which has been studied by the Finance Committee for some time certainly went a long way in that direction. I know that my colleagues will be dealing at greater length with these serious concerns. There must be speedy and effective action on this important question regarding the protection of farmers and fishermen in the event of bankruptcy.

One other major area of concern which has arisen since the tabling of Bill C-12 in this House, and indeed since the tabling of the follow-up Bill, Bill C-17, is the possibility that bankruptcy can be used as a mechanism by the business community to scuttle effectively collective agreements which are in effect. I would like to take a moment or two to explain why we believe there must be amendments to Bill C-17 to ensure that this does not become a reality in Canada.

In the United States, a recent Supreme Court decision has been described by representatives of the building trades in particular, as well as other labour representatives, as licence to use bankruptcy laws to destroy collective bargaining agreements. Effectively, what the United States Supreme Court held was that a bankruptcy court could free a company from its union contracts without requiring any proof whatsoever that the contracts threatened the survival of the company. All the company had to do was to show that the contracts constituted a financial burden. I would note, for example, Continental Airlines in the United States which, on the advent of deregulation, cancelled its union contracts after filing bankruptcy petitions. The pilots went on strike. Continental now has strike-breakers flying planes at something like 55 per cent of the original contract wage. There have already been steps taken in the United States Congress to reverse the effect of this very damaging Supreme Court decision.

I intend to propose amendments in committee to this piece of legislation which will make it very clear that bankruptcy laws must not be used as a mechanism to break collective agreements in Canada. We want to ensure that the decision of the United States Supreme Court is not reflected in Canadian legislation. The provisions of Bill C-17, particularly those dealing with commercial arrangements, still leave the possibility open that bankruptcy might be used effectively as a mechanism to avoid collective agreements. That is fundamentally unacceptable to Members of the New Democratic Party.

One of the major areas of concern in the small business community in Canada is the question of receiverships. Certainly there is an improvement in this Bill with respect to the handling of receiverships and the obligation of receivers. But there are only six clauses in the Bill concerning the obligations of receivers. I would suggest that the Bill does not go far enough to ensure the full accountability of receivers for the handling of firms under their custodianship. Again, we will be proposing amendments in committee to strengthen the protection of the assets of a company which has been brought under receivership. For every bankruptcy in Canada, statistics show that there are at least two receiverships.

The biggest concern that small businesses have in the area of receivership is the tendency of receivers, acting on behalf of one secured creditor, to undervalue assets when disposing of them. As long as they get their money out of the transaction, they do not really care too much—if its the Royal Bank or another secured creditor—about other unsecured creditors down the line, many of whom are small businesses struggling to survive in the face of this Government's disastrous economic policies.

Another major concern is the difficulty of stopping people from declaring bankruptcy one day and then opening up the next day across the street another company with another name. These are areas of concern that we will be addressing when the Bill goes to committee. We are prepared to facilitate quick passage of this Bill in committee.

As I have indicated, my colleagues from the farming community have some concerns which they wish to bring to the attention of the Minister and the House at this point. However, we are prepared to put in the necessary time in committee to propose very important amendments in a number of key areas. I have highlighted some of those areas today—amendments with respect to the protection of workers' wages; the expansion of the definition of wages; and provision for a wage insurance scheme. There should be amendments to ensure that the bankruptcy law will not be used as a means of smashing collective agreements, amendments to strengthen the protection of unsecured creditors, small businesses, in the event of receiverships, and, of course, amendments in a number of other areas which will no doubt flow from the representations which will be made by witnesses appearing before the committee.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to hearing from witnesses on this Bill in the very near future, witnesses from labour, from the farming community, and representatives of the credit granting institutions. I suggest that the time for change is indeed long overdue. However, Mr. Speaker, we must ensure that in making changes in this important area of the law, we fully and properly protect the wages of the people who have contributed to the profits of the company in question. As I say, that is our fundamental objective in examining this legislation from the perspective of those who are left out in the cold. As well, we want to ensure the protection of farmers and fishermen in the event of bankruptcy. I look forward to elaborating on our concerns, Mr. Speaker, when this Bill reaches committee. Hopefully, by the time this House rises for the summer recess, if the Minister has an open mind after hearing witnesses and is prepared to listen to our representations, particularly in the areas I have outlined today, I am confident that we will be able to emerge from this session with bankruptcy legislation which can be supported by all Hon. Members of this House.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I rise for a few moments to speak about Bill C-17. A bankruptcy or insolvency Bill is a Bill which deals with trying to divide up among the various competing interests a pie which is not large enough to cover all of the claims made against that pie. Those claims include the claims of wage earners, those who have been the suppliers to the corporation or business involved, landlords, mortgagees and indeed they include all of the various claims which in any way affect a business or indeed an individual.

It is about time that this House dealt with bankruptcy and insolvency legislation because enormous changes have taken place over many years and the present statute law is not satisfactory to anyone. I would note that predecessors to this Bill have been before this Parliament and were never passed, indeed often, and were never brought forward, for some reason, since 1977. It is absolutely a disgrace that this legislation was not brought forward sooner. It is with that in mind that I hope we have the co-operation of all Parties in the House to expedite this Bill and get it before committee today so we can start hearings as early as tomorrow morning in order to make sure that we get at the details of this legislation quickly.

The legislation before us, Sir, is a good first draft, but that is all it is. It is only a good first draft. The Minister has already circulated amendments half an inch thick. There is another half an inch thick pile of amendments still in the circulation stage in the Department of Justice and here and there, which have to be brought forward. There are a number of concepts with which we are not all agreed, but we are agreed on one thing; that we must have new insolvency legislation in this country and we must have it immediately. Before this House rises on June 30, this legislation must be put through committee, it must be refined, and there will be compromises which will be required. That is the way it is, but we need the legislation.

My friend from the New Democratic Party has indicated that efforts must be made to change the laws with respect to farms and with respect to the fishing industry. Yes, there must be. There must be a way that the result of a seizure, bankruptcy or insolvency does not wind up putting a farm or fishery operation completely out of business. There must be a way that debts can be postponed, reorganized and so on. It was with that in mind that this House directed a Bill to go to the Finance Committee for study, and it was with that in mind that the Minister has suggested that such provisions be in this Bill. Exactly how those provisions will work will again have to be a matter for this committee to work out in detail.

The Minister has suggested that in a whole series of statutes governments can claim a first lien on the assets in a bankruptcy. The Minister has indicated that in her view the government lien should no longer be a first priority, that the Government, when it has a claim for taxes, should rank as ordinary creditors. There is no reason why the Crown should somehow come in and say it is entitled to its sales tax before the company and before the wage earner who supplied the work and effort to make the sale possible gets paid. Surely, the Crown must be an ordinary creditor. The amendments which are contemplated which address that situation are important amendments. Those Crown priority changes should apply, and must apply, to the priority given by provincial legislatures to the claims for provincial taxes and indeed for municipal tax levies. I am thinking, Sir, of business taxes.

Bill C-17 has a great number of concepts whereby businessmen will be able to organize with the bankruptcy court to rearrange their debts. Those types of arrangements, certified by the court, are important. Yes, it may affect the rights of those who have collective agreements. Yes, it may affect the rights of those who have sold goods. And, yes it may affect the rights of those who have mortgages. However, Sir, surely, in the interests of commercial activity and in the interests of employment and of making our country go, it is important that arrangements be made to satisfy creditor claims in such a fashion as to keep businesses going and people employed.

One of the problems which this Bill deals with are receiverships. In the present Bankruptcy Act there is no mention whatsoever of receiverships. However, today, most insolvencies are the result of a receivership started by a bank, a trust company or a commercial lender who has a floating charge debenture against the assets of a company. Floating charge debentures did not exist when the present Bankruptcy Act was put through. At least, no one used them, if they did exist. Today, floating charge debentures are the way many secured creditors try to protect themselves. Indeed, shareholders in businesses often, in making further advances to their own businesses, secure their own advances by floating charge debentures. Thus, under the current law, they put themselves in priority, even in priority to their own employees.

That brings up the real question, Sir, which as been haunting this Bill for the past year and a half or two years, and that is, the question of super priority. The question is, how do we handle the valid claims by those who work for a business when the business, all of a sudden, without their knowledge, without their even knowing what is happening, is put into receivership? A man goes to his factory and finds the door is locked and there is a sign on the door saying, "In receivership. Call so and so", and he has not been paid. He has worked for two weeks, or he is a truck driver and he even has personal mileage expense which he has paid out. He is entitled to that money and he has not been paid. Somewhere along the line those people who work with their hands, those people who work in business, have to be covered.

The Landry Committee suggested that we go through another fund. Somehow there should be another employment deduction like that of the Canada Pension or unemployment insurance; that business should have another deduction fund. I was told the other evening that it might be managed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Well, that is an efficient commission to manage things if there ever was one!

Sir, businesses in this country have too many payroll deduction burdens. That is what is wrong with the whole economy. That is why we cannot get people back to work. Businessmen are asked to make a contribution to this fund, that fund and the next fund. The payroll burdens in this country are far too high. They militate against jobs and, heaven knows, there are 1.5 million Canadians out of work, a great number of whom would not be out of work if we did not have the horrendous payroll burdens demanded by the laws of this Parliament. To add another one would further militate against jobs. Anyone who suggests another payroll burden is saying they do not want jobs for people, they want more burdens on the small businessman, the factory owner and the office employer. A suggestion of this nature could only be made by someone with their head in the clouds. One can only wonder what kind of clouds. Therefore we cannot and will not support a system which adds another payroll burden on the backs of employers and employees and militates against jobs.

How are you going to handle it, Mr. Speaker? The only way we can see is to make the claim of those who work a priority up to a certain amount, we suggest $4,000, against the assets of the bankruptcy. What is wrong with that? Surely when a company goes bankrupt there must be something left. Surely that something can pay the wages of employees. If there is nothing left, then there is nothing for employees either; but that is the nature of bankruptcy. If the company is so bankrupt that there is nothing left of realizable value, then the employee, too, goes without. But after all, the employee at that stage of the game should know that the situation is with the company for whom he works. Sure, he can be hurt, he can be out money. But the concept of super priority would have made sure that Maislin truck drivers would not have had to wait and take part payment of their wages. They would have been paid in full, and early. The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and other secured creditors could not have gone ahead and sold the trucking licences and other assets of that corporation without paying the employees. They would have paid them in a hurry because they would not have been able to operate their receivership without doing so. So much for delay.

If you want to see a delay, Mr. Speaker, look at how the Unemployment Insurance Commission handles people who are sick, have a claim in for 15 weeks and how they get diddled around. If you want to see delay, look at how a person who may have a back injury or something and is making a claim for unemployment insurance is told he is not even sick. They talk about a fund run by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Look at the delays and how ordinary workmen are pushed around, shoved around and messed around with by bureaucrats in the UIC.

Sir, the private economy can get things done pretty quickly.

Mr. Blaikie: Ever been to a bank lately?

Mr. Blenkarn: Secured creditors in a receivership move as quickly as they can because they know dollars not converted to pay off bills are themselves eaten away by interest costs. Therefore they move as quickly as possible. That is one of the concerns, that receivers move too quickly in selling assets to pay off claims. I can say to you, Sir, that they will pay off the claims outstanding for workmen quickly, efficiently and effectively. That is why we say the super priority route is the way to go.

There has been some concern as to what the super priority would apply to. Clearly we would have difficulty in supporting super priority against real estate and specific charges against specific assets. The concept of super priority refers to the floating charge which trust and insurance companies, the secured creditors, generally take. The charge is against the accounts receivable, stock in trade and work in progress. The small bits and pieces of tools and so on not covered by specific charges, the stuff that makes the business go, are enough. There was enough in the Maislin case. There could not be specific financial charges against the licences. How can you do that? Well, there was enough there to pay the wage earners off in full. They got a settlement but they should have been paid in full.

Maislin is the big case but it happens in all sorts of other cases. You have real estate salesmen who have put deals together and all of a sudden the bank pulls the plug on the whole operation. The bank takes the money because they say, after all, the accounts receivable are ours, they are pledged to secure a loan. The salesmen who put the deal together to make that money in the first place do not get anything and that has to stop. A travelling salesman out on the road is entitled to a claim. That is why, to some extent, we cannot cut back on the amount of $4,000 that easily. Some of the evidence we are going to hear in committee will have to deal with the quantum. We cannot leave people with an intended priority forever; there must be some cap.

We are going to have to hear evidence with respect to consumer bankruptcies because they are covered under this Act for amounts up to $20,000 on goods purchased. There has been some concern about that. We are going to have to hear evidence on how we get at situations where people have obviously organized their affairs to defraud, in a way, their creditors by going bankrupt. These are issues which have to be brought before us. We need a number of committee hearings; we have a lot of work to do. I commend the House adopt this Bill; let's get at it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): At this stage in our debate, there is a ten-minute period provided for questions and comments. Are there such questions? Then, resuming debate.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to follow my colleague who has just completed what I would have to say was a very well informed and enthusiastic identification of the Bill and its background, as was indeed the representation made by the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) who started the debate for our Party.

There are only four or five points I would like to make and I would like to focus most particularly on the agricultural scene. The first issue, as has been identified by others who have spoken, is that of urgency. I guess I will be excused if my enthusiasm or optimism for the successful completion of this Bill is somewhat constrained. Not for seeing this Bill into committee, Mr. Speaker, which I think can happen very quickly, but in actually seeing a successful conclusion to this matter before the end of this Parliament.

The Minister indicated in her speech that there have been about 18 years of preparation for this Bill. I am not sure if that is exactly correct, but that is the figure she used. All through that time it has been very clear, particularly in the past few years, that there has been a growing need for legislation which is sensitive to the problems which people in Canada are facing today. There is a real need for legislation which is going to respond to identified needs in many specific areas. We can all work very hard toward the goal of seeing it completed and introduced as full legislation before the House adjourns in June. Given the performance and history of both the Bill and the current Government and its activities, I think we must view that with some skepticism.

The economic background which we have in Canada right now makes the urgency of this Bill even more pronounced. I would like to focus on agriculture and establish how agriculture is situated today. In about 1979-80 it became very clear, particularly in some areas of the country, that agriculture was experiencing a very significant cost-price freeze. That could be said to be true particularly of the red meat sector. However, as time has passed it has become clear that that had also been occurring in other sectors of agriculture. In fact, we were, and still are getting a very consistent message across the country today.

At that time Bill C-653 was introducted by a Private Member on the Government benches. That Bill was considered for a long period of time, until it became very clear that the Government itself did not feel that was the method it would like to use to respond to the problem of farm bankruptcies.

We had suggestions for an amendment to what was then Bill C-12, now Bill C-17. I will read that particular amendment into the record in a moment. That amendment was a successful consequence of many months of representations from all sectors of agriculture during the consideration of Bill C-653. It identified many problems in terms of lending institutions and producers as reflected upon by farm organizations and interest groups across the country.

The two other points in this Bill which I think are very important to agriculture have to do with the ten-day extension of time which was mentioned by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cambridge. Another important point is the different legislative control of receiver actions.

For the record I would like to relate a little of the economic background of the farm situation as it has changed over the past few years. Farm input costs escalated by 115 per cent between 1976 and 1982. Net farm income as a portion of the gross farm income actually decreased by 27.4 per cent from 1965 to 1982. Bankruptcies are really only the tip of the problem. A better reflection may be the statistics of the Farm Credit Corporation in terms of loans and arrears. Of all the money that the Farm Credit Corporation has lent to agriculture across Canada, 13.6 per cent is in arrears. Of those arrears, 45 per cent are on loans made in the last five years.

The first farmers to fail were those who were in the red meat industry and those who had just started a farming operation, had made management errors or did not have the capacity properly to manage a farm operation. At this point, however, Mr. Speaker, it is very clear that bankruptcies do not occur among producers of only one commodity or only with young farmers or farmers who have just begun in the farming industry. Bankruptcies occur right across the board. Farmers who have been farming for generations and have not bought any expensive equipment or changed their farming practices over the past few years are getting into significant trouble now. As we see the future unfolding now, it is indeed a very bleak future for them as well as for the community as a whole.

There have been a lot of changes, Mr. Speaker, in the last few years in terms of world markets, world commodity prices and protective mechanisms in the European Economic Community, Japan and even in the United States. With these measures and the consequent difficulties our producers have in gaining access to world markets, farm commodity prices have remained at low levels. Farmers have had low returns while they have had all these other pressures, including the interest rate factor, coming at them from the other end in terms of input costs.

One of the important factors to consider in the situation of the farm community today, Mr. Speaker, is that of land equity. In many areas the equity of farm land has decreased by as much as 50 per cent. For many farmers, the equity they had in their land provided the basis for additional borrowing to overcome the decrease in net return because of low commodity prices on the one hand and the high input costs on the other hand. The decrease in value of their equity has resulted in their inability to refinance in many cases. It has also put many other farmers in danger who would otherwise perhaps not have been faced with any serious economic pressure. That factor is a variable which no one has much control over. It depends upon interest rates, farm commodity prices and a whole range of factors which in themselves will reflect on farm land prices.

Twenty-five per cent of our farmers produce approximately 75 per cent of our farm produce. These active, enthusiastic producers are really the entrepreneurs of the farm community. They have been producing large amounts of grain and all sorts of farm produce. It is this upper crust which is being most seriously affected. They have had the most economic activity and have probably been contributing in the most major way to our farm production.

The net consequences of all those factors is that in 1979 there were 125 farm bankruptcies across the country and in 1983 there were 488. In the first quarter of 1984 there was another 42 per cent increase. From 1979 until the end of 1983 there was a 350 per cent increase in the number of farm bankruptcies. In the first quarter of 1983, as compared to the first quarter of 1984, there was an additional 42 per cent increase. Those figures clearly indicate that we have a serious problem which should not be addressed with just bankruptcy legislation. We should be working harder on it at the other end. However, it indeed reflects a need for bankruptcy legislation which is sensitive to the needs of agriculture and to the plight experienced by many fishers.

The ten-day period of extension is very significant to farmers who, as an example, take their produce to auction barns for sale. Lending organizations or institutions which might force a secondary agricultural operation, such as a cattle auction barn, into bankruptcy would not be able to recover any profits which were not legitimately theirs. In some instances farmers have taken their cattle to the auction barn and perhaps even after their cattle have been sold they have been forced into receivership or have faced bankruptcy. Those primary producers have experienced very serious losses, sometimes up to hundreds of thousands of dollars, through no fault of their own.

In some cases the institutions could be criticized while in other cases the producers may deserve the blame. However, the fact is that a ten-day extension, if that is what it is, should satisfy situations in many cases when the primary producer will have an opportunity to look after his own best interests. In that period he may be able to recover those moneys which are owed him and not be left exposed and vulnerable.

There were changes to the Bank Act a couple of years ago which would have, at first blush, been seen to give some protection. It is clear that lending institutions have been able to get around that section of the Bank Act through other mechanisms. I suggest that this type of proposal will be valuable to those involved in agriculture.

The second point that we raised concerns receivers. While it would be unfair to suggest that all receivers have acted unreasonably, it would be equally naive to suggest that there was not a serious problem with respect to receivers. It is a difficult situation and, in many cases, an unhappy one particularly for those who are directly affected.

There is much difficulty in justifying the consequences of the action of receivers. These adverse consequences are reflected in certain cases involving small businesses and there are easily identifiable consequences that have occurred in agriculture. For instance, a sale of farm equipment in a receivership situation may occur at precisely the wrong moment in the yearly cycle to get a reasonable return on the investment that has been made by a farmer. If one tries to sell 20 tractors in November, in most parts of the country one can anticipate a minimal recovery compared to the real value of that equipment. This has been the experience of many farmers who are in a bankruptcy situation. There should be a rational and legal requirement for the receiver to justify his actions to ensure that there is at least a commercial consideration given to the value of the goods for which he is responsible when he is called in.

Ultimately, it is not only those who are directly affected who seriously suffer but also the lending institutions that have failed to recover a significant portion of the money owed to them as a result of the actions of the receiver. The receivers themselves seem to be adequately protected as long as they recover enough to cover their own costs. I suggest that the situation as it exists today is very negative. I believe a specific effort to make receivers act in a commercially responsible way will help to improve that situation.

Let me deal with the basic issue concerning farm bankruptcies. I would like to discuss a draft amendment that is presently being considered which deals with Clause 120 of the current Bill. That clause allows the creation of a court formulated arrangement in circumstances where there is seen to be some social need or effect if a bankruptcy should occur. Presently the Bill limits this to those business operations which have assets in excess of $1 million. My colleague from Cambridge pointed out that that figure is perhaps not representative of the value that should be applied today. While I do not want to go into detail in that respect, I would like to talk about the effect that this amendment might have if it were included in the Bill in its final form.

The effect of the amendment would be to add farmers and fishers, no matter what their debt level, to those businesses with assets of over $1 million. It also takes one further significant step which I suggest represents the sum total of approximately seven months of ongoing meetings that were held prior to the introduction of this amendment and consideration of this Bill. Essentially, it provides for a court-appointed group that would reflect the interests of the debtor and the lender as well as a third party to act as an adjudicator. It would allow this group to consider the bankruptcy situation of a debtor prior to his going before a bankruptcy court judge who would have the legal authority to impose an arrangement. I believe such a procedure would avoid many of the difficulties that might occur if a farm bankruptcy situation was placed before a judge who may have no experience in farming or fishing but who would be expected to treat a farmer or fisher in a fair and reasonable manner.

In closing, I suggest that this proposal is necessary and valuable as an option to those in agriculture and fishing who are experiencing the most severe distress. While it will not stop all bankruptcies since there will still be farmers and fishers who face a real bankruptcy situation, it will provide an additional option for the consideration of those who are put into an untenable economic position, through no fault of their own.

I believe this amendment deserves considerable support. There may be modifications which would allow it to be more effective. We look forward to being able to consider it with the expert witnesses who appear before the committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the next Hon. Member, I possibly should have intervened earlier in the course of the Hon. Member's speech, but let it be known that the Chair should remind Hon. Members that second reading stage is not the time to deal with specific amendments as such, whether they are real or proposed. Second reading stage is reserved for the discussion of the principle of the Bill. Specific amendments should be dealt with properly at the committee stage. I say this for the record.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I respect your remarks fully. In fact, without reading the direct words, I was trying to deal with the principles that were involved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair appreciates the Hon. Member's comments.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. Does his Party consider that the idea of a board, the vehicle suggested in Clause 653, is the proper type of vehicle that could be of some value to farmers who are facing bankruptcy? Is that the kind of thing that should be in this Bill?

• (1700)

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, absolutely. I am sorry if I did it in so vague a way, but that was exactly the point I was trying to make and it was a potential defect in Bill C-653 as it was originally presented.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there further questions or comments? The House will now proceed to debate.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, we understand there has been a House agreement to deal with some haste, with Bill C-17, the Bill before us now, which deals with bankruptcy and insolvency. We agree it should be completed today. There are a few words I want to say concerning the background of this Bill and its application to farmers specifically.

This Bill before the House is a redrafting and reintroduction of Bill C-12 that was introduced just over four years ago in April, 1980. It was not examined very much at committee stage and it was hung up in the House. Because of the delay and because of the increasing number of bankruptcies that farmers faced, there was some pressure to bring forward special measures to deal with farm bankruptcies. As a result, Private Member's Bill C-653 was introduced into this House about a year and a quarter ago. There was unanimous agreement to deal with it in committee. It was transferred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture and a subcommittee was subsequently set up to deal with it.

Some of the incidents which led up to the House agreement at that stage included year upon year increases in bankruptcies. From 1980 to 1981 bankruptcies increased 50 per cent to 80 per cent in each of the provinces. The number of bankruptcies continued to increase at an even more rapid rate the following year and the numbers continue to accelerate. At present we are looking so far, in 1984, at increases over the previous year as follows: in the Province of Manitoba, 75 per cent; in the Province of Saskatchewan, 100 per cent; in Alberta, 165 per cent; in British Columbia, 159 per cent. You can see the increases in bankruptcies continuing right across the nation and the need for specific bankruptcy legislation that can be of assistance to farmers is vital.

It was an action by the Ontario arm of the Farm Survival Association which helped trigger the response in the House of Commons when we gave all-Party agreement to discuss Bill C-653. Allan Wilford, President of that organization, was thrown into jail as a result of an action by the Farm Survival Association at a sheriff's sale of one of the members of the Association. There was an attempt to stop the sale to make it possible for the bankrupt farmer to continue to negotiate an accommodation with his bank. Subsequently some of the leaders of that group ended up in jail. What they asked for and what Bill C-653 was asking for was a method of allowing the debtor to be represented and have his side of the case heard.

At the moment, as you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the creditor, the banker in most cases, can move in and seize property. Because of the amount of the assets and the financial situation a farmer might be in, it is very difficult for him to hire adequate legal protection. In fact, it is very difficult to get a fair hearing in this kind of situation. Bill C-653 referred to an old law emanating from the 1930s which had provided some protection to farmers in particular. It empowered them to set up tribunals, which meant that one party would represent the bank and another party would represent the farmer. They would agree on a third party to be the chairman and the case would be dealt with in a reasonable manner. They then decided whether or not to convince the bank to consolidate the debt. The tribunal even had the power in some cases to reduce the debt so that it was possible to keep the individual on his farm.

I understand Bill C-17 does have some recognition of the impact that a bankruptcy will have on the community, as did Bill C-12. It only recognizes that impact on those cases where the bankruptcy involves more than $1 million in assets. There has been some mention of that in the House today. It seems to us and to me, after having gone through the process of hearing witnesses in the subcommittee on agriculture which looked into this problem, that that is really not adequate. When you are dealing with a farming community, the economic base of that community is not all that large. Even one family makes quite a difference to the viability of a community. From the testimony given by witnesses we heard, it was my feeling and I think the feeling of many other people that the powers of the lending institutions, the banks, are being abused. The sheriff is called in, property is seized and assets are taken away. These things are being done under circumstances which one would think should not be allowed in a democratic country like Canada.

One of the first people who appeared before us was from eastern Canada. He had established some 750 acres of woodlot and he had a blueberry business. He was selling maple syrup, hardwood, and harvesting blueberries. He had a relatively small loan at the bank considering the amount of acreage he held. He had run into some difficulty getting equipment in place for the maple syrup part of the operation. He admits he was about eight or nine months behind the schedule he had set for himself at the bank. He was in the process of negotiating to continue the loans through a lawyer, accountants and the bank, only to find when he arrived home at noon that day, the day when the negotiations had been taking place, that the sheriff and five or six large trucks were in the yard loading equipment. They had taken the locks off the buildings and were loading a lot of the equipment which had not even been assembled. In the process of cleaning up all of the equipment, they had taken not only the farmer's equipment and any implements that were lying around, but also about $10,000 worth of his neighbour's equipment that happened to be sitting in the yard. There was no accounting of the equipment taken. There was no inventory of what was seized. There was no accounting after the equipment was sold as to what was available, where the equipment had gone, what the prices were, and how it had been sold.

By his own estimate and by the bank's estimate, the equipment taken was worth somewhere in the neighbourhood of $50,000. By the time the process had been completed, there was approximately $22,300 gross from the sale of the equipment as a result of the method chosen by the receiver, of which $9,100 was considered to be selling costs. In addition to that $9,100, the farmer had to spend in the neighbourhood of $600 in legal fees, time and transportation charges to recover the $10,000 worth of assets which truly belonged to his neighbour.

All this was done under a current section of the Bank Act, Section 128, after the bank had changed the loan. It had begun as a fixed-interest rate loan and was changed at the bank's initiative, without the knowledge of the borrower, to a floating-rate loan which cost in the neighbourhood of $30,000 extra in interest, according to the witness we heard. We received a recommendation from the witness that in all cases there should be an agreement on the part of the borrower and the lender if a loan is to be changed from a fixed rate to a floating rate. I realize that this is not strictly relevant to the Bankruptcy Act, but it does explain how some of these problems come about.

Also he suggested that the bank should not be allowed to debit overdue payments from one account to another account, because this eventually ended up in some cheques being returned NSF. He was as surprised as anyone when that happened. It spoiled his image in the business community with which he has to work. The contract with the bank changed without his knowing it. Most of all, he urged that when dealing with this kind of legislation, the bank should not be able to move unannounced on to a piece of property and seize the assets even though there is the strength of Section 128.

We are hoping for a section of the Bankruptcy Act which would permit farmers and fishermen to have the same options open to them as those of creditors who owe in excess of $1 million, so that some of these extreme situations will be avoided. In the particular case which I mentioned, the bank did not benefit; it did not recover its funds. It put the man virtually out of business. He retained his land, which was under a different lending institution, but the bank continued to send him notices that he owed more money. It continued to charge interest on the amount of money it did not recover from the unfortunate seizure and sale of his assets at a time when the market was bound to be low. It was off-season. Who would be interested in purchasing maple syrup equipment in the months of May and June after the season had just ended? Who would be interested in buying maple syrup equipment which had been lying in sheds, loaded with front-end loaders, smashed, dented and dumped in a pile as if it were junk rather than new equipment? These are the kinds of things we must remember when changes to the Bank Act are made. The process has to be delayed so that the debtor has an opportunity equal to that of the bank to present his side of the case and to negotiate something in the realm of fairness.

Despite our attempts in the House to improve the Bank Act when it was revamped in 1980 and 1981, we should provide protection to producers supplying products to processors who have already found ways of getting around the protection we thought we were providing. There was an instance concerning an auction market which went into receivership. Farmers who sold livestock through that market did not receive money for their cattle. If farmers are not paid for a shipment of cattle, often it involves the full year's production of livestock, and almost three years of effort and feed have gone into getting the cattle ready for market. It is a tremendous loss to farmers who are not paid. What happened in the case to which I was referring was that cheques were issued but they were no good.

There was a similar case last fall involving a grain elevator company in southern Ontario, the Niagara Feed and Seed case about which you may have read in the newspapers in recent months, Mr. Speaker. Some producers understood that there were problems with the financing of that particular entity and made inquiries at the bank to make certain that if they delivered grain to that elevator, the cheques would be good and indeed they would be paid. The bank assured them that they would be paid, but when the grain was delivered it simply became part of the assets which the receiver used to settle the debt load of the elevator company. This reduced the losses of the bank but left farmers facing large losses. Some of them virtually lost one year's crop, in effect to help a bank to get out of a bad loan situation with an elevator company in which it had become involved with both eyes wide open.

We had hoped to provide assurances for people who produce fruit and vegetables, raise livestock and grow grain regarding those changes to the Bank Act. However, there was another step where assets are held in trust for the bank and moneys are extracted from farmers and producers which are then transferred to the bank to reduce its loss at their expense. We hope Hon. Members of the House will be conscious of those loopholes and will attempt to fill them at committee stage.

Without such amendments there is no hope for improvement in the situation of farmers facing bankruptcy. There is no hope for farmers who are not now facing bankruptcy but have the bad luck to deliver produce to a company or processor on the verge of bankruptcy. They can be caught and go broke just as quickly, simply by having delivered produce to a processing firm or marketing agency which happens to go bankrupt while their produce is in train, on the way through. We hope that farmers and fishermen will be permitted the same rights and privileges as those firms which go bankrupt with a debt load in excess of $1 million. The court should be brought into all these cases because of the effect that the demise of a farmer or fisherman has on his or her very small community. I hope the legislation can be improved to take these matters into account.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with certain principles of the Bill and I will base my comments upon happenings in the past. The first point is that there has to be protection for the workers. I notice in the Bill that when a bankruptcy occurs, up to $2,000 in wages is provided. What concerns me is the part that states "for all wages payable at the date of bankruptcy not exceeding $2,000 for each such employee for services performed".

The other principle involved in the Bill is what is called the super priority claim for unpaid wages. That covers up to $4,000 per employee. We have to ensure that those who have been working and who depend on their wages receive their wages. That should be the number one protection. It appears that the Bill provides for the wages owing at the time. When a company gets into financial difficulty, there is the danger of prolonging that period where it does not pay its employees. Sometimes that can involve quite a large sum of money, certainly more than the employee would normally receive every two weeks or every month. Normally it is every two weeks.

A small company with, for example, 100 employees may have to borrow money just to stay alive. It may be the only way it can keep going. Such a company is built on borrowing, providing it has the wherewithal eventually to pay back that debt plus make a profit. This super priority claim does not cause me concern with regard to large companies, but it does for the borrowing capacity of a small company. A lender takes into consideration the liabilities of a company.

Let me use the example of a company that requires $1 million to expand. This would not be a very large company. The capital required is $1 million. The downpayment is generally 20 per cent. That brings the figure down to $800,000. If there are 200 employees and you multiply 200 times $4,000, that comes to $800,000. Thus the ability of the company to borrow is nil. I am afraid of what this might do to the ability of smaller companies to expand or even to stay alive. The number one premise is that wages have to be looked after. Let us not drive smaller companies out of business because then there would be no wages.

Many businesses in Canada today want to expand but will not do so because of government policies. Consequently, they take their money to another country or leave it in the bank. They either export jobs or, by leaving their money in the bank, do not provide more jobs. Government policies with regard to capital gains tax prevent many businesses from expanding. We should carefully consider this clause in committee. We must not do anything that would drive smaller businesses into bankruptcy or receivership, which could easily be done. The amount of money required by the smaller companies is a factor. With this super priority, we may be undoing something that we do not want undone. We may drive companies out of business by eliminating their ability to borrow.

The second point is the protection of smaller companies. Protection of wages is number one. We have to protect smaller companies so they can stay alive and expand. There is a lot of detail in the Bill. I have not found this provision, but it may state that smaller companies in Canada will receive help to stay alive. We put too much emphasis on those who lend money rather than those who borrow.

When a bank, credit union, caisse populaire, the Farm Credit Corporation, provincial agriculture development boards or other institution lends money, it requires certain collateral. There must be some equity. I know of a case where the Royal Bank is foreclosing on a loan made just over a year ago. They say the farmer has no equity, that he has used up all his collateral. He had these other loans before the Royal Bank made its loan. If the bank was going to make the loan on the collateral produced at that time, it should not impose receivership before the farmer has had a chance to produce and repay the loan. This situation has to be looked at very carefully.

This is not a fictitious case, this is actually happening. The families involved are frightened. They do not know whether they will lose everything they have worked for. They had a loan from the provincial Agriculture Development Board and a loan from the FCC. When they needed additional capital, they went to the bank. The bank knew all of this.

This business I refer to is partly a greenhouse operation. It takes three years to confirm your customers and the market and start bringing in money rather than only paying out. A lot of capital must be expended to build the necessary sun houses and purchase equipment. The bank is foreclosing. There is no recourse, no way the farmer can protect himself. The bank says he must pay up by a certain date, such as the end of the month, or it will start proceedings. When one lender starts to do that, the others become very concerned.

We must provide protection in this Bill for the small operator. When they take a loan, they must have a chance to make use of that money long enough to produce and pay back. The very operation for which they borrowed the money will bear fruit and they can then start producing and make a profit.

Another important principle is that there must be a provision in the Bill which gives some consideration to the borrower in regard to the amount of the loan, the amount he has paid back and the amount he still owes. I am aware of a case in which an insurance company in Canada foreclosed on a farmer who had taken out a loan when wheat was at a high price. When the price of wheat dropped, he had difficulty making payments on the loan. However, he kept up the payments to the best of his ability, but the insurance company took over his farm. He had paid the principal of the loan two and one half times but he still owed as much as he had borrowed in the first place.

That type of situation should not be permitted in this country. There must be some consideration given to those who borrow money. If there is no protection provided to them, there is something radically wrong with the system.

The case which I referred to happened during the Depression years. It happened in a district where I was teaching school. I felt very sorry for that man as he had paid back two and one half times what he had borrowed. Then the price of wheat dropped to practically nothing—approximately 19 cents a bushel. Wheat was $2 a bushel when that man borrowed the money. However, the insurance company told him to clear off the land and gave him a number of days to get off the land. What did he do? He pulled a granary on skids to some adjoining land which belonged to a land owner who felt sorry for him. The land owner felt he was a good farmer and that it was not his fault. He asked the farmer to farm his land. So the farmer pulled the granary over in order that he, his wife and his kids could have a place to live. What happened then? He not only lost the farm that he had spent a lifetime building up, but the insurance company threatened him with court action if the granary was not returned. Many of us, including myself, went to the insurance company and told them that this was inhuman. As a consequence, the insurance company did not lay charges regarding the granary, but they took his farm. The farm went into other hands. How much the insurance company was paid, I do not know, but they were certainly paid plenty. The insurance company did not lose one cent; they made a lot of money on the deal. The original capital was paid more then twice, yet the farmer still lost his farm.

That is no way for a civilized country to treat its primary producers. I hope that members of the committee will ensure that there is some protection for farmers. They are not trying to get out of paying their debt, but they have no control over the conditions.

Later on, the late Right Hon. R. B. Bennett and the late William Aberhart in Alberta brought in debt legislation which established a debt legislation board. If that had happened two years earlier, that man would not have lost his farm because the Alberta Government declared a moratorium on debts. Between the federal legislation introduced by the late Right Hon. R. B. Bennett and the twin legislation introduced by the late William Aberhart in Alberta, a board was set up which had the power to say to the lenders; "You have already collected heavily on this deal; we are going to cut down the amount this man still owes".

Unless we have authority such as that, our producers will not get a fair deal. The lenders will want their pound of flesh and every ounce of blood that goes with it. I have seen it happen several times before legislation was introduced giving a government-appointed board the authority to say to the lenders; "You have been paid once or twice. You have got double your capital back. Now you have to cut it down to something sensible and reasonable that the man can pay". Under the other system borrowers could not pay off the debt in a lifetime.

We must protect wages. We must ensure that workers receive their wages. We must ensure that we do not drive our businesses out of business by telling them that they do not have the authority to borrow. They have to borrow. We need authority for some group or board to look over the situation before farmers are kicked off their land.

I had a few Ontario farmers visit my office a short time ago. One of those farmers told me that he had recently been kicked off his land. He had paid more than the total principal. He told me that he was prepared to pay but that he did not have the wherewithal to pay because his land was taken away from him. We need legislation to ensure that our farmers and small businessmen who want to pay have the wherewithal to pay. It should not be like the Shakespearean play, because when the lenders take their pound of flesh, they also take the life savings of individuals and those individuals cannot continue in business.

I would like to make a point regarding collateral. I know of a case where a bank took the tractor and the cattle of a farmer. What was the farmer to do? He had no wherewithal to pay off his debt. It is tantamount to saying: "We want your farm". They took away his means of ever meeting the payments on the loans to which he had agreed. He required the equipment to put in the seed and to thresh and harvest that seed. He required his cattle to reproduce in order to sell them. But the bank took away the very means he had of paying the debt. I say that is not right. There must be power in this Bill to ensure that we can protect our farmers and small businessmen against the financiers. All financiers who lend money are not that tight-fisted, but there are some around who want their pound of flesh and every ounce of blood that goes with it. We must ensure that our farmers, businessmen and people trying to produce in Canada are not crippled by giving the financiers the right to do anything they want to do; whether it is right or wrong. We need protection for those who are honestly trying and who, through no fault of their own, are unable to meet the obligations which they want to meet as early as possible.

I will not say anything more because the Hon. Member from Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) dealt very well with bankruptcies, and other Members have dealt with other points. In conclusion I would like to say that this Bill should give us a chance to protect wage earners, farmers, small businessmen and other people against the financiers who want to take every ounce of blood and reduce a borrower's ability ever to pay back a loan.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to spend a few moments speaking in this debate on Bill C-17, an Act respecting bankruptcy and insolvency. I will spend my time, Mr. Speaker, mainly on the needs of the agricultural industry in bankruptcy legislation, although I would far rather be speaking about how we could keep them in business.

When a business or a farm is ailing, there are really only four alternatives put before them; receivership, liquidation, some form of proposal which would keep them in business, or bankruptcy. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, only one of those options is really an attempt to keep the farm or business going. Perhaps we should spend more time in this House attempting to provide ways of keeping farms and businesses going rather than worrying about bankruptcy. However, what we have here today is a Bill which is intended to put down rules in the battlefield between the financial institutions and the rest of Canada.

I am speaking only about farming because there is probably no area of the economy which is more affected by the vagaries of the market than the agricultural industry. It has to deal with circumstances outside of its own ability to establish what it will get back for its efforts. Only for agriculture, and a few of the other primary producer industries, is the free market still expected to work. The theory of supply and demand is expected to dictate the returns which a farmer receives from his operation. Since the farmer has no control over the marketing of most of his products, he accepts what he can get. The market, therefore, dictates whether or not he will survive. The farmer can plan as well as possible and look to the future as much as possible, but the market, the weather and other conditions may make the difference in whether he survives or not. Survival, therefore, is what Bill C-17 is all about.

If one cannot survive in farming, one goes bankrupt or one quits. Most farmers are too proud to go bankrupt so they move over and make room for someone else. They sell their land and what is left and let someone else have the farm. They stay as long as possible, living on their equity, until their debts become more than their equity; then they sell out saying, "I guess I will go to town and work."

How does a farmer get into the position where he finds it necessary to go bankrupt or to sell out? Farmers are probably the largest users of credit for their operations of almost any industry. They use credit for their operations as well as for financing their capital costs. I remember in a speech not too long ago the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) said that we spend our lives establishing a credit rating. I believe possibly there are some people who have gone bankrupt in the last few years who would think that if their credit rating had not been quite so good perhaps they would not have had quite so much money and not now be bankrupt.

However, in establishing a credit rating, a farmer must prove his ability to continue to operate. He goes out in the spring and borrows money to buy feed and fertilizer and in many cases the fuel, and he waits for the land to produce the crop so he can harvest it in the fall. It seems simple. However, if you are a new farmer going into business, first of all you must have the land. These days land costs anywhere from $150 to $1,000 an acre. The absolute minimum for a viable farm in my area, Mr. Speaker, is a section or a section and a half. You can purchase that for possibly something better than half a million dollars. If you were going to borrow the money to buy that land and make payments on it, you would be paying $120,000 in interest. And at present prices for wheat, you are not going to make that much from the land you own. Therefore, it is much better if you own the land ahead of time. No sane individual would go out and pay $600,000 for land and expect that land even to pay the interest. You must, therefore, have some other source of funding to get to where you want to be as a farmer.

If you do make this investment and the price of wheat does stay where it is, you are well on your way to bankruptcy and you have not even planted your crop yet. These last few years we have had a lot of farmers on the Prairies go bankrupt and for a good many reasons. Sometimes it is because the weather has been bad. Sometimes it is because interest rates have been too high, or they have gone up during the period of time the farmers had hoped to pay off their particular investment.

The agriculture industry has to be one of the businesses which has the longest wait between the time of the original investment and the return on that investment. First of all, a farmer buys the fertilizer and the seed, he sows the grain, he spends money on spraying during the summer, he harvests in the fall, puts the crop in the bin and, if he is lucky, he might sell it next August, a good year and a half later. So two full years have passed from the time the farmer invested in that particular crop before he receives money to repay his investment. The full cow-calf cycle, Mr. Speaker, is about ten years. It is the same with apples. Ten years is the length of time for apple growers to receive a return on their investment.

How are we going to protect farmers who get themselves into the position where they have to go bankrupt? Farmers are usually eternal optimists. That is part of the reason, I suppose, why they keep sowing and hoping to harvest. They are probably the only group of businessmen who continually lose money and still stay in business. Farmers have a tendency to live on their equity and, of course, they feed themselves off the farm.

This Bill should do something to protect the people who are important to this country, the primary producers. They produce a large portion of the food we eat. The worker, the farmer and the fishermen should be protected. If someone is going to be punished in this operation, it should be the finance company or the fiscal institution which has in mosts cases, as the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) said, gotten all the money invested plus that much more. Instead of a Bankruptcy Act, Mr. Speaker, maybe we should be looking at an interest control Act. Maybe by the time a financial corporation has doubled its money on loans for which they take very little risk, there should be no more interest charged.

We need to do something about what happens to a farmer or small businessman if they do go bankrupt. In the last 20 years something has happened to the basic economic structure in Canada, something which is bad for Canada. There was a time when everyone considered production the most important thing to the economy. We paid for production and if you produced well, you did well. Production was the key to survival and getting ahead. Today we have changed the definition of what is important in the economy. In farming and most small businesses what you produce and how much you produce, even how efficiently you produce it, does not have as much impact on your success as the price you pay for the money you borrow. These days in farming and small business the only person guaranteed a return is the person who lends the money. That seems wrong to me. I think it is our responsibility as Members of Parliament to put in place rules which do not allow those financial institutions to take advantage of the situation in such a way that the farmer who has worked hard and should have been successful just cannot quite make it.

If we look back, Mr. Speaker, Christ went to the Temple and tipped over the tables of the money lenders. He abhorred the money lenders. Our morality has changed somewhat in the last number of years and the money lender is now an accepted and respected part of the economy. I think it is the Government's responsibility to put rules in place which do not allow money lenders to take advantage beyond what seems respectable, I suppose.

We therefore have a responsibility to put into this Act some kind of a structure which allows the farmer or the fisherman or small businessman to know that if he has made a good strong effort he will not be taken over, he will not be forced into the position where he is unable to survive. If that is what this Bill does, then it is a good Bill. If it allows people to be taken advantage of by financial institutions, then we should change the rules so those institutions allow the majority of Canadians to make a living rather than just the bankers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is as follows: Mrs. Erola moves that Bill C-17, an Act respecting bankruptcy and insolvency, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 5.55 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—RETIREMENT INCOME

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands) moved:

That this House profoundly regrets the two-year delay of the Government in bringing in promised legislation to improve guaranteed income supplements for low-income single elderly Canadians, and condemns the Government for its failure to respond to the innovative proposals of the all-party Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform to expand opportunities for Canadians under age 65 to make adequate provision for income in their retirement years.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Opposition is able to raise this question of pension reform once again for debate in this House of Commons. We do so in the hope and expectation that somehow it will move the Government forward, if only slightly, to the very real changes which are needed in the pension system in Canada; to make sure that those who are now in greatest need will have their wants addressed; and that there will be changes so that the poverty we see now all too often among our elderly citizens is not perpetuated into the future.

Back in March of 1983, Mr. Speaker, at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, I posed a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) concerning the tragic plight in which so many of our elderly citizens find themselves as a result of inadequate income. I asked her when there might be an increase in the guaranteed income supplement so as to relieve their poverty. The Minister responded in this way. Mind you, this was back in March of 1983. She said that "the cost of bringing the single pensioners over the poverty line ... has been approved by the Government as their first social spending—whenever we can afford it".

When I posed that question one year ago, Mr. Speaker, it was not the first time it was asked. It was not the last time that it was posed to the Minister, to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Each time they were asked about Canada's elderly poor, the Ministers replied that the needs of this group were their top priority and that legislation to improve their lot would be the first piece of social legislation which would be brought before the House.

Since then the Minister of National Health and Welfare has seen fit to bring in the Canada Health Act. The Government has introduced measures to put restrictions on transfers for post-secondary education. There have been these Bills and others dealing with social issues, but there is still no sign of legislation to address the pressing needs of Canada's 600,000 elderly poor, the group which the Government has said time and again is their top priority.

The fact that we have 600,000 elderly Canadians living in poverty in a country as rich and bountiful as Canada, in a society supposedly as compassionate and humane as ours, is a national disgrace. The fact that this has been allowed to continue month after month, year after year, is a telling indictment of the Government. The Government is bereft of ideas, drained of decency, and unable to recognize the priorities which must be dealt with in this society. I know the Government has its priorities: bail-outs of de Havilland, Canadair and Maislin; bonuses for executive officers in de Havilland and the Canada Development Investment Corporation; and the purchase of Petrofina gas stations. We know what the priorities of the Government are. For the people who have, throughout their lifetimes, worked for and contributed to the development of this great country, there is only a promise trotted out time and time again that some day, some time, they too will become a priority.

Is it any wonder, Sir, that today we condemn the Government? We condemn it not only for its failure to introduce legislation that would meet the current needs of today's elderly poor, but also for its failure to bring about long overdue pension reform of the whole system so that we can ensure that the poverty of today will not be meted out to those who will be senior citizens in 10, 20 or 30 years' time. We must begin to come to grips with this issue and reverse what is happening.

Studies, conferences and task forces on pension reform have been going on for years, Mr. Speaker. It would take the rest of my allotted time today to even name all of the conferences and commissions which have taken place, let alone comment on the recommendations which they have put forward. It was the concern about the difficulties encountered by many of today's elderly, and the prospect of even greater numbers being in straitened circumstances in the not too distant future unless corrective measures are taken quickly, that precipitated most of the studies which have taken place. It was the same concern which precipitated the establishment of the all-Party parliamentary task force on pension reform. I want to pay credit to the work of that task force because it worked long and hard and studied the issues. I believe it came up with some very positive and innovative proposals.

First, I want to examine the current situation in this country. Presently there are some 2.5 million Canadians who are over the age of 65. Of those, 600,000 live below the poverty line. What is critical to note is that most of those 600,000 are single and four-fifths of them, or 80 per cent, are women. They are women who, for the most part, worked full time in the home when they were younger and had little or no opportunity to prepare financially for what we so euphemistically term their "golden years". Even if they receive the full Old Age Security and guaranteed income supplement, it is a total of $534 a month or $18 a day. That amount is $2,000 below the poverty line for people living in medium-sized cities across this country, such as Kingston, Sudbury, Sydney, Kelowna and Sherbrooke. People who live in cities like those, where they receive only the Old Age Security and guaranteed income supplement payment, live $2,000 below the poverty line.

The all-Party task force on pension reform recommended that the income for single persons over the age of 65 should be set at two-thirds of the income of married couples. For those most in need, that would mean a maximum increase of $102 a month of the guaranteed income supplement. However, that increase would be based on a sliding scale downward, depending on other additional income that the pensioners might have. It meant that those most in need would receive the largest increase.

The Government chose not to accept that recommendation. Instead, the Minister of Finance in his February Budget proposed to raise the guaranteed income supplement by $25 a month on July 1 and by a further $25 a month in December. That is the proposal that the Government has brought forward and the proposal that I hope will go through Parliament. But I must ask Government Members today, where is the legislation to implement even that increase? It is less than two months before the first half of that $50 increase is supposed to take effect, yet there is no sign of any such Bill on the Order Paper. Surely the Government, with all its bureaucrats and advisers, cannot be having that much difficulty drafting such a simple piece of legislation. Surely that is not difficult. Perhaps we should ask whether it is the will to find a way that is holding the Government back.

Three years ago, the Minister of National Health and Welfare made this statement in the House of Commons, as reported at pages 8609 and 8610 of Hansard on March 25, 1981:

—we have often repeated the commitment of this Government to bring all the senior citizens who now receive the supplement over the poverty line.

Of course, she did not say when. Therein lies the deception. When statements like that are made by a Minister of the Crown, expectations are raised. The elderly poor anticipate that their burdens will be lessened, but nothing happens except that the limited income that they receive gets stretched thinner and thinner as the costs of the bare essentials of life get higher and higher. Surely if there is any sense of decency and awareness of priorities left in the Government benches at all, it will bring in the legislation that was promised in the February Budget to increase the guaranteed income supplement.

I do not understand what the holdup is. The Government since that time has seen fit to introduce any number of other measures. Why not this one? Why has the Government not felt that this one was as necessary as any other piece of legislation that could be considered by this House? If this Opposition Day motion does nothing else but provoke the Government into taking action in this regard, we will have achieved something really worth while.

Miss MacDonald: I would like to ask what are the prospects for those under the age of 65 who are still in the paid labour force or who are working full-time in the home? That subject was addressed by the all-Party task force on pension reform. The task force had two very real concerns in this regard, Mr. Speaker. One was coverage and the other was cost. It came up time and time again.

First with regard to coverage was how to reform the pension system so as to encourage and make it possible for those who are not now in retirement income plans to be able to participate in them. That was the one question we dealt with. The second was the cost of such reform, not only at the outset but the escalating cost to the public purse if these critical measures are not taken to bring all of these people who are not presently in retirement income plans into them. What would be the cost to the public purse down the road if this issue is not dealt with? We looked at the immediate costs and we looked at the long-term costs to the people of Canada. We did so, Mr. Speaker, because the problem is there before us. Old Age Security payments, public expenditure, this year amount to some $12 billion. That is a lot of money, Sir, but that amount will increase rapidly with an aging society. However, if those presently below the age of 65 are encouraged to prepare now for their retirement years, the public expenditure could be reduced.

Let me elaborate on coverage. At present, there are some 2.7 million people who work full-time in the home who have no access to the Canada Pension Plan, let alone any other pension plan. That group was of great interest to us—almost three million people who work full-time in the home. There are as well some five million people in the paid labour force who have no supplemental benefits. They pay into the Canada Pension Plan and that is it. These five million people in the paid labour force are primarily in the $10,000 to $28,000 income bracket. They work for the most part in businesses and firms which do not have pension plans, and they see RRSPs as a vehicle for higher income earners, not for themselves. Both groups that I have mentioned, those who work full-time in the home and the five million in the paid labour force who have no supplemental benefits at the present time, account for a total eight million Canadians who are without adequate pension coverage at the moment.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has recognized the problem. She did so when she came before the parliamentary task force on March 17, 1983, and said:

> I believe coverage is the key issue of pension reform. I really mean extension of coverage to all workers, and that is on a universal basis... You see, the majority of working Canadians do not belong to private pension plans. Only 54 per cent of men and 38 per cent of women in paid employment are protected by private pension plans. These are cold, hard facts.

● (1125)

Those were the cold, hard facts 14 months ago when the Minister said that, and they remain the same cold, hard facts today. The Minister of Finance failed to address this critical issue in his February Budget. He promised to discuss the concept of a homemaker's pension with the provinces, but he did not indicate that the federal Government was committed to bringing homemakers into the Canada Pension Plan in their own right. The Leader of my Party has made that a personal commitment.

The all-Party task force laid out in detail the way in which homemakers could be brought into the Canada Pension Plan. The Minister and his officials certainly had adequate time to study the details of the task force proposal. He must know that the recommendations stipulated that contributions for homemakers' pensions would be from family income and, where this was not possible, would be subsidized by a 0.3 per cent increase in over-all Canada Pension Plan contributions, bringing them from 3.6 per cent to 3.9 per cent of payroll. None of the cost for this would come from the public purse, but the Minister of Finance did not even react to the task force proposal in his Budget or at any time since.

Would he prefer to have the majority of those 2.7 million people who work full-time in the home being put in the position where they have to rely solely on the guaranteed income supplement when they reach the age of 65? What would that do to the public expenditure? What about the five million people in the paid labour force who have no supplemental pension plans? What encouragement was given to them to seek additional coverage? None whatsoever. Unbelievably, the changes proposed to money purchase plans by the Minister in his February Budget, which will mean a reduction in federal revenues of some $300 million annually when they come into effect, will be of greatest benefit to those earning in the upper income brackets, $55,000 or more. The changes may help those who can afford to put $10,000 per year away into such plans, but for people earning only $12,000, $15,000 or even $20,000, that idea does not particularly grab them. They simply cannot indulge in such fantasies.

Instead, the task force proposed establishing a flexible, portable, registered pension account which would have the benefit of a 40 per cent tax credit rather than a tax deduction. This incentive was aimed at encouraging lower to middle income earners, particularly women, to contribute to their own retirement income. Again, there was no response from the Minister of Finance.

In closing my remarks today, I say to the House that the parliamentary task force recognized the pressing need for real pension reform. So too did the Leader of my Party and Hon. Members on this side of the House. We realize that we cannot go on forever piling burdens of debt upon the shoulders of the next generation and the next, not if we expect the intergenerational contract to be honoured. We have to look after our elderly poor today. We have to be prepared to do more to look after ourselves tomorrow. That will only take place if those presently outside the pension system are given the opportunity and the incentive to participate. That the Government has not allowed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A ten-minute period is now provided for questions and comments.

● (1130)

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, there is much I agree with in what the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) said this morning. I will have the opportunity later this afternoon to make a speech on the same topic. In my hand I have the Budget presented on December 11, 1979 by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) when he was Minister of Finance in the Conservative Government. I admit that the poverty level among our elderly is a problem that exists today. It existed five years ago and it existed ten years ago. When the Hon. Member's Government was in power there was only one Budget we can judge by, and on reading through it I see there was no money to increase the guaranteed income supplement in that 1979 Budget. The question is, why not?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, one of the great comments I hear across the country about the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government is that it is forever living for yesterday. The concern of today's elderly poor is what is of pressing need. That is what the Government should be addressing at the present time.

The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) can go back to 1979. I can go back to the 1940s when Mr. Harris, the then Minister of Finance, became known as the "six-buck boy". It was Mr. Diefenbaker who addressed that issue. We can go back over the history of pensions from the time they began, but that is not the issue before us today. The issue today is that there are 600,000 people over the age of 65 who are living in need. The urgency is to get on with doing something about it. I say to the Hon. Member for Sudbury, who I know is concerned about this issue, that he should be pressing his Ministers to bring in this Bill and not be reminiscing about 1979, 1970, 1950 or any other year in the past. It is today that we are concerned about.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, the point I am making is that since 1980 the Liberal Government instituted a Bill that gave an immediate $35 per month increase and is now proposing a $50 per month increase. Under one Government, by the end of December, 1984, the elderly in our country will be $85 per month better off than they were in 1980. That was the point I was making.

If the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands is serious in terms of her commitment for pension reform and for the guaranteed income supplement Bill to be passed in this House—and the Opposition House Leader was here just a few moments ago—she well knows that other pieces of legislation are being tied up at the present time. She knows how this goes. The Opposition want to have the Western Grain Stabilization Act introduced and passed as quickly as possible. We on the Government side have several pieces of legislation emanating from the February Budget that we would like to have passed, including the guaranteed income supplement increase and some measures that involve elements of pension reform that were in the February Budget.

Why do we not make a deal? The Opposition wants to have that Bill passed and we have pieces of legislation we would like to have passed. Why do they not instruct their House Leader to meet with ours? We would get these pieces of legislation through as quickly as possible. There are pieces of legislation that we deem to be a priority. That will have to be part and parcel of the deal.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks why we do not deal with other pieces of legislation. That was very much the tone and temper of my speech. I think this Bill should have a greater priority. If the Government had any sense of priority, it would have at least put this Bill on the Order Paper. It would have introduced it. It would have drafted it and brought it into the House so that we would know it is there in the whole bargaining process. It is not even in the process where we can debate it.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the statistics in front of me, but I do know the concern that all of us have. I share with the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) and the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) concern for people who will be retiring and are apprehensive about their retirement income. I like the idea of a universal old age pension. Those who worked and tried to get a pension were entitled to see something across the board. There were others who tried and were not able to do it. CN pensioners received small pensions. Therefore, it made good sense to have an across-the-board pension. It helped those who were not in a position to do it to have a guaranteed income supplement. We piled one more on top of that and required people to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan.

The information I have is that the Canada Pension Plan funding is in some difficulty. There is some apprehension that in order to make it actuarially sound, we will have to increase premiums or face increased costs. Figures I have seen indicate that the time frame is not that far in the future when there will be some difficulty with the Canada Pension Plan.

I listened to the Hon. Member talk about the 0.3 per cent increase and the fact that it would not cost the Government anything. All of the items suggested by the task force involve some cost. I am concerned that we might push something like the Canada Pension Plan costs too high by bringing in too much at once. We have the old age pension, the guaranteed income supplement and the Canada Pension Plan, which has been improved. There are more people who have access to it today. A small point is in a divorce situation, where the wife now gets half the benefits of the Canada Pension Plan, which should have been the case all along. It is there, or will be, and voluntarily some of us have to do that. The fact that I am 57 and getting closer to 65 may mean that I have a vested interest in this.

I am worried about the costs that we may be imposing on the Canada Pension Plan, all of the people who pay into it, in order to meet all the commitments that both the Hon. Member and I would eventually like to see. I am afraid that if we try to bite off more now, it may have the impact of overloading the system with costs and we will not be able to meet the benefits that should be met today.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the concern that was expressed by the Hon. Member was expressed to the task force on many occasions. There is a perception in the public that there is something drastically wrong or inadequate about the funding of the Canada Pension Plan. Our studies did not bear that out, but they did show that the percentage of payroll that would have to be contributed to the Canada Pension Plan over the years would have to be increased. By the year 2000, we anticipated it would go up to 8 per cent of payroll. That was why we said that the proposal we put forward with regard to the inclusion of homemakers in the Canada Pension Plan would be a contributory one, as with anybody else. If they contribute in the same way, they would not be asking any more or any less from the Canada Pension Plan than you or I. Nor would they contribute any less.

The question is, why should these people in Canada be treated as second-class citizens? That is what is happening at the present time with regard to the Canada Pension Plan and those who can participate in it. What we did was to make sure that this was actuarially possible. In all of the studies that we did and in everything we looked at, we were satisfied that this could be accomplished, but it would have to be on a contributory basis.

Mr. Bloomfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member regarding her proposal. All of us in this House want to see our elderly taken care of in fine fashion. Can she give examples of other countries with better support programs for the elderly than Canada?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I do not look at the needs of the elderly poor in this country in comparison with any other country. I really do not. If they are in genuine need, we have to do something about it. Whether there are better or worse situations in other countries should not be our major concern. Our major concern is, what are we going to do about our problems in Canada? That is the approach which the task force and people on this side of the House have taken.

I do not think it is enough to go about saying that people are worse off in the United Kingdom, Europe, Asia or Africa, because we are not able to change the pension plans in those countries. However, we can do something here and we have a responsibility and an obligation to get on with it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Debate.

Mr. Bloomfield: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is sorry but the time for questions and comments has expired.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate in the House today. To begin with, I believe that one should first examine the point which has been raised by the Hon. Member opposite with respect to her contention that the Government has delayed the introduction of legislation to fulfil its promise to alleviate the difficulties experienced by Canada's single elderly pensioners.

I hear the word "delay" being used quite often. I think we should begin by examining the accomplishments of the Government with respect to pension reform and I think one could then conclude that it is simply not the case that there has been a delay. Contrary to what has been indicated, when examining the events of the past couple of years it becomes very clear that not only has action been taken but it has been consistent with the fulfilment of the Government's 1980 promise of pension reform.

In order to look at the history of the pension reform process, one must go back to the early part of 1981 when, shortly after the election, the National Pension Conference was convened. That conference brought together all of the players in the pension system including business, labour, government and women's groups. These players came together for the first time to look at the real problems of our pension system and to begin moving toward a national consensus on reform.

The Government followed up on the momentum established by this conference with the 1982 publication of the green paper entitled Better Pensions for Canadians. It should be noted that the proposals contained in that paper included the Government's position vis-à-vis income for the single elderly pensioner. I quote from the statement of that position:

—the situation of these single pensioners will be improved as soon as resources permit.

That same paper included a proposal to establish a parliamentary committee to undertake widespread public consultation on the issues surrounding pension reform. As the Hon. Member opposite knows, having served on that committee, that special committee on pension reform was formed on March 1, 1983. In other words, the promise to establish the committee was made in December, 1982 and fulfilled in March, 1983.

As Hon. Members know, the committee members undertook an amazing responsibility. They undertook a study of all of the proposals contained in the Government's paper on pension reform. These not only included suggestions for changes to the public pension system of Old Age Security and Canada Pension but also included suggestions for changes to the private pension sector and changes to reflect inflation protection, the special situation of women and pensions and the financial issues associated with those proposals.

The committee heard hundreds of witnesses and scrutinized briefs from all sectors of Canadian society. All areas of vital concern to Canadians were covered thoroughly in its final report. Recommendations concerning each issue were submitted to the Government of Canada in December, 1983, and I might note that under its terms of reference the committee had an assigned reporting date of December 31, 1983. There was certainly no delay on the part of the parliamentary committee.

The Government gave its response to the parliamentary task force only two months later. This response was contained in the Budget Speech of February 15, 1984, made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). In other words, within two months the Government announced its intentions to introduce legislation to improve the financial situation of single low-income pensioners. This announcement did not contain generalized promises. It contained specific proposals to increase the guaranteed income supplement for single pensioners by $25 a month in July of 1984 and another $25 a month in December of 1984.

The same Budget also specified that the guaranteed income supplement program would be further amended to guarantee recipients of partial Old Age Security pensions the same minimum income guaranteed under the GIS program for other Canadians. I might point out to Hon. Members that the parliamentary task force had recommended further study of ways to assist these partial pensioners. The Government chose, however, not to study this issue further but instead to announce its intentions to introduce this proposal at the same time as it introduced the two-stage $50 increase in the supplement for single pensioners.

Let us examine in more detail the $50 increase in the guaranteed income supplement single rate. This increase will benefit current low-income single pensioners, widowed pensioners receiving the spouse's allowance and one-pensioner couples, about 750,000 pensioners in all. As well, some 25,000 persons whose incomes were just slightly too high to qualify for the supplement will now be entitled to receive part of the increase.

This proposed increase is by no means the first step taken to ensure income adequacy for low-income Old Age Security pensioners. In 1979, the guaranteed income supplement was increased by $20 per pensioner household. In 1980, a further increase of $35 was provided to each pensioner household. However, even though single pensioners received the full benefit of the $20 and $35 increases, for those pensioners it was not enough. Single GIS recipients, three-quarters of whom are women, were still not guaranteed an income sufficient to meet their basic needs.

Various groups and organizations, including the Royal Commission on the Status of Pensions in Ontario, the Canadian Council on Social Development and the Senate Committee on Poverty, have studied the question of benefit adequacy for singles. They all agree that a single individual needs at least 60 per cent of the income required by a couple. Given that two-pensioner couples are already guaranteed an adequate level of retirement income under the OAS-GIS program, it was decided that the guaranteed income level for single pensioners must be at least 60 per cent of the amount provided to couples. The $50 monthly increase in the guaranteed income supplement single rate will do just that. In fact, by December, 1984 this increase, along with the regular quarterly cost-of-living increases, will guarantee single low-income pensioners 62 per cent of the income guaranteed to a two-pensioner couple.

Some Hon. Members will undoubtedly question why the Government did not accept the proposal put forward by the parliamentary task force on pension reform. The task force recommended that a special top-up benefit of $102 per month, taxed back at a rate of 100 per cent, be provided only to single GIS pensioners at the lowest income levels. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, analysis showed that the Government could not accept this proposal exactly as it was put forward. The fact was that low-income Old Age Security pensioners could have been worse off than they currently are.

For instance, several provincial governments already provide top-ups to the guaranteed income supplement. These top-ups generally operate with a 50 per cent tax-back structure. This in combination with the 50 per cent tax-back rate used under the guaranteed income supplement program means that low-income pensioners already lose $1 of benefit for every $1 of other income they have. Unless the provinces agreed to fully exempt the first $102 of income a pensioner has, something which would be quite expensive to do, the pensioners with the lowest incomes would effectively lose $1.50 of benefits for every $1 of other income they have.

In view of this situation, it proved to be better to make a straightforward increase of $50 per month for every pensioner receiving GIS at the single rate. The wisdom of this course of action has already been proven by the announcement made by the Ontario Government that it will not only pass on this $50 to Ontario pensioners receiving the GAINS supplement but will actually add to the increase to ensure that low-income single Ontario pensioners will be guaranteed 60 per cent of the income of marrieds. That action was possible only because of the way in which the $50 increase has been designed.

I would now like to turn to the second major proposed amendment which will guarantee partial pensioners the same minimum income as provided to the full pensioner under the OAS/GIS program. Whether they have lived in Canada for 40 years or as little as 10 years, all Old Age Security pensioners will be guaranteed an adequate level of retirement income. About 3,000 persons, primarily immigrants, receiving partial OAS pensions will benefit from the proposed amendment in the first year. This number will rise rapidly over the next ten years as more partial OAS pensioners become eligible. For example, by 1990-1991 it is estimated that as many as 25,000 persons will benefit from this amendment.

As Hon. Members know, Mr. Speaker, the Old Age Security residency rules were changed in 1977. For persons coming to Canada since that date, the old age pension is earned at the rate of one-fortieth of the full amount for each year of residency in Canada after age 18. Partial pensions were introduced to simplify the previous complex rules which not only determined entitlement on an all or nothing basis, but under which some period of residency carried more significance for eligibility purposes than others, depending on when in a person's lifetime they occurred.

The introduction of the partial benefits earned in accordance with the years of residency in Canada enables the federal Government to enter into international social security agreements. These agreements allow new Canadians to bring to Canada the pension rights they have earned in other countries. Such rights can then be combined with the rights earned here to meet eligibility rules for Canadian benefits, such as the ten-year requirement for an OAS. Right now we have agreements in force with five countries; Italy, France, Portugal, Greece and Jamaica. We anticipate an agreement with the United States will become effective this year. In fact, Mr. Speaker, just at this moment the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is in Belgium to sign a similar agreement with that country.

As well, we have negotiations under way with a number of other countries. However, despite progress in this regard, it remains that some pensioners do not have access to foreign pension income, nor income from any other source. As a result, they have nothing to fill the gap between the partial old age pension they receive and the amount of the full pension which lifelong Canadian residents receive.

Significantly, Old Age Security pensioners receiving a partial benefit can receive maximum GIS benefits. However, because they do not receive full basic pensions, partial pensioners are guaranteed less total income than is guaranteed to persons who have lived in Canada all of their lives. The proposed amendment will mean that low-income pensioners receiving partial OAS benefits will qualify for whatever additional guaranteed income supplement benefits are necessary to give them the same minimum income level as other pensioners. This change will eliminate any adverse consequences which could have arisen as a result of the amendments to the OAS Act in 1977. As well, it is consistent with the goals of the guaranteed income supplement program, namely, ensuring income adequacy to all pensioners in Canada.

There is no doubt that every Hon. Member of this House would have been happy to see this legislation introduced earlier. The needs of the low-income elderly have been known to all of us. However, the economic circumstances of a worldwide recession made it necessary for the Government to wait until it could responsibly make the commitment implied by the $50 increase in the GIS single rate. This increase is going to take place beginning this July. That is an undertaking which was given in the February Budget and is one which was not given lightly.

Hon. Members know that thousands of pensioners are now counting on this increase. They also know that the Government will bring the legislation forward shortly, Why, then, is there now this suggestion of delay? What can be accomplished, Mr. Speaker, by this suggestion except to create needless anxiety among our pensioners? Pensioners, Mr. Speaker, have enough to contend with in making ends meet without worrying that somehow the promised increase will be denied to them. I know that Hon. Members from the benches opposite will want to reassure pensioners that when this legislation is brought forward, it will be given speedy consideration.

For our part, Mr. Speaker, I can assure Hon. Members of this House, and all Canadians, that the Government of Canada remains committed to these promises and that the introduction of the proposed legislation is imminent. With the co-operation of all Hon. Members, the legislation can be passed quickly, and since Opposition Members have expressed their support for these proposals, I have no hesitation in assuring low-income single pensioners that they will see the $25 increase in their GIS pension cheques in July.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) when the Government will bring in the Bill to increase the guaranteed income supplement. He has said it is going to be done. What a great many people across this country are asking is, when? Give us a date. Government has been saying it since February. Can the Minister very straightforwardly just give us a date?

Mr. Campbell (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I am not in the position to give a specific date. However, I can give the Hon. Member assurance that if Hon. Members opposite are prepared to give priority to consideration of this legislation, I am sure a date can be identified very quickly between the House Leader of the Opposition and our House Leader so that the legislation can be introduced and considered just as quickly as possible.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, we take that as a commitment on the part of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. We have had greater difficulty dealing with the Government House Leader than we have with the Minister who has just spoken. Therefore, I hold my breath, not fully understanding that the Government House Leader will be as forthcoming as the Minister has just been.

However, I would like to ask the Minister whether or not it is the intention of the Government to bring forward at the same time the legislation which will change the regulations with regard to registered retirement savings plans to benefit those income earners in the country who presently receive an income in excess of $55,000 a year. It will cost the Government something in the way of $300 million in lost revenues in order to benefit that select group of people. I do not consider that to be a priority or even necessary. However, I am wondering if the Minister can tell us whether or not that proposal which was put forward by the Minister of Finance in the February Budget will be introduced also.

Mr. Campbell (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, may I begin my comments on the secondary question, I suppose, by commenting on the first. I believe we are all aware, Mr. Speaker, that there are a number of initiatives and financial Bills which are presently before the House to which we had understood priority consideration would be given, and to which Hon. Members of the Opposition would lend their full support, in order that those particular issues could be dealt with quickly. Thus the amendments to provide for the $25 July increase in guaranteed income supplement might be placed before the House at the earliest time. I hope that that co-operative attitude which seemed to have prevailed at that time could also prevail for this particular piece of legislation.

With respect to the Hon. Member's secondary question, I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I do not have any information on that so I really cannot provide her with an answer.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister how it is that the Province of Ontario could agree to pass on the $50 to pensioners without a tax-back through the GIS, but we cannot get the same agreement on the $102 increase. Is the Minister aware whether the Government has consulted other provincial governments to see that they will not tax back any increases through the GIS which may accrue from this House of Commons?

Mr. Campbell (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that yes, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, through her officials, has been consulting with the different provincial governments to ensure that the $50 increase in the GIS will be passed through to the individual pensioner. In fact, I think the Minister has commented in this House that it would be a priority of hers to ensure through consultation and monitoring that the $50 increase was passed through to the pensioner rather than reflecting increased charges, for example, in the provinces.

My understanding is that there is a general agreement. I guess Ontario is the best example. They have already demonstrated publicly that they will not only pass through the $50 increase but will in fact enrich that particular increase, so as to ensure that the benefits received by the single pensioner will be guaranteed at a level equivalent to 60 per cent of the benefits received by married couples.

As far as the question of why the $102 would not have been acceptable, I would suspect that the reason for that was simply due to the cost.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment and then ask the Minister a question. The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) left the impression that this side of the House was holding up the legislation. He asked us why we did not pass the legislation. Mr. Speaker, there is a false impression going out to the people of this country that for some reason we will not let the Government pass the Bill. The real truth is, of course, that the Government has not brought the Bill in. How can we hold it up when it has not even been brought in?

The other point raised by the Minister concerned other Bills they wanted passed. If the Government is going to put its emphasis on Bills dealing with corporations instead of bread and butter issues affecting our senior citizens and farmers, of course there is going to be difficulty. That was not our doing. That is the Government's doing. It decides what to bring in and when. It has not yet brought in the Bill relating to the $25 increase for single senior citizens in July and December under the GIS. It has not brought in the Bill which might save scores of farmers from going into bankruptcy. But it brings in a corporations Bill and leaves it here day after day.

I ask the Minister if the Government can start getting its legislative priorities in order and deal with the bread and butter issues which affect the daily lives of our people, instead of dealing with these corporation Bills?

Mr. Campbell (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I think the comment is just a little bit unfair. There is no question that there are financial Bills and initiatives which benefit all Canadians, including the proposed change to the GIS, and the proposal brought forward for consideration by the House to provide some assistance to the western grain farmer. There are a number of initiatives proposed which require priority consideration. It is a matter of the two House Leaders getting together and agreeing on some timetable which would see the legislative package, including the GIS increase, expedited as quickly as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) for moving a motion allowing the House to look at the Liberal record on pension issues and the most recent inappropriate response to the serious poverty experience of many elderly women, and the totally inadequate response to the demonstrated need for pension reform.

One in four elderly Canadians live in poverty. Some 60 per cent of single elderly women, 80 per cent of them widows, are poor with little opportunity, other than through increases to the OAS or GIS, to see any improvement in their standard of living. They look forward to a long life of poverty, as do many women working today inside and outside the home, unless real pension reform is implemented. The NDP concurs with the motion regretting the delay in recognizing the needs of hundreds of thousands of single elderly poor by failing to implement increases to the GIS or increasing the universal OAS to its former level of importance in income replacement.

However, just like the Conservatives, we also recognize that electoral considerations mean more to the governing Liberal Party than the needs of pensioners. It did not require a parliamentary task force on pension reform to show the Government the serious shortcomings of our public and private system in providing adequate pensions for women who statistically outlive their husbands and who have little opportunity to contribute to their own private plans or earn enough to achieve full CPP or even to share a working spouse's pension on divorce or death. When the Government does respond on the eve of an election, the response denies the seriousness of the conditions many Canadians find themselves in. By rejecting the task force report recommendation of a $102 permanent increase in the GIS for the single elderly, and only promising a $50 per month increase by year end, the Government fails to understand the report itself and the witnesses who appeared before the task force. Failure to introduce the changes to the House compounds the uncertainty many Canadians feel.

While the NDP can also sympathize with the second part of the motion condemning the Government on its response to the task force report on pension reform, we cannot share the Hon. Member's surprise at the pension reform offered by the February, 1984 Budget. The response of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is consistent with the philosophy of the majority report of the Liberals and the Conservatives providing more incentives and another chance for the private sector to respond to a shameful record. Increases in tax incentives to wealthy Canadians to encourage greater participation should not surprise the Hon. Member, nor should the feeble response to a greater pension coverage for low-income and part-time workers through a registered pension account. The Member and her Conservative colleagues join the majority of Liberal Members in seeking any and all methods to protect private pensions from meaningful expansion of the Canada Pension Plan or Old Age Security. Instead of meaningful reform, the Liberals have responded with a token GIS increase amounting to $1.61 per day by the end of 1984, while providing massive tax deductions to high-income earners which could amount in the most extreme cases to an equivalent of $20 per day to wealthy individuals.

Unlike the Liberals or Conservatives, the NDP would implement a pension system to reduce the dependence on the GIS, as was the original intent when the GIS was established on a temporary basis in 1966 while the Government waited for the Canada Pension Plan, Quebec Pension Plan and private plans to mature in order to reduce dependency on the GIS. Some 18 years later, in 1984, over 50 per cent of retired Canadians depend on full or partial guaranteed income supplement. This is evidence of the failure of the private and public sector pension systems in the past two decades.

Pension reform should indeed be reform. The proposals in the Budget insist on another decade or two of dependence on private plans to meet the needs of Canadians. It will not happen. We need to reaffirm the universality of the Old Age Security pension and return it towards its 1964 level of income replacement of 20 per cent of the average industrial wage, thereby beginning to reduce the dependence on GIS and the disincentives to saving for retirement which the 50 per cent tax-back on additional income attached to the GIS causes.

Liberal leadership candidates and Conservative leaders and former leadership candidates leave many doubts about their intentions towards universal pension arrangements. People wonder how deficits are going to be slashed while politicians advocate billions of dollars of additional expenditures to appease every special interest group on the economic side. The social development envelope of the Cabinet accounts for 40 per cent of the federal expenditures with another 20 per cent used to pay off the debt incurred by successive Liberal Governments.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, in whose name the motion stands today, made an appropriate statement to the House yesterday with regard to the comments of leadership candidate Mr. John Turner about slashing the deficit by $15 billion over the next three to seven years. She said:

> The candidate refuses to spell out in detail how he would accomplish his goal, but mere mention of his intention to go after social programs has already had a damaging effect. For while economists may be skeptical about his statement, hundreds of thousands of Canadians who have to get by on the guaranteed income supplement and social assistance, are now worried that their payments will be radically reduced.

I think that is a valid comment, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Kingston and the Islands is also aware, as is the public, that many members of her own Party feel social expenditures are too high. They are itching to get into power to switch Government priorities to the corporate sector. Her Party worries the very people she is concerned about in her statement. It is possible that a John Turner-led Liberal Party would be undistinguishable from a Brian Mulroney-led Conservative Party.

In fact, some of the comments of the former Finance Minister give a lot of people concern and doubt about what the policies really are. On November 25, 1983 Mr. Crosbie said, "We're not giving anything away. If you want to find out what our policies are, elect us". On July 12, 1983 the same individual is quoted in Maclean's as saying: "If I told you what I would do we would never get elected". Mr. Speaker, those comments do not engender any confidence in people who are living on public pensions or even private pensions.

The NDP issued a dissenting view in the parliamentary task force report on pension reform outlining both areas of support for the majority view, but disagreeing fundamentally on the majority faith in giving private plans yet another chance to apply their pensions to the two-thirds of women not presently covered, to offer inflation protection, to provide mobility to workers moving into new jobs, and to securing employer contributions to workers' pensions before 10 years of service.

We called for a 25 per cent increase in the Old Age Security pension to 17.5 per cent of the average industrial wage, indexed to wages to protect its universality and its earlier significance in replacing pre-retirement earnings. We also called for an expansion of the Canada Pension Plan to 50 per cent of the average industrial wage. The recommendation to expand the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan conformed to the request of women's groups, labour groups, social policy groups and some pensioner organizations fed up with the promises of private pensions and aware of the experiences under reliance on those same private pensions.

In its presentation the National Action Committee on the Status of Women told the task force:

> For the future elderly women, the most important reform would be the expansion of the Canada Pension Plan, so that those who are in the labour force can have adequate benefits when they get to the age of 65.

Many other women's groups advocated increases in the Canada Pension Plan to 50 per cent of the average industrial wage.

In rejecting any expansion of the Canada Pension Plan, Liberal and Conservative Members ignored the experience of labour, women and pensioners toward a system that has failed to respond voluntarily to the demands of Canadians. Instead, we now have proposals in a Budget document which threaten further government action if voluntary compliance with increased participation in private plans is not evident over some uncertain period of time. Failure to take on the powerful pension lobby will mean continuing dependence on government assistance through GIS and tax assistance.

The only carrot for women, those most in need of pension reform, is the promise to discuss the principle of homemakers' pensions with provincial governments. Even the promise of a homemaker pension advocated by some, but by no means all, women's groups is flawed. It is flawed not only because it favours one-earner couples, but is flawed in the majority report because it fails to recommend increasing the CPP/QPP beyond the present 25 per cent of the average industrial wage. The Government has accepted this recommendation and denied the most important reforms for women in the pension field. This particularly affects women in part-time work or women in jobs with no private pension plans. At this time only one-third of women are in private plans despite the growing number of women attached to the work force.

I would like to spend some time discussing part-time workers because once again the Budget proposals calling for pension reform offer nothing to the vast majority of the 2.7 million part-time workers in Canada, 72 per cent of whom are women. The inclusion of part-time workers in pension plans, where offered to full-time employees, and the provision of a locked-in registered pension account will not significantly benefit the one in five Canadians expected to comprise the part-time work force in Canada by the end of the century. These workers earning less than 80 per cent of full-time worker wages are not likely to respond to the lucrative tax deductions of the new and improved RRSPs, or to be very interested in locking in pension funds to a registered pension account.

In publishing their report on part-time work, the Commission of Inquiry on Part-time Work recommended the following:

> In view of the lack of Pension coverage in industries where most part-time workers are found, the above recommendations cannot be guaranteed to provide all part-time workers with adequate retirement income. Therefore, the federal Government should work towards expanding the public earnings-related pension system (CPP/QPP) to replace a higher percentage of pre-retirement earnings, preferably, 40 to 50 per cent of the Average Industrial Wage. At the same time, a method should be found to offset to higher contribution rates for low income workers, many of whom are part-time workers.

The recommendation referred to in that quote applies to changes in the Labour Code requiring part-time workers to be included in fringe benefits and pension plans on a pro-rated basis. The problem, of course, is that few employees in the community, business and personal services sector are pension plan members.

Workers in the home or outside the home will not be well served by Liberal promises of pension reform, or for that matter by Conservative Party proposals dependent upon the accumulation of 25 to 30 years of pension contributions before any reasonable amount of inflation protection can be expected.

By rejecting retroactive inflation protection, the 60 per cent CPI inflation protection recommended in the Budget will only apply on contributions made after the implementation of reform discussion, both federally and provincially. Pensioners will continue to see serious erosion of their retirement income earned from private plans for the next 30 to 40 years while once again we wait for private plans to mature, this time through registered pension accounts, inflation protection and earlier vesting.

Instead of improving pensions by increasing contributions and benefits to the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans which provide immediate inflation protection, complete mobility, immediate vesting and application to part-time as well as full-time workers, the Government is willing to risk more years of inadequate post-retirement income for pensioners.

I would like to deal now with the financing of the Quebec and Canada Pension Plans because the detractors of public pensions, such as the National Citizens' Coalition and many Liberal and Conservative Members of Parliament, would have Canadians believe the plan is bankrupt.

Canadians contribute 3.6 per cent of their incomes up to the average industrial wage into the CPP/QPP to provide themselves with a pension of 25 per cent up to the maximum of the AIW which is currently $20,000. These contributions, which are then loaned to provincial governments, have accumulated over $23 billion as of 1983. This accumulation of assets is based on a relatively low contribution rate, one of which was anticipated to increase as early as 1976 but has not done so because current contributions to the plan are adequate to pay benefits to retired plan members. Provinces in fact, up until this time, have not been required to pay interest on the loans from CPP/QPP although they may soon have to. Currrent contributions are adequate for the next 20 years without the fund being bankrupted, as some people would have us believe.

The conclusion of the parliamentary task force was to reject the suggestion that the Canada Pension Plan was bankrupt or suspect because the assets securing its promises are not carried on the books of private corporations. The task force recognized that the capacity of the Canadian economy to meet pension commitments decades from now depends more on our ability to move grain along rail lines, goods through seaways and data via satellites, than does it depend on paper gains that make pension fund managers look good in the short run.

If there are fears about the willingness of provinces to pay back the accumulated loans from the Canada Pension Plan, these fears should be directed at the provinces and not at the Canada Pension Plan, which is functioning as originally intended through a transfer of pension benefits from one generation to the other on a basically pay-as-you-go basis, with no intention to accumulate massive funds through full funding of the plan. In fact, the business sector is adamantly opposed to full funding of the CPP for fear of impact on their own capital markets and government control of huge amounts of pension funds. The CPP/QPP funding mechanism is in fact designed to satisfy the business community and the federal and provincial governments.

Canada's pension system should be expected to meet certain objectives. I believe most expect that we should be able to ensure that Canadians are able to avoid serious disruptions in their standard of living upon retirement or upon the death of a retired spouse. Elderly Canadians should also be provided with a reasonable guaranteed minimum income and with pension opportunities and arrangements that are fair.

By expanding the Canada Pension Plan to meet a greater replacement rate, these criteria can be met without the delay and inadequacies inherent in private sector reform alone. When combined with an Old Age Security increase, Canada Pension Plan expansion and credit splitting, homemakers and part-time workers will be guaranteed better pensions. At page 150 of the minority report I have outlined certain things that will accrue to single elderly people and women in general if in fact the NDP recommendations for increasing Old Age Security and the Canada Pension Plan do in fact accrue. Full-time homemakers will be guaranteed an indexed income above the poverty line. If their spouse was a middle or low-income earner, they will be guaranteed that their standard of living will be maintained when their spouse moves from work to retirement.

Third, homemakers will be guaranteed that their standard of living will be maintained when their spouse dies. They will be provided with the Canada Pension Plan retirement benefits in their own names at age 65. Finally, they will be guaranteed equal treatment with their spouses no matter which one dies first.

We are also anxious to see legislation brought before the House which will at least deal with the most critical problem that elderly Canadians face right now. They are the 600,000 people who live below the poverty line, four-fifths of whom are women, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands. We are skeptical about the time frame for introducing this Bill before Parliament. We certainly have much to say about pension reform and we will be doing so when changes are brought before Parliament.

Specifically, we will be very concerned and will want to know in detail why the Government can find massive amounts of money to increase the tax deductions for high-income earners when it can only find $50 per month for single elderly pensioners and cannot even pass that measure without great delay in the House of Commons.

Once again I thank the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands for providing the House of Commons with what I believe is probably the most important issue facing Canadians today, not only elderly Canadians living in poverty but the entire population which must decide on reforming a pension system that has been woefully inadequate over the last 20 years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I speak to the motion before the House—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I seek the indulgence of the Hon. Member. The Chair did not see the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) rising presumably to put a question.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the previous speaker. In the last couple of weeks, Mr. Peterson, the Liberal Leader of the Opposition in the Ontario Legislature, joined in the chorus of cries of gloom and doom from those who are predicting that the Canada Pension Plan will soon go bankrupt if it has not done so already. That cry was joined a couple of days ago in an editorial in The Globe and Mail. Would the Hon. Member expand on the views of the Parliamentary task force to which he referred which rejected that contention?

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question because I think it is important. Members on the task force had certain concerns themselves about the Canada Pension Plan, its mechanism for funding and its loans to provincial governments. However, in discussing the fears that had been expressed by some individuals to the task force and publicly, provincial governments indicated to us that they had every intention of paying back the contributions that they had received from the Canada Pension Plan and that those funds would be available.

I should also advise the Hon. Member that the Canada Pension Plan fund is essentially a pay-as-you-go fund. This generation of workers is paying for the pensions of those who are retired. There is a recognition that in the future contributions from working Canadians will have to increase because there will be more people on pensions. It is fundamentally a transfer from one generation to the retired generation. As long as the Canadian public has faith in that mechanism, the Canada Pension Plan and Quebec Pension Plan are basically sound. As I say, the CPP has accumulated some $23 billion and we are not even using the interest on that fund yet to pay Canadians their pensions in retirement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Further questions or comments? Debate. The Chair wishes to apologize to the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer) for having aborted his take-off attempt.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You have not aborted my take-off; I am quite prepared to take off at this time.

It is with a great deal of pleasure that I speak to the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) because it is a pertinent topic. I would like to illustrate to the House and the people of Canada how the Liberal Party's use of the words "pension reform" is really a question of mirrors, illusion and smokescreens. The Government has absolutely no intention of bringing in pension reform.

Let us review the history of what the Liberal Government has done in this regard. It is a very brief history. Shortly after it was elected in February of 1980, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), with much fanfare through newspaper advertisements and so on, said that the Government would hold a National Pension Conference. This conference took place a year later, in the spring of 1981. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the then Minister of Finance as well as the Minister of National Health and Welfare appeared at that conference and assured all of the delegates that pension reform was a subject that the Liberal Party would urgently address.

In fact, the Liberal Party made two promises. First, it promised that there would be a conference of first ministers held immediately in order to discuss pension reform. That was in 1981, yet when did that first ministers' conference take place? We are still waiting for it. So much for that particular promise. Second, it promised that it would publish a green paper on pensions within three months. We waited for the entire year of 1981 and much of 1982. I believe we received the green paper toward the end of 1982. This report is contained in a nice glossy booklet. All that we see from the Liberals about pension reform are glossy booklets in both official languages. There is nothing essentially wrong with what is in the book. It was just a repeat of what occurred at the National Pension Conference. There are some things that are wrong, however, but what it did in all of its glossy paper, small books and big books, was to set out what those of us who are involved in pensions already know, that reform was needed.

In the index we find the following comments. Elderly Canadians should be guaranteed a reasonable minimum income; everyone can agree with that. Here is another phrase: "Opportunities and arrangements available to Canadians should be fair to provide for their income". Canadians should be able to avoid serious disruption of their pre-retirement living standards on retirement.

Here is the booklet, Mr. Speaker, and here is the information. This is a very political Party that we have across the way. Its members were not sure who supported this proposal and who supported that proposal. There is at the end of this book a proposal about which they were concerned. The Minister of National Health and Welfare said: "There is a large question of coverage and I think it should be handled one of two ways. One is to increase the CPP and the other is to make mandatory private pensions". That was the real issue behind the green paper and it was the real issue behind the proposal to set up the parliamentary task force. I am sure the Minister of National Health and Welfare did not expect the task force to come up with anything new, but she did expect it to come up with an endorsement of one of those two proposals.

The task force was set up. It reported within a year after a lot of hard work. What happened? It came up with another glossy piece of paper, this time light blue in colour. The social reporters commented that it was a Conservative report. I do not know whether they were talking about the content of the report or the blue label. In any event, the report was well received. The task force did a lot of good work. It set up a very comprehensive scheme for Canadians but it did not do what the Minister of National Health and Welfare wanted it to do. The task force did not endorse mandatory pensions in the private sector, nor did it endorse an increase to 50 per cent of the average industrial wage in the Canada Pension Plan. I can get into that later but I can tell you very good reasons why it did not do that, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister received the report. Her comment was that it did not speak to coverage. But it did speak to coverage in a very efficient way. As so well pointed out by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), it had some very imaginative proposals for dealing with low-income people.

We waited. Then we had the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). We have some more glossy paper. This time it is brown glossy paper. The books have all sorts of nice brown colours on them. There is a very happy couple in the springtime of their retirement shown on the front cover of one. The document again goes all through the lip service and illusions and everything else about which we have heard so much, but the document does not get to the meat of the problem. The proposals do not provide a decent minimum coverage for elderly people. They do not come near that. The proposal of $50 a month over a year still leaves, as the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands said, 600,000 elderly people about $2,000 under the poverty line.

This Government has created illusions and given us smokescreens. It is not really serious. I could ask the question that Mondale asked Senator Hart: "Where is the beef in your program?" Where is the legislation? Surely the Government can bring it forward, Mr. Speaker. We have heard silly excuses from the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell), whom I respect and who was ill at ease when he gave the kind of excuses such as: "The Opposition is not finishing the work with the other legislation and we cannot bring this essential legislation forward". I cannot buy that explanation at all.

Let me come back to why the task force did not follow the Minister's hope and provide an increase in the Canada Pension Plan to 50 per cent of the average industrial wage that was in the minority report. The simple reason, which should be clear to all Canadians, is that at the moment the Canada Pension Plan costs the average person 3.6 per cent of his income; 1.8 per cent is usually paid by the individual employee and 1.8 per cent is usually paid by the employer. A self-employed person pays the whole premium. But that is not a true cost. If the Canada Pension Plan were properly funded, it would cost the average worker 10 per cent of his or her income. Someone may ask from where is that money coming. At the moment we are transferring it to future generations. We are not really covering, with the 3.6 per cent contribution to the CPP, the real cost. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, it is the best bargain anybody ever had in this country.

The New Democratic Party's proposal, which was really the proposal of the Canadian Labour Congress written by a Canadian Labour Congress official, is for an increase to 50 per cent of the average industrial wage. That works out to 20 per cent of a true funded cost. We in the task force were not prepared to have a young taxpayer with a mortgage on his house and raising a family pay 20 per cent of his income, to be transferred to the same generation. There was a consensus throughout the land. The only people who wanted it were those who did not concern themselves about the cost. I remember bringing this point forward in Calgary to a union group. The answer given was: "I am not worried about the cost; where the money comes from is your problem". That is the kind of attitude which the task force could not quite buy.

What about the other proposal which the Minister would have us accept for coverage, namely mandate to the private sector regarding the necessity of providing pensions. In Canada the majority of small businesses do not have pension plans. It is also a fact that the small business community at this time is going through a very difficult period. Small business in Canada provides 80 per cent of the new jobs. I think that figure is fairly accurate. The task force was not prepared to impose additional costs on that segment of the business sector because we felt small businesses were having enough difficulty with the taxes and the paperwork for StatsCanada and so on. It was not the time, if it ever is. Small business should be given an opportunity through the proposals put forth in the task force report to provide those pensions.

Certainly the majority of the members felt that the philosophy behind pensions was that people should be encouraged to provide their own. It should be made easy for them to do so. One should not impose stringent regulations and high costs on one generation to be passed to another.

That is why the task force did not do what the Minister hoped. It is my understanding that there are presently discussions taking place between the federal Government and the provinces. It is also my understanding that when they reach an agreement they will propose some changes in the Canada Pension Plan, perhaps somewhat like those proposed by the task force which were taken up in the Budget papers of the last Budget. But I want to warn Members of this House and Canadians that if that happens they can expect an increase in the cost of their monthly payments, an increase of that 3.6 per cent contribution.

I contend—some people do not agree with me—that the Canada Pension Plan in its present form is really a fraud on Canadians. It is not a pension plan at all. It is merely a system of taxation to get money into the general revenue fund of each province and then there is an obligation by the Government to say: "Fine, we will pay out these funds".

The Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) tried to say that the Canada Pension Plan is not in trouble and that payments should be increased. But what are the facts, Mr. Speaker? Most people in Canada think there is a fund available somewhere as a result of the 3.6 per cent they pay toward the CPP. However, they are very shocked and surprised to learn there is no fund and that any moneys which have proportionately gone to the provinces have been used by the provinces in their general revenue funds. What have they done with that money? They have built roads, they have hired bureaucrats, perhaps they have built schools, and they have lent money to their Crown corporations. Only one province has kept an accurate accounting of where the money has gone. Only one province has made plans to pay it back. Other provinces have said that they are quite capable of paying back the money any time they want, but others have said that they will not pay it back. Of course, some provinces have said that they need that money coming in or they would be not able to survive, so they are the ones who are very interested in seeing it continue.

We do not have a fully-funded plan. The reason for this is that if we had such a plan, it would cost 10 per cent instead of 3.6 per cent. By now $75 billion would have been built up in the fund and it would be in the hands of government. Indeed that would be very dangerous. Who wants government spending $75 billion? They would control all private companies in Canada with that amount of money.

That is the type of situation which exists in Sweden where almost 50 per cent of new capital belongs to the government because of pension funds. Political parties vie to obtain control of that fund. This is why I think no reasonable person would want a fully-funded pension plan.

The task force recommended a pay-as-you-go plan with a cushion of two or three years. That is not what we have in Canada, as the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni said. We have a partially-funded plan. In fact, it is overfunded to the extent of $25 billion right now. I suggest it would be very difficult to get that money back. It is almost impossible for any provincial government to start raising that amount of money and paying it back. They simply will not do it because it is much easier to say that they will improve benefits and increase contribution rates. I guarantee that is what will happen very quickly; we will probably see that in June. The rate they propose will probably be more than that of a pay-as-you-go plan.

At the moment the plan is taking in as much as it is paying out. As I understand it, if the contribution rate is not increased, next year we will be asking the provinces to pay their interest into the plan. So far they have paid interest into the plan and have borrowed it back out again, without it ever reaching the people who should receive the benefits. If the provinces pay back the interest, the plan would not need to be subsidized nor would the contributions need to be increased until about 1991, at which stage they would have to start paying back the $25 billion to keep the plan solvent. I believe that would be gone by the year 2001. In point of fact, if we said that there were to be no further contributions and that the provinces had to pay back the interest and what they owed, the plan would continue without any increase until the year 2001.

The task force did not feel that was a good idea because it would involve a large increase. It felt that the increase in contributions should be gradual, and that is why the major recommendation was that the plan should be phased in over a 25-year period. It was felt that the Government and the provinces should set the rate over the 25 years and review it every five years to ensure that their calculations are correct and that people do not face a sudden increase. Unfortunately, that particular plan will not be accepted because of the difficulties in which the provinces find themselves.

There are those who argue that the provinces should have the money just as much as the private sector, that social capital is just as effective at creating wealth as private capital. That may well be true. I do not think I am prepared to argue that, but the fact of the matter is that a lot of that money was not used as social capital in the sense of building roads, schools, hospitals and dams. Much of it went into the hiring of bureaucrats. Perhaps, with access to easily available money, governments spent more than they would have normally and became involved in spending patterns which we are now trying to avoid.

In negotiations with the provinces, Parliament and the Government have to be very careful. If the Government were so impressed with pension reform, it would have indicated what kind of stance it was taking in its negotiations with the provinces. When this plan was first started—and I will give it credit—the federal Government wanted contributions to be around 1 per cent or 1.5 per cent. It felt that that percentage would be sufficient to fund the plan on a pay-as-you-go basis. However, it gave in to the provinces in order to get its hands on pensions, which are a provincial responsibility. Of course the provinces, God bless them, took as much as they could. This is why the rate was set at 3.6 per cent. They had good statisticians. They knew there would be a large build-up in the fund and that they would have money to spend.

This is why I say that it is a fraud on taxpayers. It is a regressive tax. Those things that they would normally build with social capital, such as schools and churches—perhaps they do not build churches; perhaps in Newfoundland they build churches—are paid for by people with $20,000 incomes. A person with a $20,000 income pays 3.6 per cent of his income to provide such things, whereas a person with a $40,000 income pays 1.8 per cent. Is that fair or reasonable? Yet the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni says that he wants this figure increased to 50 per cent of the average income. That is even more regressive. It is just ridiculous. If we want to go that route, it would be much better to call it a tax and make everyone pay it. It could be a 3.6 per cent or 4 per cent tax against everyone's income, but that is too honest. Governments do not like to be honest. It is too direct. People might understand what is being done to them and would become very unhappy.

I see my time is almost up. Like the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni, I commend the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). I think this Parliament and the people of Canada know that if this Government brings in any pension reforms, particularly with respect to women, it will have been due to the efforts of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands. I hope she continues the fight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it is always interesting to hear the comments of my friend from the task force. However, in rejecting any increase in the Canada Pension Plan and any mandating in the private sector, the Hon. Member did not refer to the additional 50 per cent of the people who at the present time are not covered by private pension plans. In terms of the suggestions either in the Government's budget proposals or in the task force report, how can the Hon. Member see more reliance on the private sector as more opportunity for people to save for retirement if there is no increase in the public pension system or some mandating in the private system?

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, in response to that question, I really do not see anything in the Budget proposals of the Government to solve that problem. There was a considerable number of proposals in the report of the task force. One was RPAs and another was to provide tax credits for people investing in RRSPs. In other words, it would attract the lower income group and make it worth while for them to be involved in a self-help program. In fact, most small businesses today want to become involved in pension schemes, but they want them to be flexible. They do not want them to be mandated. They want people to go into them as they can afford to do so.

You will find, Mr. Speaker, that the response to the registered pension account is very large. In fact, I give the green paper credit for that proposal. The Government brought that proposal forward as an afterthought. It was not very serious, but it was grabbed. Everywhere you went, people were enthusiastic about this. It was made a much more important part of the process than one would have thought. That is why the task force felt there was a real potential here. That is where the coverage for those people will exist. The task force proposal for married people would bring a large number of people into the pension scheme.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, one of the problems is the locked-in aspect of a registered pension account. Once that contribution has been made by the employer and the employee, that is locked in until retirement. That will be a massive disincentive to people on the low-income scale.

The RRSP is already available to individuals and could have been used by employers to give a pension over the last few years. Why does the Hon. Member feel there will be any greater take-up of an RPA than there has been initiatives by private employers to initiate RRSPs for their employees?

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, that is why the Government proposal in the Budget will not work. I agree there is some incentive because it is a locked-in program. That is why the task force suggested the RRSP be frozen and only RPAs be allowed in the future.

Let us examine what we are doing here. We are giving tax credits to people who save for retirement. Once a pension, always a pension. There have been too many examples in the past of people using their RRSPs when they take a leave of absence for a year. They spend the money without having to pay the high taxes. The state may have to support them anyway. If we give them tax breaks for pension accounts, it should be kept in a pension. That is basic.

That is why I am so upset about the Government proposal to increase pensions for those receiving over $50,000. It is the tax dollars of someone earning $20,000 that will pay for the privilege these people will get. That is ridiculous. I might say while I have the opportunity that it is a bureaucrat's proposal. The only reason it is there is because most bureaucrats earn more than $50,000 a year and they want bigger and fatter pensions. That is obviously why they did it.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the very informative and excellent address of the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer). I cannot help but remember the days when he was Mayor of the City of Edmonton and I was one of his constituents. He showed great concern for the rank and file, and he still has that concern. That is why I will ask this question.

There is quite a body of people who will never qualify for a pension because they are not able to contribute, such as housewives and women who stay home to look after a crippled brother, an aged father or a sick mother. They have paid nothing into the Canada Pension Plan.

Several years ago there was a federal disability pension and a provincial one. One almost had to be cold before he got the federal pension. The provincial pension filled in the gap for those who could not work. Today there are people who reach the age where they cannot work, they have no pension and do not know what to do. All they get is welfare.

Did the task force give consideration to this group of people who have never had the opportunity to pay into the Canada Pension Plan and consequently cannot expect to get anything out of it? Will this group always be left high and dry, or do we have something in mind to help them in the years when they need help?

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his kind words. The task force did in fact deal with this. As the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands suggested, the proposal to put married people, men and women, into the pension scheme would include a large portion of those people. We made several proposals to push back the age of eligibility for spouse's allowance, dependant's allowance and survivor's allowance to age 60 in order to fill that gap. We made proposals on disability pensions. We made many proposals which this Government has not taken up.

There is no doubt that the area the Hon. Member mentions is a very serious one. To a large degree it may not be a pension problem but a social welfare problem. Whatever name you call it, a reasonable government has a responsibility to look after these people. We cannot spend all kinds of time and money on corporations and on looking after executives of air companies and then ignore these people.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair should first inquire if there are further questions and comments because there is time remaining. If not, is it agreed that we call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PLEA FOR RELEASE OF MART NIKLUS BY SOVIET AUTHORITIES

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, in February of this year we were informed of the desperate situation of Estonian dissident Mart Niklus, who had been imprisoned by Soviet authorities for his human rights activities. My plea today is probably a last effort to obtain this man's release. Already in poor health from his previous prison terms for human rights activities, he was again imprisoned in 1981 for another 10 years of hard labour and five years of internal exile. After engaging in a hunger strike in October of last year, he has now begun another hunger strike.

I ask the House can a free nation such as Canada stand by helplessly while the Soviet Union persecutes with impunity those who stand up for their rights, rights which we often seem to take for granted, and rights for which people living under Soviet oppression are willing to die? Mart Niklus has already been granted an entrance visa into Canada. On behalf of all Canadians of Estonian heritage, and indeed on behalf of all people of the free world who believe in the freedoms of the individual, I urge the House to do all in its power to obtain Mart Niklus' release and allow him to emigrate to Canada.

STATISTICS CANADA

RELEASE OF ONTARIO DEMOGRAPHIC PROFILE

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, Statistics Canada has recently released, in 10 different languages its demographic profile of Ontario entitled "Ontario Highlights from the 1981 Census". The 1981 census contains a huge array of information on the social, cultural, and economic characteristics of Canadians. The majority of highlights in the demographic profile of Ontario were compiled from the longer form which one-fifth of Canadian householders were asked to complete. The census gives Canadians an in-depth and accurate profile of themselves, as well as detailing how political representation is to be distributed in the House of Commons.

"Ontario Highlights from the 1981 Census" has been printed in the following 10 languages: English, French, German, Ukrainian, Polish, Chinese, Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, and Greek. I feel that Statistics Canada should be commended for making its census data available in so many different languages. An achievement such as this underscores the federal Government's commitment to continuing a practical and progressive implementation of multiculturalism into the fabric of daily Canadian life.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, every time I raise the topic of multiculturalism I get nothing but hoots, howls, and derision from members of the Progressive Conservative Party. In the next election the people of Canada will show their disrespect for that kind of attitude toward a policy of multiculturalism.

FORESTRY

CALL FOR MEASURES TO ENSURE INDUSTRY'S SURVIVAL

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian of Ukrainian descent I am very pleased to speak on behalf of my Party on a very important national topic. As this is National Forest Week, it is a good time for Canadians to face up to the reality that we are destroying our forests and the jobs that go with the vital forestry industry.

The Canadian Forestry Service was once a proud world leader in forestry research and management techniques. This golden age of the federal Forestry Service was encouraged and supported by the Diefenbaker Government in 1960. Since the advent of the Liberal Government in the mid-1960s, there has been an inverse relationship between the length of time the Liberals have been in power and the amount of real support that has been given to the forestry sector. In most respects the treatment of our forests over the past two decades has been an ignoble sham.

Increased public awareness, and solid representation and support from members of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, have brought forestry issues to the fore. The Government must respond to these issues. It must take significant steps to secure the survival of a $24 billion Canadian industry that supports one million Canadian jobs.

The Government of Canada must take the lead. It must commit itself to acting to restore forestry to departmental rank, and to working co-operatively with the provinces, territories and industries to secure this vital component of Canada's future. Without this commitment, National Forest Week will become a week of national mourning.

AIR TRANSPORT

EXPRESSION OF THANKS TO MINISTER FOR NEW POLICY

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this morning we were honoured to receive the Hon. Minister before the Standing Committee on Transport. The Minister came to table his new policy, Canada's policy on air transportation. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all my constituents in the Lower St. Lawrence and Gaspé area, I must say I am delighted with the proposals that were made and that are being submitted to the Canadian people.

Basically, this policy demonstrates the Government's confidence in the ability of Canada's air transportation industry to sustain increased competition. With the Minister, I would say that the airlines will now have an opportunity to be more productive and more competitive. Consumers will thus benefit from a wider range of prices and services.

I would also like to draw the attention of my fellow Canadians to the fact that deregulation of air fares and air routes does not apply to safety regulations, which must be observed at all times in air transportation. The Canadian Transport Commission and the Department of Transport will continue to give special attention to safety precautions. As for the policy we are discussing today, it concerns deregulation of air fares and airlines, so that airline companies will be able to compete with each other, for the greater benefit of all air travellers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The time of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has now expired.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

DEMAND FOR INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, for several months the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board have been promising prairie farmers the return of some of their contributions to the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. Both opposition Parties have indicated that there is agreement to assist in making speedy changes to the Act to make it more responsive to the income needs of farmers.

More than two weeks ago the two Ministers issued a nine-page press release outlining the effect of their proposed legislation on farmers. They indicated how the per unit trigger mechanism would be more sensitive to price declines, how a full change to a crop year basis would more accurately reflect costs and speed up pay-outs, and how the five-year crop averaging period would yield larger pay-outs of up to $300 million. For a farmer who has contributed the maximum levy, that would amount to a pay-out of about $5,000.

That is what the Ministers have said, Mr. Speaker, but they have done nothing since. There has been no Bill placed before the House, and no concrete action has been taken to show that the Ministers really mean to make a pay-out now when farmers need it.

Why has the Bill not been presented to the House? Why must farmers wait to get their own money back? Why does the Minister continue to delay the pay-out? Does he intend for the pay-out to be seen only as an election campaign goody rather than as an entitlement for which pre-payment was made by western farmers in good faith?

THE MEDIA

CORRECTION OF STORY BY TORONTO STAR

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, on April 4 and April 15, I mentioned in the House that The Toronto Star had written a very disparaging article about the city of Chicoutimi. Since then, after I had spoken personally to the reporter, Mr. David Miller, and to one of the newspaper's officials, Mr. Gerry Hall, The Toronto Star sent another team to meet the authorities of the city of Chicoutimi.

After criticizing this newspaper, which I consider very respected and reputable, I must inform the House that the reporter retracted what he wrote about Chicoutimi and the Saguenay. I might add that I appreciate the very professional attitude of the reporters, in the circumstances, and I also wish to congratulate The Toronto Star on its integrity. Mr. Speaker, I hope that other reporters will take The Toronto Star as an example and, when they make a mistake, take the trouble to correct their story.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish the same team would come back to the Saguenay and do another article on the region's economy, to let Canadians know about the advantages offered by this region to future investors in the industrial sector.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CANDIDATES IN LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, as a casual and somewhat disinterested observer of the Liberal leadership race to choose an interim Prime Minister, I can give you an objective assessment of what is looked upon by the majority of Canadians as an exercise in futility. Neglecting also-rans such as "the Boss Hogg of Canadian politics", and "the bath-tub mangler from Hamilton", the impoverished Grits are left with only two real contestants.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) is running as an apologist for the status quo. He has everything that the current Prime Minister of Canada has, except, of course, intelligence. Our corporate lawyer friend from Bay Street, however, is busily condemning every single Liberal policy, including those such as deficit financing which he himself started. Yesterday he said: "I joined the Liberal Party two decades ago because I believed in helping those Canadians who need help". Is that why he spent most of those two decades as a director of Canadian Pacific Railway?

At the Turner lunch yesterday—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

Some Hon. Members: More!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—CRITICISM OF UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, last night we were treated to another outrageous statement by the President of the United States with respect to Central America. Once again the President has asked Congress for massive military aid to help what he calls "the vulnerable democracies of Central America against communist enslavement". Does the American President really believe that Americans and their allies are so blind or so stupid as to believe that the system which he supports in Central America, in Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, and formerly in Nicaragua, are by any stretch of the imagination true democracies which honour justice and freedom?

For generations these poor countries in Central America have been run by cruel military oligarchies which have oppressed, exploited, and killed thousands of their citizens and the United States has benignly supported them. If there is any Government in Central America which is a vulnerable democracy, it is the revolutionary Government of Nicaragua which, unfortunately the Reagan Government is trying to destroy by assisting ex-Somosans and other reactionaries.

This week in this House the President of Mexico warned us that the problems of Central America could not be solved by military means or by foreign intervention. Let us ask our American friends to refuse the President's wild demands and to truly—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

METRIC CONVERSION

CALL FOR RESTORATION OF FREEDOM OF CHOICE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, western Canada was surveyed in square miles, our roads are built and measured in miles, our farms are measured in acres and sections, and our agricultural products are bought and sold in gallons and pounds and tons. Where it was necessary, for example, in the sale of wheat to metric countries, for years the conversion was made at the time of sale by the Wheat Board. Everyone was happy, that is, except for this totalitarian oriented Liberal Government which brought in compulsory metric. The provincial Governments were duped into accepting it, and farmers then received their wheat cheques based on tonnes and, in spite of the utter confusion that resulted, acres were replaced with fractional hectares, and miles with kilometres.

"I am a stranger in my own country", a farmer said to me. "The Government suddenly changed the measurements that I learned in school and used all my life. Now I don't know what I'm selling or what I am getting for a bushel".

Well one provincial Government has now come to its senses and at least has made a start in reflecting the thinking of its people. This year the Alberta Government ordered that all publications and material printed by government Departments be in acres as well as hectares when referring to land measurements.

Sir John A. Macdonald in 1871 gave Canadians freedom of choice to use imperial or metric. Will this Liberal Government now disband the Metric Commission which has provided loyal Liberals with high paying jobs, costing Canadians more than $50 million, and restore the freedom of choice provided by Sir John?

FINANCE

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—IMPACT ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. Would the Minister of State indicate if he feels it is inconsistent government policy, on the one hand to attempt to create employment and, on the other hand, follow a high interest pattern, bearing in mind that for every 1 per cent increase in our prime rate 25,000 Canadian jobs are ended? It is like putting out of work all of those working for British Columbia Packers Limited, the Campbell Soup Company Ltd., Canadian Tire Corp., Coca-Cola Ltd., Dome Petroleum, McCain Foods Limited, and McDonnell Douglas Canada Ltd., all in one fell swoop. How can the Minister justify that kind of interest rate structure?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, no one rejoices at higher interest rates. We do not on this side of the House. I am sure that the Hon. Member does not either. No one can be happy with increases in interest rates, but the Hon. Member opposite should understand that interest rates in Canada are a direct reflection of interest rates in the United States.

The Hon. Member knows full well that in the United States interest rates over the past months have been increasing as a result of two factors; high government deficit and hence high government borrowing combined with economic recovery. That has placed pressures on the price of money, which has driven up interest rates in the United States. In those circumstances, operating in a free money market between Canada and the United States or between Europe and the United States, money flows from Canada or from western Europe into the United States, seeking higher returns. In those circumstances, Canada or, indeed, Germany this past week, has one of two options. It can either let interest rates move upward in response to the situation in the United States, or allow the value of the Canadian dollar to reduce.

The Bank of Canada has been acting to moderate fluctuations, but the principal challenge—

Mr. Nielsen: Enough!

Mr. MacLaren: —facing Canadian economic management and the management of European economies or, indeed, of any industrialized countries, is the situation in the United States where interest rates have been increasing.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF JUSTICE—CANADA AND UNITED STATES UNEMPLOYMENT RATES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, again I direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister undoubtedly has witnessed Iona and the Seven Dwarfs proceeding to their leadership convention. He has undoubtedly noted that certain of the dwarfs have made statements. For example, the Minister of Justice, sometimes referred to as "Sleepy" has stated, and I quote:

> We all know, basically, how to stimulate the economy to create employment.

Would the Minister indicate to the House if he has consulted with the Minister of Justice, who apparently has the answers?

Second, would he indicate to the House, in relation to the American reference which he has just made, why its unemployment rate is at 7.8 per cent while ours is at a level which results in 442,000 more Canadians being out of work in this country compared to the number which would be out of work if we had the same rate of unemployment as there is in the United States?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the Hon. Member's first question is no. The answer to the second question is that we have been creating jobs in Canada at a rate faster than in the United States.

Mr. Oberle: You mean, recycling jobs faster.

• (1420)

Mr. MacLaren: The fact is, as the Member should know, during the past year we have created jobs at a record level. Equally we have seen a growth in our labour force which has exceeded that of almost any other industrialized country. In other words, as fast as we have been creating additional jobs more people have joined the work force. The basic fact is that government policies, whether direct government support for job creation or policies intended to encourage private sector job creation, have been successful in creating jobs at record rates.

COMPARISON OF INTEREST RATES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister indicate why Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and Switzerland have an interest rate structure no higher than 8 per cent at a time when we have to live with 12 per cent and rising? In addition, if he has not consulted with the Minister of Justice, would he indicate whether he has consulted one of the other dwarfs, Bashful, sometimes referred to as John Turner, to find out why he seeded the mess in the period from 1972 to 1976, which the Government has now inherited?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should recognize that the prime rate in Canada has been running at one half a percentage point below that of the United States. We have maintained in past months a substantial difference in the prime rate between our two countries. The Hon. Member refers to Germany. If he looked at the facts he would see that the German Central Bank in recent weeks has recognized that interest rates in Germany will probably have to increase in response to the situation in the U.S.

There is a broadly based concern throughout the OECD member countries about U.S. interest rate policies. But that concern is not limited only to those member states; it also exists in the United States itself. The chairman of the Federal Reserve system has expressed serious concern about the Government's deficit management and the fact that interest rates are going up. That situation affects all countries in the world. The Hon. Member should recognize that.

PROPOSED MORTGAGE RATE PROTECTION PROGRAM

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance and relates to the effect escalating interest rates are having on the housing industry and jobs. I have 20 years' experience in this industry and I know that every housing start represents 2.5 jobs. Starts are down drastically in 1984. Builders, big or small, have lost most of their equity in the last two and a half years of depression, as it was described by the Minister of Finance, and are now merely working on revolving loans. Therefore, will the Minister tell the House why the interest stabilization program, or the mortgage rate protection program, proposed three months ago, is taking so long to implement? Why has the Government waited when it knows, with its deficit-spending policies, that the interest rate was bound to spiral upwards?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may recall that the Minister of Finance on several occasions has indicated to the House that the mortgage interest rate protection plan will be introduced in the House shortly. The Member may also recall that in the budget speech of February the Minister stated that this innovative program required consultation with the private sector. Given our tradition of budget secrecy it was not impossible, of course, to carry out those consultations prior to the tabling of the Budget. However, he said, it would be necessary to consult with the construction industry, the mortgage money industry, consumers, and a range of interested institutions about the details of the program. Those consultations have been going forward. I am pleased to say that they have been constructive and positive. It is my expectation they will be concluded in a brief time. As I said, the Minister of Finance indicated on several occasions that we shall introduce the necessary legislation shortly.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, consultations with those industries will lead to their annihilation because there will be no private sector left. With 15 per cent and 16 per cent mortgage rates, Mr. Speaker, they cannot sell homes, and there will be no industry.

INCREASE IN MORTGAGE RATES

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, housing starts in 1983 were 179,000, and the projected rate for 1984, seasonally adjusted, is 126,000. In light of that, has the Government any proposals or contingency plans to deal with these 15 per cent and 16 per cent mortgage interest rates? I understand the rate has gone up approximately one half per cent today.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to have overlooked the fact that the mortgage rate protection plan will be retroactive to March 1 for new and renewed mortgages. He should realize that when the legislation is brought to the House he and other Members will have a full opportunity to make their contributions. But he should understand that the legislation is effective as of March 1 this year.

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA RATE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I would like to direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He will have become aware in the last few minutes that the central bank rate has gone up more than half a percentage point and is now in excess of 11.5 per cent. Six month T-Bills are up to 12.5 per cent, which means that the prime rate in Canada will be going up in the next few days for home owners, farmers, small businessmen and the like.

This trend line has been demonstrated for the last number of weeks, yet the Minister of Finance keeps telling us that there is nothing he can really do, that he is basically a financial eunuch and he has to look to Paul Volker in the United States for guidance. Will the Prime Minister of Canada tell us today whether he agrees that there is nothing the Minister of Finance of the Government of Canada can do to keep interest rates from continuing to increase?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not agree with the phraseology of the Hon. Member. He refers to changes in interest rates today and yesterday. If he referred to the answers just given by the Minister of State for Finance he would see that the question was dealt with very competently. What Hon. Members opposite seem to forget is that, in order to borrow money at a reasonably low interest rate, you have to find lenders who are prepared to lend their money at a low interest rate. That means Canadian savers who want to lend money at a rate substantially less than they can get across the border in New York. I do not know many lenders who will, out of a spirit of nationalism, lend their money to Canadians at a rate lower than they can get in the United States. This is not blaming our plight on the United States. It is just stating an obvious economic fact of international financial marketing.

Currencies from all over the world have been flowing to the U.S., including Canadian currency, for the past few years since the Americans have had very high interest rates. That is why the Canadian dollar, the Deutschemark, the yen, all currencies, including the very strong ones, have fallen against the American dollar. Incidentally, the Canadian dollar has fallen less than all those other currencies. That is not too complicated, Mr. Speaker.

From the point of view of the borrowers, everyone would like to borrow at a lower interest rate, but you have to find lenders who are prepared to lend at a lower interest rate. Until the NDP or the Tory Party can give us a pool of such lenders who are prepared to lend at rates below the market, then we will sort of be bound by market rates.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF BANK ACT TO PROVIDE LOWER INTEREST RATE SPREAD

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, reports which we have received over the last number of months have indicated one of the reasons interest rates are high to the consumers of Canada, whether one is seeking a mortgage, a small business loan or a farm loan from the chartered banks particularly is that the differential between what the banks are charging and what they are giving their depositors is larger than it has ever been in Canadian history. That is because the Bank Act provides for that.

The Government has indicated a real interest in opening up the Bank Act to assist the foreign banks. This would be a breaking of precedent of its 10 year rule. If the Government is going to ask us to open the Bank Act to assist foreign banks operating in Canada, does the Prime Minister not feel it would be appropriate to amend the Bank Act to provide a lower interest rate spread so that Canadian consumers would receive some benefit?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member conveniently neglected to remind the House that the Bank Act was opened to make the banks more competitive. This was done in order to benefit the consumers and borrowers. The Hon. Member can comment on whether it has that effect or not. However, that is why we opened the Bank Act.

With regard to the Hon. Member's question, I would suggest it is a different one. It has to do with banking profits and so on. The Minister discussed those, and I am sure he would be prepared to discuss them again. He has indicated that profits were high but had been very low, and so on.

I take it from the Hon. Member's line of attack that he and his Party are now prepared to concede that when the basic rate in the United States goes up, it is impossible for Canadian rates not to go up. I am not talking about excess profits. I am seeking an admission from him that we cannot divorce ourselves from the American money markets.

SPECULATOR TAX SUGGESTED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is very clear from the Prime Minister's answer that he is seeking our position on interest rates. I would like to inform the Prime Minister of Canada that we feel it is now time to take an independent position. It is now time for Canadians to say that we are not going to let Paul Volker in the United States dictate what happens to our recovery here in this country. We would like to see the Governor of the Bank of Canada, as directed by Parliament, take steps to reduce those—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I invite the Hon. Member to ask his supplementary question. Within the framework and time allowed, a debate can be very difficult for the Chair to regulate. According to the rules, this is supposed to be a Question Period. Would the Hon. Member ask his supplementary question?

Mr. Riis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just responding to the question of the Prime Minister. Considering that if Canada takes an independent position there may be a tendency for speculative money to flow out of the country, would the Prime Minister be willing to consider the imposition of a speculators' tax to remove the possibility of speculators moving out of the country? A ceiling of $100,000 or even $500,000 could be provided so that 99.9 per cent of Canadians would not be adversely impacted.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can vent his spleen as much as he wants against Paul Volker. I carry no brief for Mr. Volker's monetary policies or, for that matter, for those of the administration. In point of fact the Minister of Finance, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and myself have taken issue with the United States on their high interest rates. We have indicated that they have various consequences, not only on Canada but on investments throughout the developing world.

We can always criticize Mr. Volker, but I notice that the Hon. Member conveniently side-stepped my earlier point that until he has supplied us with a pool of Canadian savers who are prepared to lend at a rate lower than the American rate, we cannot force them to lend their savings at a lower rate.

EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for small business. The highest level of potential job creation exists within the small business sector. Likewise, the largest number of jobs are lost in small business when high interest rates are allowed to continue to rise as they have risen again today. Can the Minister responsible for small business tell us what specific representations he has made to Cabinet or to the Minister of Finance which would protect this vital sector from high interest rates? More important, how successful have those representations been?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the Government believes very strongly in the role of small business in pulling the country into a period of economic recovery. That was the main emphasis of the February 15 Budget. The Minister included a number of items in that Budget specifically designed to assist small business. Through the Small Business Loans Act over 25,000 small businesses in Canada got loans last year which they otherwise probably would not have received. I think that is a pretty clear indication of a commitment to the small business sector.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, the Minister should clean his ears out. I asked him about high interest rates and representations he has made to the Minister of Finance. He did not respond to that question.

TOURIST INDUSTRY

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): My supplementary question will be on the same basis, but in respect to the area of tourism, for which the Minister is also responsible. That is also a very high intensive labour area. As a result of the Government's continued policy of high interest rates and over taxation, potential job creation in that area is being seriously threatened.

I hope the Minister is listening carefully. As the Minister responsible for tourism can he tell us what specific representations he has made to Cabinet or the Minister of Finance which would ease the burden of high interest rates and over taxation within this vital sector? How successful have those representations been? Will the Minister please direct his answer to my question?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting to hear the approach of the Hon. Member. He is a well known believer in the free enterprise system, in market forces, in the law of supply and demand, and one who does not believe in intervention. The Government, however, does believe in intervention in certain areas. With regard to tourism, we have literally doubled our advertising budget in the United States this year to get more customers to come to Canada, to help the tourist industry.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, if I can get his attention. We are experiencing a rapid rise in interest rates similar to the 1980-82 period. During that time auto and truck sales slumped from 1,400,000 vehicles to 920,000 vehicles, a 34 per cent reduction. The auto industry was the key factor in the recent recovery. What is the Government planning to do to protect jobs in this important sector when, according to the Conference Board of Canada, the Canadian consumer has lost confidence in spending money?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first of all interest rates are not climbing like they did in the period the Hon. Member mentioned. Second, I am glad to see that the Hon. Member finally recognizes the fact that the resurgence of the auto industry in Canada is due in large part to what the Government of Canada has done to assist the industry in the last couple of years. Third, Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member reads the speech I gave a couple of weeks ago he will see that we probably have more potential investments in the auto industry sitting on our desk right now than we have had at any time in the last five years put together.

TASK FORCE REPORT—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, those jobs are great sitting on the Minister's desk. I would like to point out to the Minister that he has also had the auto task force report sitting on his desk for one year. He has made no comment, taken no action, and will not deal with the industry on this.

What is the Government going to do to protect the jobs of the employees of the automotive manufacturers other than talking about $2 billion sitting on his desk? What is he going to do to protect the jobs which are there now?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member is a very busy Member of Parliament. Therefore I will send him all the documentation of responses we have made to the auto task force report.

First, it was through the efforts of my predecessor and the Members of Parliament on our side from the Windsor area that the Chrysler Corporation, and about 11,000 permanent jobs, were saved in this country. Second, there has been a recall of over 25,000 workers in the auto industry alone, almost back to pre-recession levels in the auto industry.

I think the Hon. Member saw an article in the paper the other day which indicated that the price gap between North American automobiles and foreign cars is closing. Much of that has come as a result of actions taken by Ministers of the Crown on this side of the House.

AIR TRANSPORT

MINISTER'S POLICY ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who is proceeding into a jungle. I do not know if he is the new Tarzan. He says that Canadians can have lower airfares. He knows that I submitted a brief to the CTC supporting lower air fares for Canadians without the madness of deregulation with which he is proceeding. Can he guarantee that all Canadians, not just those who happen to live in our six largest cities, will be eligible for lower and discount fares, and guaranteed service of any kind?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to say that I am not Tarzan, and I do not think that the Hon. Member looks like Bo Derek either.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: With that sense of humour you could have been leader.

Mr. Axworthy: I am just trying to match the standard of my colleagues. With respect to the serious point of the question raised by the Hon. Member, the fact of the matter is that we are moving toward a liberalization of the air industry which is a word that I hope is most compatible and harmonious to all Members in the Chamber.

We are attempting to free up that industry for it to begin making decisions to allow the consumers more choices in both frequency of service and in the kind of prices from which they can choose in order to get greater opportunities to fly and travel. We are trying to move away from a system which is dictated by government decision, and to put the onus on people in the industry and allow the consumer to be able to elicit the kind of choices and opportunities that we believe exist.

I know that that is not a philosophy that is adopted by the New Democratic Party, but this Party happens to believe in the system of growth that is based upon initiatives of private people given the freedom to exercise that initiative.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: While Jungle Jim mouths those phrases, the jungle that is already in place has meant that places like Regina, Saskatoon, and Halifax have become deserted by CP Air. There are people who had to drive from Saskatoon to Calgary and then fly to Toronto, to get to Mexico on discount fares. He had no guarantees in his announcement today.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member asks his question?

SERVICE TO SMALL COMMUNITIES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister knows very well that most of the markets in Canada are not large enough to sustain more than one or two airlines, can he guarantee under his jungle policy that he can prevent carriers on these routes into the smaller centres from charging fares as high as they like, or prevent them from not flying at all—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member should really ask a supplementary question. Will the Hon. Member bear in mind that a supplementary question should be precise?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have already put two questions in 30 seconds.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member has put two supplementaries, maybe the Minister could answer one of them.

Mr. Benjamin: Will he prevent carriers from charging all they like on routes for which they do not provide discount fares?

Mr. Friesen: Take your time, Les.

Mr. Benjamin: Will he protect smaller communities from not having any service at all from major or regional carriers? What protection is he providing for all those other communities and people who do not happen to live in Montreal, Toronto, or Vancouver?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out to the Hon. Member and members of the committee this morning when I appeared before them and tabled the document, it would be worth while for members to read that document and therefore get the answer to those very questions which the Member has posed.

What we are quite clearly setting out is an opportunity for many smaller communities to have a much broader range and frequency of service compared to what they have now. We believe that there is a strong pent-up energy in the airline industry that is waiting to be liberated to provide those kinds of services, while at the same time still using the auspices of the Canadian Transport Commission to follow through on the application of licences as they have in the past. That is what we followed very clearly in phase one of the approach, and we will be providing a reference that we hope to bring to the House that will take a longer look at further avenues of liberalization that we can follow.

I think that all the Hon. Member is engaging in is a series of scare tactics. Those are not the conditions which we are applying. We are attempting to apply an objective and purpose for a healthy and vital airline industry so that we can get some growth back into that industry, just like we want to have growth in the entire Canadian economy.

AIR FARES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, in January the Minister of Transport promised that Canadian air travellers would have lower fares by this spring. On the basis of the policy that has been announced this morning, may I ask the Minister when he expects these low fares to take effect? Can he assure the House that he will be able to live up to his commitment wherein he stated that fares would be reduced by 20 per cent to 30 per cent as a result of his deregulation policy?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, to answer the Hon. Member, what we said in January was that we intended to have a new policy in place this spring that would provide the framework within which the private sector and the airline industry could begin making the kinds of management decisions and choices that would lead to lower air fares. The Hon. Member himself is the author of a letter that he sent to me recommending that we go on a phased approach, which is what we are following. The Hon. Member obviously does not want to follow his own advice. I am always available and open to the advice of Hon. Members opposite, when it makes sense. That was one of the few times that the Hon. Member's advice did make some sense. That is what we are prepared to follow.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, what is at issue here is not the Hon. Member for Vegreville but the credibility of the Minister of Transport and whether or not one can believe him.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, the Government vowed to reduce air fares by spring. Is the Minister going to provide reduced air fares by spring and, if so, by how much?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I suppose that credibility depends on how much one is prepared to live up to the commitments. We made a commitment for a new policy. You have a new policy today, unlike the Hon. Member, when he was Minister of Transport, who promised new policies and they were never seen.

Mr. Mazankowski: You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Axworthy: The fact of the matter is that since January there has been an entire series of announcements by all the airlines in Canada about a whole series of discount fares for senior citizens, young people, and across the board fares to every point in Canada.

Mr. Mazankowski: You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Axworthy: The fact of the matter is that we are now providing a new policy that will allow airlines to apply for new licences, new routes, and to have a much wider flexibility in setting their own prices without having to go to the CTC for approval.

We happen to believe that by putting our trust and confidence in the major partners in the airline industry to use those new freedoms to make those choices, they will bring the kind of service and choices to the consumer that will enable low prices to be brought in. We are proving that we have faith and confidence in the private sector, not like the Hon. Member who obviously wants us to dictate prices again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF BENEFITS FOR ATLANTIC FISHERMEN

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Two days ago I asked the Minister what he was going to do for the thousands of fishermen in the four Atlantic provinces and in a portion of Quebec where the ice is packed on shore. Fishermen are unable to get out and fish, and unemployment insurance benefits will be cut off next week. I would like to ask the Minister again—he has had 48 hours—what is the decision?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I promised the Hon. Member a couple of days ago I would discuss this matter with my colleagues in Cabinet, and I promised to try to obtain an answer in response to his representation as quickly as I could. He has not given me much time to do that. But I should tell the Hon. Member that I was successful today in convincing my Cabinet colleagues that we should respond to this very real and pressing situation as a matter of urgency, that we should follow the pattern we had previously followed in 1974, I think it was, and make special arrangements to ensure that the fishermen who have been so adversely affected by the high degree of ice infestation in the area are supported, supported in effect with what are the equivalent of unemployment insurance payments, though not technically so, since they are ex gratia payments, as long as this situation exists as one of difficulty.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: The Hon. Member asked me to show leadership, Mr. Speaker. I believe I have confirmed his expectations.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Now if the rest of you would get off your seats, we would get something done.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES ON FARMERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister is aware that high interest rates, more than any other single factor, are forcing Canadian farmers off the land in near record numbers. As a direct result small businesses are being forced to close, and a countless number of jobs have been lost. Now that interest rates are rising once more, will the Minister tell us, according to his estimation, how many more Canadian farmers will be forced off the land this year, and what solution does he have to offer to the problem of high interest rates?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member uses one economic factor as being the reason for farmers going bankrupt. He knows that is wrong. In his own province the farmers in need of funding, loans, and moneys to operate this year need funding because they have had bad crops and low commodity prices. Those are the main reasons, not the interest rates. The interest rates were not a factor for the last two years. Farmers have received special subsidy loans to the tune of 4 per cent and 5 per cent, and in some instances they have had loans with interest rates as low as 8.75 per cent. But that did not save them. They had bad crops at the same time and no product with which to pay their bills, regardless of the interest rate. Yes, we are concerned about interest rates Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member has just made statements about what we should do but he has not said how we should do it.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): One of the reasons we have a Government with a responsibility to govern, Mr. Speaker, is that we expect it to provide the answers. This Government has a few more months in which to do that.

Mr. Cook: Weeks.

MINISTER'S ADVICE

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. Bearing in mind that there are two million unemployed Canadians at this point, what recommendations does the Minister have to offer to those young farmers who are being forced off the land in terms of where they should go to seek employment?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the retraining programs available through the Department of Employment and Immigration, of course, are there. He says many young farmers are being forced off the land. I would like the Hon. Member to be more precise. We have had more young farmers enter agriculture in the last 10 years than in the previous 20 years. The average age for farmers has gone down from 54 years of age to 49 years of age. There are more young people engaged in agriculture now than there have been for the last 30 years, and they are not all into bankruptcy either. If they follow Whelan's philosophy and organize themselves into marketing boards and have some say about prices, those young farmers will not go bankrupt.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: They listened to the Conservative philosophy that the great free market system was going to take care of them, and it did not take care of them.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour was in the House just a moment ago, and my question is for him. Perhaps I can wait until he returns.

ASSISTANCE SOUGHT FOR REFUGEE PHYSICIANS

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Canadian Medical Association recommended to the Minister that a program of economic support be established for refugee physicians who can find unfunded internship programs in teaching hospitals to meet Canadian licensing standards.

In a recent letter to me the Minister mentioned he would consider the possibility of providing financial assistance to refugee doctors, and I stress refugee doctors, who obtain unpaid positions. Now that his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has convinced the provinces to convince the teaching hospitals to provide more unfunded positions, would the Minister show leadership, as he did in my colleague's case, and provide this financial assistance under the post-secondary job creation programs, to these refugee physicians so they can become qualified in Canada and practise the profession they are trained to follow?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think that in my letter to the Hon. Member I said that I would be pleased to do that provided I had the accord of the provincial Governments in taking such an approach. I promised to place the matter on the agenda for discussion with the provinces. I have done that. It will be discussed at the federal-provincial advisory committee on health and manpower resources sometime in June.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Some 4,500 Canadian workers have died and 60,000 have been disabled on the job in Canada in the three years, and under three Labour Ministers, which have passed since the former Minister of Labour, now the Minister for International Trade, said in a speech in the spring of 1981 that the Government would be introducing into the House its long awaited amendments to Parts III, IV, and V of the Canada Labour Code "in the near future".

Almost four months have passed, another 500 workers have died and another 6,500 have been disabled, since the beginning of this Session, the time by which the present Minister last September promised me introduction of the Bill.

The Minister referred to earlier had also promised my Party's labour critic that the NDP task force on occupational health and safety, in recognition of its acquired knowledge, would be fully briefed and consulted prior to introduction of the Bill. Will the Minister now inform us exactly on which date he will introduce this legislation? Second, will he keep his predecessor's and his Cabinet colleague's promise to consult fully with the NDP task force representatives before introduction? Finally, and most important—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. One question at a time. The Hon. Minister of Labour.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to give the Hon. Member the assurance that the Bill will be tabled in the House next week. Second, if the Official Critic for the New Democratic Party is available, I or one of my departmental officials will be happy to brief him on this Bill. Unfortunately, it is hard to tell who the Official Critic for labour is in this Party. They seem to change every month!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Kootenay West on a short supplementary question. If the Hon. Member is going to ask a series of detailed questions, let me just point out to him that they should be placed on the Order Paper.

Mr. Kristiansen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. But I should say in answer to the Minister that the NDP has had only one labour critic since the beginning of 1980. They have had three Ministers of Labour and four years of unkept promises. That is enough of that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, after this four year delay, will the Minister now guarantee full and adequate House and committee time for consideration of this most important Bill before any summer recess or prorogation? If not, does the Minister think that Mr. McDermott's phrase of "sleazy Liberals" is justified?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the Bill is tabled in the House, I intend to ask my colleagues on both sides of the House to arrange to expedite it as quickly as possible. I am sure the Hon. Member will be giving his full co-operation.

As for who the Official Critic is for the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member, who has a very loud voice, could perhaps let me know after oral question period whether he is the critic or his colleague from Kootenay-East-Revelstoke, because for several weeks I have been dealing with the latter Member.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR RADIATION EXPOSURE—DEMAND FOR EXPERT MEDICAL EVIDENCE

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. He must be aware of the high rate of cancer found in servicemen who have been exposed to nuclear radiation. Why is his Department still insisting that each of these individuals produce expert medical evidence before he can qualify for a pension and for treatment?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this group of veterans, the same as any others, are entitled to make application to the Pension Commission for consideration of their cases. The Hon. Member should be aware that we have commissioned a study by the University of Ottawa of this particular group of veterans. We expect to receive a total analysis of their case, and a recommendation arising from the study, later this fall.

Mr. McKinnon: Surely the Minister is aware that the Department of National Defence has also been conducting a study of this matter for two years.

CASE LAW—REQUEST FOR ACCEPTANCE OF PRECEDENT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the Pension Act is supposed to operate on the case law principle. The Department has accepted in some cases, such as that of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Owen Browne, that cancer was caused by exposure to radiation. Why is the Minister not willing to accept that case as a precedent for all servicemen who were exposed to nuclear radiation and subsequently developed cancer?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that particular matter within the medical profession is an issue on which there are varied opinions. As a result of these varied opinions we have initiated a study of those who were actually involved in radiation exposure, whether it be the Chalk River clean-ups or the Nevada testings. Hopefully the conclusion of the study will throw some light on the acceptable principles which should apply to consideration of those cases before the Pension Commission.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, May 9, 1984, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, could the Government House Leader outline for the House the anticipated business for tomorrow and into next week?

Mr. Pinard: Yes, it would be a pleasure, Mr. Speaker. We had a meeting of House Leaders this morning at which we agreed to the following motion. If there is unanimous consent, and I was told there would be, I would suggest that the question be put. Therefore I move:

That when the House adjourns on Thursday, June 14, 1984, it shall stand adjourned until Monday, June 18, 1984.

An Hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Pinard: Because of a very important event in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. President of the Privy Council to present the motion?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, in the usual non-partisan spirit around here and since the Liberal Party needs all the help it can get, we are quite prepared to give unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, as far as the business of the House is concerned, I wish to thank the Hon. Members Opposite for returning the favour we did them a few months ago.

Tomorrow, we shall resume consideration of Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. Should the debate on this subject be completed before the end of the day, we shall proceed with second reading of Bill C-10, to amend the Divorce Act. Monday and Tuesday, if we have finished consideration of Bill C-32, we shall resume consideration of the second reading stage of Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. However, if we have not finished consideration of Bill C-32, we shall be considering this Bill as well as Bill C-24, being the second Bill pending.

As far as next Tuesday and Thursday are concerned, both will be Opposition Days. I therefore officially designate next week Tuesday and Thursday as Opposition Days. All of this, of course, is subject to change.

Mr. Speaker, I might add that there have been discussions about several Bills that are now on the Order Paper and about other legislation that soon will be. These negotiations are taking place at the Parliamentary House Leaders' level, and I am confident that within the next few days, we can make Parliament far more productive than it has been in the last two weeks.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make the matter quite clear so that there is no misunderstanding. Would the Government House Leader confirm that for tomorrow Bill C-32, with back-up Bill C-10, will be the business of the House, but that on Monday, depending upon the disposition of Bill C-32, it will be Bill C-32 with the back-up of Bill C-24? If consideration of Bill C-32 is finished on either Friday or Monday, will he confirm that on Monday we will proceed with Bill C-24? Could the Government House Leader indicate whether he has any other back-up Bill for Bill C-24 in the event that we finish that particular debate sooner than expected?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank the Hon. Member for the implications in his question. I feel we are going to make considerable progress and will do so very quickly. Consequently, Bill C-25 will be the other piece of legislation, followed by Bill C-29 and Bill C-6, in that order.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, could the Government House Leader advise us now when the Bill to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act will be brought forward for first and second reading?

Mr. Pinard: As I just indicated to the House Leader of the Official Opposition, we had a meeting of House Leaders this morning, including the NDP House Leader, and this matter was discussed.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, as the Government House Leader knows, the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry passed a unanimous resolution over two months ago asking that members of the Committee be empowered to travel to the West Coast and meet with fishermen who are in as much distress as those on the East Coast. When does the Government House Leader intend to ask the Chairman of the Committee to bring that recommendation forward to the House in order to provide the resources for that Committee to travel and meet with fishermen on the West Coast?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, it has not been my policy nor my attitude to twist the arms of chairmen of committees.

INCOME TAX ACT

TABLING OF DRAFT AMENDMENTS

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that the document entitled "Draft Amendments to the Income Tax Act" tabled this day be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Following consultation with spokesmen for the other two Parties, I ask leave to move that the Committee make its final report thereon no later than May 31, and I propose that this be made an order.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Minister to introduce his motion?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer, before we have this motion, to have an opportunity of consulting again with my colleague and maybe we will then be able to get back to the Minister.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent, and in the circumstances the Minister would have to give notice of his motion.

PETITION

MR. MITGES—COMPENSATION TO JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition from a number of students at Georgian Bay Secondary School in Meaford, Ontario. The students petition the federal Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to apologize formally to Japanese Canadians who suffered during the Second World War as a result of being uprooted by the federal Government for the loss of their property, lands and many other possessions.

CANADA'S FOOD GUIDE

Question No. 350—Mr. St. Germain:

Did the Department of National Health and Welfare publish "Canada's Food Guide—Handbook", and, if so at what cost for (a) concept and research (b) production (c) printing (d) distribution and what was the total cost of the publication?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes the Department of National Health and Welfare published "Canada's Food Guide—Handbook (Revised)":

(a)	Cost for concept and research	$ 7,000
(b)	Cost for production in English and French	3,700
(c)	Cost of printing 272,000 English and 78,300 French	158,600
(d)	Cost of distribution	4,500
	Total cost	$173,800

STUDIES ON DETERRENT EFFECT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Question No. 478—Mr. Howie:

Did the Government undertake, or has it initiated in the current fiscal year, any studies relating to the deterrent effect of capital punishment and, if so (a) were these studies carried out by outside consultants (b) in what time frame were the studies to be conducted (c) was any amount allocated to the studies and, if so, what amount?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Justice and the Ministry of the Solicitor General as follows: No.

EXEMPT STAFF OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Question No. 506—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

"SUMMER CANADA 84" ADVERTISEMENTS

Question No. 722—Mr. Nickerson:

Did the Department of Employment and Immigration direct that "Summer Canada 84" advertisements not be placed in local newspapers with a paid circulation of less than 2,000 and, if so, was consideration given to the fact that all the community newspapers in the Northwest Territories, except those based in Yellowknife, have a paid circulation of less than 2,000 and that as a consequence, the message will not reach its intended audience in other northern communities?

2. Did the Department relax the directive mentioned in part I for the Northwest Territories in previous years and, if so, will it do so again this year?

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Yes, the Department of Employment and Immigration did direct that "Summer Canada 84" advertisements not be placed in newspapers with paid circulation of less than 2,000. This policy was necessary due to budget restriction limiting the number of newspapers in which we could advertise. However, we do make every effort to use smaller local newspapers where budgets and advertising objectives allow.

The "Summer Canada 84" advertising campaign utilized weekly newspapers as the primary media. This resulted in CEIC placing advertisements in 500 community newspapers, including four papers serving the North, the Whitehorse Star and the Yukon News, both based in Whitehorse, and the Yellowknifer and the N.W.T. News/North, based in Yellowknife.

2. No, it is not necessary to relax the directive. It applies only to national advertising placed from CEIC Ottawa. Each local CEIC for students in the N.W.T. and the Yukon is provided with a budget for placement of advertisements in their community newspapers.

NUMBER OF CHEQUES STOLEN

Question No. 764—Mr. Riis:

In the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82 (c) 1982-83 were any government cheques stolen and, if so, what was the cost of replacing and reimbursing the amounts to recipients?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): The number of government cheques stolen by fiscal year is as follows: 1980-81: Records on stolen cheques were not kept prior to April, 1981. 1981-82: 622, 1982-83: 466, 1983-84: 234.

For the total 1,322 stolen cheques, the cost of replacing and reimbursing the amounts to recipients is approximated at $6,500.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—RETIREMENT INCOME

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald:

That this House profoundly regrets the two-year delay of the Government in bringing in promised legislation to improve guaranteed income supplements for low-income single elderly Canadians, and condemns the Government for its failure to respond to the innovative proposals of the all-party Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform to expand opportunities for Canadians under age 65 to make adequate provision for income in their retirement years.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it gives me more than a little pleasure to rise today to discuss the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). I must confess that I wondered if the Hon. Member was truly being serious in making this proposal. It seems that the Hon. Member is concerned with the Government's failure to respond to the innovative proposals of the all-Party task force on pension reform.

Hon. Members are aware of, and applaud, the work of the task force of which the Hon. Member was a part. We must go back and look at the contents of this report. Either the Hon. Member has forgotten what was proposed by the task force she belonged to or she was not around when the Budget was brought down on February 15. The Government has listened very closely to the task force and has indicated in no uncertain terms that it is its intention to act as expeditiously as possible to bring the wide range of much needed pension reforms into existence.

Mr. Dantzer: Where's the beef?

Mr. MacLellan: Hon. Members will recall that the parliamentary task force was appointed to do some very serious and difficult things within a limited time frame. They were called upon to report on the proposal made by the Government in its green paper Better Pensions for Canadians and particularly to look at inflation protection under private plans, proposals for the Quebec and Canada Pension Plans, survivor benefits, expansion of mandatory pension arrangements by public or private plans, Canada Pension Plan financing and the special pension problems facing women. They were given until the end of 1983 to make their report and they did so well within that time period.

The Government brought forward a detailed and positive response in the February Budget. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands is concerned that this is not going to be brought into legislation. To say her concern is not well founded is an understatement. The GIS is due to increase by $25 on July 1 and by another $25 on December 1. To say that this will be done without legislation being presented is quite improbable, to say the least.

Miss MacDonald: It can't be.

Mr. MacLellan: That is right, so the legislation will be brought in. That is exactly what we are saying. It is a finance Bill.

Yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that the Government has finance Bills that it wants to bring forward. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) says we have to pass the Western Grain Stabilization Act, that we have to help farmers. I do not find any fault with that. That is quite commendable. In fact, it is a priority item.

The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) brought up the same question. He was told by the Prime Minister that we on this side of the House have many priorities on what we have to put forward, some of which are finance Bills, one of which is the increase in the GIS.

The Opposition has to make up its mind. It cannot have it both ways. It cannot come down 100 per cent in wanting to help the prairie farmers on the one hand, and then the next day say that we immediately have to throw the concerns of the prairie farmers aside and now present to the House the concerns of our elderly and poor. Either one-half of the Conservative Party is not talking to the other half, or they have the shortest memories that this House has ever witnessed.

This morning we heard from the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer). He says that what is being done with the Bills, certainly the green paper Better Pensions for Canadians and the task force report, does not reflect the Minister's ideas. If Members opposite had not held this Opposition Day when the Minister was out of the country, she would be able to present her ideas and clarify them.

The Minister's ideas certainly do not need any clarification. The Minister and the Government have been very supportive of what was brought down by the task force on pension reform. This debate is completely unnecessary. It is pure schizophrenia on the part of the Opposition. It indicates that they do not know what their priorities are, not only from year to year, month to month, week to week, but from day to day.

What was it that the task force proposed? It made 65 separate recommendations. I do not intend to go into all 65—there is a sigh of relief and that is in order—but let us look at some of them in terms of the original mandate.

First, on inflation problems, under employer-sponsored plans the task force proposed to drop the excess interest approach and instead proposed that all future pension accruals be updated on the Consumer Price Index less 2.5 per cent, subject to two limits. One was based on a portfolio of investment return and the other was based on an economic indicator which the Chief Statistician proposes eventually to develop.

The Government has responded positively to this proposal. The February 15 Budget indicated that the Government agreed to move from the excess earnings approach and instead would propose inflation protection based on 60 per cent of the Consumer Price Index. This is very similar to the task force proposal, although it is simpler and at current inflation rates would be somewhat more generous.

Second, on survivor benefits in the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans, the task force recommended that survivor benefits not be terminated on remarriage, that survivor benefits after 65 be set at 30 per cent rather than 60 per cent of the deceased spouse's pension, and that the divorced spouses be given the survivor's pension. Again, the Government has indicated its intention to act.

The Budget stated that legislation will be brought forward providing there is sufficient provincial consent to ensure that survivor benefits will be continued on remarriage. I certainly hope that the provinces will give their consent to such a provision, and I would urge all Members to use their good offices with provincial governments to support this proposal.

On the other proposals that are of a more controversial nature, I am sure that the task force members were aware of the federal-provincial nature of the Canada Pension Plan. Major CPP benefits can only be made with provincial consent. Accordingly, the Government has proposed to place further changes to CPP survivor benefits on the agenda for federal-provincial discussion.

Third, the task force recommended that no immediate action be taken on mandatory pension arrangements. The federal Government has gone along with this recommendation for now but has announced through the Budget broad measures to encourage expansion of voluntary pension coverage for full-time and part-time workers. As well, the federal Government will continue to monitor these coverage items.

Dealing with the other specific topics of CPP funding and homemakers' pensions, which again are matters requiring provincial agreement, the federal Government has agreed to enter into federal-provincial discussions and is sure that the task force's ideas will be given serious consideration by the provinces. Of course, this by no means covers the full extent of the task force recommendations nor does it cover the extent of the actions proposed by the federal Government, far from it. Indeed, even the immediate steps that the federal Government has taken have gone beyond those recommended by the task force.

For example, dealing with pension vesting and portability, the undertaking contained in the Budget for the vesting of pensions after two years of plan membership and for the portability of pensions through the transfer of built-up credits is almost identical to the task force proposal. The Budget undertaking regarding sexual equality and the provision of annuities is again virtually the same as that proposed by the task force. There should be equal pensions for male and female employees retiring under equal circumstances.

The Government has also agreed with the task force on the need to move forward with protection for spouses through the provision of pension rights for survivors of private plan contributions. It also agreed to the need for access, on marriage breakdown, to the private pension credits which have been built up through the efforts of both spouses during the marriage.

Dealing with plan termination insurance, the Budget agrees with the indication of the task force that this is not required at this time.

Dealing with tax assistance for retirement saving, the Budget announced what amounts to the most sweeping changes ever made in this area which will give equivalent access to tax assistance regardless of the vehicle used. It will also set comprehensive lifetime limits on contributions and index the limits on contributions and pensions annually. That was definitely the thrust of the task force report.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that although I applaud the Government for having taken this kind of action so soon after the task force report, I applaud even more the Government's generous approach which will encourage Canadians to put more money toward retirement, and indeed to put even more money toward retirement than the task force recommended. I also applaud the Government for its decision to increase spending on the guaranteed income supplement to which I referred earlier.

The increase of $460 million a year that the Government is giving to single pensioners and couples composed of only one pensioner is greater than the increase of $350 million that the task force recommended. Although the increase of $50 per month is not as large as the increase of $102 per month that some pensioners would have received under the task force's proposal, the coverage of the Government's increase is much broader. I am sure that all Members will agree that pensioners need and deserve this help at this time.

I am also pleased that the Government decided to act immediately to help immigrant pensioners who are in need by guaranteeing them the same pension as is now guaranteed to lifelong residents of Canada through Old Age Security and the guaranteed income supplement, rather than undertaking the further study which was proposed by the task force.

The actions to be taken that were announced in the federal Budget cannot all take place at one time and cannot cure all of the problems of the public and private pension systems. For one thing, the broad provincial jurisdiction in this area must be acknowledged. It is the provinces which must set the pension standards for 90 per cent of Canadians, which must approve the Canada Pension Plan changes and which provide extra top-ups to the federal guaranteed income supplement. These things must be taken into consideration. Nevertheless, even if we consider only the immediate steps to be taken by the federal Government, we must see that the consensus of the task force has been translated into action.

We will be seeing legislative action to amend the Old Age Security Act to provide needed help for low-income singles, for families struggling to get by on a single pension and for immigrants who come to Canada late in life. We will see amendments to the Canada Pension Plan to extend the credit-sharing provisions so that spouses of CPP contributors will be able to claim a personal CPP pension as a right either on marriage breakdown or at age 65. We will be seeing federal pension benefit standards for inflation protection, portable pensions, vesting, disclosure, survivor benefits and a sharing of pension rights by spouses. We will be seeing fairer tax rules and the creation of new tax vehicles so that small business employers can have their own pension fund. All this is clearly in keeping with the principles underlying the task force proposals and indeed in most cases is practically indentical in detail to those principles.

It is certain that not all of those 65 recommendations will be implemented in the first phase. We hope to see even more accomplished in the second phase, with the co-operation of course of both levels of government. However, to suggest that the federal Government has not acted, and acted boldly, to implement these innovative ideas is to both misunderstand the Budget and to belittle some of the important recommendations of the parliamentary task force. I would say to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands that I do not understand her motion and that I feel the Government has acted very directly in this very important field.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I never thought that I would see the day when a Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare would stand in the House and say, as the Hon. Member did, that to date the concerns of the elderly poor in the country were, in his words, completely unnecessary. Not only did I think that I would never hear a Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister say that but I thought I would never hear a Member from Cape Breton-The Sydneys say that. The predecessor of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys made it a point on his own to raise in the House the concerns of the elderly time after time. I know many people from Cape Breton-The Sydneys who are over the age of 65, who are in need and who are waiting to hear when this legislation which was promised last February will be brought forward.

The Hon. Member has said that today's debate is completely unnecessary. Since he thinks that the debate as to when this legislation is coming forward is completely unnecessary, I would like to ask him if he would tell us the date on which this legislation will be introduced into the House of Commons.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, there may be a question as to whether or not she heard me correctly. I do not know whether she has a need for remedial hearing techniques or not. However, Mr. Speaker, I certainly did not say that the concerns of the aged are unnecessary and I certainly did not say that all of their problems have been corrected. I did say that I do not feel, as seems to be suggested by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, that the Government has done nothing with respect to the task force report and that the Government is insensitive to the needs of pensioners. In fact, I said that the Budget addressed a great many of the concerns of the aged.

The Hon. Member refers to my constituency of Cape Breton-The Sydneys. I would remind the former Member from this constituency of the unemployment which exists in this area of approximately 35 per cent in real terms. There are young couples of whom neither of the spouses has a job and who are without the funds necessary to meet the needs of their children. There are young people who cannot get their first job. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) was on this task force, Mr. Speaker. I am sure she realizes that one of the criteria we considered was that not all of the money which the Government had available to help Canadians would be used for the benefit of people over the age of 65. There are other needs which have to be considered. While there are real needs of people over the age of 65, these needs must be weighed in conjunction with the needs generally in this country.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He spent a fair bit of time showing that the Government in fact had responded positively to the recommendations of the pension reform task force. Could he indicate to us which one of those proposals, which he highlighted as being proposals on which the Government is moving, will see legislative form before the next federal election?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) for his question. As the Government House Leader said today, this is a question being negotiated by the House Leaders and as such is part of their discussions. I must say, however, that there is a great deal of concern on this side of the House with the plight of those over the age of 65 who are living below the poverty level. I do not doubt the sincerity of the Hon. Member for Provencher and of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands when they speak about the plight of these people. This question certainly should be addressed as soon as possible. With that I agree. However, I do feel that the Parties have to get together. Hon. Members on the other side must determine how they want it to go. We hear on one day that we have to deal immediately with the plight of the farmers in the west, and we hear on another day that we must deal immediately with those people over the age of 65. Those questions are very important, but unless we get the proper consensus of all Parties working together, these questions are not going to be resolved as soon as we would like.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question. Obviously, one of the things with which the task force was concerned was fairness and pension reform. In view of the fact that the $50 per month increase in the GIS amounts to $1.61 a day for most pensioners on full GIS, and in view of the fact that in the budget papers there was a proposal to permit those workers making up to $86,000 to deduct up to $15,000 a year in pension contributions—which was against the recommendations of the task force, as the Hon. Member knows—would the Hon. Member indicate whether he feels that that is fair? A single pensioner on GIS would receive $50 a month, and an individual making up to $86,000 may claim up to $7,500 off his taxes. Is that fair?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) that the priority is with those who are living under the poverty level. Regardless of what the Budget says, the priority will be given to that group of people.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Parliamentary Secretary. The motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) talks about pension reform. However, I believe all Hon. Members should be aware that when Parliament passed Bill C-139, the effect of that particular Bill was that workmen's compensation would now be included for the purposes of calculating the guaranteed income supplement. I have a number of constituents, Mr. Speaker, who have received substantial reductions in the incomes which they were previously receiving.

I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary has received representations from various people across the country and whether he has received representations from Hon. Members opposite as well as from those in our own Party to try to have this particular piece of legislation changed so that it can go back to the way it was, which is, that workmen's compensation would not be included for the purposes of the guaranteed income supplement.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one further point. Those who receive guaranteed income supplements in my province are entitled to other benefits, for instance, in terms of medical care, drugs, and property taxes. Now that workmen's compensation has been added to their total income, that has been wiped out. In addition, they have received a reduction in their over-all income, so instead of having a 20 per cent reduction, it amounts to approximately 40 per cent. I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary, who I know has been working very diligently on pension reform for the last number of years, has had that type of representation in the last number of months?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, (Mr. Dingwall), I would tell him that I have, like he has himself, received representations regarding this question. It comes down to a matter of dealing with funds which are available. Certainly, it is not an easy task when you consider that people over the age of 65 are not receiving the amount of funding which they should receive and which we would like them to receive.

The question is how best to utilize the funds which can be made available. I, like the Hon. Member, have made representations requesting that perhaps people over the age of 65 should not have their compensation payments included for tax purposes. The rationale which has been explained is that when people are under the age of 65, certainly they are at a disadvantage. Over the age of 65 it is difficult for most people to do the things they once did. That is not to say that we would not want to see that funding remain with those over the age of 65, and the matter is being reviewed and possibly will be changed. However, it relates to a question of funding needs in this country and how these needs generally must be met, not taking one need in isolation but taking all the needs of this country together.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The House will now proceed to debate.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, coming from my constituency, I need not tell the House what an interest my constituents have in the old age supplement and in Bills such as those projected by the Government. I am sorry that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is not in her place today. I understand that she is in Belgium attempting to come to an agreement with that country over an exchange of pensions. I would be much comforted if I thought she might bring back the same attitude which that government has toward payment of pensions to women at age 60. The Belgian Government does it in a very simple way, whereas the Canadian Government prefers to put in place the most disorderly hodge-podge of regulations which anyone could imagine determining how much money it will disburse to senior citizens who are female.

Today's debate is brought about because of the Budget which came down on February 15. At that time, as reported on page 1430 of Hansard, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) had this to say in his Budget speech:

> In the Throne Speech, the Government made a commitment to introduce legislation to increase the GIS for single pensioners. My colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, will soon be introducing legislation to increase the maximum payment to this group of pensioners by $50 a month.

● (1540)

Of course, it was going to come in two phases some five months apart, if it was to come at all. The Minister also stated:

> Provision will also be made to see that persons receiving partial old age pension, most of whom are Canadian immigrants, have Guaranteed Income Supplement benefits sufficient to give them the same minimum income as other pensioners.

The legislation which is now due comes about because of the parliamentary task force which recommended pension reform. Its recommendations were quite progressive and comprehensive. I felt rather sorry for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacLellan) who had to stand up and claim that the Budget declaration of the Minister of Finance represented the wishes of the task force. There is a kind of Tiny Tim and Ebenezer Scrooge comparison which can be made between the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister of Finance in this dialogue which may or may not be going on.

It is not that we are quarrelling with the Bills we think are going to come about, but it is a real possibility that these Bills will not be passed before the summer break. Parliamentary Secretaries and the Government House Leader all tell us that, yes, they are urgent, yet we never see the Bills. Surely it is misleading the House to have Government representatives talk about early passage of these Bills when they have not yet been put on the Order Paper. There are 34 days left to us, including several Opposition Days. We granted another day today to the Liberals to take that rag-tag bunch of candidates they have, sort out the six worst of them and keep the other one. I would just as soon see them draw lots; we might end up with a better candidate.

Mr. Beatty: There is one of them here right now.

Mr. McKinnon: I am sure he feels the same way. That would give him an increased chance.

If the Government was to bring the GIS Bill forward, I am sure there would be no prolonged debate. Then we can get to the Bill, which this Government seems to consider so very important, respecting the Crown corporations which the Liberals have fostered throughout their period in office. They can then guarantee that certain people will be appointed to these positions before they indulge in the deluge of an election we are going to have.

One of the problems we have in trying to discuss this Bill is that we are very short on details and we have not yet seen the Bill. When we speak to Ministers who will be responsible for this legislation, we find that they do not seem to know what is going to be in the Bill. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) answered the many questions put to him concerning war veterans's allowances, but he is not able to tell us what he is going to do.

All our problems in this area started with the 1977 amendment to the Old Age Security Act. It established stricter qualifications for old age security and it established the provision of partial pensions for immigrants. I opposed that measure at the time, pointing out that it was going to be an administrative nightmare, and now I am not happy that my forecast came true. The amendment was predicated on the idea that all other nations were going to have reciprocal agreements with Canada, but they have not done so. That was the underlying assumption when the Government decided that a partial pension would be feasible. The result has been a kind of guaranteed poverty class. We allow people into Canada who are too old to get in sufficient pension time before they reach 65 so as to have a decent living from the OAS and GIS.

I would like to speak for a moment now about the British pensioners, of whom there are 40,000 resident in Canada at the present time. They have been waiting for years for reciprocal pensions. In 1978, in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that pension reciprocity with Britain was her number one priority. Well, last October, the Minister answered a question in the House in part by saying that the dossier of the reciprocal agreement for pensions and other social programs between Great Britain and Canada is an active one. This March she put out a statement in which she said that she regrets to advise that, in spite of Canada's efforts, the British Government has decided not to proceed at this time with the social security agreement. This is devastating news, and I think we should have an opportunity to ask how it came about. Is it simply that the Minister is unable to get along with the British, or is it that the British really do not want to pay these pensions? It seems only just that a person who paid into a pension fund should be able to get money out. This situation has left a great number of British pensioners in the lurch.

Another group of people who are suffering badly are the immigrants from Third World countries. It is impossible to have reciprocal agreements with some of those countries because they do not have a pension system in effect. We bring people in on the assumption that we will give them a partial pension and they are supposed to get a pension from their home country. Consequently, these people end up at pensionable age with about a quarter of a pension, if they have been here for ten years, out of the possible 40 year period for building up pension credits.

This problem was brought to the attention of the task force by a variety of witnesses. The main point they made was that these people were not only unable to get a partial pension from their homeland, but they are frequently not employed in an occupation in Canada which has either a private pension plan or a Canada Pension Plan. This of course leaves them destitute at a time when most Canadians expect to retire at the age of 65 and live on their OAS and GIS.

In 1977, the then Minister of National Health and Welfare, now the Minister of Finance, stated that those unable to qualify for adequate OAS and GIS pensions had the option of going on welfare. That surely is not a satisfactory answer with regard to what we are going to do with the people who came into this country in good faith and now find they will not be like other Canadians when they reach 65 and receive the OAS and the GIS. Instead, according to the present Minister of Finance, they will be expected to go on welfare.

We now find that the same Minister has introduced a Budget which promised to increase the GIS to those receiving partial OAS in order to ensure that they have the same minimum income as other pensioners. This will require an increase to the GIS so that that portion will be over 100 per cent. As everyone is aware, the old age security is paid at a basic rate without any means test. The guaranteed income supplement is also paid up to a certain rate given in dollars. If you only have a quarter of half the rate of the old age security, plus a full guaranteed income supplement, you are still at a lower level than what is thought to be the poverty level, or indeed the sustenance level for Canadians. As is typical of the Liberal Government, it is now going to bring in more legislation which will attempt to address the grievous fault caused by its last amendment to the Old Age Security Act.

It would be much simpler, Mr. Speaker, to abolish the system of partial entitlement to the old age security and allow immigrants to qualify for full old age security after 10 years, as they did before the amendment was brought in. We should provide them with the same guaranteed income supplement as is received by all Canadian pensioners, subject to the same requirement of an income test. I do not see the value in going around a three-sided triangle by changing perfectly good old age security provisions, making room for partial pensions, and then devising another piece of legislation to cater to some of the people who cannot get the sustenance level which would be caused by the first piece of legislation. Surely it would have been simpler to cancel the amendment to the legislation which was introduced in 1977. I am rather proud of having opposed that amendment at the time.

Let us look at the war veterans allowance. Possibly to the surprise of many, and apparently to the surprise of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, the war veterans allowance is correlated with the guaranteed income supplement. When the guaranteed income supplement increases, the war veterans allowance increases. There is a small Department of Veterans Affairs top-up procedure which takes place. The war veterans allowance is added to, so that the person drawing this allowance will always be a little better off than those who are not veterans.

On March 14 I asked the Minister a question in the House of Commons. I was seeking clarification as to whether veterans under 65 who receive war veterans allowance would benefit from the announced increase in the guaranteed income supplement. I was trying to determine whether this would apply to those recipients who are considered to be single for the purposes of WVA or to all recipients of WVA, married and single. In response to my question, the Minister stated:

> I can assure the Hon. Member that the provisions which were included in the Budget to provide for a $25 increase in the GIS as of July 1, and a further $25 increase as of December 1, will be passed through to all veterans simply by increasing the ceiling.

This was obviously nonsense. The Minister did not understand what the Minister of Finance had said in his Budget and did not realize the complexity of it. Therefore, he was unable to make clear which veterans would benefit from the increase. I gave him an opportunity to clarify this, but he did not seem to be able to do so.

These matters have been brought up in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs on four separate occasions. In a statement to the committee on March 20, the Minister indicated that the increase in GIS to single recipients would be reflected in an increase in war veterans allowance for single recipients. This, of course, would ignore the married recipients who are over 65. They would find themselves falling back to the same level as the single recipients. Since then, the deputy minister has been unable to explain precisely how the increase will be put into effect. He has further confused the issue and then promised members of the committee that the Minister would clarify matters shortly. As yet we have had no statement from the Minister on this subject. When he was speaking to the House this morning in this Opposition Day debate, I noticed that he did not clarify the subject.

Obviously, some very technical changes will have to be made to the war veterans allowance. If the Bills come before Parliament and are passed, the Minister of Veterans Affairs will be expected to decree by how much each category of the war veterans allowance will go up. I suspect that the Minister still does not know what is going to be in these Bills when they are presented. This is part of the difficulty we are having. It seems only reasonable to me that the Minister should at least have the notification before the Bills are produced. He had better be ready for them because he should be writing the regulations at the present time to ensure that the War Veterans Allowance Act is amended or changed by regulation, which he is entitled to do, to comply with these forthcoming Bills.

I have listened to Members on both sides of the House saying whose fault it is that these Bills have not been presented. Clearly, this side wants to have the Bill on the guaranteed income supplement as early as possible. We want the grain stabilization Bill as well. The Government has promised to deliver both these Bills. We want them. I expect they will pass fairly quickly. Then the Government can debate, as long as it wants, the Bill on how to handle its Crown corporations. I see no reason to continue with this procrastination. A large segment of the population of Canada is liable to be hurt if the Bill I referred to is not brought in in time to be passed before the end of the session at the end of June. It is outrageous that on February 15 they should have made statements in the Budget which have not as yet been acted upon. I am reluctantly coming to the conclusion that the Government is planning not to pass those Bills and to try to fight an election campaign saying that it is someone else's fault that the Bills have not been passed. I expect that trick would easily be seen through. I look forward to hearing someone who has some responsibility on the Government side tell us when the Government proposes not only to put these Bills on the Order Paper but to table them for first reading.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak, if I may, for a few moments with regard to the motion which is before us in terms of the reform of pensions. Earlier in my comments I mentioned workmen's compensation being calculated in for the purpose of the guaranteed income supplement. The effect of Bill C-139 is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. The Hon. Member's comments must relate to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). He cannot introduce extraneous matters. They must relate to the Hon. Member's speech.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, as any good solicitor or advocate would realize, I am attempting to build my case, which would then tie in with what the Hon. Member has said. Before I come to that conclusion, which will be obvious to everyone in the House, I am sure you will see that it is on the point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has but a brief moment to do just that. Both questions and comments must be brief and to the point.

Mr. Dingwall: Would the Hon. Member not concur with me that when workmen's compensation is calculated into GIS and war veterans allowance is excluded for the purposes of GIS, that is somewhat unfair and discriminatory? We can probably find all sorts of cases in which veterans are certainly more deserving than those receiving workmen's compensation. Alternatively, would the Member not concur with me that there are perhaps very many situations where individuals who are in receipt of workmen's compensation are perhaps, in some instances, more deserving of that income than some veterans? I would not advocate that as a general principle. However, with regard to pension reform, various sections of the Income Tax Act have been amended. They have indiscriminately inflicted a dire consequence on senior citizens.

On many occasions the Hon. Member has stood in his place and advocated better pension reform not only for veterans but for the elderly. I would like the Hon. Member to concur with me in order that we could take joint action, not in a partisan, political way, but in an effective way, to have the Minister for National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) address this very important issue.

As I have heard the Hon. Member himself say on several occasions, we do not want to act indiscriminately against those in need. I believe that by calculating workmen's compensation into the guaranteed income supplement we are not only reducing the incomes of numerous constituents on the list I have before me, we are in fact penalizing them twice. I would hope that the Hon. Member, whom I have respected since my entry into this Chamber, would concur with my desire to right a wrong which I believe to be in Bill C-139. However, I need his help and I am wondering if he is prepared to give it.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his complimentary remarks. The Government frequently introduces legislation apparently with no idea as to its side effects. Perhaps it is because there are not enough Members from Cape Breton who understand the lives that the working people lead and the misfortunes they suffer. Having said that, I do not see the possibility of my ever saying that veterans are being treated too generously, particularly by that Government.

I agree with the Hon. Member's point about workmen's compensation. I suggest that it is outrageous and typical of the Government to want to reduce their guaranteed income supplement, because they are being paid for an injury they suffered in the work place under a program for which they pay normal taxes. Everyone else pays workmen's compensation fees. I commend the Hon. Member for his attitude. I am sorry that it is not shared by Members on the front benches.

Mr. Dingwall: I have one further comment. I concur with the substance of the Hon. Member's remarks, but I want the record to be clear that the effects of Bill C-139 were not seen in this Chamber when it was introduced. It took several months not only for the bureaucracy but for those affected by the legislation to comprehend it fully. I do not think there was any desire, politically or otherwise, to affect those in greatest need. I believe there must be a consensus among Members of Parliament, who, on the one hand, stand in the Chamber to say that they are concerned about the elderly and, on the other hand, pass a law that is very unjust.

I need the assistance both of Members opposite and of Members on this side of the House to bring this matter to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) as well as of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren).

The sections of the Income Tax Act that are involved are Section 81, Section 56 and Section 110. They must be repealed before this wrong can be corrected. I need the assistance of Members opposite, and I hope that at the end of the day, when the debate has been concluded, no one will interpret my suggestion as being in any way partisan, because I think we are all concerned about those senior citizens who are in the greatest of need. Some of them have had a substantial reduction, ranging from $50 to in excess of $200 a month.

I want to thank the Hon. Member, whom I have respected and admired since my entry into this Chamber, for his assistance in this matter.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I suppose that the Hon. Member and I are members from different committees. My interest is in the Department of Veterans Affairs and in senior citizens. The problem he is raising concerns the work place and workmen's compensation.

I do not know how much pressure he can exert on the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but certainly we on this side are forever lining up to try to put questions to the Hon. Minister. I find it difficult on many days to find her in the House early in Question Period. I do not like to say that, but it seems to be the case.

Certainly we will try our best, as far as I am concerned, to assist the Hon. Member, who I think has brought to light a very good point. It indicates a reform in the pension system that is needed and one that was pointed out so clearly in the task force report. With the exception of a couple of measures that we are still waiting to see in print in the House, it has been totally ignored by the Government.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I would like to give one example of the dire straits in which some people in this country find themselves. I refer to a 70-year old gentleman by the name of Malcolm Woodland who lives in the town of New Waterford. Prior to Bill C-139, his income was $336.38.

Mr. Epp: Per month?

Mr. Dingwall: Per month. However, the effect of the legislation is to reduce that income to $266.28. It does not allow him to take advantage of the social programs that the Government of Nova Scotia has put into place in terms of his property taxes and moneys that are made available for drugs.

It is inconceivable that senior bureaucrats, of whatever politi- cal affiliation, should have put that provision into the legislation. As politicians, we are allowing that wrong to continue. I want to give the House judicial notice that it has not heard the end of this. I have petitions coming from the towns of Glace Bay, New Waterford and Sydney Mines. I will place them before the Chamber and I will speak to those petitions. I hope that by your concurrence, Mr. Speaker, you might want to lend your very substantial support to my suggestion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does not dispute the vigour with which the Hon. Member puts forth his particular grievances. However, I do have some misgivings about the relationship of the Hon. Member's comments to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Victoria. They are in some sense related, but I had the impression throughout his comments that the Hon. Member was making a pitch on a very specific matter which had not been raised by the Hon. Member for Victoria.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp)—Pools—Sports pool—Provision of funding for medical research. (b) Request for five-year funding plan; the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer)—Agriculture—Red beef stabilization program. (b) Status of discussions; the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap)—External Affairs—Guyana—Increase in racial and political violence. (b) Visa requirement for Guyanese immigrants.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—RETIREMENT INCOME

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands):

That this House profoundly regrets the two-year delay of the Government in bringing in promised legislation to improve Guaranteed Income Supplements for low-income single elderly Canadians, and condemns the Government for its failure to respond to the innovative proposals of the all-party Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform to expand opportunities for Canadians under age 65 to make adequate provision for income in their retirement years.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have mixed feelings about rising in the House. I say this because I took part in the work of the Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform and I find it somewhat ludicrous to be speaking to the motion without the Member who moved the motion being present. Mr. Speaker, I think Hon. Members are not taking their duties seriously. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) is not in her seat, and she moved the motion. She is taking advantage of the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), who would be able to correct some of the glaring mistakes that have been perpetrated since this morning.

[English]

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I just want to inform her, after the comments she has made, that the Member for Kingston and the Islands is attending the Committee on National Health and Welfare where the Minister of State for Social Development is appearing. That is why she is not in the House at the present time.

[Translation]

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, I nevertheless wish to take this opportunity to reassure senior citizens across the country, because they know very well that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has never made idle promises. Everyone knows that the $25 increase due on July 1st will be given retroactively to senior citizens, if necessary, and that they will also have the increase scheduled for January 1984.

That being said, I still think the day is wasted, but I shall go on just the same. I want to quote today's Opposition motion and correct a mistake in what it says:

> That this House profoundly regrets the two-year delay of the Government in bringing in promised legislation to improve Guaranteed Income Supplements for low-income single elderly Canadians—

It is not two years but two months. Let me explain the obvious: In 1981 we held the National Conference; in 1982 we tabled the Green Paper, and in December 1983 we tabled the Report of the Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform.

Well, if I count from December 1983 to—and if I take the date on which the Budget was brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), that is only two months. I think the Government did very well to engage in consultations. We are responsible people, and we therefore had to consult with the other parties concerned. Once again, I want to give senior citizens in this country the assurance that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will keep her word, as always.

Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that in his Budget speech, the Minister of Finance announced that the Government intended to pursue pension reform in two stages. During the first stage, the Government proposes to increase the guaranteed income supplement, to improve minimum standards for private pension plans, to strengthen the Canada Pension Plan and improve the benefits to women, and also to improve tax assistance for retirement saving. These measures, set forth in the February Budget of this year, were meant to improve substantially the pension situation of both today's pensioners and of Canadians who will retire in the future. However, the Government realizes that although the measures are very important, further steps must be taken. That is why a second stage is planned which will start this summer and will include discussions and especially negotiations with the provinces on a series of further proposals.

After the consultation process, we shall now proceed with the second stage, namely, negotiations. I think that if the Members Opposite were sitting on this side of the House, they would do the same.

I was favourably impressed with the spirit of co-operation shown by Ontario in this respect. The proposals for reform by the Government of Ontario augur well for federal-provincial discussions of pension reform.

Of the major issues that will be on the agenda during federal-provincial discussions, I would like to mention four: first, the homemaker pension; second, improving disability benefits; third, greater flexibility in the age of entitlement; and fourth, financing of the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans. All of this depends on federal-provincial negotiations, Mr. Speaker.

All proposals were the subject of studies and recommendations by the Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform. The Government realizes, however, that the issues are complex and require further study and further discussion with the provinces.

Take, for instance, the issue of homemaker pensions. It is a complex issue and a number of solutions have been suggested. The pension proposal was made for various reasons: to recognize the value of work done by women in the home; to meet the need for adequate retirement income; to provide for greater financial autonomy and to recognize the contribution of each individual to the marriage union. All of these reasons are entirely valid, and I cannot agree more. Proposals for changes made during the first stage of pension reform also support this initiative. In addition, it was suggested that an additional pension based on wage equivalent as well as compulsory contributions be made a part of the Canada Pension Plan. A proposal like this one raises a number of questions, however.

First, what price is set on the work of women in the home? Is half the average industrial wage a valid and fair assessment? If so, how can we justify this? Who is going to pay for the pension? Will this be the full responsibility of the family breadwinner? Should low-wage earners be subsidized by all working Canadians? If the family breadwinner is to pay, does that settle the problem of women's financial dependence? And are we to differentiate between women who work full time in the home and those who combine a job outside the home with housework? Does work done in the home by certain individuals make them eligible for a pension, while women who have a job outside the home are not eligible?

I am raising these questions, not because I am against pensions for women, on the contrary! I simply wish to draw your attention to the complex issues that must be resolved before we can reach a consensus on the subject.

Changes to the Canada Pension Plan require the approval of two-thirds of the provinces having two-thirds of the population. Because of the many aspects of this question, the Government has decided to postpone the question of including a pension for housewives in the Canada Pension Plan until the second stage of consultations with the provinces. I may add that the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans are very similar, and that the federal Government and the provinces, including Quebec, are very anxious to maintain the parallels between the two plans. It would be unthinkable to make important changes in the Canada Pension Plan without prior consultation with Quebec and without ensuring that the parallels between the two plans are maintained.

The second major issue on the agenda for discussion with the provinces is the ban on more flexible rules on eligibility for benefits, especially the Old Age Security benefits and retirement benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. The Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform had to admit that lowering the age of entitlement for the Old Age Security pension should be examined more closely.

The financial implications are quite considerable. For instance, there is the impact on the labour force participation rate. Many programs already exist for this age group, such as provincial social assistance programs, and disability benefits under the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans. We must consider the implications for all these programs.

The Government of Ontario has already announced it would support the addition of an early retirement plan to the Canada Pension Plan which would be similar to the one introduced under the Quebec Pension Plan. Mr. Speaker, as of January 1984, all senior citizens in Quebec are eligible for pension benefits under the Quebec Pension Plan when they are 60 years old. Considering that the Government of Ontario looks favourably on this measure, the outlook for reaching an agreement with the other provinces is promising. However, we must have a comprehensive policy for all pre-retirement measures, and to achieve this, further study and consultation at the federal and provincial levels will be necessary.

A third important item on the agenda for our discussions with the Provinces is the question of disability benefits. The Hon. Monique Bégin has already embarked on a major consultation process with the Provinces in this regard. She has made proposals to improve disability benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. Improving these benefits would mean bringing them up to the level of the benefits paid to a pensioner aged 65 or over who receives the old age security pension as well as retirement benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. The maximum disability pension now represents only about 57 per cent of this amount. I remember, Mr. Speaker, how important this question of disability pensions was when I sat on the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped and I realize that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been negotiating ever since. She has been negotiating with the Provinces for the past two years. I note that this is the third item on the agenda for federal-provincial discussions. Work is going on, but everything cannot be done overnight. I was impatientmyself when I saw that nothing much was being done to follow-up on the recommendations of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. I can now realize that some progress is being made.

Most Provinces have indicated their agreement in principle with this proposal, on the understanding that some arrangement can be reached on the funding of the Canada Pension Plan. This question is also on the agenda for the second stage of the pension reform. On the other hand, the Hon. Monique Bégin and her colleagues have embarked on a major federal-provincial study to examine the possibility of introducing a comprehensive disability insurance plan designed to solve the problems of those who are not protected by existing federal and provincial programs or whose coverage is inadequate.

This study is now under way and should continue for some time yet, unfortunately. However, before it can be introduced, such a plan calls for comprehensive studies, and the federal and provincial ministers have agreed to continue to improve existing plans until they receive the recommendations to be made by this federal-provincial committee, which has not submitted its report yet. In view of the general agreement in principle on this issue, we can expect the second stage of pension reform to be successful in this regard.

The question of funding the Canada Pension Plan will however be one of the major issues to be settled. Indeed, contributions to the CPP should increase from 3.6 per cent of insurable earnings to about 6 per cent by the end of this century. They should then increase from 8 to 10 per cent of insurable earnings within about 40 years. Mr. Speaker, I hope I misunderstood what the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer) said this morning. I hope I did not hear him correctly. I hope the Canadian people did not understand that the system was jeopardized because it is not. We could carry on as we are doing now for another 20 years without increasing the 3.6 per cent rate of contributions by a single cent. I will go on, but I want to reassure the public by saying that there is nothing to fear, as did the NDP Member who worked with us on this matter, the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) who also reassured the public this morning by saying that there was no need to worry about it. As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, contributions to the Canada Pension Plan should increase from 3.6 per cent to 6 per cent by the year 2000 and to 8 per cent within the next 40 years. There are now several options for funding the Canada Pension Plan. In principle, contributions could remain unchanged for the next 20 years if the federal and provincial governments deemed it necessary to draw from the present reserves to pay benefits. However, Mr. Lalonde indicated in his Budget that an increase would be desirable before then, even though it is not required for the financing of present benefits, simply to reduce the effect of an increase which could be rather significant if we were to wait until the year 2000. This would be transferring too much of a burden to a future generation.

Mr. Lalonde added that he planned—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should like to remind the Hon. Member that she has to refer to her colleagues by their portfolio or constituency and not by their own name in accordance with Standing Orders.

Mrs. Killens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance said that he planned to co-operate with the provinces in order to set a proper schedule of contributions, with special attention being paid to the proposal of the task force which suggested a pay-as-you-go formula taking into account any improvement in allowances. It is clear that the government is taking its responsibilities not only as far as the financing of the Canada Pension Plan is concerned but also with respect to the proposals made by the parliamentary task force. However, it is quite obvious that one of the basic questions to be solved is the lack of protection made available to Canadians. Less than half of all Canadians have an adequate pension plan. Should governments extend the scope of compulsory pension plans to solve the problem? It is important to give the private sector as many opportunities as possible to show that it can provide an adequate pension to retired Canadians.

All the steps taken should encourage the private sector and provide the necessary tools to perform that task. The government intends to monitor the response of parties concerned. Our committee suggested a three-year period to enable the private sector to take charge. We also suggested that after that period, if the private sector has not taken its responsibilities and borne its own share of the employees' pension plan, the government should perhaps double the Canada Pension Plan or find other alternatives.

I think that the government has shown that it was ready to move quickly in the area of pension reform. It has also shown some responsibility and caution concerning the more complex issues to be dealt with in the second phase of pension reform. The provincial governments have also a capital role to play. The extent and quality of pension reform will very much depend on the outcome of negotiations. Nevertheless, I am confident that we will succeed in thoroughly altering the pension system in the shortest possible time in the interests and for the welfare of all Canadian men and women.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have just one question for my colleague who was on the task force. The Hon. Member indicated that the Quebec Pension Plan permits voluntary pension eligibility at age 60. In view of the fact that the pension task force heard about the severe plight of many people between the ages of 60 and 64 who were ineligible for pensions anywhere in Canada, and in view of the high unemployment rate and the need for young people to obtain employment, would the Hon. Member press her Government to consider, in the discussions between the Government and the provincial governments, lowering the age of eligibility for the Canada Pension Plan to 60 years on a voluntary basis, particularly because of the urgency with which the provincial and federal Governments view discussions on the CPP in terms of increased contributions? This would be the time to raise with the provinces changes in the Canada Pension Plan provisions as they refer to eligibility.

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good idea in view of the fact that it takes so long to negotiate and that this matter is not on the agenda. I was made aware only today of the fact that it is not on the agenda, but certainly I will bring it to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). I thank the Hon. Member very much for his suggestion.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I looked forward to this debate to discuss pension reform in Canada, especially in view of the fact that this subject matter has been a focus of very extensive study by the special task force on pension reform. It has received much attention in various provinces, specifically the Province of Ontario. It is also an ongoing consideration for the private insurance sector. I intend today to concentrate on two areas, first the short-term, which I believe the motion addresses, and, second, pension reform as a comprehensive policy.

A number of Members on the Government side have indicated today that this debate is not necessary or that the motion does not clearly reflect the work that the Government is doing. Their position has been that the Government is moving on pension reform and that the Budget proposals which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) brought in on February 15 were a direct response to the need for pension reform and were a plan of action.

I can understand why Members of the Government would say that, because the booklet accompanying the pension paper which the Minister of Finance tabled at that time is entitled Action plan for pension reform. I can understand why Government Members would be defensive on the basis that the Government has moved on pension reform. The question must be asked whether this is the case. In the Budget, the Minister of Finance rejected the $102 per month GIS top-up which the task force on pension reform had suggested. Instead, he came in with a proposal that the GIS for single elderly be increased by $25 per month on July 1, 1984, and by an additional $25 on December 1, 1984. Government Members today have been defending that proposal. We in the Opposition have been saying that we want to see the legislation. We would like to see that legislation passed very quickly.

A number of things have happened in the debate on that very point since the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) asked that question of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). I intend to raise those issues here.

Members of the Opposition have been arguing and putting forward the proposition that we wanted the western grain stabilization amendments brought forward in the House. A number of government Members have been saying that we want that proposition and that the next day we want pension reform or the $25 per month which will be effective from July 1. All of us have been in the House long enough to know that the House could deal with the Western Grain Stabilization Act tomorrow and that it could deal with the $25 increase in the GIS as well. Obviously we would like to see that legislation.

Mr. Frith: What about the other legislation?

Mr. Epp: The Hon. Member for Sudbury asks about the other legislation. I find that interesting. I will deal with one piece of legislation. The Government, the committees and the House have spent an inordinate amount of time on Crown corporations. The Government has spent an inordinate amount of money on Crown corporations.

Mr. Turner: Let it go then.

Mr. Epp: I will finish, Mr. Whip, if you will give me a minute. It is absolutely important, if we are not going to have that debacle again, that the legislation be changed.

How do we change legislation? I know of only one method of changing the legislation of an obtuse Government, that is, to keep hitting it over the head with what is wrong. Sometimes they listen. It is like the old farmer with the Missouri mule. Before he went out farming, he hit it over the head with a two-by-four so that he could get its attention. The Government needs its attention directed to the priorities that Canadians have. The priority of Canadians, at least in my part of the country, is the Western Grain Stabilization Act and pension reform for the elderly. Also, they do not want to see a Crown corporation Bill passed which will allow the perpetuation of the waste of money which we have seen in this House and in the country.

If I had the time today, and I do not, I would elaborate on the fact that when we talk about pension reform, we should look at the amount of money it would require. Members on both sides of the House agree it is needed. Let us compare that to the losses that have become evident through Crown corporations in the last few weeks. We could have had various pension reforms if the Government had brought forward a financial plan which would have forced the Crown corporations to be competitive. They should not be able, every time they are in trouble, to come back to the public sector and ask for more, and say that if we do not give them more, they will close their doors and jobs will be lost. That is a constant blackmail and a vicious circle in which we seem to find ourselves when it comes to Crown corporations.

Coming back to the $25 supplement, Members on this side of the House have told the Government to bring in the legislation and we will pass it. The Government is on somewhat thin ice when it tells us to pass the legislation when it has not even introduced it.

Mr. Frith: We are ready.

Mr. Epp: Here is a revelation. The Hon. Member for Sudbury says it is ready. Good. Wonderful. Let us have it presented for first reading tomorrow. In fact, I will make an offer which I am sure will be accepted by Members of this House. If they want to move back to introduction of Government Bills now, we will give consent to do it now.

Mr. Frith: You are not reneging on your commitment made by Don Blenkarn?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Provencher has the floor.

Mr. Epp: I can understand. There is no Cabinet Minister in the House. They would have difficulty presenting any Bill at any time, even with unanimous consent. I leave it at that. I simply say, bring in the legislation and we will pass it.

The Member for Sudbury says that the legislation is ready. His colleague, who just finished speaking, indicated that if the legislation is not passed by July, it will be retroactive. I understand the Hon. Member for Sudbury will speak later today. Maybe he can square the circle for all of us as to whether the legislation is ready, why it has not been introduced and, if it is not passed, whether it will be retroactive. I am sure a Liberal mind could always find its way around three points of view.

What is important in the longer term is this. I recognize this cannot be done overnight. When the Minister of Finance came in with pension reform, the public, especially those trying to meet their financial obligation on a day-to-day basis, saw the Government pamphlet entitled Action plan for pension reform. In the Budget speech, of approximately three-quarters of an hour's duration, the Minister of Finance said that these are the changes that will be brought in. Taxpayers know that at midnight that night tax provisions in the Budget became effective. They cannot understand why other aspects have to take months, and sometimes years. Is it the reality today that all of us in this House face in 1984, that it is good to have promises in the Budget? The Government might even have been sincere in bringing forth an action plan. Knowing full well that a federal election will intervene, it sees the political advantage of presenting it in this form. That might be greater than the actual benefits that the individual Canadian might receive from those proposals.

It is that kind of action which I believe debases people's respect for the parliamentary process and for the word of politicians. I ask Government Members to consider that seriously. When I look at the short-term and the second $25 which will become effective on December 1, 1984, will the legislation include that increase, or will subsequent legislation be needed? Again, taking into account the reality of a federal election sometime in 1984, one could very quickly see why pensioners are raising some serious questions as to the sincerity of the proposals themselves.

What about the longer term, Mr. Speaker? There is no question in my mind that pension reform is needed. Hon. Members opposite may not be surprised to hear this coming from me because they know me, but they may be surprised to hear this coming from an Opposition Member. I commend the chairman of the task force on pension reform and the task force itself, and I agree that we must address the questions of accountability, affordability, portability and private responsibility when dealing with pension reform. I recognize, and I think anyone who is realistic must recognize, that a government, regardless of its political stripe, cannot simply say that it will provide more and more to Canadians, when in fact it must be asking how it can get Canadians, through education or tax incentives, to take greater responsibility for their own future pension needs and future welfare.

Frankly I believe that we have done a disservice to many Canadians. Throughout the 1960s and the 1970s we left the impression that if governments at all levels would use a larger and larger proportion of the GNP, then somehow all Canadians would benefit or would benefit more than if they looked after themselves. Do not get me wrong. I am not saying that there is no role for government to play. I am simply saying that we cannot create an imbalance by telling Canadians to trust governments, because governments come and go. Lord knows that this Government must go. However, governments come and go and needs are modified. No one can adjust more quickly to one's individual needs than the individual himself or herself. That should be the criterion to be used when dealing with pension reform.

Having said that, I support the increase in the GIS because it addresses directly the problems of those who are most in need. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, mentioned various statistics. I do not have time to address those statistics today.

There is one group that is composed of people who do not have the ability, or have only a limited ability, to provide for themselves because of the circumstances in which they find themselves, and those are widows between the ages of 60 and 65. I am sure that every Member of the House has dealt with a case of a widow whose spouse was 65 years of age or older and received old age pension and GIS at the time of his death. Therefore, when the surviving spouse, who is generally the wife, reaches her sixtieth birthday, she would need to receive, at the very least, the spouse's allowance. However, if she has not yet reached the age of 60, not only does she lose the pension of her deceased spouse but she does not even receive the spouse's allowance. At the same time, those spouses who are between the ages of 60 and 65 receive the old age pension as well as the spouse's allowance and continue to receive at least a portion of the spouse's allowance. I do not believe that there is any private pension system which can address that question. It must be addressed by public initiative.

I have looked at the statistics which deal with the situation to which I have referred. I have seen the number of people who fall into that category. I have looked at what the costs of the implementation of such a program would be. I simply say to Hon. Members that the cost, annualized over the next year, of giving that group of people the basic spouse's allowance, which I know would not be adequate but would at least be a recognition of their special circumstances, would amount to but a small portion of the amount of money that either of the aeronautics industries that have been referred to in the House in the past two weeks have requested for next year. That is what I mean by priorities.

I know that my time is limited, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to spend a few moments dealing with the longer term. As I said earlier, pension reform can only be accomplished through a twinning of the private and the public sectors. I have no doubt that most of the proposals made by the task force have merit. This is not only because, as Hon. Members know, I deal with these questions within a fairly conservative fiscal framework. As well, I made the task force report available to a number of my colleagues who work in the life insurance business and who have actuarial training. You must know as well, Mr. Speaker, that these people are very cautious about any general pension plan expansion in the public sector. I would like to tell Hon. Members what they said. I believe that there will need to be some discussions regarding questions of mortality tables, for example, because, on average, females live longer than males do, but those are technical questions. Generally speaking, this is what my actuarial colleagues said of the task force generally, and I quote from their critique of the report:

> On the matter of financing, it takes a stance that should be supported by a political party which believes in fiscal responsibility, honest accounting and disclosure, and minimal interference with individual initiative.

I could not have said that better myself, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that the dilemma of the Government is that pension reform takes a great deal of discussion and negotiation. It must be built upon the pillars to which I referred earlier and to which I believe the task force referred as well.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the fact that these matters are either complex or time consuming should mean that the process should not continue. Nor do I believe that, now that this Parliament is hopefully in its twilight days, this initiative should end simply because a federal election will intervene. If we do not continue the process, there is no question in my mind that we will continue with the same old programs.

Though such programs as the Canada Pension Plan, Old Age Security, the GIS and the Canada Assistance Plan are valid individually, we must put together a comprehensive pension reform. If we do not do so, I see, as I look at an aging population, as I look at my colleagues in the House who are getting older and as I look at society as a whole, that there is no way that we can be honest to society by saying that the public purse will provide an adequate standard of income for the aged. This cannot be done without requiring that people make provision today for their future. That is not to say that there will not always be a certain component of society that will need public help. I am not arguing that point at all, nor am I trying in any way to be mean-spirited about the issue. I am simply saying that if the pension system is to survive, that is the question we must address and that is how we must address it.

It has been mentioned that the CPP is not actuarially broke but that it is sound. That depends upon which side of the CPP one looks. One can look at it in terms of its obligations today, should those obligations be called, as against the pay-outs that are being made at the present time. When looking at the pay-outs that are being made at the present time, the plan is generally sound, although I have heard mentioned that it will be sound only until about the year 2005.

We have all heard our constituents say to us that they hope there will still be a pension plan when they retire. The point that surely must be made is that we must take the initiative today, because there is a mood in the country for pension reform based upon the principles we have enunciated. I am saying to the Liberal Government or, should we have the responsibility after the next election, to the Conservative Government, that regardless of our partisan positions, that goal is surely one which is valid for all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): A ten-minute period is now provided for questions and answers. Are there any questions?

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). I was slightly confused this morning when the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) made her speech. She talked about the one section of our report in which we had recommended going from a tax deduction system on the tax treatment area of the pension funds to a tax credit in order to attract a lot more of our lower and middle-income group people to go into a pension plan of their own volition. Am I to take it from the remarks of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands this morning that the policy of the Conservative Party in this area is to recommend going to a tax credit system from a tax deduction? Could I have some clarification?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, that is a valid question. My personal bias has always been toward the tax credit. If one looks at the registered pension accounts, one sees that they work better under that kind of system. The task force also recommended, for example, that RSPs could not be rolled over for other uses other than for pension purposes. I believe that when one takes a look at the RSPs, the RPAs and the tax credit, one sees that those three have to be combined.

The question I would have, and it needs some discussion, is whether the 40 per cent limit on the tax credit which the task force recommended, while it might meet the objective of the lower income group, would not cut out—and that is one of the criticisms in the task force report—the managerial classes or those with higher incomes. And is there any purpose or point in doing so? While that is not a complete answer, I believe that is the area of discussion we must have in terms of any agreement we can come to on tax credits.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any more questions? Debate.

Mr. Doug Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks, I would just like to thank the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) because I feel he shows a good grasp of the issues considering that he was not a member of the all-party task force. I believe he has added a great deal to the debate here this afternoon.

I would also like to thank my colleagues on both sides of the House for the work they put into the preparation of our report on pension reform. I found the process itself was very creative and I feel most of us would have to agree, having seen the results of our recommendations put into effect so quickly in the Budget documents, that it makes us, I suppose, thankful that the work we put in in 1983 was worth the effort.

I would like to begin by saying that I could not agree with the Hon. Member for Provencher more when he stated that it is imperative that we, as Canadians, teach the present generation who are in the work force today to put aside more money from current consumption and plan for their own retirement years. I believe that this is the message we will have to give loud and clear, regardless of political stripe. We will have to teach ourselves to save money.

There were three premises, which meant a great deal in terms of the recommendations which emanated from the task force. First and foremost, we believe very strongly that the tripod, which was developed until now in terms of delivering the retirement income system which we all take for granted, was sound, and it was based on the need for the private individual to save some money on his own, to have access to a private pension plan, to have his own personal savings and, in addition, to rely on the public pension plan itself. In other words, we were very much aware, when we made our recommendations, that we would not disturb that tripod which has served Canadians relatively well in their retirement years until now. As a result of that, we did not recommend a significant expansion of the Canada Pension Plan.

There were many groups of people, largely labour and some women's groups, who came before our committee and asked for a doubling of the Canada Pension Plan. One of the major reasons why we rejected the call for a doubling of the Canada Pension Plan was that we had a great deal of concern about the burden we would have to place on the next generation of Canadians who would pay for that pension system. I believe very few Canadians are aware that it costs now 3.6 per cent of their income to pay for existing levels of the Canada Pension Plan. It will have to rise to 8 per cent to 10 per cent of their income just to pay for the existing levels by somewhere around the year 2015.

Had we made a recommendation to double the Canada Pension Plan, it would have meant that my children would have to pay roughly 16 per cent to 18 per cent of their income just to pay for that kind of Canada Pension Plan. My feeling was—and I believe it was shared by eight of the nine members on the task force—that if we were to place that kind of burden on the next generation of Canadians, we would have a reneging of that intergenerational transfer burden. Hence, we did not recommend a doubling of the Canada Pension Plan.

That was one of the first things that we accepted as a given in the whole pension debate. The second point, which played a great part in terms of our recommendations, was the new emerging work pattern we have witnessed until now. We recognize that young Canadians who enter the work force today are, more than likely, going to have to work in two or three different provinces during their lifetime. They are going to have to be much more mobile in their quest for employment. Perhaps they will be in a place where they will only be working part time. Certainly, the whole concept of work sharing may, in fact, be an emerging work pattern, and the pension plan will have to be flexible enough to accommodate that kind of emerging work pattern.

Those work patterns led us to make an awful lot of recommendations about creating a much more flexible pension system in the country. I am not talking now of the public pension system but, rather, of the private pension system. That led to our recommendation that the vesting period be only two years rather than the current ten years.

We recommended the creation of registered pension accounts so that, as the worker moved from one work place to another, he could transfer his pension assets into that registered pension account. That addressed the portability issue. It led us to make recommendations for a minimum degree of inflation protection for the workers' assets, although we have had differences of opinion on whether the formula we recommended or the one which was presented in the Budget is the correct one. I believe all Parties now agree that some degree of minimum inflation protection is necessary in the workers' interest. Therefore, the emerging work patterns had a lot to do with our recommendations.

Last, but not least, the emerging family pattern had a lot to do with many of the recommendations we made. These are largely, I suppose, women's issues. Certainly, the emerging family pattern where we witnessed some 40 per cent of today's marriages ending in divorce led us to make recommendations on improvements to the division of assets upon marriage breakdown between the spouses. It led us to make recommendations under the Canada Pension Plan so that upon remarriage, as an example, one does not lose one's pension assets which have been accrued. It made for a number of recommendations with respect to the inclusion of home makers in the Canada Pension Plan.

The Hon. Member for Provencher did not mention this in his speech, but the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) stated that the Conservative Party's position on that is to favour the inclusion of home makers in the Canada Pension Plan. I would like the Hon. Member for Provencher to know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has agreed to that position before the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. However, with respect to the inclusion of home makers in the Canada Pension Plan, although it would appear that we have agreement on both sides of the House, the fact of the matter is that any changes to the Canada Pension Plan require the approval of two-thirds of the provinces representing two-thirds of the population. Hence, that kind of formula means that the Province of Ontario has in effect a veto power. As recently as a month ago, the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, Mr. Allan Grossman, stated that in his plans for pension reform he does not favour the inclusion of home makers in the Canada Pension Plan. Therefore, I would say to the Hon. Member for Provencher and the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands that evidently there will have to be some political pressures placed upon the Treasurer of Ontario if we wish to see the inclusion of home makers in the Canada Pension Plan.

I want to deal now with the motion itself, Mr. Speaker. The legislation for the increase in the GIS planned to take effect on July 1 of this year and on January 1, 1985, is in the formative stage and the Government House Leader plans to introduce it shortly. The Hon. Member for Provencher well knows that those Bills are negotiated between the Government House Leader and his counterparts in the Conservative and NDP Parties. I have no doubt that the GIS provisions in the February Budget will be implemented on time.

Other areas which would reflect on the need for legislative changes regarding pension form are much more complex than what has been indicated by the Hon. Member for Provencher and the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands. The federal Government has jurisdiction only over some 14 per cent of the pension plans in the country. In other words, 86 per cent of private pension plans fall under provincial jurisdiction. In the area in which we have complete jurisdiction, that is the banking sector and companies involved in transportation between the provinces, we put forward a background document in the Budget to bring forward legislation which would make significant changes to the Pension Benefits Standards Act. Because of the complexity of the changes, we need to have a lot more discussion between the employers and employees affected and the federal Government. As a result, we have a technical team at the present time going across the country soliciting responses to the paper we presented in the Budget.

Last but not the least, Mr. Speaker, we have some concern concerning the tax treatment of pension funds. I am glad to report that the Minister of Finance and the Government accepted the basic thrust of the recommendations in my report to have a more equitable tax treatment of funds set aside for pension purposes. It was recognized by all members of the task force that people who belong to defined benefit pension plans have a significant tax advantage over those who do not. Those people, who are largely self-employed or who are professionals or small business persons, who were limited to the $5,500/$3,-500 rule were adversely treated as compared to those who had access to a defined benefit plan. As a result, the federal Government accepted the concept of a lifetime limit of tax assisted moneys, which resulted in a significant increase in the upper limits. The Budget proposal is to raise the limit from $5,500 in 1984 to $10,000 in 1985, and then, in incremental steps, to $15,500 by the year 1988. There will then be significant changes for those who belong to defined benefit plans. Phase two of pension reform, beginning in 1988, is to place a value on the defined benefit plan so that if a worker is entitled to more tax room it would be deducted from those new upper limits. Hopefully, between now and the end of June the Budget papers, which we hope will be adopted by the House, will reflect those new limits and put them into effect. But there are technical difficulties in getting the system to accommodate those new upper limits. As a result, legislation which would reflect those complexities will have to be introduced in the fall. It was well known, even at the time of the Budget, that we would require a technical group to meet with representatives of the industry in order to adjust the system to accommodate this new concept of lifetime limits for tax purposes.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I anticipate that the GIS legislation will be introduced in the House between now and the end of June. I think it will take at least until the fall to introduce the changes to the Pension Benefits Standards Act because of the complexities I mentioned. I do not think any Member of the House would advocate creating a degree of uncertainty in financial markets by not agreeing to those new upper limits between now and December of this year.

I wanted to point out as well, Mr. Speaker, that the task force made a number of recommendations with respect to changes in the Canada Pension Plan. They are significant. Because the Province of Ontario has the power of veto, it is going to require extensive negotiations between the provinces and the federal Government. I am hopeful that the legislative agenda for pension reform will largely reflect this over the next 12 months. A meeting is to be convened by the Treasurer of Ontario, Mr. Grossman, of the Ministers responsible for this legislation on June 5. He is hopeful that there will be consensus concerning the legislative agenda for pension reform. I assume that this will in turn create consensus on the need for changes to the CPP. This Government has long recommended significant changes in the CPP disability payments. Two years ago, the Minister put a proposal before her provincial counterparts which would have doubled those payments. At that time, the Treasurer of Ontario, Mr. Frank Miller, rejected the doubling of disability payments. I am pleased to report that in a speech just three weeks ago the current Treasurer of the Province of Ontario has agreed to the doubling of these payments. This will mean an awful lot to our constituents.

As the Hon. Member for Provencher mentioned, and I happen to agree with him, many of our problems have to do with people between the ages of 60 and 64, a lot of whom are widows. I think it is fair to say, as I look around the House at other Members, that we have a great deal of difficulty with people who have to rely on CPP disability payments to survive. We all recognize that those levels are far too low, so I am pleased that Mr. Grossman has finally removed the veto and we can get on with the changes to the CPP to allow people to live in a minimum of comfort and security.

Also, Mr. Speaker, it seems that we have agreement on improvements to survivors' benefits as recommended by our task force and consequent to the changes in the CPP. It appears that we have unanimity concerning the division of CPP assets upon marriage breakdown. Clearly I think we are on the path to pension reform. I anticipate that changes in the public pension system will occur much more quickly than changes in the private pensions, but I am also hopeful, provided we can get some degree of consensus from the June 5 meeting, that we can have private pension plan legislation introduced both federally and provincially over the next 12 to 18 months. Regardless of the timetable, it is clear that once the legislation is in effect for the public and private systems, it will reflect much better the needs of workers and women in the area of pensions.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I wish I shared the same optimism as my colleague. However, I have one or two questions which I think are of importance. As Chairman of the task force, the Member knows how important are these negotiations with the provinces regarding changes to the Canada Pension Plan. The provinces are not all that anxious to change the Canada Pension Plan.

The Member has heard concerns voiced by the task force with regard to people out of work between the ages of 60 and 65, particularly now with the high unemployment in the manufacturing areas. In his capacity as former Chairman of the task force, would the Member encourage his Government to make strong representations to provincial governments in renegotiations on the CPP to have some serious discussions about lowering the age of eligibility for CPP on a voluntary basis to age 60? This would provide adequate income to people between the ages of 60 and 65. It would also allow young people back into the work force who have been unable to obtain work in the last few years.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the Member opposite. That is a course of action which I would hope we could convince our provincial counterparts to take. I agree that an actuarially reduced Canada and Quebec Pension Plan would be of some benefit to youth who are seeking employment. I have also thought on numerous occasions that we could probably use much more innovative private pension funds to entice older workers who have a better pension to retire and leave their jobs to the younger workers. Hopefully that could be done.

I would like to point out to the Member opposite that one of the recommendations which we did make on the Canada Pension Plan, which deals in a peripheral way with his question, was agreed to by the Minister of Finance. Until now, the Canada Pension Plan has operated on the theory that a person entering the work force at the age of 18 will stay there until the age of 65. In other words, his maximum benefits are calculated on the basis of 47 years in the work force. I do not think that anyone in this room would suggest that the emerging work pattern means that people are going to stay in the work force for some 47 years. As a result of that, we made recommendations to change the requirements under the Canada Pension Plan from the maximum of 47 years to 35 years. This would better reflect the public pension plan and the situation which exists in private pension plans. More important, it would give more Canadians maximum payments under the Canada Pension Plan. Only 18 per cent of Canadians who retired in 1983 qualify for the maximum payment under Canada Pension Plan. That position has been accepted by the Minister of Finance. Hopefully, it will be adopted by our provincial counterparts as well.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Sudbury was speaking about the GIS increases. I would like to mention a case in which a person, who is allegedly going to get a $25 increase, is actually going to have a decreased income. That is because the workmen's compensation contribution is going to be considered, which was never done before.

There are three payments under compensation. One is regular compensation. If I am working in a mine and a lump of coal hits my shoulder and dislocates my shoulder bone, I will receive regular compensation until that is healed and I can go back to work. That payment is not likely to affect people who are 65 or older. The second payment is called temporary partial disability. If my shoulder does not heal in the regular length of time and I have therapy for it, I am put on a temporary partial disability pension. That will not likely affect most older people either. The payment which is going to affect most people over 65 is the third one; the permanent partial disability. An example of that is a person who loses his hand or foot. After it is healed, he still does not have his hand or foot. He must go through life without it. That is a contribution he has made to industry. That payment is not wages. The regular compensation is in lieu of wages. Permanent partial disability has nothing to do with wages because he has lost part of his body in industry. That should not be considered as income under any circumstances.

I raised this point with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) a few weeks ago. She was going to discuss it with the Minister. I have not heard from her or from the Minister as yet. I would like to raise this matter with the Hon. Member for Sudbury. It is a real injustice for someone who has a permanent partial disability to have a reduction in income because he lost a hand or foot and is now being paid for that loss. Would the Hon. Member comment on that?

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, the Member opposite raises a valid point, which perhaps an all-Party committee of the House could investigate. It is not only the area of workmen's compensation which confuses the Canadian public. For the purpose of testing, veterans' allowance does not qualify for purposes of the guaranteed income supplement. Yet we do that now for workmen's compensation and not in the case of veterans allowances. If our system is going to require some kind of income testing, the rationale should be the same for all. We have now created a sort of hodge-podge of regulations. This matter must be reviewed by an all-Party committee which can hold hearings across the country. It certainly needs clarification. The Hon. Member has pointed out a glaring example of an inequity which should be addressed.

I would like to give you an example, Mr. Speaker, of a sentiment which was expressed before our task force by a number of people who are now pensioned. They were pensioned on plans which did not have any indexation factor. As an example, the CN pensioners made a very compassionate case for retroactive lump sum payments from their funds to pensioners. The committee agreed that this should be done. We felt that if there is one glaring example of an injustice in this country, it is what has occured to pensioners under the CN plan.

The difficulty which we have under the guaranteed income supplement system is that if we were to convince CN to give a lump sum payment, or at least to increase the monthly payments to their pensioners, almost half of it would be lost because they would be losing their qualification for the guaranteed income supplement. Our recommendation was that it should lie outside for purposes of income testing. That is another example of something which must be rationalized in the system. I think it would be a worthwhile pursuit for all three political parties.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any more questions?

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have only one more question. The point which the Hon. Member made with regard to the guaranteed income supplement is a good reason why we should reduce dependence on the GIS. My Party and I were surprised by the generous provision of up to $15,000 in tax assistance for upper income individuals. This means that an individual making $86,000 could deduct $7,500 from income tax, if he were at a 50 per cent tax rate. I know that the Member shared the concern of the task force about how much assistance should legitimately be given to higher income individuals. Is the Member aware of any cost estimates which this limit of $15,000 is going to put on the tax system when fully operational in 1988?

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that when it is fully operational from 1988 onward, government estimates would be somewhere in the area of $250 million. It is fair to state that the recommendation of our task force was to have tax assistance at a significantly lower amount than that which was reflected in the February Budget. To be fair, it was also stated that if we implemented the recommendation of my own task force, we would be affecting not just upper income level Canadians; we would be hitting very hard as well at the average International Nickel Company worker.

Therefore, we did in effect what the Minister of Finance did in his February Budget. We accepted the principle of lifetime tax assistance. At the same time, we maintained the levels as they are at the present time under the present legislation, which is up to $60,000 of pension per year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West.

● (1720)

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to participate in the Opposition motion that is before us today. Let me begin by quoting the motion:

> That this House profoundly regrets the two-year delay of the Government in bringing in promised legislation to improve Guaranteed Income Supplements for low income single elderly Canadians, and condemns the Government for its failure to respond to the innovative proposals of the all-party Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform to expand opportunities for Canadians under age 65 to make adequate provision for income in their retirement years.

When I first heard the motion that was placed before the House, I remembered a time before my adult active involvement in the labour movement or the political process in this country in 1947 to 1949 when the United Autoworkers in the United States and later in Canada began their campaign for a pension plan in the auto industry. Since then much progress has been made with respect to industrially negotiated pension plans and public pension plans on both sides of the border, particularly on the Canadian side of the border. At that time there was a short song "too old to work and too young to die" which became a symbol for the people at that time. That expression is still singularly appropriate to the conditions in which many of our citizens, particularly those who work in heavy industry, still find themselves. The song, which was sung by Joe Glazer, the educational director of the United Rubber Workers at that time, who often travelled among various groups of workers in industry, is as follows:

They put horses to pasture, they feed them on hay,
Even machines get retired some day.
The bosses get pensions when their days are through,
Fat pensions for them, brother, nothing for you.
. . . Who will take care of you,
How'll you get by
When you're too old to work and too young to die?

Those who have not worked as life-termers in heavy industry may think that that day has passed. However, anyone who is familiar with the mining and smelting industry knows that the number of people who take early retirement in that industry due to union negotiated pension plans often die before the age of 58 or 60, or very soon after they go on pensions. This is largely due to health hazards that still exist not only in the mining and smelting industry but the chemical and other industries as well. Furthermore, it is the hazards from those industries that affect the surrounding communities. These hazards exist partly because we have not conducted the necessary industrial clean-up, both in and out of those installations, that should have been carried out.

Hopefully the Government and the Official Opposition are seriously considering reducing the retirement age to 60. Certainly the NDP has discussed and advocated this step for a long time. But at a time when we are all collectively considering reducing the retirement age to 60, we should seriously consider the fact that there are thousands of Canadians who retire at age 58 or 60 but who do not live long enough to collect pensions for more than a few months. It is still a serious situation and one to which this song still applies. They may still ask how we will get by when we are too old to work and too young to die.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) a moment ago. I believe he said that the Government would soon introduce legislation to provide for the increase in the guaranteed income supplement. The word he used was "shortly". I trust that he will forgive those of us in this Party for not exactly being excited by the use of his word "shortly". We saw an example of this in Question Period today in reference to the former Minister of Labour who stated on June 1, 1981, that an even then long awaited and still awaited important piece of legislation affecting life and death in the work place would be introduced "in the near future". I do not know how the word "shortly" relates to the words "in the near future", but I think the Hon. Member would forgive us for being suspicious and preferring to have the legislation in hand before showing great excitement. However, the statement is welcomed and I hope it will be followed through.

Canada must have the most studies conducted of any country on earth. With respect to the question of pensions, there has been a task force, a couple of Throne Speeches as well as a Budget. That Budget mentions studies which followed the studies of the task force, which in turn followed previous studies which have lasted for years. We have seen green papers, and I suppose there will be white papers. Perhaps there will be a whole rainbow of papers before we begin to seriously accomplish even some of the extremely limited recommendations made by the recent task force on pension reform.

The last Budget had a section entitled "Building Pensions for Canadians". Stage one is to be implemented on January 1, 1985. They are rather limited recommendations. Stage two is to commence on January 1, 1988. This will take place in three or four years, and in the words of the former Minister of Labour, I suppose that is in the near future. However, it still puts off to a future time any meaningful suggestions in the Budget. For instance, there is "the annual dollar ceiling on deductible contributions to all types of pension plans which rises to $15,500. Second, "the carry-forward provision for deduction entitlements for both money purchase and defined benefit plans comes into force. Entitlements from 1985 onward can be claimed". Third, "the two types of plan are integrated into one comprehensive system of tax assistance limits".

Fourth, "maximum pension and contribution limits will be indexed by changes in the average industrial wage starting in 1989". It is stated "that the changes will not be retroactive". That is at least one definite statement, that "the changes will not be retroactive".

The same Budget has another booklet entitled Action plan for pension reform. Building better pensions for Canadians. At page 13 there appears, in big black headlines, "A Time to Act". It states that "the Government is determined to ensure that pension benefits and coverage are sufficiently improved so that all Canadians have an adequate retirement income. Accordingly, it states, "the Government undertakes to monitor closely the reaction of provinces and the private sector to the proposals for pension reform presented in the Budget, and it will be ready to discuss with them whatever additional steps may be required". This was stated under the heading "A Time to Act". The Government states that it will "monitor" the attitudes of the private sector and of the provinces.

The Government says that it will be monitoring, over a period of who knows how long, to see what the attitude of the provinces will be before moving on its budget proposals contained in the section entitled "A Time to Act", under an "action plan for pension reform". I will help the Government monitor more quickly by bringing a certain situation to its attention. This situation is taking place in a number of provinces. I know that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is all too familiar with it. Approximately a week ago, one of my constituents brought me his and his wife's cheque stubs. Mr. Raymond Rhodes of Site 18, Comp. 31, RR 2, Castlegar, had a cheque from the Government of Canada which represented a monthly increase from $440.64 to $441.39. Of course, that was to accompany the indexed section of his pension. It is an increase of 75 cents. That cheque came in April, 1984. On April 26, 1984, a cheque was issued from the Province of British Columbia in which he received a supplement from that province which, as all Members know, is as a result of a federal and provincial agreement on how pensions work or do not work in this country. His income from the Province of British Columbia was reduced from a March payment of $21.83 to a payment of $18.83, a reduction of $3. As a result of the "very well co-ordinated" system in this country, and the attitudes of the provinces—which I do not think need to be monitored—at least the attitude of the Province of B.C. does not have to be "monitored" any longer—and this generous system, he lost $2.25 in April, 1984 over March. The figures are very comparable. In fact the amounts are exactly the same for his wife, Mrs. Ruby Z. Rhodes of the same address. Together, they have lost $4.50 per month as a result of this indexation and as a result of the attitude of at least one of the three provinces at least it used to be a have province. It is questionable nowadays. But as a result of the attitude of B.C. and the Conservative-Social Credit coalition, the Liberal-Conservative-Social Credit coalition—it incudes them all—government of that province, the Rhodes lost this money.

Whose other attitudes are we going to monitor? We know that British Columbia has not been alone in their attitude. Have we really changed our attitudes very much, even looking back all the way? Certainly we have made some social progress. But have we really changed that much since that day in 1926 when J. S. Woodsworth and A. A. Heaps, one "the leader" and one "the group", the independent Labour Members of this House at that time, held the balance of power between Mackenzie King's Liberals and the Conservative Party? They were able to wring a concession from the Government. I keep a copy of the letter in my office. I have had it since I was a kid. It is one of the things of which anyone in the Social Democratic movement in this country would be very proud. A balance of power held by two members was able to wring out of Mr. King at that time a concession that he would introduce the beginning of an old age pension—albeit with a means test—and would consider an unemployment insurance system. The Prime Minister at that time made the commitment. We got old age pensions of $20 a month, I believe with a means test. We also got a promise to consider unemployment insurance. That consideration was for the "near future". But we had to wait from 1926 until the Second World War in order to get that concession that was being placed under "active consideration."

I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party and in our predecessor Party the CCF, a Party in which I also had the opportunity to be active while I was still a young adult, have felt proud of the contribution that we have made, not only then but on a number of times and in many situations ever since.

I could go on and list a number of those occasions but I think I will relate to just one instance having to do with the late Judy LaMarsh. I believe Ms. LaMarsh, the then Minister of National Health and Welfare, was hosting a party in her office to celebrate the passage of the Canada Pension Plan. The hon. lady had the grace, courtesy and knowledge to propose a toast. Her toast was to another one of our colleagues. He is currently a colleague, the House Leader of this Party, the Hon. Stanley Knowles. As all Canadians know, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has played an important role in the development and improvement over the years of the Canada pension system. Most notably he and his colleagues at that time fought the good fight in order that we could begin to build a Canada Pension Plan that would work then and in the future to provide a more generous pension regime for at least all working Canadians. We have continued to add to that and will continue to add to it in the future in some ways along the lines of the report of the task force, hopefully more along the lines of the minority report filed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller), in order to provide better pensions and more secure pensions that keep in line with the cost of living and allow people to collect pensions before they die.

In his report my colleague began with a quote from the House of Commons Debates for November 9, 1964. It was from a speech made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, who said:

> What I like most of all about the Canada pension plan—about the two stage plan which we are now developing for Canadians in their years of retirement—is that we are trying to reach a position where we are providing pensions that are adequate. I do not suggest that the levels which will be achieved by combining the Canada pension plan, at its best, with old age security, at its present level, are really the last words in adequacy, but at least we are talking about pensions of quite a different order from that which seemed to be accepted a few years or decades ago. I hope that, having accepted the principle that retirement security should be on the basis of adequacy, we will go on improving that basis, finding ways and means of raising the levels of our pensions so that all Canadians can look forward to a retirement in decency and dignity.

I hope that all Members of the House can say Amen to that.

I have sat in this House and observed the Government on the other side for four years. Its Members have sat on their seats for four years, only to come up in the last few months with a paper which says, it is "A Time to Act". But that action is still off in a never-never land. The Government has waited a full four years before it has even begun to talk like a Liberal Government. Its members have been acting like Conservatives for four years and the Government has become increasingly unpopular. Members of the Liberal Government are still acting like Conservatives, but now that an election is approaching they are going to talk like Liberals. The last Budget was a classic example. It was Conservative economics and Liberals politics, the worst of both worlds.

We look to the Opposition for something different. But what do we have? We have the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the finance critic for the Conservative Party, who talks about having to be "mean and nasty" and having to do all kinds of things to people. He goes rambling off in long interviews with reporters from The Globe and Mail and from elsewhere. He says that he would like to think about introducing means tests for baby bonuses, family allowances, and maybe some of the other social measures but that this is not the time. That is what he said. The finance critic for the Conservative Party said this is not the time to introduce a means test for all those social programs.

I wish he were here because I would like to ask him, when is the time? Is it after an election, when we might be unfortunate enough to see a Conservative government acting like Conservatives instead of a Liberal government acting like Conservatives? Is that the appropriate time? My God, Mr. Speaker, we already have a Government in British Columbia composed of Liberals and Conservatives and some old Socreds who do not know the difference anymore. We have had lots of experience with them. They are the people who issued the cheques in April, 1984 who took away in spades the pitiful amount that was just passed on to those same pensioners by this federal Government in the last few weeks.

I want to address briefly in discussing this motion the whole question of a means test versus universality. I will conclude quickly. I am afraid, for all of the economic arguments—and there are some good ones although I think some short-sighted economic arguments may prevail, that we could introduce more means tests to a number of our social programs, including more of our pension systems. But if we do that, we will in effect cut off virtually everyone who is approaching the average industrial wage from receiving benefits. I would caution some of the more progressive Members on that side of the House that if we ever adopt such a regime, many of the workers in Canada, especially organized workers, for whom those of us who have had a chance to take some positions of leadership in the labour movement, who have been able to help keep on side in terms of social progress all the time, even sometimes at a cost to themselves, may well say, "We are paying a lion's share of taxes. How come we do not get any of the benefits? If you look at eligibility for the whole range of income related social program, federally and provincially, it is just below the average industrial wage where those cut-off lines always come into play either totally or in part. It would be the greatest disservice to social progress if we were ever to follow the very poor and poorly thought out advice for means tests rather than universality.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments relating to the Hon. Member's remarks?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate. Adequate pension benefits are important for all citizens, particularly women who until now have been the losers in many pension plans for reasons we all know.

In 1979, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first started applying the federal Government's commitment to pension reform, a special emphasis was placed upon the particular problems facing women under the current pension system in Canada. Following the National Pensions Conference in 1981, a number of seminars were conducted by various women's groups across the country. The overwhelming participation of women in these seminars was a clear indication of their concern about the inadequacies of the pension system and their personal commitment to reform.

In December, 1982, with the release of the federal green paper on pension reform, an accompanying document called Focus on Women was released. Later, the parliamentary Special Committee on Pension Reform was requested by the Government to consult the public on those issues of specific concern to women. The Government's consistent commitment to today's elderly women and to future generations of women is a matter of public record since 1979. The extensive periods of study are now over. The February Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) left no doubt that improving the pension system for women is a priority of the Government in 1984.

Today, I would like to outline how and why the Government is intending to bring about much-needed pension reform, with particular emphasis upon those initiatives which will be of benefit to women. Let me begin with the public pension system, namely the old age security program and the Canada Pension Plan. These, of course, are the areas where the federal Government has the greatest authority. Under the old age security program, every Canadian citizen or legal resident of Canada who has lived in Canada for at least 10 years is eligible to receive a basic monthly pension at age 65. The amount is raised every three months to reflect increases in the cost of living. The residence rules under the old age security program were changed in 1977, so that persons who immigrated to Canada after that date with no prior residence, will receive an old age security pension at the rate of one-fortieth of the full amount for each year they have lived in Canada.

Receipt of this basic monthly pension depends solely upon age and upon the number of years a person has lived in Canada. It is not necessary for a person to have been a member of the paid labour force. In addition, for those pensioners who have little or no other income, the old age security program provides the income-tested guaranteed income supplement. This is determined in proportion to the other income of pensioners. Also, for the 60 to 64-year-old spouse of a lower-income pensioner, the OAS program provides a spouse's allowance which, like the guaranteed income supplement, is determined in relation to the couple's other income.

The purpose of the old age security program is to provide elderly persons with a level of income sufficient to meet basic living needs. For couples where both spouses are pensioners, the program is considered to meet that objective. However, the guarantee for single pensioners is not adequate. On that basis, the Government has promised to introduce legislation to increase the guaranteed income supplement single rate by $25 in July of this year and by a further $25 in December 1984. As well, those persons who receive only a partial old age security benefit, many of whom are immigrant women, will be provided with the same income guarantees as persons who receive the full pension. These changes will certainly help today's elderly, but what about tomorrow's pensioners?

The Canada Pension Plan was introduced in 1966. It is a social insurance program designed to provide a measure of income protection to members of the paid labour force and their families in the event of the earner's retirement, disability or death. Virtually all employees in Canada, be they full-time or part-time workers, contribute to the plan at the rate of 1.8 per cent of their salaries or wages up to a prescribed ceiling, with the employer making an equal contribution. Self-employed persons contribute at the combined rate of 3.6 per cent. Of the 8.2 million contributors to the Canada Pension Plan, 3.2 million are women.

The benefit under the Canada Pension Plan is indexed every January in accordance with increases in the Consumer Price Index. All Canada Pension Plan benefits are fully portable. No matter how many times a worker changes jobs, he or she still receives a pension.

In recent years there have been a number of significant steps to improve pension protection for women under the Canada Pension Plan. For instance, beginning with the 1980 taxation year, women working with their husbands in small unincorporated family businesses can make contributions to the Canada Pension Plan if their salaries are deducted for tax purposes from the revenues of those businesses. Thus, many women who were previously unable to have access to the plan are now able to build up pension credits in their own right.

Another important measure for women under the Canada Pension Plan, the child-rearing drop-out provision, was approved by the Parliament of Canada in 1977, and finally came into force last year following approval by the Government of Ontario. Now Canada Pension Plan contributors who leave the paid work force to raise children under age seven can drop those years of low or no earnings from the calculation of their final pension if it is to their advantage. The Economic Council of Canada estimated that using the drop-out provision may increase a woman's pension by as much as 22 per cent.

Another amendment to the CPP which was made in 1977 allows a spouse whose divorce became final after January 1978, to receive a split of the Canada Pension Plan credits earned by both spouses during the marriage. This provision treats accumulated pension credits as joint family assets. Given that one in three marriages now end in divorce, this is a significant feature for income protection of older divorced women.

I now want to mention briefly those areas where the Government is seeking further improvement. Amendments to the Canada Pension Plan can only be implemented with the approval of the Parliament of Canada, plus the approval of two-thirds of the provinces having two-thirds of the Canadian population. For this reason, the Government of Canada will be seeking provincial co-operation this year to bring about changes outlined in the February Budget. These included the continuation of the survivor's benefit on remarriage and the extension of the credit-splitting provision to include marriage separation, as well as permitting credit splitting on application when the younger spouse reaches age 65.

While these immediate changes will improve pension protection afforded to women under the Canada Pension Plan, there are other areas of reform which will be included in the discussions with the provinces, including improved survivor and disability benefits.

Of the two public plans, the old age security program ensures that every person in Canada, whether or not he or she worked in the paid labour force, will have some level of income at age 65. Undoubtedly, the Canada Pension Plan as an employment-related plan provides better protection. It already provides coverage to most women in the paid labour force. It protects against low income years due to child rearing. It recognizes that pension credits are a joint family asset. It provides survivor benefits as well as fully portable and indexed benefits.

In contrast, when one looks at the third level of the retirement income system, the private plans, one sees very great failings there. This tier of the pension system was expected to provide employees with a retirement pension which reflected their pre-retirement earnings. Unfortunately, it is the exception rather than the rule when that happens.

In 1980, less than 50 per cent of employed paid workers belonged to a private plan. This situation is particularly serious for working women. Only 37.6 per cent were covered by a private pension plan. Apart from inadequate coverage, a woman who changes jobs a number of times or leaves the labour force to raise children may lose all her pension entitlements in private plans.

All of these factors, known in pension jargon as inadequacies in the portability, vesting and locking-in provisions of private plans, result in generally low and sometimes non-existent pension benefits for retired workers. In 1980, for example, only 24 per cent of old age security recipients received any private pension, and those pensions comprised only 11 per cent of the total income of all pensioners.

The odds against a woman receiving a decent company pension are high. Many will retire with what they think is a reasonable benefit, only to find that within a few years its purchasing power has been eroded due to inflation. While the benefits provided by the private pension plans provide cost of living adjustments, this is very rare with employer-sponsored plans. This creates particular problems for women who, on average, live ten years longer than men.

The federal Government has very little authority over employers' sponsored pension plans. There is a federal Pension Benefits Standards Act, but it covers only about 10 per cent of the work force. Authority for the remaining 90 per cent of plans members rests with the ten provincial governments, only seven of which have pension benefits standards legislation. This being the case, what can the Government of Canada do to shore up the weaknesses in the private pension system? It could set a good example with its own pension plan for its own public servants. Indeed, major changes were announced in this way in February which will be implemented by January 1, 1987. These changes will be of real benefit to those women who work for an employer who falls under federal jurisdiction and who has a contributory plan.

What about women who work for employers who do not offer a pension plan? This group is of special concern in particular because it involves so many women. One of the main reasons why many employed women do not have private pension coverage is that they work for small employers who do not feel they can afford the cost of setting up and administering their own plan.

A new tax-assisted retirement savings vehicle will be introduced, the registered pension account, which will accept contributions by both employees and employers which cannot be withdrawn until retirement. It is hoped that some of the smaller firms may find this to be an answer.

What I have outlined today is a package of reforms that represents a significant step toward providing improved financial protection for Canadians, especially for women when they reach retirement age. The process is far from complete. Consultation and co-operation with the provinces is critical to the implementation of the Government's proposals. I am pleased to see that the recent report published by the Government of Ontario endorses the federal Government's proposals for 1984 changes in the public pension system. I hope that this is the beginning of action by other provinces as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining I would like to make some general remarks on this very important issue. I will begin by complimenting the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) on bringing the motion before the House today. By doing so, she has clearly demonstrated the concern that she and other Members of the Progressive Conservative Party feel, and the distress felt, that the Government has moved with inadequate dispatch in attempting to address the problems of the elderly, particularly the elderly poor.

I reject completely any suggestion made by Members to my left. I refer specifically to the speech of the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) who suggested, as members of his Party are sometimes prone to do, that somehow the members of the New Democratic Party have the exclusive right to care for the poor and the elderly.

The record of this Party stands for itself. Concern has been expressed many times in this House and elsewhere by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). The record of the Clark administration makes it very clear that we are extremely concerned about the well-being of the elderly and the poor. I suggest that a Progressive Conservative Government, as a result of re-established priorities, would be in a better position to care for the needy than is the case now. The needy of Canada have nothing to fear from the prospects of a Progressive Conservative Government. In fact, I suspect they look forward to that opportunity.

This is a very important motion for two or three reasons. First, it addresses the problems of those who are often forgotten by the public at large and by Parliament. In this case, they have clearly been forgotten by this Government. I speak of the elderly and the poor. A short while ago, Maclean's Magazine addressed this subject in an article entitled "Canada's Forgotten Poor". Unfortunately, the measures which the Budget referred to and have not been brought to us with any kind of dispatch suggest that the problems of the elderly and the poor remain low in the priority of this Government. This issue is very important because, as others have said, very often it is women who fall into the category of the elderly poor. Because of the nature of the political system, women tend to be underrepresented in this House. Therefore, it is important that Parliament pay careful attention to their plight.

It is important in times of economic recession that we not forget the importance of social issues. There are many things which are of concern today, including the size of the national deficit. We are concerned about international crises. It is very easy for social issues to fall between the cracks in times like this.

This motion clearly points out how this Government has failed. It has failed to follow the recommendations of the parliamentary task force on pension reform. It has not brought in the recommended $102 per month increase in the guaranteed income supplement which was suggested. Instead, there will be a $25 increase, on July 1, we hope, and another $25, we hope, on December 1. We have, belatedly, half of what that all-Party task force recommended. By providing only half of what is necessary, this administration is failing to provide for the needs of those who fall into this category. We have also failed to address the problem of the near elderly, those between the ages of 60 and 65. In many ways, they are the most unfortunate of all. They, in particular, have fallen between the cracks.

There is no provision for those who were receiving spousal allowances and whose spouse died before the age of 65. All widowers and widows should be eligible for this kind of supplement between the ages of 60 and 65. I personally would favour the reduction of the qualifying age to 55.

Finally, in the last few moments left to me, I want to make a plea for the introduction of homemakers' pensions. Women who have remained in the home have made a substantial contribution to Canada throughout its history. Perhaps it is even more necessary now in times of economic restraint that we have such support within the home. Such women have earned the right to their own independent pensions and this is something which the House must address with great dispatch. Therefore, I strongly support the motion which calls upon the Government to change its priorities and to make the entire question of pension reform a matter of great urgency.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please! It being six o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 62(11), to advise the House that the proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

POOLS—SPORTS POOL—PROVISION OF FUNDING FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH. (B) REQUEST FOR FIVE-YEAR FUNDING PLAN

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, on May 8, as recorded at pages 3503 and 3504 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Olivier) to indicate how much money medical research would be receiving from the sports pool.

When Bill C-95, the Bill which established the sports pool, came before the House, the Government knew it had a very sticky wicket because it was trying to get back into the lottery business, the gaming business and the gambling business. At that time, the Government decided that it needed to put some moral ribbon around the issue. It decided it needed some justification for returning to the gambling business. In typical Liberal style, it came up with something which at the moment looked good, but which upon second thought was as empty as the promises that were made. The Government said that any profits from the sports pool would first go toward the federal Government's obligations to the Calgary Olympics which are to be held in 1988. It is interesting to note that when the Calgary Olympics committee made application to host those Winter games, the federal Government committed itself to an expenditure of $200 million, but at no time did it say that that $200 million was conditional upon a sports pool being established.

That was not a good enough reason to get into the gambling business once again so the Government came up with two other reasons which it thought were foolproof. It indicated that money from the sports pool would go to arts and culture groups, such as symphonies, which are always strapped for money. As well, the Government became even more moralistic and said that it would put money from the sports pool into medical research. That, Mr. Speaker, was the moral element of an immoral Act.

There has been much controversy raging over the sports pool in the last few weeks. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the provincial Governments have taken the federal Government to court. In some cases, provincial Governments have been unplugging computer terminals in stores which sell Loto 6/49 and the sports pool. A counter-action has been taken by the courts which in some cases have asked the provincial Governments to restore those terminals. Suffice it to say that the Government has always put forward the sports pool concept as being one which would make good things like medical research happen.

This week the President of the Medical Research Council appeared before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. At that time I asked him how much money the MRC had been promised by the Government for 1984-85 from profits from the sports pool. The answer was one which I expected, Mr. Speaker. He said that they had been promised nothing. Additionally, the MRC has a five-year plan, because in the field of medical research one needs forward planning. I then asked the President of the MRC how much money he will be getting from the sports pool for his next five-year plan. Again, the answer was interesting. He said that he is not counting on getting any money.

I thought that answer was valid until I asked the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport how much money would go to medical research. After all, Bill C-95 was passed by the Government, against the opposition of the other two Parties. I asked the Minister how much money would go to medical research for 1984-85 and for the five-year plan. The answer was very interesting. The Minister did not say none because he did not have the courage to say none. He might as well have said none because that is what his words meant. He said: "Oh,

Mr. Speaker, we are going to fund the Calgary Olympics. That's our first priority. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are interested in medical research and yes, Mr. Speaker, we are going to fund medical research." However, what he failed to say, Mr. Speaker, was by how much and when.

• (1805)

That is the point which was made early in the debate on establishing that sports pool. Some of us said there will be no money forthcoming for medical research, it is only window dressing. The first committee I ever sat on in this House, Mr. Speaker, was the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, at which time we had the stamps and the lotteries for the Montreal Olympics. I remember the then mayor, who still is the Mayor of Montreal, said if we give him the Montreal Olympics deal it could no more have a deficit than he could have a baby. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am still waiting for that genetic wonder to take place because the Montreal Olympics not only has a deficit, we are still paying and paying.

That will also be the case, Mr. Speaker, with this deal, and I say to the Parliamentary Secretary that I am not interested in promises. I want to know today, and the medical research community wants to know today, how much money will it receive from the sports pool in 1984-1985? Second, how much money from the sports pool will go to MRC over the next five years?

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). I support his concerns for medical research, as I am sure everyone in the House of Commons does. However, it is not really a question of where the money comes from which is so important. He talks about morals. I do not believe it is a question of morals, it is a question of money—money for medical research. It is not a question of where you get it from.

First, I would like to remind Hon. Members of the reasons for the federal Government getting involved in the so-called gaming business. In 1979, the short lived Clark Government made a deal with the provinces to get out of the lottery market in exchange for a given sum. This year that sum will amount to about $35 million. I should point out that this year the provinces expect to make a profit of about $500 million. So you can see that this was not a very good deal for the federal Government. But then what can you expect from a government which in 1979 could not count?

In keeping with the Clark decision to vacate the lottery market, the Liberals upon their return to power introduced legislation to enable the federal Government to enter the sports pool business. Contrary to claims made by the Opposition, this does not violate the 1979 agreement with the provinces, so I have been advised. The beneficiaries of the revenue from this new and exciting sports pool game are spelled out in the legislation.

In March of this year, the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Olivier) signed an agreement with the 1988 Winter Olympics Organizing Committee for $200 million. This amount represents the largest single direct funding commitment by the federal Government for a sporting event. Commitments were also made in the areas of fitness and amateur sport, arts and culture, and health and medical research.

The Hon. Member for Provencher has raised the issue of funding for medical research. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that this year the federal Government will provide $170 million for medical research—

Mr. Epp: $157 million, according to the chairman.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Well, I have $170 million, of which $152 million will go to the Medical Research Council. As regards a five-year research funding plan, I am sure the Hon. Member will take this as notice and ask questions in this regard of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) when she appears before committee to discuss her departmental estimates.

AGRICULTURE—RED BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM. (B) STATUS OF DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to see if I can prod the Government. I know well the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson), whom I respect, and I believe it fair to say that we are quite good friends. However, it is difficult to prod the Government through a Parliamentary Secretary who gets up and reads something which is prepared by the Department. Nevertheless, let me try, Mr. Speaker.

First of all, this side has been asking for a red meat stabilization program for Canadian producers of red meat for a considerable length of time. There is agreement among at least four of the provinces; Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, to have something like this created. There is an agreement in principle that a red meat stabilization program be put into effect. In fact, I have a press release from October 31, 1983, indicating agreement in principle on the red meat stabilization plan. The Government mentioned it in the Throne Speech in December. Both opposition Parties are in favour of this, and we have supported the Government, yet nothing happens. I suggest that if something does not happen very quickly, nothing will be done until we have a new session of Parliament or a new Government is elected.

There are financial problems in the industry, and one of the ways to rectify some of those problems is to have a so-called tri-partite red meat stabilization plan. The three parties involved would be the federal and provincial Government and the producers. The Minister is in favour, four of the provinces who represent a majority of the red meat industry are in favour, yet nothing happens.

The Minister is on record as of October 9, 1982, as saying that he would resign if something were not done concerning the marketing system of beef in this country. That is over a year ago and nothing has happened. He told us about a year and a half ago in committee that he has a plan in his back pocket but nothing has happened.

What I find very discouraging, Mr. Speaker, is that there has been no legislation of any kind in this session concerning this industry. All we have had is the tabling of a Bill to increase cash advances. We on this side would support that, but the Minister does not appear to have enough influence with his House Leader to have the legislation brought forward for debate. In fact, the only initiative taken by this Government in agriculture was about two weeks ago when the Farm Credit Corporation increased interest rates on loans. However, there have been a couple of initiatives from this side.

The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) moved a motion concerning the reduction of tax on farm fuels. That motion was referred to the committee. The Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) moved a motion concerning the agri-bond concept, and that as well went to committee. So we have an opposition which has taken the initiative to try and reduce some of the problems in agriculture in this country, yet the Government has done nothing.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if a Minister is in favour of doing something and the Opposition supports him and he still cannot get it done, one must wonder what kind of support the Minister has in his own caucus for the things he wants to do. I refer to support, but the Government does not appear to make up its mind on what it is prepared to do.

Let me say again that we are prepared to support legislation establishing a red meat stabilization program on the basis of the press release issued by the Government in October, 1983, but we have to see the legislation. We have to get it through second reading, into committee, and then back to the House for third reading. There are only a limited number of days available until the end of June, I think something over 30 days. If we do not have that legislation fairly quickly nothing is going to happen. It is true that there are some concerns about it in the industry, but there has never been a better time to move in so far as prices are concerned. This is the time to do some of these things, not when you get into a crisis situation as we did in 1974 and 1975 with very low prices. This is the time to make some decisions and have the people who are affected come forward with some recommendations on what they want to see in this legislation. We cannot support phantom legislation. We must have legislation introduced as far as the House is concerned.

● (1815)

In closing, I suggest that anything the Government can do to bring forward this legislation to give us a chance to debate it before the end of June will be looked upon very favourably by our side. If we do not see this legislation, we will have to question whether the Government is at all sincere in addressing any of the concerns which Canadian agriculture presently has.

[Translation]

Mr. André Bachand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the question which the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) has raised concerning the establishment of the so-called tripartite red beef stabilization program. For nearly a decade the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and his provincial counterparts have been trying to set up such a program.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, let me advise Hon. Members of the events which have taken place since the federal and provincial ministers of Agriculture met last summer in Prince Edward Island.

In Prince Edward Island, the provinces which are the larger red meat producers, namely, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, had agreed to examine together with the federal government a new program based on certain principles. On this basis, stabilization plans were developed and submitted last October to ministers and officials at a meeting held right here in Ottawa. Then, a series of meetings were organized with associations of producers and provincial governments to try and improve these plans. At a federal-provincial meeting which took place in Ottawa on February 9, further improvements were made. Thanks to these consultations, we now have an interim program which is being supported by the larger red meat producing provinces, by four provincial hog marketing boards, and by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. This program has been discussed by the Minister of Agriculture and his Cabinet colleagues who have approved the main provisions of the bill that they want to introduce in the House to set up a voluntary tripartite red beef stabilization program.

We hope that the bill now being drafted will receive the approval of the House and will be passed before we adjourn for the summer.

The Minister of Agriculture could then reach an agreement with his provincial counterparts when they meet in Winnipeg next July. Thereby, Canadian red meat producers could have a much needed program before the end of the year. This program will not merely be helping individual farmers, but it will also help put an end to the proliferation of stabilization programs which has resulted in a balkanization of the industry.

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, we have gained the approval of Cabinet on the bill now being drafted and we would like these amendments to the Agricultural Stabilization Act to be accepted before Parliament adjourns for the summer so that firm agreements may be signed with the Provinces as early as next July.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—GUYANA—INCREASE IN RACIAL AND POLITICAL VIOLENCE. (B) VISA REQUIREMENT FOR GUYANESE IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, on March 14 I raised the question of Guyana, our sister commonwealth country, and the Guyanese people in Guyana and in Canada. I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) whether Canada will condemn the systematic violence inflicted by the Burnham Government of Guyana on many of its people. I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) whether he will institute a special program for the Guyanese whom he is now shutting out by his visa requirement. Neither of them gave a serious answer. Therefore I now wish to return to the question.

Guyana is experiencing a very serious crisis. This tiny country of 500,000 people, smaller than many Canadian cities, sent over 400 people as immigrants to Canada in 1982 and over 500 in 1983. In 1983 alone 48 people were recognized by Canada as refugees. These were people with a well founded fear of persecution if they returned home to this so-called democratic country.

Guyana has a very serious food crisis. By present laws and police practices a person may be jailed and fined thousands of dollars for the possession of wheat flour. Whereas, of course, the fine for possession of marijuana is only a few hundred dollars. That illustrates the bizarre crisis and the cause of very severe malnutrition in Guyana. However, the attempts of Guyanese people to correct that by producing what they need are seriously hindered by a very violent and repressive government.

● (1820)

The government systematically encourages racial conflict, especially between people of East Indian origin and African origin, and also between people of African and European origin. It seems to rule by the principle of divide and conquer.

The police and the army are often involved in crimes. There is little or no recourse available through the courts, and, in fact, the government appears to be allowing crime to run free since the enforcers of the law are, themselves, taking part in it.

The Guyanese government in this respect is different from some other South American governments that may be repressive, but at least do not condone ordinary crime and violence except when they commit it themselves.

The violence appears to be directed against particular communities in Guyana, including the East Indians, Portuguese, the Chinese and the whites. This is the term used in Guyana that applies mostly to British or Dutch. Of course, there are also many mixtures.

Part of the reason for such attacks may be that some of these smaller groups have the position of merchants. Part of the reason is simply that the government, which is controlled almost entirely by people of African origin, chooses to allow violence to occur against those other groups.

Furthermore, there is violence quite apparently directed against people who are perceived by the government of Guyana to be in opposition to it. The ruling party of Burnham, whose elections have been rigged and completely corrupt in the judgment of British and other international observors, is based on violent intimidation by black people who are primarily of African origin against other black persons, that is people of East Indian origin. In some cases, the support by an East Indian Guyanese of the opposition party, the Peoples' Progressive Party, is apparently enough to have him beaten and robbed of his land.

Another party in opposition, the Workers' Progressive Alliance, has attempted to bring people of different races together and, therefore, it is even more furiously attacked by the government of Burnham. Apparently they consider that racial unity among the people of Guyana would be a threat to their rule.

There is much evidence there of well founded fear of persecution on return, because it is almost impossible for a person who is blacklisted by the government in this small population to find another job. The government has taken over most of the enterprises and controls most of the jobs. Without a membership card in the People's National Congress, it is extremely difficult to find employment, especially for a person of East Indian origin.

Therefore, I am asking, in line with the letter written by the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) to both the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that the government institute a special program, particularly a stay of deportation for up to a year, for Guyanese nationals in Canada who are claiming refugee status and whose cases need further examination because of the conditions in Guyana as yet unrecognized by our Government. I am asking that this Government monitor aid going to Guyana to see that it is going to the people who need it rather than to Government officials. I also ask that the Government publicly demand, within commonwealth channels, or in any other way, that the Government of Mr. Burnham in Guyana restore the practice of the protection of human rights and restore the practice of democratic elections, such as obtained there at the time of independence and for about ten years afterwards until the Burnham government took power about 20 years ago.

I hope the Government will respond to these points and not divert from them to other points.

[Translation]

Mrs. Suzanne Beauchamp-Niquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to answer the question put by the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) about human rights in Guyana and development assistance provided to that country.

Regarding that part of the question which concerns visas and recognition of the Guyanese who are in this country, I will let the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Dubois) provide the answer, since I think it more directly concerns his Department.

Mr. Speaker, I may point out to my hon. friend that a substantial reduction in the development aid being offered to Guyana would penalize the entire population of one of the poorest countries in the region. It would be contrary to our policy, which is to assist poor countries, irrespective of whether we feel they are being properly governed or not. Guyana does not have a good reputation in Canada, Mr. Speaker, especially as a result of allegations of electoral fraud. My hon. friend referred to racial violence, and there is also some talk of harassment of groups or individuals opposed to the regime, restrictions on freedom of the press, police brutality and the rest. However, even if this country's human rights record is not exactly spotless, I still feel the situation is not as serious as it is often described. For instance, there are no political prisoners in Guyana, the rule of habeas corpus is observed, a fair trial is the norm, and unions have the right to organize, to negotiate and to call strikes. Furthermore, withdrawing aid from Guyana would bring about a breakdown of a vital part of our policy towards Caribbean Commonwealth countries, and would have serious consequences for its integrity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.27 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

APRIL UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker the appalling performance of the Liberal Government is not without its root causes. Those Canadians desperately seeking non existent jobs know what to blame. It is the Liberal zero growth policy. It is the Liberal high interest rate policy. It is the Liberal anti-investment policy, and the Liberal lack of concern for economic and job related issues.

Today's Statistics Canada figures speak for themselves. Our unemployment rate remains at 11.4 per cent, in comparison with only 7.8 per cent in the United States. Last month youth unemployment increased from 18.2 per cent to 18.5 per cent. The number of long-term unemployed is now double what it was three years ago.

Canadians have a right to expect a better deal from their Government. They know that neither the Liberals nor the NDP can deliver jobs. Therefore, let us bring on an election and change to a Conservative Government dedicated to high rates of permanent employment right across the nation.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER CAREER ACCESS PROGRAM—CHANGE IN FUNDING

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, last autumn the Government of Canada consolidated its 12 existing job-creation programs into four. This was a welcome move in that it made it much easier to keep track of the programs and to advise constituents. However, one aspect of this consolidation has led to complaints from a number of my constituents at McMaster University. This is in relation to the change in rules between last summer and this summer in what was called the Summer Canada Student Internship Program. The corresponding program this year is called Summer Career Access.

The problem has occurred with those programs which were approved in principle last summer for three years funding with the understanding that the same students would be hired for three consecutive summers, allowing training at a higher level each year. However, with the program change, instead of the Government paying the students' full wage, only 50 per cent of the wages will be paid up to a maximum of $3 per hour for a 40-hour week. In addition, for charitable or non-profit employers, another $80 per week will be allocated per student for additional costs such as OHIP, et cetera.

For projects which were approved in principle for three years, the rules have been changed. This has jeopardized a number of student jobs because the universities were not able to budget for the difference in the wage subsidies. I would therefore recommend that the Government provide a special supplement to these projects which were approved in principle for three years' funding last year so that 100 per cent of the students' wages will be covered until the end of those three-year projects.

HOUSING

DECLINE IN NUMBER OF STARTS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, according to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, housing starts in most Canadian cities posted a significant slow-down during the first third of this year. On a national basis, housing starts fell for the second straight month in April. According to the director of statistics for CMHC, many housing experts have trimmed a few thousands starts from their housing forecasts for 1984.

With the bank rate the highest it has been in two years, and going up, and mortgage rates following, the situation in the housing industry is becoming critical. The proposed increase in the federal sales tax on building materials scheduled for October is only going to exacerbate the problem and cause more lost jobs.

Economists are predicting another recession by the end of this year, or at least by the beginning of 1985. If we go into another recession with 1.5 million people unemployed, it will have a traumatic effect on the average Canadian household. We need to help the people of Canada by keeping mortgage rates at an affordable level. This in turn will help those people in the construction industry because they will have jobs and will be able to go to work every morning.

PENITENTIARIES

ESCAPE OF DANGEROUS INMATES WHILE RELEASED ON DAY PASSES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian public has become the unwilling participant in penal therapy experiments that allow axe murderers and sex killers to roam the streets on so-called day passes. For the second time this week a dangerous inmate has escaped custody. This time Giovanni Fasciano walked away from an unarmed social therapist while strolling down a Montreal street. Fasciano has a history of attempted escapes. In fact three years ago, following his first escape, hospital officials described him as a dangerous schizophrenic.

The questions which must be answered by the House are simple. One, why was the inmate allowed outside the hospital without wearing manacles or other restraining devices? Two, why was his attendant not armed? Three, why bother providing extensive security in a jail or hospital for the criminally insane if prisoners are to be turned loose on the streets?

These two incidents have given all Canadians reason to question the fundamental ability of our prison security system to do its job. It is hard to imagine any justification for allowing day passes to such violent and escape-prone inmates.

It is sheer lunacy to allow such prisoners on the street without security measures that are at least comparable to those of the institutions housing the inmates.

EDUCATION

NATIONAL ACADEMIC COMPETITION WON BY MANITOBA HIGH SCHOOL

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, all too often in recent years Canadians, as a result of increasing urbanization, have come to assume that the good life was to be found only in the larger cities. One of the unfortunate results of this pro big city attitude was the development of a prevailing philosophy that excellence too was synonymous with such large urban centres and, as a result, many young people, often with their parents' encouragement, have migrated from our smaller western communities in order to secure what they believe to be a superior education.

Many of us who were educated primarily in the smaller western communities, many of us who taught in the educational institutions located in such centres, and many of us who, as parents, have encouraged our own children to remain at home for their education, have always denied that bigger necessarily means better. Those of us of that mind are particularly delighted to hear that a national academic competition, the "Reach for the Top" program, has been won by a high school which has an enrolment of only 212 students in its Grade 7 to Grade 12 program, and which is located in a smaller Manitoba community with a population of approximately 1,100 residents.

The students of Deloraine Collegiate have proven without doubt that educational institutions need not be large nor need they be located in large urban centres in order to be of a superior quality.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ARMENIAN MASSACRE—SUGGESTED DECLARATION OF DAY OF REMEMBRANCE

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, it is time that this House reconsider the Armenian question. You will recall that on March 27, 1980, the Legislature of Ontario unanimously adopted a resolution that said in part that, on behalf of the people of Ontario, that Legislature "requests the Government of Canada to officially recognize and condemn the atrocities committed by the Government of Turkey upon the Armenian people who were victims of persecution and genocide during World War I."

The Legislature of Ontario also stated, on behalf of the people of Ontario, that it urged the Government of Canada "to make appropriate representations to the General Assembly of the United Nations to recognize and condemn the Armenian genocide and to express abhorrence of such actions as being in violation of the basic standards of human rights and decency now embodied in the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights."

The Ontario Legislature, on behalf of the people of Ontario, also recommended to the Government of Canada "that it designate April 24 in every year hereafter throughout Canada as a day of remembrance for the Armenian community, as it has been by the Armenian people for many years in memory of fellow Armenians who suffered such crimes."

A similar resolution was passed on April 10 in the National Assembly in Quebec.

We should act.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

IMMIGRATION

GUIDELINES AFFECTING REUNIFICATION OF FAMILIES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Canada's immigration policy is losing some of its humanitarian principles through administrative decisions that erode the intent of our immigration law and regulations.

On June 29, 1983, the former Minister of Employment and Immigration promised to have a review and report by the fall on the concept of the family as used by his Department. It had been found that our rules were often being so interpreted as to exclude people whose close family ties are all here in Canada.

In particular, there are cases of one family member remaining in the old country who wishes to be reunited with the family here. The guidelines were intended to authorize and encourage immigration officers to give favourable treatment to such a last remaining family member who is financially or emotionally dependent on the rest of the family in Canada.

While we wait for the report, which was promised almost a year ago, the immigration officials continue to tighten the restrictions that they apply when interpreting these guidelines. They are causing severe personal hardship in a number of cases that have come to my attention, and they are departing from the humanitarian principles of our immigration legislation and policy.

I understand that officials of the Department have indeed been studying this issue and have in fact prepared a draft for the Minister, with recommendations which would improve the situation for these immigrants. Therefore I call upon the Minister to expedite this report, the report promised nearly a year ago—

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT'S RECORD

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in 1968 the Canadian unemployment total was 351,000, or 4.5 per cent. Now it is 1,399,000, or 11.4 per cent. The unemployment rate for youth was 7.4 per cent and is now 18.2 per cent, up a whopping 10.8 percentage points, Mr. Speaker. In 1968 unemployment insurance costs were $438 million. Now they are $10,169 million, up 2,222 per cent. Since 1968 the purchasing power of the dollar has dropped to 31 cents, a minus 69 per cent. Interest rates have soared, and five-year mortgages have increased from 9.25 per cent to 13.25 per cent, and now will go higher.

In the past 16 years the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Hon. John Turner, the Hon. Don MacDonald, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), have all been Finance Minister, in charge of the economy and the public purse. In that time the Government sector has mushroomed and unemployment has quadrupled. Prices have increased several times. If the Hon. John Turner had so many good ideas, why did he let the Liberals get into such a mess? He was the start of it all.

The Prime Minister also did the Canadian public a great disservice by delaying his departure until such time as an election could not be held before July 1, the Queen's visit and Pope John Paul's visit. With a June election, the economic mess could have at least—

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

REQUEST THAT NEW BUDGET BE INTRODUCED

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. The unemployment figures were released today by Statistics Canada. The news is bad. Interest rates continue to climb, the dollar continues to fall, and unemployment shows no sign of improving. Indeed, the youth unemployment rate is up. In light of these economic indicators, which show virtually no growth in employment over the past quarter, and with interest rates continuing to rise, cutting into consumer demand, we can only anticipate that the situation will get worse.

Does the Minister of State for Finance, on behalf of the Minister of Finance, intend to indicate to the House that it is his intention, since the Budget of the Minister is no longer relevant, to bring in a new economic statement?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment numbers that were released indicate some progress in creating new jobs in Canada. Essentially we have seen the situation continue of the creation of new jobs being matched by additional people coming into the work force. The reported 0.2 per cent increase in jobs was matched by the increase in new entrants to the work force. But the creation of new jobs in Canada is in part, indeed as the Hon. Member suggests, the result of government stimulus, government action, to help create jobs.

The Member will know that we have acted in two broad ways to provide more job opportunities in our economy by direct government spending, through the special recovery and other programs in which there is direct federal funding. On the other hand there is the whole range of programs which the federal Government introduced in the April and February Budgets to stimulate more job creation in the private sector.

We have begun to see some of the benefits of the changes we have made, including those in investment tax credits. We have seen the special share purchase tax credit as an incentive to private investors—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacLaren: —to expand Canadian jobs.

Mr. Mazankowski: Order.

Mr. MacLaren: And we have also, of course, seen other initiatives that we have taken.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is concerned about the length of answers to questions. The Hon. Member for St. John's East.

Oral Questions

EMPLOYMENT

JOB CREATION—COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister would tell the House where he is finding these new jobs. The figures we have indicate to us that there has been zero growth in employment. There has been virtually no change in employment in Canada in the last three months, indeed since last September, unless a thousand new jobs constitute growth in the Minister's estimation. In the U.S. over the same period employment increased by 1.4 per cent, or 1,461,000 new jobs. The fact is that our job rate is now growing. Indeed, in terms of the recession, we continue to fall behind, whereas the position in the United States is a net increase.

• (1120)

Does the Minister still stand behind the ridiculous statement he made in the House yesterday wherein he said that Canada has been creating jobs faster than the United States? The facts do not support that statement.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, on that last point, it depends of course on which period the Hon. Member opposite wants to discuss. I indicated the period I was talking about. He may want to indicate what period he is talking about.

Mr. McGrath: I am talking about the last quarter.

Mr. MacLaren: With regard to job creation in Canada, I am surprised the Hon. Member opposite does not realize that employment grew 0.2 per cent in April. That represents an increase of 25,000 jobs. Is the Hon. Member opposite suggesting that 25,000 jobs are 1,000 jobs? If so, his arithmetic seems a little at variance with the facts. We have created additional jobs in Canada. For example, adult male employment increased .5 per cent, or 27,000 new jobs.

The Hon. Member opposite should get his statistics right before he makes his usual doom and gloom allegations, which seem to be the stock-in-trade of his Party every time it discusses the economy. The fact is that we have created a lot of new jobs in Canada. We have also given the opportunity to new people to join the work force through our training programs, and through direct stimulus in public works projects, in conservation projects, and in a whole range of other directly funded programs. We have also done much to stimulate—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Again the Chair is concerned about the length of answers.

Mr. McGrath: The Minister does not live in the real world because there are still 300,000 jobs less in the country today than when the recession started. That is the fact. They are ahead in the United States.

REQUEST FOR NEW MEASURES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Given the very serious economic indicators, for example escalating interest rates which will have an impact upon consumer demand, and given the unemployment figures today showing virtually no change in the unemployment situation—indeed, in terms of youth unemployment the situation is getting worse—what new steps does the Government intend to take in terms of direct job creation, and in terms of stimulation of the private sector, to offset the disastrous consequences of a Budget which seems to be blind to the facts?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's real world is the world in his mind, which is often not very related to the facts of the situation other than those he has selectively chosen. Just to refer to his previous comments, in fact there has been an increase of 260,000 jobs in Canada over the past year, April to April, and that amounts to an increase in employment of 2.5 per cent. Those are the facts.

The Hon. Member may not have realized that earlier this week we indeed announced another $130 million worth of projects which were forecast by my colleague, the Minister of Finance—

Mr. McGrath: It took you three months to do it.

Mr. Roberts: —in a variety of projects directly related to creating jobs for young people. As he knows, or should know, this is one of the key areas of concern. The Government has been acting in a general way by creating a context which enables the private sector to create economic growth and jobs. As my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance indicated, there are a variety of special programs, such as the Youth Employment Programs and the Special Recovery Capital Projects Programs which are assisting in the creation of jobs over the short term.

NUMBER OF PEOPLE EMPLOYED

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who has turned to statistics. Would he indicate to the House whether it is correct that there are fewer Canadians working today than there were in June, 1981? Level with the House.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will level with the House. I can understand why the hon. gentleman does not want to use statistics. The reason is that the statistics do not bear out the case which he is trying to present falsely. I just gave him the facts. If he had been listening to the previous answer, he would know that there has been an increase in jobs of 260,000 over the past year.

Mr. Stevens: What about June, 1981?

Mr. Roberts: Instead of Hon. Members opposite seeming to show great lamentation, and weeping and crying about the situation, one would have thought that they would be a bit reassured and slightly more cheerful over the fact that there has not been any increase in unemployment over the past month.

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, again I direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who is sometimes referred to as "Doc", one of Iona's dwarfs. Is it not true that if interest rates were not rising in Canada as quickly as they have been rising, his job in lowering the unemployed list in Canada would be much easier?

• (1125)

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the hon. gentleman opposite is of such stature that he should criticize anyone else about being a dwarf.

I have already outlined, as we on this side of the House have done, again and again, the general approach we have been taking to the creation of employment. That general approach is to provide a context of support for private sector activity. That has been happening. Jobs have been created in this economy over the last year. The other approach we are taking is to focus on short-term problems, particularly the creation of youth employment and the support of entry of women into the labour force for the first time. We are doing that in a variety of programs, the most important of which may be that of Career Access, and in terms of short-term stimulation of the economy, construction through the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATES—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. He will know that again this morning the tragic unemployment levels are continuing in this country. At a time of the year when the situation ought to be improving, today's statistics indicate that there is no real improvement occurring in the country when it comes to jobs. Is it not time that the Prime Minister and his Government rethought the high interest rate monetary policy that is presently in place, and brought in an interest rate policy that would result in jobs being created, as opposed to simply creating profits for financial speculators? Is it not time to reserve this interest rate policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member persists in calling it a high interest rate policy. I notice he does not take issue with what I pointed out to him yesterday. He goes on to try to spread the myth that it is a policy that wants high interest rates in Canada. That is not only a myth, it is an outright falsification. Yesterday I challenged the Hon. Member to indicate how the Government, or anybody in a free society, could force lenders of money in Canada—the savers, those in ordinary walks of life who save money—to lend money to other Canadians at a rate lower than the rate they can get by putting their money in the New York market. The Hon. Member has not suggested an answer to that.

He should be saying there is a policy in Canada to permit lenders in Canada to seek the best return they can get for their hard-earned and hard-saved dollars. Maybe that is the policy of his Party. If so, he should say no clearly. Does he suggest that the Canadian Government, under its constitutional right, should force savers in Canada to lend their money at a lower rate than they can get by crossing the border? If he is suggesting that, he is proposing that we impose controls on Canadians which are not compatible with the normal operation of a free society.

REQUEST FOR CAPITAL OUTFLOW TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Government has not been hesitant in the past to impose penalties on people and corporations which pollute our environment. It has not been hesitant to impose penalties on Canadians who drink and drive and endanger the lives of their fellow citizens. Why are the Prime Minister and the Government of Canada hesitant to impose penalties on those people who would move money out of the country to take advantage, on a speculative money market, of an interest rate in the United States? As an historian the Prime Minister will be aware that other countries, on a temporary basis, have imposed a speculators' tax on the outflow of money. Why does Canada not do the same and allow interest rates to come down?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making an extraordinary analogy. He is saying that savers, Canadians who save money, which is not an unvirtuous occupation, should be treated as we would treat people who pollute our environment or who drive when drunk. The Hon. Member shakes his head, but that is exactly what he said. He said that if we control drunken drivers, why should we not control poor Canadian savers—

• (1130)

Mr. Riis: Speculators.

Mr. Trudeau: Speculators? It is not only speculators who move their money across the border, Mr. Speaker; it is every Canadian who is looking for the best return on his buck. How would the Hon. Member propose to control those Canadians and not the drunken drivers?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how to respond to that.

Oral Questions

CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I will try to ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister and have him explain something to me. Because of the banking system in Canada, there is very little competition. Can the Prime Minister explain why one can obtain a long-term mortgage at an interest rate of 7 per cent or 8 per cent in the United States today? How is it that the Americans, with the competition that exists in the United States, can obtain those kinds of mortgages for their mortgage holders but, because of our restrictive banking system in Canada, with its minimum of competition, we must pay twice that amount? Can he explain why mortgage holders in the United States can obtain mortgages with interest rates of 7 per cent or 8 per cent in a number of States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are two answers to that question. Yes, I can explain it. The one reason is that interest rates are deductible for income tax purposes in the United States. Mortgage rates are deductible in the United States but they are not in Canada. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that—

Mr. Riis: The banks.

Mr. Trudeau: I am talking about the mortgage holder, Mr. Speaker. That is the question the Hon. Member asked. In so far as making the banking system more competitive, there is a Bill before the House that is intended to do that.

Mr. Riis: The foreign banks?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, foreign banks which would compete with Canadian banks and therefore force Canadian banks to be more competitive.

REQUEST FOR NEW BUDGET

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister who, in his heart of hearts, I am sure, will understand that the employment policies of his Government have been an abysmal failure as shown by today's statement of the unemployment level. We are now faced with the prospect of school graduates entering the work force and the prospect of an increasing unemployment rate during the course of this summer. We are faced with escalating interest rates. We are faced with the dollar being at its lowest level in years.

Does the Prime Minister not think that one of his last gestures as the leader of the country should be to arrange with the Minister of Finance to bring forward a new economic or budgetary statement before the end of June, so that we may adjust in terms of legislation and initiatives to these appalling economic prospects?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition is preventing the Government from moving forward by agreement on the Budget Bills of last year. I am not referring to this year's Budget but to last year's Budget. Now opposition Members are suggesting yet another Budget for which they would obviously refuse to move the Budget Bills forward. What does the Hon. Member want? He wants a new Budget, but he has not even begun to deal with the last one or the one before that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister and his band of colleagues would bring these measures before the House, he would be sure that they would receive reasonable and appropriate attention.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF FINANCE TAKE ACTION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. The majority of economic forecasts and indicators now indicate that there are storm clouds on the horizon and we face the real prospect of serious financial collapse in our country. The Prime Minister can talk about the legislation that is before the House, but he knows that the Government is simply spinning its wheels and is preoccupied with the Liberal leadership convention. It cares not one whit for the people of Canada and the problems they are facing. Will the Prime Minister not tell the Minister of Finance to come forward and deal with the changing economic circumstances so that the people of Canada may be served, rather than the Liberal Party?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member began his question by saying "if the Government would bring the Bills forward". We brought the Bills forward last Wednesday, I believe, and the Opposition filibustered the Bills. We brought the Crown's—

Mr. Dick: Bills? How many Bills?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McKenzie: Your legislation is no good.

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, yes, Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members would like to say that it is no good. Will the Hon. Member do me the courtesy of hearing my answer? I will then hear any supplementary question he wants to ask.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: They are not interested in having any questions answered, Mr. Speaker. The loud-mouths over there just want to shout about the leadership contest, and they are shouting about the leadership contest because they are beginning to be shaky in their boots.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I would like to compare some statistics with him. If the Government has created almost 400,000 jobs every year for the last two or three years, how can the Minister reconcile that with the fact that, while the labour force has increased by 449,000 in the period from June, 1981, to April, 1984, actual jobs have decreased by 145,000? How does he reconcile that fact with the statistics that he is quoting? In fact the number of full-time jobs has decreased by 338,000 in the period of time to which I have referred. Incredibly, there are 348,000 fewer jobs for young people today than there were in June, 1971. How does the Minister reconcile his statistics with the actual facts?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no one denies that the country has gone through a recession, and no one denies that we would still like to make further progress in coming out of it. The figures which I cited to the Hon. Member are accurate. Over the past year the level of job creation has been at 2.5 per cent. There have been 260,000 new jobs created. Over the past year, April to April, the actual unemployment rate in Canada has declined from 13.2 per cent to 12.1 per cent.

I am not suggesting that we should be smug, or that we should step back our efforts to do better. The fact is that the figures show very clearly that, over the past year, we have been making progress, and making successful progress. It seems to me that that should be welcomed and applauded rather than attacked by using another statistical base, which is what the Hon. Member seems to want to do.

DURATION OF JOBS CREATED

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the Minister can use whatever statistical base he wants. I have asked him to relate what he is saying, and what he has been saying for the last three years, with the facts. He has claimed that the Government is creating 400,000 jobs each year, and I have asked him to reconcile his statistics with the actual facts of the past three years.

Would the Minister not agree that the jobs that have been created are of a temporary nature, that they are being recycled every year, and that some jobs are being recycled twice a year? In other words, would he not agree that the jobs that are being created are of a three-month duration, and that every time someone takes a three-month job it is reflected by the statistics? Those jobs are being recycled and cranked through the statistics. Is that not what the Minister is saying? Is he not saying that there has been no creation of full-time employment? In fact, as I have said, will he not agree that there has been a net loss of 145,000 jobs in that three-year period even though the work force has increased by 449,000? That is the truth of the unemployment statistics. How can the Minister stand in the House and play with figures?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it is the hon. gentleman who is playing with the figures. The answer to the specific question contained within the rhetoric of his larger question is no, those 260,000 increased jobs to which I have referred are not short-term or temporary jobs. Those jobs increase the permanent employment rate in the country.

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

WEST COAST BOUNDARY LINE—UNITED STATES' OFFER TO OIL AND GAS COMPANIES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who will know that in 1903 the International Boundary Tribunal unanimously agreed that Canada's international boundary on the West Coast would be the 54-40 line or, as it is known on the West Coast, the A-B line. As well, he is probably now aware that the U.S. Department of the Interior has offered for sale to American oil and gas companies titles to land south of the A-B line, territory that is in fact sovereign Canadian territory.

I understand that earlier this week the Minister sent a diplomatic note to his colleague in the United States, Mr. Shultz. However, many Canadians consider this to be an act of extreme hostility. I wonder whether or not the Minister might consider it more appropriate to take this matter to the World Court in The Hague immediately?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that that would be a wise decision in present circumstances. There is a major case before the international court affecting the boundary of the coast of Nova Scotia. In that case we exhausted all the possible bilateral diplomatic avenues before we went to the World Court, and I think it would be unwise to alter that particular practice in this case.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONTACT UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. The matter to which I referred would be very similar to the Canadian Government offering a chunk of California for sale to various Canadian oil and gas companies. The Prime Minister is a bit of a geography buff, so I direct my supplementary question to him.

The World Court in The Hague has just ruled that what the United States did when it mined the ports in Nicaragua was an illegal act. Would the Prime Minister confirm that every international marine chart, and every single map that has been produced in the world since 1903, shows that 54-40 is Canada's international boundary? The United States Government is now offering to sell Canadian territory which is south of the 54-40 line. Will the Prime Minister call the President of the United States and, at the very least, give him a geography lesson?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that I am not in a position to confirm the facts referred to by the Hon. Member. I missed the previous exchange, but I will take his question as notice.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL TASK FORCE REPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion. The petrochemical task force report was presented in the latter part of February. Since that time I know that officials and Ministers have been working on its content. I wonder if the Minister is in a position to indicate when he anticipates a public response to the recommendations made in that particular report?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows, because he has made substantial representations prior to the task force report and subsequently, that there is a group of officials from various Departments working on recommendations to my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources, and myself, with respect to the proposed response of the federal Government.

Second, as I responded the other day to the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has had discussions with his counterparts in the producing provinces with respect to the major recommendation in that task force report, the reduction of the natural gas price. If I am not mistaken, I believe that about two weeks ago the producing provinces and the Minister made an announcement in that regard.

Third, I have also had discussions with my counterparts in two of the other producing provinces on the industrial side, to see if we could accelerate a response from the provinces and ourselves with respect to the report.

SARNIA INDUSTRY

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister has taken a year to look at the auto task force report. He has taken three months to look at the petrochemical report. There are 200,000 jobs on the line, direct and indirect. When is the Minister going to come up with an answer for the petrochemical industry in the city of Sarnia with respect to allowing the 15 per cent discount, or, preferably, the Gulf gate price?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I said in response to a question put by the Hon. Member yesterday—I realize he works very hard and he has not had a chance to read everything we have put out—we have already responded twice to the auto task force report. Perhaps, more important than responding to the report, Mr. Speaker, we have taken action, and that is one of the reasons why I believe the federal Government has played a very prominent role in the substantial increase in employment in the auto industry during the past year.

With respect to the petrochemical task force report, the Hon. Member should know that pricing is the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the producing provinces. I am sure I do not have to remind Hon. Members opposite about the discussions which took place with respect to pricing policy in the last couple of years.

FEEDSTOCK PRICE OF NATURAL GAS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the Minister passes the buck again. It is his responsibility to create jobs in industry. If the feedstock price of natural gas is brought down, it will create more jobs and more export of finished products. Will the Minister give us his commitment that within one month he will have an answer that the Government is either going to implement this report or it is going to do what it did with the auto task force report?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, if we are as successful with the implementation of the petrochemical task force report as we were with the auto task force report, we are going to have another additional increase of jobs across the country. I wish I had the power to decide pricing across the country, and I am surprised at the Conservative Party. I look back on the negotiations which the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources held with producing provinces and I know the position the Conservative Party took with respect to pricing. I am not aware that we have that power, but we would very much like to have that power.

Second, does the Hon. Member realize that the financial assistance given, for example, to Petromont, and the opportunity for Petrosar—

Mr. Fennell: That is a band-aid.

Mr. Lumley: That is $100 million. That is a band-aid? I am surprised that the Conservative Party is now calling $100 million a band-aid, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE—CONSTRUCTION OF ANIMAL INSPECTION STATION

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It relates to a situation at Niagara-on-the-Lake where the Department which he heads is presently building an animal inspection station. I am sure he is well aware of it. It is my understanding that the Minister had a visit from local officials in his Windsor office on April 23, and that he personally ordered a halt to the construction on May 1. Yet on checking with the mayor of Niagara-on-the-Lake this morning at approximately eleven o'clock, I was told that construction is still going on. I wonder if the Minister could tell us why construction is still going on this morning in light of the fact that he personally ordered a halt to that construction?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is partly right on some of the things he has stated about this facility. It is an animal inspection station which is being built near the Queenston Bridge, in that area. I am not at all satisfied with the procedure which was followed. I issued an order to stop construction, and I meant it. I told them this morning that I would personally go down there and bulldoze it down if they did not stop.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I will not comment on the "bull". I would just hope that the Minister means what he says, because it is my understanding there are a lot of people upset that, despite the Minister's personal request that construction stop, it is still continuing.

MUNICIPAL REGULATIONS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a more comprehensive question. It is my understanding that the Government spent too much money to buy the land; it is in contravention of municipal and some of the provincial regulations; it has ignored the wishes of the local people, and even today it is ignoring personal requests of the Department. I wonder if the Minister would review the procedures within the Department which locates these kinds of premises or facilities for his Department to see that this kind of thing does not happen again? Surely the Minister can run his Department in such a way that he does not have to go and bulldoze facilities down and therefore waste money which has been spent by the Department?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, to make it clear, the Hon. Member knows that part of the footings, I believe, are established, and some fresh stone and gravel have been hauled on to the site. That is as far as the construction has gone. We held it up for eight days. Then I understand there was some misunderstanding and they started hauling gravel on to the site again. I talked to my officials this morning and told them that we want this construction stopped until we have all the facts on the table about what took place, who did what, and why.

It is not my Department which purchases sites. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of that. It is the Department of Public Works which purchases sites and looks after building the facilities for us. There has been a need for a long time to have an efficient type of facility because of the horse racing industry and our inspection system. So they decided to go ahead with this facility in that area. As I said, I am not at all satisfied with it. I have a person on the job site at the present time to make sure that no further construction takes place at this time.

It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that this site, from the evidence I have now, will be moved, either to the Queenston Bridge authority or to the industrial site, where it should have been in the first place. It will be either one or the other.

BANK ACT

ROYAL BANK'S AUTOMOBILE FINANCING PLAN

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I would like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Finance. When the Bank Act was last amended, after a great deal of debate, there was a Section which we thought seemed to prohibit banks from getting into the business of leasing cars and small trucks. Now, apparently, the Royal Bank has implemented a plan under which customers can purchase a car or truck, borrow the money from the Royal Bank, and after three years they have the option of paying the rest of the loan and taking possession of the car, or they can just return the car and let the bank take it over.

This is obviously a way of avoiding that provision in the Bank Act, allowing the bank to get into the leasing business through the back door. Is the Minister aware of what is going on? If so, what steps is he taking to stop the banks from doing what they are not permitted to do under the Bank Act?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have the proposal of the Royal Bank under review at the moment. The first legal opinion we have received is that the financing of the vehicle is a loan and not a lease. It seems, therefore, that there is no question but that what the bank is proceeding to do is legal. However, I would say to the Hon. Member opposite that our study is not yet completed and I would be glad to return to him on this subject at a later date.

REQUEST FOR AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I discussed this matter with the Inspector General yesterday. He told me he had representations from the Canadian auto dealers and the Canadian auto leasers. The preliminary advice he got from the Department of Justice was that this was in fact not a leasing arrangement. It was a loan with a balloon payment. Obviously the bank is trying, and succeeding, to do through the back door what the Bank Act would not permit it to do through the front door. If the legal opinion is that what the Royal Bank is doing is legal, will the Government bring in legislation to plug what is obviously a hole in the provisions of the Bank Act?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): As I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, when we have completed our review of the practice of the bank I shall be able to answer the Member's question.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIRPORT USER CHARGES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Airport user charges, air passenger ticket taxes, and fuel taxes account for a major portion of the price of an air ticket. I believe the Minister acknowledged that these charges may be out of line inasmuch as he has established a review procedure to look into this. Could the Minister inform the House what form this review will take and when it will take place?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the comments the Hon. Member made to the media on the air policy. He said that while he had some dispute with parts of it, he thought it was going in the right general direction. I appreciate the Member, who is learned in these matters, providing that qualified, but nonetheless important, endorsement of the policy.

With regard to the air review, I agree that it is a matter which should be looked at for the purpose of getting costs down. It is a departmental review as opposed to an outside review. I have asked the air administrator to undertake that examination. In the meantime, I have instituted a holding of any increase of airport parking fees for the forthcoming year.

At this point in time we will be examining not only the question of the cost involved but also whether there should be some incentive pricing system in order to provide an opportunity to use, more effectively than we do now, airports which are under utilized.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF LOCAL AIRPORT AUTHORITIES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister assure the House that there will be adequate opportunity for industry and other input in the review process? Second, is the Minister giving any consideration to incorporating any form of deregulation within the airport system itself? I believe he has recognized that there is extravagance in the system. For example, is he considering the establishment of local airport authorities? That was recommended by the Hagglund report, which I am sure he will find on the shelves of his Department. If he is not looking into that, will he undertake to do so?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the study and have looked at it. There has been some discussion over the past couple of years on moving toward a comparable local ports corporation type legislation. At this point in time I feel it could be one of the examinations we would include as part of that review. I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that when I next appear at the Standing Committee on Transport, which I think is scheduled for two weeks from now, we might be able to get into this kind of discussion more extensively. I look forward to the Hon. Member's further representation. Any review which we make will certainly take into account the views of the industry and of the various associations involved.

USE OF FOREIGN HARVEST LABOURERS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. With regard to offshore labour, processors and producers in my constituency have recently been told that they must adhere exactly to last year's level of offshore employment. Last year they voluntarily attempted to cut back. Also, last year was a horrendous crop year and they obviously had to utilize less labour.

Would the Minister agree that common sense could be applied to the amount of offshore labour required for this year, even though it may result in a half a dozen or a dozen more bodies than last year being utilized? This would still be 50 per cent below five years ago.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I agree that I want to approach this matter in a common sense way. Our objective, of course, is to ensure that there are employment opportunities for Canadians. I realize that sometimes these jobs are not one for which there is an adequate supply of Canadians willing to do the work concerned. The best answer I can give to the hon. gentleman is that I will take his question as a representation, reflect upon it, and see if there is some way in which I can make my common sense agree with his common sense.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION—REQUEST FOR SPRING PAY-OUT

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture who states he has a great deal of sympathy for the western farmer. In the February Budget there were indications that amendments would be made to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. In a press conference last April 25 the Minister, and his cohort from the other place, indicated amendments in order to trigger a payment. Can the Minister tell us when we can expect the tabling in the House of a Bill to amend the Act? Will that Bill contain amendments that will trigger a payment to farmers this spring?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Bill will be tabled soon. The Member will have to wait to see what the Bill says.

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the Minister and Members on the Liberal side have been saying "soon" for months. What is "soon"?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Very soon.

THE PRIME MINISTER

REQUEST THAT VISIT TO BRITISH COLUMBIA BE SCHEDULED

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I want the Prime Minister to know that the people of British Columbia are simply pining away as he fades into the sunset slowly. I speak on behalf of British Columbia and ask the Prime Minister to please make at least one more visitation to the Province of British Columbia. We would appreciate another philosophical speech about those who live—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I question whether this is appropriate for Question Period. Order.

Mr. Cook: Will the Prime Minister come back once to British Columbia before he finally goes?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta.

EMPLOYMENT

BRITISH COLUMBIA STATISTICS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Since he prefers to compare statistics from one year to the next rather than over a three-year span, I would like to point out to him that a year ago in British Columbia there were 1,196,000 people employed, and today there are 1,174,000 people employed. That is a drop of 22,000 in the workforce. How does the Minister explain that? What does he plan to do to increase employment in British Columbia, which is the hardest hit area as a result of the recession?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I accept on faith the Hon. Member's figures. He should be a tinge optimistic because there has been an increase in employment of 5,000 in the latest monthly figures. For a more accurate response to his question about the difficulties of employment in which British Columbia finds itself, he should refer to the policies of the provincial Government which are so close to the kind of policies which would be introduced by his Party if the Canadian people were ever unfortunate enough to have it as the governing Party.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is why you only have one delegate in B.C., John.

RAILWAY UPGRADING—BENEFITS FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Transport. The Government promised that as a result of the Crow legislation there would be thousands of jobs created across Canada and literally millions, if not billions, of dollars invested. Presumably those jobs would accrue to the areas which would be affected by the Crow legislation.

What has the Minister of Transport done to ensure that the industrial benefits which are supposed to affect British Columbia as a result of the Crow legislation will come to British Columbia for example, the construction of cement railway ties and all of the other components of the railway expansion which were supposed to result from the Crow legislation?

• (1200)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, to begin, I think the Hon. Member should be aware that just this week the Canadian Pacific Railway announced a letting of a contract for what would be the largest single construction project in North America, beginning in British Columbia this spring, in regard to the cutting of a new tunnel through the Rogers Pass. That will provide a large number of jobs and a very major investment for a number of contracting firms in British Columbia itself. That is only one example of a wide number of contracts. I take into account the contract recently let by the CNR for new steel rails to Sysco in Sydney.

There is an entire series of industrial benefits flowing across the country at the present time. I believe that the estimate for purchases this year will be in the neighbourhood of $1.1 billion.

In terms of ensuring that those contracts are given preference in the local areas where the work is being done, my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, and I have worked with the railways to establish a number of seminars across the country between the railways and the local suppliers. Of course he also knows that the western industrial benefits package is now available and presently being used to help enable western suppliers and manufacturers to bid on those contracts.

Petitions

FISHERIES

EXCLUSION OF FISHERMEN FROM VANCOUVER DOCK

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He is aware that some 60 fishermen have been excluded from a traditional fish dock in False Creek in Vancouver, because the Minister's Department has signed a private contract for a wharf for fishermen who have wharf-side sales. Would the Minister inform the House at what stage are negotiations for making other space available for those displaced fishermen who have very little opportunity in the Vancouver area of finding additional space for their vessels?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I approved that initiative in view of the support that it has received in the last few months not only from the municipal authorities but also from several members of the Minister's advisory council. That initiative would help the commercial fishermen sell their catch to the general public.

I hope that this initiative will be well received by the public and provide an excellent opportunity for fishermen to engage in direct sales and thus enjoy a higher profit while selling ocean fresh fish products at attractive prices.

Depending on the success of this initiative, we might study other similar ventures that could be authorized in the future.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR DISPLACED FISHERMEN

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, quite simply I wish to ask the Minister what arrangements he has made for additional moorage for those 60 displaced fishermen who normally dock their boats at that moorage and who are not selling over the side at the dock?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I will answer the Hon. Member's question within a day or two.

INCOME TAX ACT

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF DRAFT AMENDMENTS

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I move that the document entitled "Draft Amendments to the Income Tax Act", tabled yesterday, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Following consultation with spokesmen for the other two Parties, I ask leave to move that the Committee make its final report thereon no later than May 31. I propose that this be made a House order.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to reflect on this question and have consulted with the Government House Leader. Accordingly, we are prepared to allow this motion to come forth and be passed as an order of the House.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, considering the complexity of the tax Bill that we will be examining before the end of June, we have agreed to accept this particular measure today and look forward to discussing this in detail in the Finance Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce his motion, in the terms of the motion as indicated, with regard to the report?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the great honour to present on behalf of the residents and friends of the City of Sarnia a petition signed by in excess of 1,000 people concerning the Petrochemical Industry Task Force report and the early passing and approval of that report so that it will protect the petrochemical industry in Sarnia in a positive way.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it would seem that a tripartisan group has really been on the ball because my petition is basically the same. It contains 8,800 names which would indicate the importance of this question.

The purpose of the petition is to urge the Government of Canada and the provincial government to implement immediately the Canadian Petrochemical Industry Task Force recommendations and to call upon all Members of Parliament to support a speedy and positive response to this task force report. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

AIRLINE PASSES

Question No. 267—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Does Air Canada or any other Canadian commercial airline offer free space on regularly scheduled flights to Cabinet Ministers or to other Members of Parliament and, if so, under what conditions?

2. In (a) 1980 (b) 1981, how many times were these offers accepted by Cabinet Ministers or by other Members of Parliament?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows:

1. Yes, pursuant to Section 15 of the Aeronautics Act, Air Canada and other Canadian commercial airlines have been authorized to offer passes on a reserved space basis to the Prime Minister, Cabinet Ministers, Leader of the Official Opposition Party, Leader of the New Democratic Party, Speakers of the House of Commons and the Senate, Leader of the Opposition Party in the Senate and former Prime Ministers of Canada.

The same carriers also have an approved quota of passes for publicity, promotion and public relations purposes, and may offer such passes for free transportation to other Members of Parliament and Senators.

2. The Commission does not maintain comprehensive records of free transportation provided by air carriers.

INTERFERON

Question No. 462—Mr. Howie:

In the period January 1, 1983 to date did the Government give financial support to the research or development of the new cancer-combatting drug interferon and, if so, in what amount?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: No.

In so far as the Medical Research Council is concerned: Yes, the Medical Research Council did provide financial support to research or development projects concerning the drug interferon. Financial support given by the Medical Research Council for the calendar year 1983 was $613,095 (this figure includes salary support).

EM&R—GEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF NORTH CENTRAL ONTARIO

Question No. 489—Mr. Howie:

Did the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources authorize geological surveys in the Sudbury, Timmins, Algoma areas and, if so, what (a) was the purpose of the surveys (b) was the estimated cost of them?

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, EM&R in conjunction with Employment and Immigration Canada (IEC) and Laurentian University undertook a program, consisting of five projects, in the Sudbury, Timmins and Algoma regions of northern Ontario.

Project	(a) Purpose	(b) Costs EM&R	EIC	Total
Mineral Data Base	To make possible the production of mineral distribution maps and listings of mineral occurrences in north central Ontario (general Timmins, Sudbury and Algoma regions) by collecting, coding and	$104,786	$281,317	$386,103 entering basic information on these occurrences into the Geological Survey of Canada data bank. In conjunction, to provide information to the Ontario Geological Survey in their file format and update information for the EM&R National Mineral Inventory System.

Overburden Geochemistry	To aid and stimulate mineral exploration by detecting anomalous metal concentrations in overburden samples from greenstone terrains in the Swayze (Chapleau-Foleyet-Gogoma), Wawa and Gamitagama belts.	155,744	93,634	249,378
Huronian Supergroup Lithogeochemistry	To aid and stimulate mineral exploration by defining target areas with anomalous metal concentrations in Huronian sedimentary rocks in the Algoma-Sudbury region.	222,691	160,246	382,937
Rock Chemical Exploration Criteria	To identify target exploration horizons within the Onaping Formation, Sudbury Basin, and lithogeochemical criteria useful for exploration for massive base-metal sulphide deposits here and for gold deposits in greenstone belt terrains elsewhere in the region.	194,179	137,139	331,318
Project Administration	To provide over-all co-ordination, administrative and clerical support to the four operational projects listed above.	22,600	64,492	87,092

STUDIES INTO ILLEGAL USE OF DRUGS

Question No. 499—Mr. Howie:

Did the Ministry of the Solicitor General conduct any studies relating to the illegal use of drugs and, if so (a) were any of them conducted by a person or persons outside the Department and, if so, what is a list of the name or names of all such persons (b) on what date will the studies be completed (c) at what cost?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): From April 1, 1980 to date: No. (a) to (c) Not applicable.

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL EXPENDITURES

Question No. 578—Mr. Howie:

1. In (a) the current fiscal year (b) each of the two preceding fiscal years, with respect to the Medical Research Council (i) what total amount was expended by the Council (ii) how many persons were employed by the Council (iii) what amount was expended for staff remuneration?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) Current fiscal year 1983-84

(i) Total forecast MRC expenditures including salaries and contribution to employee benefit plans:	$140,572,000
(ii) Forecast person-years utilization:	50
(iii) Forecast salary expenditures:	$ 1,750,000

(b) 1982-83

(i) Total MRC expenditures including salaries and contributions to employee benefit plans:	$113,305,327
(ii) Person-years utilization:	42
(iii) Salary expenditures:	$ 1,256,714

1981-82

(i) Total MRC expenditures including salaries and contributions to employee benefit plans:	$100,238,993
(ii) Person-years utilization:	39
(iii) Salary expenditures:	$ 1,010,000

CNR PENSION BENEFITS

Question No. 667—Mr. Knowles:

1. On February 14, 1984 how many retired employees of the Canadian National Railways were in receipt of monthly pension benefits of (a) less than $25.00 (b) $25.00 (c) $25.01 to $29.99 (d) $30.00 to $39.99 (e) $40.00 to $49.99 (f) $50.00 to $59.99 (g) $60.00 to $69.99 (h) $70.00 to $79.99 (i) $80.00 to $89.99 (j) $90.00 to $99.99 (k) $100.00 to $124.99 (l) $125.00 to $149.99 (m) $150.00 to $199.99 (n) $200.00 to $299.99 (o) $300.00 to $399.99 (p) $400.00 to $499.99 (q) $500.00 to $599.99 (r) $600.00 to $699.99 (s) $700.00 to $799.99 (t) $800.00 to $899.99 (u) $900.00 to $999.99 (v) $1,000.00 to $1,499.99 (w) $1,500.00 or more?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

Recently there has been no demand for a breakdown of the ranges of pension benefits under $100 a month. Consequently, CN computers no longer produce such information. If required, the data could be produced but it would involve an inordinate amount of time and expense. The following information concerning the number of pensioners and the monthly amount of pensions in force at December 31, 1983 was extracted from CN's present computer pension data base.

1. Number of pensioners receiving

(a)	under $100.00 a month	2,316
(b)	$100 to $199.99 a month	2,652
(c)	$200 to $299.99 a month	3,841
(d)	$300 to $399.99 a month	4,122
(e)	$400 to $499.99 a month	3,398
(f)	$500 to $599.99 a month	2,679
(g)	$600 to $699.99 a month	2,194
(h)	$700 to $799.99 a month	1,815
(i)	$800 to $899.99 a month	1,670
(j)	$900 to $999.99 a month	1,310
(k)	$1,000 to $1,499.99 a month	3,568
(l)	$1,500 to $1,999.99 a month	993
(m)	$2,000 to $2,499.99 a month	188
(n)	$2,500 a month and over	57

In the group receiving pensions under $100 a month, there are a number of cases where the amount of pensions paid by Canadian National Railways do not represent the total pensions payable for railway service. For example, pensions payable by CN to international employees (service in both Canada and the United States) relate to their service in Canada only. Such employees also receive annuities payable under the U.S. Railroad Retirement Act or the Social Security Act for services performed in the United States.

In addition, there are various pension agreements between CN and other companies, such as Canadian Pacific Limited and the Ontario Northland Railway, where each company issues separate cheques for its portion of the total pension. Only the pension payable by CN is included in this statement.

Also, since the passing of the Pension Benefits Standards Act by the federal Government on October 1, 1967, there are some employees who have terminated service with CN and are receiving rather small compulsory deferred pensions based on service performed only since October 1, 1967.

The balance of those receiving small pensions are employees who elected early retirement (before age 65) with reduced basic pensions ($25) and employees who had very short service and very small contributions.

Among those receiving a pension under $100 a month are those non-contributing members of CN's 1935 Pension Plan who receive a basic pension of $25 a month.

Since 1971 CN has made ad hoc adjustments to pensions paid to those who retired before 1975. Since January 1, 1984, CN has been providing higher monthly payments at a cost of $6.8 million in 1984 and an estimated total cost of $47 million. Surviving spouses receive 75 per cent of the pensioners' additional 1984 allowance.

Listed hereunder are the monthly increases by year of retirement:

Year of Retirement or Death in Service	Monthly Increase Payable to Pensioner/Surviving Spouse
1967 or prior	$31.50	$23.62
1968	29.00	21.76
1969	26.50	19.88
1970	24.00	18.00
1971	21.50	16.12
1972	19.00	14.26
1973	16.50	12.38
1974	14.00	10.50

In May 1984, CN will have updated pension data that will include the 1984 ad hoc adjustments. This information will be provided, on request, when available.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN INSTITUTE FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND SECURITY

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 18, 1984, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, on April 18 when debate was interrupted on this Bill to establish our International Peace Institute, I was saying that on the basis of past government practice, the way the legislation was drafted and because of mistakes like the appointment to the various institutions, such as the Science Council and the Canadian Transport Commission, regrettably our new peace institute would, in all likelihood, start life as a partisan, politicized and therefore flawed institution.

The recent zeal to push the Bill through the House, with third reading by the end of June, has also suggested that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wishes to use it, at least in part, as a job-creation project for a number of people in his office who will presumably soon be out of work.

Happily, discussions have taken place since April 18. The Government has indicated a genuine willingness to amend the Bill in a way that my Leader and our Party believe would guarantee that the institute is truly non-partisan and independent from the beginning. Some of these include, first, that Section 5(g) be deleted so as to remove the false impression that the institute would seek non-government funding, thereby perhaps undermining several voluntary organizations in the same field. Second, that Sections 25, 26 and 27 be deleted, as my Party has asked, so as to avoid the perception that the government of the day would use this authority over by-laws to control the institute. Third, that Section 28 be amended in committee to remove the word "shall" and replace it with the word "may". Fourth, that Section 29 be amended to include, in effect, a statutory appropriation with a longer commitment than one year.

Perhaps even more important, Mr. Speaker, my Party and Leader believe that democracy in the 1980s means more than just casting a vote every four to five years for the candidate of one's choice. Participatory democracy to us means that we must also listen to Canadians and must give them meaningful input on matters such as the appointment of people to this institute: in a word, an openness to new ways, new processes and new ways of doing things.

In essence, that is why so many of us on this side of the House are very enthusiastic about our Leader's proposed amendment that all the directors of the institute, other than the chairman and the executive directors, be appointed by the Government from a pool of names provided by a number of representative Canadian institutions, including:

—the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Federation of Students, the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, the Canadian Teachers' Federation, the National Coalition of Voluntary Associations, the Canadian National Council of Ethno-Cultural Organizations, the Central Mennonite Committee and the National Council for International Co-operation—

[English]

—the Canadian Association of University Teachers; the Canadian Council of Churches; the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament; the Canadian Federation of Independent Business; the Canadian Jewish Congress; the Canadian Labour Congress; the Confederation of National Trade Unions; the Quebec Federation of Labour; the National Action Committee on the Status of Women; and the National Council of Women.

I fully appreciate that many people would say it would be even better if any responsible group or individual could suggest names for the pool of names. There are now, as you know, Mr. Speaker, literally hundreds of such groups concerned about peace and international security across Canada.

Our proposed list is as representative of Canadians as we could make it on fairly short notice. A great many Canadians concerned about peace and security do find themselves, I believe, belonging to one or more of these bodies I have named. People who are not included and wish to be I hope will come forward to the committee and give their views as to what other groups should be added. Other groups should be added to the list as the Bill proceeds through committee.

I gather as of a few moments ago that the Government has not yet fully accepted our amendments on the appointment process. As amendments can only be made to a Bill by unanimous consent in the House at second reading, no group is yet on any list. There is neither list nor acceptance by the Government of our concept.

I understand that the Liberals may still insist that they should, in effect, make the appointments to the institute's first board after "consultation" by the Minister concerned with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) and the Leader of every recognized Party. The flaw with that is that consultation can mean whatever the consultant wishes it to mean. It can mean nothing more than just listening and then going ahead and appointing those who, in the exclusive opinion of the Prime Minister, are meritorious. In my judgment, Mr. Speaker, it is simply elitist to suggest that appointments can be negotiated out by the various Party Leaders while the standing committee studies the Bill in detail.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair has been listening carefully since the beginning of the speech of the Hon. Member. I wish to remind all Hon. Members that discussing particular clauses of a Bill during second reading is not appropriate. The principle of the Bill is to be discussed. Let me read Citation 381 from Beauchesne's Fourth Edition:

> The second reading of a Bill is that stage when it is proper to enter into a discussion and propose a motion relative to the principle of the measure. On the motion for the second reading, it is out of order to discuss the clauses of the Bill.

I could carry on but Members usually recognize that the discussion of specific clauses is something to be done when the Bill reaches committee stage.

Mr. Kilgour: I have not in the last three minutes been referring to any section, Sir. I think I am speaking to the heart, the principle of the Bill, not to a particular section. I respect what you have just said, of course, Mr. Speaker.

The reason we want the various organizations which I have named to propose people is that we think it is a more democratic, thoroughly non-partisan process which will also produce the best directors. We believe the people chosen from that pool of names by our process will command the respect of Canadians, thus getting the institute off to a flying start from day one.

There is already a fairly close precedent for what I am talking about in the legislation establishing the Economic Council of Canada. Section 4(2) reads in part:

> Each of the other members of the Council shall be appointed after consultation with appropriate representative organizations to hold office for a term of three years—

We have here a chance to build on this precedent by going a little further, as in the amendment we will be proposing, by explicitly naming concerned organizations and requiring appointments to be made by the Governor in Council from among the names they submit. If this model works for our institute, Mr. Speaker, as I very much hope and believe it will, by all means let us use it again in other areas. We could have, for example, representative groups of lawyers and citizens decide who should be eligible for appointment to the bench in various provinces, as two provinces already have. We could have a peer group of architects decide which architect should win a competition to build an embassy abroad, and so on. The prospects for a more meaningful democratic process of truly participatory nature seemed virtually unlimited.

In closing, the vital thing for the Bill at hand is that we have an opportunity now to establish a wholesome and democratic appointment mechanism for directors. Let us show a little bit of originality and confidence in some very important national organizations on a matter of importance to them, to you, to me and to all Canadians, Mr. Speaker. Let us see the men and women they propose. Let us show all Canadians that all Parties in this House believe in both reforming our democratic processes and believe in our fellow citizens participating meaningfully in the appointment process of this new and hopefully successful institute.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. With all due respect, the Hon. Member who has just spoken, by referring to the appointment mechanism, was referring to a specific clause. I would like Members to try and stay within the general principle of the Bill, as called for in our rules.

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, the debate in the House today, on Bill C-32, is about a subject that is so important that it cannot be stressed enough. The House is being asked to vote on establishing an agency whose first task will be to promote peace. Does any Member of this House not hope for a future from which the threat of a nuclear holocaust has completely disappeared? We have now reached a turning point in our history where the possibility of a nuclear disaster is omnipresent and now, more than ever before, the leaders of our planet must act with great wisdom. I do not want to sound melodramatic, but we must realize that the survival of the human race is at stake.

Mr. Speaker, that is why countries the world over must try to work together and achieve peace between East and West, so that decisions are not made out of ignorance or because we misinterpreted the intentions of others, and ensure the fatal button is never pressed. Responsibility for the future of the world does not lie in the hands of nuclear experts or technicians but in those of our politicians. Thus, by sponsoring the establishment of the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) has officially sanctioned Canada's commitment to the cause of peace. Only by increasing our knowledge of issues relating to peace, security, defence and arms control will we be able to take on our responsibilities and show the necessary leadership, a leadership both political and diplomatic, to urge the Super Powers to engage in a dialogue for a lasting peace. It seems hardly appropriate to challenge the intrinsic value of this proposal, to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. Similar institutes have shown that they have been able to expand and enhance support for the cause of peace. Mr. Speaker, I am thinking, for instance of the very respected Stockholm International Peace Research Institute, whose credibility has received unanimous recognition throughout the world.

Since the Second World War, Canada has played a major role in peace-keeping, and its efforts have been successful on many occasions, so much so that our country has acquired an international reputation in this field.

Today, we must have the necessary instruments if we are to continue to be effective in our role as a mediator who is recognized and respected by other nations.

• (1220)

Mr. Speaker, that is a role the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security would play.

Canada needs a research centre to develop its own expertise, without duplicating work already done elsewhere. Canadians must be able to define the parameters of a context in which a world movement towards peace must take place. What we want here is an exclusively Canadian perspective.

These problems are a matter of great anxiety and many Canadians are concerned. The advantage of the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security will be that anyone who wishes to do so may participate, since the Institute will be collecting ideas and opinions from all sources. Mr. Speaker, Bill C-32 proposes the establishment of a structured and independent agency whose main task will be to make a Canadian analysis of the world situation, on the basis of information collected from many sources.

Mr. Speaker, the Institute proposed by the Deputy Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs will be an independent body and act as a meeting place for discussion and consultation, where parties will be able to set aside political and day-to-day considerations, thus making for far more objective and less emotionally-charged debate.

The Institute will undoubtedly become an invaluable source of information and be in a position to advise governments at all levels.

Mr. Speaker, we are in fact being asked to vote on maximizing the value of peace. Following in the footsteps of the Prime Minister, who raised the consciousness of international leaders during his crusade for détente, I endorse without reservations the Bill to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, because it is an altogether praiseworthy initiative.

Mr. Speaker, thirty-five million people have been killed in wars since 1945. The steady spiral of the arms race to procure both nuclear and conventional weapons is maintaining a climate of tremendous anxiety on the international scene. In the Throne Speech, the present Government announced that it intends to devote its full resources to exploration of every possible means to restore confidence and trust among nations, particularly among the nations of East and West, and it has made a commitment to advance proposals to create conditions for greater international security.

This commitment has now been met in Bill C-32, which proposes to establish a centre whose purpose will be to seek peace.

Mr. Speaker, there have been some signs of improvement recently. There are signs of a common ground for discussion that may bring the leaders of East and West closer together. However, we must continue our efforts to prevent a catastrophe we would not even live to regret.

In the now famous novel "1984", by George Orwell, the Party's slogan is: "War is peace". Life, our life, is not a novel, and in this life, war might well mean, unless we decide otherwise, the end of the human race.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to have the opportunity to address this subject today. It may well prove to be one of the most important topics brought before the House in recent times, provided the House deals with the issue in an appropriate manner and that the proposal ends up winning the confidence and support of the people of Canada.

Certainly there is genuine concern among the people of Canada today with respect to the prospects of a general war. It seems to me as an historian that the concern which exists today has been equalled only by the situation which existed in the thirties. At that time there was a widespread pacifist movement similar but not identical to the concerns of today. That movement proved to be very significant in terms of the history of the world, particularly the history of Great Britain. The subject was of special interest to me. The British pacifist movement was the subject of my MA thesis many years ago.

The end result of that movement was that it divided to a substantial degree the people of Great Britain. It is my opinion that the British pacifist movement virtually paralyzed the Government of Great Britain, and I would argue that the end result was not a positive one in terms of future developments in Great Britain and in the western world.

We in this Parliament must harness the concern which already exists in Canada in such a manner that the whole country is a beneficiary. The pursuit of peace has never been a partisan issue in the House. All of us are reassured by that. It is extremely important that the unanimity displayed to this point in time be continued. The most effective way to ensure that unanimity be maintained is to provide the general public with the greatest possible opportunity to make a contribution to this issue which is of vital concern to them.

As I said in the House some months ago, I received a communication from students in my riding, from the community of Souris. Recently I noticed in an article in The Globe and Mail that some students in Montreal had essentially done the same thing; that is, they wrote to numerous world leaders asking for some reassurance that the world would remain intact to enable them to mature and grow old. In passing, I note that the article in The Globe and Mail refers to the fact that the students in Montreal had their letters answered by some, but not many, world leaders. I regret to say that that proved to be the case in my example of the students in Souris.

What is unfortunate is that those world and national leaders, including some in this House, who received this letter did not respond. That is disquieting to the students. What the students, young people and all who are concerned about peace are seeking today is some sort of reassurance that we who have some responsibility in the decision-making process are listening. Furthermore, they ask for a demonstration of our sincerity. Perhaps one should not concede it, but quite often in politics leaders tend to posture in order to reassure. That should never be the case. It will be absolutely damaging if it proves to be the case in this instance.

My concern is that not only do we respond to those in Canada who are vitally concerned about the threat of war, but we respond in such a way (a) that we satisfy them of our sincerity and (b) that we satisfy them in such a way that they will have a direct input into the process. They see themselves as the victims if we fail. That is why the nature of this institute is all-important. Members on all sides of the House agree with the general objective. We agree with the proposal to establish the institute. We seek only to perfect that institute. We think we have a manner in which it can be perfected so that the people of Canada will believe, with real conviction, that this is their institute.

We do not need another government agency laid on to the people of Canada. Government has laid far too much on to the people of Canada in the past. One result is that Canadians have become alienated from the political process. They have grown disdainful of it. They tend to believe that government is something which happens only here and has very little direct impact on their lives. They way to resolve that is to ensure that Canadians in general understand that the peace institute this will be a vehicle which will be responsive to their own concerns.

Canadians have pointed out their fears and the problems to be resolved. I suggest they want to be an integral part of the resolution of that problem. By doing so, I believe we can make the whole political process more relevant to the general public. The people of Canada should have a direct say in the administration of the institute. They should have virtual membership in the institute. If we achieve that by turning to Canadians and their organizations, and invite them to be part of the process, we will ensure that this institute will have their support and commitment. We will also ensure that all Members of this House will be fully supportive of, and genuinely committed to, this very important principle.

If we do less, there is a tremendous danger that we are simply window dressing. There is a very real danger that we are failing those with genuine concerns and fears. What we must do is address the nature of the institute. By doing that, we will guarantee that the people of Canada will see it as their own, as they have done in other instances in the past.

As a westerner, I think of the co-operative movement which was born of the people of the west. While it has fallen upon difficult years in the recent past, for a substantial period of time it was a genuine expression of western concern. We have the opportunity to do that here once again. I urge that we invite the people of Canada, through their existing organizations, to participate in this process by informing the House of their candidates for membership on the board of directors. If we permit the people of Canada to do that, we will permit them to be, in essence, an essential part of the real being of the institute. We will be saying to the people of Canada that we have confidence in them. We will be inviting them to join together in a genuine national institute which can in a non-divisive manner address the genuine concerns of Canadians.

That is why it is very important that we in this House agree unanimously to invite the members of the various organizations, some of which have been referred to by the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour). There would be some I would add to this list; for example, the United Nations Association of Canada. He perhaps did not include that, if I heard him correctly. That organization, the successor to the old League of Nations Society, consists of individuals who probably worked harder for world peace than any other organization in the history of Canada. I would include on the list membership of the Royal Canadian Legion for a perhaps somewhat dissimilar reason. They offered themselves in times of crisis to ensure world peace. By doing so, they offered more of themselves than all of us could ever do.

That is why it is essential that members of organizations such as those to which I referred and those referred to by the Hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona be invited by unanimous resolution of this House to present to us one name in each case. I believe we have now suggested 23. I do not suggest it should be all-inclusive. We would propose, and it is essential to the principle of the Bill, that these 23 organizations and perhaps others be invited to submit a nominee to the Government which would consult with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party. From that list of 23 or 25 nominees, 15 directors will be chosen. As a result, we will have—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. I believe the Hon. Member was in his seat when the Chair made remarks with regard to addressing the principle of the Bill. Suggestions the Hon. Member is now making refer to specific clauses in the Bill. This will be in order when the Bill is before the committee. For the time being, we have to stick to the principle of the Bill.

• (1240)

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my belief that the principle of the Bill is that we wish to create an institute which will work toward the furtherance of world peace and we wish this institute to reflect Canadian public opinion and to address the concerns of Canadians. That is why I made the remarks that I made. I firmly believe that the remarks which I made and the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) are germane to the very principle of the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. If the Hon. Member believes this, there is something he does not understand about the Standing Orders. The Hon. Member is simply trying to justify that what he was saying before was in order when the Chair specifically mentioned that it was not. I would like this to be made clear.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will conclude my remarks by saying as I did in the beginning that the pursuit of peace has been and will continue to be a non-partisan issue. I also believe that the pursuit of peace is something which is a by-product of public concern. What Parliament is attempting to do is simply respond to the expressions of concern which have already been made by Canadians to the Government on numerous occasions.

I support the principle of the Bill which is before us. I support the proposal for a Canadian Peace Institute. I would hope that this institute would take advantage of the expertise which already exists in Canada. I believe, for example, that within the university community there are a number of people who, by the nature of their disciplines, would have a substantial contribution to make in the area of research.

I hope that the Government would therefore provide support to organizations such as the Social Science Research Council, the National Research Council and the Canada Council. I hope as well that the Government would consider tapping the expertise of the Canadian medical profession, the Association of Canadian Phychiatrists and the like. However, what is of the utmost importance, Mr. Speaker, is that we respond to the concerns of Canadians in a way which will convince them of our sincerity.

Therefore, I must conclude, Mr. Speaker, simply by reiterating what I have said before. If we are to reassure Canadians that we are sincere and that we are creating a meaningful institute, then we must ensure that the institute be constructed in such a manner that it enjoys widespread public confidence. I believe we have indicated how we would ensure that that would happen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions related to the Hon. Member's remarks?

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I will put my remarks in the form of a question but I suppose they are probably more in the nature of a point of order. The Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) indicated that he thought I had left out the names of the Royal Canadian Legion and the United Nations Association of Canada. If I did so, it was indeed a serious oversight. Those are two of the organizations that should be high up on any such list. I suppose I must put a question to the Hon. Member. Perhaps I do not have to put a question to the Hon. Member. I would simply like to leave it at that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any other questions or comments? We shall return to debate.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put my comments regarding this Bill first within the framework of a set of principles that were laid down by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) in the House on February 9. I think it is important to recall for a moment the principles for which our Party stands and which have a direct bearing on how the institute will perform.

In asking how we can best achieve policies which reduce the recourse to nuclear weapons in Europe and elsewhere, the Leader of the Official Opposition set down three fundamental principles to guide the formulation of policy. He said first that Canada's foreign policy should always rest on a bipartisan search for consensus. Later on in my remarks I will return to the application of those words to this Bill. The second principle enunciated by the Leader of the Official Opposition was that the cornerstone of our security is NATO solidarity; and the third principle was that only through the strengthening of the non-nuclear deterrent can we reduce the present reliance on nuclear weapons. There is a great deal within those three principles to offer some guidance as we consider the best way to set up the proposed peace institute and the best manner in which it will conduct its operations.

I would like to draw to the attention of the House that it is our view, and certainly my view, that had the peace initiative undertaken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), which as far as I know had the support of every Canadian, been set up in a manner following the principles laid down by the Leader of the Official Opposition with respect to bipartisan consensus, and had that initiative come from a resolution made by the House and a discussion in the External Affairs Committee, I believe it would have been strengthened domestically and, to that extent, strengthened in its international projection.

I also believe that the Prime Minister's peace initiative, worthy as it was, was deficient in that it lacked a broad consensus internationally. I believe that had the approach of the Canadian Government which was reflected in the person of the Prime Minister been built into a common front or a coalition of like-minded leaders around the world, it would have gained much more impact and stature and I dare say it would have had much more effect internationally, particularly on the two superpowers to which the peace initiative was directed.

Those two thoughts are linked in my mind with the need to establish a bipartisan consensus here, particularly on the grave matters that affect the continuation of life on this planet, and with the need to operate in a stronger way multilaterally. I believe that is a role for Canada to play. Considering the way the Leader of the Official Opposition has set out his thinking on the subject, I believe that when such circumstances arise that he is able to exercise leadership for all of Canada, following that perspective will lead to a more fruitful course of action.

I make those comments not in any critical way but only in a way that responds to a certain frustration that is in the minds of many Canadians who want more progress made on this crucial issue of the continuation of life on the planet and who want Canada to respond to this crisis in ways that are more thoughtful and more reflective of a sense of both domestic and international co-operation. I found some words to reflect the heart of my thinking. These words were uttered only a few paces from where you are seated, Mr. Speaker, when the President of Mexico, President de la Madrid, spoke to a joint session of the House on Tuesday of this week.

If I may, Sir, I would like to take a moment to read the words of President de la Madrid. I commend to the whole House for re-reading the entirety of the speech made by the President of Mexico. I believe the words that I am now going to read are directly applicable to the kind of thinking we ought to be bringing to the Bill which is before the House today. As reported on page 3537 of Hansard, the President of Mexico said:

> The world would seem to be skidding down the slope devised by the promoters of force. Technological development has relentlessly built up a deposit of destruction and terror. Both usable weapons and the leftovers of war are employed in attacks on the survival and dignity of mankind. While innumerable people are afflicted by hunger, unhealthy conditions, ignorance and death, millions are being spent to build an apocalyptic arsenal that is becoming increasingly difficult to control and presents a great risk of thoughtless use. We are witnessing an irrational cult to the capacity for self-destruction and to excessive spending to build up force.

Those are words which reflect the concerns of many Canadians as well as concerned people around the world.

All Members of this House would not agree totally with the comments which were made by the President of Mexico. That is to be expected. But I think there was agreement when he said:

> In looking toward the future, each country must decide whether it will act in favour of a collective effort or to pursue sterile and egotistical interests in isolation.

I think that the time has come for Canada to play a very significant role multilaterally, and in doing so it will recapture some of the history of this country which made us an important force coming out of World War II when there was leadership on both sides of the House. When I say this, I am thinking of Mr. Lester Pearson and certainly Howard Green. There were leaders on all sides of the House who had the understanding that we must operate together and that we ought to be building a consensus of support that responds to the true needs of Canadians.

I think that the proposed peace institute—while it certainly leaves a lot to be desired, in my view, as to the fullness of Canada's response—is an effort that will make a step forward. In this kind of world, I think that one step forward is a heck of a lot better than standing still, even if the race is not won.

In the opening speech for our Party's response, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) said:

> —the concept of the establishment of a peace institute centred in Canada is of great importance to us. That concept enjoys wide support.

I think the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead properly assessed the mood of the House and, indeed, the mood of the country when he went on to give essential support to the concept of the Bill and said that the institute ought to play a "three-fold contribution to world peace and the Canadian policy: by helping the world nations to draft policies and plans likely to minimize the risk of nuclear conflict"; secondly, "by keeping Canada's own politicians and population well informed so as to increase their influence over public policies"; and thirdly, "by symbolizing the commitment of the Canadian Government and Parliament to make the quest for peace one of our great national priorities".

In laying down those principles, the Right Hon. Member very properly pointed to the fact that the Bill is flawed. It is flawed in its principle. It is flawed in the espousal of its concept. That is why there has been a determination on the part of this Party to ensure that the Bill will proceed in a way that will guarantee its independence and will ensure that the credibility the institute should have in its opening days will be maintained by the perception that it is operating in an independent way from its very outset.

I believe the way in which those special Canadians who have been advising the Department of External Affairs have been treated has left a great deal to be desired. I have been a member of the advisory committee to the ambassador for disarmament. There have been two or three ambassadors. For the moment, I am leaving aside the question that the Government has left this very important post unfilled. I will not quarrel with that at the moment. However, I would like to make the point that when there were active consultations by representatives of the groups that were identified by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona—and I was there personally to hear them—there was unhappiness and frustration by members of those groups because they felt that the Government was not taking them seriously. When the Special Session on Disarmament was held in New York in 1982, representatives of those groups attended in a formal way. At that time they felt that the Government was not responding to their collective concerns. That has built up, in the minds of some observers, an apprehension that if we are going to go ahead with a formal structure called the Canadian Peace Institute, there be put into place a system to ensure that those groups—and I do not mean to restrict my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona; I am sure he would put that list forward as a list of basic resources within Canada—will at least have guaranteed opportunities to suggest names, and guaranteed opportunities for input. That is very important in the understanding of Canadians. There is a growing number of Canadians on all sides of the perspective of the arms control question who want to ensure that these groups are not only speaking, but that the Government is listening.

The board of directors has been at issue with previous speakers. The appointment of the chairman of the board and the executive director would be within the purview of the Government and, of course, all the appointments would be the collective responsibility of the Government.

With respect to the appointment of the chairman and the executive director, I would like to make a brief comment. I think the Government has an opportunity to demonstrate that it is serious in ensuring that the board be non-partisan and will provide an opportunity to build a consensus of support; that it will be an organization whose stature will command the attention of all Canadians, indeed internationally, and will play a role beyond small domestic concerns.

Therefore I suggest that the board seriously consider as its chairman the name of the Hon. Robert L. Stanfield. I think that Mr. Stanfield is a person who is an acknowledged statesman, who is judicious and impartial. He is a member of the North-South Institute now and plays a very important role in that body. He is a man of great travel who has deep concern and presence. I believe that if the Government were seriously to consider the name which I have put forward, that would be a signal to all Canadians that this board is going—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. The Hon. Member knows that he is not dealing with the principle of the Bill. He has made his point. Would he come back to the principle of the Bill.

Mr. Roche: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am certainly speaking to what I consider to be the principle of the Bill, but I acknowledge that your view is greater than mine.

In the moment that is remaining, I would like to put forward the view that this peace institute needs to take into account the kind of work that it is going to do. Surely, that comes right to the question of the principle of what the peace institute is. I think that the Peace Institute must ensure that there is accurate, reliable information of an impartial nature so that Canadians can come to a judgment as to the extent of the arms race. Indeed, we are quarrelling quite a bit about the figures that are put out by various organizations. My concern is that the people who frame government policy must have the most objective, impartial information that can be obtained. That should be a primary role of the peace institute.

With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I would like to return following the lunch hour to make a few comments concerning ways in which the peace institute could collect information, which would then lead to some final comments regarding Canada's contribution to the creation of greater conditions for world peace with security and disarmament in a mutual, balanced and verifiable way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): It is agreed that the Hon. Member may continue his remarks when we resume this afternoon. However, may I inform him and other Hon. Members that if a discussion starts this afternoon regarding the way in which the institute is going to collect information, that is not within the principle of the Bill. It has been difficult this morning. It appears that some Hon. Members want to make sure that I earn my salary!

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, before the luncheon adjournment I was making the point of why the peace institute needs to establish its credibility at the very outset, and the kind of work we will expect the peace institute to do. In that context, Sir, I should like to quote from a very interesting article written by Dr. Don Bates who is a professor in the History of Medicine at McGill University and chairman of the McGill Study Group for Peace and Disarmament. Mr. Bates is a very well known figure, particularly in his work with physicians for social responsibility. In an article in The Globe and Mail on Friday, May 4, Dr. Bates said, referring to the proposed institute before us in this legislation, and I quote:

> What is required is an institute, in Canada, supported morally and materially by the federal Government, but international in its orientation—

Although I believe it is very important to make the point that we have been concerned about the manner of appointment to the board, I am not going to dwell on that any further except to make the point that members of the board of directors ought to have an international as well as a Canadian representation. I believe there is sufficient reason for making that statement when we consider that Canada's Peace Institute will have to look at the world scene in an effort to establish beyond the shadow of a doubt the correctness of the figures which have been put before the public with respect to the current nuclear arms race.

For example, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if the following figures are correct. These figures are published by "World Military and Social Expenditures, 1983". This is a document which is used by many groups. It has an international standing. As the first order of business, I would like the Canadian Peace Institute to ascertain whether this set of figures is correct.

The publication to which I referred states:

> As of 1982, the U.S. had 29,000 nuclear weapons, the U.S.S.R., 17,400. The U.K. had 446; France, 263; China, 304. These numbers include strategic, intermediate, and tactical warheads and bombs.

In other words, these are global figures. The publication continues:

> In strategic weapons, the U.S. had 9,999 to the Soviets' 7,388, with the Soviets holding the lead in the number of launchers 2,452 to 1,832. It is in European Theatre Nuclear Forces that the U.S.S.R. has built a considerable lead over the U.S.—6,339 weapons and 4,424 launchers to 1,439 weapons and 1,283 launchers. But if the intermediate systems of the U.K. and France are included, the gap closes; NATO, as a whole, has 6,148 weapons and 2,766 launchers in Europe.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that these are the figures which are published in "World Military and Social Expenditures, 1983". Are they the correct figures? I believe that it is reasonable to request the Canadian Peace Institute to provide us with authentic information as to whether or not one side is significantly ahead of the other side in the pursuit of deterrents, so that we can make our political judgments. The publication continues:

> Since 1945—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the normal time allotted to him has expired. Is there a disposition to give unanimous consent to the Hon. Member to extend his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Roche: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues. I will take only a couple of moments in order not to delay the debate unduly. According to the document to which I have referred which was published by "World Military and Social Expenditures":

> Since 1945, the lead in the race for improved systems has always gone back and forth between the superpowers. The U.S. led with the atomic bomb, intercontinental bomber, and thermonuclear bomb. The U.S.S.R. caught up and plunged ahead with the intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) and man-made satellite. The U.S. took the lead with the submarine-launched ballistic missile and multiple warhead. The U.S.S.R. countered with the antiballistic missile and caught up to the U.S. advance in multiple independently targeted warhead (MIRV). The U.S. went ahead again with the long-range cruise missile and neutron bomb.

Thus, we see, Mr. Speaker, that the arms race has been fueled by new technologies which have made nuclear weapons more powerful, more flexible, and shortened the time interval from launch to impact to only minutes. That, of course, is the great concern which is expressed by the public today. The time between launch and impact now, with the heightened technology which continues to go ahead, causes us increasing concern in many aspects of our lives.

Earlier in my speech I quoted from the speech of the President of Mexico to the joint assembly of the Houses of Parliament this week. He said we must understand that as we come into this new stage of technology we must find a way to put a cap on the arms race to preserve true security in the world. We must find a way to stop that security from being dependent upon a never-ending escalation of arms. I have said that it is the position of all responsible people that we must find a way to enhance the prospect for mutual, balanced and verifiable disarmament. It will be the task of the peace institute to consider Canada's special role in advancing verification for the monitoring of arms production and, indeed, arms control agreements.

We are not devoid of any opportunity of moving ahead, Mr. Speaker. Full documentation is provided in the Palme report which was signed by an international panel of officials from western, eastern and Third World countries including, I am glad to say, the distinguished former ambassador to the Soviet Union, Mr. Robert Ford. Time does not permit me to make an extensive analysis of or reference to that report here. I will only say that we are not devoid of answers. The peace institute must find a way of ensuring that Canada is able to make a contribution in a realistic way. Verifiability is a chief way in which we can make some progress.

From the beginning of its operation, the peace institute must be assured of its credibility by the manner of appointments to the board which has been suggested by earlier speakers. There must be full consultation with those groups which we have mentioned. The Committee on External Affairs and National Defence must be consulted at every stage from the inception of this institute. From the very moment of its beginning it must be assured that it will make a significant contribution to Canada's role in enhancing the prospects for true peace and security in the world. To make such a contribution would be a great moment for us.

I urge Members of the House, and particularly the Government, to establish this peace institute in such a way that no one will doubt its authenticity and policy planners in the future will have reliable information to build on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions on the remarks of the hon. gentleman?

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche). We have had the campers in front of the House of Commons for a little over a year now. They are camping on the grounds in protest of the Cruise vehicle testing in Alberta. I would say that slightly more than 50 per cent of Canadians are opposed to Cruise vehicle testing. On the other hand, the majority of Canadians support our commitments to NATO. Now that the campers have spent a year in front of the House of Commons, does the Hon. Member think that they should move and camp on the grounds of the Russian embassy? This is a two-way street. Both sides must disarm. We have received their message and are all for disarmament. Of course, the problem lies with the communists. I would like the Hon. Member to comment upon whether we should suggest that they move and camp on the grounds of the Russian embassy for a year to deliver the message to them. The campers have certainly given us the message.

We are talking about nuclear disarmament, Mr. Speaker. I would like to have conventional weapons included in the disarmament talks. Conventional weapons can do serious damage too. We know what happened to the cities in England and Europe during World War II.

Another issue which I think should be discussed with regard to disarmament is chemical warfare. There is enough evidence that the Russians are using chemical warfare in Afghanistan. We have also seen chemical warfare in the Iran-Iraq war. I would like my colleague to comment upon whether he would like those two additions to be made to the disarmament talks.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that in 1963 a Conservative Government was defeated by the combined efforts of the NDP and the Liberals because the Conservative Government was opposed to nuclear weapons being on Canadian soil. In 1979 the Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), who was then the Conservative Minister of Defence, gave a commitment to have all nuclear weapons removed from Canadian soil by 1982. That is, to remove the warheads from Comox and other places in Canada.

Finally, is the goal of disarmament to convince both sides to set up monitoring teams so that we can ensure that both sides will disarm at the same time?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair doubts whether the question related to the peace camp is relevant to the Bill before us. Second, I would like to remind Hon. Members that questions or remarks addressed to an Hon. Member after his speech must be related to the contents of his speech.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for an interesting set of questions. I will try to respond briefly. The people who espouse the position of balanced, mutual and verifiable disarmament measures are protesting today against the arms race wherever it is found. Of course, the deployment of the Soviet SS-20s in Europe which precipitated the NATO response of the Cruise and Pershing must be condemned. I believe that those who look very clearly and carefully, as I am sure the peace institute will, will recognize that it has been the Soviet build-up of forces which provoked the NATO response. We must protest that very clearly.

The campers can certainly move to the Soviet embassy. Whether that will do any good, I do not know. Perhaps it would be a useful effort on their part to go to the Soviet embassy and make the point which my hon. colleague has made. With regard to the front lawn, it seems to me there is a larger question at issue. That is the question of the rights of democracy for Canadians of any persuasion to come unobstructed to Parliament Hill to make their point. It is a source of concern to me that nothing be done to impede the rights of Canadians to protest whatever cause they stand for.

Conventional weapons must certainly be reduced. If Canada is to make a contribution to the reduction of nuclear capacity in the world, we must bring down this nuclear mountain. In order to do that I believe there will be an increase in conventional spending in order to strengthen our conventional forces. By so doing, we would then not have to rely on the nuclear deterrent. To the extent that NATO is deficient in its conventional strength, NATO will have to be upgraded. Canada will have to play its continuing role, as I believe we are doing with our increase of 3 per cent a year. I am not qualified to say whether that is sufficient. I only make the over-all point that Canada must make its significant contribution.

With respect to the question of 1963, if the Conservative Government was listened to at that time, of course we would not have been in such difficulties which have resulted in confusion about our position. On behalf of the Government the Prime Minister espoused a strategy of suffocation at the 1978 disarmament session at the United Nations. There is some confusion as to whether or not this strategy will be implemented in everything that we do.

While I am not so concerned about the past, I believe that because of the never-ending escalation of the arms race, conventional and nuclear, a significant Canadian contribution would be to enhance verifiability measures. This would include on site inspection, which is a policy that was adopted in the 1978 United Nations session and one which we should support. More particularly, it is the enhancement of satellite verification measures. I think that Canada is particularly well equipped to contribute in this area because of our technology. We can make a significant contribution and thereby enhance verifiability around the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): One further question for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, would my colleague suggest that the NATO countries unilaterally disarm in light of the fact that the Russians recently celebrated the shooting down of the Korean aircraft with approximately 265 people on board who were murdered? I fail to see how we can trust a country that celebrates the shooting down of innocent people in a jet aircraft.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I can answer that question very briefly. I have not advocated in any of my remarks unilateral disarmament. I believe the position of all responsible citizens today is to advocate mutual, balanced and verifiable disarmament by the Warsaw Pact and NATO countries in ways that enhance their combined securities.

We must recognize the common ground on which we stand in the world today. As that common ground of survival is threatened by the never-ending nuclear escalation, I believe it is imperative to find ways to achieve collective security. I suggested earlier that the Palme Commission has provided us with a basic approach to find those ways to achieve collective security. This must be done but it is certainly not the intention to have NATO unilterally disarm. That would be a policy of disaster. I do not know of any knowledgeable person in a position of responsibility who would advocate such a position. However, we must ensure that our systems are not out of control.

The lesson to be learned from the tragic shooting down of the Korean airplane is how fragile our systems of control are today. We see many examples of how these characteristics of fragility in our international system must be strengthened. It is in our interest to make significant contributions toward strengthening them.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of sympathy for all of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche). I agree with him very strongly that a key requirement for this peace institute must be that it is totally independent.

During his remarks, I do not believe he was as passionate in saying that there should be a strong bias toward disarmament and getting the superpowers together through this peace institute as he was about other matters pertaining to this subject. Would he comment on the fact that that kind of commitment is an important criterion in the rationale for choosing people who will perform the necessary functions in that organization?

Mr. Roche: I believe that a strong rationale for choosing people is their possession of powers of analysis. They must be competent in their assimilation of the highly complex subject about which there are many different levels of information. They must have a sense of discrimination if they are to be charged with producing the policies of the peace institute. I suggest that the power of analysis is very important as well as a sense of commitment to the system of collective security. It is not necessarily a commitment to one approach to a particular problem because this is a multidimensional subject. I would not want to see this as a board with a set of interests that are too narrow.

For example, there is a common characteristic of specialty in the field of development on the IDRC board which has an international representation. Specialized discussions are able to take place there as a result of the knowledge that people in the IDRC bring to those board meetings. I would expect the peace institute to operate in the same way, with a combination of analysis and commitment to the larger subject of obtaining a system of collective security through the strenghtening of international institutions in our world. We do that in common interest.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Resuming debate.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is said that the subject matter of the Bill before us today, that of peace and disarmament, is far too important that it be left to the experts. My speaking this afternoon will certainly demonstrate that fact. I hope that my colleagues in the House, such as the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) and the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), will be merciful on me when I finish my remarks and not ask any difficult questions, because I do not pretend to be an expert in this field.

However, it would be my submission that the House of Commons and the country as a whole is united on its desire for peace. I have not heard anybody argue the contrary view. Certainly there is a difference of approach. It is the position of one of the experts I mentioned just a minute ago, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam, if I understand that hon. lady's position, that Canada and other nations of the western world should lay down their arms tomorrow. They should not engage in any form of national defence. We should disband our Armed Forces, lay ourselves wide open and turn the other cheek, so to speak. The majority of people, including myself, would not accept that approach to life.

There are those at the other extreme who would argue that we must always bargain from a position of strength and that we should always be stronger than our enemies. Again if I understand correctly, this is the position that has taken hold in the two superpowers, both the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A. I believe we must work toward a centre from those two extremes if we are to be successful.

I also wonder sometimes about what real effect Canada can have on world events. When we talk of successful disarmament, it would seem to me that the people who really must take the initiative and work hard at it are the two superpowers, especially if we are talking about the question of the nuclear threat and the use of atomic weaponry.

However, I have listened carefully to the views of the Hon. Member for Edmonton South and others. I think that Canada can play some small role in international affairs. At least we can have an open debate in Canada. The various views can be brought to bear and hopefully some distillation will take place, and perhaps by way of advice to superpowers or by setting an example we can be of some assistance to our fellow human beings throughout the entire world.

These are philosophical questions which would undoubtedly be a subject of learned discussion at the proposed institute. I do not believe that there is anything wrong with wide-ranging philosophical discussions as well as discussion about more detailed areas.

I am also somewhat familiar with some of the peace movements that have occurred in prior years. I think back to the late 1920s, when Coolidge was President of the United States, and the approaches which were used at that time. There appeared to be two approaches both in the United States and in Europe. The first approach was a kind of simple way of doing things. If you read about, some people may remember, the "Outlawry of War" campaign that was active in the late 1920s and 1930s, there the idea was that public pressure would be put on governments so that each government in turn would sign an international treaty by which each agreed not to use force first in the reconciliation or the solution of international arguments. The theory went that as more and more countries signed an international undertaking of that nature that would, by its very nature, outlaw war. Everybody would have agreed not to use, as we call it today, the first strike option.

That was rather a simple approach but people felt very strongly and sincerely that war could be outlawed by this rather simple mechanism. At the same time as that movement was going on, there was also, just as today, government-to-government negotiations on the major disarmament issues. They were bilateral, multinational, and they could focus on particular types of weaponry or they could focus on particular geographic areas. One series of conferences that went on dealt with the large naval vessels that were being built at that time. That was analogous to the nuclear weaponry of today.

Everybody thinks in terms of nuclear weapons and what we are going to do about them. They are very expensive and very dangerous. Things could go wrong in the use of them as deterrents. But in that day and age, the question was with large naval vessels. That was where all the money was going, money that could be spent better elsewhere for social purposes. A lot of manpower was to be tied up in these things. These vessels were looked upon in much the same light as the nuclear threat is today.

As analogies, today we have the SALT talks that are going on, we have the MBFR, we have the CDE talks, all on a certain type of weaponry or within a certain geographical area. There is, as other Members have pointed out, a good deal of similarity between the approach that is going on now and the approach that was going on in the late 1920s and 1930s. In light of developments after the 1930s, it seemed that neither of those two approaches worked very well. Most of the nations of the world eventually became embroiled in World War II. This gives me cause for concern at the present time. But because of past failures, because we have not been able to resolve these difficult problems in the past, I do not think the human race can afford to give up its search for eventual success. It is something we have to pursue even knowing that for the last many thousands of years of human history we have to admit to not being that successful.

You have permitted me to digress in general terms on the question of disarmament and peace-making, Sir. I would like to return, if I may, to the Bill proper. This Party gives general support to the proposal put forward by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). We have, however, had some concerns. We were not entirely satisfied that the direction in which the institute was to go had been clearly enough enunciated. We were concerned with a very important matter of appointments that were to be made to the board of directors of the institute, and especially the very important position of executive director, the person who will actually lead this institute into the fray and have a good deal of say over staff appointments, over where money is to be spent and who is to be involved in the process.

We were concerned over the true function of the institute. Was it to be something that was to be entirely separate from government, or was it to be something that was, under certain circumstances, to be seen as an instrument of government? It is pretty difficult to have both at the same time. If you read through the original Bill as presented and given first reading, it is not at all clear which of those two alternatives was anticipated in the Bill. It seems to take a little bit from each proposition. If the institute is to be entirely separate, has not its function already been fulfilled by other organizations?

I have before me a publication of the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament. This publication is called the Arms Control Chronicle. The edition I have is number one, volume 1, I would imagine. In my opinion, it does a very good job of outlining the chronology of events in the disarmament field and where we stand now with respect to different sets of negotiations that are taking place.

I hope the new institute will not be superfluous. I hope it can be arranged in such a way that that will not be the case. If, however, it is to be an instrument of government or on certain occasions an instrument of government, what will be its exact role and how will it function? Will it, for instance, be privy to defence secrets, either defence secrets of Canada alone or defence secrets of the NATO alliance or the North American defence system? What will our treaty partners think when they tell the Department of National Defence in Canada some technical secrets relating to armaments? Will that information be passed on to somebody who is not within government proper? What will be the disposition of that information eventually?

If the institute is to have access to military secrets, will this not to some extent undermine its potential to deal with other parties? If it is trying to deal with parties from a country whose general view and outlook is not that of our own and is sometimes looked upon as an enemy, and at the same time it is known that the institute has access to military secrets, will that not make these things difficult?

What is to be the role of the institute in providing advice to government in its arms limitation negotiations? How can it be entirely independent at one time and then act in concert with the Department of External Affairs in conducting treaty negotiations on the other hand? That gives rise to certain difficulties to my way of thinking.

Our view on this side is that the institute should be as independent as possible. It should not be part and parcel of the Department of External Affairs or have particularly close ties with the Department of National Defence. There have been, Sir, considerable negotiations. I have copies of rather voluminous correspondence between the Prime Minister of Canada and the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) on the matters I have just laid before you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to see that these negotiations have been relatively successful. They have been slow, as all government negotiations always appear to be. But it does seem that we have now arrived at some form of common ground. I look forward to the presentation which will follow shortly to be made by the Deputy Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party in which some of these conclusions hopefully will be outlined.

In my view, the institute itself should not become a large and overwhelming institution. It should confine its role to that of co-ordinating and recording the work of others. There is a good deal of ongoing thought already in Canada on the question of peace and disarmament in universities and other institutions across the country, as well as elsewhere throughout the world.

One of the most important functions which the institute can do almost immediately would be to institute a central library for publications and for private material on these subjects. The collection and dissemination of factual information, as well as ideas and approaches which in all probability can be just as important as factual information, can be a function of the institute without requiring a great deal of money. It is something which can be accomplished fairly quickly.

We have heard speeches during this debate which suggested certain locations within Canada for the institute. My colleague outlined the good points of his home City of Edmonton as a physical location for the institute. However, it would appear that the most logical place for it would be here in the nation's capital of Ottawa. I do not see any necessity for moving it outside Ottawa. It would be central here, would have access to Government Departments and would be close to the embassies representing other countries throughout the world. It is a sensible, logical place for its physical location.

I would like to make a few last comments on the appointment of the board of 17, as I understand it. Although it has been said before, it is important that there be a good cross-section of expertise on the board. Of course, there should be people with expertise in diplomatic matters and people with knowledge of military affairs. As the Hon. Member for Edmonton South said, there should be people who are used to handling ideas. We would look in the first instance to universities for people who have these particular talents. I would hope, at least at the start, that the institute would be a Canadian institution rather than trying to be a completely international institution. By far the majority of the directors, at least initially, should be Canadians, perhaps with some representation from other countries which should be kept rather small.

My final comment deals with the executive director of the proposed institute. This is a key position because, as I said before, he will have control of day-to-day affairs and I suspect much of the policy matters of the institute. My nomination for this job would be the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, who unfortunately is unavailable. The possibility has crossed my mind that other ex-Liberal Prime Ministers could be candidates for the office—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please.

Mr. Nickerson: I have only one sentence more.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair has been reminding Hon. Members most of the morning to try to abide by the Standing Orders and to deal with the principle of the Bill. Most of the speech of the Hon. Member, as interesting as it was, dealt with particular aspects of or clauses in the Bill. For the information of the next speakers, I would like to remind them to speak to the principle of the Bill. The only way that Hon. Members may get to the nitty-gritties or to the clauses of the Bill is to pass second reading and have it go into committee.

Mr. Nielsen: No, no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I am suggesting this just from a procedural standpoint. I quoted Beauchesne's this morning, but it appears not to have stopped Hon. Members from dealing with particular clauses in the Bill.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, since I will be the final speaker for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition on this Bill, it may be that I may exceed the regulation 20 minutes, but I would presume that if that happens, consent would be forthcoming to allow me to complete my remarks.

As spokesmen for my Party have made clear, we welcome the establishment of a Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. Indeed, our Leader indicated to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last April 9, after receiving the draft Bill from the Prime Minister, that the requirement in Canada for institutional restructuring and innovation in this field is beyond question. However, as has been made clear to the Government both before and after Bill C-32 was introduced into the House, we view the Bill as proposed to be fatally flawed in respect of the lack of independence of the centre, its lack of accountability to Parliament and the potentially negative effect that private funding of the centre might have on existing, indigenous centres of research.

In a lengthy letter of April 9 to the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) detailed these concerns. Because of their particular importance in the amendments and deletions now agreed to between my Party and the Government, I believe it to be important that I give the House a detailed account of the attention of the Leader of the Opposition to this very important matter.

He did not question the Prime Minister's intention to seek to improve the quality and quantity of considered research and information on peace and security issues. He felt that this comes at a time when all Canadians show a growing commitment to search for both realistic and imaginative solutions to the perilous state of international security affairs which we know all too well. The creation of a new institute should be directed toward ensuring that this search is conducted in the best possible manner, and that peace and security is not allowed to become the province of one political point of view, one Party or one perspective.

Pluralism of ideas and pluralism of research cannot but be applauded and encouraged. However, that pluralism must be both real and enduring. This implies that what a Canadian government seeks to create in this area must ensure that its research and public information are protected from its prevailing political winds, and that Canadian research done elsewhere in the country is not distorted to conform to these prevailing winds. It also implies that if the Government truly seeks to encourage all worthy research and information efforts, a newly-created institution must not be structured so as to thwart those efforts, inadvertently or otherwise.

The following areas were of specific concern to the Leader of the Opposition. One of his concerns was funding. The Prime Minister proposed that this new centre be able to raise funds from non-government sources. He felt it was not at all clear why this was desirable. Far more than with this proposed institute, other Canadian research and information efforts are dependent on the goodwill of Canadian individuals, foundations, corporations and the like. These moneys are not unlimited, particularly in an area where Canadian funding entities are both cautious about donating funds to such controversial issues and where there is a very limited tradition or practice of supporting such activities.

If allowing the new institute to raise outside funds were to channel funds away from these other more vulnerable Canadian operations, one of two things might well occur. Either these other institutions or groups might be starved of funds or their research activities would become directed and rationalized through the mediary of a quasi-governmental body. Surely the Government does not seek to create a peace marketing board. The Leader of the Opposition was particularly concerned about the impact private sector funding would have on institutions such as the Canadian Institute of Strategic Studies, Toronto, the Centre for Conflict Studies in Fredericton, the Centre for Strategic Studies in the University of Alberta, the Strategic Studies Program in the University of Calgary, the Research Program on Strategic Studies, York University, the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament, Ottawa, the Centre for International Relations, Queens University, the Institute of International Relations, University of British Columbia, the Norman Paterson School of International Affairs, Carleton University, the Peace Research Institute in Dundas, Project Ploughshares in Waterloo and the United Nations Association of Canada.

Another of the concerns of the Leader of the Opposition about Bill C-32 had to do with its board of directors. He believed that the intent to have the governing body of this institute appointed by the government of the day would not enhance the confidence of Canadians that these very important issues were being approached in a totally apolitical way. Such confidence would be greatly enhanced if the members of the board were appointed by consensus of all political parties as represented in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

A third of the concerns of the Leader of the Opposition was publications. He believed that one of the most important elements in ensuring the quality and independence of research activities is the right, indeed the obligation, of a research body to publish the considered findings of its researchers. It would be extremely unfortunate if this new institution did not have such rights formally recognized in its founding legislation, as does, for example, the legislation enacting the Economic Council of Canada.

The spectre of a government censoring the results of research if such research was ideologically divergent or politically troublesome is surely to be avoided at all costs. Such dangers, however, are multiplied if the institute itself is financially dependent on the government of the day and must report to its designated officials.

A fourth concern of the Leader of the Opposition was reporting. The Prime Minister proposed that the Minister be able to request advice from this new institution. This is unobjectionable in and of itself. The Leader of the Opposition, however, believed that to ensure that all Canadians have access to the expertise residing in this institute, and that open and informed debate is encouraged, it would be desirable if the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence were able to commission this body to conduct research as well. Objectivity and openness would thereby be preserved.

Another of our Leader's concerns was recruiting. The Leader of the Opposition pointed out that a central symptom of the problem the Government seeks to rectify with this legislation was the unfortunate paucity of world-class expertise in Canada on peace and security affairs. It is troublesome, however, to observe that one of the most likely effects of this legislation may well be to absorb what talent does exist, depriving universities, private groups and institutions of their existing resources. Centralization of resources will have been purchased at the price of crippling unfettered analysis. This is what the Leader of the Opposition felt that a new institute could. Were the consideration raised by the Leader of the Opposition, which I have gone through, to be reflected in modifications to the proposed legislation, some very useful functions could be achieved. These functions, such as I will outline in a moment, are somewhat similar to some of those listed in the legislation, but their worth is increased significantly if the new institute is constitutionally freed from the pitfalls and problems the Leader of the Opposition described as I have outlined them today.

The first function is to centralize, increase and rationalize the distribution of government funds for research and public information; second, to create a national library and data base on peace and security questions; third, to provide facilities for conferences, seminars, et cetera, and funding of the same for other bodies; fourth, to provide facilities and resources to bring foreign scholars to Canada, either in-house or for the use of other bodies; fifth, to issue an annual, independent report on government activities in the arms control and security fields; and sixth, the provision of a review by Parliament of an annual report on the activities of the institute, including its financial operations.

Unfortunately, the Prime Minister in his response to the Leader of the Opposition some days later failed to respond in any significant manner to these suggestions by the Leader of the Opposition, although he did agree to amend the proposed Bill to include the relevant wording from the legislation enacting the Economic Council of Canada respecting the right and obligation of the institute to publish the considered findings of its researchers. As the House now knows, the Government subsequently introduced Bill C-32 in the knowledge that the Bill, as proposed, would not enjoy bipartisan support. Nonetheless, second reading debate commenced on April 17.

I do not need to review today the excellent contributions in that debate made by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) and others, except to observe that those concerns which were based on our Leader's views as expressed to the Prime Minister on April 9 did give the Government second thoughts respecting the appropriateness of the Bill as proposed.

Indeed, the Leader of the Opposition was most encouraged by a letter dated May 1 that he received from the Prime Minister. This letter responded in more detail to the concerns expressed by our Party almost a month earlier. Specifically, my Party agreed to the following amendments and deletions: First, my Leader welcomed the Prime Minister's acceptance that Section 5(g) be deleted. This will undoubtedly reduce the anxiety of the existing centres of disarmament, security and arms control study over the negative impact Section 5(g) would have on private resourcing of their institution.

Second, with respect to its financial independence, my Leader welcomed the Prime Minister's acceptance of the suggestion of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead that Section 29 be amended to include statutory appropriation on a yearly basis.

Third, with respect to my Leader's concern over the independence of the institute from government, the Leader of the Opposition welcomed the Prime Minister's commitment to delete Clauses 25, 26 and 27 and that Clause 28 be amended to remove the word "shall" and replace it with the word "may". However, we were most disappointed that the Prime Minister continued to refuse to enable the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence similarly to request the institute to undertake research for or provide advice on matters involving international peace and security. Without such an amendment, agreement could not be reached.

Fourth, in addition to this, the major outstanding issue between the Government and my Party concerned the independence of the board of directors and the nomination process for selection of the board. The Leader of the Opposition found the Prime Minister's proposal for simple consultation on appointments to the board to be less than adequate in ensuring the board's independence. In contrast, the Leader of the Opposition proposed by letter of April 9 that these appointments be made with the consensus of all political Parties as represented on the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. He subsequently alternatively suggested that, to become a meaningful consultative process while at the same time leaving the Government the authority to nominate the board of directors, a section be added stating:

● (1500)

Prior to the appointment of individuals as provided in Sections 6, 7 and 8 the Minister shall consult with and obtain the support of the Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition.

Such a meaningful consultation process would ensure that this centre would be politically independent.

The Leader of the Opposition further recommended that the Government formally consult with and obtain nominations from various national organizations. A preliminary list of such organizations was suggested to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Such a list of nominees would form the pool from which the Government would select its candidates for the board of directors after which the consultation process as I have already outlined it would take place.

Regrettably, the Government felt unable to respond to either proposal respecting the board of directors, although it did indicate a willingness to accept the Leader of the Opposition's recommendation that consultation on the board begin immediately. We were, however, encouraged by the Prime Minister's willingness to accept the Leader of the Opposition's suggestion that Clause 28 be amended to enable the standing committee to initiate requests for study on the same basis as the Minister.

This left as the only outstanding issue that of agreeing to an appointment process which would leave no room for doubt that the board of directors would be non-partisan and would enjoy the confidence and support of all Parties. I am happy to report to the House that there is now agreement between the Government and Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition with respect to this process.

First, the Government has accepted the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition that consultations on the composition of the board of directors start immediately, especially with respect to the appointment of the chairman and the executive director, as they will be key appointments for establishing the tone and quality of the institute. Second, the Government has agreed to immediate consultation with national organizations and interested Canadians with respect to receiving nominations for the board of directors. It is our expectation, as I know it to be the Prime Minister's, that there will be full agreement on the composition of the board of directors prior to the end of committee consideration of the Bill. Third, concurrent with this consultation, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence will be examining the Bill and recommending a formal list of national organizations which, once the Bill is passed, will become the pool from which nominees for the board of directors will be selected.

The Leader of the Opposition believes that this process will ensure that the consultations will be meaningful, that Canadians will participate fully in the selection of candidates for the board of directors, and that the process itself will underscore the independence and integrity of the institute. I commend the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition for their diligence in pursuing these major improvements to this Bill. These amendments and deletions have enhanced the integrity and independence of the institute. We now await in committee the full and detailed amendments to which there has been agreement. Given the changes suggested by and agreed to between the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister, we will see a far better Bill coming from the committee.

I would like to make one final point, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the exchange of correspondence that has taken place between the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister. We would like to see that correspondence made available to all members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. In this way, members of the committee will have available to them the entire exchange reflecting the agreements that have been reached between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition for guidance in their deliberations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is on the following motion: Mr. MacEachen, seconded by Mr. Pinard, moves that Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

DIVORCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, April 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacGuigan that Bill C-10, an Act to amend the Divorce Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): When the House adjourned on the last day of debate on Bill C-10, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) had the floor. As that Hon. Member is not present, another Hon. Member may rise to speak in the debate.

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, today I join in this debate on Bill C-10, an Act to amend the Divorce Act, with both hopes and reservations. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that our deliberations will lead to a greater humanizing of a process which is, for the majority of those who go through it, the most difficult and traumatic experience they are likely to face in their lifetimes. I have reservations, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill is far from complete with its present proposals and that it is far from perfect as a vehicle which will provide that humanizing effect to the Canadian divorce procedure.

There can be no question that the divorce law needs to be revised and amended. The Divorce Act of 1968 has become subject to changing attitudes and social mores. Today, the Act is very definitely out of date. There is no question that change is due and that the principles of the original Act need to be rethought. The Act needs a change that will reflect that, no matter how regrettable and no matter how sad, divorce is indeed a very unfortunate fact of life.

Divorce is so much a fact of life that 40 per cent of marriages will end in divorce. However, recognition of those figures does not make the experience any easier to face. The rationale behind this Bill, and indeed the initiative taken on behalf of the Government in this area, seem to suggest that we can make divorce an easier experience without trivializing marriage in the process. I know that during his remarks at second reading, the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) denied emphatically that this Bill would make divorce easier.

It is because there appear to be confusing signals between what the Minister has said and what appears to be the rationale for bringing forth this Bill, that I question which objectives are really being addressed. I must also question whether we will not see as a result of this Bill a new and sudden upsurge in the divorce rate as we did in the aftermath of the 1968 Act. Such an upsurge would only serve to undermine the institution of marriage further. Before the 1968 Act was passed, the rate of divorce per 100,000 of population was just over 50. In 1969, it was up to 124.2, and that figure has more than doubled in the years since then.

Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker. When a marriage is over and done with, I agree with those who say that it is in the best interests of all to end it. Ending it is especially in the best interests of the children of such a marriage, who are indeed the true victims of all tragedies associated with divorce. However, if we are not careful and if we do not exercise extreme caution, we may well create circumstances which make marriage dissolution so easy that no real judgment can be made as to whether or not the marriage has failed and is indeed irreconcilable.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the general reservation I have with the Bill before us and with one specific part of the Bill, its being the proposition which merely requires as a condition of divorce that the husband and wife have lived separate and apart for a period of one year or more that immediately precedes, includes or immediately follows the date of presentation of the petition.

I am sure the intention of this Bill is not that it be used to facilitate divorce on demand, but I question, especially when there are no children involved, whether that will not actually be the result. What requirements exist under the proposed Bill to verify that the couple in question have indeed lived separate and apart for one year? None that I can find. There is no legal requirement—no filing of legal separation papers and no letters of intent registered with the court. Indeed, the conditions that permit cohabitation during 90 days of the year, ostensibly to effect reconciliation, may well serve to obscure the deception being undertaken.

The argument may be made that when there are no children in a marriage and both partners agree to end the marriage, they should be able to obtain a divorce on demand. However, that is not the argument proposed by the Minister and his staff in the documents which accompany the Bill. If they wish to see divorce on demand, they should have the courage and the conviction to state so openly, rather than provide loopholes that permit them to say one thing and do another. It is this inconsistency, this slapdash attitude to this very important subject that affects the social fabric of our lives that I find throughout the Bill that causes me to hold reservations.

I have no objection to shortening the time requirement for divorce to one year. One year seems to be a reasonable time in which to determine whether a marriage has failed completely or whether it can be saved or reconciled in any way. I have no objections to "no-fault" grounds, as long as they are agreed upon by both parties, without coercion. But I cannot agree with the supposition contained in the Bill that in all cases it is preferable to list "no-fault" as the basis for concluding a marriage. This I cannot accept. Surely we are not so naive as to believe that once a divorce has been granted, the scars and injury of every single marriage, no matter how bad or how cruel, will be healed and that the agony and torment of such a marriage should not be taken into consideration when it comes to matters such as maintenance.

We know very well that there are acts committed in the confines and privacy of a marriage which would not be condoned were they committed in public against strangers. These acts would, in many instances, qualify for prosecution under the Criminal Code. The vast majority of such acts are committed against wives and minors. Surely they have some right, if not to financial compensation for the injuries received, both physical and mental, then at least to the understanding of the courts. Somewhere it should be recorded that such a marriage failed because of the very real, even criminal, fault of one of its partners. We provide financial compensation in Canada today for the victims of criminal injury. Surely we can at least give moral compensation to the injured victim of a divorce.

There is more than the emotional solidarity that a court can get in its assessment of fault in those instances where clearly there is fault. Surely there is a correlation between such fault and awards the court may make for settlement and maintenance. If there is no recognition of fault, how can we pretend that we will ever reach an equitable maintenance settlement? The Bill states that the courts will be obliged to consider the economic advantages and disadvantages of spouses. Where is the clear criterion for the courts to be obliged to consider, for example, the mother who has given up the pursuit of her career to raise children; the wife who has worked to help her husband through university and launch him on his career; the wife who has given up the advancement of her own career pursuits to raise children; and the wife and the mother who has been out of the work-force for some 30 years to 35 years or more and has no means of attaining self-sufficiency?

But age, experience and family obligations are surely not the only disadvantages created by a marriage. The mental anguish and insecurity caused by the behaviour of one or the other of the spouses is no less a valid disadvantage. To say that the court shall not have regard to any misconduct is to negate this very valid disadvantage. In my opinion, the use of the word "misconduct" to cover instances of extreme psychological and physical abuse is an insult unworthy of a Bill which purports to do justice. The concept of maintenance without consideration or regard to such misconduct not only ignores the very real disadvantages such a victim or spouse may have at the time of divorce, it also undermines the grounds he or she—and quite obviously in most cases it will be a she—may have at some time in the future of making application to have such maintenance orders reviewed. Are these victims of divorce, therefore, not to be protected? Do we not have a responsibility when amending any law to take into consideration and take the time to bring forth all the improvements that are required, and not just pay lip service to addressing a need that has been brought about by social change?

Let us remember that an abused spouse, indeed any spouse, may very well make agreements at the time of divorce just to get the process and the marriage over with. In such a case, and under the no-fault agreement, what recourse does a spouse have upon reflection to apply for an adjustment of the divorce settlement? What hope does a spouse in this situation have of obtaining that she or he should have had at the time of the divorce? Such a spouse cannot explain to the reviewing judge that there were circumstances at the time of the divorce—the severe mental anguish, even fear that prevailed—that acted against the spouse's best interest. The divorce was no-fault.

There were no such fears or anguish. As far as the court is concerned, there was simply no misconduct.

We are all very pleased, I am sure, with the recent news from the Minister of Justice that the provinces and the federal Government have agreed, at least in principle, to the establishment of a central divorce order register which should make the 75 per cent of obligated spouses who default on their payments think twice about reneging on their responsibilities. However, I question whether the no-fault concept will not provide, through the conditions I have mentioned, an equally convenient vehicle for the avoidance of their financial responsibilities, and thus provide for more children, and indeed for the spouse caring for the children, to become wards of the State. As well, I question how much a court at one end of the country, upon a petition to review, is going to delve into a divorce that happened at the other end of the country. What guidelines or signposts are there in the words "no-fault" which might be instruction to disregard conditions, misconduct notwithstanding, that have influenced the original presiding judge who set the awards in the first place?

It is in the area of support and maintenance that this Bill has failed. It has failed to provide the means by which to ensure that individuals have an obligation to live up to their responsibilities—responsibilities they undertook upon entering into a matrimonial union; the responsibilities of providing an adequate environment in which to raise their children. With 75 per cent of spouses who default on their obligations to provide support, the recipients—in most cases women and children—become wards of the State. In Ontario alone, over 11,000 divorced women are on the provincial welfare rolls. To pass off support and maintenance as being strictly a provincial responsibility, as the Minister of Justice stated, is simply not the answer.

The Government should have the courage and conviction throughout this Bill to address these very real concerns, to provide a clear criterion for support and maintenance orders to be awarded, upheld and enforced. The Minister of Justice should not be trying to score political points in his bid for the Liberal Party leadership by introducing a Bill that is truly inadequate. This Bill is not clear enough. This Bill is not fair enough. It is not just enough, although the Minister obviously feels it is just enough, to fulfil the promise to review the law as it now stands. There are too many unanswered questions and too many new objections raised by its provisions, not the least of which is whether it is not laying the grounds for a whole new cottage industry of mediators and experts. Consulting lawyers, as we have consulting physicians, may be called in to advise the client's own legal adviser. This certainly seems to be the inference of the addition to Section 7 that advises lawyers to advise their clients to use mediation facilities to achieve agreements, including those covering maintenance. I hope I am mistaken in this regard, because this would make the divorce process more complex and more expensive. Thus the children, whom we are trying to protect, are going to be subject to even more trauma.

In principle, I support the reduction of the time requirement for divorce to one year. In principle, I support the introduction of no-fault grounds. But let us be sure that one year means one year and no-fault is no-fault only when there is no fault or when it is amicably agreed upon.

I therefore urge the Minister to revise the provisions we have before us and to bring before us a divorce reform Bill which will help families, husbands, women and children alike through this difficult time and not add further to their troubles. I believe, Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with any great haste on this subject, that extreme caution must be exercised before making changes to an existing law which will have such a profound bearing on our individual lives and on society in general.

I hope that a complete airing will be given this Bill by all interested parties right across Canada, who would be given an opportunity to voice their concerns, and that the important questions of maintenance of a spouse and children, the division of assets, and the enforcement of such maintenance orders, will be addressed fully and completely.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. Is there anyone who wants to put a question? If there are no questions or comments, we will continue debate.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I feel certainly confident in giving this speech this afternoon. While I must confess that not every word I have uttered in the House of Commons has carried behind it all the research I might have wished, I can tell you, Sir, that, although, thankfully, I am not a first-hand expert in divorce, I have gone to the source of really deep knowledge in family law today and, as a result of that, I have these comments to make.

When I look at the key aspect of Bill C-10, it seems to be the introduction of a no-fault divorce after a one-year period of separation. The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has stated that, by reducing the required separation period from three years to one year, the adversarial approach associated with fault divorce will be greatly minimized. It is true that at present some divorcing couples are forced to have one of them take the blame for the breakdown of the marriage, and that this sometimes exacerbates an already difficult situation. However, the thrust of the proposal by the Minister misses the central reality of divorce in Canada today. The Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt) outlined very well the deficiencies which are present in this Bill, and reflected our concerns that a whole new examination be done before this Bill goes forward.

Elimination of fault grounds will not eliminate the adversarial process which is so destructive to families. Neither a three-year period nor a one-year period of separation will avoid the problems inherent in the present system unless the issues that are a corollary to the divorce itself are dealt with in a less adversarial, more humane, manner. It is necessary to distinguish between the grounds for divorce and the questions of custody of, and access to, children, property division and financial support, which must be decided before the divorce itself can be granted.

It is relatively easy to change the grounds for divorce. Reform in this area has been long overdue and, although provision might be made to retain fault grounds in circumstances where it would be unjust to force a spouse to wait a full year for a divorce, this can be done relatively easily. It takes much more courage to institute the kind of reform required to really change the way Canadians separate, divorce and then restructure their family lives today.

The adversarial approach to divorce proceedings, which is inevitably followed today, has numerous disadvantages. It is incredibly expensive. Estimates are that Canadians have spent over $500 million in legal fees over the past ten years. However, the emotional and psychological costs, both to the parents and to the children, have been even greater. Because the adversarial process forces the parties to take polarized, extreme positions, there is inevitably a winner and a loser, with the result that the parties come out of the process angry and bitter toward each other. Any possibility that they could have resolved their differences in a rational manner and continued to act as co-operative parents to their children is destroyed in the process.

How do we make the resolution of custody and financial issues less adversarial so that husbands and wives can spend less time fighting with each other and more time restructuring the family's future? I submit that there are three main ways: first, we need more precision in the law. Divorce legislation must provide concrete guidelines to the legal profession and to society, not vague statements of intent. The reason the courts are clogged with family disputes today, to the point where it can take two years to resolve all issues, is that even lawyers with the best of intentions cannot advise their clients with any degree of precision what a court will order in their particular case. The law is too general to allow any real predictions to be made.

Legislative steps have been taken to clarify the questions of cutody of, and access to, children, but provisions regarding maintenance payments, which are the subject of most court applications today, are still unclear. The objectives of maintenance payments set forth in the Bill do not begin to address the problems enunciated in the recent Supreme Court of Canada decision in the Messier case. To simply state that a maintenance order is designed to relieve any grave economic hardship is to invite future litigation.

What are the rights of the young woman with small children who does not wish to work for several years while she raises her children? What of the older woman with little education and no marketable job skills who has become financially dependent on her husband during a long marriage? Are both these women going to be required to work to fulfil a requirement of economic self-sufficiency? How is "grave economic hardship" to be defined? Is the purpose of maintenance to compensate a spouse for the dependency created by a long marriage, or simply to allow her time to become self-sufficient? If the objectives of maintenance, and the circumstances in which one spouse is entitled to maintenance, are not more clearly set out, this Bill will only result in an increase in adversarial proceedings.

Specific provisions are also needed with respect to the enforcement, as well as the criteria, of maintenance orders. As long as the law allows for a situation where 75 per cent of maintenance orders are in default at any given time, the courts will continue to be crowded with wives trying to enforce these orders. A central registry for maintenance orders, together with a stricter policy of enforcement, is clearly required. The federal Government cannot abdicate its responsibility in this regard by saying that these matters all fall within provincial jurisdiction. Joint action by the federal and provincial governments is required, and the federal Government must take the initiative in implementing these proposals.

Unless we have precision in the law, with specific proposals regarding criteria and enforcement of maintenance orders to the point where lawyers can advise their clients with some degree of certainty as to their rights and obligations, we are going to continue to see a flurry of litigation as judges are asked to interpret the law. The law should be clear enough so that adversarial proceedings are not necessary, in most cases, to resolve issues.

The second major way, Mr. Speaker, in which divorces can be handled in a simpler, more constructive manner, is through the nation-wide implementation of unified family courts. This type of court system has two main advantages. It provides husbands and wives with a single forum to settle all issues regarding their children, property and finances. The present system, which still exists in most Canadian centres, involves application to one court for custody and another court for maintenance and property orders, and still another for the divorce decree itself. This system is complex, unwieldy and very expensive, and any reform in the area of divorce must deal with this problem.

A unified family court has the added advantage that counselling services are available at three stages of the separation and divorce process. Pre-divorce counselling, when undertaken early enough, sometimes has the result of allowing people to reconcile before being caught up in an irreversible legal proceeding. Surely, this is a welcome and important aspect of divorce reform which must be encouraged. Even when the parties have decided to divorce, the counselling and conciliation services enable them to resolve all matters relating to their children, property and finances in a meaningful and constructive way. Finally, post-divorce counselling, designed to assist those parents and children for whom the divorce was a traumatic experience in dealing emotionally with the divorce and sorting out of their future, has been successful in minimizing the return to court by bitter and angry spouses bent on changing custody and maintenance orders. Again, federal and provincial co-operation is required to set up unified family courts across the country. The federal Government must be the leader in this area.

Finally and most important, Mr. Speaker, the current adversarial manner of settling the ancillary issues in divorce proceedings must be done away with through a system of mandatory mediation throughout the country. Divorce mediation is a structured process, usually involving both a counsellor and a lawyer, whereby these professionals help a divorcing couple work out problems regarding their children, property and finances without going to court. It is a time limited, practical process which focuses not on past wrongdoings but on future life goals for all family members. Particular attention is paid to the needs of the children. Whereas the traditional adversarial system fragments the family by focusing only on such questions as "What can I get?" or "How can I get even?" the mediation process forces the husband and wife to concentrate on their children's interests as well as their own. In short, divorce mediation is a rational, commonsense alternative to the adversarial process.

Although it is fairly new in Canada, divorce mediation has been an accepted way of resolving disputes for some years in the United States. An article which appeared in the Wall Street Journal some time ago reported on the two-year wait in family courts for hearing contested divorces. The solution advocated by one judge cited in the article was to get divorce out of the court system. The judge said that it is the ideal thing for mediation. The article went on to describe one American lawyer who refused to represent in the traditional way the parties involved in a divorce. Instead, he acted as a mediator, encouraging his clients to work out their own solutions to custody, property and maintenance problems. These matters, he maintained, were too important to be left to what he described himself as "a stranger in a black robe".

As the Canadian divorce rate increases, we must inevitably adopt the same approach to mediation as we now see growing more common in the United States. Most states have a no fault divorce. Mediation has been a natural outgrowth of that development. Studies show that in those states where mediation has been made mandatory, parties reach their settlements in a short period of time and at a fraction of the cost of court proceedings. Mediated settlements are also much more likely to last, minimizing the need for variation in the applications in the future. More important, husbands and wives are able to continue dealing with each other as parents and the children adjust to the separation much more readily.

Unfortunately, Sir, the sole reference to mediation in the proposed Bill creates a duty which is likely to become a mere formality. A clause of this Bill states that a lawyer must, in the absence of any real prospect of reconciliation, inform his client of the mediation facilities known to him which might help the parties negotiate corollary matters. While this legislative recognition that mediation has a role to play in the divorce process is welcome, the duty created by the Bill is not for a divorcing couple to seek mediation, but simply for lawyers to advise their clients of any mediation facilities known to them. The problem with this is that many lawyers are not in favour of mediation. That is the truth of the matter. This is not simply because it will reduce their incomes, but because they have been so strongly schooled in the adversarial process that they are reluctant to relinquish control to a mediator. They are also largely unaware of what mediation entails and how it works in practice. Thus, they have no real interest in or knowledge of the mediation facilities in their community and are not likely to recommend them strongly to their clients. Many lawyers now comply with the requirements of Section 7 of the present Divorce Act to inform clients of marriage counselling and guidance facilities only in a very cursory manner, perhaps assuming that by the time the client walks into their office, reconciliation or counselling is no longer appropriate.

Lawyers who may be in favour of mediation may not practise in an area where mediation facilities exist. These facilities are now found mainly in large Canadian centres, primarily in Toronto. Mediation must be made available to all divorcing persons, wherever they live in Canada.

The question of the cost of mediation must also be considered. Professional mediators charge fees of at least $60 an hour. Their services may not be available to all persons, particularly where a provincial legal aid plan is paying for the service. The Minister of Justice has expressed the hope that the money saved by the provinces through streamlining the actual divorce proceedings will be ploughed back into mediation and conciliation services. However, there is no guarantee that this will be done. Funds also need to be set aside for the training of professional mediators, for the education of the public and of the legal profession as to the benefits of mediation, and for the establishment of court and community mediation facilities.

The public is, by and large, in favour of mediation. Those mediators already in practice report a large number of inquiries from members of the public interested in finding out more about mediation. However, legislative acknowledgement of mediation, in more than just an offhand way, together with public seminars on the topic, are needed to convince those individuals with sufficient funds to litigate and those who feel they will obtain a better result in court to undergo mediation.

Funds must also be made available to train more professional mediators. Provincial associations of family mediators have begun to codify standards and ethics for divorce mediators, and courses designed to train mediators in accordance with those standards have been developed in major centres. However, more funds are required to make these courses available right across the country. Much more time and money must be devoted to educating lawyers about mediation. Because most divorcing couples now visit a lawyer before any other professional, that person has enormous influence over the way the divorce will be handled. If the lawyer does not advocate mediation, chances are the case will be handled in the traditional, adversarial way.

Law schools have begun to incorporate interviewing and counselling courses into their curricula. Mediation is now being taught to lawyers at the bar admission course level. However, lawyers already used to practising in the adversarial way are sometimes threatened by mediation. They are afraid that it will undermine their years of training and destroy their livelihood. These lawyers must be taught that they have a vital role to play in the mediation process, either by working in conjunction with the other lawyer and a non-lawyer mediator, or by acting as mediators themselves.

Studies in the American states, where mediation has been going on for some years, show that it is most successful when carried out by a lawyer-counsellor team. This interdisciplinary approach is a recognition of the fact that divorce is both a legal and an emotional problem and that the parties are better able to handle their divorce in a constructive manner when both these issues are addressed. A legal resolution which ignores the client's psychological needs is as inappropriate as a psychological resolution which conflicts with the client's legal needs. Lawyers do not usually have the psychological awareness and interpersonal communication skills necessary to mediate custody and access issues. A mental health professional trained in this area, with expertise and experience in dealing with children, can more easily help the parties come to an agreement on these issues. However, the mental health specialist is rarely trained in the law, and the parties need a lawyer's advice about property and financial settlements. By working together, Sir, the lawyers and the counsellor can help the parties arrive at a total settlement which resolves all their problems.

In conclusion, these are my three suggestions for reform: greater precision in the law, unified family courts, and mandatory mediation. They work together.

Only when the provisions of the law are set out with sufficient clarity that lawyers can predict the outcome of a given case with some certainty, will both lawyers and individuals be more accepting of the mediation process. Unified family courts will provide the framework for divorcing couples to obtain both the counselling and the legal advice they need to settle their case.

There is a profound need in Canada today for the humanization of our divorce system. This will not be accomplished by providing for no-fault divorce and tinkering with other reforms. These reforms must be set out clearly in any divorce legislation, if we are to reflect the reality of what is happening when thousands of couples divorce each year. Otherwise, our present system of settling divorce problems through expensive, time-consuming and contentious litigation will only continue, and the fact that we have no-fault divorce in this country will not stop the destruction of family life as we know it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. He made a very excellent and thought-provoking speech. I am disturbed by the fact that this Bill was drafted by lawyers when we should have had the Bill that had input from family and marriage counsellors. That was one of the positive suggestions made by the Hon. Member who just spoke.

Given the fact that I agree wholeheartedly that if there is to be no-fault divorce there must be some form of mandatory mediation, what has been the experience in other jurisdictions in terms of the success ratio of this mandatory mediation and what is the time-frame involved? In fact, is there a time-frame imposed by the courts for the mediation process?

Mr. Roche: I was thinking of this Bill in relation to the Bill which we debated earlier today. The point was made at that time that if input had been made into the preparation of that legislation by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, it would have assured a much wider and a more contemporary approach, and the Bill would have been improved prior to its being presented to us. Similarly, the Hon. Member mentioned the question of mediators. I believe that this Bill was drafted in the confines of the Justice Department and did not have sufficient input from mediators. I suggest that this raises a much larger question about how legislation comes to the House before Members have an opportunity to see it, especially those Members who are on committees that are relevant to the legislation to be introduced. Those Members who have the expertise and appropriate background would be able greatly to shorten the time needed for debate at second reading because of the input that could be given at the pre-presentation stage. That would certainly enable the House to move on to a one-day debate on second reading, provided that that input had been made in a parliamentary way.

I believe that the research and surveys show that where there is mandatory mediation in those jurisdictions where it applies, there have been significant improvements in reconciliation. Furthermore, the savings in costs that would have otherwise been used in court proceedings can be used to train more mediators. Not only is there an economic benefit at that level, there is a much greater human benefit in helping families to stay together.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question with respect to mediation services. Could the Hon. Member indicate from his reading whether the mediation services are provided at public expense, or would it be by psychologists holding themselves out as professionals at the street level? Would they be triggered by the law after a divorce petition had been issued, or would it be mandatory to have a certificate from a mediator before a person issued the petition? Could the Hon. Member tell me what the practice is in the United States?

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the payment for mediation services, I believe it should be done at both levels. There should be public money available for the services and there should also be private payment by the couples concerned. In this respect, I think there needs to be a very detailed study made into how this applies to other jurisdictions so that we could advance the concept of mandatory mediation.

I have experienced a great deal of resistance even among those who are on the Justice Committee who, because of their legal background, do not believe that conciliation has a structured process in the legal proceedings. Until they improve their own understanding of this, we will not be ready to ascribe the whole question of costs.

In answer to the Hon. Member, my personal opinion is that the costs should be borne both publicly and privately. I think the destruction of family life and the resulting divorce is a societal matter and not only a private concern. I think there is a great deal about marriage today, about its input into society and how it strengthens society, that has been lost by current standards. As to when this would be done with respect to the decree, the conciliation process should take place before.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the Hon. Member for the very careful and thoughtful presentation which he made today. With respect to the idea of mandatory mediation, there have been suggestions that there ought to be some consideration given to the feasibility of premarital counselling. Has the Hon. Member given any consideration to this in the discussions and research in which he has engaged?

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I have believed for some time that the divorce rate in our country would be lower if more attention were paid in a structured sense to premarriage instruction. This is also a controversial question which concerns, among other things, the rights of people.

We have lost sight of the marriage contract as a centrepiece of our society. As a result, there are huge manifestations and repercussions from that in our society. Therefore, the commitment of two people to stay together to weather the storm that inevitably enters any marriage is weakened to the extent that the centrality of the societal importance of it was not understood at the very beginning.

That brings us directly to premarriage counselling. Religions throughout our society have always advocated premarriage instruction. They do not always have the facilities to do so. While I would not suggest that it should only be religions that have this right, I believe that if there were greater fostering and a deeper understanding through the mediation process of the commitment of marriage and its contituation as a societal contract, there would then be a greater understanding of the need to enter into this contract. There would be a better understanding that society assumes its own responsibility for financing it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no further questions or comments, we will proceed to debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-10, the Divorce Bill, has the appearance of a reformed Bill. However, it does very little to reform the way society faces divorce in this country. It probably makes one important reform, a reform that has long been part of the New Democratic Party policy, that marriage breakdown is the sole grounds for divorce. Otherwise, this Bill is grossly deficient, particularly in the area of maintenance, particularly when it might worsen the economic situation of women, especially those who are long-term homemakers who face divorce.

• (1550)

There are many amendments within the federal jurisdiction that we would like to see introduced in this Bill. They also involve other pieces of legislation within the jurisdiction of the federal Government. Not only are we limited because this Bill deals just with the Divorce Act, but we think this is a particularly good time for the federal Government to look at the whole procedure and make some broader changes to the legislation. It would be interesting to put before this House, something which has probably been done before and will be done again, some quotations and items that have been put to the committee studying divorce. For instance, the Canadian Advisory Council on the status of Women, on January 20, 1984, said:

> —the dignity conferred by non-adversarial divorce proceedings must be undermined by economic losses that could easily come about if fair and effective support enforcement procedures are not explicitly made into law.

This is a direct reference to some of the needs for changes in the Divorce Act. The Law Reform Commission of Canada's report on family law, Enforcement of Maintenance Orders, 1976, had this statement:

> Reform involves two courses of action. First there must be an effort by government in Canada to improve individual laws and practices that deal directly with maintenance enforcement. Second, the whole body of marriage breakdown law must be thoroughly re-shaped. It is as much the traditional fault-and-adversary foundation of this law as it is the particular deficiencies in enforcement techniques that account for the appalling record of non-payment of maintenance obligations in Canada.

Bill C-10 deals with only half of the problem or less than half of the problem. The Minister in the introduction of this Bill suggested that the Bill involved broad, revised and comprehensive measures on maintenance. The Minister claimed that this Bill goes as far as the federal Government can possibly go, especially in terms of maintenance and its enforcement. But that is not true. One of the things that needs to be explored in committee is how far and in what areas the maintenance procedures can be strengthened.

In dealing with this Bill, Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to support it on second reading, but we do intend to try to bring before the committee a large number of possible changes and an appeal to the Government to take a broader look at the needs of people facing divorce in Canadian society.

I would like to spend the next few moments going over the Bill based on broad principle and pointing out where there are some areas which the Government and which we as a Parliament need to look at in an attempt to make it a much better Bill than it already is.

First, marriage breakdown as the sole ground for divorce is probably the most welcome provision in the divorce Bill. Making marriage breakdown the sole ground for divorce has been our Party policy since 1967. It has been a position that has been supported by a number of churches since about that time, or even before then. No-fault divorce, as it is sometimes called, is supported by most women's groups, social service agencies and many churches. Again, I would like to quote from a brief of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women which was presented to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) last year. This is what we find in it:

> Marriage must be recognized as an equal partnership entered into voluntarily by a woman and a man. Once one of the parties has decided that the partnership is not working, the relationship is clearly ended and no legal rule will make it work. That spouse should be able to declare that the marriage has broken down, and that declaration should be regarded as sufficient to prove the breakdown. Proof of separation or fault should not be required.

I do not necessarily agree with that position, but it is a position of a very active group of women who have spent a considerable amount of time taking care of what they consider to be the major areas of welfare that need to be guarded for women particularly. Right now we have a huge backlog of court cases. Quite often, because of the fault provision which is in the present Divorce Act, these cases take much longer than necessary. No-fault divorce would affect almost 90 per cent of divorce actions that come before the courts. In other words, almost 90 per cent of divorce actions are not contested in any way and consequently would fit even now under this definition of no-fault divorce or marriage breakdown. I do not particularly like the phrase no fault. I think marriage breakdown as the only ground for divorce is a much better terminology. The idea that people must publicly, and sometimes falsely, admit to committing offences such as adultery so as to speed up the legal process is abhorrent. People should not have to lie, which is the case in many situations, to expedite the process of divorce. Quite often naming a third person, who might not have been involved particularly in the breakdown but is dragged into it because of the requirements of the law—

POOLS

ADVISABILITY OF CREATING BONUS BOND DRAW

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved:

> That the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs be empowered to study and report on (1) the advisability of creating a Bonus Bond Draw to help partially finance the financial requirements of the government and to consider whether those requirements should be specifically designated and, if so, to which purposes (2) the means by which a Bonus Bond Draw could be designed to provide an added incentive to purchase and retain the bonds by means of tax-free prizes, drawn at random in the manner of a lottery.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief explanation of the bonus bond draw. The bonus bond draw would be similar to a lottery ticket draw. However, if one did not have a lucky number, the Government would pay the interest on the amount of the ticket and one could draw tax-free interest on the amount spent on purchasing the bonus bond or lottery ticket. This would mean that the Government would be raising funds from ticket purchases at an interest rate much lower than borrowing money outside of Canada.

Now I should like to refer to the purpose of the bonus bond draw. Bonus bond draws will be established to help partially finance the Government's expenditure in designated sectors. In terms of the operation of the bonus bond draw system, bonus bonds or tickets will be issued at par in values to be established and multiples thereof in face value form. Each bond will bear a number or series of numbers, each of which will represent an investment of the established rate. Bonus bonds could be purchased at banks, post offices, other local offices or established booths. Bonus bond depots will only accept cash or bank cheques for payment of bonus bond draw vouchers. These depots could act as agents of the Department of Finance in respect of bonus bond draw tickets and will hereafter be referred to as the "agents".

Bonus bonds are issued for an indefinite period. If the Minister of Finance deems it expedient, he may, by prior notice in The Canada Gazette, fix a redemption date therefor. Upon application by a holder, bonus bonds may be repaid at any time after one year from the date of purchase, except in the case of deceased persons and insolvent estates, which may obtain repayment at any time.

If a redemption date is fixed in terms of the suggestion that bonus bonds be issued for an indefinite period, provided the Minister of Finance fixes a redemption date, the capital and accrued interest on any bond not redeemed within six years of such date will be forfeited to the state.

In terms of the interest rate payable on bonus bonds, simple interest at a designated rate below the rate paid on other guaranteed investment certificates or Canada Savings Bonds will be paid yearly and will be paid only on repayment of the bonds. It will be calculated for completed months from the date of investment. If a redemption date is fixed in these terms, interest will not accrue on any bonus bond on such date.

The prize fund and prizes would be covered by the Department of Finance. It will make a contribution to a prize fund calculated at the certain percentage per annum of the total amount of the bonus bonds participating in the monthly draw for prizes. Each bonus bond will participate in each draw for the allocation of prizes from the second calendar month following the month of purchase until the draw in the first month following upon the month in which it is repaid.

Each established value bonus bond ticket which is invested has one chance of winning the prize in any one draw. A number will not qualify for the allocation of more than one prize in any one draw. The Minister of Finance may from time to time decide upon the values and numbers of prizes to be offered, depending upon the amount available in the prize fund. Draws for the purpose of allocation prizes will be made by means of a random number-generating electronic apparatus. The prizes, in values from high to low, will be allocated to the numbers in the order in which they are generated by the apparatus.

Bonus bond numbers drawn for the allocation of prizes will be published in The Canada Gazette and will be available for inspection at the offices of all agents of the bonus bond draw. Also they will be published in all major newspapers in the areas of sale.

Interest and prizes will be free from income tax. The interest on investments in bonus bonds of this issue, as well as the capital amount of prizes allocated, is exempt from all taxes payable in Canada.

Referring to other characteristics of the bonus bond lottery, I should like to indicate that they are negotiable and transferable. Mutilated or destroyed bonus bonds will be replaced by Department of Finance agents, provided that identification is possible. The Department and its agents shall be indemnified against liability to the rightful holder of the bond for any losses incurred, unless such losses result from the proved negligence or any wilful act on the part of an officer or employee. The Department of Finance may declare forfeit any bonus bond or any benefit resulting from the holding of such a bond, if such a bond is held contrary to the provisions of the terms of the draw.

Turning to the area of repayment of bonus bonds, holders of bonus bonds, or the guardians or successors in title of holders of bonds designated for the allocation of prizes, must apply for such prizes at the offices of the Department of Finance agents by completing a special form in the presence of an official, to whom the relevant bond certificate must be produced. Administration of the bonus bond draw will be carried out by the Department of Finance. In consultation with all other federal Departments, the Department of Finance would be responsible for priorizing government needs in terms of acceptable goals for bonus bond draw-generated funds.

The bonus bond draw system would be regulated by all appropriate federal and provincial guidelines. The goals of the draw would be to establish an equitable and more socially beneficial system of draws in which both government and citizens would benefit on an ongoing basis. Funds generated by the bond draw could be used for such purposes as increased established programs financing or increased federal-provincial transfer payments for designated programs.

In summary, this matter could be discussed by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. It is a method of generating funds within Canada. The Government would not have to borrow as much money abroad at such exorbitant rates as it is paying today.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) on Private Member's Motion No. 97. He touched upon several matters. First he indicated that the interest rate would be 1 per cent below that of other types of bonds. Also he mentioned that the prizes would be covered by the Department of Finance, but no mention was made of the amount of the prize or prizes. However, he suggested that the Minister of Finance should decide upon the size of these. The bonds will be negotiable and transferable. How would we follow such transactions between individuals? The holders of the bonds would have to apply to the offices of the Department of Finance for their prizes. Perhaps he is suggesting that the Department of Finance should become another lotto or institution for games of chance.

He went on to indicate that the Department should direct the receipts from these bonds into areas of greatest need. However, I fail to see how we can raise much money for Canada under this proposal. Bonus bond interest rates will be only 1 per cent below that of funds borrowed outside of Canada. Those wanting to invest funds would rather do it in a more conventional way such as through Canada Savings Bonds, guaranteed term certificates or other instruments.

We have to look seriously at the possibility of purchasing them at banks or other depots. I would be rather skeptical as to the availability of these institutions for distribution or sale, because they issue other bonds of various types.

Upon application by the holder the bonds can be redeemed at any time after one year. That would create a system very difficult to police. In essence, it would not be all that rewarding in the types of funds that could be created for other purposes.

Above all, there is a bit of irony in the sponsorship of this proposal by a member of the Official Opposition. When in government, my friends across the way signed an agreement in 1979 transferring the operations of Loto Canada to provincial hands. We heard strong statements from his colleagues in provincial governments since that time arguing that under the agreement, the federal Government should not be launching its new sports pool.

The sports pool is intended to finance a specific cause in Canada, the Calgary Olympics, which will be held in two or three years. Preparation has to start at the present time. This gives every Canadian the opportunity to contribute to something that is in direct relation to Canada, as is indicated by the name of the sports pool. They are competing to show in the olympic spirit that our athletes are among the best in the world. Having a sports pool to fund something of this type is quite different from creating another pool in order to raise revenues, for example, for post-secondary education.

I do not intend to use the provincial opposition as grounds for arguing against this resolution, but I believe the provinces are wrong in their case against federal activities in the field. It is somewhat startling when a Conservative Member flies in the face of such a determined opposition from the provincial governments, particularly Conservative governments at the provincial level. It is somewhat amusing when a Member comes back with a proposal that will supposedly raise huge amounts of money to assist us at the federal level to fund medical health care and other programs that require large amounts of money.

Perhaps that is why the resolution uses the term "bonus bond draw" rather than "lottery" to describe what is being proposed. It is still very much a lottery. It is useful to have this issue discussed by Members of the House. I hope the debate will serve to clarify thinking on a number of the issues involved. However, I do not think it would serve any purpose to ask the Standing Committee on Finance to devote time to study this matter at this point when the committee has tax legislation, bankruptcy legislation and other important issues on its plate. At the present time, the Finance Committee has a very heavy schedule. We hope that most of what it is examining will be returned to the House in time for passage prior to the summer recess.

The main weakness in the case made for these lottery bonds is that there are other avenues available to raise money for purposes such as suggested here. Some years ago when lotteries were illegal and when the main outlet for the gambling urge of Canadians was office sports pools, bingo games and the Irish Sweepstakes, there was a case to be made for Canadian lotteries that would keep our dollars at home. Today, there is hardly a need for another organized outlet to satisfy the public urge to risk a few dollars on a long-shot hope for the big prize. It is certainly not necessary for the type of funding we are talking about, as I indicated before, because we have the Consolidated Revenue Fund and the system of funding we have established over the years.

In this proposal we are not necessarily talking about a few dollars. Lottery bonds seek to entice citizens to put their savings into a bond which will pay them very little interest or at best a nominal return in hopes of winning a big prize on the turn of the lottery wheel. It is this hope which encourages them to keep their money tied up in these lottery bonds. If experience is any guide, only a handful will get a satisfactory pay-off and the rest will see the real value of their savings shrunk by inflation and, in reality, no real return on their investment.

There is one other point. Loto Canada used to provide money to young people competing in the Olympics. This was turned back to the provinces. The provinces brought in other lotteries such as the Provincial and Wintario which took away the funding which originally went to Loto Canada and was used by the federal Government to fund these events. The federal share of Loto Canada dropped off dramatically. That is why we went to the sports pool. It was because the provinces brought out new lotteries.

We are looking here at something bigger, not just a $5 or $10 ticket but a bond. Consequently, those least able to afford it would be enticed to go for the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow.

Moreover, there is not much disagreement as to where lotteries draw their support. It is predominantly from people of low or moderate means, the very people who should be encouraged to save for a rainy day or for their retirement. If we look at this scheme from the standpoint of raising public funds, it is certainly a most regressive form of taxation. The poor and the working people invest their hard-earned money in lottery bonds with no reasonable return. They live in the hope that the wheel of fortune may suddenly make them rich.

I am alarmed about this type of scheme to raise money for the proposals suggested this afternoon. I do not think the scheme can be justified as meeting some unmet public requirement for gambling. There are many alternatives. It certainly cannot be justified as a worthwhile form of investment. It cannot be justified from the standpoint of meeting some governmental need.

First, it is not needed as an additional source of borrowed funds for the government. There are no basic difficulties facing the Government in borrowing funds through the traditional types of security such as market bonds, Treasury bills and Canada Savings Bonds. Furthermore, there are no savings to be made in raising government funds through lottery bonds. The existing borrowing mechanisms operate most efficiently at minimum cost in terms of administration.

The administrative and marketing cost of lottery bonds would be substantially higher. To that, of course, must be added the cost of providing tax-free treatment to lottery prizes and perhaps to any interest paid to purchasers of these lottery bonds. Certainly there would be marketing problems. As I mentioned previously, who would sell these lottery bonds at the retail level? It has been suggested that perhaps the banks or other lending institutions would do this. Or would one buy a bond at a corner tobacco shop? I do not think that that is a reasonable alternative at all because it is much too big a proposal to be handled through a local coffee or tobacco shop. Would banks and trust companies be willing to sell securities that were in direct competition with their own savings accounts and deposit certificates? I would have to suggest that they would not be willing to do this.

There is little doubt that lottery bonds are a high-cost way of borrowing funds. If we were to even consider this proposal, there would have to be a very large series of prizes involved which, as indicated by the Hon. Member who moved the motion, would be supplied by the Department of Finance. I fail to understand why the nominal interest earnings on such bonds, earnings which go either into the prize pool or to small interest payments to purchasers, are normally much less than the return on normal market bonds or savings bonds. Usually, the interest return on lottery bonds is less than that on funds borrowed offshore, and in many cases those funds borrowed by the Government earn less than what could be yielded in other ways.

Not only are lottery bonds inefficient but they would very likely detract from sales of Canada Savings Bonds. This would be the case particularly for people with modest incomes, the people who should be encouraged to cultivate good savings habits rather than gambling habits.

I would like to point out another area that we have not yet looked at in detail, and that is, that under the Budget of February 15 and beginning in 1985, changes will be made to the registered retirement savings plans so that an individual could carry forward his credits from one year to the next until in 1988, I believe, and he would be able to set aside in excess of $15,000 a year. This can be done whether it is in cash or carried forward in credits up to an amount that is 18 per cent of his annual income.

I would suggest that a proposal such as the one made by the Hon. Member would take away from that advantage. Nothing has been mentioned as to whether or not the moneys invested in these bonds would be income tax deductible like the money invested in registered retirement savings plans. We could be adding one hardship on to another for the people who can least afford it.

When considering the problems involved in managing the public debt, lottery bonds have other drawbacks. They are open-ended and can be cashed after one year. There is no control over the amount to be sold. The Government might well feel that enough lottery bonds were outstanding and that it did not wish to raise further funds in this manner. However, it is not very easy to turn a lottery on and off.

Another problem with lottery bonds is that they are normally cashable at the option of the holder. As the Hon. Member pointed out, this could be done after one year. As Hon. Members know, that is the case with Canada Savings Bonds. A substantial porportion of government debt is in the form of savings bonds, and there has been concern about the fact that such a large share of government debt is subject to the option of being cashed on demand. The lottery bond scheme would create one more type of government debt obligation that would similarly be subject to being cashed on demand.

Another concern raised by this proposal, to which I think the House should pay careful attention, is the question of whether or not we really want to fund important services to the public on the basis of earnings from lotteries. I have already touched upon the issue of the regressive nature of lottery fund raising. It is a form of taxation which totally ignores the principle of relating taxes to an individual's relative ability to pay.

I think we should also be concerned about the proper control of government expenditures. In the case of most government run lotteries, the return on the lottery after payment of prizes and expenses is normally earmarked for particular kinds of expenditures such as those I mentioned earlier. It is often earmarked for some particular area of government services to the public or for supporting amateur sports, health care, research or perhaps cultural activities. The result is that the level of funding for those earmarked services does not depend on a careful judgment of relative priorities in our society. The amount of financial support in these areas is simply governed by how successful the lottery may be.

This might become less important if there were all kinds of financial resources available to Government. However, that is not the case. At a time of large budget deficits, can we really justify some further major step in the direction of abandoning government control over the allocation of federal spending?

In his earlier Order Paper resolution regarding this issue, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine suggested that the funds from lottery bonds be earmarked to increase federal support for provincial programs of health care, post-secondary education and other programs through the established programs financing plan. I am somewhat alarmed by the thought of going this particular route because under the Canada Assistance Plan, the Government of Canada already pays up to 50 per cent of those costs. The federal Government's share toward post-secondary education in the Province of Ontario has increased to approximately 58 per cent, and the province's share has decreased to only 21 per cent, with the students paying the other 21 per cent.

Does the Hon. Member suggest that the federal Government should increase its share of the cost of post-secondary education so that the provinces may decrease theirs even more? I do not accept that argument, Mr. Speaker. I think the provinces should pay their own share, particularly when they receive the revenues from provincial lotteries, Loto Canada, Wintario and the like. I think they should be directing more of this income toward that goal. I firmly believe that if we are to have a system of taxation in Canada that is fair to everyone, the provinces must carry their load as well. They must not decrease their share and complain at the same time that the federal Government is cutting back on its share.

The programs to which I have referred are major programs of vital importance to the welfare of all Canadians. The Government has already recognized this fact by increasing federal transfers to the provinces for these purposes, even though the federal Government does not have jurisdictional control over these programs as they are administered by the provinces. I think the provinces should carry more of the financial responsibility in that regard. That decision to increase transfers was made in a rational way with due consideration to all the other priority claims on available government finances.

Do we want to continue to decide on the funding of such important programs in such a haphazard way? I believe we must proceed in a very responsible way. If we abdicate this responsibility, do we want to leave these programs at the mercy of the vagaries of the lottery market?

I have touched upon a few of the very major drawbacks involved in adopting some kind of a lottery bond scheme, which have created very serious concerns. As yet, I have seen no public need which would be usefully served by the implementation of such a program at this time.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak briefly on this matter because it is certainly not my intention that the Bill be talked out, although I see that the Government has its bodies lined up to do just that.

Mr. McKenzie: The civil servants prepared their speeches.

Mr. Nickerson: Yes, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) says that the public servants have undoubtedly prepared their speeches, and that I do not disbelieve. I have seen that done before on many occasions, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to say that this idea is not a new one. Rather than each individual bond holder being paid a small amount of money, all of the interest payable on those bonds is put into one pool and then a draw is made to determine which of the bond holders gets a chunk of that aggregate interest. That idea has worked quite successfully, having been applied in a number of other countries.

I know that there have been bonds of this nature in Great Britain for some time. I think that on the street they are called "Ernie" bonds, but I am not certain about that. However, a slightly new twist to this idea has been added by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine in that under his scheme, a certain low-interest rate on the bonds would be paid, presumably to protect them from inflation to some degree so that the capital amount is not eroded too badly. The remainder of the interest would be put into this one pool, or one part, and the distribution of that would be decided by lots.

After having said that this is not a new idea and has been applied successfully in other countries, I would like now to go into some of the rather spurious objections raised by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson). He went out of his way to attack the mechanics of how such a system would operate. I think the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine went into considerable detail in his proposal as to how the mechanics would work, who would be the agents of the Ministry of Finance in the distribution of the bonds, and how the funds would be administered. Other countries have worked out the details of the mechanics of handling such a situation. So any objection to the scheme based on details of who are to be the vendors and by whom the money is to be handled does not hold water.

This is not a lottery in the common sense of the word. People do not dig into their wallets and fork over $10 or $20 to buy a lottery ticket and then, if they are unsuccessful, lose all that they had at risk. In this case, a person might buy a bond in the denomination of $1000, maybe a little more or maybe a little less. That capital would be protected. It would not be put at hazard. It would be protected, especially under the scheme proposed by the Hon. Member, wherein low interest payments would be made to keep up with inflation. The proposal is not in the nature of the common lottery system as we know it in Canada.

The Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex accused the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine of hypocrisy. Nothing could be further from the truth. I would venture to suggest that if there is hypocrisy prevalent in this Chamber, it is emanating from the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex. He is a part of the Government that has actively promoted lotteries in the worst sense throughout Canada. The Government is presently engaged in the new sports pool lottery. It has changed it in midstream. It is that Government which is promoting the purchasing of lottery tickets by those who can least afford them. The Government is trying to take kids' shoe money from the low-income earners of Canada and risk it in these games of chance. That is where the hypocrisy comes in. In the scheme of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, people would at least be required to have a minimum of $500, or maybe $1,000, in order to purchase one of the bonds. Only the accrued interest of that money would be at risk.

It is not the low-income earners, the poor people of Canada, who would be engaged in this type of activity, because they would not be able to afford to tie up that kind of cash. They would not have that kind of cash available. It is only the people who have been successful enough to acquire some capital and who can afford to have that capital tied up who would get into this type of activity.

We heard some other rubbish from the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex dealing with the redemption terms of the bonds. The Hon. Member who proposed the scheme again went into considerable detail on how redemption would take place; how it could be done at the option of the Government so that it could issue or take back bonds in order to help with the normal financing program of the Government of Canada. All those red herrings about redemption that were dragged into the debate this afternoon just do not make any sense.

Mr. McKenzie: I did not say we would sell them in coffee shops.

Mr. Nickerson: If we are to look at the question of gambling, especially gambling promoted by government, we cannot have it both ways. We cannot argue, as did the Hon. Member opposite, that it is bad in this case, but it is permissible in the worst type of lotteries which are actively promoted by the Government over there. If it is immoral with respect to one lottery, then it is equally immoral with respect to another type of lottery. If we are going to get into an argument about the degrees of morality, then the proposal from this side of the House—and I am going against my previous argument—would be a little bit less immoral than the proposals, or those things which have already been put into effect, by the Government of Canada. We can argue morality. Personally, I do not feel that a government should promote gambling in Canada, but we cannot have it both ways. We cannot argue on one side of the question with respect to one lottery and on the other side of the question with respect to another lottery.

I have some objection to the scheme in that I do not think a very large market might exist in Canada today for this type of proposal. I know that when it was introduced in Great Britain, there was no other similar type of gambling, except maybe for the soccer pools. So it was reasonably successful. But when there are wide varieties of avenues for gambling, it is quite possible that there might not be a large market for this type of government obligation. That does not generate in me any great objection to further study by the standing committee, as has been suggested. There is no reason why we should not study it and try to determine whether it is a worthwhile proposition.

In conclusion, I would like to go back to 1975 when I was running as a candidate for a legislative assembly, before I became involved in federal politics. One of my opponents at that time was a gentleman by the name of Colin Wyne. Part of his electoral platform was that he was going to issue bonds of this nature. He was going to call them Wyne Bonds. I do not know whether he was going to spell them "Win" or "Wyne". However, the sad point from his point of view—not so sad from my point of view—was the result that he failed to be elected. I was elected.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in responding to Motion No. 97 moved by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) this afternoon, I would like to mention first that the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) said that the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) suggested that the scheme was immoral. There was no such suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex. In my opinion, one would not have expected any such scheme to have come from the distinguished Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine.

However, I do agree with the Hon. Member for Western Arctic that the proposal is not a novel one. It has been suggested to the Government from time to time, especially by those attracted to similar lottery bond schemes in other countries, particularly in Britain. The idea has been considered by the Government, but it has not felt that the proposal was worthy of being put into effect. The idea, at first glance, might seem to have some attractive points. But there are some substantial weaknesses and drawbacks to the lottery bond proposal. On the whole, I do not feel that idea has enough merit to justify asking the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, as this resolution proposes, to spend the time and effort to study the question. The committee has a good deal of priority work to occupy it without adding this proposal to its agenda. This point was in fact made by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex, and it is a valid point.

I suppose that there are three main arguments which have been made in support of what we might call "lottery bonds". First, they are seen as one way, a relatively easy way, of raising government funds. Second, they seem to be viewed as another outlet for satisfying the public's hunger for gambling. Third, it is argued that they are a good way of financing some particular field of government expenditure, for example, federal transfers to the provinces. I would like to put forward my own position on the proposal. I am not necessarily in favour of continuing the movement of federal-provincial governments, or even municipal governments into the field of gambling, whether by lottery bonds or other similar lottery schemes.

Lottery bonds can be designed in a number of ways, but the basic features are pretty much the same. The bonds are of small denomination so as to appeal to people of relatively small means. They are marketed through a large number of sales outlets, rather than the established financial institutions through which normal government securities are bought and sold. Sometimes a small interest payment is provided to all investors, presumably to protect them from forfeiting too much interest income in their pursuit of the big prize. The interest earnings which are not paid to the investors are put into a prize fund, with the winners determined by lottery.

There are some particular factors which should be borne in mind. For one thing, the nominal interest return on the bonds, whether paid in part to the investors or paid wholly into the prize fund, is normally substantially less than the interest return on regular government bond issues. In Britain, the interest earned on their premium savings bonds is equivalent to about half the going rate on long-term government bonds. This is because administration costs in selling lottery bonds are substantially higher than for normal bond issues, and also because the lottery prizes are exempt from income tax.

Another feature of importance is that purchasers of lottery bonds can cash them in for repayment whenever they wish. Of course, the lottery feature is designed to discourage this and to entice holders to hold on to their bonds. But with this option available to the public, the government's management of the public debt is complicated by the possibility of having to repay some part of its debt with no prior notice. This, of course, is a feature of Canada savings bonds as well, and it is precisely that problem which has in the past caused concern to government that savings bonds should not comprise too large a proportion of public debt.

So it would be adding to this problem if we were to issue a substantial number of other bonds which could similarly be cashed at any time without notice. I should add, however, that this is probably more of a theoretical than a practical difficulty. It is not very likely that lottery bonds would provide a substantial portion of the government's funded debt, in any event.

A more important fact is that, from the standpoint of financing the government's cash requirements, lottery bonds are really not needed. There are no real problems in raising necessary funds through the normal financial instruments: market bonds, Canada Savings Bonds, and Treasury bills. The cost of borrowing funds through those traditional routes is considerably less than would be the cost of merchandising lottery bonds.

So I submit that lottery bonds cannot be justified from the standpoint of meeting the requirements of government. In fact, I think it can be argued that there could be negative effects for government debt management if lottery bonds were issued. For one thing, lottery bonds could cut into the market for Canada Savings Bonds. This point was made as well by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex, and it is well taken. The market for both would be much the same, that is, those Canadians with modest amounts of savings. However, a large proportion of savings bond investors buy these bonds primarily for income purposes. Many of these investors are retired or approaching retirement and want the highest possible income from their investment. It is not likely that this part of the market would be attracted to purchasing lottery bonds. If it were, however, I submit that the results would be pretty undesirable from a social policy point of view.

Lottery bonds raise other difficulties for government debt management. There are inherent problems in mixing the concepts of a lottery and a bond. Not all Canadians are skilled and sophisticated when it comes to their investments. We saw this a few years ago in the widespread misunderstandings and confusions which surrounded the question of the perpetual bonds which the Government of Canada had issued in the 1930s. People misunderstood the nature of that bond issue, and a number of investors were disappointed. One feature of lottery bonds is that they do not usually carry a maturity date. That fact alone could create problems of misunderstanding. And I am sure that many Canadians would be confused as to the differences between lottery bonds and savings bonds. So I believe there are some potential problems in a lottery that masquerades as an investment. For a good many reasons, it would be best not to mix the two.

I would like to speak for a moment, Mr. Speaker, about the social issues. I suggested at the outset of my remarks that some people have viewed lottery bonds as a useful outlet to satisfy the public's gambling impulse, apparently a very strong impulse. That might have been a valid argument not many years ago before the proliferation of official lottery schemes across Canada. However, I do not think it can be claimed that there is any shortage of opportunities for Canadians to give expression to their urge to get rich quick in a big lottery killing. It is also fair to say that there are no shortages of ways in which Canadians can save and invest their moneys today. Banks, trust companies, credit unions and other financial institutions are competing for the public savings. One of the primary social objectives of Canada Savings Bonds has been to encourage Canadians with modest means to establish good savings habits. That is probably one of the important factors behind the very high savings rate which we have experienced in Canada. Lottery bonds would encourage Canadians to speculate rather than to save.

For Canadians who put their savings into lottery bonds, the vast majority could suffer a significant decline in the real value of their savings and little, if any, flow of income. Lotteries provide big wins to only a handful of hopeful purchasers. This may not be too serious if it were a question of lottery tickets of only a few dollars. However, it could be a grave social problem if it were a matter of $100, $500 or $1,000 bonds. The cost in social terms could be severe unless there were a relatively low limit on the total amount of savings which an individual could invest in lottery bonds.

It is sometimes suggested that the experience of the premium savings bond scheme in Britain could be duplicated in Canada. However, I do not think the two situations are similar. In Britain there is only one national lottery scheme, the premium savings bond plan, although there are a number of sports pools which involve relatively small wagers. Here in Canada there are a number of national and provincial lottery plans which attract substantial amounts of funds from large numbers of Canadians. It is likely that a lottery bond scheme in Canada would meet much stiffer competition than does the British plan.

There are some practical problems as well in administering a lottery bond scheme. It would mean setting up a special bureaucracy to handle these bonds. They would be so different from normal government bonds that I do not think the Bank of Canada administration would be appropriate.

There are marketing questions as well. It is one thing for your corner tobacco shop to handle $2 or $5 lottery tickets. It is quite another matter to contemplate that shop handling bond sales of $100, $500, $1,000 or more. I have doubts whether banks and other financial institutions would want to serve as marketing outlets for this kind of product which would be competing directly with their savings accounts.

The idea of earmarking the funds raised through lottery bond sales for some particular field of government expenditure raises some concerns. This approach implies that the level of expenditures in this chosen field is determined, not by the relative priority or importance of the government service which receives the lottery money, but rather by the element of chance, how successful the lottery sales might be.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, in the earlier version of his resolution which appeared on the Order Paper, suggested using lottery funds for such purposes as increasing federal transfers to the provinces for established programs financing, or other designated federal-provincial programs. I suggest that these programs are of such an important nature that their funding should not rest on the uncertain base of lottery plan funding. I appreciate that this earlier resolution spoke of the Department of Finance being responsible for setting priorities for allocating funds from the lottery bonds. That is precisely the Department's role when it comes to government expenditures out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

I recognize that there has been a tendency to earmark funds from other lotteries for particular areas such as sports, cultural development and the like. I do not think it is wise to extend this practice more broadly into such important areas as federal-provincial financing of medical, hospital or educational services.

The mention of federal-provincial programs raises another question. What would the provinces say about this lottery bond proposal? Has the Hon. Member sponsoring this resolution looked at the provincial reaction to the new federal sports pool? Provincial ministers have been most vigorous in opposing this federal initiative. They claim it runs contrary to the agreement with the provinces, which was made by the former Conservative Government in 1979. I do not agree that the provinces have a valid objection. However, I am rather surprised to see this kind of proposal from the Hon. Member opposite.

In conclusion, I submit that for a number of reasons, Mr. Speaker, we would not be justified in asking the standing committee to consider this idea. Briefly, the scheme is open-ended and it would be difficult to control the amount of lottery bonds outstanding. Second, it would raise other problems in the management of the public debt, including creating competition against Canada Savings Bonds among small savers. There are no problems in raising funds through traditional methods, so there is no reason, on financial grounds, for introducing a lottery bond proposal. The cost to Government of lottery bonds would not be significantly lower than that of borrowing through traditional securities, when we consider all the additional costs of administration and the cost of tax exemption for lottery winnings. Finally, there are many alternative lottery schemes available to Canadians who want to gamble, and this scheme is not needed for the purpose. I would personally not support the proposal.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend a bit of time discussing the motion which is before us today. I have great difficulty with it. I, like my colleagues on this side of the House, and I am sure my colleagues on the other side of the House, have some difficulty with the notion of a form of gambling as a mechanism for raising public funds for public purposes. Most of the lotteries in the country, Mr. Speaker, have responded to a need. Gambling will go on in the country, and the Government is providing, at least within the context of gambling, a fair and honest outlet for that kind of behaviour. That is fine.

In most cases, Mr. Speaker, the funds which are raised through that type of vehicle are used for purposes in addition to those which we would consider to be essential public services. Whether the funds are from Wintario, Lottario, the lotteries in Quebec, 6/49 or the sports pool, they are being used for purposes which might not otherwise be funded through tax revenues. Perhaps the taxpayers would not consider those purposes to be of sufficient importance to allow themselves to be taxed to finance them. As a result, forms of pools, lotteries, and other vehicles have been established to raise money over and above the moneys raised through the tax system to fund what we consider to be essential public services.

The Hon. Member's motion suggests that the funds to be raised through a lottery bond vehicle could be used to fund post-secondary education, medical care and so on. I would object very strenuously to that, Mr. Speaker. The day we reach the point when we are willing to finance essential public services such as health care, post-secondary education and perhaps even adequate pensions for our elderly, with a gambling vehicle is the day that our tax system and fiscal policy will have reached an all-time low.

It should be clear that essential public services should be paid for through funds raised via an equitable and fair tax system. We should all bear the burden in a fair and equitable manner for these essential public services which we believe governments should provice to the Canadian public. I think the objective is quite clear that the enticement would be to lower middle-income Canadians as opposed to Canadians at large. It does not seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that we need to find some other new and fancy way of trying to entice these people who can least afford it to provide some subsidization to Canadians at large for post-secondary education, medical care and so on.

Mr. Speaker, I disagree with this approach. I do not think the subject matter of this motion should go to the Finance Committee. We have much more important things to do than to consider this proposal.

NATIONAL REVENUE

ALBERTA TAXPAYER'S CLAIM AGAINST DEPARTMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have several times brought to the attention of the Minister, in this House and by letter, the plight of a constituent of mine who lives in Cochrane, Alberta. He paid $1,000 on an instalment basis to the Department of National Revenue through the Mercantile Bank in Calgary, on October 14, 1975. The Minister admits the money came to the Department, it was not credited to this man's account, and about that time it sent a $1,000 cheque back to the Mercantile Bank in Calgary because of a lack of identification. The bank says it is agreed by all that my constituent paid the $1,000 in October, 1975, and that the bank took another $1,000 to pay this same account out of this man's bank account, by order of Revenue Canada, because it had not been credited to his account.

The bank goes on to say there is evidence that the man paid the $1,000 and the Department does not have evidence it paid the $1,000 back to the bank. The bank says if it had some evidence of that, the bank would make it good. But the Department cannot come up with that evidence because the Minister says the departmental records have been destroyed. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this man should not be left holding the bag.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

OFFICIAL RESIDENCE RENOVATION COSTS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have always wondered what the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party meant by cutbacks. He has said time and time again that cutbacks are absolutely necessary, adding that if he were to form the Government, he would make radical cuts in spending, wherever and whenever that would be necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to say that at the very first opportunity, the Leader of the Official Opposition did not hesitate to spend our tax money very generously. Cutbacks were certainly not on his mind when he spent nearly $150,000 in public money on renovating, redecorating and a few coats of paint at Stornoway, the official residence of the Leader of the Opposition.

Predecessors of the present Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party showed Canadians they took cutbacks more seriously. Mr. Speaker, Canadians cannot afford to move this free spender from Stornoway to 24 Sussex Drive, the official residence of the Right Hon. Prime Minister. However, perhaps the Progressive Conservative Leader can afford to spend this kind of money on his residence because he already knows he will be there for a long time. He has signed a long term lease, unless the long knives of the Progressive Conservative Party do their work once more.

INVESTITURE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL SAUVÉ

CONGRATULATIONS TO FORMER MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, those of us who have the honour to sit in this Chamber develop a special kinship for one another regardless of party affiliation. We take deep personal interest in one another, and that continues even when we leave this Chamber. Never, Sir, were those ties more deeply felt, never was that interest more deeply evidenced than this morning when we saw one of our former Members elevated to the highest office in the land as Governor General. We who came here in the class of '72 are particularly proud that one of our number should be so designated.

Her Excellency, Madam Sauvé, takes with her to that high office a wealth of experience and accomplishment which has distinguished her public service to Canada.

I said that Members of the class of '72 are happy to see this great honour conferred on one of their group. Speaking as well, if I may, on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, since we both became Members of the House at the same time as Mrs. Sauvé, I must say that we are particularly pleased. We are proud of the fact that she is the first woman to be appointed to this very distinguished post. We are convinced she will approach this new task with wisdom and fortitude, and we wish her the very best.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROVIDE SUPPLEMENTARY AID FOR QUEBEC NORTH SHORE

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government has done a great deal for people in northern communities, especially in the last two years since the iron ore slump hit the North Shore. However, I do wish the Government would continue to look at what is happening to people in Schefferville, Gagnon and Fermont, and in Labrador City and Wabush next door to my own constituency, because there are people who have been laid off recently and who have yet to receive all the benefits agreed to by Iron Ore. They should receive some additional assistance from the Government. Mr. Speaker, it is often said that our recovery is being launched by the private sector. I must say that on the North Shore, the private sector caused the problem. I would like to see the Government make an additional effort to provide assistance, not to companies that are already being helped through the statutory measures of our programs but to the people directly affected by the recession.

HUMAN RIGHTS

BRITISH COLUMBIA LEGISLATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, last week the Government of British Columbia passed a Human Rights Act which represents a big step into the Dark Ages for British Columbians. This Act violates several international conventions previously agreed to by the Government of British Columbia.

Under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination Against Women, Canada has agreed to educate the public about racial and sexual discrimination. The proposed new Human Rights Council in British Columbia will be unable to enforce existing legislation against racial discrimination and discrimination against women.

This new legislation drops the clause prohibiting discrimination "without reasonable cause". By dropping this clause the provincial Government is violating the spirit of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Since the federal Government is aware of these violations and some Ministers have rejected the provincial Government's changes to the Human Rights Act, I would like to call on the Prime Minister to have a serious talk with Premier Bennett. These violations should be presented to the United Nations tribunal by the appropriate body.

INVESTITURE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL SAUVÉ

EXPRESSION OF GOOD WISHES

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, as already mentioned by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), today Canadians witnessed the investiture of the Hon. Jeanne Sauvé as the 23rd Governor General of Canada. After a lengthy illness we are pleased that God gave her the health and the strength to assume the highest office of our country. By accepting this office, her Excellency has made today a great day for all women in Canada, and a great day for Canada itself.

Her Excellency has already drawn our attention to two serious issues facing Canada and the world, the problems of our youth and the problems of Third World people who find themselves in countries less fortunate than our own. On behalf of the Constituents of Parkdale-High Park I wish Her Excellency, the Hon. Jeanne Sauvé, continued health and strength so that, with our help, she can find solutions to the problems facing Canada and the world.

VIA RAIL

TORONTO-PETERBOROUGH-HAVELOCK—CALL FOR RESTORATION OF SERVICE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on an important matter relating to the cancellation of VIA Rail passenger service between Toronto, Peterborough, and Havelock. Since its very questionable termination in 1981, we in the Official Opposition have continually criticized the decision to terminate the most cost-efficient route in Canada. In fact our opinion was fully endorsed by the Railway Transport Committee of the CTC which recommended that:

—pending the outcome of this further review, the Toronto-Havelock service shall not be discontinued.

The reason for cancelling this service, we are told, was based upon insufficient funds and the need for restraint. It will, therefore, come as quite a surprise to learn that the Grand Trunk Corporation of Detroit, a subsidiary of Canadian National, is attempting to buy control of the bankrupt Milwaukee Road Railway which has net liabilities of approximately $250 million. Its main competitor to buy this line is the Soo Line of Minneapolis, which in turn is controlled by Canadian Pacific.

It is indeed interesting that the railways which have no money for functioning Canadian lines have sufficient bankrolls to bid for bankrupt American rail lines. It is deplorable and fiscally irresponsible for two Canadian railways to compete for the acquisition of foreign owned companies while simultaneously denying Canadians the right to rail service, such as the Toronto-Peterborough-Havelock line.

PIPELINES

THREAT TO COMPLETION OF ALASKA HIGHWAY NATURAL GAS PIPELINE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, Members of Parliament will recall some three years ago granting authority for the pre-build section of the Alaska Highway natural gas pipeline, that part designed to exploit Canadian gas reserves for the benefit of American markets, on condition that the line would be constructed in its entirety at some future date. Members will remember the so-called iron clad guarantees of the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the gentleman who now holds the portfolio of Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Well, it now appears that the line, in all probability, will never be built.

Yukon Pacific Corporation, headed by Walter Hickel, former Governor of Alaska, has now formally applied for permission to construct a trans-Alaska line to sell Prudhoe Bay gas to Japan. The end result is likely to be that Canada supplies the "lower 48" with cheap Canadian gas, while the Americans sell their own Alaskan gas to Japan at much higher prices. So much for the iron-clad guarantees, so much for the national energy policy, and so much for the guideless ex-Minister of Energy and the discredited Liberal Government which he serves.

MEDICAL CARE

HEALTH CARE IN ALBERTA—CONSIDERATION OF PRIVATE SECTOR ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express concern about recent developments in Alberta. We have learned that the Progressive Conservative Government of Alberta is considering contracting out the administration of health care in that province to the private sector.

We have just gone through a process where we had a national consensus in favour of all principles of medicare. In the interests of that consensus, and in the interests of the future of medicare, I call on my Progressive Conservative colleagues to the right to condemn what their buddies in the Alberta Government are contemplating with respect to the future of medicare. Let us hear from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney), and from the Tory health critic, that they do not want to see the privatization of health care in Alberta. Then we will be able to believe them and what they had to say about the Canada Health Act and the future of medicare. Or is this a portent of the kinds of things we will see if and when we have a Conservative Government in Canada?

Oral Questions

FINANCE

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On February 10, 1980, he said, as reported in The Toronto Star, that it was his belief we could manage the economy in a way which would allow us to have lower interest rates, and that he thought "we can have greater independence in interest rate policy". Since then the prime rate went to 22.75 per cent. It was later down to 11 per cent, and it has started back up. It is now 12 per cent.

Last week, on May 10, the Prime Minister stated "that when the basic rate in the U.S. goes up it is impossible for Canadian rates not go up . . . we cannot divorce ourselves from the American money markets."

Which statement of the Prime Minister is the true and correct one—his election bait statement, or the latest one? What has happened to change the Prime Minister's mind about Canada having greater independence in interest rate policy? Why is there this about-face in the last four years?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I explained last week in answer to questions, I believe from the Hon. Member's Party and members of the other Party, that the reason we cannot be completely isolated from the United States is that we have a free money market in Canada, as there is in the United States. If Canadian people who save their money want to obtain a market rate and the market rate goes up, they will obviously lend their money for higher interest rates. What I was explaining—and I will explain it again to the Hon. Member; he may not have been listening—is that there is no way without controls that the Government can force Canadians to lend their money to the Canadian Government, or to other Canadians, at a lower rate of interest than they could obtain in the United States.

What would a Canadian saver, to whom we would say: "Be a nice fellow. The Member from Newfoundland would love you more if you were prepared to lend your hard-earned savings at 8 per cent rather than at 10 per cent or 12 per cent", say to the Hon. Member from St. John's, Newfoundland? He would say: "Why shouldn't I lend my money for the market rate? If you in Canada do not want to borrow my money—your banks, or your Government through your savings bonds—at the going rate, I will go to the United States, lend my money there, and get more money for it".

In simple terms, or in terms the Hon. Member can understand—and I see that he is nodding in assent, he understood this—this is why it is impossible, without controls, to be completely independent of American money markets. I know the Hon. Member would not want us to go to controls, therefore that is my answer.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I read every word of the Prime Minister with great attention, because he is a vanishing specimen. He will soon be gone. My question to the Prime Minister is not on what he now understands. It is to ask why he deceived the Canadian people four and one-half years ago. Why did he not then give the explanation he gives us now? The Prime Minister said then that we could have greater independence in interest rate policy. Now he is saying we can have no independence. Is it because of the incompetence of the Prime Minister and his Government that the chance for independence has gone?

Let me put this to the Prime Minister. Last Thursday he said that Members should understand that interest rates in Canada are a direct reflection of interest rates in the United States. If he did not understand that in 1980, after 12 years in power, and told the Canadian people the opposite, how can he now expect Members to understand the opposite of what he told and promised the Canadian people?

Does the Prime Minister now say we have no influence over our economic destiny? Is this where the Prime Minister is proposing to lead Canadians after 16 years of their putting trust in him, saying we have no options?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not proposing to lead the Canadian people. The Hon. Member just said that I was a vanishing species. Therefore, I will not be leading them.

If he asks about whether it is possible to have a measure of economic independence from the United States, the answer is yes. In the 1980 campaign we pointed out several ways in which the Government would continue to assert its independence over its economic destiny. We did this with many measures, not all approved by the Opposition. For instance, in the area of foreign investment we know that foreign investment cannot come here, even with higher interest rates or higher returns promised to its shareholders, if it is not cleared by the Foreign Investment Review Agency. We know the same is true in the area of banking, and in the area of investment in financial institutions. There are areas where we can be independent, where the interest rates and the dividends and so on can be made to differ by the Canadian Government.

Once again, without over-all controls we cannot isolate ourselves completely in every area from the American market. The example I gave last week is true for every country in the world, particularly every industrialized country. They are seeing the value of their currency devalued because citizens of their countries, like citizens of Canada, are sending their money to the United States where they can get higher interest. Even in the case of the less developed countries, the Third World, they are being very heavily penalized by high interest rates in the United States. It is causing them to have to pay world-wide interest for their borrowings in the United States. They are paying high interest rates because of the interest rate prevailing for the American dollar.

SECRETARY-GENERALSHIP OF ORGANIZATION FOR ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, we have heard the Prime Minister admit that he is beaten, that he is whipped by these economic problems. The Prime Minister is now asking the OECD nations to accept this country's Minister of Finance as the new Secretary General of the OECD. We know that the United States is supporting a French diplomat, anyone but our Minister. What are the chances of the Canadian Minister, in the view of the Prime Minister? Will the Prime Minister explain why the OECD should accept a Minister from the Prime Minister's Government in view of this Government's tragic economic failures? Is it that the Government wants to spread the misery by sending—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has concern about this as a supplementary flowing out of previous questions. A supplementary should come out of an answer previously given. This appears to be raising the question of an appointment.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I will rephrase my final supplementary.

• (1425)

In view of the Government's record regarding interest rates and the economy in general, why does the Prime Minister have the audacity to ask the OECD to accept a failed Minister of Finance as its new Secretary-General?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggests that I am leaving because I am beat. He must surely remember December, 1979. I still command a majority in the House, Mr. Speaker. I am not beat. The Hon. Member was beaten, and his Budget was beaten. That is why they are sitting on that side of the House, and they will sit on that side for a long while. I think the reason why they will, Mr. Speaker, is because of the extraordinary pettiness and ungraciousness of the Hon. Member, supported by laughs from the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and everyone else, when they attack the desire of the Canadian Government to have a Canadian as Secretary-General of the OECD.

The Tories are unable to rise above petty politics even when it is a question of Canada's prestige abroad. They would prefer a socialist from France to a Liberal from Canada, and that is the measure of their thinking.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—CONTROL OF INDUSTRIAL EMISSIONS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. He will know that acid rain and its impact on over 90,000 Canadian lakes continue to be one of our most urgent and pressing environmental problems. He will also know that Inco, a non-ferrous smelter, is emitting approximately 2,000 metric tonnes of sulphur dioxide into the air each day. He will also be aware of the task force report which identified the financial and ultimate employment problems faced by Inco and other smelters when trying to come to grips with this emission problem.

I would like to ask the Minister if he has committed himself to the course of action that was recommended by the task force report and, if so, if there are solutions. What is he intending to do on behalf of the federal Liberal Government to control emissions in Canada today so that the lakes and the other areas of the environment that are affected by those emissions will not be affected in the five to 10-year intervening period before the ultimate solutions, which will depend upon research, will be determined?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that question is that, of course, I am committed, and we are all committed, to those reductions.

To deal with the Hon. Member's question in detail would take a fairly long answer. However, I would like to assure the Hon. Member, who shares this concern with all of us, that the report of the task force which dealt with non-ferrous industries recommends that the modernization of the non-ferrous industries proceed, with the idea of pollution reduction in mind. Thus, at the same time as those industries proceed with modernization, they will include in their plans an emission reduction program. The study is the first step in that direction. As well, it sets out a program for an industry by industry approach. As new technology is developed, the implementation of the reductions will take place.

I would invite the Hon. Member to look at the task force report as being the first step in the right direction. As well, there will be a working group of federal-provincial Ministers which will meet regularly in the months and years ahead to see to it that this program is put into place. I look forward to working with that group.

EFFECT ON NEW YORK STATE

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister will know that I and my Party have an absolute commitment to the research and development of the efficient commercial operations that are important to this industry in the long term. That, however, is a long-term solution. The Minister is talking about a delay of five to 10 years before there will be an actual reduction of emissions from those important sources.

I would like to ask the Minister if he is aware that 30 per cent of the acid rain falling on the State of New York actually comes from Canada, while only 10 per cent of it comes from the industries and the people of the State of New York. So what kind of an argument do we have, and what kind of agreement can we reach with the United States? What kind of important agreement can we reach with the United States, which must be necessary in order to control our own North American environment if we, in fact, are giving to some States more acid rain than they are giving to themselves?

• (1430)

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am faced here with two questions and I will try to answer them as quickly as I can. First of all, there is no delay implied in the study which was just published. As the Hon. Member knows, we have already in place a planned reduction of 25 per cent by the year 1990. Inco has been ordered to cut. Ontario Hydro has been ordered to cut 43 per cent by the year 1990. It has been indicated to Noranda by the Quebec Government that it should cut 40 per cent by the year 1990. However, an order by the Quebec Legislature has not yet been passed. I raised this matter with my provincial counterpart this morning.

As to the situation in New York, Mr. Speaker, of course emissions are exported on Canada's part, but there is also a phenomenal amount of tonnage which comes across our border into Canada from the south. This is why we have tried to convince the Americans to come on board, and we will continue to do so, because we have made this commitment to cut emissions by 50 per cent by 1994. We know that we need the co-operation of the Americans to achieve a safe level of emission. We must get the co-operation of an administration in Washington which prefers to carry out scientific research without really taking on the responsibility it has to face, namely, cutting emissions, as we are already doing in Canada by ordering a 25 per cent cut in emissions by the year 1990.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will attempt to recognize supplementaries later, in fairness to the parties involved. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF CORPORATE TAX STRUCTURE ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who, on Friday, was attempting to explain the Government's inaction regarding the tragic unemployment level still being faced by Canadians.

The Prime Minister and his Cabinet colleagues have indicated, time and time again, that it is the private sector they look to in terms of getting Canadians back to work. Yet many of us feel that the present tax policy, which intends to encourage the expansion of businesses, tends to favour almost exclusively the large corporate sector which, if there is expansion, tends to be capital intensive as opposed to labour intensive. Is that the Prime Minister's observation as well? If it is, why would he continue with this type of tax policy which favours the large corporate sector with its capital intensive development, at the expense of small businesses or labour intensive development?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member looks at the over-all government policy, particularly the way it was reflected in the Budget, he will remember that there was a whole series of measures, including tax measures and tax simplification measures for small businesses—not for the large businesses. There were special concessions made to the small businesses in Canada, not only in terms of the rate of income tax, corporate income tax, but also in terms of the filing of the returns. It seems to me that if the Hon. Member would look with a fair mind at the Budget which the Minister presented earlier this spring, he would see that it bears out a thesis exactly contrary to that of the Hon. Member, to wit, the last Budget was very favourable to small businesses as opposed to the large businesses.

TAXATION OF SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister refers to the simplification of the tax form, which was expected by small-businessmen. Indeed, there were some improvements, at least, which are now about to be tabled. Other than simplifying the taxes which small businesses are required to pay—that does not mean diminishing but simplifying the process—can the Prime Minister identify two or three benefits which the small business sector derived from the recent Budgets in terms of reduced taxes or tax incentives? Can the Prime Minister identify two or three benefits for us?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to send the Hon. Member a copy of the Budget and of the Minister's budget speech. However, in the very asking of the question, when he says "to simplify", the Hon. Member will remember that not only was the Minister simplifying, but he was giving a very considerable number of small businesses access to the simplified and lower rates which had not been covered before.

BUSINESS INCENTIVES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my last supplementary question will, in a sense, be a revision of my previous question. The Prime Minister likely knows that there are approximately 200 areas of assistance to business as a result of tax policy—200 tax incentives, tax breaks or tax loopholes, whatever one wants to call them. Out of those 200 tax breaks for business, about three or four apply specifically to small business. I wonder if the Prime Minister could identify simply one which relates to the small business sector, out of those 200.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member says "200", surely he must have at least 50 in his mind. Perhaps he could identify 50.

COPYRIGHT

PROVISION OF CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION MATERIAL FOR SCHOOLS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. No doubt the Minister will be aware that for the past 13 years Canada's universities and schools have been trying to obtain access to CBC broadcasting materials which could be useful in our schools and universities across Canada, for education purposes. The Minister of Communications has stated in the past that he is working in conjunction with the Minister's Department in order to find a solution to the problem, and to examine the copyright laws. Both Departments have set up a task force, and a report was to be filed. This was some time ago, and I wonder if the Minister could explain to the House what the task force has recommended in finding a solution to the problem?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not received the recommendations of the task force as yet. However, I will be consulting with the Minister of Communications, if he has indeed received that report.

PROCEDURE FOLLOWED IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications stated in 1982 that the report would be filed in the summer of 1982.

In the United States the Government has appointed an educators' ad hoc committee on copyright law to examine the problem. They have found a solution to the problem and have now reached an agreement with the TV and radio networks in the United States so that anything can be taped off-air, held for 45 calendar days, and viewed in class any number of times during the first ten days of school. This has been accomplished without any amendments to the United States copyright laws. Will the Minister investigate and find out why we cannot find a solution to this problem now? A delay of thirteen years is not acceptable.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is a solution to the problem. The Hon. Member must be aware that we tabled a white paper on copyright just ten days ago in which we look at all areas of copyright and how they should be changed. That paper has been referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture and will be examined there. I hope the Hon. Member will be an active participant because we would like to see the legislation approved, and the Act changed some time early in the fall.

NATIONAL REVENUE

BARRIE HOSPITAL FUND RAISING CAMPAIGN—REFUSAL OF TAX DEDUCTIBILITY

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister will be aware that one of his officials, Mr. Robert Young, has interfered with the fund raising efforts of the Royal Victoria Hospital in Barrie. The hospital plans to give one autographed copy of a print by Ken Danby, a well known Canadian artist, to each of 500 persons who donate in excess of $500 to the building fund of the Hospital, which would bring in the amount of $250,000.

Mr. Young has ruled that, if this is done, tax deductible receipts will not be issued. In light of the fact that his Department will collect tax on the $20,000 which Mr. Danby will receive for the original painting, and the fact that I have previously brought this up in the House and have written the Minister two letters, will the Minister now agree to reverse Mr. Young's decision and support this very worth-while cause?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I may point out to the Hon. Member that the courts have already ruled that for donations to be called charitable, no material good should be received in return.

Nevertheless, I can assure the Hon. Member that I am still discussing the issue of charitable organizations with my officials and the matter is also being discussed with the parties concerned.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, it has been three months now. I believe that if the Minister cannot reverse a decision of one of his underlings, it is proof positive again that not only is he discriminating against the taxpayer but he is discriminating against Canadian artists and Canadian hospitals which are under funded because of his Government. If this modern day Shylock will not reverse that decision and tell us he will, why does he not resign and take his place among the lifeless candidates for the Liberal leadership?

• (1440)

An Hon. Member: Bravo, bravo!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am not resigning because I am not as stupid as the Hon. Member. His argument shows, first of all, that he is ignorant of the laws of this country, and second, that he does not know the facts. Let him get his facts straight first and then argue on the basis of those facts.

[English]

HOUSING

FUNDING OF CO-OPERATIVE AND NON-PROFIT GROUPS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting for three days to ask a question of the Minister responsible for housing. I will ask it of the Prime Minister.

In the past, Mr. Speaker, the unit allocation for co-ops and non-profit housing was in the hands of the recipients by the end of February in order that work could start on the projects. We are well into May and the co-ops and non-profit housing groups are still waiting for an indication of the total number of units which will be approved this year. CMHC is stalling, and releasing funds in dribs and drabs. Can the Prime Minister tell us why the money has not been sent out to these groups? How many units are going to be approved? Would it be possible to have that amount tabled in the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister I will have to take the Hon. Member's question as notice. I do not have the answers at hand.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River on a supplementary. Does the Hon. Member for Prince Albert have a supplementary? In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has taken the question as notice, it is difficult to understand how a supplementary would be in order. However, I will concede one to the Hon. Member.

SOCIAL HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my second question is much more on policy. A large portion of the federal Government's social housing program has been—

Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has indicated he would have to take the first question as notice, it is difficult to construe this kind of a supplementary question as being in order. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert, but he cannot ask a detailed question.

Mr. Hovdebo: A large portion of the federal Government's social housing program goes to social—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River on a supplementary.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MINING INDUSTRY'S ANTI-POLLUTION MEASURES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Mines). It is supplementary to the question asked on the report on the non-ferrous metal side. It is quite apparent from the report that the Government relies almost entirely for the clean-up of our environment on industry, on the economic recovery of the mining sector, and on the discovery or development of new technology. Does the Government have any plans to accept some public commitment to clean up the environment instead of putting all the blame on the shoulder of industry, particularly at a time when the mining sector faces such an uncertain future and when the development of new technology is quite far off in the future?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the report said quite clearly that capital funds may be required. I think the commitment of the Government of Canada is quite clear too. My colleague, the Minister of the Environment, has said publicly that we are committed to a 50 per cent reduction by 1994. That is the objective which he has staked out. I concur with that and intend to assist in meeting it. The report is an analysis. It is an important first step. We must now refine the technology in order to achieve two things. The first is environmental protection and emission reduction. The second thing, which is equally important, is the efficiency and health of the mining sector itself. Knowing where the Hon. Member comes from and what his interests are, I think he would support that. I want to bear those two objectives in mind. We on this side of the House intend to do what we can to promote the achievement of both those objectives.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, no one argues with these objectives. However, rather than making any more arbitrary decisions and commitments with the provincial Ministers to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions and other harmful airborne particles, would the Minister undertake to meet with industry to ensure that the health of the industry is safeguarded against any arbitrary decisions which have been made in the past?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, that kind of meeting has taken place in great depth. The industry was very much a part of this report, feels very strongly about it, and indeed concurs with the report. I will be meeting with my colleague, the Minister of Mines, on Wednesday. I intend to raise this matter with him. This should be a tripartite effort on behalf of the Government of Canada, the provinces, and the industry.

With regard to consulting industry, I have my own advisory committee. I have met with the Mining Association of Canada already and will be speaking to them again on Wednesday night. Our commitment is to achieve the objectives in consultation with industry.

VIA RAIL

EDMONTON-VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR SPEEDY RESTORATION OF SERVICE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport, if I can get his attention. The Minister has indicated that VIA Rail service between Edmonton and Vancouver will not be restored without provincial participation. Will he indicate to the House why he does not feel that there is a legal, constitutional, and moral responsibility of the federal Government to restore that service as quickly as possible?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has put two premises to his question, both of which are wrong. I did not say that we would require them to participate in the redevelopment of a line itself. I indicated that because the major benefit of any restoration would be in the area of economic development and tourism, it would be very helpful to have the participation of local municipalities and the provinces on the economic development side of any restoration which might be contemplated. This would include such things as marketing, related tourist facilities or whatever, in order to determine how serious they were in their commitment to the economic development activity within that region. We would be prepared to adhere to our provision of rail service as long as there was a clear indication of their willingness to be a partner in the over-all program of enhancing tourism and economic development activity. That, Mr. Speaker, was the type of proposition we put forward, as opposed to the kind the Hon. Member has outlined.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, you will see why the Dodo bird and the dinosaur have more reason to survive in western Canada than this bunch across the floor. They have spent $780 million to try to save the Minister's seat, and have cut off rail transportation between the largest city in western Canada and Edmonton. Mr. Speaker, it is obscene what the Government has done to those communities. I invite the Minister to tell the House a little truth instead of a little nonsense.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can think of no one in the House who is better able to comment on Dodo birds than the Hon. Member, seeing as he has to look in the mirror at one every morning. The fact of the matter is—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands.

SOCIAL SECURITY

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—CANDIDATE'S STATEMENT ON CUTTING GOVERNMENT DEFICIT—IMPACT ON SOCIAL SERVICES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is responsible for such programs as medicare and old age Security. Last week, following the announcement by a Liberal leadership candidate that he would cut the deficit by some $15 billion, the Vice-President of the Bank of Nova Scotia said that this could only be accomplished by making major cuts to health care and post-secondary education, by putting a means test on old age pensions, and by imposing user fees for medical services. Since the Minister is supporting that particular Liberal candidate, what recommendations has she made as to which of these programs she would be willing to cut?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): That is a very bizarre question, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member, who, I thought, would accompany me at my request, knows very well that I just returned from Geneva where the World Health Organization's annual meeting was held, and from Brussels where I had the pleasure of signing the reciprocity agreement on pensions for Canadians and Belgians. I think that is going to be my answer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1450)

Miss Bégin: I think it is important to talk facts, and maybe she should check her facts, because mine are the ones I have just stated.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I realize the Minister was out of the country, and I realize she would really like to duck this embarrassing question. However, with a statement like that and the concern it is causing around the country, the Minister cannot get away from facing up to this question. She has to recognize that the very person responsible for starting this country on its ruinous deficits is now trying to put the blame on social programs.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister willing, as is the leadership candidate she is supporting, to put the elderly and low income people in the front line of attack? Is that what she is all about?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for giving me a golden opportunity to remind her and her Party that this Liberal leadership convention is about defeating the Conservatives in the next election. Every candidate for the leadership is going to be elected by some of these people, the same Canadians who have a beautiful network of social programs. This is Canada; social programs are part of our social fabric, and we will never go back on that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATUS OF WOMEN

NATIVE WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, who will no doubt be aware of the very strong concern Canadians have, especially women, for the repeal of the discriminatory Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act, and the reinstatement of native women and their first generation children. Would the Prime Minister not agree that equality for women is now entrenched in the Constitution of Canada through our Charter of Rights, and that accordingly the establishment of equal rights for native women must come first in the promised legislation so that native women will be able to take part in the evolution of native people's self-government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is stating a lot of correct facts about the Charter of Rights. Equality in every area should prevail over other laws, and that is the sense of the Charter. That is why we on this side hold that the Charter will and must prevail. The legislation itself is part of a whole movement by this Government to update its legislation so it will be in conformity with the Charter. But I would suggest that if, by chance, we could not pass the legislation—and the Government plans to do it—the Charter would still prevail.

I must point out to the Hon. Member that aboriginal rights are also part of the Charter. She is not unaware that there is a difference between the AFN, the Indian federation, and the other parties to the constitutional conference held in March on the way in which women will be given equal rights under the Indian Act. It is that debate which is taking a little bit of time. We want to assert and reassert in our legislation the principle of equality contained in the Charter, but we would prefer to do it in a way acceptable to the Indian people themselves in order to avoid any suspicion of paternalism. If we can succeed in doing it in a way which will get their assent, I think it is worth waiting a little while longer.

WOMEN'S ATTENDANCE AT EDMONTON CONFERENCE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. It concerns this very debate and the ability of women to take part on an equal basis.

The Minister will be aware that a conference among native peoples is opening tomorrow in Edmonton, and that native women's organizations have been seriously disadvantaged because they do not have the funding to attend it. Many women have had to borrow money, for example, in order to go at all. Would the Minister assure us that there will be at least enough funding for two women from each province to attend, and will she tell us what her Department can do to ensure that women can have a voice in this debate? Can she assure us that they will get the same kind of funding for legal advice and lobbying which the organizations putting forward the other view have received?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to answer the question and express my disappointment with some of those women who did not see fit to bring their problem to my attention until last Friday night. I was in my riding at the time and was unable to respond to them because, of course, offices close at five o'clock. In the meantime I set in motion a request through the office of the Secretary of State, and I understand there is some $50,000 available, and we are looking into that at the moment. I reiterate that I am very disappointed that they did not come forward to ask for this funding earlier. However, we will do our best to see that they get something to attend that conference.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PETRO-CANADA—CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can he indicate to the House exactly what process is followed if an individual is found in conflict of interest while employed in a Crown corporation? I refer specifically to Petro-Canada. Would the Minister give consideration to the dismissal of individuals found in conflict of interest?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is a management board of Petro-Canada and they have to apply the normal business practice and government practice in situations of conflict of interest. Of course I do not know which problem the Hon. Member refers to, but if he tells it to me I will refer it to the chief executive officer to make sure the situation is corrected.

PURCHASE OF FURNITURE BY EXECUTIVES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, the chief executive officer is involved in the conflict of interest, along with the vice-president of human resources and corporate administration. I refer specifically to them using their position to purchase furniture from Petro-Canada at drastically reduced rates. I have copies of the sales agreement and the disposal forms. Will the Minister give consideration to referring this matter to the appropriate standing committee, or to the Auditor General, so that we can have a complete audit of the books? In the event a conflict of interest is found, as I can substantiate, will the Minister personally dismiss these individuals, as he is the one shareholder on behalf of all Canadians and there is a considerable amount of taxpayers' money involved?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is a board of directors of this company and I will refer the problem to the board, if there is a problem. I have not been informed of any such problems so far. I will ask my Deputy Minister, who is a member of the board, to look into the matter.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER ANNOUNCE BY-ELECTION DATES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who will know that, pursuant to the provisions of the House of Commons Act, he is obliged to call a by-election for the constituency of Nepean-Carleton no later than May 18 of this year, which is this week. Can the Prime Minister tell the House and the country whether it is his intention to set at the same time by-election dates for the other four vacancies in the House of Commons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct in suggesting that, under the legislation, I will have to set a date for the by-election by May 18. I will take the Hon. Member into my confidence, and his Leader can listen, too, if he ever comes into the House. He was here a moment ago.

Mr. McKinnon: No more cheap shots. Let's get on with it.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I may be leaving, but I have certainly heard a lot of cheap shots from the other side regarding myself. I do not think the Hon. Member should be so thin-skinned when it comes to so-called cheap shots.

Mr. Jarvis: McKinnon thin-skinned? Wrong guy.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, whoever it was.

Mr. McKinnon: It was I.

Mr. Trudeau: The problem I am faced with, Mr. Speaker, is that the other by-elections do not have to be called during the term that my writ runs. I am debating within my own heart the ethics of setting the dates for the others when they can be perfectly legally set by my successor when he assumes the exalted office of Prime Minister and bears the mantle with his customary dignity.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I, of course, do not indulge in partisan politics at any time—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —but I just want to tell the Prime Minister that there is not much chance of that crowd wearing the mantle in that way.

ELECTORAL REPRESENTATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister not think, when he canvasses his heart of hearts with respect to this weighty decision, that the residents of the other constituencies should have the earliest possible representation in the House of Commons, and that partisan considerations should be the very last of those things which the Prime Minister is going to canvass when he considers whether or not he should call all the by-elections now? The reasonable thing, it seems to me, is to call all the by-elections at one time so the people of Canada in those constituencies will get representation at the earliest possible date.

● (1500)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will try to inspire myself with the Hon. Member's lofty feelings on non-partisanship. I would point out to him if there is such urgency, then announcing all the elections on the eighteenth would cause a whole series of by-elections to take place right smack in the middle of the Queen's visit. I know the Hon. Member and his Party have objected to that at previous times. I might just consider calling the by-elections slightly after the Queen's visit, in which case I have at least another month in order to decide when they should be called, and if I have another month then I may as well let my successor do it. Do you follow me?

Mr. Speaker: One short supplementary. The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm).

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND DASH-8 AIRCRAFT—FINANCING OF SALES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister clear up a concern of mine? On April 16 I asked a question of the Minister responsible for de Havilland in this House, and responsible for the CDIC, about whether some interest program might be available in order that de Havilland could sell its aircraft domestically to the aircraft companies that want to buy them. The Minister advised me at that time:

—regulations on domestic and international trade are set under the General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade.

Would the Prime Minister mind clarifying that? Are we not able to sell our own Canadian produced aircraft at de Havilland to Canadian aircraft companies that want to buy them because we are governed by GATT, or is it possible to meet Ireland's terms on interest of 7 per cent, as Senator Austin indicated on Canada AM we might be able to do? Who is right—Senator Austin in the other place, or the Minister in this place when he said we cannot compete because of GATT?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to refer to the Hon. Minister's answer as quoted by the Hon. Member. I am not in a position to say that I would agree with it, but I would point out to the Hon. Member that if he is suggesting we should sell our aircraft in Canada at a loss, then I think he should lobby among members of his own Party who have been ranting and raving about Canadair's loss, at least since I have been around. If you sell at a loss then you increase the debt. If you increase the debt, then you get the Hon. Member's Party complaining about it. I think they will perhaps have to consider the Hon. Member's question among themselves before addressing it to me.

Mr. Domm: A very short supplementary Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member was already accorded a question.

AN ACT RESPECTING THE EXECUTION OF CLIFFORD ROBERT OLSON

On the Order: Introduction of Bills:

December 12, 1983—Mr. Taylor—Bill intituled: "An Act respecting the Execution of Clifford Robert Olson".

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has given earnest consideration the admissibility of this Bill and has come to the conclusion that it is not procedurally in order.

According to our practice, there are only two kinds of Bills, Public and Private. Citation 700 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition explains that:

A public bill relates to matters of public policy while a private bill relates to matters of a particular interest or benefit to a person or persons.

This Bill clearly does not fall within the definition of a Private Bill as it cannot be said to promote the particular interest or benefit of the individual named in it. It can therefore only be a Public Bill although whether the execution of the individual concerned could be described as a matter of public policy may be open to question.

The conclusion of the Chair is that the Bill falls into a special category for which our practice does not provide. Its nature is that of a Bill of Attainder, a proceeding at one time employed by the British Parliament to convict and condemn an individual of a high crime by Act of Parliament. The Bill of Attainder is described at page 69 of the Twentieth Edition of Erskine May as "the highest form of parliamentary judicature", which would suggest that such a Bill is a Public Bill.

The procedure is an obsolete one in the United Kingdom and has not been employed since the 18th Century. It has never existed in the Canadian practice and I must therefore rule that the Bill is unacceptable.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): In view of your comments, Mr. Speaker, I will not move second reading of this Bill, but I will place on the Order Paper another Bill that will meet your objections, I believe.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair thanks the Hon. Member.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege to speak on Bill C-24 dealing with Canada's subgovernment. I refer to it in that way because this is a secondary bureaucracy which in the last year cost Canada $4 billion. This subgovernment costs the taxpayers of this country millions and millions of dollars each year.

I would like to give you an example, Mr. Speaker, of the type of things that have happened that have not been addressed effectively by this Bill. This subgovernment is permitted to create such things as letters of comfort. Letters of comfort are guarantees by the federal Government to Crown corporations. We still have not had an accounting of all the letters of comfort that may be outstanding. This matter is hidden from the taxpayers and it is not done with integrity. It is a dishonest practice and it cheats the Canadian public. Letters of comfort represent only one of the items in this Bill that have not been specifically addressed which would stop this spending spree by Crown corporations.

What we object to particularly regarding these letters of comfort is that they have never been approved by the Parliament of Canada. They have never been approved by Members of this House who represent the taxpayer. This practice has to be stopped and a provision to stop it must be put into this Bill. In the Bill Class C-1 and Class C-2 corporations are required to submit corporate plans. There is nothing in this Bill indicating the form or the content. Anything that is required can be done by regulation by the Minister. This does not give us the facts. This can be dealt with differently by each Minister in this House and in the other place.

We are given little enough information about Crown corporations in committee, and we will not be given any more as a result of this Bill. The Minister of State for Social Development in the other place appears before us in committee but never gives us the facts. He never tells us the whole story. Today I read in the newspaper that the President of CDIC says that Canadair will make a profit this year. A magician could not make a profit from that company, the way it is today. I do not know who Joel Bell is kidding. Perhaps he does not expect to keep his job. I do not know the reason for coming out with public statements which are misleading. They are not telling us all the facts. If they ever consider taking a portion of the debt of Canadair, they would be unable to show a profit forever.

The Bill suggests that C-1 and C-2 corporations should prepare operating and capital budgets for a five-year period. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), however, can exempt any corporation he wishes. It is similar to the National Energy Program—everything looked fine until we reached the point where the final decision was in the hands of the Minister. We had that changed so that it had to go to the courts. We cannot take everything to the courts. We must deal with problems in the House of Commons. If we are to create three-year and five-year operational plans, they must be for everyone. They must be based on a standard format, and there cannot be exemptions for some corporations over others.

One of my major concerns is that even with this Bill Crown corporations will not be accountable to the Parliament of Canada. That is very serious. Legislation must include accountability to the House and to Canada.

Also the Bill sets forth the duties of the officers and directors, but they will not operate in the same manner as any private sector corporation in Canada. Cabinet appoints the chief executive officer. Boards of directors in private corporations are elected to appoint chief executive officers. Cabinet establishes remuneration. Boards of directors in private corporations establish the remunerations of chief executive officers. Cabinet appoints the auditors, so that it can pay off its friends in accounting firms across the country. In private corporations, auditors are approved and suggested by boards of directors.

Mr. Kaplan: The shareholders.

Mr. Fennell: They are not facing the facts. I see the Hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) walking out of the Chamber and I hear him making a joking remark. That is terrible. Some of his legislation is terrible, some of his actions are terrible. It is just another example of lack of accountability to the House of Commons.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Hon. Member has accused me of telling a joke. I was in fact simply reminding him that the auditors of a company are not picked by the directors but by the shareholders.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Fennell: He may say that it is the shareholders, but it is the board of directors that recommends the auditors. Then a shareholder stands and makes a recommendation. If it is the shareholders, every person in Canada should have the option of appointing an auditor and should have a voice as to who is on the board of directors, not just the Prime Minister of the country nor the Cabinet of Canada. It is attitudes like that which destroy the country. Those attitudes have hurt the country and destroyed the economy of Canada.

Furthermore, the Cabinet can direct the board of directors to pass certain by-laws. That is unheard of. It would be the same as shareholders directing the board of directors to pass certain by-laws. I have seen the types of by-laws passed in the House. I would not trust one. The board of directors would have to be awfully good friends of the Liberal Government to be able to endorse any by-laws recommended by that Government.

Our recommendation is that the board of directors should be totally independent of government. They should be appointed on their qualifications, not on their ideologies. This has to be changed.

They talk about comprehensive audits, but they can be modified by Cabinet. That is wrong. The Bill will not stop the proliferation of Crown corporations. They can set up a thousand subsidiaries. Why do they not look at Crown corporations on a joint venture basis? If we get the private sector involved with an entrepreneurial spirit and management skills, we will make them work.

Crown corporations are continually directed by public servants. A senior associate deputy minister of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion worked in Montreal for a number of years. He did not have the faintest idea of how a corporation operates or works for profit. The whole proliferation of Crown corporations has allowed spending by the Liberal Government on behalf of taxpayers, for which they will have to pay.

I realize that 10 minutes is a very short time, but I will conclude my brief speech by saying that we will put forth many amendments in committee. We will remove the smoke and mirrors in this Bill. We will recommend directors, not an advisory board but a pure board of directors. We will show that accountability is a prime concern of this Party.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an earlier opportunity to participate in the debate on this Bill which purports to be a Bill to assist government and Parliament, in particular, with respect to control over Crown corporations. The reason we are not supportive of this legislation is that it does not do what it pretends to do.

There is no change of government policy with respect to Crown corporations. There is only an alleged change in machinery. There is no real reform. There is no real acceptance of blame for what has happened in the past. We are all familiar with the state of affairs now revealed in Canadair and de Havilland, which show complete lack of control not only by Parliament but by the Government, or if the Government had any control or knowledge, then complete culpable negligence with respect to what happened in those corporations.

Historically the chief powers of Parliament have been powers over the spending of money, over the purse. However, that power has been completely eroded. We have to ask the following question: Why should the Government object to Hon. Members of the House having some real authority with respect to Crown corporations, not through pusillanimous standing committees of the House which have no powers, except such as are granted them by the majority or by the Government, not by make-believe committees? Why is the Government reluctant to give Members of this House some real authority and control? Why should Ministers of the Crown not welcome assistance of Members of this House with the task of controlling the bureaucracy? I forget the total number now in the Public Service, but it is in the area of 300,000 people. Ministers, certainly most of them in this Government, if not all—there may be one or two exceptions—are unable to know, understand or control what happens in their Department, except on the fringes. They have to trust the bureaucracy of the Public Service to advise them of what is happening.

● (1520)

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) has a fantastically large and varied Department. He does not know what is happening in the interstices of that Department or what is happening in the airport at St. John's, Newfoundland, or whatever the issue might be. Why should a Minister object if this House helps him? Why should the Government object if committees of this House are given sufficient authority to start investigating and finding out for themselves what Government Crown corporations are doing?

If five years ago we had had a committee, either together with representatives of the other place or just a committee of this House, whose job it was to look into, investigate and raid the bureaucracy of the Crown corporations with the powers of subpoena, investigation and summoning witnesses, and if such a committee had looked at de Havilland or Canadair, I venture to say that this country may well have saved hundreds of millions, if not billions of dollars, to which we are now committed. Even if conscious decisions were made to continue financing those corporations in such amounts and in such a way for such purposes, at least the public would have known about it years before they did know.

When I was Minister of Finance—it is true for a brief time just eight months—I had no time to consider what was happening with Crown corporations that were supposed to report to the Government of Canada. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, I was not lying around on my butt doing nothing. I worked at least 12 to 14 hours a day.

Mr. Tobin: You had your kicks. That's it.

Mr. Crosbie: Are you attempting to attack my butt? Is the Member interjecting with a butt? When the putative Minister of State for Youth becomes a Minister of State for Youth, we will listen to him with all the attention that that onerous and heavy responsibility will entail. In the meantime, the Speaker provided a nursery two or three years ago. That young man should go on to the nursery and deal with people of his own mental agility. By the way, I want the people in Corner Brook and Stephenville to know that these childish interjections are coming from their Member, soon to be ex-Member. The Member's name is Brian Tobin, if I might sneak that in for those now watching down on the west coast of Newfoundland.

When I was Minister of Finance, working as hard as I could, I had no time to consider what Crown corporations that reported to Finance were doing. I remember requests coming from de Havilland and Canadair which, by the way, we put a stop to. They were having the Government guarantee their borrowing. This never came to anyone's attention because they were doing it by letters of comfort.

It was felt to be all right for the Government to give financial concerns lending money to those companies letters of comfort, saying that the Government knew about the loans and would stand behind these corporations. That never came before Parliament or the House of Commons. It did not receive public attention because it was not a formal guarantee. For years those companies were financed secretly behind the scenes. The directors appointed by the Government apparently did not feel they had to intervene or stop the ruinous course of those companies. They did not have adequate instructions.

This Bill is an utter failure. It is another piece of Government flatulence because it does not provide for any real control by people sitting in this House, both on the Government side and the Opposition side. We are pledged to do this, and I am sure we will. It has to be done in the first 12 months of our being in office because, after you have been in office more than 12 months, you become ministerial and you do not want Members of the House bothering you. You do not want these nuisances in the House giving you more work or adding to your burden, so it slips your attention.

In the first 12 months of our administration, we have to change this House fundamentally. One change would be to set up committees of this House with real authority. One of them must be a committee with full authority to check on what Crown corporations are doing or not doing, whether they are spending or not spending what they are supposed to be spending, whether they are having losses that the Government does not want to admit to or whether there are some embarrassments the Government wants to hide and is therefore shy about seeing them come to the public light.

I do not know how much longer I have; I understand it is two minutes. In 1968 there were 38 federal Crown corporations with $5.5 billion in assets recorded in the public accounts. Today there are 186 Crown corporations. The federal Government owns more than 50 per cent of the shares in 34 other companies and less than 50 per cent in 72 other companies. We have one in Newfoundland, Fishery Products International Limited, of which my brother is the interim chairman. They have chosen wisely with respect to the interim chairman, but I would like to see him checked by Members of this House. I often had to check upon him when I was in business with him. Entrepreneurs need someone to check on them. They need the heavy hand laid on them every now and then.

While I am pleased and delighted that my brother is the interim chaiman of Fishery Products International Limited, it does not lessen my concern that Members of this House and the committee of this House should have the right to see exactly how they have done, what their plans are, what their losses might be and to report back to this House.

It is my information that today federal Crown corporations have $67 billion in assets and $57 billion in liabilities. That is why I want to move an amendment to the order of second reading of this Bill. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months' hence".

I do not know if this gives me unlimited time. I hope the rules provide me with unlimited time to speak to the reasons for bringing in the six months' hoist. The legislation now—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. First I should tell the Hon. Member that his time has expired. The motion is in order. I will read the motion to the House:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-24, An Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

The seconder to the motion is the Hon. Member for Hillsborough. For debate, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, if there is need to underscore why we want a six months' hoist, it is obviously contained in the fact that we are dealing with a Bill, as the Auditor General has mentioned to all Canadians, that is becoming a dangerous sub-layer of Government expenditure. When we look at the fact that Crown corporations are now spending some $4 billion annually, when we recognize that this expenditure is on behalf of Canadians generally and when we recognize that this expenditure is not accountable to Parliament itself, the fact is that we end up with government without representation. Taxpayers' dollars are being spent without the ability of the representatives of the taxpayers to influence how the money is handled or accounted for or is in any way deliberated upon.

• (1530)

As mentioned by my friend, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), we need to have a parliamentary committee with full authority to question the right of every Crown corporation to exist. The fact is that today we see a proliferation of Crown corporations without ever once asking if, after a Crown corporation is formed, it should continue to exist. Crown corporations that were formed in the middle part of the century still exist and this is justified simply by the fact that they existed last year. Year after year Crown corporations continue to grow. More Crown corporations continue to be added until the totem pole grows taller and taller like Pinocchio's nose. Never once do the representatives of the people have a chance to question why those corporations exist.

What is needed is a committee which is independent of the Government and independent of the Cabinet, one which can call before it every witness it wants, a committee which can subpoena witnesses, swear them to oath and make the representatives of Crown corporations establish that the corporations should either exist or vanish. If a Crown corporation cannot prove to the satisfaction of the committee and therefore the representatives of the citizens that it is either the most efficient agency for doing a specialized task or that an important task would not be done if the corporations were not committed to doing it in the best interests of the public, then that Crown corporation should cease to exist.

What we have today, Sir, is uncontrollable growth without having any mechanism in place to cause the cessation of that growth. The debt of the nation is continuing to grow. In 1976 the Auditor General signalled his alarm and he did so again in 1983. The Auditor General told us that he was dangerously concerned about the unchecked growth of Crown corporations. There are no principles to guide us when a Crown corporation is born or when it dies. Crown corporations are created at pleasure and without accountability. That is the unfortunate fact of today.

We find ourselves in a situation where, if Crown corporations are to be at public cost, they must also become a public responsibility. It is important that a mechanism to create that responsibility be put in place. Bill C-24 does not lend itself to the provision of Parliament's accountability. It does lend itself to the convenience of Cabinet so that Cabinet may continue to appoint at pleasure and ask for accountability only if Cabinet wants accountability. The Bill does not allow for an individual committee of Parliament to call a Crown corporation into question if it recognizes that some concern does exist.

I ask rhetorically why the Agriculture Committee should not, in some future year, call into question the Crown corporation of Canagrex? Why would it not be appropriate to bring before that committee the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, for example, to ask whether or not the marketing of beef products was being carried out in a way which was in the best interests of the producers? Why could the committee not, on behalf of the citizens of Canada, put the management of that corporation on the spot and ask it to account to the public as to whether or not the agency was serving the public and serving it well?

I ask rhetorically why groups like the Alberta, Ontario or Quebec swine breeders' associations, groups that do an excellent job of marketing their pork products privately in the Third World, should not be able to ask Canagrex whether or not it is interfering with their own private initiatives and whether or not that interference is counter-productive to the over-all well-being of the nation? If the corporation cannot answer satisfactorily to such a committee, the committee ought to have the power to redress the corporation and to bring it into line with the proper management and marketing techniques which are in the best interests of all Canadians, whether it be through that agency or through the private sector.

In 1976 the Auditor General first warned Canadians that Crown corporations were starting to grow up around the Government. At that time he said that weak and ineffective control of public spending through Crown corporations is a dangerous threat to the Canadian people. By 1983, Sir, only six years later, the Auditor General said in his report of 1983:

> Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

That is the most damning comment about a government that could be made by any public servant. He said in effect that we are losing control of the purse strings of the country.

Today, as compared with the figures in 1962, Crown corporations have increased some 250 per cent. In 1962 there were only 28 Crown corporations. I submit that to me, that would seem like a lot even today. Yet the facts are that the Government is involved in more than 300 Crown corporations. I can attest to that because of an answer I received to a question that I put on the Order Paper. The fact is that the Government is either wholly or partially involved in some 400 agencies, many of which are Crown corporations. The truth of the matter is that that whole sub-layer about which the Auditor General is concerned is hidden from the public and from Parliament with no control or checks, yet it sucks upon the people's money.

The taxpayers must pay for an enormous debt load which is created by people who are appointed at the pleasure of the Government. Usually these people are not appointed for reasons of skills or abilities but because they come from the kingdom of Gritdom. They serve on all of these boards because they are Grits. Crown corporations, like the Senate, are used as a place of reward. All we ask, Mr. Speaker, in light of democratic principles, is that accountability come into place.

Today, Mr. Speaker, Crown corporations are hiring some 265,000 persons. That figure, Sir, is greater than the number of working persons in Edmonton and Calgary combined. I say that to point out the growth of Crown corporations. Certainly people in western Canada will know that if within the Crown corporations of the nation are employed as many people as are employed in those two major cities of Alberta, then obviously Crown corporations have grown far beyond the capacity of the nation to endure that unfortunate fact without question.

I see, Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that my time is up. I have only commented on two pages of notes out of the ten pages which I had prepared. Obviously, it is only the time which has gone, not the issue. Therefore, I will sit down out of respect for that regulation.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to say a few words about the whole question of Crown corporations and accountability. The accountability of Crown corporations to Parliament, and through Parliament to the public, is a question that concerns everyone. Indeed, it was a matter which was regarded with some urgency and importance by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. That Committee made recommendations with regard to the accountability of Crown corporations which I would recommend to Members who are interested in this issue.

The whole question of accountability of Crown corporations has long been an interest of mine, coming as I do from a company town—the company being the Canadian National Railways. I have had experience with Crown corporations for a long time and I am as interested as anyone else in making Crown corporations accountable. I would like to see them made accountable so that they could work better for Canadians and for the well-being of the country.

I am not against Crown corporations in principle or against public ownership in principle, as are many of my Conservative colleagues to the right. That is often the hidden motivation for some of the criticisms they make.

With respect to the comments which have been made regarding committees needing more power to examine Crown corporations, I quite agree. In my opinion, one of the great weaknesses of the parliamentary system is the lack of power and the lack of independence of committees. The Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure made some recommendations in that direction. If the Government had been serious about parliamentary reform and about greater accountability, it could have seized that opportunity and implemented those recommendations. That would have gone some way toward increasing accountability. But we did not see that kind of movement on the part of the Government.

The reforms that were in the last package of parliamentary reform have not succeeded in increasing accountability. To simply have annual reports of Crown corporations referred to committee without any change in the independence of those committees, without any significant increase in the power of those committees and, finally, without any change in the whole way in which committees are dominated by Party discipline, is to have in the final analysis no improvements in accountability at all. Those are the areas that we have to look to if we are really interested in accountability.

I would like to address some of the points raised by my Conservative colleagues regarding accountability, as they have a lot to say about it. I am going to take it for granted that when it comes to accountability in Crown corporations, or for that matter accountability period, the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government are beyond redemption in this respect. They have given government such a bad name, and given Crown corporations such a bad name, that it has made life difficult for those of us in the New Democratic Party who believe that Crown corporations can be used as a positive and efficient instrument for the social and economic well-being of the country.

I would like to look at the Tory position for a moment. There seem to be a couple of contradictions in that position. On the one hand, the Tories want to argue that Crown corporations ought to act in a truly economic way—that is, in the narrow sense of the word "economic"—and that there ought to be no political dimension to economic activities; that economic activities abide by certain laws which are outside the realm of political and social consideration. I would ask the Tories how they intend to reconcile this view of economic activity which they traditionally have with the injection of the political dimension, vis-à-vis more accountability, into the running of Crown corporations? Either they should admit that they are wrong about what constitutes economic activity and about the narrow view of economic activity which they have, or they should admit that they are trying to set up a process whereby biased scrutiny, rather than accountability in the best spirit of the word, is made possible. In other words, they want accountability not to increase the effectiveness of Crown corporations, but so that they can have more forums for attacking Crown corporations on principle as an instrument of social and economic policy. I invite my Conservative colleagues to address that question.

I would like to comment on the speech of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). He spoke about taxation without representation. He spoke about taxpayers' money being spent without any accountability. If we want to talk about accountability, we must be consistent. We want accountability of all money that is spent that belongs to taxpayers. My problem with the Conservative Party is that it wants accountability for all the money which is being spent by Crown corporations, but it does not want accountability for the money which is being spent by private corporations in the form of tax incentives and tax expenditures. Billions of dollars are given to the oil companies and the Conservative Party says: "Just let them have the money and they will do what they want with it. We trust their judgment. We do not want any accountability there". They do not say: "Make the CPR accountable for the decisions which it makes with respect to the well-being of the country".

The NDP is at least being consistent when it talks about accountability. We want all of the major economic actors in the country to be accountable to the public good, not just the Crown corporations while leaving the multinationals to do as they please. That is the Conservative position. Why do we not see consistency in the Conservative Party when it comes to accountability? Why do they never rise to criticize the multinational corporations? We in the NDP do not make any distinction. If Petro-Canada does something which we believe is wrong, we rise and say so. If the CNR does something which we believe is wrong, we rise and say so. The NDP is not intimidated by ideology in this respect. We think that everyone should be made accountable. But the Conservatives never get up and criticize the multinationals or the private sector in this respect.

When the day comes that the Progressive Conservative Party stands up and demands comprehensive accountability for economic decisions of major significance which are taken in this country, then we will know that it is serious about accountability and is not just grinding its usual ideological axe when it comes to public ownership.

The question of accountability, as I have stated, is one with which all Members ought to be concerned. I know that the public is concerned with it. People have a sense, as was said earlier, that there is a kind of sub-layer of government. It is something which we must address as a Parliament if we want Parliament to continue to be perceived as perforing its traditional role of holding the government accountable for its expenditures. We will not get there by having one-sided views of accountability such as was put forward by the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, or ideas of no accountability, which is what the Liberals have been about for so many years. We will only get it when we get people who are interested in comprehensive accountability.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the only problem the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) has with the Conservative Party is that the Conservative Party will make sure that he does not return to this House after the next election. In speaking to accountability, he would know that private corporations on the stock market are accountable to that marketplace.

Mr. Blaikie: That is not the public.

Mr. Blenkarn: He says the marketplace is not the public. Somehow the New Democratic Party makes the New Democratic Party the public. The public knows where the New Democratic Party stands. The polls have revealed where the New Democratic Party stands—somewhere below the radar screen. There is not much that the NDP can add to this debate because it does not have much to add for the public of Canada, and that is the reason it is falling so far behind.

I join this debate again because I think it is time that Parliament reconsidered the whole purpose of the Bill. It should be referred to committee for an understanding of where we are going on Crown corporations and not be passed. The Bill should be withdrawn at the present time and there should be a House of Commons study as to where we should be going in connection with the management of our many, many Crown corporation investments.

On May 11 the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) indicated that he was going to produce a directorate with respect to Crown corporations. He indicated at that time that all of a sudden he had found another six brand-new Crown corporations. The other day, Sir, I was reading the financial statement of the Canadian National Railway Company for 1983, and on page 5 are listed consolidated companies owned by Canadian National. These are the companies which are consolidated into the Canadian National balance sheet. There are 46 companies consolidated into what is called the Canadian National Railways. There are 46 separate Crown-owned corporations as subsidiaries of Canadian National Railways. Not only that, Sir, but Canadian National Railways has joint operating agreements, or joint investment agreements, with another 23 corporations. That is a total of 69 corporations where the Government of Canada, through the Canadian National Railways system, is involved in the management of the affairs of this country. Bill C-24 does not deal with that kind of proliferation. It does not deal with a method whereby the people of Canada, the Government of Canada, the Parliament of Canada, or anyone can get a handle on what is happening in Canadian National Railways.

We have received a statement from Petro-Canada. Going over that statement, we find that Petro-Canada Products Inc. is the new name for BP Refining and Marketing Canada Limited, but the statement indicates that BP still exists. Then there is Petro-Canada Enterprises Inc. Then there is Petrofina Canada Inc. Then for some reason we see this statement: "Canertech Inc. was incorporated by the corporation as a wholly-owned subsidiary company to develop alternate energy sources in Canada". We got into the oil business to make sure that we Canadians had some window on the oil industry. That was the explanation given in this House. The explanation had nothing to do with alternate sources of energy. Yet this company, which was incorporated to make sure that Canada had a solid window on the oil industry, an ability to be self-sufficient in oil, has all of a sudden decided that it should be the vehicle of the Government for alternate energy. Under no circumstances, Sir, was this intended when that corporation was brought before this Parliament. Yet that is what has happened.

We amalgamated a series of bankrupt railways in order to make sure that Canada had adequate rail transporation. Now we have that company involved in trucking, in running buses, in running various kinds of express services, and in managing and operating hotels. We have an oil company we incorporated for the purpose of making sure Canada could be self-sufficient in oil and it is offshore exploring throughout the world in order to develop the resources of Jamaica and China. It is working to develop alternate sources of energy. Many of the purposes for which it was incorporated are not being handled, and it is on another exploration kick of its own, doing its own thing, growing, creating, proliferating; and that is where the problem is.

When the President of the Treasury Board brought before us his new directorate, he surely must have understood that that new directorate and where we stand ought to be a first consideration of Parliament before Parliament deals with legislation putting some corporations under Schedule A, some under Schedule B and some under Schedule C.

The scheduling alone in Bill C-24 is totally inadequate. There is no rationale for why some companies are in one schedule and some companies are in another schedule. Nor is there any rationale for why a company should be incorporated for a new purpose by a motion and a seven-hour debate—and that is all—whereas a subsidiary company can be incorporated with just Governor in Council, Order in Council arrangements.

The whole concept of this Bill is to mask and allow these corporations, these Crown-owned investments, to expand and spend and regulate and control the assets of the people of Canada without any real return to the people of Canada in terms of a return on investment. This condition must cease. Parliament must get a grip on the corporations which Parliament and this country presently own. We do not know really whether the figure which the President of the Treasury Board declared on May 11 is correct. We do not really know to what extent we own these corporations and where we are going with them.

I asked the other day what Mingan Associates Ltd. is. I see that our research indicates that Mingan Associates happens to be a private fishing camp. Is it not interesting that the people of Canada should own a private fishing camp? San Sebastiano is a corporation which owns land occupied by Canada's embassy to the Vatican. Why do we have these corporations? And why have we not had until now a proper explanation of them?

To present this Bill in the fashion in which it has been presented and then for the President of the Treasury Board to make the release he did on Friday last, is an affront to this Parliament. On that basis, Sir, it is only proper that this Bill be hoisted for six months, that Parliament investigate the whole question of the control of Crown corporations. Then Parliament will be able to determine whether this legislation, or some other legislation, is more appropriate for the control and management of Canada's investments.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak on Bill C-24 and our suggested amendment to hoist it for six months.

I feel the purpose of this legislation, namely, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, does not address the main problems we have today. I believe that was made very evident by some of the statements we have heard already this afternoon, particularly those made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). I was somewhat amused, Mr. Speaker, when he said—and I am quoting as precisely as I can remember—"When a Crown corporation does something, we criticize it in the NDP Party". I would like to suggest that the number of criticisms which that Party has brought forward with respect to Crown corporations would not fill the back of a postage stamp.

It is as a result of Crown corporations that most of the citizens in Canada today are somewhat upset. One does not have to look very far among the 400 or 500 Crown corporations which exist today to find horrendous nightmare stories of bad management, waste and taxpayers' dollars going to programs which cannot be cost justified. The most alarming of all the things we have talked about here today is the fact that Crown corporations are not accountable. We have no way of scrutinizing many of the actions which take place.

We are trying to save aircraft industries in Canada today because we need the jobs. We need the jobs at de Havilland and Canadair. We are negotiating through a Crown corporation for cutbacks in union employee benefits and salaries in order that those factories can be sustained. In the past fiscal year the management of those Crown corporations received bonuses of some $155,000. In the private sector one would not think of paying a bonus to corporate directors who have successfully ended up in the red. To get a bonus in the private sector you must end up in the black. However, that is not true with Crown corporations such as de Havilland.

We have put some $700 million into de Havilland in order to assure the jobs of some 2,900 employees, plus another 10,000 employees in other spin-off industries. Yet we cannot get money from the Government of Canada at 7 per cent interest in order to sell the aircraft that we have invested $700 million to produce. What is the economy in that kind of program by any Crown corporation? There is not any sense at all in building aircraft and then neglecting to make the marketing facilities available in order to be able to sell them. If we cannot sell Dash-8s to Canadian companies, how do we expect to sell Dash-8s abroad?

A company from Ireland has come into Canada to sell 36-seat aircraft the same size as the Dash-8. The Dash-8 is a better aircraft but it is the same size. The one from Ireland flies more economically from point A to point B. It is offered to any Canadian aircraft industry that wants to buy it at some $2 million less per aircraft.

The Minister responsible for CDIC said in the House of Commons that we are selling domestic aircraft in Canada and that comes under GATT. That is not the case. It has no bearing at all on the interest of getting these aircraft into the market. We can sell Canadian-built aircraft to any Canadian aircraft purchaser without fear of GATT. As late as today in the House of Commons the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) confirmed that the information was false and that GATT does not affect domestic sales. The Minister says one thing in the House about the Crown corporation he is responsible for. Senator Austin from the other place appeared on Canada AM last week and said that we must find some form of interest assistance. He talked in terms of 2 per cent. I am not sure whether he was talking about 2 per cent over prime. If he was, we will never sell the aircraft because 2 per cent over prime today is prohibitive. However, he was talking about an interest assistance program.

That is one of the disadvantages of having Ministers in the other place. We have Ministers in the House responsible for Crown corporations and we have Ministers responsible for certain forms of social development in the other place. We have to listen to Canada AM and The Journal to find out what is going on there. By and large Crown corporations have not been that responsible. People are very concerned about the money which is being dumped into these Crown corporations.

I will take a moment to discuss another situation which is a major concern in all of Canada. We like to think that we have a window on the oil industry and that we, as Canadian people, own Petro-Canada. It is discouraging to read in the newspaper about how Petro-Canada joins forces with the other seven sisters in the oil industry to enter into long-term, 15-year reciprocal trade agreements, thereby hauling from each other at the refinery gates. Gulf, Shell, Imperial Oil, Suncor or Petro-Canada, both of the latter the people's oil companies, are hauling from each other at the refinery gates. If that is not controlling the product at the source, if that is not allowing, as has been pointed out before the combines investigation committee, these oil companies, one of which is our own Petro-Canada, to control the price at the refinery gates, I do not know what is. Then Petro-Canada tells its dealers that it is going to own their inventory under the ground. It tells them it will pay them a commission when they pump the product through the nozzle into the car. That enables them to set the retail price as well.

Why is gasoline selling east of Peterborough today for 33 cents a litre when you pay 48 cents a litre for regular gasoline in Ottawa, and in some cases more? Why is it possible to haul large tank wagon loads of petroleum products out of the same refinery gates and dump them at varying prices as you drive down the highway? From my 15 years' experience in the oil industry I can tell you it is possible because the prices are controlled at the refinery gates. We have a Crown corporation known as Petro-Canada which is a party to that conspiracy. Mr. Speaker, I do not use that word lightly. It was used by government investigators when they appeared before the oil pricing commission investigating combines as they pertain to the oil industry. There cannot be a fair marketing atmosphere when government Crown corporations are entering into long-term reciprocal agreements with other major oil companies in the private sector.

We all know that Air Canada is a Crown corporation. We know that it is competing in the private sector. When we set up Air Canada, as we did the CBC, we did so to enable ourselves to supply services and product, as the case may be, in areas which the private sector could not serve as well. Today we have government administering businesses and competing in the private sector with subsidized tax allowances from the people in order to do this.

In conclusion, whenever we have this kind of legislation we must be very careful that it is protecting the consumer. I do not think there is sufficient control spelled out in Bill C-24 to ensure that Crown corporations will become accountable to government or Parliament, not to the Minister but to all Members of Parliament, in order that we can properly scrutinize their activities and hold them accountable to the Canadian people.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this motion to put this Bill over for six months. I am convinced that the Bill, as framed, is the Government's attempt to soothe Canadians and to fool them into believing that this Bill will bring the mass proliferation of Crown corporations under control. The fact of the matter is that it simply will not bring them back under control. Until we have a new government with a new cabinet approaching all of these problems from a new perspective, we will just have more of the same.

You will recall, Sir, that when I spoke earlier in the debate I pointed out that for a period of 100 years, from 1800 to 1930, there were not more than one dozen Crown corporations created. During the whole depression period there were only four or five created. During the wartime period, a time of great need, there were only about 30 Crown corporations created. For a period of some 20 years after the war we had maybe four or five Crown corporations created. Since the present Cabinet was sworn in we have come into what we call the proliferation period during which time there have been virtually hundreds of Crown corporations created. Under the guise of Canadianizing, we have borrowed money on the foreign market and bought back existing Crown corporations which were operating in the country.

The result is that Canadians owe $76 billion to foreign lenders. That probably puts us into a worse category than Mexico or many of the other Third World countries which are in very deep trouble today. We have absolutely destroyed our potential to become the leader in the world.

I want to give an example of one company, Petro-Canada, which is an abuse of the ordinary taxpayer, our uncles, aunts and friends, people who are at the end of the shovel and who believe that governments should do what is right. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal Cabinet has breached the fiduciary responsibility they have to the people of this country. When the Cabinet set up that Crown corporation they borrowed money in foreign markets to give tax breaks to Petro-Canada which other corporations could not take advantage of. One of the senior deputy ministers was on the board of Petro-Canada and they put through a special debenture to take advantage of a tax loophole and the Government closed the loophole within 10 days so no one else could take advantage of it. That is how they financed Petro-Canada.

Petro-Canada then went out and took over Atlantic Richfield, Pacific Petroleum and Petrofina. They paid far more than the market would have dictated, which created an enormous benefit to the shareholders of those companies. They then used the money, not to build plants or anything like that and create jobs, but to buy government treasury bills. They made an absolute killing at 19.5 per cent of that fiscal year, 1981-82 or 1982-83, rather than create jobs.

There are the 100 per cent owned subsidiaries of Petro-Canada, Mr. Speaker. Arctic Pilot Project Inc., Canertech Inc., under which you have Canertech Conservation Inc., Pacific Enercon Ltd., Mechron Energy Ltd., 107744 Canada Inc., Omnifuel Gasification System, Petro-Canada Consulting Corporation, which is now inactive, and Petro-Canada Inc.. Under that we have Asher American, Inc., Big Eagle Oil & Gas Ltd., Aquilla Holdings Ltd., and Fifth Pacific Stations Ltd. They say that company is now inactive but remember as I list these corporations they each have to have a president, a board of directors and secretaries. These people are not there for the creation of new wealth or the finding of new oil; they are there to sustain the infrastructure, the bureaucracy. When the oil and gas industry, those 700 companies that were owned by our fellow citizens, come in and tell us that at one time they had three geologists and one accountant on their staff and now they have three accountants and one geologist, they are telling us the truth. That is how we have destroyed the oil industry.

Some more subsidiaries, Mr. Speaker: GMI Co. (Bahamas) Limited. What is Petro-Canada doing in the Bahamas? Opal Oils Limited, under which we have Commodore Oils Limited, First Pacific Stations Ltd., Second Pacific Stations Ltd., Third Pacific Stations Ltd., and Fourth Pacific Stations Ltd.. That reminds me, Mr. Speaker, that when Petro-Canada bought Petrofina it paid twice the market value for a few oil and gas leases and 1500 service stations, most of which are too close to Petro-Canada's own stations, and they are having to sell them. But Petrofina got to keep the petrochemical plant, which is where the future of the oil industry is. It is not the retail pump, it is in the petrochemical plant. Petrofina was paid double the market value of the shares and they got to keep the most important part of their operation. It is a criminal act.

Then we have Pacific Pipelines, Inc., Pacific Petroleums (Overseas) Limited, Petro-Canada Drilling Inc., Petro-Canada Enterprises Inc., and under that we have Independent Fuels & Lumber Ltd., Joseph Elie Limitée, Marc Dufresne (1979) Inc., Petro-Canada Chemicals Inc., Petro-Canada Petroleum Inc. Under that is Arctic Islands Resources Ltd., Petro-Canada Ventures, Prairie Leaseholds Ltd., Prairie Minerals Ltd., and Xychem Inc.

Then we have a bunch of them incorporated by numbers. They have so many they cannot find names for them. First is 106616 Canada Inc., 106617 Canada Inc., 106618 Canada Inc., 106619 Canada Inc., 106620 Canada Inc. and 106621 Canada Inc. All of these are incorporated companies sitting on the shelves ready to go.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) goes over to Indonesia he will tell them: "We will send Petro-Canada over to help you". They will then activate one of these companies and the taxpayers' dollars pay for it. Ordinary Canadians will then have less money to spend; it will be taxed away from them. There are seven separate federal taxes applied to oil from the time it leaves the ground until the time it gets into your gas tank. That is wrong. It is a tax grab and it leaves less money for the individual to decide how to spend. My view, Mr. Speaker, is that I will decide how to spend my money and I am not going to give it to a bunch of Grits over there to spend it. Canadians are coming around to that view and they are going to have to defeat individual members in order to get this changed.

There are more companies, Mr. Speaker. We have Petro-Canada Espanola S.A.. We are drilling in Spain. Petro-Canada Norway A/S. What are we doing in Norway? Petro-Canada Oil and Gas Inc., Petro-Canada Products Inc., Petro-Canada Resources Inc., Petro-Canada (U.K.) Limited. I guess we are drilling in the United Kingdom. Petroleum Transmission Company, Petron Petroleum Ltd., Rocair Limited, Tri-Mountain Petroleums Ltd., Value Serve Stations Ltd. We have Venezuelan Canadian Oils, which was confiscated from them by Venezuela, by the look of it. We have Venezuelan Pacific Petroleums, 103912 Canada Inc., and then we have Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation. Those are companies owned 100 per cent, and I have a list here of subsidiaries held at 50 per cent to 99 per cent, and associates held at less than 50 per cent. It goes on for page after page.

If the Liberal Cabinet wanted to put up its own money to set up this corporation, I would have no trouble at all with that. But they are using your money and mine, Mr. Speaker, and they are not using it responsibly according to the trust the Government owes to the governed.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I think it is time we had a look at Crown corporations. I am delighted that we have had a suggestion and a motion, if accepted, that this Bill be given a six-month hoist.

You may or may not remember, Mr. Speaker, that the Government, at about the same time it produced Bill C-24, put forward a brochure entitled New Legislative Proposals for the Control and Accountability of Crown Corporations. The opening paragraph is revealing in that it says the federal Government believes that new measures are now required to strengthen the control and accountability of its Crown corporations. This can best be done by clarifying the roles and responsibilities of Parliament, the Government, boards of directors and managers of Crown corporations.

What does the Government do? The next paragraph tells us what the Government is going to do. It is going to amend the Financial Administration Act in order to strengthen the controls and accountability of Crown corporations. The Government is going to amend the Financial Administration Act, Mr. Speaker? I ask you, surely there should be what is known in French as la loi cadre; I do not know whether we have the same term in English. That is an acceptable term in legislative proceedings in France. It is a law which provides the base on which further constructions can be erected. It seems to me there ought to be la loi cadre for Crown corporations. Goodness knows, there are enough of them flying around. My friend, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), listed at least some of the subsidiaries of Petro-Canada. Incidentally, he stole a bit of my thunder, Mr. Speaker, because I was going to do that. However, they are on the record and we may come back to them.

It strikes me that amending the Financial Administration Act is quite the wrong way to go about dealing with such an important aspect of Canada's economy today. Goodness knows, it needs amendment, but there should be a basic Crown Corporations Act as there once was, I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in my earlier intervention during second reading of Bill C-27. It might very well have served as a better model for la loi cadre for Crown corporations.

I do not know for sure whether you have had a chance to look at this Bill, Sir. It is quite lengthy. It deals with the Crown corporations in a most extraordinary way. By rewriting in one particular place, it removes Part VIII of the existing Financial Administration Act, which is entitled "Crown Corporations" or "corporations de la couronne", and replaces it with another section which is called Part XII, "Crown Corporations" in English or sociétés d'état "in French. This is really an amendment. It appears in Bill C-24 following Part II in the Financial Administration Act. Then it goes from page five to page 53. The insert is the amendment, Part XII, which deals with Crown corporations. That in itself ought to be, if it contained all what the Government were planning to do and did it properly, la loi cadre.

It seems to me, and I think to all clear-thinking parliamentarians, that we should have a basic law for all Crown corporations, of which there are an innumerable quantity. I use the word "innumerable" deliberately because my friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), mentioned that there were some 49 subsidiaries to CN. I have just been counting through this document and I come up with something like 75. Therefore, "innumerable" is probably the right word to apply to the number of Crown corporations that exist. I think there should be a basic law on which we can hang the incorporation or creation of new Crown corporations. I find it most offensive that one of the largest Crown corporations should have come into existence even before the amendment to the Crown corporations notion through the Financial Administration Act has been voted upon in Parliament.

Two years ago, Mr. Speaker, you may recall that there was brought into being an instrument called the Canadian Development Investment Corporation. It was first incorporated on January 12, 1982. Now I see that Bill C-25, which is the Bill immediately succeeding Bill C-24, tries to put a little bit of legality, and parliamentary legality particularly, into this series of Orders in Council starting January 12, 1982. I suppose there could be one going through today for all we know, maybe taking over another Crown corporation.

On May 25, 1983, the CDIC legislation was given first reading in the House. There is a year and a half. That is extraordinary when you come to think of it. Here we are a year later and we still have not had the CDIC legislation brought before us for second reading.

There is some jiggery-pokery going on about Crown corporations. I think I mentioned on an earlier occasion I was rather surprised that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) should have this sort of legislation brought forward to the House. His advisers are consultants in the matter of drafting legislation and he should have approved the legislation in this form.

This brochure that was issued in anticipation of the arrival of Bill C-24 mentions as well that the Government will be responsible for the strategic and budgetary decisions of all parent Crown corporations, and through them their wholly-owned subsidiaries, and for any directives the Government issues. These directives will be tabled in Parliament. That strikes me as being a far cry from the Crown corporation notion as it first came into being.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are signalling that my time is running out. However, Mr. Speaker, I would commend to you and to anyone interested in Crown corporations between now and six months hence, when we shall be examining this Bill again after committee hearings to look very carefully at the brochure issued by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) in March, 1984 entitled New Legislative Proposals for Control and Accountability of Crown Corporations. They are not legislative proposals for Crown corporations; they are amendments to the Financial Administration Act, which I think is quite the wrong way to proceed, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Crosbie (p. 3688).

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, once again I wish to say a few words on Bill C-24, and I support the amendment to put this matter over for another six months.

Of course, the purpose of the Bill is to amend the Financial Administration Act to provide greater Cabinet control over Crown corporations and to provide greater accountability to Parliament. That is a real task. As we have pointed out repeatedly, the Bill does not have enough teeth.

The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) referred to a recent document which was put out by the Treasury Board entitled Crown Corporations and Other Canadian Government Corporate Interests. Having looked through this publication, I find the number of Crown corporations and their subsidiaries to be almost unbelievable. It is a clear indication that there is absolutely no control of their growth. It seems that everyone sets up his own little Crown corporation.

In 1962, there were only 28 Crown corporations controlling $8.4 billion in assets. Today there are over 300; at least we think that is the figure. We really do not know because we cannot obtain an exact number. Today, these over 300 Crown corporations are supposed to be controlling $67 billion in assets.

The problem we have with Crown corporations is the lack of precise figures. Interpretation is an integral part of the problem. Assets change hands, responsibilities shift and lines of accountability are often difficult to trace.

I should like to refer to the decentralization policy of the Government. It wants to move Crown corporations out of Ottawa. The way some officials of Government are talking, Ottawa will become a ghost town. I will deal with that shortly in more detail.

Many corporations are subsidiaries of other Crown corporations with more than 50 per cent of them federally owned or associates with 50 per cent or less federal ownership. They do not report directly to a government Department or a Minister of the Crown, let alone to Parliament. Employment in Crown corporations totals about 263,000 people. Federal Government Departments, by comparison, employ 239,000, not counting the 84,000 members of the Armed Forces. What is causing a lot of confusion in Ottawa with Crown corporations is the Government's decentralization policy. It wants to move Crown corporations and government Departments out of Ottawa. Some of the candidates for the leadership of the Liberal Party have stated that they will disband certain government Departments or Crown corporations. We do not know which ones. That is also causing much concern in the Public Service in the Ottawa area. It is making it most difficult for Crown corporations and others to function properly when they do not know whether they will be disbanded or moved.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) is a very strong supporter of decentralization. He is prepared to move many Departments and Crown corporations out of Ottawa. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) has said that he will do away with three government Departments. We do not know how many public servants will be losing their jobs with the decentralization plan, how many will have to move or how many will be able to move. There is no end to the concern in the Ottawa area. I hope we will receive some clarification or some clear-cut statements on how many public servants will lose their jobs, how many will have to move and how many will have to look for jobs in other Departments and so forth, because they are protected under the Public Service Act and do not have to move.

The householder which was distributed in Ottawa Centre by its author, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans), is also causing much confusion. He has clouded the issue considerably in this his latest householder. I picked one of them out of a trash can in the lobby of my apartment block. Perhaps after people read this document, it goes into the trash can. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre pointed out in this document the serious problem in the economy in the Ottawa area. He indicated how the Sparks Street Mall would be affected if Crown corporations are moved out of this city. I am sure Crown corporations are in a state of confusion right now. Many of them do not know what to do with their employees. It is difficult to make any long-range plans.

Members of Cabinet and John Turner, who stated that he will cut $15 billion and do away with a lot of government Departments and public servants, should indicate which Crown corporations will be moved and which ones will be disbanded. That would help us in dealing with Bill C-24. Certainly it would be a great help to the Crown corporations. They rent space. They have contracts with local contractors and consultants. These vague and wild statements about emptying Ottawa and moving out government Departments and Crown corporations should be clarified.

It is very strange that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has not explained John Turner's position in this document, as he is involved in his campaign. I hope there will be a clarification of the decentralization policy of the Government to the citizens of Ottawa Centre. They should know what will happen to them, which ones will be moved, how many will lose their jobs, and how many will be transferred. They cannot operate properly with these vague and wild statements of candidates going across the country trying to bribe voters. They say, "Vote for me and I will give you a Crown corporation", "We will move one to Winnipeg", "How would you like one in Newfoundland?", and "We will move everything out of Ottawa across the country and you will feel more at home in Canada". I hope the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre will clarify that for his constituents, the majority of whom are public servants.

Mr. Evans: The majority are not public servants; that is how much you know.

An Hon. Member: He knows much more than John Turner.

Mr. McKenzie: Of course, with regard to Mr. Turner, I cannot comment. Time will not allow me to cover all his positions. I simply do not have the time to deal with all his positions.

I see Mr. Speaker is giving me a signal. I hope the Hon. Member will clarify this for his constituents and correct the statements in his little booklet, which I picked out of a trash can. I hope the Government and the whole House will support a six-month hoist on this Bill.

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, we have now had 78 speakers on this Bill. Bill C-24 is designed to try to deal with some of the problems of Crown corporations and to try to provide an accounting system for the House of Commons to get some control over them. What fascinates me in terms of this Bill, for which the Opposition has called, is the Opposition's determined opposition to the House of Commons getting control over Crown corporations.

I certainly understand the ambivalence of members of Her Majesty's Official Opposition. It is because when they were in power they were in power they were one of the most enthusiastic developers of the concept of Crown corporations. In point of fact, if we look back in history at people who put together

Canadian National Railways, we find that it was neither the Liberals nor the socialists. It was the Conservative Party.

Miss MacDonald: And the CBC.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): As the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) points out, the CBC and whatnot.

Mr. McDermid: The Bank of Canada.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): The Bank of Canada as well.

Mr. McDermid: The National Film Board.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Yes, the National Film Board. The issue that we are dealing with is not to question corporations, whether we should have them or not. We are going to have them. Her Majesty's Official Opposition likes them, supports them and uses them. We are not talking about eliminating Crown corporations. We are talking about bringing them under some form of parliamentary control. That is an entirely different matter.

● (1640)

Listening to the speeches of the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Blenkarn), Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) and other Members over there, I say, my God, there is no way one would know that that subject was being debated in the House of Commons. They talk about how evil Crown corporations are, how rotten Crown corporations are, and how destructive Crown corporations are. It is difficult to remember a time in the House when Members opposite have actually opposed in as rabid a fashion as they are opposing this Bill the establishment of any Crown corporation that we now have. The reason is simple. Crown corporations are a pragmatic response by governments in Canada to the peculiarities of the Canadian psyche, Canadian geography and our economic system.

If we want to do certain things, we have to mobilize capital in a big way. If we are going to mobilize it in a big way, normally we have government involvement. Take for example, the CPR. The CPR is the bastion of what the Conservative Party says is right about the free enterprise system. If one looks at the way in which the CPR is put together, one finds that it is the original Crown corporation put together by a 19th century government. Who was it that financed CPR? The CPR could never have built those railways had it not been for the funding that Sir John A. Macdonald's Government provided. He did not take equity. He took debt, and he provided grants. By and large, that is what Crown corporations are all about. The issue is not whether we will have Crown corporations. We are going to have them. We will have Crown corporations with the full support of the House of Commons.

What is the issue? Obviously the issue is how to bring them under control. How do we provide parliamentary control? How do we provide parliamentary input into control over and above that control which we now have and over and above the control which the Government has through the Cabinet to the Cabinet committees? That is what this Bill is about and that is what the subject of debate ought to be. The last two times the Bill has been debated, those issues have never been touched in a serious way by Her Majesty's Opposition. Instead, we have had catalogues of complaint about this, that and the other thing.

Let me give a few ideas, for which I take no credit. They were discussed in the special committee that looked into parliamentary reform. One issue that we examined in a very real way was the question of Crown corporations. How can Parliament get its finger on Crown corporations in a way that will be seen to be useful and effective? We have two problems.

First, you do not want to take Crown corporation inspections and investigations out from under the committee of the House of Commons that has relevance in that area. It would not make much sense to set up a special committee on Crown corporations, have the committee look at Air Canada, and not have the Transport Committee look at Air Canada as a Crown corporation as well. You cannot look at air transport in Canada unless you look at Air Canada. The consequence is that we have to find a way to look at Crown corporations in a way which would make some sense with regard to the role which they play in our economic system and in our governmental system, as well as look at Crown corporations as a vehicle in themselves.

We talked about how to accomplish this duality. How could you look at a Crown corporation as an instrument and an institution to see whether we had gone too far or whether the Crown corporation had expanded too far? How do we look at the issue of whether the time has come to sell a Crown corporation or parts of it? What is the time to split them and re-combine them in different ways?

The House of Commons by and large has shown very little interest in those subjects. The House of Commons is an extremely reactive body. It is not a leadership body. We have never really had debate in terms of asking about Crown corporations in this way. Even the debate that we have had so far on Crown corporations has never really dealt with those questions.

Let me outline some possible hypothetical solutions which have to be tackled, probably in the new Parliament, if we want to get a grip on Crown corporations. First, we should set up a special committee of the House of Commons directed toward looking at Crown corporations as Crown corporations, not from the point of view of their activities. I believe that can best be done by the various standing committees that have an operational interest in a particular field. For example, the Transport Committee should look at Air Canada, the Energy Committee should look at Petro-Canada, and so on. You can run down the whole gamut in that way.

I believe it would be worth while to have a special reference to establish a special committee to look at Crown corporations so as to examine at least two matters that trouble me about Crown corporations. The first matter is the enormous variety of Crown corporations. If you look at the recent list of Crown corporations published by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), you will not find any common denominator as to what is and what is not a Crown corporation. There are Crown corporations that involve the last post fund to Petro-Canada, to subsidies of Petro-Canada, to Air Canada and so on. One of the first things we need to know is what is a Crown corporation. The Crown corporations in which Members of Parliament are most interested at this point are those that intervene in some way in the economic affairs of our country.

The second question that has to be looked at in such a committee is the impact of Crown corporations in monopoly situations, such as Northern Power Commission, Northern Transportation, and Air Canada, CP Air policy, and the Petro-Canada situation with respect to the other oil companies. We have to examine the role that these companies play where there is a competitive factor. Then we have to look at Crown corporations from the point of view of where we have a monopoly operation. Canadair and Air Canada are classic examples. We also have to provide some guidelines as to the risk that we ought to take in our Crown corporations. When you go into business, establish a new corporation or buy someone else out, you take on some very real risks. Nobody can foretell the future. It means that each Crown corporation is up against its own form of risk.

We do not debate those issues in the House of Commons, mainly because we do not provide ourselves the time to do it. We in this place probably manage our time in the most incompetent way of any legislature in the world. If Members are interested in these very real points of policy, then we have to provide time to debate them. In addition, we have to find a mechanism which would force us to pay attention to the facts or the problem in front of us, instead of wandering all over the map, as we do now.

This is why I suggest that we set up a special committee to examine the question of Crown corporations. This should be examined from the three points of view I have mentioned. The committee should spend some time trying to develop guidelines it expects the Government to follow in terms of the creation of Crown corporations in the future. Also, when it examines Crown corporations, there should be guidelines for this examination both on the floor of the House and in committee. If we were able to agree on a platform and pay attention to that when we come back after the next sequence of elections, we would have served everybody very well and this debate might have been of some use after all, after having gone through 79 speeches.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, isn't it wonderful that a Member of the Government finally got up to defend its legislation? A Member on the Government side has finally had the courage to stand up and support this government legislation. That is wonderful, just wonderful! If the Hon. Member has such a wonderful suggestion, why does he not persuade his colleagues to bring in the amendment so that we can look at it?

• (1650)

Members of both opposition Parties have been talking about accountability and responsibility. That is what we want for our corporations. We are not saying that all corporations are bad, because they are not all bad, some are good. However, There should be accountability. The people should have the opportunity to know what these Crown corporations are doing rather than going on year after year with no one, not even the Ministers, knowing what they are doing.

I would like to deal with some important points regarding this Bill. I shall begin by reading six points contained in a letter which I think must be noted very carefully. They are:

1. First and foremost, a statute overrules any Standing Order. This, in my judgment, means that the House should take a very hard look at any Bill which would have this effect, and should pass it only if very solid proof is advanced that such a provision is essential for some indispensable public purpose.

It would take a great deal to convince me that any such provisions are ever required. I suppose it is conceivable that, in a great war, or something of that sort, they might be justifiable; but, plainly, no such situation is involved here, at least as far as I can see.

I think the Opposition should raise Cain on this.

2. Specifically, section 2.2(3) is almost incredible. Surely, never before has any statute invaded the rights and privileges of the House of Commons by providing for a committee and then forbidding a motion to concur in its report. This is plainly a matter for the House itself to decide. If it wants to forbid motions for concurrence, it can of course do so. And, even if it does not, a motion for concurrence is not obligatory. If no one wants to move it, all right. But to forbid a motion for concurrence is an emasculation of the rights, powers and privileges of the House of Commons.

The Government should be made to stand and deliver on this. It is, on the face of it, a most gross invasion of the rights, powers and privileges of the House.

Heaven knows the House has little enough power now. But this, "Hang your clothes on a hickory limb, But don't go near the water," is intolerable. What possible excuse can there be for this?

3. Passage of this provision could provide the Executive with a very dangerous precedent. It could try the same game again, forbidding motions to concur in the reports of other committees, and pleading, in justification, "Well, you accepted it in Bill C-24".

4. What justification can be offered for section 154(4)? The powers of the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments are already feeble enough. There are too many exemptions, and too slipperily worded, now. Why add to them? Why add to the secrecy which the freedom of information legislation was supposed to help us escape from?

5. There is one piece of very sloppy drafting: section 155(3), which speaks of a "committee of Parliament". There is no such animal. There are Committees of the House of Commons; there are Committees of the Senate; there are Joint Committees of both Houses. But Parliament consists of the Queen, the Senate and the House of Commons . . . How can you have a Committee of the Queen?

6. Section 155 provides that the motion contemplated shall stand referred to such committee as either House (or both) may designate. As I read it, this means it must go to a committee. But the committee is allowed only thirty days to consider and report. If it has not finished its job in thirty days, the Government can then move the motion to authorize the transaction under section 100, and this must be disposed of after only seven hours' uninterrupted debate.

This is another limitation on the powers of committees.

The Government should be pressed to justify it, pressed very hard.

"For ways that are dark and tricks that are strange—"

The six points which I have just put on the record were contained in a letter from Eugene Forsey, a former Senator and a man learned in the law. That is what he thinks about Bill C-24. I thought it was very important that that be put on the record, particularly coming as it does from a man of the stature of the former Senator, Mr. Eugene Forsey.

I would like to deal with one other point, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) mentioned the fact that Sir John A. Macdonald brought in the CPR. Sure he did, but that was a different proposition entirely. The CPR had one big job to do. It was to build a rail line across the country in order that B.C. could come into Confederation. Sir John A. Macdonald made good provisions for that to happen. It was not Sir John A. Macdonald who nullified those provisions or who refused to live up to those obligations. For instance, passenger train service was promised forever. The CPR made definite promises. Why is it not accountable to the committees of the House?

What about Canadair? I am all in favour of building airplanes in Canada. I deplore the fact that the once strong shipbuilding industry in the country has gone to wrack and ruin because of the attitude taken by the present Government. Canadair is on the way to wrack and ruin. We can build good planes, but we do not have to okay indebtedness, sloppiness, carelessness, and a lack of accountability. The directors of Canadair and the Senator who is supposed to be responsible for it have all been reappointed in spite of the facts that they are losing money left and right, that they do not report to the House, and that they do not have any accountability at all. I do not call the reappointment of those people accountability.

What did Joel Bell, the new President of the Canada Development Investment Corporation, have to say when he began to look the corporation over? He found that it had 22 vice presidents.

Mr. McKenzie: All Grits.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. He did not say how many directors there were, but he did say that there were so many vice presidents that he got rid of 10 of them right away. For how many years has that situation been going on? The Government does not know what is going on. We are opposed to that type of thing. We are opposed to extravagance when spending the people's money. We are opposed to those who say: "Let the people pay; it does not matter how much is wasted or what is done with it, because the people will pay".

Joel Bell then found that Canadair had so many employees that he was able to discharge 338 of them. How long were those 338 employees sitting on cushions, or on whatever else they sit over there, doing nothing? For how long were they being paid with the people's money only for their good looks while a million people were unemployed and living under the poverty line?

We are opposed to those kinds of things, Mr. Speaker. We want accountability for Crown corporations. We want the people to know what the Crown corporations are doing, and we want full value for every dollar spent.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I suspect that this will probably be the shortest speech on record, but I do want to be on that record as supporting the six-months' hoist amendment that has been proposed by this side. I think that that is a very constructive idea.

Normally when a six-months' hoist is moved, it is moved for dilatory purposes. However, under the set of circumstances with which we are faced today, I think that the idea of allowing this matter to stand over for six months—by which time we will in all probability have a new Progressive Conservative Government—will enable us and the people of Canada to bring to bear on this question our views and our expertise.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING COMMITTEE TO REVIEW ESTIMATES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South) moved:

That a Standing Committee of this House be appointed and that it be empowered to review annually, and from time to time as may be necessary, the total amount of any Estimates or Supplementary Estimates to determine whether the Estimates or Supplementary Estimates in their totality exceed the ability of the country to pay the moneys required and to priorize such estimates of expenditure of the government to ensure that the moneys appropriated by Parliament for operations are appropriated to those needs of the people of Canada in the order of their priority.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the whole question of coming to grips with the budgetary deficit of this country has occupied not only Members of Parliament from this side, but Members of Parliament from the other side. Indeed, the leading contender for the leadership of the Party forming the present Government has said that there must be some system of priorizing the expenditures of the country.

The problem is this: Our present system of clearing Estimates is that the Estimates are presented in the blue book and are sent to the standing committees of the House. At the present time, Members who sit on the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs are people generally interested in issues concerning health and welfare; Members who sit on the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture are people interested in communications; and Members who sit on the committee dealing with Indian affairs and northern development are people interested in those concerns. The tendency is not to cut back on an item of government concern in which Members are interested. In the whole presentation of Estimates, we have Estimates coming forward in which no effort is made to priorize, no effort is made at frugality, and no effort is made at determining what should be an expenditure that is appropriate for the Government.

As well, we have budgets coming forth and we have borrowing authority Bills coming forth. Members from all sides of the House rise and say that it is too much and that the Government is spending more than the country can afford. But when the Estimate comes before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, Members on that committee want to spend more money. We have the strange notion that Members of Parliament are saying, "Cut expenditures. Let us priorize it. Let us be frugal. Let us stay within our ability to pay the bills for the taxes received", and at the same time are asking for greater expenditures.

We have had debates in this session demanding increased expenditures for education, for health, for pensions, for forestry, and so on. Those are all valid concerns and things for which we as Members of Parliament are receiving demands from our constituents.

The fact is that we are only able to collect about $70 billion in the current years. We are going to spend approximately $100 billion. Therefore, there will be a shortfall of approximately $30 billion. Obviously, we are going to try to spend ourselves rich and spend on programs that we cannot afford in total. That is because as Members of Parliament we have not been honest with ourselves; we have not directed our attention to the things we want, to what we want from government, and to what priority we want them to have.

I do not think there is any question, certainly from my point of view, that the senior citizens in this country must be well looked after. We must also ensure that there is an education system which will train our young, and even our not-so-young, so that they can participate fully in the economic activities of the country. There is no question that we must provide for a proper defence of Canada. However, even these things must be placed in priority. Where do we place these things in priority when we are looking at a debt of $147 million, money which has been set aside as a subsidy to insulate people's houses? Where do we put the $187 million—that is the money, if my memory serves me correctly, that was set aside to pay people for new furnaces in order that they could convert from oil to wood, natural gas or something of that nature? Where do we put a program which provides for almost $2 billion this year to drill holes for oil, when the price of oil is dropping and when, in fact, we have all sorts of resources that are already known for example, in the tar sands area in Alberta? Where do we put that $2 billion that is paid to companies, not for finding oil, but largely on the basis of their shareholding and whether that shareholding is Canadian? Even though the tulip show in the national capital is absolutely magnificent, where do we put the $107 million that was set aside for the National Capital Commission? That budget, I would say, is almost equal to the total budget of the City of Mississauga for parks, administration, education—for everything put together. What priority do we give to these amounts?

Our attention has not been called and we have not been asked, "Now look, do you want $900 million to go to the CBC or do you want to pay senior citizens this amount of money in a pension?" If the choice were there, where would we put our priority? For too long we have said that we want our cake and we want to eat it too and, thank you very much, put ice cream on it as well. It is the obligation of Members of Parliament to be responsible, but this House has not been responsible.

Therefore, what we ought to have in this House is a committee—you might call it a Treasury Board type of committee—that would look at the total ambit of government activity, every estimate coming forward, and that would put a priority on it. Some things are absolutely necessary, some things are perhaps not as necessary, and some other things have a pretty low priority. They are perhaps desirable, but not necessary.

We have the ability to charge our citizens taxes. What we have tended to do is not only to take the money in taxes, but charge yet unborn citizens taxes for expenditures made by us through the use of the borrowing system. It may be proper for us to borrow against the income of the taxes that will be paid by citizens yet unborn, but that should be a question of priorizing.

• (1710)

What this motion attempts to do, Sir, is to bring to the attention of this Parliament the obligation of Parliament to take a look at the various expenditures of Government, come to grips with where the money should be spent, and make Parliament responsible for the order in which the money is spent. Almost all of the money we spend in that blue book of ours has some value. It is perhaps money well spent. However, is it well spent in priority?

If this Parliament had a committee which deliberately looked at these things, I suggest, Sir, that we would not have the kind of situation where a leadership candidate such as the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development (Mr. Johnston) is going around the country saying that he has grave doubts as to the value of the DRIE program and that he thinks his own Ministry, MSERD, should perhaps be abolished. We have had other candidates for the leadership of that Party saying that perhaps they could eliminate three whole Departments. Parliament would have dealt with these matters on a priority basis. Why would Parliament have done that? Because Parliament and its committee would have been charged with making sure that the money which is available is spent in priority. We would then quite apparently have a situation where Parliament would say, "Yes, it is important that we have an aircraft industry, but not so important that we do not pay proper attention to the pensions due to our senior citizens and do not pay proper attention to the money required to finance post-secondary education".

The Government may say that it is the obligation of government to determine these things. Yes, government is absolutely and in final form responsible for the spending which it presents to Parliament. However, government expenditures must be approved by this Parliament. In that regard, this Parliament should have a committee to go over government expenditures so that this Parliament, representing as it does all sides and representing the people of the country, could say to government, "Yes, expenditures are important but here is our priority; this is what we say you should spend the money on first, and this is what we say you should spend the money on second; here is where we fit the $1.2 billion or so you are going to give to Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation; and here is where we see social housing as against family allowances or child tax credits".

No one can have all the pie, Sir, and all of the ice cream and all of the things one would like to have. In our own families we must determine whether mother gets a new coat and whether that coat is a mink or an ordinary cloth coat. At the present time, the tendency is that expenditures are made up in a budgetary envelope system, and expenditures in those envelopes are allowed to creep up by some sort of a percentage. But there is no priorizing by Parliament between envelopes. There is no determination as to whether we should spend more money on defence and less money on external affairs and foreign aid. The fact is that we spend more on both. Is that the proper priorizing of where we should be going? Surely, it is not good enough to have budgets and Estimates presented to us where every Department receives 5 per cent, 8 per cent or 9 per cent more, and those that really squeak receive 13 per cent or 14 per cent more, but everyone gets more? Surely when revenues are not there to cover expenditures, there must be a situation where Parliament is called in to judge whether CIDA money is more important than housing money, or whether subsidies to the Export Development Corporation are more important than subsidies to some municipality to supply urban transportation.

We cannot have all of these things, and it is up to this Parliament to determine which of these things we can have. Those broad determinations must be made and should be made by a separate committee of the House charged with that concern.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have an opportunity to make a few comments this afternoon on Motion No. 101, which was put forward by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I believe that the basis of this motion really relates to government expenditure and deficits. As I listened to the Hon. Member's argument about the idea of having one committee of Parliament which would priorize government spending, I thought back to the two elections of 1979 and 1980. If you recall, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party won the 1979 election. In that election, one of the concepts of that Party, I believe, was that it would lower taxes by some $2 billion, but it would buy new ships for the navy, and it would also grant home owner relief of a couple of billion dollars a year. That is not new because most Parties at election time do make promises which involve the expenditure of money.

The 1980 election, I believe, was very significant—perhaps because it was just nine months after the 1979 election—because, for the first time that I can remember, at least the two major Parties in our country were being very careful not to promise anything which was going to cost very much money. I recall that the Liberal Party promised a $35 a month increase in the guaranteed income supplement, a promise which it kept, but the total expenditure for this was very carefully calculated. I believe that the Conservative Party did the same. That election was significant because everyone was remembering back to the 1979 election and with every promise by both Parties, the news media, and independent observers carefully calculated, exactly how much money was being promised by each Party. Everyone realized that because of the financial straitjacket we were in as a country it would be difficult to keep those promises.

Remembering back to that election makes me conscious of the concern which the Hon. Member has expressed. However, the problem I see with the motion to set up a committee which would be a sort of superduper estimates committee is that it would change our basic parliamentary system. The Government proposes legislation or expenditures. It is up to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) and the Minister involved to prepare a blue book and spending Estimates, and for the Government to set the priorities as it sees them and then propose them to Parliament. Parliament ultimately disposes of these Estimates and decides whether it will accept or reject them.

In our parliamentary system we have a very highly disciplined caucus system. If there is a majority Government, the Estimates are generally carried. If there is a minority Government, such as we had in 1972, very often within eight months or one year the Government may well be defeated, either on its budget or on its spending Estimates. Of course that is a matter of confidence, and so the Government can be defeated. Yet under our system the responsibility for making proposals to Parliament remains with the Government.

The motion which the Hon. Member for Mississauga South proposes is in some ways a very radical motion. It suggests that the House or a committee of the House would somehow have a responsibility in determining exactly what the spending Estimates would be for the Government. Unless we change our whole parliamentary system to one where the House would operate on a congressional system, I believe that this proposal would not be acceptable. It is not really clear to me exactly how that system would work. I suppose we could have a committee which could make recommendations, but it seems to me that the responsibility must ultimately remain with the Government as to the amount of its expenditures, deficits and so on.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I would like to review some of the steps which the Government has taken in recent years to strengthen accountability and management throughout the Government and its relationship to Parliament in general. I would like to underline at this time that while these measures have been significant indeed, they have respected, they have been consistent with, and they have complemented the existing parliamentary traditions. The focus has consistently been on making these conditions work more effectively, rather than on throwing the traditions themselves into question. This approach is in fundamental conflict with the idea of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

In our system, Parliament is responsible for three main tasks; to legislate, to grant supply and to authorize taxes, and, finally, to support or not to support the Government of the day. These tasks are traditionally performed by granting, or refusing, assent to measures proposed by the Government after they have undergone public scrutiny and debate. The responsibility for governing the country is vested, not in Parliament, but in the Ministers of the Crown. Parliament is responsible for the continuous scrutiny of the Government's implementation of the measures to which Parliament has given assent.

There is a view held by some that Parliament should play a greater role in actually framing the measures put to it by the Government. It is this belief which appears to underlie the motion before us and which is the reason why it represents such a radical break with existing parliamentary traditions. Fundamental to the role of Parliament as a body to which the Government must be accountable is the need for Parliament to approve the Government's expenditures and Parliament's powers to review these expenditures. These powers are currently exercised through the Public Accounts Committee and through several standing committees of the House studying Estimates. Significant improvements in how the Government reports to these various committees have been implemented in recent years. I will be reviewing some of these a bit later in my remarks in order to illustrate how accountability has already been significantly strengthened.

Several noteworthy proposals to alter the existing committee structure and powers have been put forward in recent years. The Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability, the Lambert Commission, made a number of recommendations in this regard. Members of Parliament, such as the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), placed a set of proposals before the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures in November of 1982. This set of proposals would see the creation of four new standing committees with expanded powers. In particular, these committees would be empowered to become involved in the actual formulation of expenditure proposals and counter-proposals rather than being restricted to the scrutiny of measures put forward by the Government. Parliament would itself become directly involved in the financial operations of the Government under these proposals. Indeed, the Huntington-Lachance report itself concluded that if its recommendations were accepted, it is obvious that these committees would become the foundation of the financial operation of the Government of Canada.

I would point out that implicit in these proposals is the creation of an extensive parliamentary bureaucracy which would require substantial resources for its operations in order to support the work resulting from the expanded committee mandates, a bureaucracy which would parallel that already in existence to support the Government in the formulation of its own spending proposals.

These measures proposed in the motion before us are obviously very similar and close in spirit to those of the two Members.

The Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures itself based its seventh report largely on its consideration of the Huntington-Lachance proposals. Interestingly enough, however, Mr. Speaker, the committee's recommendations, while accepting the establishment of new standing committees, backs off substantially from empowering these committees to become directly involved in the operations of government. Indeed, the committee report states emphatically that, "It is important to stress that this committee is seeking for Parliament an increased influence in the analysis of Governdment policies, not direct control of the Government. The committee fully accepts that the executive must be free to make its judgments and to govern, subject, of course, to maintaining the confidence of the House of Commons".

This clearly illustrates that there are different roads to parliamentary reform and that indeed strong differences of opinion now exist among parliamentarians on the subject. The motion before us is clearly premature and is being put forward without an adequate context within which its pros and cons can be weighed.

Before concluding my remarks, I would like to elaborate on some of the background necessary for a fuller consideration of these issues by reviewing some of the measures implemented by the Government in recent years to strengthen accountability and management generally, particularly in its relations to Parliament.

In 1975, the Government made manifest its intent to improve the management and control of its expenditures and of Government more broadly by establishing the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability, the Lambert Commission. The terms of reference of the Commission as set out by the Government clearly reflect its concerns. These terms referred to unprecedented demands placed on government by the growth requested by the public in its responsibilities and programs, a desire to ensure efficiency and probity in the Public Service of Canada, a serious concern about the adequacy of financial administration in government for establishing effective control over, and accountability for, public funds, and the need to use resources effectively, avoid waste and increase productivity in government.

Even before the Commission began its deliberations and until the present, the Government has been taking a range of steps to respond to these concerns and thereby strengthen management and accountability throughout the Government. I would like at this time to touch briefly on some of the major initiatives of the last few years in this regard.

There has been the introduction of the policy and expenditure management system, the envelope system, and the associated fiscal plan over a multi-year horizon. This was a major step forward in that it alters fundamentally the stance from which the Government reports to Parliament on expenditures and other fiscal matters and adds significantly to the information provided to Parliament concerning the Government's overall spending plans. It provides an expenditure management framework that sets multi-year levels for both total outlays and for various envelopes or policy sectors. It established policy committees within Cabinet to undertake policy development and decision-making within the discipline of the envelope system.

While the previous Conservative Government introduced portions of this system, the current Government has provided its consolidation and final implementation. I would also remind Hon. Members that the developmental work on the envelope system was undertaken before the previous Conservative Government was in office.

The current fiscal plan, made public in the Budget of last February, is only the most recent illustration of the fact that the Government has recognized the view, expressed by the Lambert Commission among others, that such a fiscal plan can provide Parliament and the public with an opportunity to consider the Government's total fiscal plans and its underlying priorities. It also provides a clear fiscal context within which parliamentarians can situate the Estimates, both Main and Supplementary.

Policy expenditures and management system, PEMS, another way of describing the envelope system, facilitates expenditure planning on a top-down basis, employing the functional envelopes set out in the fiscal plan. The system has been designed to achieve closer integration of the government's priority setting, policy development and expenditure management decision-making processes; decentralize decision-making authority, in recognition of the increasing range and complexity of government responsibility and the interrelated policies and programs designed to discharge them; increase ministerial direction and control over the policy, planning and expenditure decisions of the government; and provide adequate time for the planning process, so that Ministers can review existing policies and programs and bring about desirable changes in the use of resources to reflect changing priorities of the Government. Most important, perhaps, it makes transparent to Parliament and the public the processes through which the Government establishes its priorities and the over-all fiscal constraints within which this is done.

A key elaboration of PEMS has been the introduction by the Treasury Board of the multi-year operational planning system. This system is aimed at fostering more integrated resource planning, budgeting and management throughout the Government. Two key concepts, budgeting to results and budgeting for management, underlie the multi-year operational plans submitted to the Treasury Board. The first concept is designed to facilitate practical but systematic budgetary analysis based on concrete program outputs and inputs. The second is aimed at providing a clear understanding throughout the Government of the responsibilities of Public Service managers and how these responsibilities translate into budgetary requirements.

The office of the Comptroller General, created in 1978 in response to a central recommendation of the Lambert Commission, assists in the establishment of sound management practices in the federal government by developing policies and standards and by promoting and monitoring improvements in financial and operational management. Over the last four years, 30 or so Departments have participated in one of the Comptroller General's key initiatives called improvement in management practices and controls, or IMPAC, which is directed at the internal management process of individual departments. IMPAC has resulted in the establishment of action plans for over 100 major projects to improve organization, planning, internal and external reporting, automation, program delivery procedures, audit and program evaluation. Almost 80 per cent of the work on these projects has now been completed, and there is clear evidence of the ongoing yields that are the result.

It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the Comptroller General's office is the one department of Government, although it is gradually working through practically all Departments, to implement a much more effective system of improvements in management and control practices. In fact, the number of man-years is being reduced because these procedures have been implemented in many Departments.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to review another important achievement of this Government in relation to strengthening accountability—its strong and continued commitment to improve the information which is provided to parliamentarians and, through us, to all Canadians on the spending plans which we ask Parliament to approve.

The initiatives already described, such as the policy and expenditure management system and the improvement to management practices and controls, project IMPAC, are, in a sense, internal mechanisms used by the Government to better plan its proposed spending and to better manage and control funds once they are approved by Parliament. However, central to effective financial control is the presence of appropriate financial and management accountability information to Parliament. Our progress in providing better information to Parliament has strengthened the role of Parliament and increased the ability of Parliament to hold the Government more accountable for its performance.

The Government's Estimates, which are tabled in this House, represent only the visible tip of a comprehensive and complex process of priority setting and trade offs, which ultimately produce the spending plans of the Government. And yet it is a crucial element in the equation of parliamentary control and governmental accountability.

When the Lambert Commission recommended that the government improve the nature—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair regrets to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary but his time has expired. For debate, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, was it not Aristotle who said that the logical conclusion of democracy is chaos? The reason for that conclusion, Sir, reached by a much greater observer of constitutional affairs than myself, was that there is an inclination in everyone to try to get more out of a system that they put in it. You can see that in Canada today. Ask any Canadian walking down the street and he will agree that government expenditures must be reduced. They have got out of hand. But they do not want financing for their own pet projects reduced in any way. Everyone figures that they should get a tax break that is a little better, that the bridge in their locality should be built, or that their pension should be increased. Therefore, we have to find a system within the democratic workings of government—because I would not want to see that system go by the board—which would allow us to put a ceiling on government expenditures. For that reason I was pleased to second the motion of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

I agree with what the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) said in the first part of his speech. It was most interesting, indeed delightful to listen to. That was when he was thinking for himself. But in the second part of his speech, when he started reading from a text undoubtedly prepared by bureaucrats in the Department of Finance, I must admit I lost a little interest. However, he rightly pointed out that were the idea presented here today to be adopted in its entirety, we would have a system much more akin to that in the United States where negotiations go on between the executive branch and the legislative branch as to what the ultimate budget is going to be.

One of the problems we have is the system of compiling budgets and Estimates. Each sub-branch of a government Department figures out how much it has spent last year, what it would like to do in the following year, then it adds it all together, adds another 10 per cent for the slush fund, and passes it along to the next level of government. That level then consolidates and adds a little more. And so you go up the totem pole, until the Minister of Finance has to take all these amounts and present the bill to Parliament. When the bill is presented in the form of the Estimates and the blue book, with which we are all so familiar, there is practically nothing that parliamentarians can do to change it. At that time, to all intents and purposes the final figure is cast in stone. There is very little that parliamentarians, in government or in opposition, can do at that time.

I notice there is one Cabinet Minister in the House this afternoon. She would probably confirm my suspicions that every pressure put on a Cabinet Minister is to expend more money. This pressure comes from the Department for which the Minister has special responsibility. Whatever you ask of departmental officials, the inevitable response is that they need more person-years and more money. Whenever a Cabinet Minister talks to the responsible people, they always want more services. They want Government to spend more money on more things. Sometimes they want reductions in taxes, which amounts to the same thing in the end, I guess. So I certainly understand the difficulty facing government Members when they try to keep expenditures under control.

Many Members of Parliament and Cabinet Ministers are concerned with their own Departments and have little impact on over-all government financial policy and expenditures. Most of us tend to look upon ourselves as spokesmen for regional interests. I am as guilty of that as anyone. Or else we look upon ourselves as spokesmen for departmental or sectorial interests. On many occasions the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), when answering questions, presents himself as the spokesman for the agricultural industry, trying to get more and more from his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to spend on a very important part of our life and economy. But the Minister does not look at all government expenditures and the difficulty of keeping them under control. He has this one sectorial interest, an interest shared by many other Cabinet Ministers, especially the more junior Ministers. What we should do, Mr. Speaker, and I say "we" as government in the broadest sense, encompassing the executive and the legislative arms, what we should do is, first of all, decide what the maximum aggregate expenditure is to be. Once that is decided, then the next decision you have to make concerns how much each Department can have for its purposes. This is not done now.

The proposal put forward by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South at least brings forward the possibility that we might begin to look at affairs in that light rather than the way we do at present. If you go back in history you will see some of the concepts which have been brought into being to try to deal with this problem in times past. Treasury Board was one of the first ideas. However, at present that does not seem to be that effective, nor has it been for many years. The Lambert Commission recommended the envelope system. This was put into effect in 1979. I am beginning to have some doubts about the efficacy of the envelope system. The Treasury Board system has not worked, and now the envelope system does not appear to be working properly. What we are doing is to add more layers of bureaucracy to the system. In effect, you are slowing things down and making them more expensive than they would have been without these mechanisms and devices of control. These were admirable ideas, but they do not appear to be working in the way they were intended to.

Presumably it would be Parliament that would be called upon to endorse the recommendations of the committee of which the Hon. Member speaks in his motion. That means that Parliament as a whole would determine the maximum aggregate expenditure. I do not know what types of tests we would have to use, but a logical criterion for ascertaining the maximum would be a percentage of Gross National Product. We would find out in advance what percentage of the GNP should be used for federal purposes. That then gives us the figure which would be distributed among the competing demands. If priorization were to be applied by committee and Parliament, it would impose a sense of responsibility on individual Members of Parliament, which at present appears to be somewhat lacking. Of course, it would be very difficult, but it would make MPs act responsibly. They would no longer be able to hide behind the Government or blame someone else if their pet project were not funded. If it were found that a road in one part of the country had priority over a road in another part of the country, the two Members concerned would have equal responsibility for the final decision on where the money was to be spent.

With these thoughts in mind, Sir, it is my pleasure to be able to support the ideas presented today by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. If implemented, I am sure they would do much to restore to Parliament its true historic role as a protector of the public purse.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, at first blush the motion seems rather appealing to parliamentarians. Given a quick reading, one would think the motion would expand the role of Parliament in expenditure control and increase the level of accountability, which is of course a buzzword for Members of Parliament. After all, keeping the Government accountable is the raison d'être of Parliament. Parliament is a talking shop, but the debate has to have a point. The purpose of our debate is to ensure that the programs we approve are well directed; that the policy thrust is sound; and that the targeting of programs is accurate. What I mean by that is that we must ensure that the money we appropriate goes to where it is needed most. Once these programs are in place, Mr. Speaker, it is Parliament's task to see that they continue to be implemented in the way approved by Parliament; that they do not become diverted; that the programs do not in some way change course and go beyond the spirit and will of Parliament.

The task of program evaluation is a difficult one to impose upon politicians. If that were our task, even in the enlarged and expanded committee proposed by the Hon. Member, then we would need a great deal of expert help in program evaluation. That is my difficulty with the motion. I see it as being somewhat too narrow in its scope. It is primarily concerned with the amounts expended. However, if we are talking about accountability in all its aspects, it means ensuring that the programs on which funds are expended continue to meet the Government's priorities and objectives as approved by Parliament.

• (1750)

For a long while now the Government of Canada has recognized the importance of its own internal accountability system. The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) quite rightly drew attention to this system. The people of Canada should know that there is and has been developing within the Government of Canada quite an admirable program evaluation system. It has been on going since the 1960s. It has been improved upon ever since. For example, we now have the Office of the Comptroller General. We now have the policy and expenditure management system, known as PEMS. We have Estimates now which are much easier to work with. They are more enlightening for parliamentarians working in committee and examining them. The Treasury Board has provided resources in all Departments for this evaluation activity to go on. While this activity goes on, there can be adjustments and corrections as required. The Auditor General, himself a servant of Parliament, has been interested in this entire process. He calls it "measuring cost-effectiveness".

These evaluation activities in government were not always as satisfactory as they are today. Today there is a requirement in every Department of government to evaluate not just the new programs which come into effect but all programs on a regular three-year to five-year cycle. They must show that moneys spent are applied efficiently and effectively in pursuit of the objectives of the Government as approved by Parliament. The oversight of all this activity is of course carried out by the Comptroller General whom I mentioned earlier.

I would like to review very quickly what this program evaluation system requires of each Department. There are three requirements: first, a need for programs in terms of the current, social and economic environment and current government priorities must be examined; second, an actual performance of the program in achieving desired objectives; and third, a potential for enhancing the cost effectiveness of programs through redesigned and improved operations, in other words, to upgrade efficiency.

Lest it be thought in this House or in the country at large that the program evaluation process, which has been improving all along, is still not very effective, let me remind Hon. Members that very recently a former Comptroller General, Mr. Harry Rogers, received recognition for his excellent work in that office in the area of program evaluation. In 1983, he was the recipient of the Myrdal Award for Government from the International Evaluation Research Society. A growing number of other government officials have been coming to Canada to see what we are doing. They have been impressed, and we have received a good deal of recognition.

In his 1983 report, the Auditor General included a chapter on program evaluation. I recommend to Hon. Members that they take a look at it. It recognized the significant improvements which have been made in this area. We must remember that this is a servant of the House who reported. In his report he recognized that improvements had been made and supported fully the Government's approach to evaluation. However, he noted that there was still room for improvement and that the quality of the studies conducted by evaluation units in each Department could still be upgraded and improved. All this activity known as program evaluation has involved more resources from Treasury Board and more public servants working in these units. They have been praised for what they are doing, but there is still room for improvement.

What is done with all their work? This is where I come down to the evaluation from the point of view of Parliament itself. We know that Cabinet gains a great deal from the work of these evaluation units. It assists them in the design of new programs, doing away with programs which no longer serve a purpose whenever that happens.

Mr. Nickerson: When have they ever done that?

Mr. Penner: That is a good question. It seems to me that they could make better use of these program evaluations, especially in the latter exercise. However, here is where I come to my problem. The problem I have in assessing the work of these program evaluation units is that officials who appear before parliamentary committees will not share with us the results of their work. Why will they not take us into their confidence so that we can draw our own conclusions on how good a job they have done? Then we could stand in the House and make recommendations to the Government or say that a program is no longer serving the needs for which it was designed or that a program ought to be changed or changed more quickly.

The problem of parliamentarians in committee is that when officials appear before us, they are really unwilling to share with us in a clear, concise way what they have discovered. Public money has made the evaluation possible. The evaluation can be used by the Government and by Cabinet. The evaluation can be used by the Government and by Cabinet. Why should parliamentarians be unable to use it? Always when we call for this kind of information, when we would like to be taken into the confidence of the officials and know what conclusions they have reached, they plead with us to go through the Freedom of Information Act to obtain it. They hedge and they draw back, or they give long answers which tend to confuse parliamentarians and the committee. This frustration which we now have in dealing with the Estimates and in working with officials in committee has led the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) to say that we need another committee, a more powerful and more sweeping committee, to undertake this task. If we had more efficient work in the existing standing committees, if more hard information were provided to us, we could do a good job and we would not need this super expenditure oversight committee recommended by the Hon. Member in his motion today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to make a few comments on this motion. I, like my colleagues, find much in this motion which is attractive. However, the implementation of the workings of this committee would in a sense be redundant if we made better use of the instruments that are already in place in the House to cope with various situations.

We should look at what the Government is trying to do with respect to strengthening public administration and accountability. This is extremely important in terms of the expenditures and the fact that we expect to obtain the very most for what we spend.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but we have reached six o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—TABLING OF LEGISLATION TO REMOVE DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN. (B) POSITION OF MINISTER

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, on April 30 last I appealed to both the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister responsible for the Status of Women (Mrs. Erola) to give priority to the pending legislation which would repeal Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act which discriminates against Indian Women.

Section 12(1)(b) deprives Indian women who marry non-Indians and also their children of Indian status. In contrast, non-Indian wives of status Indians and their children gain Indian status. This provision, which was imposed on Indian communities by the white man's Indian Act, is clearly unfair and discriminatory. It is up to the Government of Canad to remove this discriminatory section which it imposed and which is contrary to our new Charter of Rights. This should be dealt with separately from the question of self-government.

In response to my question, the Minister responsible for the Status of Women agreed that the amendments to the Indian Act must come first and that this Bill should be dealt with separately from the self-government legislation. I urge her to continue to advocate this plan in Cabinet. I am sure that women parliamentarians of all Parties, who joined forces before to oppose Section 12(1)(b), will support her in working toward this priority.

The NDP strongly supports the concept of self-government for Indian peoples. The present patriarchal system must end. Self-government is long overdue. Surely, however, Indian women who lost their status as a result of non-Indian legislation should have the right to participate in this self-government process.

We recognize that procedures for re-registration for band membership may take time and that there is a process for appeal which is established by Indian people to aid in settling disputes. The Government must make a commitment in advance that extra funds will be provided for housing and services for reinstated persons who wish to return to their home reserves.

Many women who lost their status have indicated that they may not want to return to live on their reserves, but they do want to be Indian and they want their children to have a proud identity as status Indians. They ask that their children be registered and be granted aboriginal rights so that they can have access to educational grants in urban centres as well as the right to apply for band registration.

It is urgent that the Native Women's Association have adequate funding to put forward these views in the debate on the proposed legislation that will affect their lives. This week the conference hosted by the Assembly of First Nations is being held in Edmonton. Unfortunately, the Native Women's Association received only $10,000 to send delegates. They were forced to borrow additional moneys so that their voice will be heard in an assembly that represents a different point of view.

Funds borrowed to attend this conference must be replaced and Government funds for lobbying and legal advice must be made available if women who lost their status are to be heard by their people and by Members of Parliament. We urge the Government to approve additional funds from Secretary of State to cover these costs. I ask women parliamentarians in both Houses to join in a show of support for native women in their struggle for equal rights.

[Translation]

Mr. René Gingras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, during oral question period on Monday, April 30, 1984, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) raised the issue of removing from the Indian Act provisions that discriminate against women. On March 8 of this year, at the First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Rights, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced that the Government intended to table legislation in this respect as soon as possible.

Hon. Members will remember the announcement made by the Prime Minister at the time, when he stated that to amend the legislation, we must not only repeal paragraph 12(1)(b) but also eliminate all provisions that discriminate on the basis of sex. More specifically, as the Prime Minister said, the Bill will introduce the following changes to the legislation:

No Indian man or woman shall lose his or her status as a result of marriage, and non-Indian spouses shall not acquire that status through marriage.

Within certain limits, children and grandchildren born of marriages between Indians and non-Indians shall have Indian status.

Non-Indian spouses shall have the right to live on the reserve with their spouses.

Individuals who lost their Indian status as a result of discriminatory provisions in the Act shall be able to recover it, and their children shall have the right to be registered for the first time.

I am happy to confirm that the drafting of this Bill is already well advanced. The Government expects to be able to table the legislation this month.

I am sure that most Hon. Members will agree that legislation to eliminate from the Indian Act provisions that discriminate against individuals on the basis of sex should have been introduced a long time ago. We must therefore work together to adopt this legislation by the end of June. Only by enforcing this legislation in conjunction with sections 15(1) and 78 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms will we be able to guarantee equality between Indian men and women.

COPYRIGHT—PROVISION OF CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—MATERIAL FOR SCHOOLS. (B) PROCEDURE FOLLOWED IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, for the past 13 years Canada's universities and schools have been trying to obtain access to CBC broadcasting materials that could be useful for educational purposes in the schools and universities across Canada. I directed a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) today and received a most unsatisfactory answer—one which was actually irresponsible. The Minister said that she is tabling a white paper on copyrights, and perhaps some time in the fall she might get around to finding a solution to this problem. The point I raised today was that the United States had solved the problem without making changes to the copyright laws; that is what I am asking to have happen here in Canada.

In 1982 the Minister of Communications stated that the matter relates to the copyright laws of the country, and that he and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had set up a task force to look into the whole question. It was supposed to report in the summer of 1982. As yet, we have not received any statements from the Minister or from the task force.

In the United States, the favourable Sony decision which was handed down recently covers excerpts from the National School Boards Association of the United States. In a letter of March 1, 1984, to Mr. C. H. Whitney of the Canadian School Trustees' Association, it was stated:

> The Sony decision . . . is all we could ask for. It further protects our off air guidelines which means anything can be taped off air, held for 45 calendar days and viewed in class any number of times during the first 10 school days. The U.S. Congress is not seriously considering any amendment to the copyright law. Therefore, the Sony decision will stand for some time.

In the United States, a solution to the problem was found without changing the copyright laws. I am sure we can do the same in this country.

I shall read some excerpts from the decision in the Sony Corporation of America, et al, versus Universal City Studios Inc.:

The average member of the public uses a VTR principally to record a program he cannot view as it is being televised and then to watch it once at a later time. This practice, known as "time shifting" enlarges the television viewing audience. For that reason, a significant amount of television programming may be used in this manner without objection from the owners of the copyrights on the programs. For the same reason, even the two respondents in this case, who do assert objections to time shifting in this litigation, were unable to prove that the practice has impaired the commercial value of their copyrights or has created any likelihood of future harm. Given these findings, there is no basis in the Copyright Act upon which respondents can hold petitioners liable for distributing VTR's to the general public.

The Copyright Act referred to is the one in the United States:

The Copyright Act provides the owner of a copyright with a potent arsenal of remedies against an infringer to his work . . . The two respondents in this case do not seek relief against the Betamax users who have allegedly infringed their copyrights. Moreover, this is not a class action on behalf of all copyright owners who license their works for television broadcast, and respondents have no right to invoke whatever rights other copyright holders may have to bring infringement actions based on Betamax copying of their works. As was made clear by their own evidence, the copying of the respondent's programs represents a small portion of the total use of VTR's. It is, however, the taping of respondent's own copyright programs that provides them with standing to charge Sony with contributory infringement. To prevail, they have the burden of proving that users of the Betamax have infringed their copyrights and that Sony should be held responsible for that infringement.

● (1810)

Fred Rogers, President of the corporation that produces and owns the copyright on Mr. Rogers' Neighbourhood, testified that the program is carried by more public television stations than any other program. Its audience numbers over three million families a day. He testified that he had absolutely no objection to home taping for non-commercial use and expressed the opinion that it was a real service to families to be able to record children's programs and to show them at appropriate times. If there are millions of owners of VTR's who make copies of televised sports events, religious broadcasts and educational programs such as Mr. Rogers' Neighbourhood, and if the proprietors of those programs welcome the practice, then the business of supplying the equipment that makes such copying feasible should not be stifled simply because the equipment is used by some individuals to make unauthorized reproductions of respondents' works. The respondents do not represent a class composed of all copyright holders. Yet, a finding of contributory infringement would inevitably frustrate the interests of broadcasters in reaching the portion of their audience which is available only through time-shifting.

The District Court findings lead to two conclusions. First, Sony demonstrated a significant likehood that substantial numbers of copyright holders who license their works for broadcast on free television would not object to having their broadcasts time-shifted by private viewers. Second, respondents failed to demonstrate that time-shifting would cause any likelihood of non-minimal harm to the potential market for, or value of, their copyrighted works. The Betamax is, therefore, capable of substantial non-infringing uses. Sony's sale of such equipment to the general public does not constitute contributory infringement of respondents copyrights.

It is all summed up, Mr. Speaker. In the United States they have found a solution to the problem. Universities and schools can obtain these educational films for viewing to assist in educational progress in the schools and universities. Teachers and professors across Canada have been asking for this for over 13 years now. Surely to goodness it is time the Government found a solution to the problem here in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Veillette (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question, since the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) has left the House for the day, perhaps the Hon. Member will allow me to provide some additional information in response to the question asked by the Hon. Member earlier today.

After a second glance at the Hon. Member's question, it seems clear that the task force to which he referred is the one established in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs three years ago, to examine various issues in connection with revision of the Copyright Act. The Committee reported to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) in 1982. The Committee's recommendations, as well as several study reports prepared for the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the findings of a number of consultations with the public and private sectors, were used in preparing for the latter department a working paper containing all recommendations regarding revision of the Copyright Act.

One of the studies to which I was referring was about exemptions from the Act and concerned the use of broadcast material by educational institutions.

In fact, the White Paper contains all the Government's decisions in this area.

The attitude is to refrain from making general exception for the use of material in the educational sector. The reason is obvious: many programs and publications are specifically designed for use by schools. Eliminating copyrights for this type of use would have the effect of seriously discouraging authors from producing such material.

● (1815)

The problems the teaching institutions had with the CBC when they wanted to have access to the material were also mentioned. The CBC, like all the other broadcasting companies, does not always own the copyright of the programs it transmits. Broadcasting companies obtain broadcasting permits from the people who own the copyright for the programs, and often this is where their powers end. It is therefore not up to them to allow reproduction of this material. Concerning the American solution mentioned earlier by the Hon. Member, I can assure him that the Canadian solution found in the White Paper is at least just as good.

It is said in the White Paper that, from now on, non-profit teaching institutions will be entitled to a special and limited exemption in the case of public representations for educational purposes, that educational broadcasters will be entitled to a limited exemption with requirements similar to those provided for educational purposes to facilitate the production of educational programs for internal use, that new collective copyright negotiation companies may be set up to protect certain rights for which individual negotiation is impractical, such as in the area of photocopying, which is especially important in the field of education.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his allotted time has expired.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order.

At 6.18 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—INTEREST RATE POLICY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West) moved:

That this House is of the opinion that the Government of Canada can manage the economy in a way that would allow us to have lower interest rates than Canada now has and that we can have greater independence in interest rate policy despite the Government's failure to meet its commitment to so manage the economy.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion, of course, speaks for itself. In connection with the motion I shall quote a statement made by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he was in opposition and in an election campaign. On February 10, 1980, in an interview with a reporter from the Toronto Star, he said:

It is my belief we can manage the economy in a way that would allow us to have lower interest rates than we have now and I think we can have greater independence in interest rate policy.

Our problems then were the same as they are now. As a result of eight or ten years then of poorly conceived and poorly carried out Liberal economic policies, the Canadian dollar was under great pressure, interest rates were rising and the Government that had succeeded that Liberal Government was left in that position by the Liberal Government that preceded it. Today, of course, the Liberal Government succeeded itself: there was only an eight-month interregnum. We have had the problems in a much worse form in the four and a half years that Party has been back in power. At that time, out of opposition, the present Prime Minister said that it was his belief we could manage the economy in a way that would allow us to have lower interest rates and we could have greater independence in interest rate policy.

What does the Prime Minister say now, Mr. Speaker, when he is back in power and has been for four and a half years? What the Prime Minister says now and what the Government says now is entirely different. If we look at Hansard for May 10, 1984, page 3594, we find that the Prime Minister, in response to a question posed by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), said:

I take it from the Hon. Member's line of attack that he and his Party are now prepared to concede that when the basic rate in the United States goes up, it is impossible for Canadian rates not to go up . . . we cannot divorce ourselves from the American money markets.

That is the statement of the Prime Minister after he fooled the Canadian people, got back into power and has held power for the last four and a half years. He takes the position that when the basic rate in the United States goes up it is impossible for Canadian rates to do anything else.

At page 3592 of Hansard we find the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) giving that line as well in response to a question from the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). The Minister of Finance said:

—but the Hon. Member opposite should understand that interest rates in Canada are a direct reflection of interest rates in the United States.

We have all heard the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and all the other lackeys of the Government mouth the same line time after time in the last four and a half years. The Liberals say one thing to get into power, but once they are in power they take an entirely different line.

In passing, I might refer to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) who on February 7, 1980, on City TV, when asked: "Would you lower interest rates?", said: "Yes, I would". When asked: "Would you be prepared to resign your seat if the Government did not carry through on that policy?", he replied: "Yes, I would".

Of course, we also know that interest rates rose from 14 per cent to 22.5 per cent during that period of this Government, but the President of the Treasury Board never once offered to resign his seat, much less resigned it.

I visited India as part of a parliamentary group two weeks ago. In that country they still have the class known as the "untouchables". In Canada we have a government which should be called the "unspeakable"—unspeakable because of the deceptions it practised on the people of Canada before it came to power and the disappointments it has offered them ever since.

Where is the Minister of Finance today? He is out job hunting. In the Toronto Daily Star of May 14, an article appeared entitled "Lalonde heading for France to seek interest-rate relief—and a new job".

Mr. Cullen: You're a candid camera, John.

Mr. Crosbie: We are not allowed to show in this Chamber that the Minister is looking for a new job, according to the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen). The so-called best and the brightest of this Government, the present Minister of Finance, is supposed to be their saviour.

What is he doing? He has bailed out with parachute half open on his way to Paris with his campaign manager, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), looking for a job as Secretary General of the OECD. The Prime Minister weeps because we do not support his quest. Of course we do not support his quest. Why should that record of incompetence and economic failure be foisted on the 24 nations which comprise the OECD? Why should we support the present Minister of Finance of Canada who now attempts to bail out, leaving 1.5 million unemployed people behind in Canada? Of course we do not support this nomination for that position, nor does the United States of America support it. Why not? It is because they know that the present Minister of Finance was a leader of the interventionism of the Government in the energy sector of this country. He along with the President of the Treasury Board was the ferocious guardian of FIRA from 1980 to 1983 which did so much damage here in Canada.

The Minister is headed for France to seek interest rate relief and a new job. How does he want to get interest rate relief? He wants to blame everything on the United States of America. That is his excuse.

In connection with this motion, we agree that there is no easy, overnight solution to bring down interest rates, but we are also of the opinion that the economy can be managed in a way which will allow us to have lower interest rates than we now have and which would allow us to have greater independence in interest rate policy. This will take time. The results of 10 years to 15 years of incompetence and economic mismanagement cannot be overcome in a day or a week or a month. Perhaps it will take six months or longer to reverse the woeful lack of confidence which now exists in the world and in Canada with respect to our economic management. It will take time to reassure Canadian and foreign investors that sensible government and sensible policies have returned.

In February, 1980, when the Prime Minister made that statement, the Canadian dollar was worth 87.30 cents in terms of the U.S. dollar, the prime interest rate was at 14 per cent and inflation was at 9.5 per cent, so that real interest rates were about 4.5 per cent. The Canadian interest rate was 1.5 per cent less than the U.S. interest rate. Today the Canadian prime interest rate is one-half of a percentage point less; it is 12 per cent compared with 12.5 per cent in the United States. However, today the Canadian dollar is worth roughly 77 cents in terms of the U.S. dollar. It has depreciated in value over those four years. I do not have the calculation of the percentage decrease, but it has decreased by over 10 cents in terms of U.S. funds. Our assets in Canada today are worth considerably less than they were in February, 1980, as a result of the economic maladministration of the Government.

In the interim we have had interest rates of 22.75 per cent in this country. The lowest interest rate we have had since this Government has been back in office for the last four and one-half years has been 11 per cent. It is now up to 12 per cent and will be going up again. The inflation rate is 4.7 per cent. Therefore, the real rate of interest is 7.3 per cent. That indicates the loss of confidence in this country and in this Government; the fact that the real interest rate today is 7.3 per cent whereas four years ago it was 4.5 per cent. There is no confidence.

Why is there no confidence in this Government by those who have money to invest or by anyone else? The figures show it. There were 360,000 unemployed in 1968, 4.5 per cent. The present Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) calls that full employment. We had that when the Liberals came to power in 1968. When the Government came back into power in 1980, there were 967,000 people unemployed, an unemployment rate of 7.5 per cent. How good that sounds now! In April, 1984 the unemployment rate was 11.4 per cent. The number officially unemployed was 1,468,000. That record will show why there is no confidence in this Government or its economic stewardship.

Let me give the figures for the deficits we have had over those same years. In the 11 years from 1972-73 to 1982-83, the Government's deficits totalled $100.7 billion. The deficit started at $999 million. It increased every year except the year in which we were in power for eight months. In 1979-80, the deficit decreased from $12.2 billion to $11.4 billion. It started back up in 1980-81, totalling $12.6 billion. In those 11 years total Government deficits were $100.7 billion. Last year it was $31.4 billion. This year it is estimated it will be $29.6 billion. The Minister says that the deficits for last year, this year and the next three years will total $142.2 billion. In five years they will exceed by one and one-half times what they were in the previous 11 years.

We are told by the Minister that in the next five years he will have to go to the public markets to borrow $114 billion to help meet these debts, of which $109.1 billion will be used to pay interest debt charges alone. That is why the Canadian dollar is floundering. That is why there is no confidence. That is why the dollar is under pressure. We will have to borrow $114 billion for last year, this year and the next three years, and of that, $109 billion will be to pay interest on the debt alone.

We now borrow huge sums just to pay the interest on the debt. That is why there is no confidence. That is why we are in such economic trouble. That is living proof that greater and greater deficits are not the solution to our employment problems. They are not the solution to economic growth. They are causing our unemployment, the failure in economic growth and the weakness of the dollar. Until these ever-increasing deficits are corrected, this country has no economic hope.

Let us look at the warning from the Bank of Canada on March 20, 1980. This is reported in The Globe and Mail. The Bank of Canada warned the federal Government that its large fiscal deficit is discouraging business investments and holding back productivity gains in Canada. I quote from the article:

> "The fiscal deficits absorbed savings that could otherwise be channelled by financial markets into financing the expansion of plant and equipment", the central bank said in its annual report.

In March, 1980 the deficit was $12.6 billion for that financial year, and that was the warning issued by the Bank of Canada. Today the deficit is double that. Last year it was almost triple that amount. Therefore, the warning given on March 20, 1980 is far outdone by what has happened since.

Just in passing, what happened once the Government was elected? I will give several brief quotations. On May 9, 1981, the then Minister of Finance, the present Deputy Prime Minister, had this advice:

—the Government would not bail out individuals facing mortgage renewals or first-time home buyers trapped by circumstances.

He said that it would be wrong for him to give advice to individuals as to how to manage their affairs. This was said after the interest rate had gone up to 18 per cent, Mr. Speaker. Of course, once that gentleman was in power, he could not give advice to mortgage holders and others as to what they should do in view of the higher interest rates.

What did that same Minister, now Secretary of State for External Affairs, say on November 21, 1980, not six months after the election and after the Liberal Party had said: "Vote Liberal and oil prices will come down"? As reported in the Montreal Gazette, he said:

Canadians will have to accept a lower standard of living to adjust to the higher energy prices—

That is the attitude of this Government once it has been elected and will be in power for five years. The advice it gave after oil prices went up is that Canadians would have to accept a lower standard of living to adjust to higher energy prices.

Finally, the same Minister, on December 12, 1980, just six or nine months after the Prime Minister had said we could be independent of U.S. interest rates, said as reported by The Globe and Mail of December 12, 1980:

Canada has little control over interest rates, which have jumped 39 per cent since the federal Budget was introduced on Oct. 28, but thanks to steps taken by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Canadian rates are not locked to U.S. rates, he said.

He cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. Either Canada has control over interest rates and it therefore can take some of the independent actions which he says were being taken, or it has not.

In that article the Minister is reported as saying that Canadian rates are not locked to U.S. rates. Today the Minister of State for Finance, following his master the Minister of Finance, says: "Yes, of course we are locked to U.S. interest rates". Yes, we are locked to U.S. interest rates, Mr. Speaker, because of the incompetence, lack of caring and imbecilic economic policies of the Government.

At the moment we are locked into U.S. interest rates. The question to be asked is whether or not we can unlock ourselves. Can we free ourselves? Can Samson break the chains? I say yes. We can break the chains of this dependency if we put into office a government that is going to change this tragic march toward ever and ever greater deficits. That is the only way it can be done, Mr. Speaker.

The situation cannot be changed through a refurbished Liberal Party, a Liberal Party that is like a boa constrictor changing its skin. Mr. Turner is now in charge of the skin-changing operation for the Liberal Party. He is in charge of making the Party look different. We are told that the Trudeau caterpillar must be turned into the Turner butterfly so that the Party will have a new look. It does not matter what new look it has because, as I have just shown, we cannot believe a word members of the Liberal Party in this country say.

The net debt of the country at the end of March, 1984 was $150.9 billion, 38 per cent of the GNP. It will be $181 billion at the end of this year. Every Liberal Minister of Finance for the last 12 years has promised to reduce the debt. On June 28, 1982 the present Secretary of State for External Affairs said it all in his Budget Speech. I shall read from that speech as reported on page 18883 of Hansard:

Some say the Government should print more money. Others say it should let the deficit rip.

But that would fail miserably. Inflation and unemployment would get worse. Interest rates would rise even more. Canada would price itself out of world markets. Recovery would be postponed.

That was a painting of the consequences of allowing the deficit to go up. What did the Minister do? He let the deficit go up. He let the deficit rip and what he said would happen did in fact happen.

What else should we look at with alarm, Mr. Speaker? The weakness of the Canadian dollar is caused not only by the Government's internal deficits but by our external borrowing and our capital outflow. Equity grade capital is leaving the country and is being replaced by high-cost hard currency debt market borrowing abroad. This has been accompanied by a tremendous increase in the debt service burden of the country.

Every year since 1977, large capital outflows have made imperative Canada's hard currency borrowing abroad. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that in the period 1977 to 1983 our cumulative current account deficit was $16.3 billion but our capital outflow or money that left the country totalled $50.9 billion so that we needed foreign borrowings of over $65 billion?

That is what has placed the downward pressure on our exchange rate and caused us to have huge foreign borrowings and high interest rates. We are losing low-cost equity capital. It is being replaced by high-cost debt borrowing. Let me cite the figures. In 1973 Canada has an external debt of $16.4 billion, which was 13 per cent of the GNP and 53 per cent of our exports. Today we have an external debt of $127.4 billion, which amounts to 33 per cent of our GNP and 118 per cent of our exports in any one year. During that period we have had capital outflows of $2.6 billion in 1977, $5.3 billion in 1978, $4.4 billion in 1979, $3.8 billion in 1980, $20.3 billion in 1981, $5.6 billion in 1982 and $8.9 billion in 1983. That is because of the hostility the Government has toward the investor, private and domestic. That is why this capital has left Canada.

• (1125)

Our interest payments outside of Canada have gone from less than $2 billion in 1973, which was about 5 per cent of our export earnings, to over $14 billion last year, which was about 13 per cent of our export earnings. That is why the dollar is under pressure and its value is down to 77 cents. That, in turn, is why we have the high interest rates which are choking off our economic recovery and putting Canadians in the kind of dilemma that the IMF described in its report, "Fiscal Policy in Major Industrial Countries", which was released this month.

The IMF pointed out the position of Canada in relation to the current value of national output. By far, the largest interest payments are those paid by Italy and Canada, equivalent respectively to about 9 per cent and 7 per cent of GDP. In the United States it is only 4.5 per cent to 5 per cent; the United Kingdom is the same. It is about 3 per cent in France and the Federal Republic of Germany. The IMF states that the presence of such large and intractable budgetary costs is a major obstacle to current efforts of most national authorities to reduce their fiscal deficits. The IMF says that Canada and the other industrial countries have an unwelcome set of options: one, to increase revenue sufficiently to cover the greatly expanded interest payments; two, to make equivalent downward adjustments in other types of public expenditure; or three, to permit the additional interest charges to be pyramided into faster growth of debt in the potentially vicious cycle of interaction between interest expenditure and indebtedness.

The third option is what this country has chosen for the 4.5 years of this regime and for the years from 1972-73 onward. The Government is permitting additional interest charges to pyramid into faster growth of debt in a vicious cycle of interaction between interest expenditure and indebtedness.

How do we know that? We know that simply by looking at the interest costs of the Government. Those interest costs this year will be over $20 billion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair regrets to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his time has expired. He may have more time in which to make his remarks during the ten-minute question and answer period which is provided. Any questions?

Mr. Crosbie: If there is consent, could I finish my remarks?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there consent for the Hon. Member to terminate his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a large subject and difficult to cover in 20 minutes. I will simply refer to the public debt charges. This year they will be $20.3 billion, which is 20.8 per cent of the spending of the federal Government on public debt charges alone. The Minister tells us that it will increase over the next three years to $24.7 billion in 1987-88, or 21.4 per cent of all government spending. Of course, that estimate is certainly far too low. If we have to spend 21 per cent of all revenue on interest, we cannot spend it on improving conditions for ordinary Canadians, we cannot spend it on improving social programs, and we cannot spend it on economic development. That is the dilemma in which this Government has now placed us.

In concluding, which unfortunately I must do quickly, what is the solution? I would like to speak for 20 minutes on the solution. The solution is the reversal of the economic approaches taken by the Government over the last 10 or 12 years in particular. We must overcome the deficit problem, which will certainly take, Mr. Speaker, four years or five years, I would think, by a variety of measures both on the revenue side and on the spending side. There must be tighter control of spending. There must be an increase of revenue. We must cease to intervene, as the Government has done, in the private side of the economy by welcoming foreign and domestic capital. FIRA, Mr. Speaker, should not be the Foreign Investment Review Agency. That implies that we do not want the foreign capital and do not need it, when today that is just what we need if we are going to have economic growth and more jobs. I suggest a change of name to the "Foreign Investment Reception Agency". Let us make it plain that we want to receive foreign investment, although there are certain areas where we may not want the foreign investment to go.

We must have privatization wherever possible; clarification of our own economic position, vis-à-vis the United States; a tremendous emphasis on export trade, and a restoration of confidence to Canadian investors. These are the people who are moving their money out and creating pressure on the dollar. Canadians who feel unwelcome to invest in their own country have been moving sums of capital out these last three years or four years in particular. We must make them feel welcome again, show them that we have a government which is going to operate on proper economic principles. Finally, Mr. Speaker, we must have federal-provincial co-operation and partnership, not the kind of cold war and civil war which we have had in the last number of years.

This is not just a Conservative position, Mr. Speaker. It is a position which is adopted by half the candidates in the present Liberal leadership campaign. Mr. John Turner, the likely winner of course, wants to cut the deficit by $15 billion by streamlining social programs, eliminating redundant services and running a more efficient bureaucracy. He has lacked specificity. No one can persuade this gentleman to give us more details on how he is going to do it, so specificity is not his long suit. However, his intentions are good. His policies are ours. He would bring in, Mr. Speaker, a budget with the same principles as the Crosbie Budget of December, 1979 which this Government now regrets ever having interfered with because that was the start of the movement towards the pitiful economic position in which we now find ourselves.

An increase of 1 per cent in interest rates adds $885 million to the government debt charges. That is how important the interest rate increases are to our own Government.

I thank the House for allowing me several extra minutes, and in conclusion I say that we in this Party are of the opinion that the Government can manage the economy in a way which will allow us to have lower interest rates, that we can have greater independence in interest rate policy. We decry the failure of the Government to meet that commitment. That was a commitment made by the Prime Minister who has reversed himself and swallowed himself, as he has done so often in the last four and a half years, with the help of all the Liberal leadership candidates who are now all out swallowing themselves as well.

We believe that can be done. It will not be easy, Mr. Speaker, but we can do it. If we had not been interrupted by a selfish, grasping Liberal Party, helped by its unindicted co-conspirators, the New Democratic Party, in December of 1979, we would have done it and Canada today would be that much better off than it is now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments relating to the remarks of the hon. gentleman?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member rightly accused some of the Liberal leadership candidates of lacking specificity in their solutions to the economic problems. The second item in the Hon. Member's program to reverse government policy was that there would have to be an increase in revenues which, I understand, means an increase in the amount of taxes collected.

I would like the Hon. Member to be a little more specific now and to tell us whether he is indeed talking about increasing taxes. If he is simply making a vague reference to increasing the size of the economy, could he tell us how he intends to approach that particular problem so that we can, in fact, have increased revenues? Where is the Hon. Member going to get the increased revenues? By which method?

Mr. Crosbie: I tried to explain in my brief remarks, Mr. Speaker, that one would have to look both at the expenditure side and the revenue side. The New Democratic Party always advocates tax increases. As a matter of fact, in this House in recent days I have heard the hon. gentleman's Party urging a speculator's tax, whatever a speculator's tax is. If there is such a thing as a speculator's tax, I suppose that could be looked at. However, the kind of revenue increases which we prefer to think of are the kind which will come naturally and inexorably from a better Government which gives confidence, which in turn results in economic growth. That will reverse the decline in revenue which we now see happening in the economy.

There may well have to be other revenue increases. One would have to be in the Government to be able to look carefully at all sources to see which would be most conducive to economic growth or the least damaging to economic growth. One would have to look to see what is the exact economic condition at the time. Are we going to be in government in a month's time? Or are we going to be in government perhaps not for another year? The hon. gentleman must remember that members of this Government can sneak and skulk in their offices around Ottawa. They do not have to call an election until March of 1985. I do not know what the economic conditions are going to be in March, 1985, although I fear they will be a lot worse than they are now.

Therefore, I cannot say now what I would do in March of 1985, not knowing the economic conditions in March of 1985. Will those Hon. Members opposite continue to cower in their offices, afraid to meet the electorate, afraid to go to an election, breaking all the parliamentary conventions, showing their lack of responsibility? Or will they call an election in June and let us take office in August? When will they choose to get out and let someone else get in? When I know the answer to that, I will tell the hon. gentleman with great specificity from where the revenue increases might come.

I am not like John Turner. John Turner knows that he is going to be in power by the middle of June. As soon as the Liberal convention is held, John Turner is anointed. The Turner butterfly takes over from the Trudeau caterpillar. He knows what the economic conditions are now. He can be asked properly and reasonably to be more specific. As a matter of fact, if the Liberal delegates were worth a darn, they would be pinning him down by asking: "What are you going to do?" They should be asking him: "What social programs are you going to streamline? What redundant services are you going to do away with? How are you going to be more efficient? You are going to be in office in June".

Mr. Evans: What would you do?

Mr. Riis: Mean and nasty things.

Mr. Crosbie: And Mr. Turner knows what the economic conditions of the day are. Despite my burning desire to show more specificity, I cannot do it until I know when the hon. gentleman will call an election. Then I will be as specific as you like.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any further questions?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I believe I am beginning to understand a slightly different meaning for the word "specificity" as a result of the Hon. Member's answer. Again, following up on an attempt to understand what "specificity" means, I wonder if the Hon. Member could clarify for us—since it was one of his criteria for reversing the current government approach—the matter of Canada-U.S. relations and restoring confidence among businessmen in Canada. That statement did not tell us very much. I wonder if the Hon. Member could take a couple of minutes to clarify and expand and, if possible, be specific as to precisely what sort of programs he is proposing to ease relations between Canada and the United States and to make businessmen feel welcome in this country. Perhaps the Hon. Member could also tell us just which areas of government policy are now causing businessmen to feel unwelcome and what sore spots exist between Canada and the United States which are hurting our economy.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, our relationship with the United States has, of course, improved a little since Mr. Hyde turned himself into Doctor Jekyll. We had the present Minister of Finance in his Mr. Hyde character role when he was Minister of Energy and brought in a so-called national energy policy which imposed changes in the rules and taxation retroactively. That wrecked the oil and gas industry of Alberta and Saskatchewan and put this country back tremendously in the last several years. I remember in February of 1980 the Prime Minister promised to do the big projects. We have not had a bid project done since. The biggest project we have had was the elevation of Ann Cools to the Senate. That is the only big project we have had since. The oil sands or tar sands plant went out the window. The Cold Lake heavy oil project went out the window. The Labrador Hydro development went out the window. We have not had a big project since because of the NEP and these other programs.

• (1140)

Our relationship with the U.S. has improved a little. Mr. Speaker, when we eliminate the NDP from the House of Commons altogether in the next election, or reduce them to two or three Members, when the United States, the business world and Canadians generally know that there is no longer a possibility of a vicious coalition between the NDP, the socialist lunatic-fringe element of Canadian life, and the Liberal Party, and that we are going to be in office for five years and sensible economic policies are going to be applied, then, of course, there will be a restoration of confidence and better relationships between the U.S. and Canada. I am glad to see the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) is here because he knows how desirable that is. He knows how important the U.S. is to us for the marketing of fish products. He had the good sense to appoint my brother to the board of Fishery Products International Limited. He is now the interim chairman. I congratulate the Minister of Fisheries; he is almost non-partisan.

To get back to the question, I would like to see—

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to say to the Chamber that I am very fortunate that Mr. Andrew Crosbie has accepted to act as chairman of that very important company which is going to be the engine of the fishery in Newfoundland. According to every person who works for that company, he is the most competent Newfoundlander.

Mr. Crosbie: Except for his brother.

Mr. De Bané: Obviously, of course, he is not of the same political Party as my friend.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. Would the Minister come to his point of order, if any?

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, my point is that the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) should try to follow the path of his brother and become as responsible and competent as his own brother.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, he and I are no longer brothers so there cannot be any conflict of interest. The Minister tried to accuse me of a conflict of interest because I asked a question about that company. He can put my brother in every company the Government has but it will not stop me from asking questions, Mr. Speaker. In any event, the only person in Newfoundland whom it would have been better to appoint than my brother would be myself. However, since I was not invited, I could not accept.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): There is one minute left in the question period.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have just a quick question for the Hon. Member. He mentioned that John Turner's policies were the same as "ours". Could he elaborate on what he meant by that? Is he saying that what Turner is saying is basically Conservative policy?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am saying that John Turner exhibits every sign of having the same views with regard to the general direction the Government should move in as a Conservative would have. He is adopting the points that we have been making in the House since 1980. Why he would stay in the same Party that has ignored those views all through these years is beyond me. Let me give an example. Mr. Turner has said—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The question period has come to an end. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on debate.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to follow the hon. Finance critic for the Progressive Conservative Party and to provide another viewpoint as to why our country is experiencing serious economic problems these days. I will perhaps make some responses to some of the comments made by the Hon. Member.

I would like to read once again the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). It is:

> That this House is of the opinion that the Government of Canada can manage the economy in a way that would allow us to have lower interest rates than Canada now has and that we can have greater independence in interest rate policy despite the Government's failure to meet its commitment to so manage the economy.

We agree with the intent and principle of this motion. We believe that we can have a much more independent interest rate policy, a much more independent economic policy, that we can become less than totally dependent upon people like Paul Volcker, the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board in the United States, and that there are a number of areas in which Canada could be moving independently at the moment which would begin to reduce interest rates.

At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that while discussion today focuses on interest rates, surely it is more related to the tragic situation of the high unemployment levels which exist in Canada. Presumably we are debating interest rates today because, as Members of Parliament, we are concerned with the very serious plight faced by so many Canadians in all parts of the country. Perhaps one of the difficulties which we have in the House, and which the Government has generally, is that we normally refer to the unemployed in statistical terms. We became concerned because the unemployment rate in Canada moved from 11.2 per cent to 11.4 per cent. The figure of 11.4 per cent was bandied around in the House of Commons and throughout the country as indicative of the problem facing the Canadian economy today. Or we may talk in terms of 1,468,000 Canadians unemployed today.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that to a certain extent those statistical terms do not give us a real understanding of this problem. If we appreciated just how devastating and tragic this situation is, I am convinced that the Government would be inclined to take some action. I believe the Government would take steps toward the reduction of interest rates or the capping of them at their present level, toward introducing programs which would provide relief to those sectors of the economy which are especially hard hit as a result of interest rates, and toward providing some encouragement and relief to those sectors in which job creation could take place. I refer specifically to the small business sector.

Perhaps another way to appreciate what the unemployed in this country really represent is to view them as being parts of other political jurisdictions. For example, if we took all of the people in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories and added to that group everyone in the Provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island and a few more people from Newfoundland, we would have the number of people in Canada who are presently looking for, but cannot find, work. That does not include their sons, daughters or spouses.

Another way to look at it, Mr. Speaker, is if we took everyone in the cities of Edmonton, Calgary, Saskatoon, Regina and Winnipeg, that would represent the number of Canadians who want to work today but cannot find work. That is an incredible number of people, Mr. Speaker. There are nearly two million Canadians who, under normal conditions, would be working today and circulating money through their large and small communities. They would be buying goods and services and revving up the economy. Of course, with that number of unemployed, it is impossible. That is why we are primarily discussing interest rates today. It is the interest rate policy being pursued by the present Government which keeps interest rates tracking those in the United States. It keeps interest rates today at a prime rate of 12 per cent.

All indications are that this rate will likely increase in the weeks and months ahead. The assumption that we make in the New Democratic Party is that at these present levels, let alone the escalating levels in the weeks and months ahead, it is impossible to have sustained economic recovery in Canada. It will be absolutely impossible to consider a recovery continuing with interest rates at these or higher levels. It is in that atmosphere that we believe that independent action must be taken.

I do not want to spend too much time this morning talking about Liberal policy because I believe we are well aware that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have said that the Liberal Government is impotent, like financial eunuchs, and that there is very little it can do to set us apart from Paul Volcker in the United States. Mr. Volcker, as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, is essentially setting our interest rates in Canada which means that an American bureaucrat is deciding what economic action will be taken in Canada. It is a sad day when the Minister of Finance, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Prime Minister and the Canadian Cabinet set aside their responsibilities and look to that American bureaucrat in the United States to decide what we do in Canada. I suspect that there are not many other countries whose governments have sat back and depended on another country for guidance in policy decisions in their country, or to let a foreigner set critical economic policies.

I do not believe much can be said about Liberal policy. It is well understood that Canada is tracking United States interest rates. The Liberals are continuing to implement a tax system that sees our deficit grow at each Budget. Naturally, if taxes are not collected as they should be, the deficit will go up. If all kinds of hand-outs are given to individuals or corporations which do not need those hand-outs, of course the deficit will rise. That is the point our Party has been attempting to make. Our tax system is a major contributor to fuelling the deficit situation which exists today.

Deferred taxes to corporations amounted to approximately $25 billion in the past year alone. That is virtually the entire deficit of Canada just in deferred corporate income taxes. While I know it will be said that these taxes will be paid back, I recently read a quote from one of the senior executives of Consolidated Bathurst who, when asked about these deferred taxes and when his company intends to pay them back, made the very specific and short answer: "Never". I believe many people hold the assumption that these deferred taxes from year after year and decade after decade will never be paid. That is only one example.

We can talk about the PIP grants to the oil companies. I suggest that the oil companies may almost be embarrassed about receiving billions of dollars from Canadian taxpayers who pay such an exorbitant amount of their exploration costs. I suspect that those in the corporate board rooms are almost embarrassed to be taking the Canadian public for such a ride.

Mr. Epp: You supported it.

Mr. Riis: The New Democratic Party never supported PIP grants.

Mr. Epp: The National Energy Program.

Mr. Riis: I could ask who supported PIP grants when they came to the floor of the House.

Let me deal with the Tory policy. I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for St. John's West and I must say that I never heard so much bafflegab. I would like to call it another word that begins with "b", but it would be unparliamentary.

Mr. Crosbie: You mean baloney?

Mr. Riis: It is not baloney either, as suggested by the Member for St. John's West.

I hear the Conservatives talk about the deficit. I must give the Hon. Member credit when he said that one of the major solutions is to reduce the deficit problem by cutting spending and increasing revenues. However, he lacks specifics in dealing with those solutions. I am perplexed because month after month I see members of the Conservative Party rise in their places to say that $300 million is needed now to assist the West Coast fishery and $500,000 is needed for the East Coast fishery.

Mr. Lewis: Are you against that?

Mr. Riis: I am not against that but this is what I hear from the members of the Official Opposition, that money is needed now for the fisheries on the East and West Coasts. They say that additional hand-outs have to be given to the small business community to assist it in job creation and that more money must be spent on the Armed Forces to develop our Navy, Air Force and land forces. They say that more money must be given to the farming community. Furthermore, they say that more tax rates should be given to the farming community, the large and small business community and there should be more tax breaks for artists. They talk about these requirements day after day and they amount to billions and billions of dollars.

However, in the next breath they say that the deficit must be reduced. What our Party wants to know is where they will cut the spending and from which existing programs. All that I ever hear is that the Conservatives want to add more money and I have yet to hear a single area where they will cut. I hope that Hon. Members sitting here today will correct me during the question period and say that there are areas and indicate where they will make cuts. They have yet to give a specific example from the federal deficit where they would make serious cuts. Eventually, I gather, the Hon. Member for St. John's West will have the opportunity during the election campaign to describe what he meant when he said that they will do all sorts of mean, nasty and unpleasant things when they get into power. I am not sure what "mean, nasty and unpleasant things" means but I suspect that I do. However, I do not want to put words into his mouth because he can do that himself.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to ask the hon. gentleman to correct his quotations. I never said that we will do mean, nasty and dirty things. As I recall, I said that any government that is serious about overcoming the present situation will have to do things that might be considered mean, nasty and whatever the other word was. It is not that we would do them; we would never do anything mean, nasty or otherwise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) could probably disclose to the House what he would intend to do but should refrain from interpreting what other Members have said.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would never interpret what other Members have said. I will quote specifically what they said. As a matter of fact, it was in The Toronto Star on February 18, 1984, one of Canada's major newspapers. I do not want to speculate on what the Hon. Member might have said; I will quote quite specifically what he did say. He said:

> You have to be tough, mean and nasty and do all kinds of unpleasant things.

I am simply quoting from the newspaper and I assume it was correct.

The Hon. Member then referred to the crowding out in the money markets that was taking place today as a result of the high deficits. While the Hon. Member does attend the Finance Committee from time to time, I wish he had been there on March 22 when Governor Bouey appeared before the Finance Committee. His colleague from Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) asked the Governor of the Bank of Canada if the deficit as it is presently put together will result in crowding out in the money markets. The Governor of the Bank of Canada said no. It was his opinion as Governor of the central bank that there was no crowding out. Since the Hon. Member put so much faith in Governor Bouey, and since his Party must have a great deal of faith in him because they reappointed him when they were briefly in power, I simply say that the Governor of the Bank of Canada dismissed the idea of crowding out as a result of the deficit.

When I hear the Hon. Member, who presumably represents the Conservative Party, criticizing the existing procedures of the Government, I cannot help but recall a few other quotes that I happened to jot down during the past months. One quote is from the recent Conservative Finance critic from Etobicoke Centre. After the Premiers met, he said:

> One after another the premiers proposed reducing interest rates, while accepting the inflationary consequences of a lower Canadian dollar. They were convinced that the benefits of lower interest rates and increased economic activity would offset the negative effects of increased inflation.

This is the critical line:

> I do not agree with the premiers, I agree with the Liberal Party.

The Leader of the Conservative Party at that time, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), is quoted in the Toronto Star on May 5, 1982, as saying:

> We have looked for a solution other than the government's, but we couldn't come up with an alternative . . . At this moment, I don't have a better solution.

The previous Finance critic and the previous Leader of the Party said that they were looking at the Government's policies and they agreed with them. We do not have anything to offer in lieu of what is already going on.

● (1200)

That seems to be quite contrary to the points which the Hon. Member for St. John's West was making previously. You wonder if it is possible in the Conservative mythology to walk down both sides of the street at the same time, Mr. Speaker. In one breath they say "We want to reduce the deficit"; in the next breath they say "We want to spend more money here and give more tax giveaways there". Then the Tories say "Yes, but we want an independent interest rate". Speaker after speaker says "We must follow the United States interest rates. We agree with the interest rate policy of the present American Government". There is something fishy going on here, Mr. Speaker. There is something confusing in that kind of Conservative logic.

Mr. Crosbie: You are easily confused.

Mr. Riis: It may be an indication of what is to come if and when the Conservatives ever form a government in Canada. For example, in July, 1982 the Hon. Member for St. John's West was quoted in Maclean's magazine as having said: "If I told you what I would do, we would never get elected". That might give us a clue as to why the Hon. Member was a little vague in what he would do if the Tories were ever to form a government. Just before that, the Hon. Member for St. John's West in an interview for the Watson Report on television said: "Our leaders have to be a little less honest. We are not being devious and tricky enough". Again I wonder if that does not give us some indication of from where the Hon. Member is coming: the Tories have to be tricky and devious, a little less honest with the people of Canada. However, the crowning statement of them all from the Hon. Member for St. John's West came on November 25, 1983. In an interview with a reporter for The Globe and Mail he said: "We are not giving away anything. If you want to find out what our policies are, presumably, then you must elect us".

Do you think at a time when Canadians are hurting so much that they are prepared to buy a pig in a poke, that they are prepared to say: "I know you are going to do all sorts of mean and nasty things to us, I know you have to be tricky and dishonest. I hear that is what you are saying. We are going to support a political party that tells the people of Canada that is what they will do"? I do not think Canadians will buy that for a moment, Mr. Speaker.

Let me say what I think should be done about interest rates at this moment. I go back to the premise that at present levels, with the prime rate in the 12 per cent range and likely to go up in the next few weeks, what fragile recovery is under way today in certain parts of the country will not be sustained and what strong recovery is occurring in certain sectors will likely be aborted if these interest rates are allowed to track upward or to follow U.S. rates upward.

There are really two sets of policies which the Government could pursue at this time. One is to take some real gutsy action. When I say gutsy action, I mean recognize the severity of the problem and what it means to have nearly two million Canadians who want to work unable to find work. Recognize what that means particularly to the young generation of Canadians seeking work for the first time. The Government of Canada should direct the Governor of the Bank to take steps to reduce those interest rates. If there are some Canadians who would abandon their country, abandon the economic sector and take some speculative money and move it out of the country, I say they should have a right to do that. But they should pay a certain penalty for doing so. After all, we do ask people who move against the general interest of Canadian society to pay penalties. Major industrial polluters are asked to pay a penalty if they are contravening the environmental regulations which most Canadians suggest are appropriate. If drinkers drive and jeopardize the lives of innocent Canadians, we penalize them. If people want to move money out of the country at a time when it is desperately needed, they should have that right, but they should pay a penalty. That is why we suggest a speculative tax be considered if necessary.

In conclusion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The hon. gentleman's time has expired. Are there any questions?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I hate to contradict what my hon. friend and colleague from Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has said. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) has made some statements as to where reductions would come in the deficit. Let me quote what the Hon. Leader of the Opposition said: "What would I do? I would cut everywhere and under every circumstance. I would cut consultants, outside lawyers, accountants, advertising, public service, compensation, waste, unproductive subsidies, travel, indexed pensions and fringe benefits, capital construction programs, capital overruns, and just plain bureaucratic excess, to name but a few examples". That was published in The Globe and Mail on August 2, 1982. The author was the Leader of the Opposition speaking about where he would cut to reduce the deficit.

I would ask the Hon. Member whether he has heard similar comments from the Leader of the Opposition. If so, would he confirm that this is what is really behind the Tory rhetoric about deficit reduction?

Mr. Crosbie: What about Turner's rhetoric?

Mr. Evans: Right now the Tories are not being specific, Mr. Speaker. But the specifics were put prior to the time the Leader of the Opposition took his current position.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I notice the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for St. John's West says "we can have greater independence in interest rate policy". That does not necessarily mean the Conservatives will have. I think that is very important wording. Obviously the motion was worded with a great deal of thought.

I appreciate the comments made by the Hon. Member in terms of some specifics presented by the Leader. Let me elaborate on that. I want to give the Progressive Conservatives at least some benefit of the doubt, but since the topic has been raised I do recall some discussions, again highlighting the words of the Hon. Member for St. John's West. I hate to refer to the Member for St. John's West all the time when it comes to negative comments. However, I think he did make some reference to the possibility of a means test, cutting back on the universality of family allowance and pensions and that sort of thing. I think though that he might have done some backstepping on it some time ago.

With the support of the House, Mr. Speaker, I do have a few additional comments; probably two or three minutes would be sufficient. Perhaps I could have unanimous consent to finish off some of the suggestions I want to make concerning how we can reduce interest rates.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair would suggest that the Hon. Member has the floor during the time allotted for questions and comments. He may use that time to add additional remarks.

Mr. Riis: I will keep it very brief, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to cut off questioning; I just want to take two or three minutes. I did suggest there was one major area in terms of reducing interest rates which the Government of Canada must look at, and the sooner the better. It has to do with Governor Bouey being directed to reduce interest rates. If that requires a new Governor of the Bank of Canada, so be it. Mr. Diefenbaker appointed a new Governor a few years ago when he felt it was appropriate. This is certainly the time to consider doing it again.

Another area we should consider is the concept of agri-bonds. The Government presently has that concept in the system. It could move on it very quickly if it wishes. Agri-bonds are not a new concept; it has been tested in other parts of the world and found successful. The concept would provide real assistance to all of the food producers in Canada. The Government could move on agri-bonds immediately. Also the Government could reinstitute the Small Business Development Bond, the bond issue that encouraged small business to develop and expand.

Mr. Crosbie: How about mentioning the Hon. Member who introduced it?

Mr. Riis: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is something we should consider once again in spite of who introduced it, the point being that it is in the system, it has been tested before and found to be somewhat successful.

Mr. Crosbie: Who is the father of it?

Mr. Riis: It is just the thing now that would provide much assistance to the small business sector.

I wonder whether it is time to adjust our tax system. If we are concerned about the deficit, and we all are, desperately concerned, is it not the time to adjust our tax system to establish fair taxes in the country so that upper income Canadians who pay no income tax at all today pay a fair share and all of the corporations that have made substantial profits in certain years should be expected to pay at least a minimum tax? I refer to such corporations as the Royal Bank of Canada, the Bank of Montreal, Shell Canada, Simpsons-Sears, the Hudson's Bay Company, Consolidated Bathurst, and a long list of corporations that made in some cases hundreds of millions of dollars in profits and did not pay a single penny of income tax in a particular year. That kind of tax system I do not think assists us in getting the economy back on track and proving to Canadians that we have a fair tax system which treats all people equally.

• (1210)

Before sitting down, I would like to suggest that some of our major financial institutions should co-operate and, in the words of the Prime Minister at Christmastime, bleed a little alongside the rest of Canadians. Most people have now pulled in their belts so tightly that their backbones are up against their belt buckles. It is time to ask the banks and the major financial institutions to set aside some low-interest money to assist the farming community, home owners and the small business sector. We must place more emphasis upon the small business sector, for it is that sector in which jobs will be created and we will be able to bring some relief to the nearly two million Canadians who are jobless today.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I noticed with interest that the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) quoted at length the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). One can only ascribe his increased knowledge to following closely the comments of my colleague.

This brings me to my question concerning a specific interest rate policy. On the weekend the Hon. Member indicated very half-hearted support for his Leader. He indicated that if and when his Leader lost the next election, people would be clamouring for his resignation. One could almost hear the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) saying: "Et tu, Brute!"

My question to the Hon. Member is very simple. Is his reluctance to support his Leader based on his Leader's absolute ignorance of the interest rate structure or is it just general incompentence?

Mr. Riis: I do not know if that question deserves a comment.

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you. I have another question for the Hon. Member.

Mr. Riis: It was totally taken out of context.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: It was totally misrepresented. I said nothing of the sort. If the Hon. Member could read—and I suspect he can—he should read it a little more carefully.

The point I was trying to make was that, contrary to what some people were saying—

Mr. Crosbie: He is hopeless.

Mr. Riis: I hear a lot of bantering and braying coming from the Conservative benches. They have just gone from 62 per cent of the polls down to about 45 per cent or something like that.

Mr. Crosbie: It is more than 9.5 per cent.

Mr. Riis: It was an almost unprecedented drop in support as a result of their "non-policies". The point I was making was that I did not think the New Democratic Party would face any defeat in the next federal election. We are about to pull off one of the most impressive upsets which we have seen in a long time in terms of what political pundits are suggesting. We will be returning with our present contingent and will be adding a number of new seats to our benches. With the kind of nonsense coming from the Hon. Member, he will eat those words six months from now.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Speaker, this is not the first occasion that the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has referred to a speculators' tax. He referred to it with respect to the transferring of funds outside Canada. Let me delve into that issue at some length, if I may.

It occurs to me that the Hon. Member has identified the source of the revenue giving rise to the capital prior to the transfer outside the country. I wonder whether it would apply to a person who made no speculation in the sense that he had no capital transactions and simply saved the balance of his wages that he had not spent prior to retirement and decided to live outside Canada. Would that speculators' tax apply to that retired employee who decided to spend his retirement years in Florida or in other parts of the United States which have a less hostile climate?

If it were not to apply to that person, would it be necessary to appoint a barrage of additional public servants to supervise and examine in detail the development of the fund which would ultimately be transferred outside Canada? In fact, is it not possible that, as a consequence of the examination in detail which would be needed, he would in that way alleviate some of the great unemployment in this country? It would surely mean the hiring of an additional 10,000 or 20,000 employees in the Public Service to examine every dollar transferred out of the country to determine whether those moneys had in fact arisen as a consequence of speculative transactions—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The time allotted for the question period has come to an end.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the statements of the Hon. Member opposite who presented the motion this morning in the expectation that since he offered criticisms of the Government's policy, he would suggest for his part what he thought should be done. I must congratulate the Hon. Member opposite for his consistency. He has managed to avoid saying for many months—for many years, in fact—what he would do if he were in government. He certainly lived up to that reputation this morning.

I should, however, be fair to him in that on one occasion he offered a comment on what he and his Party would do if in the unlikely event they were to achieve power. He said that he would do exactly what this Government is doing. He said that if he were in government tomorrow, he would continue with the general approach taken by the Finance Minister, that is, emphasize the need to reduce inflation and interest rates, support business and talk about restraint. There we have an endorsement from the Hon. Member opposite of what the Government is doing. He endorses the programs and policies of the Government and says in addition that the Finance Minister had little choice except to plan for a deficit in the $30 billion range. He added that a big deficit this year was necessary to encourage economic recovery. The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is engaging in his usual doom and gloom about the future, but at the same time he says that he would do exactly what the Government is doing, and endorses the economic policies which he attacks in his motion.

Let me say a word about the economic situation in the United States because it is key to understanding recent increases in interest rates in Canada, a central point in the Hon. Member's motion. What we have seen in the United States is a very large structural federal deficit which has put some pressure on money markets and contributed to the increasing interest rates there. That large structural deficit in the United States has coincided with economic recovery, rapid economic recovery, probably at an unsustainable rate but certainly economic recovery. The combination of a high government deficit and more borrowing by the private sector as part of the economic recovery has inevitably meant that interest rates in the United States have increased substantially over past months.

What effect does that have on Canada or indeed on any other industrialized nation? The effect is obvious. It is certainly obvious in the case of Canada. With a free flow of money across our borders, Canadian money will seek a higher rate of return wherever it can find it. That is understandable. Canadians save money and seek a higher rate of return. In such a situation the Canadian response can be one of two things. We can either see interest rates in Canada increase to offer Canadian savers the same opportunity of return on their savings as they can achieve in the United States, or we can see a reduction in the value of the Canadian dollar.

We on this side of the House have worked to moderate both those tendencies. However, it would be naive and foolish for any Member of this House to think that somehow Canadian interest rates can be made immune from rate movements in the United States unless, of course, one wants to subscribe to the sort of cloud cuckoo-land idea of the NDP that there can be some sort of currency restrictions, or what the Member opposite calls a speculative tax on the flow of currency, the flow of Canadian dollars in search of higher rates of return.

● (1220)

The situation is quite clear. The Bank of Canada well summarized the current position of the United States when it noted in its recent report, and I quote:

> Because of the dominant role of the United States in the world economy the U.S. fiscal deficit is of particular importance and has attracted widespread concern. That the fiscal deficit of the United States Government is currently much too large to be sustainable is widely agreed both within and outside the United States, but effective U.S. action has been prevented so far by the absence of sufficient internal agreement on how to deal with it, that is, to what extent to reduce expenditures and to what extent to raise taxes. Concerns about whether and when the U.S. fiscal deficit will be dealt with has for some time put upward pressure on market interest rates both in the United States and around the world.

Let me pick up the last point "around the world". We have seen the same sort of thing happening in other industrialized nations that we have seen in Canada. The West German Bundesbank noted the other day that they had reached the limit of detaching themselves from U.S. currency rates and interest rates are at the lower end possible in Germany. It is evident that in other industrialized countries with open currency markets, as Canada has, the same sort of pressures are present. U.S. interest rates go up and they either put upward pressure on interest rates in other industrialized countries, or the currency of that country falls in value as people move their money out of the domestic currency into U.S. dollars.

Let us look at the evidence. Since February, short-term U.S. interest rates have increased about two percentage points. At the same time, most major trading currencies, including the Canadian dollar, have fallen against the U.S. dollar as speculation of further increases in U.S. interest rates fuelled a strong appreciation in the value of the U.S. dollar on foreign exchange markets.

Canada is obviously not the only nation faced with rising interest rates and a reduction in its exchange rate with the U.S. dollar. The short-term interest rates in most industrialized countries—I have already noted Germany—including France, Japan, The Netherlands, Switzerland and Britain, have all risen appreciably since the beginning of this year. Since February, when U.S. interest rates began to rise, the foreign exchange value of the French franc, the German mark, the Swiss franc and the British pound have all depreciated against the U.S. dollar. The depreciation in the value of the Canadian dollar has in some instances been less than that of other major trading currencies against the U.S. dollar.

However, we do have a situation in Canada where, despite the pressure of higher interest rates in the United States, Canadian interest rates have been maintained at levels that should be a source of reassurance to Canadians about their future economy.

During the second half of 1982, Canadian interest rates declined dramatically. During 1983, those rates remained remarkably stable while U.S. rates trended upwards. As a result of the divergent patterns that began to emerge, the difference in Canadian interest rates and U.S. interest rates narrowed. In late 1982 and through much of 1983, Canadian interest rates, contrary to the historical pattern, were equal to, and in some instances less than, U.S. interest rates. In the first four months of this year, the differentials between short-term rates in Canada and the United States have been roughly zero.

Despite the fact that Canadian interest rates were low in 1983 in comparison to those in the United States, there was nevertheless a net long-term capital inflow of some $2.8 billion into Canada. The Member opposite, with his usual gloomy outlook, said that there had been little foreign investment in Canada, that there had been little inflow of capital into Canada during recent years because of all sorts of nefarious practices that he ascribed to the present Government. If he would take the trouble to look at the facts, as I have cited, we have seen almost $3 billion of net long-term capital from abroad invested in Canada during the year 1983 alone. When the Member speaks of some terrible but unidentified events that led to a withdrawal of capital or a decision not to proceed with investment in Canada, he is simply talking through his hat. He obviously does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Crosbie: The figures are there.

Mr. MacLaren: Yes, they are. The net inflow of long-term capital during 1983 was $2.8 billion.

We have a policy being urged upon us by Members opposite which suggests that somehow recent exchange rate and interest rate pressures are in some bizarre way wholly of our own making. Clearly they are not. To think that is the most naive and silly idea that the Member could have. He knows perfectly well what the situation is. He has stated it on many occasions. In 1979, when he was Minister of Finance, he said:

> In connection with the three recent interest rate increases, I have concurred with the Governor of the Bank of Canada in his decision.

In saying that, he knew that interest rates in Canada had to increase at that time for many of the same reasons that are present today. When he was Minister of Finance, he further said:

> We have a free market economy and the forces of competition will regulate rates.

The Hon. Member knows that. To come into the House today and say there is some sort of magic wand which can be waved and we will have in Canada a Canadian interest rate policy set entirely in Canada is simply nonsense. He knows that and yet he says—

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have listened repeatedly to the Minister misquoting me. I said specifically in this House today that there was no magic wand by which anyone could change this situation, that it would take time, and so on. The Minister said that I came in here today and said there was a magic wand which you could wave and change the situation. He has miquoted me repeatedly in his remarks. Would he stick to some kind of accuracy when he makes his speech?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for St. John's West has made his point. We will return to the Minister.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, I have not misquoted the Hon. Member. If he looks at Hansard, he will find he said there is no easy, rapid solution, that it might take six months. If he thinks that within six months, somehow Canada and every other industrialized nation can declare independence of major currency and interest rate changes within the United States, then he is again simply talking through his hat. He should know better than that. He must know better than that. I shall quote word for word what the Hon. Member opposite said in response to a point made in the House on October 25, 1979:

● (1230)

The hon. gentleman should read the statement of Governor Bouey today and see why interest rates have had to continue to go up; and why they have gone up in the United States—

The Hon. Member knows that. For him to come to the House today and say that in six months the situation could somehow be fundamentally changed is simply for him to engage in a fantasy.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, what we have had in Canada in recent years—

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would refer to this morning's Hansard, Mr. Speaker, since the hon. gentleman challenged my version of what I said. Reading from the "blues", I said: "—we agree that there is no easy overnight solution to bring down interest rates, but we are also of the opinion that the economy can be managed in a way which will allow us to have lower interest rates than we now have which would allow us to have greater independence in interest rate policy. This will take time". That is what I said, Mr. Speaker. I went on to say: "It will take time to reassure Canadian and foreign investors that sensible government and sensible policies have returned".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman should stop misquoting me when the evidence is right here in the "blues".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. Order. There seems to be a tendency this morning for Hon. Members to quote others and that is really not a point of order. For Members to disagree with one another is certainly a matter of debate. May I ask the Hon. Minister to resume his speech and try to stick to his proposals?

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, I can well understand why the Hon. Member opposite is so sensitive about quotations. He endorses the policies of this Government and then on the other hand says that they are the wrong policies.

Mr. Crosbie: I have not done that, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order.

Mr. MacLaren: I can understand why he would be upset about that.

Mr. Crosbie: This is really intolerable. I have never in my life said that I endorse the policies of the Government and the hon. gentleman cannot produce any evidence to prove that I did. All I ever said last November was that the general thrust of the April Budget was going in the right direction. However, that statement dealt with the April Budget of a year ago and not with the policies of the Government and its thousand failures since then.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: I am an injured party, Mr. Speaker, a very injured party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. This last intervention by the Hon. Member for St. John's West is probably the best example of a false point of order. He may disagree with what the Minister has said but the Minister may interpret what others say. Please do not interrupt Members when they have the floor.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, before I was interrupted by a false point of order, I was about to say that in fact there are in Canada today a number of underlying factors which give every reason to reassure all Canadians of the continuing strength of the Canadian dollar and indeed of the likely trend of longer-term interest rates in this country. For example, many in the House have taken some understandable satisfaction from the fact that Canada showed a record trade surplus in January of this year and indeed showed a major trade surplus for the whole of last year while the United States trade imbalance grows larger month by month. In fact, the U.S. current account deficit already far exceeds any previously recorded level.

Contrast that with the situation in Canada. We have enjoyed record export sales over the past 14 or 15 months and there is every reason to believe that that situation shall continue. Why should this situation continue? It is because Canadians have succeeded in reducing inflation which in turn has contributed to a major increase in our productivity and international competitiveness. Canadian industries and workers responded to the Prime Minister's appeal for restraint. They responded to the Government's six and five program, a program largely emulated by the provinces and by the private sector, with the result that we have greatly reduced if not yet eliminated the inflationary bias in our economy.

Canadians working together have thereby increased our international competitiveness through greater productivity. Indeed, as a recent International Monetary Fund survey of costs and competitiveness in major industrialized countries noted, Canada is an example of a country that experienced a significant improvement in its international competitive position. It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that such an improvement contributes to an underlying strength of the Canadian dollar but it equally underlines the necessity for all of us in Canada to continue our fight against inflation.

I am pleased to note, as have so many Hon. Members before me, that we have experienced an impressive recovery from the recession of 1981-82. We have seen our Gross National Product, the measure of the total goods and services produced in the economy, increase significantly over the past two years. We have seen inflation go down and we see our corporate sector to be in a much healthier financial position with stronger cash flows.

There is no question that the Canadian economy is on the mend and well on the way to further growth. Instead of Opposition Members recognizing the facts, we have before us this silly motion put by the Hon. Member opposite who tells us that there are a whole variety of things that could be done to insulate Canadian interest rates and the value of the Canadian dollar—

Mr. Crosbie: That is what your Leader said.

Mr. MacLaren: —from U.S. pressures by—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair regrets to interrupt the Hon. Minister but his time has expired. Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I have several questions. The hon. gentleman spoke of the strength of the Canadian dollar. I wonder if he could explain to the House how he can say that there is strength in the Canadian dollar when the Canadian dollar has fallen from over 87 cents U.S. in March, 1980 to its present status of hovering just above 77 cents U.S.? That has been a huge diminution in the value of the Canadian dollar and there are no signs that the pressure is off the Canadian dollar. I wonder if the Minister could explain to us, then, how he can say that we now have strength in the Canadian dollar?

At the same time, I wonder if he could explain to us where he gets the figures relating to our capital account performance. The facts are that we had principal capital outflows of minus $8.9 billion in 1983, both in direct investment and in the unidentified outflows. The unidentified outflows were $6.6 billion and the direct investment outflows were $2.3 billion net, making the total of principal outflows last year $8.9 billion. There is now and has been over the last six or eight years a major outflow of capital from Canada caused by both Canadians and Americans. How can the Minister pretend that this is not the situation?

Finally, would the Minister explain to me why he thinks the motion is silly when it is based upon a statement that was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)? The Prime Minister said exactly the same thing as this motion says on February 10, 1980. Is the indication that we can be independent of U.S. policy correct when it is made by a Prime Minister who is no longer in office but incorrect when it is made by a Prime Minister who is in office and spends four and a half years bringing in policies that cause to happen the exact opposite of what was said would happen? This motion is based upon a promise to the Canadian people which was made by the Prime Minister, a promise which he has broken repeatedly.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, I shall deal first with the value of Canadian currency versus the United States dollar. The Hon. Member opposite should recognize—and I mean this in all seriousness—that what has happened is that all major foreign currencies have in the recent years, on average, depreciated against the U.S. dollar, including the Canadian dollar. Why is that? In part, it is the result of the situation which I described earlier. We have seen that the United States Government has been running a major structural deficit. We have seen economic recovery occurring in the United States. The combined pressures for borrowing from both the Government and the private sector have driven up interest rates. Money coming from other countries into the United States—foreigners buying U.S. dollars—has meant an upward pressure on the United States dollar. The United States dollar has appreciated against most other major currencies over a fairly significant period of time, indeed during most of the period of time that the Hon. Member opposite has been talking about. The U.S. dollar has appreciated against the French franc, the U.S. dollar has appreciated against the Canadian dollar, the U.S. dollar has appreciated against the Italian lira, and the U.S. dollar has appreciated against the Japanese yen which is one of the strongest currencies, along with the Swiss franc, in the industrialized world. That is what is happening. The Canadian dollar is no way immune to those pressures any more than the German mark is or the British pound sterling.

With regard to the Member's questions about—and I think he was talking about this—long-term capital inflow into Canada during 1983, I would repeat that there was a net long-term capital inflow in Canada during 1983 of $2.8 billion. If the Member opposite wishes to have an elaboration of the numbers, I would be glad to send them to him.

The final point which the Member made concerned the statements of the Prime Minister with regard to our ability to have an interest rate policy fully, wholly and totally independent of the United States on the one hand, and, on the other hand, the recognition of the fact that today no such policy can be pursued by any industrialized country. He is trying to set up a straw man and knock it over. In fact, what the Prime Minister said was that we can close to a substantial degree the interest gap between Canada and the United States. If the Hon. Member recalls when the Prime Minister made that statement, interest rates in Canada were running well ahead of those in the United States. But over a period of time we have managed to bring down interest rates in Canada close to the point in which during some of 1982 and much of 1983, certain interest rates in Canada were lower or no more than those in the United States. The differential between Canadian and U.S. interest rates was largely closed. That differential was eliminated and Canadian interest rates were reduced as a result of good fiscal management on the part of this Government.

With regard to the current situation, the Hon. Member opposite knows perfectly well that the interest rates in Canada, as in any other industrialized country, are directly affected by interest rates in the United States. I think this is the third time I have made this point today. I suppose I will have to go on making it because the Hon. Member opposite believes and has convinced himself that somehow with the free and open money markets between our two countries—and we are each other's major trading partner—we can somehow isolate ourselves from interest rate pressures in the United States. That is simply not so. Anyone with an Economics 100 knowledge would certainly understand that elementary principle.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote the Hon. Minister to make sure that I have it right. I believe the Minister said: "Interest rates have been maintained at a level which should reassure Canadians about their economy".

I have a very simple question for the Minister. When he made that statement, was he referring to the 22 per cent mortgage interest rates of 1981-82, or the 18 per cent and 19 per cent prime rates at the same time? To use that "turn around Turner" term, could the Minister clarify which it is that the Canadian home owner, small business person and farmer felt more reassured by—the 22 per cent mortgage interest rate or the 19 per cent prime bank rate?

Mr. MacLaren: What I had in mind, Mr. Speaker, was the fact that the fiscal policies of the Government, as expressed in two Budgets and in other policy statements, have contributed to a reduction in inflation in Canada, have increased our international competitiveness and have strengthened the basic underpinning of the Canadian dollar. That has meant that we have been able to narrow the interest rate differential between our two countries. That is what I am talking about. I am saying that in Canada over the past couple of years we have, in effect, eliminated the interest rate differential that was such an omnipresent concern of Hon. Members opposite not very long ago. We have eliminated that. It has happened. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, in asking my question, I would like to point out to the Minister how inaccurate he has been again. Does he realize that in March of 1980 Canadian interest rates were 1.5 per cent less than U.S. interest rates, and that today Canadian interest rates are only .5 per cent less? The interest rate in the U.S. today is 12.5 per cent. It would be 11 per cent in Canada if we were still as well off as we were back in 1980, but it is 12 per cent in Canada and 12.5 per cent in the U.S. Therefore, that is an inaccuracy.

The question which I would like to ask the Minister is this. He wants to pretend the Canadian dollar is stronger vis-à-vis other currencies and that other currencies are more affected by the U.S. dollar than we are. How does he explain the fact that the prime rate today in the United Kingdom is 8.5 per cent? It is not 12 per cent as it is in Canada. It is 8.5 per cent in the United Kingdom; 7.75 per cent in West Germany; 5.7 per cent in Japan; and just 5 per cent in Switzerland. To use those four countries as examples—West Germany and the United Kingdom in particular, as well as Japan and Switzerland—their interest rates are considerably less than ours. How can they have lower interest rates? They still have to contend with the U.S. dollar—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The question period has come to an end. Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and speak to this motion that the House is of the opinion that the Government of Canada can manage the economy in a way that would allow us to have lower interest rates than Canada now has and that we can have greater independence in interest rate policy despite the failure of the Government to meet its commitment to so manage the economy. The interesting thing about this particular motion is that it was a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he was campaigning in the 1980 election. It is a statement which has been completely abandoned by the Government over the course of the present term of the Liberal Party.

My colleague who preceded me went on to discuss at length things which he felt benefited the Canadian economy and Canadians. He completely ignored the fact that this Government has single-handedly set records for unemployment in the post-depression period. It has set records for high bankruptcies—farm bankruptcies, personal bankruptcies and business bankruptcies—and has set records for mortgage interest rates. This is a Government of record; there is no question about that.

The reason I am interested in participating in this debate is not to deal with this subject at the Governor Bouey level, as the Government would like to deal with it, and not to give obtuse arguments which are not understood by the ordinary people, but to tell it like it is where I come from. I return to my riding every weekend, Mr. Speaker. I have an opportunity on the weekends and either on Mondays or Fridays to see my constituents and discuss with them what the major concern is out there. What is bothering Canadians? Where are the areas of pressure? There is no question that at a constituency level, the level of the ordinary Canadian, the major concern is rising interest rates and the inability of the Liberal Government to do anything about it, its inability to manage its interest rate program in such a way as to protect Canadians. The home owners who are renewing their mortgages are concerned, as is the small business operator who is cutting back on his or her inventory. Employees who are, after all, consumers, are all cutting back on their major purchases. And this is because of the complete lack of action on the part of the Government.

These Canadians remember the Liberal recession of the 1980s. They remember very well the Liberal high interest rate policy which brought about that recession. There is a lot of apprehension out there. My people in Simcoe North want us to try to control our economic destiny rather than simply to watch the Government come in here day in and day out trying to explain away why it cannot do anything about interest rates.

All the while Government Members are saying they cannot do anything about it, the Canadian people know that it was not Ronald Reagan who bailed out Maislin. It was not Ronald Reagan who brought forward the Budget of 1981. It was not Ronald Reagan who built Mirabel. It was not Ronald Reagan who devised our national energy policy. It was not Ronald Reagan who had a slush fund approach to unemployment insurance. It was not Ronald Reagan who drafted the brochures put out by the Canadian Unit Office to publicize eight Liberal Members of Parliament from Quebec. Ronald Reagan had nothing to do with that. That mismanagement and misspending was completely the fault of this Government and the result of this government's actions.

Canadians know that the recession of the 1980s was a result of the Liberal high interest rate policy. There was great hurt out there, Mr. Speaker, and I am not talking about Governor Bouey. I am talking about people who lost their homes, lost their farms and lost their businesses. There has been unheard of social and economic grief at the constituency level because of the failure of the Liberal Party.

There is a lack of investor confidence because of government policies. We have runaway deficits; $10 billion in 1980 and $31 billion in 1983. We have a national energy policy which drove out foreign investment. There was runaway inflation, and I refer to the Budget of 1981. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians have had enough. They want a real change.

Members of the Government are now involved in a leadership campaign and it is like watching the Titanic sink all over again. The captain has left the ship, but he sits there in feigned indifference watching six of his former mates claim that they are now going to move the ship off the iceberg because they have some new ideas. Then there is the seventh, the one who has been AWOL for eight years. He is going to come back and save us all, the Bay Street lawyer who quit. He quit for one or two reasons. There is Mr. Turner's version and there is the Prime Minister's version. Then there was the clarification by Mr. Turner, which we all term as the "Turner turnaround". The old clarifier is back at it.

I would like to talk about interest rates. We on this side believe that to have interest rates as part of a policy we have to create a fiscal environment which will reduce interest rates without destroying our currency or reigniting inflation. That sounds impossible, but we suggest we would do it by strengthening the dollar, which has hit an all-time low, and by cutting back on the Government's $31 billion deficit. We suggest that we must create a fair and stable investment climate. That has not been the case under the present Liberal Government. It has gotten into the marketplace. It has interfered with the national energy policy. It has caused capital to fly from this country. Whether it was a dollar or an oil rig, it left.

We had the MacEachen Budget which made it unpopular to invest in Canada. Since 1980 $17 billion of direct investment capital has left this country. That is one of the major reasons our dollar has fallen from 88 cents to 78 cents. That decline in our dollar has forced the Bank of Canada to get into the market and to keep interest rates high.

We suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if we attract investment capital, it will strengthen the dollar. If we strengthen the dollar, interest rates will come down.

Mr. Evans: How are you going to attract capital?

Mr. Lewis: By providing the climate, my friend, not by driving investors out.

Mr. Evans: By keeping our interest rates higher than the United States interest rates. That is what we have always done.

Mr. Lewis: My colleague of the deficit, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Evans: That is the way we have always done it for 40 years.

Mr. Lewis: —is trying to interrupt me. I refuse to be interrupted by economic rhetoric from that escapee from south of the border. We have a $31 billion national deficit. This Liberal Government borrows over $20 billion a year just to make the interest payments. What is this doing? It is demanding capital from the market. The demand of this Government for capital is consuming 90 per cent of the available capital from personal savings. That is money which could be put into the private sector rather than paying for the "Maislin bail-outs".

We are spending nearly one-half of the money which is available in Canada. This year, the federal Government is going to spend over $100 billion. Compare that to 1968. In 1968 it spent $12 billion. We have a deficit and what does that deficit mean? It means that the interest on government debt is climbing. It is now over $20 billion a year. That deficit is open to question because, as the Auditor General will tell you, Mr. Speaker, there are several ways of looking at it and he disagrees with the way the Government is looking at it.

Who is going to save us from the deficit? Well, there is the gentleman named Mr. Turner. He says that he is going to cut the deficit. Mr. Turner was Minister of Finance from 1972 to 1975. One will remember that that is when inflation jumped from 5 per cent to 11 per cent, the deficit more than quadrupled and federal spending more than doubled. According to a study made by the C. D. Howe Institute, three out of five John Turner Budgets actually widened the gap between the rich and the poor. After the 1973 Turner Budget, the richest families in this country were better off on average by $1,823 while the poorest families were better off by $134.

Mr. Turner has said he is going to cut the deficit. He does not say where. He has not even clarified it. Usually with Mr. Turner's statements, we are entitled to a clarification. We always receive a clarification from Mr. Turner. It may be the next day or it may be a couple of days later, but what he says is always clarified. But we have not had clarification of that. What we have had is Tom Maxwell, chief economist of the Ottawa based Conference Board of Canada, saying: "Maybe he is getting rusty under pressure". It was also stated, and I quote:

—he mistakenly said Friday that the Government's own projections call for the deficit's proportion of the Gross National Product to be halved by 1988.

Mr. Turner is obviously poorly briefed and poorly prepared for the anointment that Hon. Members opposite are getting ready for him.

I intend to carry on, Mr. Speaker, and discuss interest rates as they affect the housing sector of the economy. I would appreciate being able to call it one o'clock at this point and continue on afterwards on that particular area of my speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

GOVERNOR GENERAL

PRINTING OF SPEECHES AT INSTALLATION OF JEANNE SAUVÉ

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with past practice may I suggest that the speeches of Her Excellency the Governor General and of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), given during yesterday's ceremonies, be appended to this day's Hansard. Is this agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

METRIC CONVERSION

IMPLEMENTATION BY ORDER IN COUNCIL

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) will revert to mandatory metric by Order in Council in July, 1984. The decision to impose enforced metric conversion, announced yesterday in a press release, was the direct result of the inability of Jack Halpert and Ray Christiansen to launch an appeal due to insufficient funds.

The Minister's decision to employ Order in Council, which she states will be passed by July of 1984, seriously contradicts her commitment to postpone compulsory metrication pending the outcome of the Government's appeal against Mr. Halpert and Mr. Christiansen. Therefore it is obvious that we can no longer depend upon the current Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to allow this important issue to come before Parliament where it would receive the attention of all Members, and be discussed according to democratic principles. Instead, she fully intends to revert to mandatory metric conversion, enforcing prosecutions, which incur fines, confiscation of equipment, and possible jail terms for using imperial weigh scales.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SENTENCE IMPOSED ON PENITENTIARY EMPLOYEE FOR DRUG CONVICTION

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to comment on the sentencing of a former Millhaven Penitentiary employee on April 30 of this year. On December 21, 1983, the RCMP charged a paint shop instructor at Millhaven with possession of marijuana and LSD for the purpose of trafficking drugs to inmates at the Penitentiary. On April 30 he was sentenced to 120 days, which could be reduced to 40 days for good behaviour.

In my view this is a serious miscarriage of justice in light of the crime committed. This instructor had the responsibility of teaching the inmates some valuable trade which might assist in their rehabilitation. Under normal circumstances, any breach in the trust given employees by Correctional Services of Canada is unacceptable. However, to break the law while breaching that trust is an even more serious offence, and the lawbreaker should be penalized harshly.

Surely by anyone's standards imposing a 120-day sentence on a penitentiary employee trafficking drugs to inmates is far too lenient. These criminals have been placed in our penal institutions to pay their debt to society, and hopefully to be rehabilitated. They should not have access to drugs which, if past reports have been accurate, have played a role in inciting prison riots, murders, and other serious disruptions. For those found guilty of supplying inmates with drugs, the penalties should be severe.

I object most adamantly that a judge would rule so leniently in such a serious matter. When such a flagrant break of trust has been committed, I question the wisdom of handing down such a decision. I personally believe that anyone involved—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—EFFECT ON CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, this country needs humane interest rates. Farmers cannot survive on the FCC's rates of over 14 per cent. Small businesses cannot survive added interest increases. More jobs will be lost. Another rise of 1 per cent to 2 per cent will mean that most Canadians will not qualify for home mortgages. No wonder the people have lost confidence in the Government. While Canada's economy burns with high interest rates, our modern day Nero, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), is fiddling for a job in France. Canadians are not the only ones who have lost confidence in the Minister. Ronald Reagan prefers a French socialist to a flawed Canadian socialist as head of the OECD.

Canadians are afraid, and are cashing in their Canada Savings Bonds at an alarmingly high rate. Last month's rundown of bonds reached $445 million, up from $217 million one year ago. From November 30, 1983, to April 30, 1984, redemption levels doubled to $2.13 billion from $1.19 billion a year ago. The Government's bankruptcy of policies has resulted in a policy of bankruptcies. Not surprisingly, Canadians are cashing in this Government.

I urge the Government to bring down interest rates, to stop this run on Canada Savings Bonds, to protect farmers and small businesses from bankruptcy, and to enable Canadians to purchase homes. Will the cut-and-run Minister enact at least one humane economic policy so that history will not remember this Trudeau protégé as a total failure?

CANADIAN LABOUR MARKET AND PRODUCTIVITY CENTRE

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED LOCATION IN OTTAWA

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of concern to me that the location for the new Canadian Labour Market and Productivity Centre is almost finalized as being the City of Ottawa. It is a concern because, once again, the policy of decentralization of various national institutes is being overlooked. I feel that it is unfair to many deserving industrial and business centres outside the capital which have equal facilities and better industrial, labour, and business environments than does Ottawa; Hamilton being one such city.

For example, important institutes of higher learning located within or near the Hamilton area include McMaster University, the University of Guelph, the University of Waterloo, and Mohawk College. They could provide a wide variety of input to the new Productivity Centre. McMaster University, in fact, has the only labour studies program in Canada. As well, nearly 70 per cent of all Canadian heavy industry and manufacturing is located within 150 kilometres of Hamilton. The Productivity Centre could therefore draw on the expertise, not only of our manufacturers, but also of a large number of labour leaders.

Hamilton and other cities like it need the benefits of national institutes which, at the moment, are increasing in number and which are being located in Ottawa. I am sure that years from now a decision will be made to move the Productivity Centre to a more appropriate location out of Ottawa. Unfortunately, that move will most likely be carried out at a high cost to the taxpayer, and at the cost of uprooted family lives for the employees of the Centre, as has happened recently with several federal agencies.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

EXPLOSION OF FRENCH NUCLEAR DEVICE IN SOUTH PACIFIC

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I read with profound regret this morning that France, headed by a democratic socialist Government, is reported to have exploded a nuclear device in the South Pacific for the second time in four days, according to a New Zealand Government seismologist.

All tests of this kind, Mr. Speaker, are an offence against the planet earth and against the future of the human prospect, no matter who carries them out and no matter how agreeable one may find other policies of the culprit Government. The fate of the earth is a matter which transcends national loyalty, longstanding friendships, and ideological affinities. Nuclear madness must be opposed and exposed wherever and whenever it is manifested, even when friends are the culprits. This is what mature friendship among nations is about. It is the ability to be honest and critical without fear of retaliation or rejection.

It is about time that Canada's friendship with the United States reached such maturity on both sides of the 49th parallel. I call upon the Government to do its part by developing a more independent foreign policy, and by trusting that if our friendship with the United States is true and mature it will survive such independence. If it does not, we will at least be released from illusion.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

INTERIM PAYMENTS URGED FOR FARMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, after much prodding from the Progressive Conservative Party the Government has finally introduced Bill C-33, an amendment to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. With rising input costs and poor grain prices, western grain farmers have been caught in a severe cost price squeeze. Western grain farmers need financial assistance now. Further amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act are needed and should be enacted immediately so that an interim payment can be made, as well as a retroactive payment for the 1982-83 crop year.

We do not believe the Government can afford to put off making a payment until October, especially as the stated intention of the Liberal Government has been merely to pay grain farmers only part of their past contributions. A grain farmer who entered the program in 1979 would have paid a maximum of $5,700. If invested at bank rates, this amount would have accumulated to $8,000. The Government has indicated that the average payment will be $2,500 to $3,000. This is too little, too late. The Government is playing politics with the farmers' money.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

DEMAND FOR ABANDONMENT OF LOCKAGE FEES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, water was the means of transportation that opened up our country to the explorers and to the economic resources that aided in the development of the country.

The statement by the Minister of Transport to the effect that the St. Lawrence Seaway should not have making money its top priority is very timely, as the subject of Crown corporations is presently before the House for further consideration.

Some Crown corporations, such as the Seaway, are the result of dreams of public-minded citizens as well as of entrepreneurs alike. It took generations of human effort to transform this natural waterway into a transportation artery linking the rest of the world with the heartland of North America. To maintain the economic benefits of the Seaway, a happy balance of user pay and public benefit must be achieved.

The Seaway Authority wants government policy direction. Business and commerce welcome the freeze on Seaway tolls. Lockage fees, however, were imposed for a specific purpose which no longer exists. They should be abandoned, and the accessibility of community ports around the Great Lakes to water transportation should be restored. Such an action would be in keeping with the original dream of this great waterway.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL EXPENDITURES ON ARMAMENTS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, in the last several days it has been brought to my attention that the international arms trade will pass $1 trillion within a year or two. I believe that this is one of the major sins and evils that now face the planet earth.

I would like the House, and every Canadian who can hear my voice, to become even more aware of the divergence that is taking place in the world at this time between those who seek military solutions to problems and those who live in utter misery and poverty. How is it possible that, on a planet with the sophisticated ways of life that we have, the funds which should be used for the well being and health of people are being turned into arms?

It is not only the superpowers that are involved, it is now many of the growing Third World countries. Brazil, Turkey, and Israel are also major arms shippers and major arms sellers.

I repeat that I believe that, in the name of humanity, the Government, this Parliament, and all Canadians must put their united wills together once more to see that this race stops, because it will not bring anything except total destruction. It will not bring anything except death and misery. We have no other choice but to see that it stops.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO CANDIDATE JOHN TURNER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my statement today is about turn around, turn about, turn over Turner. When in government he introduced the Official Languages Act, but in Toronto, when making a pitch for the leadership, he cried: "Leave bilingualism up to the provinces". Later, when in Quebec, he stated: "I will continue the policies of Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Joyal in the area of official languages in Canada". A complete turn around.

Again, the ever turning Turner, when Minister of Finance, increased spending 99.8 per cent. He was an expert at emptying the public coffers, but now he will reduce government spending. Another turn about.

This hope of the Liberals, when in Quebec, said that he approved of Bill 101, that repressive, discriminatory piece of legislation because, he said, it is provincial rights. He introduced the Official Languages Act. Is that not federal legislation? Another spin around.

Our hero from Bay Street will reduce the deficit, but when he was Minister of Finance he introduced deficit spending and borrowing. As a result, Canadians now owe approximately $200 billion. Another turn about.

Guess what? The Liberals hope says that he is going to help the farmers of the West. As director of the CPR, he increased their freight to the point where farmers are going bankrupt. Even worse, he has again been appointed to the CPR board so that there will be another increase in freight to haul grain in July.

Will Mr. turn around, turn about, turn over Turner become Prime Minister of Canada? If he does, Canada will spin in circles. Heaven help us.

This sorrowful story will be continued on yet another day.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—EFFECT ON YOUNG HOME BUYERS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, who, I gather, is in Paris job-hunting, I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance.

In 1981 and 1982 thousands of people lost their homes because interest rates soared to an all-time high. Young people in particular were badly burned, and either lost their homes or had to delay buying homes. Now, just as they are regaining confidence, they see the same thing happening again. They see interest rates heading upward. They ask what is happening and whether they will have to put off buying a home for another five years. I want to ask the Minister what can I tell these young people.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have seen an increase in interest rates over the last few months. However, they are not of a magnitude that merits comparison with the increases that we saw approximately two years ago. The Hon. Member opposite knows perfectly well that interest rates in Canada and the United States, both of which have increased, are still at a level which is very much lower than those of recent memory.

With respect to the question of the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan, which I assume the Member opposite must have in mind, she will know from an answer that I gave in the House a few days ago that it is our intention to bring in the legislation for the Plan very shortly. That Plan will provide protection for those who choose to participate in it. It will be retroactively effective as of March 1. The rates that were applying at the time a mortgage was either taken out or renewed after March 1 will be at the rates which applied at that time.

Miss MacDonald: The Minister obviously is not aware of the fear and the concern that ordinary Canadians feel all across the country because of the way they have already been scarred by high interest rates. They see it happening again.

EFFECT ON UNEMPLOYMENT IN CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, there are approximately 700,000 construction workers in this country. Last month 200,000 of them were unemployed. They see a real slowdown in construction because of high interest rates. Developers are saying the same thing. People are afraid of losing their jobs or of not being able to create new ones. What assurance do these people have that if they start projects they will not have to be abandoned three or four months down the road because of escalating interest rates?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thought that I had answered the question, but evidently I did not. I intended to say to the Hon. Member that indeed we do not anticipate major increases in interest rates in Canada in the foreseeable future. But whether such rates do increase, the protection will be available through the Plan I described a moment ago, which was embodied in the Budget of last February. The Mortgage Rate Protection Plan offers to those who choose to participate in it, for the payment of a premium, protection against the very circumstances which the Hon. Member opposite has described.

In fact we have seen some real progress in the construction industry. When the Hon. Member opposite presents her rather gloomy picture of housing starts in Canada, she should bear in mind that in 1983 housing starts averaged 162,000 units, which was a 30 per cent increase over 1982. In the first quarter of this year there was a 6.3 per cent increase over the fourth quarter of 1983. Therefore we do see some growth in the housing construction industry. I am sure that the Hon. Member opposite will want to recognize that there is also the additional assurance of further growth in that industry through the use of the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan.

Miss MacDonald: What the Minister does not understand, and what the Canadian construction industry could tell him, is that every time interest rates go up by one percentage point, construction goes down by one percentage point. The Minister should also know that it is not only home owners or people in the construction industry who are effected; small business is also worried about interest rates.

• (1420)

EFFECT ON SMALL BUSINESS SECTOR

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, there were 80,000 small businesses which had to close their doors in 1982 because of high interest rates, and people see the same thing about to happen again. Construction workers, home owners, and small businesses see a direct link between high interest rates and the unemployment that will result. They do not want promises from the Minister that have been made for three, four, and five months. They want to know what kind of action the Government is prepared to take to keep interest rates down.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite must know by now, after having been in the House for the last few days, that interest rate increases in Canada are related to interest rate increases in the United States. That is an inescapable fact. Also there are some things we can do in this country to maintain moderate increases and to limit increases in interest rates. We can do this through increasing productivity, through the promotion of exports and, above all, through the reduction of inflation. On those three fronts the Government has acted, and acted consistently. We have moved to reduce inflation. We now see the CPI running at about 4.7 per cent, a low for inflation in Canada in a very long time. Second, we have seen record levels of exports which have been fulled by increased productivity in our economy, again as a direct result of some of the policies adopted by this Government.

We are in fact, Mr. Speaker, taking steps. We have succeeded in taking steps which do have a very real effect on limiting interest rate increases in Canada. But let us not be naive or fool ourselves. The basic reason that interest rates in Canada are increasing occurs outside our borders, in the United States. Unless the Member opposite wishes to suggest currency controls at our borders, then there is no way to avoid the longer term impact of interest rate changes in the United States.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Given the fact that it is now the stated position of the Government that the Government can do nothing about high interest rates, that the forces are outside our control because they are beyond our border, what advice does the Minister responsible for employment have for the Government to cushion the negative effects of high interest rates on employment in Canada?

We know that employment has not grown in the past three months. We know the unemployment rate is hovering around 11.4 per cent. We know that youth unemployment is on the increase, and we know that housing starts are down. We know all of these things. What we do not know is what the Government is going to do for the unemployed as a consequence of all this.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the general approach is still clear. The Government does believe that the private sector is the motor force for creating jobs in the economy. As the Budgets of my colleague, the Minister of Finance, have indicated, we have undertaken steps to create a context which encourages the private sector to create those jobs. Indeed, that has been happening over the past year. As the Hon. Member I think knows, there has been considerable job creation in Canada at a pace and a rate comparable to that of any other country, including the United States.

In terms of specific efforts, he has asked what advice would I give. I would suggest that we look at those programs which exist now, for instance, the Career Access Program which I believe the Hon. Member supports and, indeed, wants to see strengthened, and that in relation to youth employment; that we direct the young to use that program on the basis of support to private sector employers for the creation of jobs for young people and those entering the economy for the first time. There are a variety of employment creation projects under the administration of my Department or the Commission of Employment and Immigration—the Youth Job Corps Program, Canada Works Program, the LEAD Program, the Career Access Program, which I designed exactly to focus in on some of those employment problems on which the Hon. Member has just touched.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister takes the position, and I do not quarrel with this, that the private sector is the principal vehicle for job creation. Let me say to the Minister that high interest rates are a disincentive to the private sector to expand. These high interest rates are happening at a time when there are over 500,000 young people unemployed, and that number is going up. They are about to be joined by another 400,000 young people from our colleges and universities, looking for jobs. That amounts to one million young people. If they cannot find jobs in the private sector because the private sector is cutting back as a result of high interest rates, I ask the Minister what is the Government doing? Specifically, what is the Minister doing to cushion the effects of high interest rates?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): My answer, Mr. Speaker, has to be somewhat repetitive. I am not sure whether the hon. gentleman was listening very carefully to what I said. No one, certainly no one on this side of the House, wishes to have higher interest rates.

He asked what was being done. I pointed out to him the Career Access Program. That Program does provide a contribution of up to 50 per cent of the salary or the wages of a young person, for up to six months and in some cases up to 12 months, to respond to that problem. We believe it is a much more effective program than the kind of tax deduction which the hon. gentleman and his colleagues have suggested, because the private sector employer receives immediately in his hands and at great advantage to his cash flow, les subventions, the subsidy, which will create a job rather than having to wait many months before having the impact of a tax deduction as suggested by the hon. gentleman. In other words, the approach which we are already using in the Career Access Program is a much more effective one than the alternative which has been suggested by the other side. It does depend upon the partnership and co-operation of the private sector, which we are finding increasingly we have.

The hon. gentleman asks what we are doing. The answer is the Career Access Program, which is an effective way of providing encouragement to the private sector to give a job opportunity to young people entering the labour force for the first time.

HUMAN RIGHTS

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question today is for the Prime Minister. It emanates from a meeting which was held all day yesterday on Parliament Hill, sponsored by the parliamentary group on Soviet Jewry, concerning the situation of Soviet Jews. One of the recommendations was that a parliamentary committee be established on human rights to deal not only with human rights in Canada but internationally, including the situation of Soviet Jews, and especially that it would monitor the lack of respect for provisions in the Helsinki Accord. Would the Prime Minister tell us whether he favours the establishment of such a parliamentary committee, and whether he would at least give it serious consideration?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker I do not see personally why the subject could not be taken up before the existing parliamentary committee on external affairs. The suggestion has not yet reached my desk but I will be happy to see if the House Leaders want to examine that possibility.

U.S.S.R.—RESTRICTIONS ON EMIGRATION OF JEWS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Prime Minister. It concerns the same meeting. One of the other proposals made at the meeting was for more vigorous action on the part of the Government. Not only should there be quiet diplomacy on the issue of human rights violations, and especially the stopping of exit permits on the part of the Soviet Government, but this matter should be raised more vigorously internationally and in bilateral discussions with the Soviet Government.

There was some criticism that the Canadian Government had not taken what opportunities it could, and it had not been as active on this issue as other western European Governments had been. Could the Prime Minister comment? Could he give us any undertaking that the Government would be more vigorous in dealing with this very important matter of human rights violations and our concern that people, Soviet Jews particularly, be allowed to emigrate to Israel for purposes of family reunification?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would comment gladly, Mr. Speaker, but I am afraid that the comment would be to the effect that the suggestions by the Hon. Member, or by whomever she pretends to be quoting, are quite inaccurate. We have proceeded by quiet diplomacy, as the expression goes, but we have also made statements publicly and very vigorously. We have made them in every meeting concerning and surrounding the Helsinki declaration. We have made them in Madrid. Before that we made them in Belgrade and, at the United Nations in New York. We have made many statements denouncing the unjust treatment of various minorities by the Soviet Union and, indeed, by other countries. That does not preclude the need for quiet diplomacy. From whatever experience I have had, I think the latter produces generally more results than the former.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING INTEREST RATES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Housing. The House is aware that future home owners and Canadians in general are worried about rising interest rates. The Minister has mentioned a mortgage rate protection program for which legislation is to be introduced very shortly and which will take effect retroactive to March 1. Could the Minister inform the House today, considering the program's retroactivity, whether new home owners will be entitled to obtain interest rates at the levels existing on March 1 of this year?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have made it clear—by the way, I expect the Bill will be before the House in a few days—that the rate to be covered by the Mortgage Rate Protection Program is the rate on the day the home owner renews his mortgage or takes out a mortgage on a new building or home. Therefore, there is no magic day. It will be the rate on the day the transaction is concluded. That is when the program becomes effective.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROVIDE MORE INFORMATION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will realize that Canadians are all anxious to pay the lowest rate possible. If I understand the Minister correctly, even if his Bill takes effect retroactive to March 1, it is far from certain that the interest rate prevailing on that date will be the one that will be covered under the Mortgage Rate Protection Program. In the circumstances, considering that interest rates are rising, it is quite possible, from what I gather from the Minister's statement, that Canadians will have to absorb rates that far exceed the rate prevailing on March 1 of this year.

I therefore wish to repeat my question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister inform the House very specifically whether the interest rates in his Bill will be those existing at the time the Bill is adopted on third reading or the levels prevailing on March 1? I think the Minister understands the relevance of my question.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I agree the question is an important one, and we shall have to be very careful in formulating the answer when we bring the legislation before the House. From the outset, however, we wanted to inform Canadians who were interested in the program when it was announced in the Budget that, pending adoption of the Bill, if their mortgage came up for renewal or they had to take out a new mortgage on a new home, they would be eligible for the Mortgage Protection Program as of March 1. We did not want to leave anyone out. Of course, more specific details will follow once the Bill is tabled.

AGRICULTURE

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION FOR FARMERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. As the Minister knows, today's farmers are part of a capital-intensive industry. As a result, many of them have long-term and short-term indebtedness in the $500,000 to $1,000,000 range. Every time there is an increase in interest rates of 1 per cent, their interest bill per annum increases between $5,000 and $10,000. Bearing that in mind, could the Minister of Agriculture inform the House what specific advice he has given his colleague, the Minister of Finance, with respect to policies that should be followed if today's farmers are to be protected from the Government's high interest policy?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that I have very strong opinions on interest rates.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: He really has no right to know the discussions I have had with the Minister of Finance concerning interest rates. Those discussions were private and confidential. We have had many meetings on how to work out programs. The Minister of Finance is as concerned about interest rates as anyone in the House.

FARMERS' CONCERN

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I heard him say that he has very strong opinions on high interest rates, yet we have seen nothing happen on that side of the House. Therefore I could only assume that unfortunately the Minister lacks influence with his colleagues.

Last week the Minister told me that high interest rates were not a problem for today's farmers, yet farmers in my constituency tell me that high interest rates, more than any other single factor, are forcing them off the land. Will the Minister now concede that farmers in western Canada, and indeed throughout Canada, know more about their problems than he does?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member claims that he knows very much about their problems, I would think that is an exaggeration. He should compare the amount of knowledge and concern I have for farmers and the things we have done for them, such as subsidizing interest rates—last year alone we spent $36 million on subsidizing interest rates—with what some of the provinces are doing. They should match what we are doing, because agriculture is a joint responsibility.

MEDICAL CARE

ADMINISTRATION OF HEALTH SERVICES IN ALBERTA—REPORTED PRIVATIZATION PROPOSAL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. By now the Minister will be aware of the fact that the Progressive Conservative Government of Alberta is considering privatizing the administration of health care in that province.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: I hear Hon. Members to my right saying "Hear, hear", that that is a good idea. That is interesting. Could the Minister tell us whether she shares our view that any movement in this direction, toward the privatization of health care administration in that province, would violate one of the five basic principles of medicare, that of non-profit administration?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at this point in time we do not know what Alberta intends to do. The press reports which I read upon my return from Geneva spoke of the Alberta Minister studying how far he could go in using private management in the health system. All I can say and report on right now is that we made sure—and all Hon. Members of the House agreed unanimously—that Section 8 of the Act contained quite a long definition of what public administration must mean.

It is a fact that Nova Scotia had a tiny portion or an element of its management done under contract by MSI, a private management firm. Also Hawkesbury, Ontario, had an experience with private management. For about a year I have known that the Governments of both British Columbia and Alberta are monitoring the situation very carefully. Perhaps it is because of the philosophy of those two provincial Governments that they have pilot projects in the same direction.

We all know that the next attempt at trying to undo medicare will be through the door of the condition called "public administration". For the time being it is strongly defined in the Act, and I have no reason to fear anything.

Mr. Blaikie: This is not the first time the Minister has hedged on these kinds of questions concerning privatization. She did the same thing when I asked her about AMI at Hawkesbury last year.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not regard the contracting out of health care administration in any province to the private sector as a violation of the principle of non-profit administration? There is no need to be ambiguous about that. Does she or does she not approve of that direction? If she does not, what will she do about it?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member displays the same impatience as he did four years ago when he joined the House. The net result of what I call the mysteries of life when I talk to him, because he does not seem to understand, is that it takes some time to know the facts, to collect information and to analyse the Act, the framework within which we must work. That did not preclude us from passing the Canada Health Act with a strong Section defining the parameters which keep medicare under public administration. I will not be governed by the typical NDP line that, just because a Minister was reported in the newspaper as thinking of using a private management company, this implies a sin of some sort. There is nothing wrong with that. Let us wait and see.

FINANCIAL AID TO VICTIMS OF 1983 DROUGHT

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Two weeks ago, on twenty-four hours' notice, the Minister agreed to meet delegations from the Lac Saint Jean, Mauricie, Lanaudière and Quebec City UPA's to discuss losses suffered during the drought in 1983. At the time, the Minister told the delegation that if the Quebec Minister, Mr. Garon, made an official request for financial assistance in paying compensation to these farmers, he would agree to co-operate. Can the Minister inform the House whether he received an official request from Mr. Garon, and if so, whether it is clearly a request for financial assistance from the federal Government?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member speaks of a request from producers at a meeting that was arranged between some Members from la belle Province and the producers concerned. At that time I informed them that there had to be a request because of the agreements we have, and that the request had to come from the province. Since that time I have received a letter from the Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Quebec, not admitting any responsibility, not stating that this is a problem they would like to solve jointly, but giving several excuses, stating that the federal Minister of Agriculture should look after the needs of these farmers. The Minister of Agriculture for la belle Province uses fancy words and gives fancy descriptions of aid, but refuses to put his money where his mouth is.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES—OIL DRILLING LEASES OFF COAST OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has already acknowledged that a diplomatic note has been sent to the State Department in Washington protesting the proposed oil drilling leases being put out to tender to interested United States petroleum companies in the area of the Dixon Entrance off the British Columbia northern coast. Can the Minister say whether that note covered the environmental as well as the sovereignty concerns of Canada, and is he prepared to table that note because it is of such concern to Canadians?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the actual contents of the note, as I recall, dealt with the issuance of the licences. I would have to examine the note to determine whether the question of environmental concern was included.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it seems that the Government is unable to deal with these maritime boundary problems with the provinces, with our neighbours, or with France in connection St. Pierre et Miquelon. Has the Government ever put forward its claims, and the foundations for its claims on the East Coast, the West Coast, the Arctic, and south Newfoundland? If so, has it had a response? If not, why has it not done so?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is rather global in his examination of territorial boundaries and the underwater area. He may be aware of the fact that negotiations have occurred with France in relation to the underwater boundaries of the St. Pierre and Miquelon area, here in Ottawa, in the past few days. In relation to what he has said about our ability to determine those boundaries, the Hon. Member will realize that, with the extension of territorial limits to 200 miles at sea in all parts of the world, new problems have arisen concerning the territorial boundaries in the underwater area between adjoining countries. Ours is no different from others in that regard. With reference to the Gulf of Maine, the Hon. Member will recall that Canada successfully negotiated an agreement with the United States administration, which the United States Senate then failed to ratify. Under the somewhat quaint Constitution of the United States, that has to occur before a treaty can become effective. That matter is now before the court at The Hague.

TRADE

SHOE IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. The temporary import quota for shoes, which is to expire in November, 1984, has become a matter of great concern between the industry and Canadian consumers. Has the Government made a determination regarding this quota?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have had extensive discussions in Cabinet on this subject. Yesterday I had consultations with representatives of various segments of the shoe industry. There were further discussions on the matter in Cabinet this morning. I anticipate that I will be able to announce a final decision from Cabinet next Tuesday.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ROLE OF CANADIAN TROOPS AT NUCLEAR TESTS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The Minister is in possession of a document from the British Government that was declassified after being top secret for 30 years. It indicates that British troops involved in nuclear testing were treated as guinea pigs. The Government willingly tested them under a variety of circumstances which led to exposure to radiation. Canadian troops were present at those tests. Will the Minister undertake to check with the Department of National Defence to determine whether our Government knew that the Canadian troops with those British troops were being treated in the same manner? Did our Government know that those Canadian troops were being treated as guinea pigs in that testing?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge receipt of the document to which the Hon. Member referred. However, the document was only received by my office a half hour ago. Therefore, I have not had a chance to review it. With regard to the second question, yes, I will check.

FUNDING REQUESTED FOR RESEARCH

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, today in Ottawa a group of international atomic veterans met with the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Across this country, and in other areas, the plight of that group has fallen on deaf ears. Canadian atomic veterans need financial assistance to put together a case to argue with the Government. They are too small in number. They also need the study which the Minister caused to take place with the University of Ottawa. There is need for an advisory committee to work with that particular study, so that veterans' concerns can be included. Will the Minister undertake to search for funding so that atomic veterans in Canada can organize and put their case effectively to government? Will the Minister consider an advisory committee, made up of atomic veterans and their medical advisers, to provide input into the study which the Minister has commissioned?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are two parts to the Hon. Member's question, the first being the matter of providing funding to veterans' organizations. I think the Hon. Member knows the answer to that question. I have no mandate to provide funding to organizations. Funding for the Department is totally toward the provision of services and benefits to families. In terms of the study, the Hon. Member is aware that it is well under way. We expect to receive the results of that study by the end of August. We will welcome any input further to that study that organizations and medical advisers to veterans may wish to make.

COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister indicated today that there is nothing his Government can do to separate interest rates charged in Canada from those in the United States. In light of that, why can we not have the same employment record as the United States? For example, in full-time employment we are down 4 per cent from mid-1981, and they are up 4 per cent. With regard to investment, we are down 20 per cent and they are up 10 per cent. Why can we not have the same kind of performance? We have their interest rates; why can we not have their economic performance?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should realize that we in Canada have one of the fastest growing labour forces in the western world. The Hon. Member must realize that, as we create new jobs in Canada, we find that there are more and more people joining the work force, some of whom have traditionally not been members of the labour community in Canada, and others are joining the work force for the first time as the baby boom works its way through the economy.

• (1450)

In addition, as the Hon. Member should realize, we have in fact seen a further increase in employment in Canada. In the month of April employment grew by .2 per cent, a figure which represents about 25,000 to 27,000 additional jobs created in the economy. We are in fact experiencing some net increase in employment levels.

GOVERNMENT POLICY INQUIRY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the growth in our population and the growth in the number of new entrants to the labour force should increase our country's total productivity. The fact is that the Gross National Product is the same now as it was in mid-1981. It has not grown one bit. The fact is that the rate of full-time employment today is 4 per cent less than it was in mid-1981. The fact is that the American economy is on a roll. The fact is that the Canadian economy is still in a recession.

What policies does the Government have, from a finance point of view at least, which will turn the economy around? What will the Government do? Will it leave Canada to suffer with high interest rates? Is that the Government's entire answer? What proposals does the Government have?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is simply wrong if he thinks that there has been no growth in the GNP. In fact Canada's GNP has grown, and grown rapidly, in the past 12 months. During certain periods of time it has even exceeded that of the United States. We have experienced very real growth in the total production of goods and services in Canada.

Equally we have seen employment growth of a substantial nature matched, as I noted earlier, by growth in the work force. This is something of which the Hon. Member should be aware. Of course, if the Hon. Member is unaware of them, he should look to the last two Budgets for a clear indication of the policies which the Government is implementing both through a facilitation of private-sector job creation and direct job creation by government investment. This is having a very real and beneficial impact on Canada today.

TRADE

TEXTILE IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. I was very interested to note today that the Minister and the Cabinet will be discussing quotas for the shoe industry. May I ask the Minister if such discussions are going on with regard to quotas for the textile industry? Will these quotas be extended, or will they even be curtailed in some way? When can we expect a decision to be made on this issue, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question regarding textiles is a much more complex one than the question regarding shoes. The Hon. Member will be aware of the fact that the global restrictions on textiles fall under the arrangements of the multifibre agreement, of which Canada is a signatory along with many other countries.

When supplies of certain kinds of textiles begin coming from a new source, it is necessary in each case for Canada and other countries receiving those textiles to negotiate with the importing country an agreed quota rather than have an uncontrolled flow. The problem is that in the last couple of years there has been a great proliferation of the number of sources from which various types of textiles have been coming. This is a very serious problem, and one which my officials have been addressing by way of negotiations with the importing countries. In most instances we have been coming to satisfactory agreements.

COST OF FARM FUELS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Will the Minister explain to the House why Canadian farmers are forced to pay an average of 30 cents to 40 cents per gallon more for farm fuels than farmers in the United States? What is the Minister doing about this situation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is using figures which are different from those we have in our Department. If he used a wide range of figures from the United States, he could come up with nearly anything.

The Hon. Member has failed to point out that he did not ask the same question when farmers in the United States were paying 30 cents to 50 cents per gallon more than Canadian farmers were paying. The Hon. Member did not worry about that situation at that time. He did not mention that we have many kinds of programs for Canadian farmers which do not exist in the United States. We have a crop insurance program, and we have an interest-free advance payment program for farmers. Those kinds of programs do not exist in the United States. We in Canada have all kinds of programs for farmers which do not exist in the United States.

The Hon. Member knows about the National Energy Program. He knows that the premier of his province okayed the National Energy Program and in the last election he said that it was a wonderful program and that he was proud of it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Shields: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary question then. There are many other Members seeking to be recognized.

Mr. Shields: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister should be reminded that I represent Canadian farmers and not American farmers.

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TAXES

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Will the Minister do something about the situation to which I have referred? The Hon. Member for Vegreville has put a motion before the Standing Committee to remove federal taxes on farm fuels. Will the Minister push that motion through?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member is fully aware of the statements that I have made regarding taxes on farm fuels and fuel that is used for food production.

HANNA, ALTA.—WATER SUPPLY

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I would like to ask him if he is aware of the very serious regional water problem which exists in the community of Hanna, Alberta, both with respect to supply and to quality. Has he signalled the PFRA to take some action? What requests has he made in this regard? Is there some expectation that we might join a provincial program by cost sharing in the important development of a water supply for that community?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member is aware that I was in Alberta yesterday and that I did meet with the Solicitor for the Town of Hanna who presented a new brief to me indicating what the town wants and how it intends to go about getting it. I have been requested to contact the Alberta Minister who is responsible for that program, as well as the former Minister of Transport for the Province of Alberta who, I believe, is now the Chairman of Resources. He has placed a call to me and I hope to return that call to him today. I might point out that there is no agreement with the Province of Alberta for those kinds of programs similar to the agreements we have with the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker: A short question from the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

APPLICATION FOR FUNDS TO MODERNIZE SMELTER AT TRAIL, B.C.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister who is responsible for IRDP, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I am informed by the Member of Parliament who represents Trail, British Columbia, that the Cominco Corporation has put an application before IRDP for funding to enable it to modernize its smelter and become the biggest and best exporter in the world not only of materials from the smelter but also of technology from the smelter.

There is concern, Mr. Speaker, that so much money has been spent bailing out so many firms in central Canada. Will the Minister use his good offices to intervene and ensure that fair consideration is given to Cominco so that it may receive IRDP funding to modernize its plant?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not have any details of the proposal described by the Hon. Member opposite. I should be glad to look into the question. I am sure that any such proposal will be given every consideration. However, I shall get back to the Member opposite about this question.

SMALL BUSINESS

INDIAN BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT FUND

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. In 1981 the now Secretary of State for External Affairs, who was then Minister of Finance, announced with great fanfare a $345 million Indian Business Development Fund. Since that program now falls under this Minister's responsibility, could he tell us how many dollars have been lent from that Fund?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, a board was established late last fall to develop the criteria—

Mr. McDermid: Two years after the announcement.

Mr. Smith: That board was established about two months after my appointment. I do not think that I can be faulted on that point. That board was established to develop criteria. Those criteria were announced about five or six weeks ago. As a matter of fact that board is meeting in Winnipeg this week, and I expect that some of the first projects will be announced very shortly.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Elgin, quickly.

EMPLOYMENT

CAREER ACCESS PROGRAM

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. My question is supplementary to one which was asked by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East, earlier in Question Period, and is with reference to the impact of high interest rates on employment, and particularly on the employment of those young people who are between the ages of 15 and 24.

We know that some $300 million has been assigned to the Career Access Program. It is a good program, and there is no question about that. But in view of the fact that there already exist some 500,000 unemployed young people, as well as an additional 400,000 students unemployed, and in view of the $300 million which is assigned to the Career Access Program, does the Minister honestly think that it will make a serious impact on lowering youth unemployment? I wonder if he could tell me just how many jobs he expects to be created by the program with the $300 million price tag?

• (1500)

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the first part of the question, and I apologize to the Hon. Member. But I do believe that the impact of the Career Access Program will be significant both in terms of providing employment opportunities and providing longer term employment. The major difficulty which young people have, when entering the workforce for the first time, is the vicious circle of not having had work experience. Even though many of the jobs under the Career Access Program may turn out to be short-term jobs—I think that the majority of them turn out to be longer-term jobs—but, even if they do turn out to be short-term jobs, that will provide the passport of experience which will then enable young people to find more attractive work opportunities downstream.

The difficulty with the Career Access Program is not so much the results, which are good, but the necessity of having the co-operation of the private sector in relation to it. Many companies coming out from underneath the recession, particularly the small and medium-sized businesses, are finding it difficult to provide the overhead costs which participation in the program requires. I will be happy to send the Hon. Member a specific indication of the number of placements we expect, or he might wish to attend the Estimates hearing which will be taking place on Wednesday and Thursday. I could then give him a specific number, if he wishes.

HERITAGE DAY

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-239, an Act to proclaim the first Monday in August "Heritage Day".

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to designate the first Monday of August a national holiday called "Heritage Day" and to thus offer to all Canadians an occasion to express their appreciation and their pride in being part of a multicultural nation.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

NOTICE OF ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-24

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that there have been consultations among the representatives of the Parties and it has not been possible to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 80 or Standing Order 81 with regard to the allocation of time for second reading stage of Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. Therefore, at the next sitting of the House I shall propose a notion pursuant to Standing Order 82 to allocate one sitting day to the said stage of the said Bill.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 422, 654, 686 and 787.

[Text]

IRON MOUNTAIN GOLF CLUB, MISSION, B.C.

Question No. 422—Mr. St. Germain:

1. Did the Iron Mountain Golf Club in Mission, B.C. receive any financial assistance from the Government under the NEED, or any other, program and if so, (a) what was the total amount of assistance (b) was it a (i) loan (ii) forgivable loan (iii) grant?

2. Did the terms and conditions of the agreement between the Government and the Iron Mountain Golf Club specify the use of such funds and, if so, what percentage went to (a) salaries of employees (b) retire debts or shareholders' loans (c) administrative costs (d) the purchase of new equipment or property?

3. How many people (a) are employed by the Iron Mountain Golf Club (b) were employed by the club, as a result of financial assistance from the Government (i) what are their names (ii) are any of these people shareholders in the Iron Mountain Golf Club?

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. (a) Financial assistance to the Iron Mountain Golf Club in Mission, British Columbia is being provided under the NEED program and amounts to $1,081,600. (b) A contribution.

2. The terms and conditions of the agreement between the federal Government and the Iron Mountain Golf Club specify that: (a) 66 per cent or an amount of $712,140 of net project costs is for wages and 6.5 per cent or $71,214 is for employee benefits; (b) None; (c) None; (d) 27.5 per cent or $298,246 is for the purchase of materials related to the improvement of the golf course and the purchase and maintenance of equipment.

3. (a) 128 individuals are employed by the Iron Mountain Golf Club; (b) 110 individuals are employed by the Iron Mountain Golf Club as a result of assistance provided by the Government; (i) names of project participants cannot be disclosed under the Privacy Act; (ii) there are no shareholders, since the Iron Mountain Golf Club is a non-profit organization.

DPW—LEASE ON BUILDING IN LONDON, ONT.

Question No. 654—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Does the Department of Public Works lease a building in London, Ontario located at 559 Richmond Street for the use of the Department of Agriculture and, if so (a) at what annual cost (b) on what dates was the current lease negotiated and agreed to and on what date does it expire?

2. Was there a previous lease for this property and, if so, what was the annual cost of leasing the building under its terms?

3. During what total period did the Department of Agriculture occupy this building and were there any renovations or improvements, paid for by the Department, made during that period and, if so (a) at what total cost, to date (b) under what authority was the expenditure made?

4. Did the Government conduct any study to determine if there was suitable and less expensive office accommodation prior to renegotiating the lease and (a) if so, what were the results (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes, Public Works Canada does hold a lease at 559 Richmond Street, London, Ontario for the sole use by the Department of Agriculture. (a) Total annual rate—$163,000. In addition, the Crown is responsible for all operating and maintenance costs estimated at $85,000 per annum. (b) Current lease term began on November 1, 1983 and terminates on October 31, 1987.

2. The previous lease was held on a net lease until October 31, 1983, at an annual rental of $26,400. The operating and maintenance costs for 1982-1983 amounted to approximately $80,260 per annum.

3. Public Works Canada has had the subject premises under lease since 1966. (a) Renovation and general improvements to electrical and structural elements amounted to an estimated $200,000 from 1966-1983. (b) All expenditures were made under the authority of the lease agreement in which the Crown was responsible for all repairs.

4. Public Works Canada conducted a search by means of a public advertisement on May 25, 1983 for existing office space to be used for laboratory purposes for occupancy by Agriculture Canada.

(a) As a result of the tender, four bids were received and each was evaluated on the basis of: cost; delivery time. Based on client laboratory requirements and the nature of the experiments, the estimated cost of relocation to alternative premises would exceed $2 million for fit-ups alone (not including rent). Further, Agriculture Canada had estimated a cost of an additional $700,000 per year for lost research time.

Although Public Works Canada negotiated at a higher rate for the existing space, a new temporary relocation to alternative leased space until a new facility is constructed, was not technically or economically feasible.

(b) Not applicable.

CHILD HEALTH RECORD

Question No. 686—Mr. Clark (Yellowhead):

1. Are members of the Canadian Armed Forces and diplomatic corps required to use the "Child Health Record" announced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in Parliament on September 20, 1983 and (a) if so, what is the (i) authority (ii) reason for the requirement (b) if not (i) is its use at the discretion of the personnel (ii) for what reason was it introduced?

2. Does the Government intend the "Child Health Record" to be used by public servants other than those mentioned in part 1?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. No. (a) (i) and (ii) Not applicable.

(b) (i) The trial use of the record is entirely voluntary and involves only dependent children aged 16 years and under.

(ii) As follows:

To help parents keep a permanent record of the immunizations, growth and development of their child. Details of serious illness may also be recorded.

To improve continuity of care and prevent duplication of services in families with frequent changes of residence.

To enhance communications between parent, physician, hospital and health personnel and to encourage parents to be more aware of their child's health, growth and development.

2. No.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON LABOUR STATISTICS

Question No. 787—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there an Advisory Committee on Labour Statistics and, if so, what (a) are its terms of reference (b) is the (i) name (ii) background or expertise (iii) term of appointment of each member (c) remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses (i) do the members receive (ii) did the members receive to date (d) other funding, if any, is provided by the Government?

2. During the fiscal year 1982-83, did the Committee meet and, if so (a) how often (b) how often is it required to meet (c) what matters did it consider (d) what reports and/or recommendations were published?

Mr. Paul-André Massé (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

1. (a) Terms of Reference: Yes. The Committee's mandate is to provide Statistics Canada with advice on the relevance and effectiveness of its labour data program. The terms of reference include providing counsel on the kinds of statistical information which will be required in the future, advising on analytic priorities, offering guidance on the use of statistical models, and suggesting ways in which Statistics Canada can strengthen its relationships with the labour data user community.

(b) (i) and (ii) Committee Members: The members have been selected for their expertise and not as representatives of particular communities or interest groups. Current membership is as follows:

Chairperson: Dr. Arthur J. R. Smith. Dr. Smith is an economist with a wealth of experience in both the public and private sectors. He is currently Chairman of Northern Professionals Group. Inc., a past President of the Conference Board of Canada, and former Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada.

Members:

Dr. Janet Norwood. Dr. Norwood is an international authority on labour statistics and the Commissioner of the Bureau of Labour Statistics, United States Department of Labour.

Mr. William Nevins, Chief Economist of the Canadian Construction Association.

Mr. R. Hainsworth, Director of Education with the Ontario Federation of Labour.

Prof. Frank Denton, Professor of Economics, McMaster University.

Prof. Bernard Fortin, Professor of Economics, L'Université Laval.

Prof. S. F. Kaliski, Professor of Economics, Queen's University.

Prof. Noah Meltz, Director, Centre for Industrial Relations, University of Toronto.

(iii) Each member has been asked to serve a three-year term.

(c) (i) and (ii) Remuneration: The travel expenses of each member are paid by Statistics Canada in accordance with Treasury Board regulations. In addition, each member is paid on honorarium of $500 per year. To date the members have received their travel expenses of the Committee's inaugural meeting held on January 16, 1984, totalling $1,178 and their honoraria (totalling $3,500).

(d) Other funding. Statistics Canada has contracted with Northern Professionals Group Ltd., whose Chairman is Dr. Arthur J. R. Smith, for the provision of services in support of the activities of the Advisory Committee. Such services will include the development of materials for meetings, the preparation of Committee reports and analyses of issues reviewed by the Committee and the provision of advice to the Chief Statistician based on the deliberations of the Committee. The total cost of these services, including expenses, shall not exceed $7,500 per annum.

2. (a) Meetings during fiscal year 1982-1983. None. The Committee's first meeting took place in Ottawa on January 16, 1984.

(b) Frequency of Meetings. It is expected that the Committee will meet twice a year.

(c) Matters considered. The Committee is an independent body which draws up its own agenda, and the first meeting was devoted to an exploration of topics to be addressed in future sessions. The areas discussed included: occupational employment statistics; labour compensation data in general, and fringe benefit statistics in particular; job vacancy surveys; work sharing statistics; development of a conceptual framework for labour data; flows into and out the labour force; standards of statistical accuracy; small area data; use of models as a source of new statistics.

(d) Published reports or recommendations. None to date—see 2(a) above.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—INTEREST RATE POLICY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie:

That this House is of the opinion that the Government of Canada can manage the economy in a way that would allow us to have lower interest rates than Canada now has and that we can have greater independence in interest rate policy despite the Government's failure to meet its commitment to so manage the economy.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose for lunch I was at the point in my speech in which

I wanted to review the chaos that the policies of the present Liberal Government has brought to the housing sector.

Since the time of the Budget in February, mortgage interest rates have risen from 12.5 per cent to 14 per cent. That will add $50 a month to the cost of servicing a $50,000, 20-year mortgage. That amounts to $12,000 over the life of a mortgage.

The climbing interest rates have affected the demand for new home ownership and have reduced the attractiveness of building rental housing. In April, 1984 housing starts declined to 126,000 a year on a seasonally-adjusted annual basis. In April, 1983 the rate was 179,000. The important thing to remember about the decline in housing starts is that for every housing start that is lost, 2.5 jobs are lost in Canada. In construction, the unemployment rate in April was 22.5 per cent on a seasonally-adjusted basis or 27.3 per cent on an unadjusted basis.

The real tragedy of the chaos in the housing sector the Liberal recession was what it did to real people: the people who were forced to foreclose; the people who went through power of sale proceedings; the people who were forced to sell their homes; the builders who stopped building and the people who worked for those builders who stopped being employed. I suggest that during that time we saw social unrest in Canada, disappointment, heartbreak and chaos.

The tragic thing is that during the time of high interest rates there was no remedy from the Liberal Government. There were no measures adopted by the Government which would protect Canadians from high interest rates. We in the Progressive Conservative Party continually call for measures by the Government which would assist Canadian home owners. We continually demand that the Government stop bail-outs and come to the assistance of people with homes.

• (1510)

We noted with interest the remedies presented in the Budget. The Liberal Party now pretends to be interested in the Canadian home owner. We suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it pays lip service only. What it promised in February has not come about by May 14. For example, in the Budget of February, mortgage rate protection insurance was promised. In mid-March the legislation was promised in a few weeks. Two weeks ago it was promised at the end of May. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the Liberal Party were really interested in the Canadian home owner, it would bring forward a measure to protect the Canadian home owner.

Let us look at what the Liberal Government did promise. It promised mortgage interest rate protection, and I am quoting from the Budget papers, "based on protecting the interest rate which was the market interest rate prevailing for the relevant mortgage term at the time the mortgage protection is taken out". In other words, Mr. Speaker, protection of home owners with mortgages as at the date that they file their application is envisaged in the Budget.

As a result of the questions which the Progressive Conservative Party asked in this House, the Government has now backed down. It has watched mortgage interest rates increase from 12.5 per cent to 14 per cent and it has backed down. It has done that only because this Party brought to its attention the fact that if the Government stuck to what it said in the Budget papers, it would cost Canadian home owners 1.5 per cent on their mortgage protection. We in the Progressive Conservative Party take great pride in the fact that we have forced the Liberal Party to realize the damage which is being done to Canadian home owners by the very failure to bring in legislation—not to promise it, as was done in the Budget.

The Liberal Party also promised in the Budget to repeal Section 10 of the Act so that people who are now renewing their mortgages at high interest rates will have an opportunity to prepay their mortgages during the course of their mortgage term. I suggest to the Government that it is an interesting concept which would find a fair bit of favour on this side, providing we would get a chance to see the mechanics of it. Once again, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Government that the Canadian people are fed up with promises. They want to see the legislation.

With respect to the mortgage rate protection program, I suggest to the Government as someone who has practised real estate law for some time that I have a lot of concern for the mechanics of it. How is it going to work? The Government has told us: "Yes, we are going out to visit the banks. We will see five bank presidents, and based on what they tell us we will draft the Act". That is just not good enough for us in the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Speaker. We are interested in how that Act operates at the street level. Therefore, we will go out and talk to real estate lawyers and to real estate agents, because those are the people who deal with the Canadian home owner and the Canadian consumer. The Government worries about how it is going to go down with the banks, but I tell the Government that we in this Party have no concern about that. We are concerned with the people at the gut level, the people who are buying homes, the people who are being hurt by the policies of this Government.

Third and finally, Mr. Speaker, something else which the Government has only talked about in the Budget is getting into some set-up where we have long-term mortgages. I would offer the Government every encouragement to do that. However, I ask once again, where is this legislation? Where is this program? Everyone knows that is one of the problem with which Canadians are faced. They used to have 25-year mortgages, then the term went down to five years. Now they are looking at three-year, two-year, one-year and six-month mortgages. This is because of the failure of the Liberal Government to act. If it wants to put stability into the mortgage market, into Canadian home owners' minds, it will bring forward that legislation and it will bring it forward quickly so this Party has a chance to look at it.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) state, and try to prove by the very statement, that the Government has no ability to control interest rates or to build a safety net to help those people affected by high interest rates. Well, there is just no one out there who believes the Liberal Party on that issue or any other issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments. If there is no one who wants to ask a question, we will go to debate.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, the other day in Saskatoon, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said that if he were elected Leader of the Liberal Party he would see it as his job to put shoes on the baby and bread on the table. It seems to me we have seldom heard such a clear and succinct expression of the responsibilities of a Liberal Government. It seems to me that the expression of that sentiment sums up in one short statement the precise job we have to do as Liberals in government. It is our job, Mr. Speaker, to counteract unemployment, to cushion the most needy in our society, to stimulate job creation, to continue building a personal security network, and to encourage creative Canadians with new ideas for our future economy. We have done that, Mr. Speaker, through some of the toughest four years since the last great Depression. The Liberal Party has set those goals as our obligation, and we have followed and accomplished those goals.

The Tory attack on this record which we have been hearing today is a Tory attack on government help for business, for the unemployed and for those in greatest need. In the Tory speeches, particularly the speech just made by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), there is the impression that somehow we could insulate ourselves from the United States. In fact, that is the very spirit of the motion before us today. Since no one else around the world has been able to accomplish that, I have listened with great interest to see how the Tories would do it in our country. I have not heard any concrete proposals, although I do intend to return to the idea suggested to us by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) earlier in the debate.

I want you to know, Mr. Speaker, that the Tory ideas presented here today are wrong. The world currency market is a fluid market. The United States is the greatest player in that market, a huge magnet, and we would be misleading Canadians if we told them that we could indeed follow the warped policies which have been presented to us today by the Tories. In fact, from now on, when we refer to the Tories we can call them "the little blue rump of the NDP". For years we have heard the New Democratic Party propose these ideas, which have been laughed at by people, including the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). That Hon. Member must be cringing at this motion today. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) sitting over there asks questions about setting up barriers between Canada and the United States. He knows better.

Mr. McDermid: When was that?

Mr. Fisher: I heard his question addressed to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) today. What a terrible question that was. It left the impression that Canada could opt out of the world. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South knows better than that.

On the weekend, Mr. Speaker, The Toronto Star ran a little article on whether Canada could lower interest rates. One official from the Ontario Government said yes. I needed guidance so I read that article with interest. I know the Ontario Tories are often responsible people, unlike the Hon. Member for Mississauga South who will say anything for a vote. This individual is reported in The Toronto Star as saying that we could lower our interest rates by three percentage points.

• (1520)

I read through that article with interest. I read his prescription for lower interest rates. At the end of the article I found that there were only two small price tags to pay for that. The first was a much lower Canadian dollar. The second was a little thing which he called a new tax on foreign investment portfolios which would, in his understated way, undoubtedly spring up if we were indeed to create a huge incentive to move our money out of the country. This man was going to tax that money out in order to prevent people from moving it. That is merely another method of currency control. That method would spring as many leaks as all the other plans which have been tried over the years. Let us dismiss this motion put forward today as the kind of pre-election politicking and hypocrisy that it really is.

We know that the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre was right two years ago when interest rates in Canada and the United States were up around 20 per cent. At that time he said that Canada could not do anything different from the United States. That is still true today. That kind of honesty should be the real Tory policy rather than the sort of hypocrisy we have heard here.

Supposedly there are ideas in this motion about the Liberal management of the economy. To this point I have described this management as humane, concerned and activist. Mr. Speaker, there are several characteristics of that management of the economy which I would like to discuss today. In our record you have seen a partnership between government and the private sector. That partnership is designed to create jobs and industrial expansion. That partnership was there in the recession, Mr. Speaker, when we provided help for vital but faltering industries such as Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson, Dome and the fishery. All of those industries came to the Government and with pride and compassion it was ready to respond and support them. We used the power of the Government to soften the blow of the recession and to stimulate the rebirth of our economy.

Just listen to the way we have helped small business, for example, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blenkarn: Tell us about it. Tell us about the bankruptcies.

Mr. Fisher: I will read the first sentence of a report from the Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion. "The number of loans to small businesses under the federal Government's Small Businesses Loans Act increased to 25,696 in 1983, a jump of almost 49 per cent over the 17,254 loans made the previous year." Mr. Speaker, we all know that under the Small Businesses Loans Act government and business act as partners to build new businesses and new business expansion. There was an increase of almost 49 per cent in one year in that partnership. That is the way to be an active, concerned government.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is laughing. He thinks it is funny that government should be involved in helping.

Mr. McDermid: No, he is laughing at you.

Mr. Fisher: Let us look at the special recovery projects through which we have helped the economy come out of the recession. There was $4.5 billion committed to the special recovery projects in April of last year. This was not designed as a permanent intervention into the economy but as a one-time shot in the arm. It was aimed at our vital, weaker industries. It was, as well, a way to encourage our big new industries of the future.

Let us look at these specific details. With regard to tourism, we are building a new marina in Mississauga South. We have run an ad campaign right across the northern United States and Canada to develop tourism and to encourage people to spend their money in Canada. With regard to housing, there is the $3,000 grant for ordinary home owners. There is the social housing program which has built over 120,000 social housing units from coast to coast. There is a new mortgage insurance program on its way.

With regard to construction, in the city of Mississauga there is over $12 million of construction aid going into the Pearson Airport. There is assistance for the City of Toronto at Harbour Front. There is a railroad underpass being constructed in Mississauga North at Derry Road which is near Brampton-Georgetown. This story is repeated time and again in riding after riding across Canada as the Government has reached out to help construction, housing, tourism and other weaker sectors in our economy.

With regard to the promising sectors of the future, look at how we have spent our defence dollars over the last four years. The CF-18 program and the frigate program required huge investments of billions of dollars. We required our foreign suppliers to spend their money in Canada because we wanted to keep that money at home and, more importantly, we wanted access to technology and ideas of new developments in these vital sectors. In my city people who build computers, run machine shops, work in exotic metal or are in electronics businesses have all flourished under this Canadian purchase program. The same policy has been helping with the radar improvements program in Transport Canada. The new contract just given to Raytheon will give subcontracts to businesses from coast to coast. The coastguard icebreaker program, the centres of excellence program and the DIP program in defence are all examples of the spending of taxpayers' money in Canada in order to get the benefit for our economy and to share in the new technology.

The first point I must make, Mr. Speaker, is that there is a partnership between business and the Government. This partnership has cushioned business. It has helped to revive and rebuild business. This partnership is encouraging industry and new jobs.

The second point I would like to make about the management of our economy, Mr. Speaker, is that we have encouraged continuous personal security through some of the toughest times I have seen in the country. In the recession Canada was one of only two countries which refused to cut back on levels of personal security. In fact, we expanded it through our commitment to job creation, through job sharing, through the Canada-Ontario Employment Development Program and similar programs from coast to coast, through Summer Canada, Canada Works and a host of other job-creation programs aimed at people who needed help in the short term right away. During the recovery we have continued this commitment to personal security. We have continued it through our commitment to medicare and its improvement. We have reformed our pension plans.

Mr. Epp: How?

Mr. Fisher: We will have increased Guaranteed Income Supplements by over $50 a month by the end of this year.

Mr. McDermid: How did you reform the pension plan?

Mr. Fisher: That is a renewed commitment to personal security along with the rebuilding of our economy.

I hear the Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), the Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), the Member for Mississauga South and the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) all yelling out. I would encourage you, Mr. Speaker, to ask them to rise and inject some positive ideas into this—

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rose on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) on a point of order.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I will wait for the Hon. Member to finish his comments. However, I do intend to rise and ask him a couple of questions.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, that is unusually polite of the Hon. Member. I appreciate his intervention, unnecessary though it was. It is typically unrevealing of what he really thinks or means.

The third point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that we intend to build our recovery on a strong base across the country. That is why we introduced the six and five program two years ago to help get rid of inflation in our economy. That is why in the summer of 1982 we passed the National Training Act in order that young and unemployed people would have access to retraining. That is why in trade we put an emphasis on Canagrex, the Export Development Corporation, and the new aid trade scheme.

Mr. McDermid: That is why I am supporting Jean Chrétien.

Mr. Fisher: We put an emphasis on Canadian ownership. That is why we brought in the National Energy Program and the joint spending in defence programs which I described a few minutes ago. That is why we have refused to buckle Tory demands that we throw away FIRA and that we simply stand at the door and toss our money out to foreigners.

• (1530)

We have improved our transport system. We are seeing the improvements now with our air deregulation plans and we saw it in rail with our upgrading of VIA and the Crow rate.

Mr. Epp: You cut VIA.

Mr. Fisher: I looked at the list of priorities provided by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). They revealed nothing more than the traditional Tory love of money, a pandering to the provinces, a willingness to bow and scrape to any foreign influence, and a desire to run away from the kind of constructive partnership that I have described between the Canadian Government and the Canadian people.

Liberals put people first. We use the Government to soften outside blows.

Mr. Blenkarn: Liberals put people out of work.

Mr. Fisher: That is why we have refused to cut back our social security program during the recession period. We use government to encourage new ideas, and that is why we put in new tax credits for research and development. We use government to build new social security programs that are adequate to meet the future needs. That is why the last Budget brought in an emphasis on pension reform.

Let us go back to the motion that is in front of us. Let us look in detail at the Tory comments that some magic influence could somehow lower interest rates in Canada. All of us know that the Americans are experiencing the economic phenomenon known as crowding out. Their private and public sectors are competing heavily for the smaller pools of available capital that they have in that country. Their government spending is not like our government spending. It is not going in a recycled way back into their economy. Their spending is not dominated by transfer payments to individuals or to other governments. Their spending increases have been directly competitive spending increases in areas like defence. Second, we know that in the United States they have a much smaller pool of available personal savings.

Mr. Blenkarn: Nonsense.

Mr. Fisher: The personal savings rate in the United States, on a per capita basis, is almost half of ours.

Mr. Blenkarn: Absolute dribble.

Mr. Fisher: Canadians are saving well over 10 per cent of their available income.

Mr. Blenkarn: Apples and oranges.

Mr. Fisher: Again I hear the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) yelling. Again I invite him to get up and offer his own ideas in a constructive way in a few minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. I do suggest that we hold off for another two or three minutes. Members will have an opportunity to put questions. The Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher).

Mr. Fisher: We know that in the United States the personal savings rate is almost half of ours. They have a higher rate of absolute spending and a lower personal savings pool on which to draw on a per capita basis. That has been pushing up their interest rates. The kind of competition that exists in the money markets in the United States has not been experienced here, but it has been affecting our interest rates because the United States is such a huge magnet on our interest rates.

I see you signalling me that it is time to finish, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take a look at some areas where I believe we should be putting some of our efforts in the future. I would emphasize a continued development of Canadian trade. I agreed with the Hon. Member for St. John's West when I heard him say that earlier. I believe that every Canadian recognizes that trade has been a vital part of our economic recovery. We have seen some particularly strong performances in that area over the last couple of years. It should continue as a high government priority.

I would personally continue to emphasize tourism. We run a deficit in this area that is too big. Being in a northern country, of course our people want to go south to Florida, the Caribbean and Mexico in the winter. But we must find ways to counteract the attractiveness of those areas in order to keep our people here in Canada and to draw Americans into this country so that we can turn a tourism deficit into a tourism surplus.

I would continue to emphasize the high technology and joint production that we have seen in such areas as defence spending programs. I believe that we not only need to share the technology and to offset the costs, we also have a far too great domestic deficit in that area. We are importing too much for our own good. We need to start sharing the technology, developing our own industry, and then exporting our own goods.

Finally, I agree that we need to lower the deficit. Later this year we will be introducing some new taxes at the federal sales tax level, but I do not believe that we need to lower the deficit on the backs of the poor. I do not believe that there is a magic formula that we can use to slash the deficit. It must be lowered carefully. Government spending must be reviewed, which is our obligation. At the same time such a review must be targeted and conducted with an eye on the impact of the cut on the lives of ordinary citizens. Those who stand up here and say that they would cut the deficit by some blanket amount are wrong and insensitive.

Those are some of the positive steps we have taken for our economy. I look forward to hearing some of the ideas of some of the hecklers on the other side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who just resumed his seat used as his financial guru the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and referred to his statements regarding shoes on babies and food on the table. Does he also agree with the statements made by the Minister of Agriculture last weekend as to what the Government should do about interest rates?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has me at a disadvantage since I am an admirer but not a word-for-word disciple of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I do not know what he said last weekend about this. However, I would rather put shoes on the baby and bread on the table than follow the advice of the Hon. Member for St. John's West who would be mean, nasty and toughminded and who is too frightened to expose his ideas to public debate.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I would like to enlighten the Hon. Member on statements that his own Ministers make. On the weekend, the Minister of Agriculture said that he would cap interest rates. Does the Hon. Member subscribe to that philosophy?

Mr. Fisher: Would I do that? The whole point of my speech has been that I do not believe we can do that.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher). Who took the shoes off the baby and who took the bread off the table? That is what I would like to find out.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that this is a topic that we will hear debated during the election at great length as people attempt to lay blame for the recession. I have no doubt that people would like to do that.

One of the recurring themes in my answer will be that people who attempt that sort of deficit cutting, slashing and hacking that was proposed by the Tory Party during those dark days would have made our situation far, far worse.

Mr. McDermid: During the Hon. Member's speech he mentioned something about not reducing the deficit. Do I take that to mean that he disagrees with the Hon. John Turner who said that he could slash the deficit by $15 billion within a three to five-year period? Does he disagree with that?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the Liberal leadership race has attracted such a wide range of interest. The fact that it has reached the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) shows that it has indeed been a successful campaign.

The Hon. Member can check the "blues" or Hansard, but I said in my speech that I would lower the deficit. I believe that we can do that in three ways. First, we can do it by making the economic pie larger, which will simply increase government revenue. I am sure that we both agree about that.

Second, we can increase government revenues by increasing taxes. The Member for St. John's West said that this morning. As the Hon. Member knows, that will happen in the fall when some of the increases in federal taxes, particularly the federal wholesale tax, come in.

• (1540)

Third, I believe we can reduce the deficit by reducing spending, but only very carefully. That is what I am trying to emphasize to the Hon. Member. Some of that spending will decrease automatically as demands for unemployment insurance and as demands on the Canada Assistance Program and some of the other social transfer programs decrease. We have an obligation obviously to decrease it beyond that, but in order to do so we must be very careful and sensitive to the needs of the individual.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher). I enjoyed his comments in the House. However, I want to refer him to an article which appeared in the April 30 edition of Fortune. In that issue there is a table listing the world's largest borrowers. Fortune magazine lists Canada as owing foreigners an amount equal to 34 per cent of its Gross National Product. This puts Canada ahead of France, whose faltering economy was the basis of the article. It also puts Canada ahead of Argentina, which owes foreigners an amount equal to 30 per cent of its Gross National Product.

In terms of its external debt, Canada is described as a third world country in a report on Canada's foreign debt as prepared by William Mackness, Vice President and Chief Economist for the Bank of Nova Scotia. Does the Hon. Member for Mississauga North agree with Mr. Mackness' comment on our economy?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is far more well read than I. I congratulate him for his wide source of information and obvious knowledge. I am told by my learned colleague here who is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ferguson) that of the Government of Canada's obligations about 20 per cent are off-shore and 14 per cent are owed to entities such as the Ontario Hydro and provincial governments. I presume obligations to Hydro Quebec or Ontario Hydro would be fully secured loans.

Second, I would take a look at the credit ratings of all these borrowers. They seem to be in the top category. We do not have the World Bank demanding that we reschedule our loans. We seem to be able to meet our obligations quite comfortably and remain in the very highest credit category.

Third, I point out to the Hon. Member that, despite the size of our deficit—in fact I claim because of it—and because of the strong stimulation of the economy, Canada's recovery has begun on a sound footing and is now carrying on reasonably well. If we take a look at our high credit rating, at the willingness of people to continue lending to us and at the positive reactions in our own economy, we would have to find that the Hon. Member is perhaps stretching the point a little.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher). In his criticism of the Opposition motion today, is he aware that the motion uses the same words as those spoken by our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on February 10, 1980?

Mr. Fisher: Sorry, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I asked the Hon. Member for Mississauga North whether he was aware that the motion today uses the same words as those spoken by our Prime Minister in Toronto on February 10, 1980.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) said that about his own Government in December. Is that what the Hon. Member is trying to tell us, that the former Prime Minister felt that his Government was falling apart at the seams economically? I am sorry but I am a little confused about the advice the Hon. Member is giving to me.

Mr. Blenkarn: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North does not even know who the Prime Minister of Canada is. That is how competent he is. That is where he stands with his Party. I understand, Sir, that he is going around the country wearing a red jacket and that type of thing. He can do that for a while. But I was wondering whether he could tell us why, if interest rates are commanded in Canada by the United States, our employment is not at the same level as in the United States. Why can we not have the same kind of growth as is taking place in the United States? For example, in investment in machinery, ours is down 25 per cent from 1981, while that of the Americans is up 10 per cent. In business investment, ours is down 20 per cent while that of the Americans is up 10 per cent. Why are the Americans on an upward roll? Is it because they manage their economy sensibly? Is it because they do not have the wonderful National Energy Program and FIRA? Is it because the Americans have a government that pays attention to business?

Mr. Fisher: I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. This question was asked during Question Period almost word for word of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren). I know that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), much as I love him, requires a certain degree of repetition before he remembers certain things. He fits Chairman Khrushchev's perfect description that repetition is the mother of all learning. In his case, that applies. I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian economy has generally recovered past the 1981 levels. The Hon. Member should listen the next time when a Minister of the Crown gives him that assurance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): We shall now continue debate. The Hon. Member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity today to add my thoughts and comments to this discussion and to remind the Government one more time of the effect that its mismanagement has on the economy and what it is doing in areas of Canada, such as Huron-Bruce. My riding is like many across this country in that it faces similar problems.

The speaker who preceded me, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher), talked of many partnerships the Government has had with various groups in Toronto and across the nation. However, he failed to mention anything about the partnerships with agriculture. One thing is certain. We have to keep reminding Canadians that unless we have a strong a gricultural community, unless we have food, partnership means nothing for those people. Canada's food producers have been doing amagnificent job not only for domestic consumption but also for export. In particular, I would like to discuss the way in which the Government's lack of a strong economic policy is forcing Canadians to accept higher interest rates than they would have to accept if the economy were stronger. Through the Government's high deficit and its inability to strengthen our dollar against the American dollar through increased exports and equity capital inflows, the Government is forcing itself into a position in which it must follow the American interest rate policy.

This should not have to be the case. Canada should be able to form its own interest rate policy. We have the wealth and we have the resources. We should not have to suffer made-in-America interest rates. We should be able to strengthen the dollar and reduce the deficit on our own. By doing that, we can lower interest rates in comparison with other countries rates.

During recent years, high interest rates on farm credit have greatly affected the profitability and even the viability of farm enterprises. At a time when many farms have experienced a declining cash flow due to the decline in commodity prices and the increase in farm costs, interest rates have been a major factor in increased farm bankruptcies, foreclosures and forced sales. They have also been a cause of family distress in farm communities. The increased rate of farm bankruptcies is the most noticeable indication of the harmful effect of high interest rates. By the end of March, 163 farmers had declared bankruptcy this year compared with 115 during the same period a year ago. These figures do not include voluntary liquidations, of which there are probably that many again. This is something of which we take no account but of which we are aware.

While the Government keeps insisting that farm bankruptcies are not that numerous, considering that there are more than 300,000 farmers in Canada, many well respected agricultural economists argue that the number of bankruptcies of which the Government is aware is minimal when compared with the large numbers of undeclared bankruptcies. The Farm Credit Corporation estimates that a full 15 per cent of farmers are likely experiencing financial difficulty.

Bankruptcies are not the only problem created by high interest rates. Many farmers are forced to work full time off their farms while they continue to farm just to keep up with their mortgage payments. Many times members of their families are working with machinery even though they are too young to be doing so. However, with their commitment to agriculture, this is the only way they can carry on and perhaps meet their mortgage payments as well as their other expenses.

● (1550)

Even when there is no immediate threat of bankruptcy or bank foreclosure, high rates of interest on both short-term and long-term loans force large numbers of farmers to operate at far less than a fair return or at a loss on their investment. If they were to break even, many of them would be happy at the present time, given the general economy, with their equity declining and their losses becoming greater. However, food producers are generally unable to pass on to consumers their higher interest costs, so it is very difficult for them to adapt to rising interest rates.

Agriculture is a major building block in our national economy. For it to be viable, we need a strong national economy which will allow lower interest rates. Lower costs of money will not only help farmers but will provide relief ot all producers and consumers in the country.

A fact which is often ignored is that agriculture does not exist in a vacuum. Assistance to farmers and a recognition of their inability to handle increases in interest rates will help all Canadians. Lower interest rates to farmers and in fact to all Canadians will help small businesses, small communities, consumers in general, as well as small towns and cities. The hundreds of firms which manufacture machinery, chemicals and numerous other farm inputs would benefit if more farmers could maintain their existing farms or start up new ones. Many farmers would just like the assurance that they will be able to hang on to what they have. For retiring farmers it is very difficult to find new purchasers. The small communities which support the agricultural sector by providing consumer goods for sale would be more viable if agriculture were made more viable.

The point which I am trying to stress is that farmers are not just producers. They are very important consumers as well. They buy manufactured goods, often in the form of very expensive farm implements. They buy clothes and food which they do not produce. They buy farm fuels and automobiles. The list goes on and on. If such a large sector in the economy as the agricultural sector is forced into a situation where it is unable to purchase the consumer goods it requires, the ripple effects throughout the rest of the economy will be enormous. It has and will continue to affect small communities which are already shrinking in size.

A declining agricultural sector would also have a huge impact upon our exports. Agriculture now represents about 40 per cent of the Canadian economy and accounts for 10 per cent of our exports. We should be able to improve our export position. We have the ability to increase production so as to become even more internationally competitive, but the economy must be strong if we are to do that. Agriculture has tried to serve better the international need for food. Our farmers have done a great job in expanding production and trying to remain competitive. However, they are being forced into uncompetitive positions because of the continuing lack of concern for the fact that farmers cannot indefinitely produce food for Canada and the world at unprofitable rates of return or at losses in many cases.

The Government speaks about finding new markets throughout the world, in the Far East or wherever. It talks about the need to expand agricultural exports, but it does not seem to realize or care that in order to expand our agricultural exports farmers have to be viable and have to be able to compete internationally on international terms. If our goods cost more to produce than those of the European Economic Community, for example, we cannot compete. With interest rates being a major input cost to Canadian farmers, any increase will further erode the comparative advantage they might already have.

Much of our recent trade performance has been disappointing. In 1968, Canada exported more than Japan. Today, Japan's share of world trade is twice that of Canada. We have fallen from fourth to eighth place in world ranking and continue to fall. With that decline, we lost jobs and prosperity.

While agricultural exports are not the only exports with which the Government should be concerned, their importance to our over-all balance of trade cannot be overlooked. Agricultural exports, particularly of western grain, are a major foundation of our national economy. They cannot continue to be eroded as they have been in the recent past. High interest rates and the state of the economy in general will not only hurt individual farmers; they will hurt all Canadians by hurting our balance of trade.

I urge that the Government examine seriously the effects of its high interest rate policy on everyone, not just on urban people. Agriculture is one of our most valuable natural resources. It must have the support of the rest of Canadians in times of economic difficulty. The Government of Canada, which represents the people of the country, is letting down the agricultural community. In so doing, it is letting down all Canadians who, I am sure, recognize how crucial it is to maintain a strong agricultural base.

I will turn now to the specifics of the Government's handling of those issues which most affect farmers. The Farm Credit Corporation recently increased its interest rates on loans to farmers from a flat 13 per cent to 14 per cent for a five-year loan and to as high as 15 per cent for a 10-year loan. I sympathize with the field workers of the FCC who have to discuss financing with farmers and food producers and tell them that the rate is 14 per cent or 15 per cent. That is not offering help. It is only offering a short-term existence until something else comes along.

I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) how he could accept or justify this increase at a time when farmers are facing more serious difficulties than other groups. The Government claims that the economy is recovering, but the bankruptcy figures which I mentioned previously show that certainly the economy in rural areas is not much to get excited about. The Farm Credit Corporation and other lending institutions are moving on powers of sale, probably more than we have ever experienced before.

I asked the Minister of Finance why the Farm Credit Corporation was charging 14 per cent on five-year loans when banks were changing farmers 13.5 per cent in the same circumstances and when home owners in the City of Toronto were obtaining mortgages at rates as low as 13.25 per cent. At the same time, five-year government bonds only pay 12.5 per cent. The Government pays 12.5 per cent for its money, then turns around and lends it to farmers at 14 per cent for the same length of time. I am alarmed by these facts because they indicate that farmers are on a lower level of priority than their urban friends. The Government seems to feel that it can keep that situation as it is.

The Minister of Finance responded in the House by saying that I had not checked my facts and that the rates charged by FCC were determined by how much the Government spent for its loans. He did not listen to me when I told him that the Government was not paying 14 per cent for five-year money. Also I was told in the House that the FCC was not making much profit. It should not be making a profit at all. Its mandate is to provide affordable financing to Canadian agriculture. I am generally alarmed over the state of the economy and over a situation which seems to be taking us back down the road toward drastic increases in interest rates.

We keep hearing that the increases in interest rates over the last while are not significant. We are told that they are so minor we have no reason to worry. The Government appears to be doing nothing to allow the Canadian economy to expand so as to become strong enough to have a more independent interest rate policy. We are told that nothing can be done about interest rates in Canada if American rates rise. We should be able to lower interest rates in themselves. The Government should be able to recognize that if interest rates do not come down to affordable levels, the country will be in a major crisis.

I have mentioned that the Minister of Finance seemed uninformed and unconcerned about the increase in FCC rates. I should also add that he appeared completely unwilling to reintroduce the interest rate rebate program which provided relief for many farmers during the last recession. Apparently he feels that such a program will not be necessary unless interest rates are over 20 per cent. I think he is wrong. When Ontario farmers alone are in arrears to the Farm Credit Corporation for $34,200,000, there is a necessity for some program of relief.

Another way in which the Government could help the agricultural sector right now is by swift action on the agri-bond issue. Again I must return to the biggest concern of all. While farmers would welcome and drastically need lower Farm Credit Corporation rates, an interest rebate program and the agri-bond or some similar measure, the most important factor is a responsible management of the economy which would allow all sectors of the economy to grow and to be profitable.

The Government must be prepared to make the sort of difficult decisions necessary in order to get our economy on track. It must strive seriously to decrease its deficit by a serious re-evaluation of its priorities. There are many areas in which spending can be cut. There are many areas in which Government expenditure can be re-channelled so that it is more productively spent. This Government can and must strengthen the economy so that all Canadians do not have to be beholden to American policy. This Government must strengthen the dollar by expanding the economy so that it does not have to keep driving up interest rates in order to maintain the value of the dollar.

There is one last point I would like to make about agriculture and the impact of the economy on it. There is a great push these days for stabilization. Stabilization is a crucial factor in the agricultural sector and must be available and practically administered, but stabilization should not be used as a substitute for careful management of the economy. Stabilization should not be used as a factor by which agriculture remains viable on a year-to-year basis. Stabilization programs should be insurance programs against unusually difficult years. The economy should be strong enough so that pay-outs do not have to be made on a regular basis under stabilization programs.

The economy must be strong. It can be strong because we are a nation of wealth. If the economy is strong, the dollar will be strong. We do not need to have these high interest rates which are drawing us further into economic disarray.

I urge the Government not to forget the people whom it has been elected to represent. I urge the Government to consider carefully what it is doing to Canadians. I would like to add a special request, that the Government not forget the producers of food which feeds this nation. Canadian farmers deserve a more positive outlook than they are now encountering. If the farmers in this country are viable, we will all be better off. Farmers have a strong commitment to producing food, not only for this country, but for many other parts of the world. We congratulate the farmers who do that. They deserve a much better break, or at least the opportunity to be able to do those things.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments.

[Translation]

Are there any questions or comments? If not, we shall continue debate. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Garant).

Mr. Alain Garant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, during the gloomy days of the recession, it was understandable that some people should make negative forecasts. After all, inflation and interest rates continued to climb, while all other indicators where we would have welcomed an increase, such as housing starts, employment, corporate profits and investor confidence, kept going down. It was hard to be an optimist. It was a real challenge to rise above the day-to-day problems of the recession, to remain confident and to remember Canada's immense potential and our own resourcefulness.

Mr. Speaker, the situation has been turned around, and quite spectacularly so, in many respects. Since November 1982, sixteen months ago, Canada has come out of the recession and made up for lost time. Canada has now made the transition to an era of growth and economic expansion. Unfortunately, there are people who have yet to change the way they react to improvements in our economic outlook. Mr. Speaker, there are still people who are so obsessed with what they see in their rear view mirror they refuse to look anywhere else.

• (1610)

You know as well as I do how important it is to have a balanced view of the situation when managing funds for which one is responsible. Only someone with a forward-looking but realistic attitude is able to assess, with any confidence, the risk associated with certain investments and the opportunities for getting a good return. Mr. Speaker, confidence is itself a determining factor in our economy. In fact, confidence can be just as profoundly satisfying as negativism. Conditioning ourselves for high performance through positive attitudes is not any harder than taking the negative view and letting our problems take over. I am not like some people who prefer to ignore the many encouraging signs of economic expansion we are seeing now, and who, for whatever reason, refuse to believe what they cannot see or touch.

Granted, some sectors in our economy still need further consolidation. However, I think more Canadians should stop indulging in this lack of confidence which is a typically Canadian pastime, and look at our successes instead. If we do, we will have some very real reasons to remain optimistic about our economic future.

Mr. Speaker, the best way to measure the consumer's confidence is to find out whether he is investing and where. Today, there are continuing signs that the confidence of Canadians is increasing. Canadians are spending more and more. The preponderance of automobile sales in the recent growth in the retail sector shows that Canadians have enough confidence in their economic future to make major purchases they would not have made during the recession or even at the beginning of our economic recovery. This increasing confidence is expressed in more than just a spending of accumulated savings. In fact, consumers now appear to be willing to borrow money to buy a car, something they would not have dreamed of doing only a few months ago.

Mr. Speaker, the increase in the number of jobs since the beginning of recovery has been exceptionally high. Since the end of the recession, 418,000 new jobs have been created. The latest figures confirm that the upward trend is continuing. In April, 25,000 new jobs were created. These last figures are particularly encouraging, because they are a sign that the growth in employment is broadly based. New jobs have been created in most economic sectors and in nearly all provinces. These jobs are occupied by Canadians in all age groups. We should not underestimate the exceptional progress we have made in job creation just because the unemployment rate is going down very slowly. The paradox of slowly declining unemployment combined with rapid growth in the number of jobs can be explained by the increasing number of Canadians who are joining the labour force. We are all aware of today's extraordinary impact of the baby boom on the size of Canada's labour force. Mr. Speaker, as the economy and employment are improving, the number of Canadians who have started to look for jobs has increased. If our labour force was not growing as fast as it is, our unemployment rate would drop far more quickly.

Mr. Speaker, the increasing number of women who have opted for a career testifies to the remarkable capacity of the Canadian economy to absorb additional workers. In 1968, 2,500,000 women were employed, and nearly one-third of women old enough to work were in the labour force. In 1983, 4,500,000 women are employed and more than half the women old enough to work are in the labour force.

Exports are one key to a healthy economy. Canada's export figures since the recovery reflect an unprecedented performance. In the past year, Canada showed the strongest growth in exports of all industrialized countries. We registered a trade surplus of over $18 million last year, which is almost a record. We see a similar picture if we look at the tremendous progress achieved by Canada in corporate profits, the fight against inflation, the balance of payments, housing starts and so forth. This is very encouraging, especially compared to the recent gloomy scenario during the recession. There are, of course, exceptions to the general trend, but the trend itself is more important than the exceptions.

Nevertheless, some people insist on stressing the exceptions and playing on the fears of the public. I condemn those who make a habit of magnifying the exceptions to this sound and positive trend and blowing them up out of all proportion, as though we were on the brink of disaster.

Mr. Speaker, since March 1, the value of the Canadian dollar has been depreciating against the American dollar, at a time when all international currencies have been registering a very strong downward trend. For a better understanding of recent developments on the exchange market, we must see these developments within the broader context of recovery and the international situation.

The value of the Canadian dollar on the international market is determined by both international and domestic factors. As partners in a global economy, all trading countries are interdependent, and Canada is no exception. Our economy is particularly sensitive to the changes and tremors that affect the U.S. economy. Actually, the recent depreciation of our dollar against the American dollar is due to tensions originated by our neighbours to the south.

American interest rates have gone up in recent weeks because the U.S. recovery has been stronger than expected in the first quarter of this year and because unprecedented deficit levels are forcing the American Government to borrow extensively on the U.S. market. The United States monetary authorities have admitted that the American economy had been forced into a precarious position as a result of structural and trade deficits. Indeed, Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker has sounded a public alarm about the co-existence of those two deficits which are a clear and genuine threat to the continued growth and stability of American and international markets. Since it was feared that American monetary policy officials might decide to tighten up credit, and since there was growing doubt about a quick decline in the American deficit, their interest rates moved up. That is why interest rates edged up slightly in Canada and our dollar lost a few points.

I am not belittling the strength of our dollar, Mr. Speaker. If we consider all other currencies, including the American dollar, we can only conclude that, all in all, the Canadian dollar has remained quite stable. In 1983, for example, the German mark, the French franc and the British pound all went down markedly as compared with the U.S. dollar, much more so than the Canadian dollar.

It must be understood that the wavering performance of the Canadian dollar cannot be traced back to a weakness in our economy's competitive position. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the basic components of our economy which sustain our currency have always been and still are very strong. Our competitive position is gradually improving. There has been a spectacular drop in wage settlements and in the inflation rate, productivity is much better, and our trade balance remains quite favourable. The increase in labour unit costs has slowed down considerably as compared with that of the United States. Our trade surplus has reached record levels, whereas our American neighbours did report a trade deficit. Mr. Speaker, those are all positive developments which have sustained confidence in our dollar during the first year of our recovery, and we have every reason to believe that this confidence will be maintained.

Of course, our aim is to ensure a lasting economic recovery while at the same time leading a strong offensive in the fight against inflation. Mr. Speaker, it would be easier to reach that target if our dollar were stable and if interest rates were stable as well, or even lower. However, the upward trend of American interest rates has put Canada before extremely difficult economic alternatives. Any captain navigating through dangerous and rough seas has to steer the safest possible course.

As we proceed along our course, Mr. Speaker, we hear the voices of those who are so far off the mark in their interpretation of the current situation and who give us such injudicious advice to improve it that, if we were to listen to them, we would soon be shipwrecked. They believe that we should disregard the rising interest rates in the United States and try to increase the value of the Canadian dollar and cut down our interest rates. That is sheer fiction which can only come from a naive outlook on a complex situation and which smacks of irresponsibility. Such a view ignores the economic facts which Canada, as a trading nation, must take into account in spite of the unstable international situation. But what are these facts, Mr. Speaker? On the one hand, we know that sudden drops in the exchange rate may result in inflationary pressures which it is essential to avoid. On the other hand, substantial increases in the interest rates would of course offset downward pressures on the exchange rate, but at the same time, they would destroy our potential for economic growth.

• (1620)

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. MacLaren) have therefore clearly explained on several occasions in this House that we do not want to cause a major drop in the value of the Canadian dollar, as that would have inflationary effects and would also in any case eventually result in higher interest rates. However, we do not want higher interest rates either, especially at this stage of our economic recovery.

We must therefore determine what method should be followed to cope with the pressures which recently were brought to bear on the rate of exchange and on interest rates. I must specify that our method is first of all a response rather than a remedy. Indeed, the current problem with exchange rate and interest rate instability did not originate in Canada at all. It is therefore impossible to apply Canadian solutions. We may however minimize all of its consequences by taking a middle course between substantially higher interest rates and a devaluated Canadian dollar. And this is exactly what we are doing by promoting a policy of moderation with respect to both the rate of exchange and interest rates.

Mr. Speaker, this is the most serious and the most effective method that could be used. It is also the one which will enable us to turn the present recovery into a sustained economic growth. Moreover, it will allow us to maintain the progress so laboriously achieved these last couple of years in our fight against inflation.

As we are fully aware of the pressures exerted on the interest rates and coming from the United States, we are closely monitoring the situation in that country. However, I would like to allay any anxiety which may have resulted from the rather predictable panic brought about by these events. At the present time, there is no reason to regard the evolution of interest rates as a tendency which will accelerate in the months to come.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): A period of ten minutes is now provided for questions and comments. If there are no questions or comments, we shall proceed with the debate.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo)—Western Grain Stabilization Act (a) Timing of pay-out to farmers. (b) Payment of interest; the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan)—the Administration (a) Liberal Party campaign—Role of contract employee. (b) Ministerial staff guidelines; the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon)—Veterans Affairs (a) Nuclear radiation exposure—Demand for expert medical evidence. (b) Case law—Request for acceptance of precedent.

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—INTEREST RATE POLICY

The House resumed debate on the motion of Mr. Crosbie:

That this House is of the opinion that the Government of Canada can manage the economy in a way that would allow us to have lower interest rates than Canada now has and that we can have greater independence in interest rate policy despite the Government's failure to meet its commitment to so manage the economy.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to be able to participate in the debate today. In the few moments which I have at my disposal I would like to concentrate specifically on a very important sector of our economy, namely, small business.

One of the primary reasons for which I entered the political arena in the first place some 10 or 12 years ago was my concerns as a small businessman and the problems which were facing this very vital sector of our economy. When I came to this Chamber, the word "small business" was almost non-existent. But because of the efforts of many Members of Parliament on both sides of the House who came from business-oriented backgrounds, as well as of interest groups such as the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, COSB, the various Canadian chambers of commerce and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the importance that the small business sector has on our economy was brought to the forefront. Over the last decade, small business has indeed established itself on the floor of this House of Commons as a very important sector. Yet it is one of the most vulnerable sectors in Canada if government policies and government programs continue to affect it adversely as have the policies and programs of the Liberal administration during the past 10 or 15 years.

I would like to identify the three major problems which are affecting this sector: First, interest rates and the instability of interest rates, which is what we are discussing today; second, under-capitalization, particularly in the area of venture or working capital; and, third, government interference and involvement, such as government directives, controls and paperwork. There are solutions to the major problems facing the small business sector. I will return to those in a little while.

In the meantime I would like to address the point of interest rates and why it is so important that they be stable and, wherever possible, at the lowest possible rate in respect of small business. If a small-businessman does not know what amounts of money he will be paying for his loans three months from now or six months from now, let alone next Thursday—and interest rates can change on a weekly basis—he cannot make long-range plans as to his business operations respecting investment, productivity and other aspects of his operation. As a result, when interest rates suddenly start reaching unexpected highs—as they did in 1981 and 1982 when they reached record levels of 22 per cent plus—record numbers of businesses go bankrupt. When small businesses and businesses in general go bankrupt, unemployment starts to take place. Just when a recovery of our economy was taking place last year, suddenly this Government—which seems to be so insensitive to the problems of the small businessman—is again allowing interest rates to take off without any temporary or intervening measures to help or assist the small businessman in this country or to tell that small businessman what will happen to interest rates and what will happen to the economy.

We have changed predictions and changed budgets every six months. Business cannot operate under those conditions. The only thing that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) say in response to high interest rates is that it is happening in the United States. Why is it that in West Germany interest rates are at 7.75 per cent; in Japan they are at 5.7 per cent; in the United Kingdom they are at 8.5 per cent; and in Switzerland they are at 6 per cent? Why are government Members not saying that? Our interest rates are 4, 5 and 6 percentage points lower than interest rates in the United States.

The Liberal Government says that it cannot do anything because of the situation that exists in the United States. Let me ask the Liberal administration: How can it continue to plead innocence with respect to high interest rates and other economic activities? If, as the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance say, the reason for high interest rates in this country is the high level of the interest rates in the United States, how come all the other economic measurements in the United States have improved dramatically when compared to ours? Productivity in Canada, for example, since June, 1981, has increased by 2.5 per cent. You may say that this is not bad under current conditions. However, it has increased in the United States by 9 per cent. In this country, full-time employment has decreased since 1981 by 4 per cent. Yet in the United States it has increased by 4 per cent. That is an 8 per cent difference. Residential investment in Canada has decreased by 15 per cent and has increased in the United States in the same period of time by 28 per cent, a difference of 43 per cent. Investment in machinery has decreased in this country since 1981 by a staggering 25 per cent. Are we the same as the United States? No, because in the United States investment in machinery has increased by 10 per cent. That is a difference of 35 per cent. Average business investment in Canada since 1981 has gone down by 20 per cent. In the United States it has increased by 10 per cent in the same period of time. Personal disposable income in this country, the wealth factor, if you will, has decreased by 2 per cent. Yet in the United States it has increased by 11 per cent. That is a 13 per cent difference. The list goes on, Mr. Speaker.

Therefore, if this Government says that we must do the same thing as the United States in respect of interest rates, why are we not doing the same with regard to unemployment, productivity, investment and all the other important major economic issues which affect every Canadian in this country?

Those clowns who are out campaigning for the leadership of the Liberal Party are not dealing at all with the problems which are affecting Canadians today. Within a month and a half, one of them is going to be sitting here in this House as Prime Minister, with absolutely no answers except to echo what this Government says on a daily basis to us in the Conservative Party and to Canadians.

We in this Party ask these questions of the Minister of Finance or, in my case, as the spokesman for small business and tourism, of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Smith). Last week, for example, I asked the Minister what representations he had made to the Minister of Finance or to the Cabinet on behalf of the small business sector in relation to the increase in interest rates, which is taking place and which is so adversely affecting the small business community in this country. His answer is found at page 3594 of Hansard of May 10. I will read it, Mr. Speaker, and we will see if you hear an answer to the representations made to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism said the following:

> Mr. Speaker, the Government believes very strongly in the role of small business in pulling the country into a period of economic recovery. That was the main emphasis of the February 15 Budget. The Minister included a number of items in that Budget specifically designed to assist small business. Through the Small Business Loans Act over 25,000 small businesses in Canada got loans last year which they otherwise probably would not have received. I think that is a pretty clear indication of a commitment to the small business sector.

I did not hear in that answer, Mr. Speaker, any specific response to my question regarding interest rates. He did not say whether he made representations to the Cabinet on behalf of small business for which he is responsible in this House. Therefore, I read into his answer that he has not made any representations to Cabinet and does not really care about high interest rates adversely affecting the small business community in this country.

When the Minister in his answer talks about 25,000 small businesses getting a loan under the Small Businesses Loans Act, it is all fine and dandy, but at what rate have those businesses received that loan? I will tell you at what rate. The rate is 8 percentage points higher than inflation. That is at what rate. I have nothing against the Small Business Loans Act. It is a very good piece of legislation. I wish, in fact, it would be expanded to include working and venture capital. But surely, no matter what lip service this Government pays to what it is willing to do for the small business community of what it intends to do for it, if interest rates are going to continue to be allowed to fluctuate on an upward trend, nothing this Government can do and nothing anyone can do is going to solve the problems facing the small business sector and, therefore, solve the unemployment problem.

Canadians are becoming sick and tired of this Government attempts to deal with unemployment, for example by throwing billions of tax dollars into temporary and unproductive make-work projects. That is not where jobs are created, Mr. Speaker. Jobs are created in the marketplace, in productivity. The federal Government should not pay someone a direct grant in order to work him for six weeks or eight weeks so that he can then turn around and go back on unemployment insurance. That is not the way to deal with the problem. We must create a healthy economic climate in this country so that businesses, generally speaking, and specifically the small and medium-sized businesses, can operate in an economic environment which is free of government involvement and interference.

I asked a supplementary question of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism about high interest rates and representations he has made, to which he replied this:

> —it is very interesting to hear the approach of the Hon. Member. He is a well known believer in the free enterprise system, in market forces, in the law of supply and demand, and one who does not believe in intervention. The Government, however, does believe in intervention in certain areas.

The Minister is right, Mr. Speaker, except for the fact that when the Government interferes so much in the private sector and creates such a negative burden for the entrepreneurs of this country, temporary steps must then be taken to protect such a vulnerable sector until the economy has been cleansed of this tremendous negative effect caused by Liberal policies. That is why I said, Mr. Speaker, that there are solutions for those three major problems facing the industry.

There are various options to consider with respect to interest rates. Why does the Government not consider again the initiation of the small business development bond program? This is a program which would virtually allow a small business operation to borrow money through a chartered bank at roughly half the interest rate. I am not suggesting that this should be a program which goes on and on ad infinitum, Mr. Speaker, but it is a program which certainly should be considered when interest rates are increasing, small businesses are being hurt, and unemployment, as a result, is growing on a daily basis.

I have already touched on the subject of venture and working capital. Our Small Businesses Loans Act could be expected to include venture and working capital.

The third major problem facing the small business community, of course, is government intervention and interference. Surely the time has come for governments, generally speaking, to make note of the fact that a business operation does not want Big Brother looking over its shoulder all the time. Surely the people who run governments today must realize that the private sector industry, small business or otherwise, is going to operate a heck of a lot more efficiently on its own than in conjunction with government. All one has to do is to look at the operations of Canada Post to see how efficient an agency it is, one which is now a Crown corporation. One can look at Canadair, for example. By the end of this year taxpayers will have paid out over $2 billion through the Government to keep it afloat. This amount is sufficient to cover the total liabilities of the estimated 10,500 small businesses which went bankrupt in 1982 alone. It is also four times the amount that the Trudeau Government has spent on various small business program in 1982. That is just to keep Canadair afloat. That is just one example. There are many others which the Government knows about.

• (1640)

The time has come, Mr. Speaker. It is long overdue. I said at the outset that both sides in the House as well as the New Democratic Party have established the fact that small business does exist and plays a major factor in our economic way of life. We have seen a sudden advertising campaign by this socialist rump of the Liberals who suddenly find themselves at 10 per cent in the Gallup poll. They are panicking their way into the hearts of the small business community, which is not going to accept them at all. All one has to do is to listen to some of the responses of the leaders of the small business communities to those advertisements. They know what the New Democrats stand for and they are not going to buy it. As I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, the fact that small business is important has finally come to the floor of the House.

What has not taken root in the House is the fact that the House should not interfere in the workings of the small business sector. The small business person does not want government interference, regulations, controls and directives. He wants to be left alone. If we cannot establish an economic climate in this Parliament which will allow small business people to operate in a free enterprise society, then we must come up in the meantime with programs such as the small business development bond program. We must come up with programs like the Small Businesses Loans Act and expand it to include working capital. We must do those things until we can clean up the bureaucratic mess in which the Liberals have put us. I know, as do the majority of Canadians, that the Conservative Party is committed to doing just that. We want to return the word "free" to enterprise so that the small business sector, the private sector, and Canadians as a whole can start producing and benefiting as a result of the policies of a true Conservative Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a period of ten minutes of questions or comments. The Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Cosgrove).

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House would readily agree with the Hon. Member that small business indeed forms the backbone of employment opportunities in the country. For example, something like 80 per cent of working people are employed in firms which hire less than 20 employees. We have no difficulty with the analysis of the importance of the role of small business in the economy. However, I have some difficulty with the Hon. Member's reliance upon the private sector and his wish, on the one hand, that Government not be involved and, almost in the same breath, his invitation to the Government to support small businessmen.

The one sector in which I am particularly interested is small business in the area of housing. Notwithstanding the figures used for purposes of comparison with the United States, even at their lowest point, the number of housing starts in Canada has always been greater than that in the United States. Yet when the Party opposite had the opportunity of forming the government for a period of nine months, their consultant on housing made two recommendations. The first was that the Government get out of housing and privatize Canada Mortgage and Housing, which has had an enviable record of supporting small business in the production of housing in the country. The second reccmmendation made by the consultant, the former President of the National Conservative Party, was that we get out of co-operative and non-profit housing, which provided thousands of jobs for Canadians and housing for needy Canadians. I notice, Mr. Speaker, that the same Member has now been retained by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) to give advice again. I am curious as to whether he is giving advice on housing and whether it would be the same advice as that which he gave to the Conservative Party.

What is the Hon. Member's position in terms of support of small business in the area of housing? Is it to get out of supporting the private sector?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member quotes a number of my colleagues. Of course, I have not seen these quotes. By the way, Mr. Speaker, I think we should keep our comments and questions related to interest rates and to the motion which we are debating today.

With regard to interest rates and housing, I think that if the Liberals and the New Democratic Party had supported what this Party had suggested while we were in government and thereafter, specifically the mortgage deductibility program, we would be in a far better position today with regard to home owners with high mortgage rates than we are. As a matter of fact, it is my understanding that the Government is in fact considering something similar to that type of situation. As you know, Mr. Speaker, when the Government introduces programs which they have copied from us, we support them, as we did last week on the partial deregulation of the airline industry. That is an idea which came from this side of the House of Commons.

The Hon. Member quoted Members on my side of the House with respect to housing. I should quote to him the Prime Minister saying a few years ago that he would want to manage the economy in such a way that interest rates would in fact come down, because then the economy would be administered more soundly. Or I could quote to him the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) who said that he would resign his seat if interest rates did not go down. I have a whole series of quotes of statements made by Liberals which have been totally ignored by that Party and by Canadians. Do not talk to me about quotes; talk to me about facts. The facts are that this Party would like to see the Government move in a direction which would utilize mortgage deductibility programs in order to assist home owners in the country when they are hit with high mortgage rates.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I would caution the Hon. Member that questions are supposed to be directed to the speech of the Hon. Member. He should, in some fashion, be able to relate his questions to the remarks of the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Cosgrove).

Mr. Cosgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will direct my question to a point raised by the Hon. Member which had to do with the interest deduction policy. I understand from his comments that this is now the official policy of the Conservative Party and presumably would be offered to Canadians in an election campaign.

Mr. Jelinek: I did not say that.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, the lowest estimate of the cost of such a plan is $2.5 billion. Where in the deficit would the Hon. Member cut the $2.5 billion, if indeed he is not going to add $2.5 billion to the existing deficit?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a clarification with regard to the statement on the home owners' mortgage deductibility program. My comments in response to the question were clearly my own, rather than made on behalf of the Party. When I speak about small business and tourism as the small business and tourism spokesman, then of course I speak on behalf of the Party.

The Minister asks where we would cut the deficit. This Party has outlined numerous ways and means of cutting the deficit. Perhaps I should go back to him as a Member who is involved in a leadership race to replace the Prime Minister as Prime Minister on a temporary basis and ask him where John Turner, the person who is leading the race, would cut $15 billion from the deficit.

• (1650)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. Questions are supposed to be directed to the person who has made the speech. If there are no other questions or comments, continuing the debate will be the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this debate has been taking place for many years and the issue of interest rates has been raised from time to time by the Opposition. This should be done because the question of interest rates is important to Canada and to any country in pursuit to economic growth. Economic growth is certainly a major objective of Canadian policy. It is the only method of achieving a higher standard of living and it is the only way we will be able to expand the social safety net that will be required when greater numbers of senior citizens will require pensions in the future. This increased requirement will necessitate different types of growth of government expenditure, which means that we need a greater wealth base from which to work. High interest rates tend to operate contrary to growth and the expansion of the wealth base.

Mr. Deans: You are absolutely right. We have agreed again.

Mr. Evans: There is no doubt about that. Hon. Members opposite are saying, "You are right".

Mr. Deans: No. One Hon. Member.

Mr. Evans: I did not need the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) to tell me that I am right.

Mr. Deans: The trouble is that so far you are right.

Mr. Evans: I think he was talking directionally, not in terms of the correctness of my comments. I would suggest to him that the statements are right in the correct sense of the word and not in the directional sense of the word.

It is clear that the Opposition is saying today that the Government has, in essence, a policy of high interest rates which are exacerbated by the size of the federal deficit. They are saying that other domestic policies are causing the value of the currency to fall. That is the scenario that the Opposition is trying to establish today in an attempt to indicate that our present situation is the total responsibility and fault of the Government of Canada.

The Opposition is attempting to play down to the greatest extent possible the impact of external factors on Canada. We have heard very often that Canada is a trading nation which depends on trade for 30 per cent of our Gross National Product. Our biggest trading partner is the United States, which accounts for 75 per cent to 85 per cent of our foreign trade. This makes it difficult for me to believe that Members of the Official Opposition do not understand that we have a very close relationship with the United States as a result of the extent to which we depend on the United States for our export trade and markets. If those Members do understand that, they certainly cover it up with statements that imply ignorance. We will need open capital markets with the United States so that that trade and flow of funds can move freely across the border. Otherwise, we simply cannot have an expanding export trade that will generate jobs in this country.

We heard a number of contrary views today. For example, the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) indicated that perhaps we could free ourselves from the strictures of the international capital markets by implementing a speculator tax. Others have indicated other proposals to stop currency from flowing out of the country. The critical factor to remember is that without the ability of capital to flow between the borders of Canada and the United States and other countries, there is a reluctance on the part of those with whom we trade to undertake that trade.

Those with whom we trade must have the ability to receive payment in their own funds. For instance, when the Japanese sell cars, they would like to have Japanese yen in payment for those cars. Therefore, we must exchange Canadian dollars for Japanese yen. In that case, money flows out of the country. When we sell computer products, aircraft parts or indeed automobiles to the United States, that country will exchange their money for Canadian dollars in order to pay us in our currency. If we are going to facilitate foreign trade upon which Canada depends so heavily for our standard of living, we will need an open and freely flowing capital market. The simple fact that we depend so heavily on trade for our standard of living and our hope for a rising standard of living means that we should reject any notion that we can put strictures or constraints upon the flow of funds across the border.

Furthermore, one should consider the impracticality of attempting to apply exchange controls or a speculative tax, with all of the inherent administrative problems that they carry with them. I suggest that Members of the House should abolish that notion once and for all. It is not a realistic solution for an advanced trading nation such as Canada. It simply will not work. Rather, it would cause us great damage in our ability to conduct trade and generate exports. Consequently, this will hurt our ability to create jobs for the unemployed in this country for whom I believe we have the greatest concern.

If we are to have open capital markets, it follows that when the heart and soul of the world's capital market, the United States, undertakes policies that will cause interest rates in that country to rise, there will be a natural tendency for other countries to flow money into the United States to take advantage of those higher interest rates. Of course, this means that the interest rates in other countries will tend to rise or the value of their currencies will tend to fall. That is basic, fundamental economics. An analogy would be two tubs of water connected by a tube. When water is poured into one tub it will form an equal level in both tubs. Similarly, interest rates in Canada and the United States will tend to find the same level. Any attempt to keep interest rates in Canada substantially below those in the United States will cause a leak and result in a drop in the value of the currency. On the other hand, if we make our interest rates higher than those in the United States, currency will flow here and the value of our currency will tend to rise. Those would be the effects if we were able to do that artificially. With an open and free capital market it is very difficult, if not impossible, over any sustained period of time to push one's interest rates below the rates prevalent in the major capital market country, which is the United States, or to hold one's interest rates appreciably above the rates prevalent in the major capital market country, again the United States.

Again we have a unique situation in Canada in that we depend very heavily upon the United States for trade, which influences our standard of living very heavily. Canadians are simply not prepared to take the reduction in the standard of living that would go along with any serious attempt to divorce ourselves from that capital trading market in the United States. Canadians will not tolerate it, nor should they.

Anyone who suggests these fancy, quick solutions to the interest rate dilemma in which we find ourselves or to the value of the currency situation in which we find ourselves is deluding himself or herself and is trying to delude Canadians into believing that there is a solution to the interest rate situation that is costless and painless. There is not. That should be self-evident, Mr. Speaker, and anyone who understands the mechanisms of international capital flows, the trading system in the world, will not put forward some of these nonsensical solutions we have heard. I think the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) understands that very well.

Quite frankly, I think the Hon. Member was quite embarrassed by having to introduce such a motion here today and backing it up at the same time with rhetoric that was really contrary to what I know he believes and to what I know he understands in his own heart. It was political rhetoric and it was a good attempt by the Hon. Member, but I think it fell short, as many of my colleagues on this side have been able to point out over the last two to three hours. The Hon. Member for St. John's West, I think, has failed miserably in trying to make political miles with an issue in which he really did not have his heart. He knew what the problems were with the motion he put forward. He knew the unreality of the suggestions he was making, but he did it anyway in an attempt to make some short-term political gain. I suggest that the attempt has backfired. When asked, in a question from one of my colleagues on this side, to be specific as to what he would do, the essence of what he said was that he could not be specific today. Nor could he be specific about 1985 since conditions would be different in 1985, he said. The Hon. Member cannot be specific today. He cannot be specific about the future. I can only imply from that, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member does not have any policy suggestions to make other than what he said a year ago or at the time of the April Budget last year, which was, "I generally agree with the direction in which the Government is going. I generally agree with the economic policy being implemented by the Government." I think in his heart of hearts the great Newfoundlander, if he were really honest with us and if he were really speaking from the heart and getting away from the political rhetoric, would have to say today, "If I were Minister of Finance and were faced with the same problems with which the Government is faced today, if I were faced with the kind of deficit interest rate situation with which the United States is confronting Canada today, I would probably do just about what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is doing". If the Hon. Member were really honest and if we were not so close to a general election, that is the kind of thing which the Hon. Member for St. John's West would be saying, because he said it last year, Mr. Speaker.

When you analyse the facts and the situation, we are confronted with a very very difficult situation as a result of the kinds of policies followed in the United States. For the first time in recent history—in fact in my memory—the United States has become an importer of capital. The United States has been a capital exporting nation for generations. It has created a wealth base, massive growth, and it has exported capital to the developing countries. The Americans have exported capital to Canada and to the European countries. The Americans have exported capital to the developing countries where they have built plants and equipment and have created jobs. For the first time in history that I can remember, the United States this year will become a capital importing country. When the United States runs a deficit that verges on $200 billion—it might be somewhere between $150 billion and $200 billion—that is a massive deficit when it is compared to the savings rate in the United States. Let me elaborate. There is the Government borrowing requirement and a very low savings rate in the United States relative to most other countries in the world, and at the same time there is a very rapidly growing private sector—

Mr. Blenkarn: A well managed organized economy putting people to work.

Mr. Evans: —that is putting heavy demands on the capital markets. The only thing that can happen is that interest rates will go up. I hear the Hon. Member on the other side. Let me answer him by saying that those are the free market forces working. Interest rates go up. Why are they going up? They are going up to try to attract new funds into the market to be made available either to the U.S. Government for its borrowing requirements or to the private sector which is placing heavy demands on it. If those savings funds are not generated internally by the U.S. economy, which is the situation the U.S. is facing today because of the low savings rate, then those high interest rates will cause funds to start to flow in from other countries. The effect of that will help to stabilize the U.S. interest rates. However, at the same time, it will put upward pressure on interest rates in every other country from which those funds are being transported into the United States. That is the situation we face. If the United States savings rate were higher and if the United States were generating internally funds sufficient to finance the U.S. federal deficit and to finance the rapidly growing needs of a business community, where the economy is growing at over 8 per cent, there would not be the kind of upward pressure on interest rates in the U.S. There would not be the kind of upward pressure on interest rates that we are finding here in Canada as a result of the fact that money is naturally flowing into the United States to be invested where interest rates are higher.

Traditionally this country has attracted capital to finance the very rapid growth of development we have had over the last 40 or 50 years. I think Hon. Members will agree that traditionally the way we have done that, which goes on to illustrate my point about the free flow of funds and the effect thereof, is that we have held our interest rates about a half a point above the rates in the United States. That higher interest rate here has caused funds to flow into this country for investment purposes. Because of the great concern this Government and the Governor of the Bank of Canada have had over the last year and a half, we have held our interest rates at the same rates as those in the United States, or somewhere below theirs. Indeed, today in general, our interest rates are about half a point below those in the United States.

Mr. Blenkarn: Tell us about the German rate and the Swiss rate.

Mr. Evans: As a result, we are seeing an outflow of funds, and that is what has put downward pressure on the Canadian dollar. The dollar has dropped because we have tended to keep our interest rates about half a point below those in the United States. We know what high interest rates can do to small business and to individuals who wish to buy a home, to farmers and fishermen and to those people who need to borrow money. We are trying to hold the rates down to the lowest possible level consistent with some stability in our system.

That is the problem with which we are faced, Mr. Speaker. Hon. Members opposite, I am sure, really understand what the situation is. They know that the choices, apart from the options which the Government is currently following, are horrendous from the point of view of our trade, from the point of view of open and free capital markets, and from the point of view of the confidence which the international community will have in Canada as the trading partner, as a source of capital and as a use of capital. It does not do anything for the understanding of Canadians to have Members of Parliament rise in the House and spout rhetoric about what should be done and about how terrible the Government is because it does not take immediate action to reduce interest rates by three percentage points or other actions which Hon. Members of the Opposition know full well would be disastrous in terms of jobs and the standard of living of average Canadians. They know in their hearts, as does the Hon. Member for St. John's West, that if they were in the same position as we are, they would be doing just about what the Government is doing now.

• (1710)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the economist from Ottawa Centre knows that if the Americans went in the hole for a deficit of $150 billion, that would be equivalent to a $15 billion deficit in Canada. The trouble is that we borrow twice as much as the Americans. The Hon. Member should know that we have a surplus of trade which would normally push up our dollar. Normally it would not be at 77 cents. It would be at 82 cents or at 83 cents, but the Government manages the situation in such a manner that our dollar is down to 77 cents.

We have had a great lesson in economics. The fact is that cash is leaving the country for opportunities in the United States. This is why the Government keeps pushing up interest rates. It is trying to get the cash to stay home. This is also why the dollar falls. It has to let the dollar fall to discourage Canadians from cashing in their Canadian dollars for American ones.

I would like to know why the Hon. Member is such an apologist for the Government when he knows about its mismanagement, the effect of the national energy policy and the effect of the discouragement of foreign investment all of which have driven down confidence in Canada and consequently driven up interest rates. If the situation were reversed, he knows that the Canadian dollar would be strong and we would have very much lower interest rates than we presently have.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is simply wrong on a number of counts. The first area in which he is wrong is when he relates the United States deficit to the Canadian deficit without taking into consideration the differences between the U.S. and Canadian savings rates. The savings rate in Canada is at least three times that in the United States. In relative terms, the U.S. deficit is not half the Canadian deficit. However, when we compare it with the GNP, other personal income and so on, its deficit is slightly below the Canadian deficit.

The key figure is the savings rate. The fact is that Canadians are saving at a rate which allows the deficit in Canada to be financed without putting substantial upward pressure on interest rates domestically. Also, our internal demand for funds in the private sector is nowhere near as vigorous as that demand in the United States. Not only do they have large U.S. borrowing but they have a very large and growing demand from the private sector. At the same time, they have a savings rate which is only a third of the savings rate in Canada. That explains why our deficit has to be looked at in that perspective and why our deficit, while it is certainly substantial and needs to be reduced over time, is not the same problem domestically as is the United States deficit in that country.

When we think in terms of the over-all magnitude of the deficits in absolute dollar terms, a $150 billion deficit will be a massive drain not only on the United States economy but on most other economies in the world. This is because of the size, in dollar terms, of that country's deficit and the amount by which it exceeds that country's ability to generate internal savings. That is the problem.

In terms of the trade surplus, yes, we have a trade surplus. Yes, we are doing well in terms of our ability to export and sell goods and services abroad. This is precisely why we have been able to hold our interest rates below those in the United States. We have generated export surpluses. We have done very well in that regard. Our industry is becoming more and more competitive. We are doing well in international markets. That has helped us to hold interest rates below those which exist in the United States for the last while.

We have suffered to some degree with a declining dollar. Recently there has been a declining dollar, primarily because we have kept our interest rates below those in the United States. This has been minimized by the fact, as the Hon. Member said, that we have a trade surplus. We are doing well in international trade, something about which the United States simply cannot brag.

Mr. Blenkarn: Let us get the record straight. Interest rates in Canada are a full 1 per cent to 1.5 per cent higher than those in the United States. Treasury bills were sold in the United States this week for just slightly in excess of 10 per cent. We paid 11.74 per cent last week. The prime rates in Canada do not mean the same as those in the United States. Market rates are lower in that country than they are here. It is somewhat strange that the booming, bustling economy in the United States is suddenly the reason that interest rates are so high in Canada. The Americans are doing well. Should we be saying that they should not be doing well, that they should not put their people to work, that they should not have full employment, that their factories should not be bustling or that they should not have jobs because they are making Canada look bad? The Hon. Member had better believe that we look bad. We look terrible.

What is the Hon. Member's answer in that regard? Where does he stand? How will he make our economy a growing one again? Why does he not read the Budget of his own Minister in which he commented about the necessity for interest rates to be restored to more normal rates of interest in capital markets and which he said that if nominal and real rates of interest were to rise significantly from current levels, recovery would be at risk over the immediate term? He knows that it is at risk. He knows that housing starts are falling and that business investment is off. He knows that consumer confidence is gone and that unemployment is rising.

Why can he not come up with a program which somehow separates us from what the Americans have? If our economy has to be the same as that of the Americans, let us have such an economy. If that is the reason for the difference in interest rates, let us have the employment, the growth and the investment which the Americans have. Why do we not have something from his Government instead of weeping and crying over why the Americans are doing so well, borrowing so much and using so much money to buy resources and to build their plants, offices and houses?

Mr. Evans: The Hon. Member has given me so many points of attack that it would take at least a day to pursue the various areas of folly and fallacy which he has put forward. The fact of the matter is—and this fact is substantiated by my economic colleagues in the United States—that the U.S. is living off the savings of other countries. Economists in the United States will attest to the fact that the U.S. is not generating funds to finance its own growth and development. It is imposing high interest rates on every other country in the world, higher than would otherwise be the case, in order to finance its own internal growth and consumption. That is the problem which the Minister of Finance and the Ministers of the European Economic Community have been discussing and complaining about to the United States for the last six months to nine months. That is the fact of the matter.

If the Hon. Member does not understand what we have been talking about, if he really believes that there is some set of policies which we can implement painlessly that will insulate Canada from the rest of the world, then he is living in Never, Never Land. Obviously he knows that he is putting forth a total ruse. He is misleading, in a general way, the people of this country. I am sure the Hon. Member for St. John's West is upstairs watching this on television. I am sure he is sitting there saying: "The Member for Mississauga South is off on one of his political rhetorical tangents, because he and I both know that if we were in the position of the Government today, we would follow just about the same policy the Government is following".

● (1720)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. This ends the question period. Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a sense of déjà vu when I rise to speak on this day on this issue. I have spoken about this so many times that it becomes perhaps boring and certainly repetitious. It is, I think, the single most important question that faces us in Canada at the moment. It is the cause of much of our economic difficulty. In part, if not in whole, it is the reason why we have such high levels of unemployment. It has been the Achilles' heel of our farming community. It has resulted in bankruptcies of small business the likes of which we have not seen in this century. It has played havoc with the dreams of many people and families as they attempt to plan their future as best they can.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) says that having high interest rates is not the policy of the Government. I have heard that phrase on numerous occasions over the course of the last four years. The Government's policy may not be to have high interest rates, but it certainly has inflicted high interest rates on the people of Canada.

Everyone says that high interest rates are a result of the policy set by the administration in the United States. Listening to the debate, you feel that there is nothing we can do about it, that it is our lot to suffer from that policy, that as an independent nation there is very little if anything from a legislative or economic point of view that we in Canada can actually embark upon that will in any way assist us. High interest rates in Canada have followed to a large extent the movement of interest rates in the United States. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), quite rightly said that our interest rates no longer follow those in the United States but in fact lead them. For some time they have led interest rates in the United States. Interest rates have been the main vehicle used by this Liberal Government to strengthen or at least stabilize the value of the dollar over the United States currency.

Every time we raise the question, we are confronted with the same answer: "There is nothing we can do about it". Frankly, I do not accept that. Although I recognize that any actions that we might take would be difficult and although I recognize that any actions we might take would have certain repercussions, the policy that we are now following is difficult and has repercussions. The one thing that I know for certain is that whatever the consequence of our actions, if we want to take actions to lower interest rates, they could not possibly result in more chaos or hardship for Canadian families than the policy being pursued by the Government today of following lock-step behind the United States administration.

This is not an anti-U.S. speech I am making. I want to make that quite clear. Frankly, I do not much care what economic policy the United States follows within the United States. I do not think it is much of my business what policy the United States administration decides to pursue in what it deems to be its own best interests. However, I do care when we in Canada do not have either the will or the desire to attempt to establish for ourselves an independent path that will result in some form of autonomy, in a fiscal and economic sense, for Canada in the future.

If we are going to pursue lock-step the policies of the United States, we are doomed to face these situations over and over again. If we are to tie our interest rates and therefore tie our economy, job creation, ability to house our nation, ability to deal with the question of financing for our small businesses and farming community, if we are to tie all of that to decisions of the United States at every single turn, the consequence can be nothing other than that if they manage their economy badly, we suffer, and if we make the wrong decisions, we suffer. That is unacceptable. I did not get elected to Parliament in order to accept without question the direction being thrust upon us by the United States. Neither did I get elected in order to try to satisfy the demand of the United States for additional capital year after year, as will no doubt be the case in years to come.

I know as I stand here that the people of Canada would be prepared, if need be, to take and hold certain consequences to themselves in the short run if they were assured that the Government had a program which would divorce us economically, to the extent that that is possible, from the fluctuations that continue to occur within the United States as a result of an administration gone wild.

I say to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre that I do not expect people to rush forward and embrace us if things do not turn out exactly right. However, I do know that I would rather lose my seat in Parliament trying to create a better society, with a degree of independence, run by Canadians for Canadians, than hold my seat in Parliament trying to satisfy people's desires based on policy made in Washington.

People in Canada cannot afford high interest rates. That is the bottom line. Farmers, small business people and those who might become home owners, and at this point in time are not home owners, cannot afford the high interest rates. Those who will be faced with renewing their mortgages, notwithstanding the scam that is about to be inflicted upon them by the Government in the form of some mortgage insurance program, cannot afford the high interest rates.

I put it to the Minister that the interest rates of today can be identified by any reasonable, sane individual as being high interest rates. The only political statement I will make in a partisan sense is that it worries me when I see the Conservatives offering this motion. I say to my friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, that it worries me because I do remember hearing the former finance critic saying to the Montreal Board of Trade that the high interest rate policy being pursued by the Government was in fact the only policy to follow. I do remember the year 1979 when the Conservatives were in office and interest rates rose week after week almost in the same fashion as they are rising now and as they were in the years 1981 through 1983.

A certain question of integrity arises in the minds of the people when members of the Conservative Party suggest that somehow or other they have seen the light. It is a little bit like the conversion of Saul on the road to Damascus. Conservative Members have now seen the light and recognize the error of their ways. I would accept that if they would state categorically that they had in fact supported the Government's policies in the first place and have now changed their minds. However, they will not say that.

When we were arguing for lower interest rates, we were being chided and chastised by the Conservatives to our right at every single turn. We were being told that what we were pursuing, although desirable, was not practical. In my opinion, what is desirable must be made practical in this instance. We must accept the responsibilities, whatever they may be, and we may discuss the nature of those responsibilities as time passes. However, we must accept the responsibility for managing the nation and its economy and we must accept that responsibility with the full knowledge that if we follow the interest rate policy of the United States, then the opportunities for growth, for people to own a home, for people to open new businesses, for farmers to start up farms and for those who are already engaged in all of those activities in Canada, become considerably reduced.

I would put the argument to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre that, as he knows full well, I believe it is neither necessary nor desirable to set the interest rate every Thursday. I think that that creates chaos and slows down the movement in—

Mr. Evans: It is set every day in the marketplace.

Mr. Deans: It is set every day in the marketplace but it is led by the Bank of Canada at every single turn. By shaking his head no, the Hon. Member shows a degree of naivety that I would not have attributed to him.

On Thursdays, the Bank of Canada quite clearly establishes the benchmark, and that benchmark influences the decisions made by every single financial institution in Canada. It may well be that the interest rates fluctuate somewhat around that benchmark, but when the Bank of Canada started to bring interest rates down in the year 1983, every single financial institution followed suit. When the Bank of Canada rate began to rise in late 1983 and into 1984, every single financial institution, banks and others, moved their interest rates up almost lock-step. The only difference between the increase in the bank rate by the central Bank and the increase in the bank rate by the chartered banks and other financial institutions was the usual difference. Those financial institutions increased their rates more than the central bank raised its interest rates. It has always seemed to be the attitude of the financial institutions that if they can gouge a little deeper, then they will gouge away.

The Hon. Member is shaking his head again, but I can produce the statistics to show that this is true for mortgages as well as for other debts. Until last Thursday, the interest rates on mortgages alone rose more than the interest rate set by the central bank. However, that rate rose almost every single week as the bank rate inched ever so slowly to its present high rate.

Mr. Evans: What term of mortgages?

Mr. Deans: The Hon. Member, in an interjection, has said that the rate depends upon what the term of the mortgage is. However, the truth of the matter is that it does not depend on what the term of the mortgage is.

Mr. Evans: Yes, it does.

Mr. Deans: No, it does not. One of the biggest difficulties we have in the country and one of the things for which the Government must stand accountable is the fact that in 1968, the Government eliminated for all time mortgages that were amortized over 20 years or 25 years and were payable at a fixed interest rate. At that point in time, the Government responded to the lobby of the Senate Banking Committee and decided that it would eliminate for all the establishment of a criterion that would guarantee people the ability to take on the responsibility of a mortgage and to pay it off in their lifetimes and still have money to spend.

Mr. Evans: Section 8 of the Interest Act, it has been there since 1896.

Mr. Deans: In 1968, that Act was changed.

Mr. Evans: No, it was not.

Mr. Deans: Yes, it was. However, we will argue that point at another time. Between 1966 and 1968 that matter was debated, and the change to the Act took place in 1968.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Bank Act change.

Mr. Deans: Yes, that was the Bank Act change.

Mr. Evans: The banks were lending mortgage money—

Mr. Deans: We will argue that point at another time. That is not what I wish to argue at this time. All I am saying is that at that point in time, the Government allowed things to happen which impacted detrimentally upon the mortgage situation of the country, to our everlasting regret. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that that in itself was a move by a preceding Liberal administration which has caused tremendous hardship over the years.

What worries me of late is looking at the economy as a whole. A great deal of what the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has said is true. I concede that he has followed an economic theory that is borne out by statistical evidence. However, I say to the Hon. Member that I have an opinion that is again borne out by some statistical evidence and by some economic theorists.

We could argue the theories of one economic theorist over those of another. However, although I am not an economist, my analysis of the situation at the moment is quite simple. The dollar is down as against the U.S. dollar because of a number of factors, not the least of which is the lack of economic activity in Canada. That decline in economic activity is evidenced by the fact that there are so many people unemployed and by a number of other factors. I put to the Hon. Member that if our interest rate policy were to create considerably lower interest rates, it would strengthen the consumer economy.

There is no doubt that if people could afford to buy homes, they would buy homes. If people could afford to take on such responsibilities at lower interest rates, they would take them on. We saw that happen in the last few months when interest rates decreased. People did in fact have the feeling that things were getting better and they did in fact begin to consume a little more. That feeling was reflected in the growth of the Gross National Product. Although it was a small growth, that feeling was nevertheless reflected in the growth. We are now undermining that growth.

If we were to have a lower interest rate policy, it would inevitably result in a stronger consumer marketplace, and that stronger consumer marketplace would inevitably result in a stronger manufacturing sector, which would result in more jobs and more tax dollars for the Government. That would result in investors seeing activity in Canada and being prepared to put their money into that activity rather than into bonds or high-interest yielding papers. That would result in further economic stimulation, which would result in a stronger dollar. I suggest that that cycle is an intelligent one and it happens to be the only cycle over which we in Canada have complete control.

I say to the Hon. Member, through you, Mr. Speaker, as I say to the Government, that the policy to which I have just referred is the only policy that creates for Canadians both a sense of our own worth and an opportunity to participate in our own recovery. Even if certain downward trends were to develop in the flow of capital over a short period of time, the very fact that economic stimulation would take place would quickly reverse that trend. I say; through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre that I am not interested in people who want to invest their money in Canada simply to get a high rate of return from various pieces of financial paper. That is not helping Canada. If that money is flowing back and forth, as the Hon. Member indicates, when it flows into Canada and then flows out again, it takes with it, sucking away at every turn, the interest that was created in Canada. We do not get the economic benefit of long-term stable investment from the high interest rate structure. The money flows out, and that is why the money flows out. That is why we have such a drain on our finances. By following the United States and by not having the money invested in economic activity in the country—manufacturing and otherwise—and by not having the money directed and put into those areas where the economy is growing, the money goes into paper. By going into paper, it simply drains from Canadians more and more of their expendable capital. We get nothing in return.

• (1740)

I suggest that there is an economy theory—thank you, Mr. Speaker, I see you signalling that I must stop—that is opposite to the one which the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre pursues and opposite to the one the Government pursues. It is as valid as the economic theory of the Government. It may not be acceptable, but it is as acceptable to those who believe in it, and that includes this Party and many other intelligent people in this country. It is as acceptable to us and to many others as is the economic theory of the Government acceptable to the Government. I am asking that the Government not lose sight of the fact that there is more than one way to deal with this, and the one way that we—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. There will now be a ten-minute period for questions and comments. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans).

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on two matters. The Hon. Member has referred to paper. He says that money flows around and creates paper. It does not. Paper is created as the representation of a debt. That debt represents an investment by somebody in something real. People do not borrow money simply to have money to hold in their hands. People borrow money to invest in something. They give another person a piece of paper that says "I owe you" and indicates that they are willing to pay interest in exchange for the money that they will put into something real—whether it be a house or a factory, or something else. They invest in real things. When money flows into Canada and we give the people who put the money here a piece of paper, it is because we want the money to do something real. We use the money to build a CPR tunnel or to expand the railways—these types of things. It is a fallacy that it is just paper flowing around.

On the second point, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has put to his Party over the last several days. That question is: If, let us say, tomorrow the Bank of Canada indicated that interest rates were not 11.5 per cent or 11.7 per cent, but that they were going to be 8.7 per cent, how would we force the people who have the money—the savers, all the way from the little person who puts money in a bank up to corporations; the whole spectrum—to lend their money at 8.7 per cent when they can get 11.7 per cent?

The reason people save is to build a nest-egg for the future. They are simply not going to give away three percentage points in interest because of some philanthropic notion. The Hon. Member knows that. I know that. How do we do it by decreeing lower interest rates? How do we force people to save and to give us money at a rate that is below what they can get elsewhere?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, to begin with, the vast majority of people in Canada have never invested a penny outside of this country in their lives. They have never once looked at shipping their money across on a handcart at the border and putting it into a bank. Neither have they opened bank accounts here in U.S. dollars, although that—

Mr. Evans: You would be surprised.

Mr. Deans: I would not be surprised. Whether the Hon. Member believes it or not, the overwhelming majority of Canadians invest their money in only one of two or perhaps three ways: they buy Canada Savings Bonds, and they are now paying something like 10 per cent—

Mr. Blenkarn: They are 9.5 per cent.

Mr. Crouse: They invest their money in Florida motels.

Mr. Deans: They are 9.5 per cent, as my hon. friend indicates. My colleague from South Shore says that they invest in Florida motels. He is only talking about his own friends. I will have you know that my friends do not buy Florida motels. Maybe Conservatives do, but most New Democrats do not.

However, the majority of people go to the bank and put their money into a Canada Savings Bond; some of them buy guaranteed investment certificates, and some of them put their money into savings accounts. That is the overwhelming majority of people. They put it in at whatever the rate happens to be at the time. If the Bank of Canada, over the course of the next three or four months, brought interest rates down, people would still put their money in the bank. They would still buy Canada Savings Bonds and they would still put their money into guaranteed investment certificates. They would look for the best possible way within the area in which they travel. Most of them travel within a very small area.

I suggest that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is talking about his friends in Mount Royal. He is talking about the people he comes into contact with who do not give a damn about Canada. I am talking about the people who work in the Steel Company of Canada, who put their money in the credit union, in the bank, and in certificates. The amounts are small. Those people will continue to do that whether the interest rate is 8 per cent or 18 per cent.

Mr. Evans: Well, let the credit unions lower their rates.

Mr. Deans: The credit unions cannot lower them because they sit next door to the bank. Clearly—

Mr. Evans: We sit next door to the United States.

Mr. Deans: Do not be ridiculous. The Hon. Member knows full well—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The period is supposed to be for short questions and short responses. Both the Hon. Members have made long statements. Is there anyone else wanting to ask a question? The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the people who work for the Steel Company of Canada are a little more sophisticated. They do shop around and they do put their money into credit unions and the like which are organized. They put their money into pension funds which are organized to buy shares in companies and which invest in stock market paper and so on. Directly or indirectly, they are involved in that kind of investment.

I was wondering if the Hon. Member felt that we operated our economy in such a fashion as to encourage people to invest in Canadian equities and encourage foreigners to bring their money into the country. That was happening when the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was the Minister of Finance and the Canadian dollar moved from 83 cents to 87 cents. People at that time were enthusiastic about investment in Hibernia and in the tar sands projects. At that time Canada was looked upon favourably as a great place to put money into, and the country was starting to grow again. Was that what he was talking about when he said it would tend to make it possible to have lower interest rates in Canada, because there would be money coming into Canada for the opportunities and jobs that are in Canada?

Mr. Deans: No, that was not what I had in mind.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, maybe the Hon. Member has given us the vehicle by which to get him to understand the point.

Mr. Deans: Oh, I understand it.

Mr. Evans: He said—in response to a comment I made—that credit unions could not lower the interest rates by 3 per cent in isolation because if the people next door, the banks and others, did not, all the people would move their money out of the credit union and put it into the bank because they would get a higher rate of return. Let us take the analogy of the credit union sitting next to the bank, and the credit union artificially lowering the interest rates that it is paying on deposits and the money goes out of the credit union and into the bank. Now, let us draw a bigger analogy and say that the credit union is Canada and the bank is the United States. If Canada lowers its interest rates artificially, what happens? The same thing that happens when the credit union tries it. Money goes out of this one and into that one.

• (1750)

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's argument is interesting, but wrong. If that were to be a good analogy, how then does the Hon. Member explain the capacity of West Germany to hold its interest rates below those of the United States? How does he explain Sweden holding its interest rates below those of the United States?

Mr. Evans: They are not as close and they are not as tied.

Mr. Deans: The Hon. Member says that money flows easily, and he knows that is true. However, money does not flow by people walking from one town to the next to put their money in. If the Hon. Member is going to use that kind of analogy, would he try to explain to me how it can be that Sweden, Japan, West Germany and Australia can hold their rates down? How can it be that other countries around the world have been able to do that? More important, how can it be that right within the United States itself instruments can be established to provide money for mortgages at rates considerably below those in Canada? I want to put to the Hon. Member that his analogy, although interesting, is wrong.

Mr. Evans: It is not wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the end of the ten-minute period for questions and comments. We will continue debate.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I could not help but draw another analogy as I listened to the debate on the difference between interest rates in Canada at the present time and those in the United States. I consider how lucky we are that we live in Canada and are tied to a society which does care for the people, certainly at the federal Government level, when I see that the interest rates, for example in Mexico or in Portugal, are over 40 per cent. We must consider ourselves very fortunate, indeed. I could not help but think, though, a little earlier on, about the areas from which a provincial Conservative Government raises its money. In the Budget of the Province of Ontario today the OHIP fees are raised. That Government already collects 91 per cent of its contribution to medicare through OHIP fees, and they are raised again, which will cost the Ontario taxpayer $69 million in the next year. The Conservative Government also made a big thing out of cutting its deficit by $350 million, although it is interesting to note that the federal Government transfers to the Province of Ontario will increase by over $300 million in the next year. It is wonderful what you can do with smoke and mirrors, particularly if you are a Tory. However, the Government of Canada does like to lay its facts right on the table.

I should perhaps comment on a reference which was made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher), when he made the statement that 20 per cent of Canadian borrowings are from outside of Canada. That is the average of both the provincial and federal Governments. The provincial borrowings are about 30 per cent from outside of Canada, whereas the borrowings of the Government of Canada coming from outside of Canada are between 6 per cent and 7 per cent. I thought I should perhaps set the record straight on that so it could not be misconstrued. Incidentally, those figures are the most recent available from the Bank of Canada review and relate to December 31, 1982. They may have changed marginally since that time.

We have before us today, Mr. Speaker, another sterile Opposition motion which is really devoid of any ideas but is heavy on rhetoric, complaining generally that our economic performance is not good enough. The motion implies that since Canada is living in a difficult economic world, we should just opt out of it and go it alone by putting a wall around our national economy. It conveniently ignores the fact that the rest of the world contributes 30 per cent of our national income through trade, and that without this income we would be facing nothing short of a financial disaster.

Our recent performance in international trade has been particularly impressive. During the past year, Canada has recorded the largest growth in exports of any industrial nation. Our trade surplus for 1983 alone was more than $18 billion, approaching an all-time high, and for the first quarter of this year it was running at an average annual rate of $16 billion. The surplus in January alone was equal to an annual rate of $25 billion. That is a pretty impressive record for a nation of just 25 million people.

It is obvious that to maintain this kind of performance, Canada must adapt to the rapidly changing world economy and become even more competitive. It is not a case of opting out but rather of opting in. This means greater emphasis on becoming more productive, more innovative and more flexible in responding to new opportunities. It means keeping our costs under firm control and developing better relations between labour and management. It means a continuing need and greater opportunities for new investment by Canadians and foreign investors. It means putting a concerted long-term emphasis on reducing the need of the public sector for borrowed capital, and increasing the scope for expansion of the private sector where most new jobs will be created in the years ahead.

At the same time, it means greater attention to the vital and mutually rewarding economic relationship between Canada and the United States. It means continuing efforts by each country, individually and in concert with the international community, to improve the international economic climate within which our economic progress must be achieved.

Canada's economic recovery continues to exhibit the strength which has made the North American recovery a world leader since the recession. From the fourth quarter of 1982 to the fourth quarter of 1983, real GNP rose by 6.6 per cent in Canada in comparison to only 6.2 per cent in the United States. It has been assumed that the firm but more moderate pace of growth of the fourth quarter will continue in Canada, unlike the situation in the United States where a burst of growth has been indicated. Yet our early figures for 1984 show impressive strength in a number of areas, including retail sales, manufacturers' orders, merchandise trade and, in aggregate, gross domestic product.

Recent indications of a firming pace of recovery in the rest of the industrial world are a source of welcome encouragement. For example, the United States Conference Board reports leading economic indices with annual growth rates at 13 per cent in France, 11 per cent in Japan and 9 per cent in West Germany, similar to the 12 per cent and 10 per cent readings for the United States and Canada respectively.

With more than 30 million unemployed in the industrialized nations of the world, job-creation continues to be a world-wide priority of some urgency. Canada is fully in accord with the need to build lasting solutions to the job challenge through encouragement of private sector expansion and the building of basic economic strength. As a nation which relies on exports for a significant proportion of its jobs, Canada shares fully in the commitment to international action to solve economic problems.

Canada's job-creation pace has been similar to that in the United States. However, our labour force has grown more rapidly. The result is a continuing rate of unemployment in excess of 11 per cent. Youth unemployment is of particular concern in Canada, as it is in the United States. We are projecting gradual but steady reduction in unemployment rates for all age groups, as well as a continuation of fairly rapid labour force growth in the years ahead.

Despite strong evidence of continuing growth, there has been an attempt by some to paint Canada's economic growth rate as faltering as compared to that of the United States. In fact, the recent edging upward of interest rates in both Canada and the United States reflects the concern that economic growth now exceeds a sustainable pace in the United States. This fear is, of course, closely related to concerns about the U.S. Government deficit and to the risk that overly rapid growth would create both rising inflation and rising interest rates.

Canada's competitive position has been improving since the recovery began, assisted greatly by a dramatic fall in the rate of inflation. For example, the rate of inflation, as measured by the GNP deflator, reached 3.8 per cent in the fourth quarter as compared to 4.2 per cent in the United States. Productivity has risen substantially. It is up 3 per cent in the fourth quarter as compared with a year earlier. Manufacturing productivity rose by almost 7 per cent, the best performance in 13 years. Unit labour cost increases have been moderating to a level of only 0.4 per cent higher in the fourth quarter over a year earlier, as against 2.5 per cent in the United States.

Canada's over-all current account continued to show strength in 1983 with a $1.6 billion surplus, the second highest on record. This is also in contrast to the experience in the United States in recent times. Clearly, the recent downward drift of the Canadian dollar against the U.S. dollar is not a reflection of a fundamental weakness in domestic economic performance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT—TIMING OF PAY-OUT TO FARMERS. (B) PAYMENT OF INTEREST

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act have been presented to the House of Commons in the form of Bill C-33. What a disappointment they have turned out to be. The New Democratic Party has indicated that it would pass the Bill as quickly as possible if that would guarantee a quick payment to the grain producers. Instead, the Government has come up with a series of amendments which will not allow a payment until November, or so. The farmers need some extra cash flow now rather than in the fall after harvest.

Also, the Government has not put into the Bill the specifics of the formula which will make the stabilization plan useful for the next five years. Instead, the Government has chosen the amount of $250 million and is busily designing a formula which will trigger a pay-out of that amount. In other words, the Government's concern is not so much for the farmers as it is about the money it will have to pay out. The Government wants to keep the payment as low as possible so that only farmers' money will be returned to them. In the last five years farmers have put in $300 million. The Government is manipulating the formula to ensure a payment of $250 million. Not only will the Government not return the farmers' money with interest, it will not even return the farmers' money. No wonder many farmers want out of this stabilization plan.

My question is therefore a request for clarification, Mr. Speaker. Before the Government tries to push these amendments through the House, will it make the following guarantees? Will it guarantee to establish a secondary pay-out triggering mechanism that will be effective now, next year and for many years to come, and which will be sensitive to producers' needs, as it was intended?

Will the Government put into the amendments a retroactive feature which would allow payments for the 1983 calendar year? The Government could make this possible by an Order-in-Council. The Government was able to do that for the railroads. The Crow benefit was paid to the railroads before the legislation was passed and was made retroactive.

Will the Government put into the amendment an interim payment clause which would allow a payment to any time that a need is indicated and a pay-out is obvious?

Will the Government amend an initial deficiency in the Act and allow the Act to make pay-outs on a regional basis when the circumstances show such a need?

Will the Government arrange and put before the House, or the appropriate committee, an assurance that the cost of operation and its relationship to income will be a major factor in the decision to make a pay-out? Will the individual farmer's net income be a factor in the formula?

In establishing the formula will the Government also address itself to recognizing that there are problems generated by successive crop or market failures which would not otherwise be a problem?

Will the Government also add an insurance factor for crop or market failures for specific crops? If the bottom falls out of the flax market, it affects specialist farmers. The stabilization plan could trigger a payment for those farmers dependent upon that market.

The small amount which the Government intends the amendments to this Act to generate, an average of $2,500 per farmer, will not bail a farmer out of bankruptcy. However, it may buy the fuel or chemical for spraying or harvesting this summer or fall. This Bill could be a good start to an income security plan for the grain farmers. Will the Government move in that direction when it presents this Bill to the appropriate committee?

● (1805)

[Translation]

Mr. André Bachand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question raised by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), I agree that making interim payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Act may seem attractive. Many western farmers are now short of cash, and it is true that funds to help them under the Grain Stabilization Program are available.

However, the picture changes if we take a closer look at the issue. First, interim payments are usually made when the present formula for calculating costs and income indicates the need for such payments. That is not the case now, for the year 1983. In fact, that is why, on May 10 of this year, we tabled a Bill to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act. The proposed changes should, we hope, result in substantial payments for 1983-84.

To be able to make these payments, the Bill must first be enacted. Furthermore, as the House is aware, the legislation provides that payments cannot be made until the end of the year, which will be the end of July if the Bill is passed in its present form. The new legislation was designed to accelerate pay-outs. We are, in fact, suggesting that the crop year be used instead of the calendar year as the period over which receipts are to be calculated. Thus, farmers will be entitled to receive payments in October or November instead of having to wait for nearly ten months after the end of the calendar year, as is the case under the present program. As a result, interim payments will no longer be such a vital issue.

We must also consider the administrative problems that would be caused by such payments under the new legislation. July deliveries may fluctuate enormously, and it is hard to make a reliable estimate. Furthermore, July 1 is the reference date used by Statistics Canada in calculating expenditures under this program. Final results are not available until two months later. Furthermore, it is difficult to evaluate the expenditures in these figures.

Finally, I may recall that if our Bill is passed, at the end of October farmers will probably be entitled to payments totalling about $300 million. Such payments would come at a time when most farmers are proceeding with major banking transactions. The approximately $6,000 each farmer will receive under the program would therefore be very welcome. That is why I hope every effort will be made to expedite passage of this Bill so that payments can be made at that time.

THE ADMINISTRATION—LIBERAL PARTY CAMPAIGN—ROLE OF CONTRACT EMPLOYEE. (B) MINISTERIAL STAFF GUIDELINES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, April 30, 1984, I posed two questions to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) concerning the continuing involvement of one Jim McDonald in the Minister's Liberal leadership campaign as principal organizer or manager, at the same time that Mr. McDonald is also serving as a contract employee in the Minister's office as a speech writer. There is at least the appearance that the taxpayers of Canada are subsidizing, through the back door, the Minister's partisan activities. In this case it is his bid to become the leader of the Liberal Party of Canada. Such an arrangement between the Minister and Mr. McDonald is not only immoral but also against the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) guidelines on that subject.

Indeed, on April 11, the Prime Minister told the House in reply to a question from the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) that there should not be any involvement of any ministerial staff, permanent or otherwise, in a leadership candidates' campaign in any important way, in the Prime Minister's words, "without that staff either resigning or asking for a leave of absence."

The guidelines are clear enough. In the case of Mr. McDonald, he can either resign as the Minister's campaign manager or he can step down as a contract employee from the Minister's office. He cannot do both, but he is doing both. This is a clear affront to the law as laid down by the Prime Minister himself.

• (1810)

In response to my questions, the Minister said two things. First, he said Mr. McDonald is not employed in his office, but rather a company in which Mr. McDonald is involved has a contract with the Minister's department. Second, the Minister said the contract in question, though it will continue until after the Liberal leadership convention in mid-June, had been entered into by the Government of Canada before the Minister became a leadership candidate and it must now be honoured until the original expiry date. That was the claim by the Minister. He argued that the contract was with a company in connection with which Mr. McDonald had some activities, but that the signing of it was before the Minister became a candidate and, therefore, everything was fine.

There are two things wrong with the Minister's two-barrelled reply. To begin with, while it is true that the contract in question is with Mr. McDonald's company and not technically with Mr. McDonald himself, the reality is that the company is Mr. McDonald. The company is called Nunavut Communications, which is simply Jim McDonald incorporated for the purpose of his conducting business with clients. Certainly, he has a small staff, and in that sense, the company is more than Mr. McDonald alone. But the company centres on Mr. McDonald; it revolves around him. For all practical purposes it is Mr. McDonald himself. So the Minister was misleading the House in suggesting otherwise.

Moreover, any contract of the kind about which we are talking would have to be honoured by both parties under normal circumstances, as the Minister stated. No question about that. A contract is a contract no matter what might ensue after its signing. Any contract, however, can be broken or nullified with the agreement of both parties. And given the clear conflict between Mr. McDonald's partisan activities and the Prime Minister's guidelines—-the incompatibility between the two—the Minister should insist that his campaign manager either resign from that post or resign from this contract position in the Minister's office. Mr. McDonald for his part, should oblige the Minister's order if only to preserve the Minister's reputation for personal integrity in the course of the leadership campaign. Otherwise we can only assume the worst, namely, that Mr. McDonald's contract arrangement is nothing more than a facade behind which he is hiding his true activities in the Minister's office and with the Minister as he travels throughout the country, at taxpayers' expense. His true purpose is the promotion of the Minister's candidacy for the leadership of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question of April 30, I would like to refer him to statements made by the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) in this House on the same day, as well as to the response on May 1, 1984, of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to a question put by the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) concerning the employment of Mr. Jim McDonald. I should like to reiterate that Mr. McDonald ceased to be a contractual employee in the office of the Minister of Justice as of April 1, 1984, and did sever all personal contractual links with the Department of Justice as of that date.

Mr. McMillan: What about his company?

Mr. MacBain: Therefore no moneys were expended by the Government of Canada on his personal behalf beyond this date.

• (1815)

Regarding the two contracts in question with the Department of Justice, I should like to point out to the Hon. Member that one deals with the provision of speeches for the Minister of Justice on matters pertaining to his portfolio, as well as various legislative programs introduced by the Hon. Minister during the present session of Parliament. The speeches which are required for speaking engagements relating directly to departmental responsibilities of the Minister were written and are presently being drafted by a speech writer hired by that company. The other, which terminated on April 30, 1984, was for the Second People's Law Conference on the Family and the Law which took place in Ottawa on April 9 and 10, 1984. The conference brought together 250 delegates from all parts of Canada, including a large number of professionals experienced in various services dedicated to supporting and enhancing the family as one of the most important institutions in our society.

The company was contracted to organize and arrange the attendance of participants at this conference—accommodation, transportation and conference facilities which included the administration and operation of the conference as a whole.

I should like to state for the record that Mr. McDonald was not directly involved with these two contracts. Both these contracts were signed by one of the co-partners of the company of which Mr. McDonald is a participant.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—NUCLEAR RADIATION EXPOSURE—DEMAND FOR EXPERT MEDICAL EVIDENCE. (B) CASE LAW—REQUEST FOR ACCEPTANCE OF PRECEDENT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, on May 10, I asked the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) why he does not accept that there is a connection between nuclear radiation and cancer. In a supplementary question I asked him to accept the common law principles of precedent decisions and case law. Those two questions and answers were picked up by Associated Press of Salt Lake City and were published under a headline entitled "Cancer victims win N-test ruling". In part the article read:

A federal judge ruled Thursday that the U.S. government was negligent . . . and ordered it to pay $2.6 million in 10 cases where he blamed fallout for causing cancer.

The article continued, and in the last two paragraphs it noted what was going on the House of Commons in Ottawa as follows:

In Ottawa, Conservative MP Allan McKinnon, . . . pressed the compensation claims of Canadian servicemen who developed cancer after exposure to radiation.

The Victoria MP asked Veterans Affairs Minister Bennett Campbell why his department continued to demand expert medical evidence from every claimant despite having recognized the link between cancer and radiation in other cases.

For some years Members of Parliament have been asking the Minister to take action to ensure that all Canadian veterans exposed to radiation at the nuclear tests in Nevada, or at the Chalk River clean-up, be located and the state of their health determined. Repeatedly the Minister has assured the House and these veterans that he was taking action in this regard.

The Minister is really putting us off with promises of studies under way and recommendations forthcoming. Last week in response to my question he said:

We expect to receive a total analysis of their case, and a recommendation arising from the study, later this fall.

This afternoon he said that the study would be ready in August. We are making progress. Perhaps, if we keep asking him, he will be able to produce a report within a week.

Meanwhile, veterans are suffering, and some of them are dying as a result of radiation-induced cancer. It is understood that the interpretation of the governing legislation, the Pension Act, follows common law principles. These principles are based upon the concepts of precedent decisions and case law. The Canadian Pension Commission has failed to follow these principles by requiring every veteran who comes forward with an application for a disability pension for cancer related to his exposure to nuclear radiation to establish, yet again, that there is a connection between his exposure and his illness. The Commission requires that the veteran produce expert medical evidence, from a recognized authority in the field, that his cancer is related to his exposure to nuclear radiation.

This should not be necessary. Not only is it difficult for veterans who live outside Canada's major cities to locate one of these recognized experts, but they should not be required to re-invent the wheel for the benefit of the Commission.

How many such veterans are there in Canada? My understanding is that 600 servicemen took part in the Nevada tests. Another 400 servicemen took part in the Chalk River clean-up. That makes 1,000 veterans who were subject to nuclear radiation. We need to know how many of them developed cancer.

• (1820)

The Pension Commission has the names and addresses of these thousand servicemen who took part, which I understand it received from the Department of National Defence. I understand that is nearly all of them. Others went around on training exercises teaching people to use geiger counters some 20 years ago. They were forced to carry cobalt sources so they would have something to test. If the Department is unable to get in touch with these 1,000 veterans, but is kind enough to give me the names and addresses, I will get in touch with them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Jean-Louis Leduc (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the Hon. Member is an interesting one. The relationship between nuclear radiation and cancer has re-opened the debate, not only in Canada, but also in other countries.

The Canadian Pension Commission has already taken steps to obtain information on some aspects of the issue. The Hon. Member is certainly aware that the Commission is financing a study on nuclear radiation and its effects. The Epidemiology and Community Medicine Department of the University of Ottawa Medical School has been asked to carry on this study.

Under this contract a research team has begun to examine the impact of these factors on the death rate. The first thing was to find the members of the Armed Forces who had done decontamination work in Chalk River in 1953 and 1958, as well as those who had attended atomic bomb testings in Nevada and Australia during the fifties.

With the assistance of the Department of National Defence, the researchers were able to trace about a thousand people who took part in those operations. They were also given a list of veterans whose occupation, status and age were roughly the same as those of the people who had been exposed to radiation.

Mr. Speaker, a computer tape with all this information recorded was sent to Statistics Canada, where the data is now being compared with the files on the Canadian death rate up to 1981 inclusively. We hope that this stage of the study will be completed by the end of June. This analysis of the data by computer will enable the University of Ottawa to submit its report by August 31.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) and the Canadian Pension Commission had hoped to get the report some time ago, but it was very difficult to trace such a large number of veterans.

The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) is well aware that, in the meantime, there is nothing to prevent a veteran who believes his health to have deteriorated because of his having been exposed to radiation to apply to the Commission for an allowance. However, once this study has been completed, we hope that its findings will enable the Pension Commission to develop guidelines that will be used to process all allowance appliations related to nuclear radiation and its medical effects.

Adjournment Debate

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order.

At 6.25 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

THE PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS AT THE INSTALLATION OF JEANNE SAUVÉ AS GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA OTTAWA, MAY 14, 1984

[Translation]

Your Excellency:

(or should I say "Madame", the title the French have used to address their Sovereign?)

It is a privilege and a great pleasure for me to offer you the best wishes of the Government, Parliament, and all the people of Canada on the occasion of your installation as Governor General. As your first official gesture, I would ask you to send Her Majesty, the Queen of Canada, a message assuring her of our loyalty and affection.

[English]

After being represented in Canada by men for such a long time, it is right and proper that Her Majesty should finally have a woman representative here. And I am happy and proud to participate in this momentous event, the installation of our first woman Governor General.

We are gathered today to celebrate a remarkable person but also a welcome evolution of our society. In fact, for this historic event to take place the natural candidate for the position had to be available at the appropriate time.

The time is appropriate, because our modern society is increasingly aware that women's qualities of mind and heart are every bit as valuable as men's, and that we need their fresh approach and commitment to peace and mutual support in order to establish a more humane society in Canada and throughout the world.

The time is appropriate especially because, for some years now, outstanding women have been challenging and conquering old taboos. With skill and determination, they have won access to the highest positions in the land. By freeing themselves from the restrictions that circumscribed their situation, they have inspired us to shake off our old prejudices and practices.

I am thinking here of pioneers like Emily Murphy, Nellie McClung, Louise McKinney, Irene Parlby, Henrietta Muir Edwards, Thérèse Casgrain, and many others who waged an uncertain battle at difficult times in our history.

I am thinking, too, of Pauline Vanier, Norah Michener, Gabrielle Léger and Lily Schreyer, who have a special place in the hearts of Canadians because their strength and unselfishness have left their stamp on their husbands' tenures as Governors General.

Lastly, I am thinking of all those women who have opened the doors of our highest institutions to their colleagues, women like Agnes MacPhail, who in 1921 became the first woman elected to the House of Commons; Cairine Wilson, the first woman to be called to the Senate, in 1930; then in 1957, Ellen Fairclough, the first woman to serve in the federal Cabinet; Réjane Laberge-Colas, the first woman to serve on a supreme court, appointed in 1969; Muriel Ferguson, who in 1972 became the first woman to serve as speaker of the Senate; Sylvia Ostry, who in the same year was the first woman appointed to a deputy minister's position in the federal public service; Pauline McGibbon, in 1974 appointed the country's first woman lieutenant-governor; Constance Glube, the first woman to become Chief Justice of a Supreme Court, in 1982; and Bertha Wilson, who also in 1982 became the first woman justice of the Supreme Court of Canada.

As the first woman to occupy the chair of Speaker of the House of Commons, in 1980, and to become Governor General of Canada, 1984, you stand in the line of these pioneers. During your remarkable career, you have accumulated probably more "firsts" than any other Canadian woman.

However, it is not merely to add to your record, nor because you are a woman, that the office of Governor General befalls you today. You have been chosen because, in the opinion of all, you are the ideal candidate for the position.

[Translation]

The role of Governor General is essentially one of rallying Canadians around the ideals that form the basis of our will to live together . . . and who among Canadians could do it better than you, Madame?

First of all, you represent all the richness and diversity of this country. You were born in Saskatchewan and raised in Ontario, right here in Ottawa. After completing your studies in France and Great Britain, our two mother countries, you pursued a career in Montreal in French and English television, with both the CBC and the private sector. Later, you travelled the country from one end to the other as a federal Cabinet Minister. And, as if that were not enough, as Speaker of the House of Commons you were called upon to preside over some of the most fundamental debates in the history of Canada, at the time of the referendum and the patriation of our Constitution.

This long familiarity with Canada has given you a great love for it, a love that, more than anything else, you wish others to share. No one can hear you speak of Canada without being struck by your deep sincerity. Moreover, the warmth of your personality embodies to perfection the ideals of open-mindedness and tolerance, the spirit of sharing and brotherhood, that the Fathers of Confederation dreamed of realizing in this land.

These, then, are the reasons underlying your elevation to the position of Governor General of Canada. All Canadians trust in your talents to strengthen the country's unity and to embody, with grace and nobility, that ideal out of which the Canadian federation was born and which continues to inspire it. I am sure they will not be disappointed.

I wish to thank your husband and your son for agreeing to share you with us. I hope they will enjoy helping you carry out your duties.

On behalf of all Canadians, I wish you happiness and good health.

Henri Rochefort said that France had thirty-six million subjects, not counting the subjects of discontent. Give or take a few figures, the statement also applies to Canada.

Madame, may you find the words to persuade us that, for 25 million Canadians committed to live together, there is no subject of discontent that we cannot resolve in our efforts to build this country with honour, justice and respect for our diversity.

May God keep you and inspire you.

REPLY OF HER EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL TO THE ADDRESS OF THE PRIME MINISTER

[Translation]

Prime Minister,

In accepting the high office of Governor General of Canada, I will be honoured to convey to Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, who has kindly agreed to my nomination, the message which you have entrusted to me, and with it, the assurance of the respect and affection of all Canadians.

I have been deeply touched by your words, Prime Minister. They have illustrated and emphasized your attachment to fundamental values and the importance which you place on the defence of rights and the assurance of equality. They are a testimony to the progress you have always sought to promote and preserve and to your love of this country. I also wish to thank you for having so sincerely and persuasively expressed your ideas on the significant contribution of Canadian women to the life and progress of our society.

[English]

In responding to that trust which you have conferred upon me, I follow in the footsteps of the multitude of women who, for 450 years, have served as the inspiration, and to a large degree, the artisans of this nation; those women by whose hands we have prospered and for whose spirit we have been praised. In the days and weeks ahead I will commit my efforts to the promotion of those ideals of unity, brotherhood and peace. Even then, my determination and commitment are but a small fraction and reflection of the many gestures of good will and affection I have received, and to all I am profoundly grateful.

We live in a vast land of plenty which has never been laid waste by natural or political catastrophe. Though we have our problems, they are not as tragic as those faced by people who live in destitution, by the hundreds of millions of human beings pushed to the brink of despair. We go where we like without anyone challenging our right to do so, we say what we like without anyone imposing a totalitarian philosophy or system upon us. Each person is free to follow their own star, hold whatever beliefs they choose, express their ideas and opinions without fear; goods move freely, and each individual can share in them. We are not immune to human suffering, but in Canada it is not as deep-rooted and pervasive as the heart-rending misery elsewhere in the world. Although we have to work hard, we do so in safety, and we have never been denied the right to hope.

[Translation]

It is for this reason that, from the smallest family unit to the largest gathering of our national community, we must forge a common purpose that will reinforce good will, bring together all our energies and proclaim the values we have inherited. These values are a reflection, first, of the achievements of our history, of the infinitely varied traditions preserved by our ethnic groups; in a more dynamic way, they are reflected in the long-standing effort by our nation to move along the path of modernization toward a humanism which will add to the common heritage so patiently and painstakingly built up over the years.

We have inherited a vast territory with well-established institutions, boundless resources and material wealth acquired at great sacrifice by those who have gone before, and it is our duty to fashion new tools for new hands; to go beyond our immediate horizons in search of a broader perspective; to scale new and as yet unimagined heights; and to move more quickly and surely toward the ultimate goal of expanding the potential of both the individual and the community. We must build in Canada a life to which people are not merely resigned but in which they will wish to participate fully.

[English]

Who are we and what do we wish to become? The answer is obvious. Despite our varied ethnic and racial origins we are Canadians determined to carry on the building of a great nation. We must go beyond even this ambition and aspire to set an example for the world by a deep involvement in global reconstruction, a reconstruction whose final objective is peace.

Peace is the ultimate goal from which we cannot digress as long as the world is inhabited by starving, mistreated people who are victims of the selfishness, indifference and cruelty of others. Peace should be our rallying cry, our foremost cause, and the most compelling objective of our common action.

Our commitment to peace must govern our state of mind and determine our approach to life and to work. This cannot be achieved in a nation of polarized thought and divided action. The desire for unity is, beyond doubt, the factor which inspires people to come together to create a truly human community.

In this spirit, we are fond of describing Canada as one big family. But what do we mean by family: a socio-political and cultural reality, an economic situation, a political status. All of these, of course, and also, I would hope, a common purpose to shape together the destiny of every member of the community. This can only be realized if we go beyond our borders and reach out to other nations to share with them the benefits of our efforts and research.

History and geography have determined where and how we live. We are aware how the challenges and obstacles they have provided have influenced our attitudes and our behaviour. What have we achieved through our efforts? I believe that after more than three centuries, our national character is beginning to take shape. All that remains is a final delineation of the traits by which other nations identify us. As Canadians in North America, historically and culturally linked to our countries of origin, we have won the right to determine our own future and to play a role on the international scene.

[Translation]

Should not our role be to return to fundamental values, to adapt to new ways of life, to review the basis of our private and public code of ethics and to utilize for the benefit of all the marvelous products of new technology. In approaching the new frontiers made possible by modern technology we must ensure that man does not become servant to the machine, but rather its master.

This, it seems to me, is a spiritual goal that can transcend mere insular nationalism and inspire us with the ideal of making the human adventure meaningful and filled with enthusiasm and hope. If Valéry was right when he said "we now know that civilizations are mortal", we should also realize that each civilization bears within it the seeds of its own regeneration and transformation.

This is the reason I have every confidence in my fellow human beings and in man's potential and it is this that impels me to make an urgent appeal to my fellow Canadians to reach out to each other. If they would only remember that without co-operation, any attempts at communication and understanding will produce only meaningless encounters and temporary truces.

[English]

As we approach the end of this century, we are not immune to the crises that buffet our world and threaten its stability. The effects of this turmoil will be suffered even more tragically by the next generation; living as they will in apocalyptic times when virtually everything will be subject to question. We have made great material progress and worked hard to secure this legacy for our children. We now have more money and more leisure time. Despite this fact, everything around us shows signs of impatience. Weakened by advertising, persuaded to claim, to demand, to receive and to take more, we act far too often like children who leave their broken toys to demand new and more exciting ones capable of rousing them from their state of torpid satiation.

Our mistake lies in our erroneous definition of humanity and the meaning of happiness. We have been seeking such happiness beyond the rainbow and it is now time to step back and reflect calmly, to take stock of our resources so that we can again set out on a voyage of discovery and find the meaning of the human journey.

When I ponder on the youth of this country, I am filled with pride and confidence. Their search for knowledge, their need for involvement, their dynamic nature and their strength of conviction assure us that in their own time they will carry out their role in determining the future. Their attitude shows us that they will be willing to accept the responsibility of mastering their own fate.

The day will come when they will replace us, when those whom we have tried to help will leave the paths we have laid out and go another way to build the city according to their own plans and to meet the new requirements of a new age. Would it not show an unforgiveable arrogance and lack of foresight on our part to try to forestall criticism of us at all costs by contriving to build and mortgage a world for the future which is not ours to create? There is a universal law that governs the progress of civilizations: one generation lays its stone, the next contributes another and, if the building material is always the same, the whole will reflect the vision, spirit and will of those who, one after the other, worked and died to build it. Although we have an obligation to build for future generations, we must not try to take their place and, in our feverish activity, give the impression that we do not trust them to be inventive and resourceful in their turn. We must prepare them for life, but we could be wrong to try to live their lives for them according to a model of our making.

As for myself, I have great faith in the youth of today. My past experience working with youth associations and my daily encounters with young people have revealed to me their spirit and potential. I am certain that when their time comes they will take up the challenge and shoulder it with success. As you yourself have said, Prime Minister, there are no insoluble problems, there are no situations that we cannot improve or correct if we unite our efforts; what we need to do is to talk to each other, to work together intelligently and honestly and let time, "the great sculptor", as Marguerite Yourcenar has so aptly put it, shape and refine the structure of our Canadian federation.

[Translation]

I believe in the strength of our people, in our collective strength, and in the power to recreate society through the practice of those time-tested virtues that have always led people to surpass themselves and give the full measure of their faith, wisdom and courage. We must practise these virtues together. My task, which I take on publicly before you, is to become better acquainted with my countrymen, to meet with them, to seek them out wherever they are in this great land, and to instil in them the confidence that makes and seals destinies. Our common task is to promote tolerance, to help each other, and to reject imitations of freedom. This is the price of our happiness, but happiness will never be found in the spirit of "every man for himself"; it requires that we share our good fortune as Canadians so that we might benefit the many peoples of the world.

To carry out my duties, I need the help of each and every one of you now and in the future. We must be united in spirit if we are to go forward in unity and brotherhood on the exhilarating road that Providence has so generously laid out before us. As Ecclesiasticus says:

"... as the governor is, so will be the inhabitants of his city." (Eccl. 10:2)

I ask for your support in the days ahead. We share with each other a common inspiration for we have all at one time experienced the eternal truth expressed in the words of the psalm:

"If Yaweh does not build the house, in vain the masons toil..." (Ps. 127:1)

INDUSTRY

LOSS OF UNITED STATES MILITARY ORDER TO PORT COLBORNE PLANT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that yet another plant in my riding may be forced to shut down or lay off workers due to the loss of a market for its products. The company in question, Port Colborne Forgings, was informed recently that forgings from the company destined for use by the United States military would no longer be required as of May 24. This came about as a result of a directive issued by the American Government which indicated, essentially, that as of that date no defence contracts were to be let to companies outside the United States. This ruling affects a number of companies in Canada doing related work.

For the City of Port Colborne this sudden and arbitrary decision could mean the loss of another 25 jobs in a community already badly shaken by massive lay-offs at Inco. As their federal Member of Parliament I ask, on behalf of the company and the community, that officials from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Department of External Affairs take immediate action to ensure that this directive is softened or changed. By so doing, we could ensure that Canadian companies continue to be able to export products for the United States defence market, especially in light of the fact that we in this country are co-operating with our neighbours to the South in fulfilling our treaty obligations under NATO and NORAD.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CALL FOR REPEAL OF LEGISLATION DISCRIMINATING AGAINST WOMEN

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on the issue of Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act. I urge the Government to proceed with its stated commitment to repeal this flagrant discriminatory provision. I know I speak for all women of Canada, and indeed for all women in the House regardless of party affiliations. We must not be deterred from rectifying this long-standing historic wrong committed against Indian women. I call upon the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), and upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), to follow through on this promise. I call upon them to act immediately to repeal Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—DENIAL OF EMIGRATION TO JEWS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week members of all Parties in the House took part in hearings on the dreadful situation of Soviet Jews. Quite simply, official anti-semitism has been raised to the level of state religion in a godless society.

First, of an estimated three million Jews in the Soviet Union, an estimated 400,000 have made at least an initial attempt to leave. In 1979, 51,000 were permitted to do so, but during 1983 only 1,344 were allowed.

Second, since the Soviet Union signed the Helsinki Agreement, which includes the right to emigrate, the situation of Soviet Jews has actually deteriorated. Applicants face arbitrary dismissal from work or university, persecution of their children, telephone disconnections, non-receipt of mail, separation of families, and the constant risk of imprisonment. We heard eloquent case histories on Tuesday about Vladimir Slepak, Iosif Begun, and others.

One obvious conclusion I reached was that Canada must have a more human rights oriented foreign policy. The case of human rights cannot be served anywhere by silence. We, as legislators, must show more courage and leadership to our fellow countrymen on this important issue in the future.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DISAGREEMENT AMONG NATIVE ORGANIZATIONS ON WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, today in Edmonton the Assembly of First Nations is meeting with the Native Women's Association of Canada to discuss a most discriminatory Section of the Indian Act, namely, Section 12(1)(b). Mention has been made of this particular Section already today.

S.O. 21

As Chairman of the Subcommittee on Indian Women and the Indian Act, it is of great concern to me that changes to this Section of the Indian Act might not be forthcoming as a result of disagreements among various Indian organizations.

Section 12(1)(b) legalizes discrimination, and it must be changed. It has caused pain and suffering for many Indian women who have lost their Indian status upon marrying non-Indians. These women and their children have been separated from their families, forced to leave their homes on reserves, and have lost all benefits accorded to our native people.

It is my hope that these differences will be resolved, and that legislation will be forthcoming to correct this most unjust treatment of Canada's native women.

FINANCE

CORPORATE TAX SYSTEM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in an effort to reduce the federal deficit, two approaches have apparently been overlooked by the Liberals and the Conservatives. One reason we have such a large deficit is because we offer billions of dollars in grants each year to domestic and foreign corporations operating in Canada. For example, is it not time to ask whether it is necessary to give out billions of dollars in bribes to oil companies to entice them to explore for oil and gas in our frontier areas? PIP grants are corporate financial hand-outs on a scale not found anywhere else in the world. Is it not time to stop this corporate giveaway madness?

If we hope to reduce the deficit, why not collect taxes which are rightfully due to the federal coffers? The billions of dollars of deferred corporate taxes virtually equal the federal deficit. If we had a fair tax system where every individual and every corporation paid their fair share of taxes, our deficit would be virtually eliminated. Therefore, if we are genuinely concerned about the deficit situation facing Canadians, let us stop the corporate welfare system and close tax loopholes, rather than raise personal income taxes and eliminate the universality of social programs.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, March 23, 1984, I read to the House excerpts from a letter which we thought had been written by Bob Nixon, former Leader of the Ontario Liberal Party, to John Turner. The House will remember that the letter referred to the fact that turn around Turner had quit as an MP and had gone on to notoriety and fortune as a Bay Street lawyer. The letter also referred to turn around Turner's lack of familiarity with modern media techniques. The letter did not refer to his support for Bill 101 in Quebec. That came later, followed by the usual clarifications.

Mr. Nixon has since written to me to deny writing the letter. We do not know who would write such a letter, but MPs from ridings such as Trinity and Kitchener would probably suspect one of Jimmy Coutts' backroom operators. In any event, Mr. Nixon did not write the letter and I want to dispel any rumour that he, along with most provincial Liberals, is annoyed at turn around Turner for quitting in the middle of the 1975 Ontario election campaign. The fact that Mr. Nixon is supporting the Minister of Energy (Mr. Chrétien) rather than turn around Turner in the leadership campaign is, of course, coincidental.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

POST OFFICE BOX RENTAL CHARGES IN SMALL COMMUNITIES

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, the Town Council of Souris in my constituency recently passed a resolution calling on the Canada Post Corporation to "institute a less discriminatory system of mail delivery in smaller centres". This resolution was brought about, in part, by the representations of a local resident, Mr. Bert Smith, who has for some time been making a strong case against the levying of rental charges for post office boxes in small communities.

The people of Souris, along with citizens of other small communities, feel they are being discriminated against by Canada Post. Unlike the residents of larger communities, they do not enjoy free home mail delivery; instead, they have to make their way to the post office to pick up their mail from post office boxes for which they must pay rent. The President of Canada Post recently explained to me in writing that those who rent post office boxes in small towns are buying a service which is beyond the so-called basic Canada Post service. I find that explanation difficult to accept.

The bottom line is that home delivery is preferable by most people's standards, and it is free, while picking up one's mail at a post office box is far less convenient and it costs money. I ask the Minister responsible for Canada Post to abolish post office box rental fees in small communities in order to rectify what is now very clearly an inequitable situation.

VIA RAIL

PROPOSAL TO DECLARE FLAG STOP AT RAYMORE, SASK.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, after nearly two years' absence VIA Rail service is going to be re-established between Winnipeg, Melville, Saskatoon, and Edmonton on June 3. The Town of Raymore, along with the support of a great many surrounding towns and villages, has proposed to VIA Rail that Raymore be declared a flag stop for those passengers who want to go east to Melville or beyond, or west to Saskatoon or beyond. Since tickets have to be purchased in advance, computer notification to the engine crew would not be a problem.

Raymore is a point through which a lot of bus traffic passes each day. The users of the bus tend to be the same clientele who would use the train, except that they prefer to use trains for extended voyages. The connection and timing of the current bus schedule and the proposed train schedule are close enough to make Raymore a logical connection point between the two transportation modes.

Bus passengers from a collection area as far away as Norquay, Hudson Bay, Melfort, Tisdale, Watson, Wynyard, Wadena and points in between, come through Raymore and would have access to VIA Rail if their application currently before the CTC is accepted. I urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) to look with approval at this sensible proposal for an inter-modal connection at Raymore in order that service to the residents of communities in the Raymore passenger service area be improved.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED TAX DEDUCTIBILITY SCHEME FOR HOME OWNERS

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the home owners of Canada need a break. The home owners are the only property owners in Canada who cannot deduct property taxes paid to a municipal Government from income, for calculating both the federal and provincial income taxes. This is unfair. This is not equitable. This taxing practice is unjust. This must be changed so that no taxpayer in Canada will be forced to pay income taxes on municipal taxes paid. Surely it is unjust to classify municipal taxes paid on home ownership as income for both federal and provincial income tax purposes.

• (1415)

The next federal Government, whatever its political colour, should make property taxes paid on the principal place of residence deductible when calculating income tax. To provide fairness between home owners, a maximum limit of $500, or even up to $1,000, may be placed on such deductions.

If the federal Government does not have the sense of justice to do this, I would then call on the provincial Governments to lead the way and provide deductibility when calculating provincial income taxes. Indeed, I urge and challenge the provincial Government of Alberta to lead the way toward fairness and justice in this regard.

NATIONAL REVENUE

PAYMENT OF DISPUTED TAXES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members of the House will know, for three months now the Minister of National Revenue has had a stable of high-priced flacks on the public payroll who are looking for ways to improve the image of the Department of National Revenue. We on this side of the House are more concerned about how to improve the Department's treatment of taxpayers than about how to improve the Department's image. We have made some 76 recommendations for ways to do that. I would like to ask the Minister about one of those recommendations.

Will the Minister give Canadian taxpayers the assurance that, in future, disputed amounts of taxes payable that have been reassessed will not have to be paid until the taxpayer has had a chance to have a fair hearing?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that a procedure already exists under which the tax payer does not have to pay the amount of tax payable right away if he is appealing his assessment. In fact, the tax payer can negotiate a guarantee with the Department of Revenue which will be accepted in lieu of case payment of the amount payable in the notice of assessment, in case of an appeal. One of the proposals in the report prepared by the committee chaired by the Hon. Member seeks to change completely our present practice and to go much further.

As I have said previously to the Hon. Member, the proposal has a number of implications, an important one being that there would be a substantial increase in the number of appeals and in the amount of tax payable, which is already very high.

However, and I have had occasion to discuss this with the Hon. Member, perhaps we could add to this mechanism a provision that would further improve the procedure. However, this recommendation, with others, is still being examined within the Department. I would like to repeat that instead of paying the full amount when there is an appeal, the tax payer can negotiate with the Department to provide a satisfactory guarantee as a form of insurance for the amount owing to the Crown.

[English]

ISSUANCE OF RUBBER STAMPED GARNISHEE ORDERS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister about another of the task force's recommendations. The task force also pointed out that low-level collections officers in the Department with very little supervision were using rubber stamps to authorize garnishee orders to seize people's pay cheques and bank accounts. Is the Minister prepared to take away those rubber stamps and ensure that, in future, all garnishee orders to seize a person's pay cheque and bank account must be signed by a senior official of the Department?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, steps have also been taken to deal with this particular problem, and I can assure the Hon. Member and Canadian tax payers that no garnishee orders are issued until a thorough review at management level has taken place, and often, in cases where the garnishee order is very substantial, at headquarters here in Ottawa. However, I may point out to the Hon. Member that in the case of occurrences in isolated areas, sometimes authorization has been given before the officer leaves the office. However, this happens only in exceptional circumstances and under direction of Revenue Office Managers.

[English]

REQUEST THAT FORMER EMPLOYEE BE REINSTATED

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that in December a highly respected official of the Department who worked in the Kitchener district office, Mr. Darryl Cruickshank, resigned his job in order to press for better treatment of taxpayers. Since that time he has been unemployed. In view of the fact that even the Department now acknowledges that the charges that were made by Mr. Cruickshank were correct, will the Minister acknowledge Mr. Cruickshank's courage and integrity by requesting him to rejoin the Department and putting Mr. Cruickshank's talents to use in improving service to the taxpayers?

● (1420)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think that if Mr. Cruickshank is interested in working again for the Department, he can let us know through the usual channels. I think it is quite understandable that at a given point and for a given period a person may feel uncomfortable in his work, for reasons that may be entirely justified. I am sure that if he offers his services, his offer will be given very serious consideration by the Department.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE COMMUNICATIONS SPECIALISTS' REPORT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister, who would want Canadians to believe that his attitude and that of the Department have changed. My question may help in that regard.

The press reports that the draft report of his communications specialists appears to be ready. Will the Minister guarantee to the House that that report, which appears to suggest that public perception of Revenue Canada is more important than improving services, will be placed before Parliament in its entirety, unexpurgated, along with the Minister's responses and comments, so that Parliament may understand whether the attitudes and behaviour will truly change, or whether we will in fact be engaged in another public relations scam to try to persuade Canadians that something has changed which has not really changed?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should think that the concept of attitude—and surely the Hon. Member will agree with me—is relative and applies to a group of individuals as well as to other groups. An attitude is not unlike a perception, and quite often a perception leads to changes in attitudes. I would not want him to minimize the significance of attitudes and perceptions.

As to the report of the communications group, I have already told the House that I will make that report public, and I will be pleased to do so as soon as I get the final report.

[English]

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF AUDITORS' TRAINING FILMS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, when asked earlier about the films entitled "Investigative Approach to Auditing", the Minister said that he would make no decision about those films until the task force had reported. Given that the report at least appears to be in draft form, which I presume he has seen, is he finally ready to exercise his ministerial responsibilities and withdraw those films which have the effect of persuading the people in his Department that taxpayers are not honest citizens? Will he now take his responsibility and tell the House today that those films have no place in the training of auditors in this country?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions on that subject with my senior officials and I can assure the Hon. Member that the various training aids we use will be reconsidered so as to reflect a much more positive approach based on principles of education and respect for rights, while at the same time taking into account the responsibilities of the taxpayers.

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

UNITED STATES' PROPOSED SALE OF OIL DRILLING LEASES OFF CANADA'S WEST COAST

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns a decision by the United States Department of the Interior to put up part of Canada for sale. I refer to approximately 400 square miles of land off the northern coast of British Columbia.

As the Prime Minister is aware, in 1903 there was an International Boundary Tribunal, half of whose members were Americans, which unanimously agreed that the West Coast Canada-U.S. border should be the 54.40 latitude. The land in question that the Americans are now trying to sell, after 81 years of accepting this boundary, is clearly within Canadian territory.

My question concerns the possible immediate problem if this land is sold in the United States to an oil company. An immediate, expensive, conflict-laden dispute will arise. In light of this, will the Prime Minister contact President Reagan as soon as possible to make it clear that the land that the Americans are trying to sell belongs to the people of Canada?

● (1425)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is not talking of the land but of the seabed. If that is the case, he will know there is a dispute in those waters, and we have been trying to resolve it with the United States. I understand the Department of External Affairs has lodged a protest against this unilateral action by the U.S. I do not think the action, as I recall it, goes to the extent of the Hon. Member's description of putting up the land for sale. I think there is a dispute on the sense of what the Americans have done, and we have protested it. I do not see any need to phone President Reagan at this stage.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am a little disturbed at the rather complacent attitude taken by the Prime Minister. I tell him that the land is up for sale—no question about that. It could be purchased by an oil company any time in the next week. In fact part of the territory in dispute—not by us because we claim it as our territory—has been sold. They have sold part of the seabed in question to oil companies, and we do not know if part of it is land that belongs to Canada or if they simply sold their own territory.

Does the Prime Minister think it is adequate to have a very junior official in the Department of External Affairs file a softly worded expression of concern with his equivalent low level official in the U.S.? Why is the important question of Canadian sovereignty not dealt with where it should be, on a head of Government to head of Government basis, namely, through the Prime Minister correctly informing President Reagan of what the reality is?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we lodged a protest in the usual way with the Americans. If I were to phone President Reagan, or he were to phone me, every time there is a disagreement on something, we would spend all our time talking to each other. We have always managed our relationship with the United States well, and we will continue to do so. There is obviously some disagreement, but I think the Hon. Member is panicking a little bit if he thinks the United States is selling part of Canada. I wish he would come to his senses. We all recall the hucksters selling the Brooklyn Bridge. I want to tell the Hon. Member that if he bought the Brooklyn Bridge he would not have a clear title, nor would anyone who bought Canada's land.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about the Brooklyn Bridge. We are talking about part of Canada, and it is time the Prime Minister understood that.

CANADA-UNITED STATES UNDERSTANDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has said that the Government of Canada wants to deal reasonably, using normal procedures, with the Americans. Does he realize that the Americans have broken a clear understanding made last year? As part of the agreement to settle the East Coast dispute, it was agreed by the Americans and Canadians not to take any action in any other area which might come under dispute until that was resolved by the World Court in The Hague. The Americans have now blatantly broken that understanding, and the Prime Minister is idly sitting there, amused, saying we ought not to be concerned. Well, we are concerned. Why does he not speak up for Canadian interests?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the concern of the Hon. Member is at least several days late. This has been debated in this House. Almost a week ago I remember hearing the Minister of State for External Relations answering this question and referring indeed to the agreement we reached on the East Coast with the U.S. Administration. I am glad the Hon. Member and his Party are catching up to this fact. We have dealt with it already. We have dealt with it in Washington, and we are watching the situation.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS CONCERNING FORMER BILL S-31

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who must be aware of the strong opposition of Quebecers to Bill S-31. The entire Province of Quebec has voiced its opposition to the introduction of such a Bill because it is basically aimed at hamstringing Quebec's Caisse de dépôt et placement and drastically restricting the economic field of operations of many millions, of hundreds of thousands of young French-speaking Quebecers. Recently, Liberal Party leadership candidate John Turner said he was in favour of such a Bill. Does the Government intend to bring that measure back before the House of Commons and the Senate of Canada?

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER GIVE DETAILS

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the negative impact of such a Bill on Quebec's Caisse de dépôt et placement as well as on 3 million Quebecers is well known. Considering that the Minister supports Mr. Turner in his bid for the leadership, could we know whether the subject of Bill S-31 was raised, because it is basically an anti-Quebec and anti-francophone Bill? I can assure her that if it is brought back, we will make known our strong opposition to the adoption of that Bill. Was there any reference to that Bill in her discussions with Mr. Turner? That is what we would like to know.

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I find the rhetoric of the Leader of the Opposition absolutely appalling. Bill S-31 was in the interest of Canadians. It was not anti-Quebec. I would suggest to him that if he is to quote the men who are running for the leadership of the Liberal Party, he should follow these quotes more accurately. I believe that Mr. Turner said that the Bill was dead but the problem remained.

[Translation]

DEMAND FOR MINISTER'S OPINION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the question of the Leader of the Official Opposition is quite relevant. Keeping in mind the fact that the official CPR spokesman, Mr. Turner, did say that he would consider re-introducing that Bill before the House if he were chosen to lead the Liberal Party of Canada, could the Minister tell us whether she has raised that issue with John Turner and, if so, what was the Minister's opinion?

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I find it very amusing that Members of the Opposition are trying to breath some life into a dead issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More! More!

Mrs. Erola: It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that these people are desperately seeking a cause and are searching far and wide to find an issue. This has been something of a backburner issue for some time. I suggest that they look at some of the issues which are before Canadians and are of real interest to Canadians. I suggest that they fight the election on the real issues.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Pierre, get up and defend John Turner.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Canadian voters are not stupid! Practically at the same time, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the spokesman for Canadian Pacific, Mr. Turner, both said that they intended to discuss again and re-introduce a measure similar to Bill S-31. Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased to hear the Minister say in the House that the Government has no such intention. Would the Minister tell us whether she is prepared to silence both Mr. Turner and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with respect to a Bill which will not be brought back before the House?

Mr. Speaker: I must point out to the Hon. Member that such a question has nothing to do with the Minister's responsibilities.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

REQUEST FOR EARLY PASSAGE OF AMENDING BILL

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board in his capacity as a co-sponsor of Bill C-34 which was introduced yesterday. There is widespread skepticism with respect to the timing of the introduction of Bill C-34 in the dying weeks of this session, if not this Parliament. The Minister of Labour is absent today and cannot answer any questions with respect to that Bill. Both my Party and the Conservatives are prepared to hasten the passage of this Bill. Therefore, would the President of the Treasury Board give a commitment to the House that the Government will ensure that Bill C-34 will come on stream very quickly and will be passed in all stages in this session, or in this Parliament, before the end of June?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the support of my hon. friend for this very important initiative of the Liberal Government which is carrying out another commitment in the Throne Speech of last December. The Minister of Labour is not here today but I believe he went directly from the press conference after the tabling of the Bill yesterday to the Labour Committee, to answer questions about the Bill. I am sure he will be prepared to do the same in the House as the Bill is debated.

I have noticed an interesting coalition. My hon. friend is speaking for both his Party and the Conservatives. I am sure the House Leader has listened attentively to this pledge of support. I hope this pledge of support will be reflected by the organization of House business in order that this important Liberal initiative will soon become law.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Government House Leader. Will he echo the answer of the President of the Treasury Board and give an undertaking today that Bill C-34 will pass all stages in this House and the other place before the end of June?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It will be helpful if the Opposition Parties help me to live up to that commitment. A very short debate would make it easier for us to dispose of this Bill. Any co-operation on any Bill on the Order Paper will be most welcome. They are all priorities. We are willing to negotiate any legislation in order to facilitate their adoption. This Bill is included in that. However, it is not only up to the Government to ensure the Bill passes through all stages. We need a lot of co-operation from the other side of the House, and I am expecting it.

ONTARIO-QUEBEC MARKETING OF TOMATOES

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Last year Ontario producers experienced a disruption of the traditional marketing of tomatoes to Quebec due to the raising of the four litre basket issue by Quebec. As a result of passage of Privy Council Order 2795 in 1983, the bookkeeping has been done at the federal level. Could he give assurances to the producers of Ontario that Quebec does not intend to raise that issue again this year? If he cannot give that assurance, will he undertake to enter into negotiations with his contemporaries in Quebec immediately to assure that we will have no such problem this year?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the Member is correct in his assumption that all the regulations have been passed according to the rules and laws by which we must abide. All the other provinces are accepting this. Last year the Province of Quebec made objections because it felt the regulations had not been properly passed. If Quebec does not adhere to the regulations this year, I am told it will be contravening interprovincial trade. We are making that kind of representation. Our officials tell me that officials in Quebec are in agreement but they have to get approval of their Minister, and are following that up today.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

ROLE OF PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice who, I assume, is away on his leadership campaign, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Justice who, I believe, is the Solicitor General. Has the Privacy Commissioner, Mr. John Grace, who is a servant of this House and not of the Government, been giving legal or procedural advice to the Government or to Departments on how to refuse the release of records and information to citizens?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly answer for my own relationship with him that I am not aware of any circumstances in which he has given advice to my Ministry. I will take the question as notice for my colleague. Let me remind the Hon. Member of the opportunity available, when the report of the Commissioner is dealt with, for Members of the House to put questions directly to the official concerned. May I remind the Hon. Member also of the support the Opposition gave for the process whereby this report is made directly to Parliament so that a Minister will not be answerable for the Commissioner in circumstances like those about which the Hon. Member has just posed his question.

AUTHORITY FOR TENDERING ADVICE TO DEPARTMENTS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. When Members of the House passed that weakened, watered down government Bill, they expected that the Privacy Commissioner was to be on the side of the citizen, not of the Government.

The very serious allegation has been made in the national press today that the Department of Immigration, for one, has been the recipient of legal and procedural advice from the Privacy Commissioner which has allowed that particular Department to turn down legitimate requests for records or documentation. My question to the Minister, who has been the beneficiary of this alleged advice, is simply: under what statutory authority would the Privacy Commissioner be able to give to him or to his departmental officials such procedural or legal advice?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's question is not at all clear to me. If he could be more specific, I would be happy to try to provide him with the information he is seeking.

PRIVACY COMMISSIONER'S POWERS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, the allegation has been made today in the national press that a person now resident in Canada has had his request turned down for information or documentation from the Department of Immigration, and the Department of Immigration has had to be led, hand in hand, by the Privacy Commissioner on how to turn down that request. My question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What statutory authority has the Privacy Commissioner, Mr. John Grace, who is a servant of this House, not of the Government, to give the Minister of Immigration, or his civil servants, that type of procedural or legal advice?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Maybe, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman should address his inquiry to the Privacy Commissioner.

Mr. McCuish: And you want to be leader?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND—PROGRAM TO ASSIST SALE OF DASH-8 AIRCRAFT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. It is further to a question asked in the House by my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Peterborough and the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills, regarding the possible loss of Dash-8 sales to three Canadian domestic airlines. The report that was leaked to a reporter for The Globe and Mail some weeks ago made reference to a program administered by his Department, which would provide financial support in the sale of Dash-8 aircraft to domestic airlines. Would the Minister outline to the House what the status is of that program, and explain why the program is not being used now to help these three airlines which are very close to purchasing competing aircraft from foreign suppliers?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the question asked by the Hon. Member's colleagues that he alluded to in his question. We are looking at the possibility of putting in place a financing program for the sale of a Dash-8, maybe similar to the Enterprise Development Program we put forward for the sale of the Dash-7 for North American sales.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister must know that these sales are very close to being made to competing airlines from other countries. Surely he understands that there could not be a more important time in the life of de Havilland, when 300 workers are being laid off and people are asking many questions about the future of the aircraft company.

APPLICATION OF PROPOSED PROGRAM

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, why is the Government prepared to commit these moneys on paper yet it is not prepared to follow through with its actions now to save those jobs, and to save the company at the most critical point in its history?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): First, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see the conversion of the Hon. Member to supporting de Havilland and the Dash-8 aircraft. That is very welcome on this side, and I am sure is welcomed by all employees of de Havilland.

With respect to something that was allegedly done on paper, Mr. Speaker, I have never seen the paper to which the Hon. Member refers, but I will make sure he is one of the first to know, if and when we decide to put a financing program forward.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF MONEY SEIZED FROM TESLIN INDIAN BAND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. The Yukon Territorial Government owed the Teslin Indian Band some $100,000 for land which the Band surrendered to the Government in 1981, but $76,000 of that money was turned over to Revenue Canada, which had issued a garnishee order against the Teslin Slashing Company.

Considering that the Teslin Slashing Company is owned by individual band members, not by the Indian Band itself, and considering that the Yukon territorial Government now admits its mistake in helping Revenue Canada seize this money, will the Minister explain what grounds his Department had for seizing this money from the Teslin Indian Band? Will he order immediate restitution of this money wrongfully taken from a group of people with very slender financial resources and suffering 75 per cent unemployment?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in his question the Hon. Member said that the Yukon Government had erred. I imagine that if the situation was not particularly clear to the Yukon Government, it might not be clear either to the Department of National Revenue. However, I shall certainly review the facts and shall then be in a position to explain the Department's position to the Hon. Member.

[English]

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer and for promising to look into this matter.

SUPREME COURT DECISION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in January, 1983, the Supreme Court ruled in the Nowegijick case that income paid by an employer situated on an Indian reserve was exempt from taxation. Since the head office of the Teslin Slashing Company is located on the reserve, does the Minister agree that the Supreme Court decision should apply in that case, and will he instruct his Department to make sure that the decision of the Supreme Court will be followed in all cases so that Indian Bands and Indian companies are not further harassed?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that we in the Department of National Revenue applied the decision of the Supreme Court in the Nowegijick case for all Indians working for companies which have their head offices on reserves, since that decision came down.

FISHERIES

CANADA-U.S.S.R. FISHING AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister of Fisheries, in co-operation with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has proudly announced a new fishing agreement with the U.S.S.R. under which the Russians will purchase $12 million worth of our fish products while they are permitted to catch an estimated $50 million worth of groundfish off the Newfoundland coast.

Fish processors in Newfoundland, and the Newfoundland Government, as a result of this agreement, are now protesting that the oriental market for their products will be seriously undermined, causing further unemployment. Why did the Minister take this action without consultation with the Government of Newfoundland, and without consultation with the fishing industry, when it is not in the interests of the people of Newfoundland and the fishermen of that province?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased the Hon. Member has asked this question. During the negotiations with the U.S.S.R., the industry and the various provincial Governments, particularly the Government of Newfoundland, were constantly aware of the substance of the negotiations. I am happy to report to the Hon. Member that during the entire negotiations the representatives of the Government of Newfoundland never expressed any objection whatsoever to the negotiations.

The Hon. Member for St. John's West has a drydock in his riding, and the U.S.S.R. has been boycotting his shipyard. At the moment we signed the agreement, the U.S.S.R. Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Kamentsev, told me that he would give immediate instructions that U.S.S.R. vessels be repaired and maintained at that St. John's shipyard. After seeing the encouragement of the Hon. Member for St. John's West, I realize he is on my side.

NETTING OF CAPELIN—EFFECT ON COD AND HADDOCK CATCHES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's statement in response to my question is just about 360 degrees off when compared with the telegram I have in my possession from fishermen of Newfoundland.

In view of the fact that a small mesh net will have to be placed inside the cod end of the Soviet nets in order to catch capelin, how many tonnes of cod or haddock, which follow the capelin, will be caught as incidental catches over and above the 100,200 tonnes of silver hake, capelin, round-nosed grenadiers and argentines which he is permitting the Soviets to catch?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, because the Hon. Member has difficulty believing what I tell him, I should like to re-emphasize that during the entire negotiations the Government of Newfoundland had an official present. I am as surprised as, and perhaps even more so than, the Hon. Member. If the Government of Newfoundland has the slightest objection, why did its officials never bother to express it to my officials or me?

As for the species allocated to the U.S.S.R., they are strictly resources which are surplus to Canadian needs. This means that Canadian fishermen are not interested in catching these species.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It relates to the discussions with pharmaceutical companies that want a certain period of licensing for drugs in order to recover costs, and to the generic companies that are trying to put drugs on the market at costs less than those of the pharmaceutical companies.

The Minister will be aware that in recent days an agreement has been worked out in the United States whereby a modus operandi can be established. In view of the fact that the Minister has established a task force, and in view of that agreement in the United States, is the Minister considering that we should move more quickly so that we might not only develop research and development in pharmaceuticals in Canada but also manufacture them?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I should like to correct a statement which was made by the Hon. Member. It is not a task force. It is a commission of inquiry headed by Dr. Eastman. I am sure the situation in the United States is one which he will observe very carefully and report on decisions and recommendations.

Oral Questions

COMMISSION OF INQUIRY—LENGTH OF PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. She is aware that various attempts have been made in Canada to develop a pharmaceutical industry beyond what we now have, and to try to recover not only jobs but some of the costs which are obviously involved in the health care field. It is an area in which we can in fact create jobs.

In view of the fact that this matter is evolving very quickly, could the Minister instruct that the time period of this inquiry be shortened so that, once again, Canadians do not find out that much of the industry and much of the investment have already gone by the time the decision has been made?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, these interests were balanced very carefully when it was decided that we would indeed have a commission of inquiry. For that very reason the commission of inquiry will take only six months. We hope that six-month period will be sufficient to provide us with the information required to give us the correct course to follow, one which will provide for increased research and development and one which will provide Canadians with the proper consumer protection they expect.

METRIC CONVERSION

LABELLING OF FERTILIZER AND FARM CHEMICALS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He will be aware that his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, recently announced that grocery stores will be able to use both metric and imperial units in their advertising as a matter of public convenience. Will the Minister prevail upon his colleague to permit dual labelling of agricultural fertilizers and chemicals as a safety precaution to avoid costly mistakes? Would the Minister consider doing that on behalf of Canadian farmers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member intimates by his question that there have been a lot of mistakes as a result of the use of metric. There have not been any more mistakes with metric than there had been with the old imperial system.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: They make a lot of noise, but the record shows that there have not been any more mistakes. There were mistakes with improper use, especially before commercial operators were licensed to apply the product by the provinces. When they are using that as an excuse, it is to change the labelling or to have it in both. According to the surveys, it would be more confusing to have dual labelling. For example, a different operator of a machine on the next day may have to go from metric to imperial and make a mistake, whereas if it is one system the statistics show that it is safer. At the present time agriculture is 87 per cent metric.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is obvious the Minister of Agriculture is out of touch. I think he needs to go back to the land.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR DUAL MEASUREMENT LABELLING SYSTEM

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Would she take this matter under advisement and remove the discrimination which exists for farmers, particularly in view of the dangers and the costly mistakes as a result of the confusion arising from metric labelling only, and given the fact that most machinery and equipment are gauged in the imperial system? Would the Minister look at my motion No. 99, which calls for the application of dual labelling of fertilizers and chemicals purchased by food producers?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I leave that matter in the capable hands of the Minister of Agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE ECONOMY

NEED FOR FOREIGN CAPITAL INVESTMENT

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, whom I will not abandon as he goes out with the tide.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: The 1984 report of the prestigious European Management Forum on International Competitiveness indicates that Canada ranks twenty-second of the 22 principal industrial countries in receptiveness to investment capital from abroad. Our country desperately needs all the investment capital we can get to help us expand our economy and to provide the jobs which our people need. In view of those facts, why do the Prime Minister and his Government persist in making it more difficult than in any of the 22 other industrial countries for investment capital to come to this country and help us to do the job that so desperately needs to be done today?

• (1500)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not quite hear what authority the Hon. Member was quoting.

Mr. Hees: I will repeat it.

Mr. Trudeau: Before he repeats it, Mr. Speaker, I want to say it's baloney.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, my authority is the 1984 report of the European Management Forum on International Competitiveness. It has been quoted many times in this House. It is a well-known economic study group.

EFFECT OF FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I will ask a supplementary. Does the Prime Minister not realize that billions of dollars of potential investment capital have been driven away from this country by the unbelievable delays and bureaucratic bungling of the Foreign Investment Review Agency which he and his Government announced with such fanfare and praise just a short time ago? When is he going to get together with his Government and do something about that which is stopping badly needed investment capital coming to this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No matter how you slice it, Mr. Speaker, it is still baloney.

Mr. Hees: The unemployed people of Canada will be interested to hear what the Prime Minister has to say about this very important matter.

PETITION

MR. DANTZER—SQUAW VALLEY REHABILITATION CENTRE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer) on Tuesday, May 15, 1984, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

TELESAT CANADA ACT

TABLING OF LETTERS PATENT AMENDING OBJECTS AND POWERS

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Subsection 33(2) of the Telesat Canada Act, I would like to table two copies of letters patent in both official languages amending the objects and powers of Telesat Canada to permit the company to supply satellite telecommunication systems, including elements thereof, and to provide services associated with the development, implementation and operation of satellite telecommunication systems in Canada or elsewhere.

PETITION

MR. PETERSON—TREATMENT OF SYRIAN JEWS

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 5,000 Canadians which deals with the grievous situation with respect to Syrian Jews. They have continued to be repressed, ghettoized, beaten, brutalized and murdered. I file this petition before the House today praying that Governments, and our Government, will ask the Syrian Government to adhere to traditional humanitarian principles. We can no longer remain silent.

Mr. Speaker: First reading of Senate Public Bills. Government Notices of Motions. Motions.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you could put the motion standing in my name.

Mr. Speaker: Government Notices of Motions. The President of the Treasury Board.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-24

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard):

That, in relation to Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of that stage shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

If I still have the floor, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some introductory remarks. Day after day—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is all very interesting, but you called Government Notices of Motions. I believe this is not a Government Notice of Motion. If you go down the order in the proper way and recognize Members on motions—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I called Government Notices of Motions and then I called Motions. I did not know exactly at which point the President of the Treasury Board was rising. He is clearly rising under Motions.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It was very clear to you at the time, Mr. Speaker, as it was very clear to me, that the Minister was improperly rising under Government Notices of Motions. This motion—

Time Allocation

Mr. Speaker: Order. The matter can be resolved. The Chair will now call Motions and recognize the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the President of the Privy Council:

That, in relation to Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The President of the Treasury Board has been recognized under Motions.

Mr. Beatty: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: What is the point of order?

Mr. Beatty: As you know, Mr. Speaker, I sent you a note prior to the end of Question Period indicating an interest in moving concurrence in the fourth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. In addition, my notice of motion has been on the Order Paper for several days, unlike the Minister's, which was simply given orally yesterday. You knew it was my intention to call for concurrence on that. What the Minister attempted to do in getting up at the wrong time was to seize the floor and pre-empt the ability of other Hon. Members to exercise their right to move motions such as a motion of concurrence.

If the Minister is rewarded for that improper behaviour by being called now when he was not rising at the correct time, and when I gave you notice in writing of my intention to move concurrence in the fourth report, it will encourage such improper behaviour by Ministers in the future. Surely when an Hon. Member had written notice on the Order Paper for several days and sent you a note indicating it was his intention to move concurrence, and when the Minister rose improperly at the wrong time, priority should be given to the Hon. Member who had the motion on the Order Paper for some time. The Minister should not be rewarded for such improper action.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is happy to have this opportunity to make a couple of observations. First, in the course of trying to preside over Question Period, I received in excess of 20 notes from Hon. Members. May I suggest that this has become something of an abuse. Hon. Members who want to be recognized send notes to the Chair, as well as those who want appointments afterwards. The Chair can only cope with a certain number of communications and still do a job in the Chair in presiding.

Notice was sent by the Hon. Member in writing just a few minutes before the end of Question Period. The Chair will ask Hon. Members, just as a matter of principle, whether there could be some relief from this. It is very difficult to do justice to all the communications sent to the Chair by messenger during the course of Question Period.

With regard to the other point raised by the Hon. Member, I quote from Bourinot's Fourth Edition "Precedents in Debate", which is quite clear:

It is usual, however, to allow priority to Members of the administration who wish to speak.

That has been an established principle. It was repeated by my predecessor Madam Sauvé. I can get some citations on that point; I have not had much opportunity to do research on the point. It is the understanding of the Chair that when two Members rise and one is a Member of the administration and the Government and the other a Member of the House, there is a priority given in the moving of motions to the representative of the administration and the Government.

• (1510)

As far as the Chair is aware, that has been the established practice of the House for some considerable time and it has also been the established practice at Westminster. In the circumstances, the Chair recognizes the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has recognized the President of the Treasury Board. The Chair will then recognize the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to make the point that I appreciate very much the discussion with respect to whether or not a Government Member should be recognized for debate as opposed to a motion. In the situation here, there was a notice of intention to move the motion on the Order Paper. That is a completely new and novel point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is attempting to reflect upon a decision of the Chair. The Chair's decision is clear. Members are recognized and the Chair cannot always read a Member's mind about what he will do when recognized. In this case, Government Notices of Motions were called and then Motions were called. There was some confusion. The Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe said that it was improper and the Chair then called Motions and recognized the President of the Treasury Board.

In accordance with established practices, when the Chair is to make a choice between a representative of the administration and the Government and another Member of the House, it is clear from Bourinot and from parliamentary practice that the precedence goes to the representative of the administration who seeks to be recognized. That is the practice of Parliament and I am a servant of Parliament.

The Hon. Member cannot say that there is a difference between being recognized for debate and being recognized for motions. The Chair was not recognizing anyone for debate at that point. Clearly Motions were called. The Hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the President of the Privy Council:

That, in relation to Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of that stage shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Gray, seconded by Mr. Pinard, moves—Shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I shall read the motion:

That, in relation to Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of that stage shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? The Hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, day after day, members of the Official Opposition, during Question Period, on public platforms and during other parliamentary proceedings, have called for a better framework for the control of federal Crown corporations. When we gave them in the House the opportunity to help create such a framework, what was their response? Their response was exemplified by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) who moved an amendment to delay debate on second reading—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, since we are becoming so accustomed to a precise reading of the rules, I know that there is a rule that you will enforce, Mr. Speaker, which indicates that Members of Parliament and particularly members of the administration are not supposed to read speeches in the House.

Mr. Evans: Absolutely incorrect.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Absolutely incorrect is right.

Mr. Evans: If you read your rules, you would find you are wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. There is nothing that says that the Minister is not allowed to read extracts. As the Minister has just begun his remarks, I have no idea whether he is reading an extract or reading a speech. I must allow the Minister to continue.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly continue the usual practice of drawing upon my notes from time to time, particularly in the manner normally used by members of the administration, no matter what Party seems to be in power.

If I may continue, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for St. John's West moved an amendment to delay debate on second reading of Bill C-24 for six months; in other words, to give it what is commonly known as a six months' hoist. This obstructive step, if it succeeds, will misuse the time of Members who are truly concerned about the important issues treated in this Bill.

I say that the Hon. Member's proposed amendment is just as much a six months' hoist of the best interests of the people of Canada as it is a six months' hoist of Bill C-24. No sound reason can be given by Hon. Members opposite for such a delay of proceedings and therefore the Government feels it must ask the House, pursuant to the rules of the House, to allocate an appropriate time frame within which we may complete debate on second reading of this Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the debate in the House on this important Bill, which is aimed at improving the framework for control and accountability of our Crown Corporations, has already taken up seven days or twenty-one and a half hours of debate. Hon. Members know perfectly well that at second reading, the purpose of debate is to discuss the principles of the Bill, not to make a detailed study of each clause. We have certainly had ample time to discuss the principles in question.

[English]

Eighty-five different Members have had the opportunity to speak in the House. The Progressive Conservative Party has put forth 66 different speakers and 14 members of the New Democratic Party have risen to speak on Bill C-24 as well as five Liberal members.

I think all Hon. Members will agree that a reform of the accountability and control framework of our Crown corporations is important for Canadians who want this improved framework to be in place very soon. Realistically, that could only be done if the business at hand progresses to its next stage which is a detailed study by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. Only in this way can the detailed questions and concerns expressed about this Bill be answered and resolved. Not to allow this to be done is a distortion of the British and Canadian parliamentary tradition, which is that a measure should be discussed, and after a reasonable period of time for discussion, the elected representatives of the people should be allowed to make a final decision about that measure.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we are not asking for a final decision on the Bill but only on its principles. In the Mother of Parliaments, the Parliament of Great Britain, the rules provide that even for the most important Bills, second reading must be completed within only one or two days. We have already had some seven days of debate on this Bill.

I believe this Bill must move forward to committee for a number of reasons.

[Translation]

First, I feel that after seven long days of debate, a general consensus has gradually emerged on the main principles of the Bill, as well as an understanding and acceptance of its essential strategic elements. Strong arguments in favour of amending certain provisions have nevertheless been raised, and they have been carefully noted.

[English]

As a result of many of these arguments, the Government is looking at possible amendments to the legislation. Of course, some of the arguments represent a different point of view or demonstrate what appears to be a misunderstanding of some of the provisions of the Bill. However, Mr. Speaker, the appropriate forum to discuss these differences in detail is the committee and we are anxious to see this happen. The only place where possible changes to the Bill could be considered is in committee, and to get the Bill to committee the House must make a decision on this second reading stage.

Second, Mr. Speaker, during the debate so far, opposition members have complained that they have not yet seen the regulations which the Government intends to make under the authority of the legislation if it is adopted by Parliament. However, the Government is fully prepared to table a comprehensive package of draft regulations with the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee at the very beginning of its consideration of the Bill. This will allow for careful scrutiny of the regulations and for their open discussion and debate.

Third, I believe it is clear that the Canadian people want the expeditious passage by Parliament of this Bill to better control our Crown corporations. It is a Bill which, by the conclusion of debate, will be the product of the best attention and consideration of all interested Members, and especially of those who share a deep concern for the continued vital contribution of Crown corporations to Canadian society and the Canadian economy.

● (1520)

The requirements for this Bill, its general provisions and approach, and the proposed mechanisms for achieving the desired ends of both better control and accountability, have found favour with many including the Auditor General and, I am told, the Canadian Comprehensive Auditing Foundation. That foundation has expressed an initial positive response to its members with respect to the audit provisions of the Bill.

In addition, there has also been much favourable comment by editorial writers. For example, Harold Shea wrote in The Chronicle-Herald of Halifax on March 20:

> It will be a major disappointment to Canadian taxpayers if, as an Ottawa projection suggests, a Bill to bring greater accountability into the operations of the Crown corporations dies on the vine without parliamentary approval this session. There is really no justification for delaying the measure's debate.

He went on to say:

> It would be a pity if the program to make the Crown corporations more responsive to public requests for operational detail were to be put aside and abandoned until a later time—

Those very important words were written by the key editorial writer of a newspaper which is not known for its support of proposals of this Government.

I believe that Mr. Shea is right. He makes an important point when writing about this Bill. The need to put a new and better regime in place to ensure greater control and accountability of our Crown corporations is a priority of this Government. The Official Opposition has also stated that it is one of its own priorities. It is an issue which has been studied for years by governments internally, by the Lambert Commission, by the Auditor General, by the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and by the Opposition itself. There is no doubt that a new law is needed. Resolution of the issue is, I would submit, of considerable importance to this country.

In conclusion, I would like to say that this is a House of debate, but above all, it is a place for decision. I think that it is time to make a decision on the principles of this Bill and to conclude second reading so that the Bill may come under detailed study in committee. I believe this is what Canadian people expect of us and I therefore ask the House to support this motion.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to bring to your attention the question raised by the Opposition House Leader during the presentation of the Minister that the Minister was reading a speech and that that was not allowed. Mr. Speaker, you did not make a ruling and I would like to refer Your Honour to Citation 310 in Beauchesne which reads:

> Tradition has established exceptions to this principle, and these have been recognized by the Speaker from time to time. Ministers of the Crown, Leaders of Opposition Parties (and those speaking on their behalf), a Member speaking in a language that is not his own, and a Member making his maiden speech or using technical data or statistics are allowed a written text. In addition—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. It had been my intention at this moment to read that citation. I appreciate the clarification. So that there is no doubt, when I spoke originally I had no doubt in my mind; I was intending to read exactly that paragraph.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): On a separate point of order?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, it is on the same point. I would like to say that we would hope that from now on the Official Opposition House Leader would read his rule book—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is not a point of order. One cannot anticipate. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) waited until I was outside the Chamber before he responded to the point raised. If in fact there is to be a ruling on this, I think we should not waste time and ensure that we get on with the business of the House. If you would like to have a full debate now and representations made, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to make representations on that point. But I would—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I do not see that there is any necessity for debate. When the point was raised originally, I made a remark which allowed the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) to continue. I had no concern whatsoever about what he was doing. It was my intention to produce, as I have done, the relevant paragraph to correct what I said initially. As far as I am concerned the matter is closed. It is quite clear.

For continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty).

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, Members on this side of the House have historically rejected attempts to gag Parliament and we reject this attempt to gag Parliament today. The motion which has been moved by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) is totally intolerable.

Since 1972 the Government has talked about the need for improved controls on Crown corporations. Indeed, when the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) was in office, within seven months of coming to office it had tabled Bill C-27. That Bill would have created a new omnibus Crown corporations control Bill, brought Crown corporations under some control and allowed Parliament again to exercise authority over the tremendous number of Crown corporations. That Bill died on the Order Paper with the defeat of the Progressive Conservative Government. Since that time over four years have elapsed and the Government has done nothing to bring in controls on the scale that were envisaged in Bill C-27.

Suddenly, after dawdling and after a succession of scandals—including the scandals of Canadair and de Havilland most recently which indicated massive overruns which will cost the public treasury enormously—the Government has discovered an urgency for this legislation which is totally inadequate. It is dangerous legislation. It did not see the need to rush at all before. The Minister himself, for example, urged that the Government continue to pour tens of millions of dollars into Consolidated Computer Limited, and we have the correspondence between the Minister in his previous incarnation and his predecessor as President of the Treasury Board urging that more money be poured in; more good money after bad. He saw no urgency for controls over public investment then. Suddenly there is an urgency and this Bill has to be given priority over all other legislation before the House today. Suddenly it is essential that this dangerous Bill be passed prior to an election.

Members on both sides of the House are entitled to ask themselves: "Why did the Government suddenly discover such urgency in a Bill which they felt was not particularly important before?" I can cite two possible reasons. First, the Government indicates that it is determined to get Bill C-25, the CDIC Bill, through the House. The Government knows full well that that dangerous measure to create that Crown corporation tinker toy which will provide intervention for Jack Austin, Maurice Strong and Joel Bell, will be strongly opposed. It will be strongly opposed by Members on this side of the House and it will be strongly opposed by any Canadian who believes that there must be proper control over government intervention, who believes that the old NEP gang are not the people to promote that sort of proper control.

The Minister knows, and I invite the House to keep its attention to this point, that simply by deleting Clause 19 of this Bill when it goes before committee, the Government will have no need to pass Bill C-25. In fact, CDIC will have all the authorization it requires to continue to receive appropriations directly from Parliament.

The problem at the present time is the previous Speaker's ruling which indicated that the Government could not use Appropriation Acts to finance programs which had not been approved by Parliament. As a consequence, the Government was not able to put money directly into CDIC with the exception of half a million dollars which was extended under the Financial Administration Act. It was forced to rely upon subterfuges. In one instance it was forced to bleed money, $10 million, from Eldorado. That money did not properly belong to CDIC. It belonged to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It was taken improperly and, I believe, illegally by CDIC. It was the desire of the Government to eliminate that obstacle and make sure that it could put money directly into the Canada Development Investment Corporation for Joel Bell and Maurice Strong to spend as they saw fit with virtually no parliamentary control whatsoever. That is why it is proposing the legislation. The Government has found a new way to eliminate the need to have a special Act for CDIC. All that it need do is force this Bill through the House and through committee, to delete Clause 19, and it has CDIC.

The second reason is that the Minister's friend, Dr. Ed Clark, is building a Crown corporation empire in the Treasury Board secretariat. From a relatively lean operation, he is reassembling the old NEP gang who are responsible for destroying the energy industry in Canada to deal with Crown corporations. Dr. Clark is in the process of asking for something close to 50 person-years to develop this establishment within the Treasury Board. That sort of empire created for the edification of one bureaucrat, is simply not acceptable to Members on this side of the House. The sort of framework which is being put in place to justify the building of an empire by Dr. Clark is totally unacceptable to Members on this side of the House.

In addition to the person-years which he has asked for, he is also hiring $1,000 a day consultants. How can the Government seriously talk about the need for financial control when it allows its friend, Dr. Clark, to spend public funds in this way? If the Minister is serious about exercising control on spending and government activities, surely a good place to start would be in Dr. Clark's shop itself by indicating to Ed Clark that this sort of empire building at public expense must stop.

If this Bill is forced through, its first effect will be, notwithstanding the statements that were made by the Minister, that we will probably never again see in the House a special Act of incorporation for a Crown corporation. This Bill will allow the Government to do without those special Acts in the future and will formalize a procedure whereby the Government need not come back to seek parliamentary approval for legislation to create new Crown corporations.

This Bill would limit the ability of parliamentary committees to do their job. How extraordinary it is that any Minister of the Crown would expect Members of Parliament from any Party to accept a provision in legislation which explicitly states that after this Bill is passed a parliamentary committee would have no right to move concurrence in its report on a government Order in Council. How shocking it is that this provision was dreamed up and that the Government is attempting to sneak it through Parliament. The low regard that the Government has for Parliament is appalling.

It is equally shocking that this Bill seeks to exclude Orders in Council relating to these Crown corporations from the scrutiny of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. One of the responsibilities of that Committee is to look at the vires and legality of government Orders in Council, yet the Committee will be prevented from doing that because the Minister, in the name of improving accountability, wants to prevent Parliament from acting in that way.

I want to ask the Minister if he deliberately proposed legislation to Parliament that would have the effect, within 60 days of passage, of requiring the winding up of the Bank of Canada, the Canadian Wheat Board and the International Development Research Centre? That is exactly what this Bill does. Is it his intention to do that through the back door by this sort of measure, or is it a matter of extreme sloppiness on his part and that of his officials who drafted a Bill, the consequences of which they were not even knowledgeable? One of my colleagues will deal with this issue at greater length during the debate.

In light of the great national controversy over the comments by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) about the possibility of asking Governor Bouey of the Bank of Canada to take his leave, I find it incredible that the Minister would be so sloppy as to allow a Bill to be put before Parliament which would have the effect of winding up the Bank of Canada within 60 days of the Bill's passage. How grossly incompetent.

The Minister is probably prepared to make approximately 30 amendments to the Bill when it is before committee. He will no doubt cite this as a sign that he is prepared to co-operate with Members of Parliament in improving the Bill. More properly, this should be seen as a confession on the part of the Minister that the Bill is so sloppily and improperly worded that he has not done his homework. He should admit that he is asking Parliament to give approval at second reading stage for legislation that is grossly inadequate and should never have been brought before the House of Commons.

The Minister says that this legislation has met with the support of the Auditor General. Again, I find disgraceful the Minister's behaviour in using the Auditor General the way he did, by taking advantage of private correspondence sent to him by the Auditor General to claim his support. The Auditor General, just as Members of the House, did not have an opportunity to see the regulations we are talking about.

We are faced with legislation that undercuts Parliament and reduces our ability to do our job on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada. Far from improving accountability, it destroys and denies accountability. It is a bad Bill which will be strongly opposed by Members on this side of the House. Certainly time allocation, which is designed to gag Parliament and undermine its ability to hold the Government to account on this Bill, will be strongly opposed by every Member on this side of the House.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in my response to the closure motion I want to indicate our reasons for our opposition to it. Since there is no doubt that the objectives of this Bill are valid, we believe there should be some discussion about the requirements of accountability over Crown corporations. There is no question that this Bill would be an improvement to the accountability process of these Crown corporations. However, the fundamental question we are considering with respect to this Bill is the definition of accountability, which is the principle that needs to be debated and studied very closely.

What is the meaning of accountability in Crown corporations, or in government for that matter? Parliamentary accountability means being accountable to the House of Commons. The primary responsibility in the House of Commons is to be accountable for the expenditure of taxpayers' money. This view, which is shared by the Auditor General, means that Parliament should vote on all of the expenditure of taxpayers' money. He has also said that this Bill is an improvement in the accountability for taxpayers' money. I will expand on that opinion in a few minutes.

Accountability also means the responsibility of a Crown corporation to fulfil its mandate. In this respect the Bill is totally lacking. It does nothing to allow Parliament the authority to hold a Crown corporation accountable.

The accountability of a Crown corporation should include all public money that it spends and not only that which was approved by Parliament. There should also be accountability when a Crown corporation spends money for which Parliament may become responsible.

In the case of Canadair, we know that a lot of money was spent and the corporation went into severe debt. Although this happened through the back door, Parliament became responsible for that money. Canadair was given letters of comfort and had the authority to borrow money without parliamentary approval. This circumstance has not been dealt with in this Bill and therefore has not addressed accountability in that sense.

As the previous speaker indicated, we also know that the Government has suddenly become very concerned about this Bill because it is operating a full-fledged holding company illegally. CDIC is a corporation that has been operating illegally for almost a year. That holding company gives control and responsibility for a number of Crown corporations to one person or group.

One would think that, in an effort to introduce an accountability Bill in the House of Commons the Government would use the best possible model in its new holding company to show that it has the political will to control and be accountable for these corporations. Instead, the Senator from the other place comes before us and asks for the money to pay off the debts of Canadair and to be entrusted to use the money well. That is not accountability. That requires trust, which this Government has not built up in this House or in the country. I do not think that by its example this Government has developed the kind of confidence that we as Members of the House of Commons, as representatives of the people of Canada, can use in order to allow this Bill to go through without obstruction.

Before this Bill is passed, Mr. Speaker, all these accountability factors should be looked at very thoroughly. When the Auditor General said he thought the Parliament of Canada should be accountable for all taxpayers' money, he could have extended that, and possibly he did, beyond the money given to Crown corporations. Yesterday in this House the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) brought up a further area of accountability which I think needs to be looked at as well. We talk about accountability, so what about the money given to large corporations by the Government as tax breaks? Maybe we should look at accountability for that money.

Perhaps the Minister, who is present today, should add to his area of concern beyond the accountability of Crown corporations. We give out a lot of money in the form of grants to large corporations. How are they accountable? Why do we not require them to be accountable for the money in the same way we require accountability from our Crown corporations? I think we need a much more solid Act which will do what it is supposed to do rather than just touch the fringes. We need to extend accountability to every cent of taxpayers' money which is spent in any way.

I know that accountability, even within government departments, needs some looking at. What we really need to do is establish the type of economic planning which uses the money we take from the taxpayer and uses it well, not only in Crown corporations but in departments and in the assistance we give to large corporations. That is the kind of accountability we need to look at, Mr. Speaker. I agree we should take a lot more time to establish government accountability, and forcing this Bill through by closure is not the way we are going to do it.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to say a few words this afternoon on this motion under Standing Order 82 finally to draw to a close the debate on Bill C-24 which has been before the House for many weeks now. When we think that the British House of Commons passed in two days the legislation allowing the U.K. to join the European Common Market, and the fact that we spent six days on this Bill at second reading when the vast majority of the work on the Bill is really going to have to be done in committee, it just seems ridiculous that we go on day after day debating a Bill where all the major topics have been covered. I think 21.5 hours have been spent on this Bill and 85 Members have spoken; five from this side, 14 from the NDP and 66 from the Official Opposition. It just seems unbelievable that anything new or constructive can be put forward on this Bill at this stage. Therefore, it seems wise to move on to the completion of second reading, allowing one more day for consideration and debate, ultimately bringing the debate to a close and making a decision.

Clearly this is the place for debate. That is what it is all about. But after a reasomable period of time, surely there is need for a decision to be made. I thought we would have had a vote on Monday afternoon, but when you get a six-month hoist motion introduced after some 50 or 60 Members have spoken, it is clear that the Opposition do not want to debate the Bill, they want to obstruct it and block it. They want to prevent its passage and they will use any technique whatsoever to do that.

It is interesting to look back in Hansard for December 9, 1982, where we see that the then Leader of the Opposition, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), brought in a motion urging the House to get on with this Bill. The motion reads:

> That this House condemns the Government for its deliberate proliferation of Crown corporations accountable to the Government rather than Parliament and the taxpayers who, in the words of the Auditor General, "have every right to consider themselves the principal shareholders of these corporations", and instructs the Government to immediately introduce a Bill substantially the same as Bill C-27 in the 31st Parliament so as to make such corporations properly accountable to the people.

This is what we have done, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, this Bill is much stronger in many respects than Bill C-27. Now, almost a year and a half after this motion was put before the House, what do we see? Continual verbiage on this Bill with no decision being made.

Time Allocation

On December 9, 1982, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) said this in the debate:

We have the statutory model already. It was mentioned in the motion introduced by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

He is talking about Bill C-27 introduced by the former Clark Government. He continued:

When he was Prime Minister he introduced Bill C-27, so we could start immediately to resolve the problem.

Where is the immediacy today, Mr. Speaker? All we hear is speech after speech, 88 speeches on second reading. He continued:

We could start with the enactment of the statutory provisions contained in Bill C-27, and we could start immediately on a parliamentary review of existing Crown corporations.

You will note that the motion introduced on December 9, 1982, talks a lot about the Auditor General. I will quote the Auditor General from an interview on March 16, at the time this Bill was introduced. The reporter was putting questions to him:

Are you confident that this new legislation will correct the problem?

He is referring to the lack of accountability of Crown Corporations. The Auditor General replied:

Well, it goes a long way to correcting it. I'm sure that any set of legislation can be improved upon but, basically, this does address all the questions or the majority of the questions that we were raising in our chapter two, two years ago.

He is referring to the Auditor General's report two years previously. The reporter then asked:

So we don't really know what these guys are up to. That's the real problem.

The Auditor General said that we will improve parliamentary control, Government control, board of directors control and so on. Therefore I think we can be assured that the Bill we have before us has had extensive consultation with many groups, including the recommendations of the parliamentary committee, the Lambert Commission and the Auditor General, and it does many of these things.

● (1550)

In discussions we have had with opposition members, we have made it clear that if they bring forward worth-while and constructive recommendations, suggestions or amendments at the committee stage, the Government is willing to consider and implement them if they will strengthen and improve the Bill. We cannot do that on second reading. We are hearing demands to discuss amendments at second reading and to see the regulations drawn to the Bill. That is work for the committee stage. We want to do that in committee stage. We want to go into great detail with the various groups and individuals who will be called before the committee to give testimony and to review the Bill. However, we must get out of second reading stage.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the Opposition has gone into some kind of apoplexy because of the polls which came out last Friday. There was great consternation a couple of weeks ago when the Gallup poll came out. No one really believed the results. However, when the Carleton poll came out, which essentially substantiated that the Opposition was in a slide with regard to public support, they called a special committee—

Mr. Kilgour: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) on a point of order.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, you will know that in the House we are forbidden to impute motives to people and that we have a rule of relevance which I guess is observed more in the breach than in the practice. I wonder if the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) would be so kind, through your direction, to follow the rules with respect to both imputing motives and relevance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I would find some difficulty in recognizing that as a point of order. However, I will remind the present speaker that he has two minutes remaining for his remarks.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) is very tender and nervous about the situation. I really would not want to impute motives. However, the Bill seemed to be moving along and we seemed to be getting to a stage where we thought we were going to have a vote on it late last week or early this week. I do not know whether there was a certain nervousness about the Bill as to whether it was going to meet the needs that people perceive for the accountability and control of Crown corporations. However, suddenly the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) made the brilliant move of putting the six-month hoist on the Bill rather than voting on it to get it moved into committee. I think there are many Members on the other side who are very knowledgeable about this. I think they have some very constructive things to say about the Bill. They have some positive recommendations which will be very useful in the committee stage. However, we really cannot deal with amendments or detailed study at the second reading stage.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think the Bill does a great deal to meet the challenges for increased control and accountability for the many Crown corporations. We essentially have three big ones which have a lot of subsidiaries on which we want to exert parliamentary and government control. I hope that Hon. Members in the Opposition would join with us to move this Bill out of the House at second reading and into committee stage where we can deal with it in more detail and hopefully see it implemented in the next few months.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and since he raised the point of relevance, I will tell the House that in this type of motion the Chair has been quite lenient. Both speakers so far have transgressed the rule concerning relevance. Since the Member has raised the matter himself, he might keep that in mind. Nevertheless, it has been habit of the Chair to turn a deaf ear, if I may use that expression, to the subject of relevance in this type of debate.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, when I was making the point, I realized that I was going to be hoist with my own petard because a lot of things I was going to say are not totally relevant to the Bill. If I may withdraw that objection, I would be most obliged.

There will be two parts to my remarks. The first will deal with the question of closure. The second will deal with the merits of the Bill itself.

Before getting into those issues, Mr. Speaker, since this whole issue is one of accountability, I will make four points very quickly. With regard to the rules of accountability, I understand that since 1969 when the Government changed the rules, approximately $500 billion to $600 billion have gone through the House in terms of appropriations and spending. I am told that the grand total of $1,000 has been deleted from that $500 billion to $600 billion. In other words, Members of the House are no longer accountable for the moneys being spent through the estimates appropriation process.

Second, we have a $31 billion deficit this year. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) is supposed to see that tax moneys are spent efficiently. The fact that we have a $31 billion deficit is testimony to the way in which we are accounting to the people whose money we are spending. At the end of this year we will have an accumulated deficit of approximately $160 billion. This week we heard that the International Monetary Fund is concerned about Canada's position with regard to financial responsibility. We heard today that the European Management Institute has placed us last of 22 industrial countries in terms of being confident, attracting investment and that sort of thing. I do not have to remind the House about the obscene levels of unemployment in Canada, particularly among young people. I believe our productivity is the lowest of 22 OECD countries. We are either dead last or very close to last in terms of our productivity in an increasingly competitive world economy.

Everyone who looks at this Bill knows that it should really be called a Bill to reduce further the limited control which Members of Parliament have over Crown corporations. Therefore, when the Government and spokesmen opposite talk about this Bill in terms of increasing accountability, I put it to you that that is to make a joke of what is going on here today.

With respect to the question of closure, it strikes me that in a figurative sense the time allocation or closure which has been introduced today is the legislative equivalent of one of the most dreadful of all nuclear weapons, the neutron bomb. In a figurative sense, it leaves the Chamber, the windows, the lights, the Speaker's chair and even the Members standing, but in effect our tongues have been taken out of us. Our right to speak on the Bill has, in effect, been blown away. The right to speak on a measure before the House, Sir, is the most fundamental right that any Member of Parliament has. Is it not going back to the days of Cromwell or worse when the Government says that it has heard enough of us? The last speaker said that we have been speaking too much on the Bill. By implication the Government and the Government alone decides when it has heard enough on the Bill and it will do what it wants with the House.

That is not what parliamentary democracy should be about. Time and again the Government has introduced closure. Shortly the people of Canada will have an opportunity to express their opinions on a government which has systematically abused their economic prosperity and the rights of Members of Parliament and is today telling us we can no longer be heard on a Bill about which many of us feel very strongly.

Lastly, I would like to discuss the merits of the Bill. It is a bad Bill for many, many reasons. In the very limited time available to me I will give perhaps six reasons. The Bill leaves the Minister as the de jure shareholder but requires the Cabinet to approve most major initiatives, such as the appointment of directors, auditors, chairmen and chief executive officers as well as the operating capital budgets, corporate plans and by-laws. In other words, Cabinet will exercise the burden of the shareholder's powers. Being accountable to many, in my view, and in the opinion of others who have looked closely at the Bill, Crown corporations will be responsible to no one. In other words, there is no change in the status quo.

• (1600)

Second, the Bill seriously erodes the practical powers and prerogatives of directors of Crown corporations and undermines the attempt to upgrade their duties and responsibilities. You will know, Sir, that the traditional functions of directors are now, under this Bill, to be exercised by Cabinet. Cabinet, for example, appoints the chairman and the chief executive officer and sets their remuneration. Cabinet appoints the auditor. I wonder how many auditors appointed by the Cabinet will be other than friends of the Liberal Party.

Mr. King: All of them.

Mr. Kilgour: There is no doubt about that. Continuing on, Cabinet will approve and rescind by-laws and may direct a board to approve a by-law. In other words, the Cabinet will take away much of the authority of a director of a Crown corporation. But who but a robot would want to be on the board of a Crown corporation? Who but somebody who wants the per diem or who likes to travel or wants to work his or her way up in a Party which is about to go out of office would choose to be a director of a Crown corporation under this Bill?

On the question of the proliferation of Crown corporations, you will have noticed I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the parliamentary approval process will apply only to parent corporations and not to subsidiaries. You will thus know that that is the area where the greatest proliferation has occurred.

The juxtaposition of Section 100 with Section 155 appears to turn the prohibition on its head by allowing parent corporations to be set up under the CDCA with only Cabinet approval and a motion in Parliament. The Government will still be able to incorporate parent Crown corporations where an existing Act of Parliament allows it to do so.

Finally Bill C-24 could be interpreted, I put it to you, Sir, to suggest that Ministers as representatives of the Crown may not be bound by the prohibition of Bill C-24 on the creation of parent corporations.

My next concern about the Bill is the question of the scope of coverage which simply does not cover many of the major structural problems relating to Crown corporations today. It is silent on matters of internal government organization and it is silent on the privileges and immunities of Crown corporations. It is silent on public servants on boards of Crown corporations. It is silent on the extent of the Government of Canada accounting entity. It is silent on the creation of parliamentary oversight committees for Crown corporations. In addition, as I am sure you know, Mr. Speaker, the Bill covers only wholly-owned corporations. It does not apply to the more than one hundred mixed and joint enterprises.

My conclusion, and I hope it is clear from what I have said, is that the Bill is a dreadfully poor Bill. It represents a net step into the past. In my respectful submission, this House, and any House representing the views of Canadians, should fight as strongly as it can against the Bill.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, in my previous role as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport I have had many dealings with federal Crown corporations—

Mr. McDermid: What do you do now, Jesse?

Mr. Flis: —one as recently as last week. Representatives of the Canadian National appeared before the parliamentary committee and gave us their annual report. At this committee hearing members of all three Parties are able to question the President and the Corporation has to account for every penny it spends of taxpayers' dollars.

Like any business when a recession takes place, a Crown corporation does not have a good year. If the year is good economically, a Crown corporation does better. I was very interested in the financial statement that CN gave the committee. In 1982 CN lost $223 million that year alone. But in 1983 CN had a net income of $212,333,000. Where do these profits go? To the shareholders. Who are the shareholders? The Canadian taxpayers. What is wrong with Crown corporations making profits for Canadians in order to keep taxes down? I see nothing wrong with that.

Mr. McDermid: Name one instance where this has kept the taxes down.

Mr. Flis: That is why I was a little disappointed when the Official Opposition tried to stop the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) making his motion under Standing Order 82 to move Bill C-24 to the next stage. Somehow the Official Opposition fails to respect the rules of this House which members of all three Parties have made. The rules are not made by the Speaker of the House. I was very disappointed that this type of obstruction was attempted again. I am pleased the Speaker did not allow the Official Opposition to get away with that kind of obstruction.

As was pointed out earlier, surely after 88 speakers on this Bill we are ready to move on to the next stage. If 66 speakers from the Official Opposition could not get their point of view across, then I do not think this can be done if the Official Opposition puts up another 40 speakers.

An Hon. Member: You have blocked thinking.

Mr. Flis: This is not closure, Mr. Speaker. This is not time allocation. The motion posed by the President of the Treasury Board was to get the debate moving to the next stage. In my two years as Parliamentary Secretary I had the very pleasant experience of putting Bills through, such as the Canada Ports Corporation, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, the western transportation initiatives and the domestic air policy. The meat of the debates took place in committees. That is where the amendments were brought in. There were good amendments from all three Parties. The Government is expressing very clearly that we are prepared to accept more amendments on this Bill but we are not prepared to accept a frivolous amendment which would stall the debate for another six months.

The Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) asked what does the Government propose to achieve by forcing through this Bill? I think it is clear to everyone that the last piece of legislation on Crown corporations or any revision was over 30 years ago. Surely it is time to bring in legislation that would provide this Parliament with some control over Crown corporations, with some accountability by Crown corporations, and would provide sound management. I cannot see why the Official Opposition, which believes in private enterprise, would be opposing control, accountability and sound management in Crown corporations. I am sure the Official Opposition would want those three things operative in a private corporation, but somehow members of the Official Opposition block the proposals when we want to bring them into being for Crown corporations. Yet every day Members of the Opposition get up damning the Government on Canadair, Air Canada—

Mr. McKenzie: And de Havilland.

Mr. Flis: —because the Government does not have control and it did not see why so much was spent, why a Crown corporation went so far into debt. At the same time the Official Opposition is against a Bill that will ensure this control, accountability and sound management.

Mr. McDermid: It does not ensure it at all.

Mr. Flis: How can the Official Opposition be against the Bill whereby a statute of Parliament will be required to approve the creation, the mandate, the financing and the disposal of every parent Crown corporation?

Mr. McDermid: Parent.

Mr. Flis: I just had experience of the Northern Transportation Corporation. The Government is putting it up for sale because it is no longer needed to meet the national interests of Canada. This Bill allows for a sale of that kind, the disposal of a Crown corporation.

• (1610)

How can members of the Official Opposition be against a Bill which by statute will subject Crown corporations to a rigorous audit regime which not only meets but exceeds that normally applied to private sector corporations? How can they be against a Bill which by statute ensures that Parliament will be informed of the objectives of Crown corporations as set out in their annual corporate plans as approved by the Government? How can they be against a Bill which by statute ensures that Parliament will have a systematic flow of timely, pertinent information so that it can judge whether Crown corporations have met their stated objectives for each planning period? How can they rise and be against a Bill which by statute makes the Government responsible for the strategic and budgetary decisions of all parent Crown corporations and through them their wholly-owned subsidiaries? Any directive issued by the Government will be tabled in Parliament. Does accountability not rest with us in the House? If it does not, we are not fulfilling our responsibilities as Members of Parliament.

I was pleased that the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) defined accountability for us. Sometimes we forget what it means. If this legislation goes through, hopefully before the House recesses for the summer, the board of directors will be more accountable; government, whoever is in power, will be more accountable; and the House which accounts for every penny of the taxpayers will be more accountable.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, you are indicating that it is time for me to wrap up my remarks. I want to stress again that we are not debating the Bill at this point. We are debating the motion of the President of the Treasury Board. He is not stopping or limiting debate. He is saying that we want to debate this Bill further in committee where we can hear the amendments of the New Democratic Party, the Official Opposition and Hon. Members on this side of the House. Then we could bring the Bill back to the House. Are they against that parliamentary process?

It is one thing to debate, but it is another to stall. After the first 10 speakers, 55 speakers were put up to stall debate. That is not what we are elected to do. That is not what the people sitting in the galleries, who pay our salaries, send us here to do. They send us here to participate in meaningful debate, to pass good legislation. Hon. Members opposite are afraid that if we pass this piece of legislation, the Government will look good and the Official Opposition will look bad.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, the last speaker for the Government clearly indicated our task today. We are debating a motion of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) to gag the House. I do not care what the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) calls it; it has the effect of terminating debate in this place to which we are sent to represent our constituents.

I understand the theory of the herd mentality expressed by that Hon. Member. He indicated that 66 Conservatives had already spoken on this Bill and that there could not be anything of any significance which anyone else would care to add. I resent the suggestion that individual Members of the House, including myself—and I have not spoken on this Bill—do not have something valuable to contribute. If we do not, at least we have the right to exercise our privileges as Members of the House to express our views in this place. I shall do that regardless of the urgings of the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park.

Mr. Pinard: You can do that in committee.

Mr. Gamble: Now we are told by the Government House Leader where to do it. Of course, he would prefer that we do it in some place which is not public.

Mr. Pinard: The committee is public.

Mr. Gamble: I understand the Liberal Party wanting to practise politics in a closet, but that is not the position of my Party.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is leading the Canadian public astray by saying that committees are not open to the public. Committees are open to the public.

Mr. Pinard: Right on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. If an Hon. Member has a point of order, he must refer specifically to "Point of Order" in the little book.

Mr. Gamble: I might have said that had the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park spent more time in the House, he might understand the rules. However, I doubt that he will have that opportunity for very long.

I should like to deal with the features of this Bill which I quite frankly find offensive. This Bill was not designed, as it would lead us to believe by the provisions of Clause 1 thereof, to control Crown corporations. Rather, it was designed to create the skeleton on which, by regulation, the government of the day will determine all significant portions of the law as it applies to Crown corporations. Later I will refer at some length to the specific clauses in the Bill which deal with this matter in a very direct and improper fashion.

I am curious as to why the Government is so anxious to press forward with this piece of legislation. It is obvious to the Liberal administration that it is most appropriate to extend as far as possible the inroads of Crown corporation activities into the responsible functions to be performed by government itself. If perchance it can "Crown corporationize" every government department, the functions of the Ministers sitting in the front row of government benches will be reduced to performing no services at all for the people of Canada. They certainly do not answer for the Crown corporations for which they are responsible.

Let me give a most recent illustration of this. On May 3, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) directed a question to the Minister allegedly responsible for Canada Post. He drew to his attention comments made by the Auditor General, in particular those with respect to the storing without sorting of some 54 trailer loads of mail to which that Crown corporation had not attended. As reported on page 3376 of Hansard, the allegedly responsible Minister said:

As for the question asked by the Hon. Member, I shall refer it to the President of Canada Post Corporation.

Given the way in which Government Members would prefer to respond to issues, I can well imagine that they will be most satisfied when they are in a position where they can avoid any responsibility for any departmental function which they perform by creating Crown corporations out of those departments. Where they cannot or, where they can intrude into the private sector, into the free enterprise system which has produced the wealth that is sucked away by the Government to fund the folly of corporate activities, they are best served by their own manœuvres.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is the Hon. Member aware that the new corporation, the Canada Post Corporation, is no longer a burden upon the taxpayers of the country and that it has a balanced budget—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I suggest that the Hon. Minister should speak to the Chair concerning his point of order, if he has one to raise.

• (1620)

Mr. Gamble: I commented earlier with respect to the last Liberal Member who spoke. I will respond in a similar fashion with respect to the Minister, who seems to be similarly unfamiliar with the rules of this House. I hope that my time will be extended as a consequence of these improper interruptions. If the Minister believes, when the people of Canada are paying an exorbitant cost for this mailing service, that they are not being overtaxed, the Minister should wake up, be it morning or afternoon, and recognize the serious burden that is placed on the taxpayers of this country by the Crown corporation of which I spoke.

One issue which surely must concern us as we examine this Bill is whether accountability is really brought to bear upon the activities of Crown corporations. One thing might have been done to achieve that alleged objective; that is, to define "auditor" as it appears in the definition clause as being the Auditor General and not as it appears "including a partnership of auditors".

When I served on the Public Accounts Committee, we encountered a great difficulty. It was that every commercial Crown corporation created by government desires to avoid the scrutiny of the Auditor General and have but a simple attest audit for all of its activities. It is so comfortable for that to be the case because private sector auditors have no responsibility to this House. They have but a responsibility to the board. They tell us that is where the responsibility lies.

If this Government is serious and really wants to make Crown corporations accountable to this place, it ought to amend this offensive piece of legislation to provide that the Auditor General of Canada is the auditor of all Crown corporations. Only then can Members of this House be assured that they will be in the position where they can extract the right information about the way in which the taxpayers' money is consistently being wasted.

I said that I would refer to a number of clauses which clearly indicate the way in which, by regulation only and not by laws passed in this House, the affairs of Crown corporations are to be governed. Let me refer to a few of them.

Under Clause 2.1, the very determination of the corporations to which this Act applies will be made by Order in Council. Subsection 202(1), Section 108, the powers of agents with respect to the disposal of the property of Crown corporations is determined by regulation. Section 118, the remuneration of offices and Section 134, budgets and operating plans, will be determined by Order in Council.

The suggestion by the President of the Treasury Board that he will submit a draft of the proposed regulations is of no comfort to the people in this place. Any draft submitted can be changed the next day. Every Member of this House recognizes that very simple fact. I urge that Members have some regard for the welfare of the people who are carrying the burden of this piece of legislation when they vote on it.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of disgust that I stand to speak to this Bill today because there are people speaking who really do not know what is in the Bill. They are so naive that they do not know what the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) is doing, especially to those in western Canada. If the Minister really had wanted to do something, he would have copied or compared an acceptable Bill, such as the one my colleague, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), presented when he was a Minister in the Clark Government. If the Government had brought forward a Bill like that, it would have been acceptable.

Members opposite forget that the insolvency Bill passed second reading of this House with one day's debate because it was as good a Bill as this House could put together. That was done by Members of all three Parties. We had input. This is where the Government is going wrong. It is going along on the same dumb pattern it has been following. It is as simple as that.

We are very distrustful of this Government. We had promises from the Government during the Crow debate. The farmers in western Canada know exactly what the Crow debate has done and is doing. It raises the cost of moving their grain. It is an expense that they can ill afford at this time. I quote Clause 17 of the Bill:

Notwithstanding section 100 of the said Act, where a parent Crown corporation is in existence on the coming into force of this Act and is not named in Schedule C to the said Act six months after the coming into force of this Act, the directors and shareholders of the corporation shall forthwith after the expiry of that period take all steps necessary to dissolve the corporation.

I do not suppose that you, Mr. Speaker, know what the Canadian Wheat Board is, as well as many Members opposite. In Schedule C we see Canagrex, the baby of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), the Canadian Sports Pool, the baby of the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Olivier), and Petro-Canada, the baby of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). They are all there. Is the Canadian Wheat Board there? No, it is not.

When western farmers realize that this Government is tampering with the Canadian Wheat Board, there will be an explosion. We have known for years that the bureaucrats in Treasury Board want to manipulate the Canadian Wheat Board. They want to violate the secrecy of the Canadian Wheat Board. They, along with Members opposite, do not have a clue as to how the Canadian Wheat Board operates.

Some people in western Canada feel we can perhaps get along without the Canadian Wheat Board. However, the vast majority of western grain growers are aware of what the Canadian Wheat Board is having to do. If the Government wants to put something in its place, it will take several years. It cannot be done in six months, as this Bill will attempt to do.

This is why we have been debating this Bill. We cannot accept what this Bill is doing to the western grain producer, in fact, to all of western Canada. When you start messing around with the income of the grain industry, you mess around with the whole western Canadian economy. We have had too much of that already. We had it on the National Energy Program, on the Crow issue and now with this Crown corporation Bill.

I am not trying to protect Crown corporations. I know they have to be brought under control and held responsible. I recognize that there are 345 Crown corporations in Canada today, many of them not under the control of the Government. The Canada Council objects to Bill C-24. Why? I will read why:

Under the proposed legislation, the government of the day would be able to issue directives to the council. The government also would have the power to change the council's bylaws.

That means that the Canada Council could be another porkbarrel for this Government. We have been fighting porkbarreling since I came here 12 years ago, but it is getting worse as the years go by.

The President of the Treasury Board is misleading this House and the Canadian people when he says this is an improved framework. He speaks about principles. Members opposite do not have a clue what principles are all about, the way they treat western Canadians. That is why there are no Liberal Members from there and that is why there will not be any Liberal members from western Canada after the next election, whenever they have the nerve to call it. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we cannot accept the Government's back door method of getting rid of the Canadian Wheat Board. It is not acceptable. There will certainly be an explosion in Western Canada when the news gets out that that is what the Government is doing.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I must comment on the Government's arrogance in presenting a motion to limit debate on a Bill that to us is not inappropriate but definitely inadequate. For years, Canadians have become increasingly conscious of this, and, of course, the Government as well, since its reputation has suffered as a result of its refusal to have controls that would allow the House to have some very real supervision over Crown corporations, controls that, if the Government had bothered to listen to what we have been saying on this side of the House for years, would have prevented a tremendous waste of public funds. And that is the issue today, Mr. Speaker. The Government and Government Members are aware of this, and with elections in the offing, they are in a hurry, and they are forcing us today to limit our speaking time, because they would like to improve the image they have ruined by failing to act responsibly in time, an image that, to the general public, is one of irresponsibility.

The Minister is asking the House to limit debate on this question. Mr. Speaker, we have been asking for parliamentary control over Crown corporations for a long time. I am referring to control over spending of tax payers' money, money paid by Canadians who elected us as their legitimate representatives. The Minister or the Government has decided that there has been enough debate. Having been elected legitimately in our respective constituencies, do we not have a responsibility to express our views in the House? Do we not have a duty to inform the House of the views of our constituents? Of course, I realize this is all very tiresome to the Government, which is in a hurry to try and create a more interesting image for the general public.

Mr. Speaker, I am truly shocked that the Minister responsible should try to shove down our throats a Bill whose inadequacy amply justifies the points raised by the Members of this Party. In fact, I want to congratulate them on taking advantage of the opportunity and the time they are normally allowed, I say normally to give voice to the interests of their constituents. That is the kind of democracy that should prevail in this House. And that is what the Government has been trying to destroy for a number of years. For sixteen years, in fact, Mr. Speaker, because it is not the first time I have heard motions of closure, or the guillotine or gag if you prefer. I repeat that, when the Government imposes closure, it is seen by the public as behaviour that is arrogant to the point of being obscene. And this is certainly not the way the Government is going to save its skin. I know the Government thinks that because it has gotten into the habit of imposing motions of closure, of gagging Parliament, the public will start to think it is an entirely normal procedure. However, it is not, and on behalf of millions of Canadians, I want to condemn the antidemocratic attitude being displayed by this Government today. That is what we should condemn, Mr. Speaker. We have the right to express our views. That is what we are here for. And if our Members should go too far, they will be judged accordingly. We stand behind what we do and what we say. So, now the Government has decided once again that the Opposition has had its say.

The Minister is, of course, in a terrible hurry to upgrade his image, since he has acted irresponsibly.

And besides showing how irresponsible it can be where the protection of public funds is concerned, this Government is now demonstrating how clumsy it can be by imposing closure. In addition, it shows how unacceptably arrogant it is by denying the rightfully elected Members of Parliament the right to express their views on such an important matter! Billions and billions of dollars have been spent, not to say wasted, because we do not have the parliamentary control we are clamouring for as elected representatives. For years, the government has turned a deaf ear to our representations whenever we suggested that a tighter control and a more effective management were required for these government agencies.

There is no need to go very far, Mr. Speaker. As evidence, I refer to one statement where it is clearly said that the Bill gives the Minister the discretionary power to occasionally exempt a corporation from having to table its projections before the appropriate Standing Committee or before Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, how can we honestly be expected in this House to give the Minister such powers after what we have seen? How can we accept the Government's invitation? How can we trust this Government after seeing such irresponsibility and mismanagement? The Minister now believes that he has the power to muzzle the duly elected representatives of Canadians, Mr. Speaker! This is what we must object to in my opinion. However, I have not seen many Government Members. Of course, they are in such a hurry. They are waiting anxiously for someone to do something about control. We would no longer have any control. Bill C-24 was introduced to bring about a comprehensive reform. It is a comprehensive Bill! I, myself, have comprehensive solutions to suggest, but the Government will not give us any comprehensive explanation about its proposals. This is why Members on this side want to speak out and express their views. It is because they also have things to say about this. Of course, the Government will reply: "You can do nothing else but criticize us!" Well, Mr. Speaker, this Government deserves criticisms and accusations. You only have to go out and talk to people to realize how vulnerable this Government has become because of its mismanagement and poor administration. This is why today we are blaming the Government for deciding to impose closure. It is altogether unacceptable that the Government should succeed in muzzling us, Members of Parliament, myself personally and my colleagues, on issues as vitally important as the use of public funds, something which does not bother the Members on the other side that much. The importance of putting public funds to good use is beyond their understanding! The deficits are there to prove it. They prove mismanagement on the Government's part and those people deserve to see us rise in this House to condemn such manoeuvers and such plans.

For this reason, I hope that, based on the most elementary honesty, this Government will withdraw its motion so that we may finally see whatever true democracy it pretends to support, but which it was never capable of assuming because of its attitude and arrogance.

I am sorry if these words are a bit strong, but I truly deplore this attitude and the way this Parliament, and even more important this country, have been managed.

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I was delighted to hear the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) make a long speech about the fact that the Government seems to want to prevent Opposition Members from speaking to the Bill before the House. Many Members on his side of the House have already spoken to the Bill. All Members are entitled to do so, and I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that I do not think he himself spoke to the Bill in his speech. Yes, indeed, all Members have the right to do so! What I would like to emphasize, and I do not think the Hon. Member mentioned this in his speech, is that the Government would like to see this Bill referred to the Standing Committee as soon as possible.

• (1640)

The place for clause by clause examination of Bills is in committee. I have several times been a member of the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, the Committee to which this Bill will be referred. We examined some extremely important legislation, clause by clause, sitting for weeks on end, day after day. It will probably be the same with this Bill as well. If the Hon. Member would care to appear before the Committee with his colleagues, to explain his position . . . Perhaps we should explain to Canadians that in committee, important and less important aspects, main points and minor details of a Bill are examined, revised and amended before the legislation is reported back to the House for the final vote.

I found it rather difficult to follow the reasoning of the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) who insisted that we keep the Bill in the House for a long time yet, after letting more than eighty Members speak to the Bill, and all this to keep the Bill from going to Committee, where the actual revision is done, on the basis of research by the research officers of each caucus or by individual members, the Departments involved and each corporation. This is where the Bill comes into its own, where it is amended to produce legislation that is acceptable to Parliament and to the citizens of this country, legislation created as the need arises and developed accordingly.

I have just seen a fine performance, play acting worthy of his leader, the revered golden calf as he called it himself during the Progressive Conservative Party leadership campaign, in an attempt to make us believe that the Government wants to gag the Opposition. On the contrary, Members opposite are filibustering to gag Members who have something to say on this Bill and intended to move amendments. That is exactly what is happening.

Earlier someone tried to argue that Crown corporations are not responsible to anybody, which is not true, Mr. Speaker. Crown corporations are now answerable to Cabinet Ministers who, in turn, must account for those Crown corporations to their Cabinet colleagues and answer questions raised about Crown corporations in the House. In addition, they have to appear before the committees of the House when they are asked to attend. The drawback right now is that a Crown corporation is responsible to the committee which happens to be dealing with its field of activity. For instance, the CBC is responsible to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. But with this new Bill, there would be some kind of direct control by parliamentarians and the Canadian Parliament. We would systematically ask the corporations to appear before the committees and answer to parliamentarians, although they would still come under the jurisdiction of a Minister. And besides they would be operating within a structure which is more in keeping with the responsibilities which Canadian parliamentarians have set for the Canadian Government so as to hear what Canadians have to say and what they expect.

I must point out that this Bill is not before the House simply because the Government happens to like it that way. It is a fact that in recent years the Canadian Government has had to get directly involved in a good many cases concerning certain Crown corporations. Our country has been the scene of basic economic changes which forced the Government to step in in areas where it had never expected to intervene. The best example is Canadian Government support for the aeronautical industry. It is obvious that our aeronautical industry would never have left the ground and would not now have 7,000 or 8,000 jobs at de Havilland and Canadair if the Canadian Government had not become directly involved. To do so, the Canadian Government had to proceed through a Crown corporation which, in turn, took over these corporations by purchasing shares. Obviously, this requires special controlling organizations, such as the CDIC, which is funded by both private and public moneys and has the mandate to manage these corporations. This is a new process which has just recently been put into place and which has developed in the course of the last few years, stemming from the CDIC. And it is precisely to meet these new needs that the Government must come up with a bill such as this. Is it fundamentally bad for Canada and for Canadians that we should develop a truly Canadian aeronautics industry?

We in the Liberal Party believe it is not. We believe it is good for Canada, for the future of our country, to have a strong technology in this field. As for the Progressive Conservatives, they have demonstrated in the early sixties that they did not believe in the future of this industry when they simply destroyed the work that was being done in this area. They eliminated AVRO and some other aeronautics concerns which existed in this country at that time. Admittedly, this is expensive, but every nation in the world is doing it, most often under the disguise of military expenditures. We in this country are doing the same through public service, through corporations which are involved in the field of civil aircraft production, which is far better than the military cover. Moreover, there are now a lot of Crown corporations by the way with fairly large budgets. There is CBC for instance as well as Air Canada, a Crown corporation which is doing fine and which, without making enormous profits on the back of the Canadian people, has provided this country with quite an interesting air transport system which through its management is directly linked to the government I feel, therefore, that the government should introduce a new legislation thereby allowing Hon. Members to become more involved in the management of Crown corporations, for they are reaching each and every house of this country, whether through its television or radio stations, as in the case of CBC, or through various means of transportation, as in the case of the CN. Crown corporations provide facilities . . . Canada Post, which used to be a government department, was made into a Crown corporation a few years ago. All these corporations are increasingly assuming a greater presence in the everyday lives of the Canadian people. I feel it is good that these corporations should strive to meet the needs which Canadians are expressing and that they should do so following the financial and administrative guidelines defined by duly elected representatives of the Canadian people. I repeat what I said a while ago: I cannot understand the illogical response of the Hon. Member for Joliette who blamed the government for wanting to refer this bill without delay to the proper committee, so that Hon. Members may scrutinize it as soon as possible . . . Not only for each to deal with it in the House for ten minutes or so, but to examine in depth all its sections one after the other, with the power to amend it to meet the wishes and the will of the Canadian people to make it into something acceptable which will work for many years to come and which will meet the needs of our country. In addition, the sooner it is sent to committee, the sooner the committee will undertake a thorough consideration of the bill and amend it the way Canadians want it done, and the sooner it will be brought back for discussion and for a vote in the House. The government and Parliament will thus be able to provide the tool which the members opposite have been demanding for a long time and those corporations will be made more directly accountable to the House of Commons than they are at present.

I do not understand, try as I may, the attitude of the Hon. Member for Joliette. I am just as anxious as he is to settle the issue and to move amendments if I want to or if my constituents ask me to. I am also eager to have it thoroughly considered. For the information of all Canadians, it should be pointed out that the study of all bills in committee, even if it cannot be seen by Canadians on television as are our proceedings, is important work and is done well. I would like to emphasize also the work done by the members opposite in the various committees, either by the NDP members or the Progressive Conservative members, the work done by our assistants, the research offices of each caucus which provide exceptional support to the members sitting on those committees. And one has to have spent many hours in committee to realize how at this point in time, the Canadian people can contribute under the constitution to the drawing up of bills and laws governing our country. I am proud of having been able to sit on those committees and attend regularly. I am also proud to tell Canadians this always goes on with the enthusiastic cooperation of Hon. Members from all parties, from both sides of the House.

And here is my heartfelt comment at this point, Mr. Speaker: Let us once and for all tell Canadians the truth about our work as members of Parliament, our ways of working. Let us tell them that legislation is referred to Committee because the majority of the work, is done in committee. It is the hidden part people do not see, because television is not there, but it is just the same open to the public and the press. There is something else to be said, for the benefit of Hon. Members opposite. We agree with the Government that one more day of in-House discussion of that bill is enough at this stage. The legislation should be referred to Committee as soon as possible, in order that as soon as possible Hon. Members, whatever their political affiliation, can go through that process of closer scrutiny of the way our Canadian Crown Corporations are managed, because they play such a major role in our everyday lives in Canada.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to hear the comments of the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Gimaïel) with regard to this Bill and to hear him say that the Government will bring in amendments in committee. We want to see the amendments now. We have never heard of any proposal to bring in amendments at the committee stage. We want to see them now because this Bill is only window-dressing with no real substance at all.

Who in his right mind would trust the Government, especially the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) whose word means nothing? The House will recall the time prior to the last election when he was asked what he would do with interest rates. He said then that he would resign if interest rates were not brought down. Interest rates went up to 21 per cent. Did the President of the Treasury Board resign? Of course not.

I do not trust him. I do not trust him when he says that he really means to go after Crown corporations with this Bill. It is only window-dressing so that the Government can cover up. Who would trust the Government with anything? We want all the proposals defined now, not at committee.

Let us review what is happening with Canada Post Corporation. Dozens of Quebec businesses are giving the stamp of approval to the United States postal service which provides quicker service at lower cost. Truck loads of mail are going daily from Canada to the United States. Those businesses want to mail their letters from the United States. Furthermore, Canada Post is talking about pushing the postal rates up. If the current rates are driving mail out of the country by the truck loads, what will happen when the rates are raised? The Auditor General should immediately find out what is happening with Canada Post.

Approximately a week ago I raised questions with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) who is responsible for Canada Post. I asked him about some very serious problems in Canada Post. For instance, it has been buying sorting equipment at a cost of $750,000. The corporation undertook to install a software patch. The patch was removed six weeks after its installation, and an internal analysis that led to the reversal indicated a drop in productivity. It was inefficient because of excessive handling and delays. The corporation had to disconnect this $750,000 piece of machinery.

I also asked the Minister of Labour to check into the reason why we are getting reports about trailers full of mail sitting on Canada Post lots. As many as 54 tractor trailers have been forgotten for up to and including six weeks. I asked the Minister to look into this situation. I received a smart alec answer from him, asking what I am doing as a critic in the Party. He said that he would pass the information on. He showed no interest at all in this mismanagement at Canada Post. It is just evidence of the attitude of the Liberal Government. If I had been in the Minister's position, I would have thanked the Member who brought this to my attention and would have taken immediate action to bring answers back to the House. If he had done that, he would have been sincere. But I just received a smart alec answer that he will pass it on or perhaps look into it. That is why we do not trust the Government's legislation. Canadians have no reason to trust the Government with respect to anything that is taking place in Crown corporations.

For instance, we see the problems with de Havilland. We are very concerned about its management. The Government waits until there is a total disaster before it moves in to determine what is going on there. However, we do not hear anything about these problems; we only hear that the people who are mismanaging the business are getting bonuses.

We have been asking for this Bill for years. It should have been introduced seven or eight years ago, because that is when the horror stories about these Crown corporations were told. For example, in 1976 and 1977 we began hearing about Canadair being on a disaster course. All we heard from the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), who was the Minister in charge of Canadair at that time, was that its situation was never better and that sales were picking up. He said that we should not be raising questions about Canadair and that the Challenger was the greatest aircraft ever built. We could not convince the Government at that time that Canadair was heading toward a disaster course. All we got was a sales pitch in the House of Commons. That has cost us billions of dollars.

We do not want to see Canadair or de Havilland fold. Those Crown corporations should be developing new products. Yet they struggle with a product which they are having great difficulty selling.

When Ford developed the Edsel automobile, its sales were acceptable for a period of time. However, when it became evident that the public was not interested in buying it, Ford stopped making the Edsel and developed a new product that could sell. What the Government should be doing with respect to these Crown corporations is finding some Lee Iacocca to run them instead of Liberal rejects, has-beens and failures. The Government does not recruit the proper people to run these Crown corporations. That is why we will not rubber-stamp its legislation and will continue to put up speaker after speaker in order to get the point across.

We have always given constructive criticism. My friend from Red Deer gave excellent examples of what is happening with Crown corporations out west and how they are affecting the farmers. That does not constitute obstruction. When the Government introduces substantial legislation which includes a sound directive appointing the Auditor General to conduct a thorough and proper inspection of all those Crown corporations, then it will get our support. If it were a good Bill it would be difficult to argue against it day after day. We simply do not trust the Government. We will not rubber-stamp any more of its weak legislation.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to make some general comments. We are debating closure on an important Bill dealing with Crown corporations. The Canadian public should know that the Conservatives have helped to make the words "public enterprise" a dirty word. There have been ten years of Conservative and business propaganda about this issue. Let there be no doubt that if the Conservatives become the government they will do what Bill Bennett did in British Columbia and we will see all Canadians suffer the kind of pain that the working people in British Columbia are experiencing. They will try to sell the Crown corporations.

Mr. McKenzie: Who will buy them?

Mr. Waddell: My friend asks who will buy them. It depends on which Crown corporation you are talking about. There are some very healthy Crown corporations.

I want to comment generally on why this Bill is important and should be debated. I heard a Liberal member say that there have been many speakers and the debate has been just repetitive. I believe that this Bill and the one concerning the CDIC need to be debated because their importance is not fully understood. I do not believe that the press and some members of the public have realized the importance of these Bills. Very competent people like Joel Bell, Maurice Strong and Senator Jack Austin, the elite group, are really running the wheels of the country for the Liberal Government. That deserves some consideration.

I suggest that we have seen a breakdown of Keynesianism which social democrats, Liberals and some Conservatives had embraced. It has been replaced by individual resignation, a feeling that one cannot do anything, that one is alienated and that therefore one should just forget about it. It has also been replaced by a new neo-Conservatism. I must admit that one of the vibrant forces in debate today is neo-Conservatism. The left which I represent must take part in this kind of debate. That is why this debate is important. Ironically enough, I do not know whether we are seeing its collapse, but certainly the capitalist system in North America is in deep trouble. We are not getting a full growth economy, but we are getting high rates of unemployment. Yet you cannot advocate expansion of the welfare state any more because people, and I think there may be some truth to it, see that the modern state is out of control, centralist, bureaucratic and elitist. We need a different way of approaching the modern state, which means a different way of approaching Crown corporations. We need popular control over the state and over capital. We need to create in these Crown corporations some democratic socialist institutions.

● (1700)

We should be talking about worker ownership and participation. The most radical people in this country talking about these new ideas are the Catholic bishops. They talk about labour being a priority. We on the left talk about its being equal. We should be talking about worker ownership and decentralizing Crown corporations. We should be talking about accountability in different ways such as the ways American committees examine their legislation and keep the Government accountable. We should be talking about new types of boards of directors, not just Liberal hacks or even very competent career bureaucrats on the board. We should be opening them up to native people and women. We should be opening up hydro boards to environmentalists. But we have just one kind of person running the Crown corporations, so is it any wonder that they have become so far removed from the people and their representatives in Parliament?

We should be giving the Crown corporations a mandate and then assessing how they live up to it. Then you would not have things like Canadair and de Havilland happening. All these things have to be debated and we have hardly touched on these issues. This is the debate of the future.

We are looking at popular and effective representation by people at the local, provincial and national level in governing themselves. The modern welfare has lost that ability. It has delivered a lot for us and put the safety net in place, but it needs to be reformed and we have to start with Crown corporations.

Many Crown corporations are uniquely Canadian and we can be proud of them and the things that have been done. But we have to zero in on some of the things I tried to bring out in the few minutes I have available to me. We should not be capping this debate; we should be expanding it and talking about worker ownership, as people have started to do in certain areas of Europe. We should talk about how we are going to amass the capital in the country for the people so we can take control of our own economy. It must be obvious to Canadians and to Members of the House that our economy is totally dependent on the Americans. We do not have an independent economy any more. We ask questions about interest rates every day and we get the same answer, that we are dependent on the Americans. We should be talking about using our Crown corporations to take control of our economy, much like the original mandate of Petro-Canada.

This Bill does not go far enough to make Crown corporations accountable, and they have to be. We need to have a plan of what they are going to do. We need to have their books independently audited. We need to have witnesses in front of a committee that has some real teeth. I sometimes ask, and my electorate may answer this after the next election, why we are here in the House of Commons if we cannot really examine these Crown corporations? We cannot ask questions on interest rates or control things. What is the role of an MP? It seems to me that we have a real role in debating and assessing these Crown corporations and making them accountable. We have great experience in Canada in this area. Members should look at what Saskatchewan did from about 1944 to 1964. We should also look at the following years perhaps, at some of the mistakes they made with the Potash Corporation and some others in getting away from the people.

We should not end this debate, because we have lots more to talk about. We have to talk about ways of making Crown corporations accountable to ordinary people in this country so that they will once again feel they have some control over their government. I would like to see them become democratic socialist institutions, which would be quite a radical change from the present situation.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, it is hardly a pleasure to get up and speak on this motion because it is another example of the disregard of this Government for popular opinion and the rights of Members of this House. It certainly illustrates the fact that the Government's sincerity with respect to any need to control Crown corporations further is, at best, very suspect.

Before I touch on some other points I want to comment on the remarks of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who preceded me in the debate. If there is such a thing as a thinking socialist, he is of course one of them. There are very few of them in this country. Mind you, he is not a brilliant example, he is not in the tradition of, say, English socialism. We could not say that he is as brilliant as Michael Foote or some of the other English socialists. But he shines here in Canada among the socialists, certainly among socialist MPs, because he has a modicum, an iota, a small amount in any event, of intelligence. We heard some of it at work here today. The only thing I want to say to him is that he has a love for Crown corporations, but the trouble is, as the Member must understand, that they have no bottom line. We have just had a fantastic illustration of the effect of having no bottom line. When you have no bottom line, and when you have a Government with no shame, one which simply wants to stay in power and not be embarrassed as long as it can hide the facts from the public, and you combine those two, you get the Canadair and de Havilland situation. Those companies got into the tragic position in which they now find themselves, having lost several billions of dollars of credit and of money of the people of Canada, only because they had no bottom line. There was no discipline there. The ordinary private corporation would have sunk several years earlier. Their mistakes would have cost their investors several hundreds of millions of dollars, but they would have gone no further because no financial institution would have given them a loan or conveyed any financial assistance to them once they looked into the matter and saw that they were losing money, that they were poorly managed and that they had no prospects.

Canadair was producing a product which this country did not need produced, and no one else needed it. They could not produce a product which was going to be the best in the world in any event, and now we are in the position in which we find ourselves with Canadair. So there is no bottom line. All the Government did year after year was to turn its back and keep it secret by using letters of comfort. The Government did not even guarantee loans to those companies directly; it gave them letters of credit, which were not legally binding but were morally binding, which the Government will have to observe. They were advanced hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars under letters of credit so the public would not know how much money was going into them or what they were doing.

There is no bottom line unless the Government acts responsibly, and the Government does not act responsibly because it does not want the public to know what has happened or how stupid it has been. And so that is how you end up with the tragedies we have had in those two companies.

Now the Hon. Member from Flis, or the Hon. Flis or the Hon. Member from Toronto somewhere, spoke earlier in debate. I forget his exact district.

Mr. Bosley: Parkdale-High Park.

Mr. Crosbie: Parkdale-High Park. He was praising CN. He said, "Look at the money CN has made". Mr. Speaker, it is to laugh. I distinctly remember that, since I came to the House eight years ago, we have forgiven CN the obligation of repaying hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars in interest payments. The only reason that CN can now pretend it is making a profit is that it was relieved by the House of the responsibility to pay back hundreds of millions of dollars in principal and interest. Anyone could make money if the debts they owed were removed from them, as the CDIC now suggests should be done in the case of Canadair. In a year's time we will have the scoundrels telling us that Canadair is making money, because they will have removed from Canadair billions of dollars in debts and interest payments and left it with its assets. We will have these fools, these rogues, these scalliwags who are now forcing this Bill through the House, telling us in one or two years' time that Canadair has made money.

• (1710)

We need birth control for Crown corporations, Mr. Speaker. We need a system of contraception for Crown corporations so that they cannot spring up whenever someone in the Government gets a fantastic idea to inseminate a new Crown corporation. We need some method of automatic birth control, which this Bill does not provide. Under this Bill, once you have a Crown corporation it can spawn another dozen without coming back to the House. That is one of the weaknesses of this Bill. We want a Bill which will provide foolproof methods of birth control over the spawning of other Crown corporations.

VIA Rail is another example, Mr. Speaker. We have not yet had legislation before the House to establish VIA Rail or to lay down its guidelines. It is spending hundreds of millions of dollars and losing it. This is another example of the escape of responsibility of the Government.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) was here earlier. He is a fuzzy-minded socialist. He is even more to the left than our friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway. The other day, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asked whether we would prefer a French socialist to a Canadian Liberal as Secretary General of the OECD. Of course, the answer is yes. The French socialist would be far less likely to intervene in the economic conduct of society than would a Canadian Liberal. We would far rather have a French socialist than the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) as Secretary General of the OECD. We would sooner have anyone. We do not want a failed Canadian Minister of Finance heading up that international organization.

The Minister of Finance has a Crown corporation called Fishery Products International Limited in Newfoundland. The Leader of the Liberal Party in Newfoundland has described our Minister of Fisheries and Oceans as a liar. I have never heard of this happening before, Mr. Speaker, and I do not know what it has to do with Crown corporations. "De Bané lied to shield Tory, top Liberal says". Mr. Neary is the top Liberal in Newfoundland. He is the Leader of the Opposition. I will quote from an article in the March 16 issue of The Globe and Mail. It says:

> Mr. Neary, during a dispute with Fisheries Minister James Morgan, said federal Fisheries Minister Pierre De Bané was a liar for denying publicly that Mr. Morgan had cried during talks leading up to the creation of the new super fish company in Newfoundland.

That is apparently where forming Crown corporations leads one. The Minister of Fisheries has taken over Fishery Products International—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 5.15 p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 82 have expired.

[Translation]

It is therefore my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

[English]

The motion is the following. Mr. Gray moves that, in relation to Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the Bill; and that 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of that stage shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Gray) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES, POLICY AND PROGRAMS

COMPOSITION OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion that refers to the composition of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages, Policy and Programs. We have had discussions with the other Parties about this. I move:

That the quorum of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on Official Languages, Policy and Programs, be six Members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses, the Government and the Opposition are represented, and that the joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when four Members are present so long as both Houses, the Government and the Opposition are represented; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that the House do unite with this House for the above purpose.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, there have been the consultations indicated. This motion is necessary in order to establish a quorum under the circumstances. I simply rise to indicate that we are prepared to consent to the motion being put and the passage thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement for the Parliamentary Secretary to introduce this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Evans) agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 165, 166, 168, 566 and 790.

[Text]

ECC—NINETEENTH ANNUAL REVIEW

Question No. 165—Mr. Mazankowski:

Were 14 recommendations made to the Government in the Economic Council of Canada's 19th Annual Review Lean Times and, if so (a) which recommendations were accepted by the Government and what has been done to implement them (b) which recommendations were rejected and for what reasons (c) what is the status of the remaining recommendations?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): No. Of the Council's 14 recommendations, three were not addressed to the Government.

(a), (b) and (c) Recommendations of the Economic Council represent important inputs to the Government's long-term policy considerations. However, the Council is one among a variety of sources of advice consulted by the Government. The Government has, therefore, neither explicitly accepted nor rejected the recommendations, but rather has incorporated them within the framework of considerations bearing on policy.

ECC—REPORT "INTERVENTION AND EFFICIENCY"

Question No. 166—Mr. Mazankowski:

Were 31 recommendations made to the Government in the Economic Council of Canada's report Intervention and Efficiency and, if so (a) which recommendations were accepted by the Government and what has been done to implement them (b) which recommendations were rejected and for what reasons (c) what is the status of the remaining recommendations?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Yes, although the recommendations were directed to both federal and provincial governments. (a), (b) and (c) See reply to question No. 165 answered today.

ECC—REPORT "IN SHORT SUPPLY, JOBS & SKILLS IN THE 1980s"

Question No. 168—Mr. Mazankowski:

Were 12 recommendations made to the Government in the Economic Council of Canada's report In Short Supply, Jobs & Skills in the 1980s and, if so (a) which recommendations were accepted by the Government and what has been done to implement them (b) which recommendations were rejected and for what reasons (c) what is the status of the remaining recommendations?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): No. Two of the 12 recommendations were directed to provincial governments. (a), (b) and (c) See reply to question No. 165 answered today.

103912 CANADA INC.

Question No. 566—Mr. Howie:

To the knowledge of the Government is 103912 Canada Inc. a subsidiary of Petro-Canada Inc. and, if so, what are the (a) names (b) positions of the persons who occupy positions on the Executive and Board of Directors and, in each case, what amount was he/she paid in respect of that position in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1983?

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada Inc. reports as follows: Yes.

Executive of 103912 Canada Inc.

(a) Name	(b) Position
Mr. Kenneth G. Donald	President
Mr. David P. O'Brien	Secretary
Ms. Muriel Rhynes	Assistant Secretary

Board of Directors of 103912 Canada Inc.

(a) Name	(b) Position
Mr. Wilbert H. Hopper	member
Mr. Edward M. Lakusta	member
Mr. David P. O'Brien	member

The Executive and members of the Board of Directors of 103912 Canada Inc. are all employees of Petro-Canada and therefore are not paid in respect of their positions with 103912 Canada Inc.

EXEMPT STAFF OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Question No. 790—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Are any exempt staff employed by the Department of External Affairs and, if so, what are their (a) titles (b) positions (c) names?

2. Do any of the staff mentioned in part 1 receive income, financial assistance or other benefits related to their employment from sources other than the ministerial budget and, if so (a) which members (b) what are the details of the income, financial assistance or other benefits?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No. The Secretary of State for External Affairs employs exempt staff as follows:

1.	(a) & (b)	(c)
	Executive Assistant	Kenzie MacKinnon
	Special Advisor	Sean Riley
	Special Assistants	Pearl Hunter Alfred LeBlanc Veronica Gillies Ronald J. MacDonald Moses Coady

2. No.

[English]

Mr. Evans: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I suggest that you seek the unanimous consent of the House to see six o'clock. We have had a very interesting day. The Government has once again rammed through, by closure, its intention. I am sure you could see the clock as indicating six o'clock. We will carry on tomorrow in a spirit of co-operation.

● (1750)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we agree with the suggestion made by my hon. colleague. Of course, if we had rammed something through, the Hon. Member would not have agreed to sacrifice 10 minutes of his time. However, we do agree.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for raising this matter at this point but I would like your guidance on this matter. If we call it six o'clock now, would it cut 10 minutes off the total amount of time allotted for debate, or would that amount of time be reserved?

Mr. Speaker: In the interpretation of the Chair, no time will be taken off the debate. Time will run in the normal course.

It being 6 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5.51 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—REGIONAL ECONOMIC DISPARITIES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for abandoning its commitment to alleviate regional economic disparities and thereby encouraging continued economic inequality between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of the country through a policy of gutting the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, slashing investment in regional development, and downgrading, for political purposes, federal-provincial development agreements.

He said: Mr. Speaker, few Opposition motions on any subject are as important as the one we are debating today. The motion strikes at the very heart of what Canada is supposed to be all about, namely a land of opportunity from coast to coast, from sea to sea.

The country's wealth is shared unequally from one region to another and from one province to another. Indeed, national myth notwithstanding, the difference in economic opportunity between residents of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland on the one hand, and those of Ontario and Alberta on the other, for example, is analogous to the economic disparities between blacks and whites in the United States. It is as though we in the have-not parts of Canada were living in a separate country altogether from the land in which the wealthy provinces of Canada find themselves. Yet the current government has abandoned any commitment it had to alleviating regional economic disparity in Canada.

After 16 years in office, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) prepares to take his leave knowing, as he must, that regional disparities have not improved a whit in the time that he has been in office. The irony is that in his first election campaign in 1968, only days after becoming Leader of his Party, the Prime Minister made the elimination of regional economic disparity his major commitment and his only major specific promise. How the hopes and expectations of Atlantic Canadians were raised by him in that campaign!

Those sentiments were raised still higher when in 1969 the Government heralded the creation of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. To be fair, and I want to be fair, I believe sincerely that at the time the Prime Minister actually was committed to the high-sounding objectives of the Throne Speech of the day in which the proposal for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was made. However, like the North-South dialogue and now his peace initiative, the regional disparity issue was but a fad for him, something to entertain his mind until the next political fashion came along.

Certainly the record of the Government from the time of the establishment of DREE to the present has not been one of relatively stronger economic growth in Atlantic Canada. Rather, it has been one of continued economic disparity between the region and the rest of the country. When DREE was established in 1969, the earned income per person—personal income excluding government transfer payments like unemployment insurance—was $1,738 in the Atlantic Provinces. For the rest of Canada, the corresponding figure was $2,747. The personal income of people living in the Atlantic Provinces was only 63.3 per cent of the personal income of those living in the rest of Canada. In 1982, the last year for which data are available, the per capita earned income in the region was $7,312 compared to $11,455 for the rest of Canada, making a ratio of 63.8 per cent. There was an improvement of only one-half of 1 per cent in 13 years.

Similarly, in 1968, the first year of the Prime Minister's administration, there were 38,000 people unemployed in the Atlantic region and 320,000 people unemployed in the rest of Canada. The number of jobless in the region constituted 11.9 per cent of the number of jobless in the rest of Canada. In April, 1984, with 143,000 people unemployed in Atlantic Canada, the regional jobless figure is now 11.4 per cent of that of the rest of Canada. The disparity has narrowed, Mr. Speaker, only one-half of 1 per cent in 16 years. Indeed, the number of jobs in Atlantic Canada relative to the rest of the Canadian labour force has actually shrunk and not increased since the Prime Minister first took office. It has gone down from 8.5 per cent to 7.9 per cent.

Only 6 per cent of the jobs created in Canada in the last 16 years have been created in the Atlantic region. Yet the region contains over 9 per cent of the country's population. In 1968 the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate was 6 per cent in the Atlantic region compared to 3.9 per cent in the rest of Canada. In April, 1984 the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate was 15.1 per cent in contrast with the figure of 11 per cent for the rest of Canada. The ratio is exactly the same now as it was 16 years ago—one and a half to one, to the disadvantage of the Atlantic Provinces.

It is not at all difficult to identify what went wrong with the Government's regional development policies. There were two main problems with those policies. The first problem was a failure of administration and the second was a lack of continued commitment to funding and programming. Programs were frequently ill-conceived. In my Province of Prince Edward Island, for example, DREE often supported industries that were doomed to failure from the beginning because they did not relate to the indigenous resources of the province or to the competitive advantages of the Island. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if it is realistic to think that a province like Prince Edward Island with a population of only 125,000 people, a province that is situated a thousand miles away from any major metropolitan market, could ever sustain an industry which manufactured skis? DREE thought so but the marketplace did not. The result was calamity for both the company in question and for the workers whose jobs and dreams were destroyed.

• (1115)

The record of DREE throughout the Atlantic region is replete with such examples of departmental ineptitude. In other instances, genuinely worth-while projects initiated by DREE were undermined by other departments of the federal Government. It was not that the left hand did not know what the right hand was doing; it was that the left hand was chopping the right hand off at the wrist. For example, in the City of Charlottetown, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion invested something like $9 million for the redevelopment of the waterfront. It was one of the most innovative efforts in all of North America. The anchor of that ambitious project, that ambitious complex of public and private facilities and services, was to be the relocated headquarters for the national Department of Veterans Affairs. It was to be relocated on Queen Street on the city's waterfront itself. However, because of sheer bureaucratic bungling, officials of the Department of Public Works pulled the rug out from under its sister Department of Regional Economic Expansion. DPW did so by wrenching the DVA headquarters from DREE's waterfront project in favour of a city-core location which was isolated from anything in which the federal Government had a direct interest. In one fell swoop, one federal department risked the total collapse—certainly a major collapse—of the multimillion dollar efforts of another department.

Fortunately, the waterfront project, of which I have spoken, was given a much needed boost by the erection of a multimillion dollar convention centre on the spot where DVA was to be located. That outcome was made possible only by a last-minute federal-provincial funding arrangement. Meanwhile, the waterfront project was seriously set back and, to make matters worse, the federal Government now stands to lose a million dollar law suit to the developers associated with the original DVA waterfront site.

I mention that example because I think it graphically illustrates what went wrong with DREE as administered by this Government. Just as DREE programs were plagued by inter-departmental warfare within the Government, so also were they undermined by the failure of the federal Government to consult with the very governments most affected by those programs. The change in the DVA location from the Charlottetown waterfront to the city centre was made against strong representations, not only by the Province of P.E.I., but also by the city itself, not to mention local public opinion. The same type of insensitivity to provincial and local priorities was characteristic of DREE-related programs throughout the region—not just in Prince Edward Island but in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland as well.

The second major problem with DREE was the lack of sustained funding and program support. There can be no doubt that, following an initial flurry of federal Government investment, regional economic expansion payments to the Atlantic provinces soon dropped steadily, to the point at which they all but ceased with the abolition of the department in 1982. In 1971, two years after the establishment of DREE, regional economic expansion payments to the provinces amounted to $473 million in 1982 dollar terms. Such payments remained around that level until 1979. From then on, support plummeted from $485 million in 1979 to $350 million in 1982. That represents a 41 per cent drop in support in four years.

What was even worse for the Atlantic provinces than the over-all decline in DREE funding was the region's declining share of the total. Originally DREE assistance was restricted to areas of Canada whose unemployment levels were constantly high, whose industrial base was low and whose hopes for improvement were otherwise remote. DREE money was intended to assist those areas in industrial development, the provision of essential services and in job retraining. However, Mr. Speaker, for purely electoral purposes this Government watered down eligibility criteria until almost every part of the entire country qualified for so-called regional development aid. Provinces like Prince Edward Island found themselves competing with parts of even wealthy Ontario for a share of the funds. As more and more communities from one end of the country to the other became eligible, we in the Atlantic Provinces had to scramble for our share of the pie. Given that the pie was originally intended for us, the outcome was nothing less than scandalous.

When DREE was established in 1968, Mr. Speaker, the Atlantic Provinces received over half the total money expended by that department across Canada. When it was abolished in 1982, that proportion was down to less than a third. Not only was the pie smaller, but our piece of the pie was smaller yet.

The truth is, Sir, as the Senate Standing Committee on National Finance concluded after examining regional disparities in 1982, the Government has turned its back on the goal of regional disparity. It was more interested in courting electoral support in vote-rich Ontario and other major centres than in honouring its commitment to assist the have-not provinces to achieve some degree of self-sufficiency. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Government saw DREE as an obstacle to its re-election chances, because the provinces seemed to be getting credit for the expenditure of federal dollars, and none of the provinces was Liberal.

In Prince Edward Island, for example, the federal Government scrapped many established federal-provincial cost-shared programs in favour of direct delivery of federal services, often totally excluding the province from policy input. The result has been to render previously robust provincial departments of government—notably fisheries, agriculture and energy, and others which could be mentioned—mere shadows of their former selves, with attendant Public Service lay-offs and local service cutbacks. Even more significant, Mr. Speaker, the direct delivery approach has denied federal Government programs the local participation so essential to effective implementation.

With DREE folded into the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion as of 1982, and thereby effectively abolished, the Atlantic region has lost the one federal department, with all its faults, to which it could turn as a friend at court. Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, in any competition between the twin but conflicting goals of the new department, national industrial objectives will win over regional development objectives ten times out of ten, at the expense of the Atlantic region.

The federal department has made an orphan of the Atlantic Provinces, leaving us increasingly to our own devices to survive. Not only has it abolished DREE and abandoned formal regional development programs of the DREE type, but it has also slashed support through broad fiscal and other programs. From 1977 to 1983, federal transfers to other levels of government have steadily gone down as a percentage of total federal expenditures, even excluding public debt considerations. Federal changes to Established Programs Financing for health care and post-secondary education has cost the Atlantic Provinces $90 million a year in lost revenue. Apart from those changes, the application of the Government's six and five program to the post-secondary education component of EPF in 1983-1984 and 1984-1985 will cost the region a further $32 million over those two years.

In such areas as transportation, so vital a part of the economic base of the region, the federal Government has left us high and dry, alone to fend for ourselves. In 1968 the Government subsidy under the Maritime Freight Rates Act was, in 1982 dollars, $57 million. In 1982 it had shrunk to a paltry $11 million, a drop of 81 per cent during the 16-year period in which the current Prime Minister was in office.

• (1125)

Sir, no part of Canada depends more on vital transportation links with the rest of Canada than does P.E.I. We have suffered, however, a steady loss of passenger freight and parcel express services, and railcar and railline repair and maintenance capacity. Having entered Confederation to save our railway, we see the federal Government dismantling it before our very eyes. Although the island is grateful for federal help towards such major projects as the Atlantic Regional Veterinary College and the Prince Edward Hilton Convention Centre, it is once again the classic story of the Government giving with one hand while taking with the other.

Sir, we in the Atlantic region are a proud, hard-working people, a people determined to be self-sufficient again. We were once self-sufficient. Before Confederation our region was actually quite prosperous. That is in fact why we were one of the first parts of Canada to become populated and settled. Successive central Canada-dominated federal Governments, however, have adopted policies undermining economic diversification in the Atlantic region and also in the west. This has weakened our economic strength and our morale. The region, once highly industrialized by the standards of the day, has now been reduced to producing staples. The production of those staples, for example potatoes in Prince Edward Island, does generate jobs, I grant you that. Much of the income, however, is then simply spent in central Canadian markets, mostly for manufactured goods. The same happens with federal transfer payments to provincial governments and individuals alike. In the Atlantic Provinces the money simply gets recycled back into the central Canadian economy.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am not convinced that such regional servitude is exclusively the result of either accident or neglect. One cannot overlook the fact that it has served the interests of central Canada—and I am fond of central Canada—to have the Atlantic Provinces as a ready market for their manufactured goods rather than engage in manufacturing themselves. National policies like protective tariffs have consistently favoured Quebec and Ontario, the very provinces whose votes have enabled the Liberal Party of Canada to govern the country for most of this century.

What we need, Mr. Speaker, is a truly federal state, one that recognizes the enormous potential of the Atlantic region both to be self-sufficient and to contribute to the total weatlh of Canada. However, that will only come, Sir, with a new team of Canadians in charge of affairs here in Ottawa.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A period is now provided for questions or comments.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, if I understood the Hon. Member correctly, he mentioned the DVA building was to go on the waterfront. It was then moved downtown and they were lucky to get the convention centre on the waterfront. I remember discussing this move at length with the late Hon. Dan MacDonald prior to the move. I recall his mentioning the waterfront versus the downtown location. Is the Hon. Member really saying at this stage that he would prefer to have DVA on the waterfront and the convention centre downtown? Is it really better to have a department downtown in a business section, or is it better to have the convention centre downtown? Does he disagree with the DVA being located where it is located at present?

• (1130)

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, the consideration of the comparative locations of the two projects in question, the national headquarters for the Department of Veterans Affairs on the one hand, and the Prince Edward Hilton Convention Centre on the other, is irrelevant. What is relevant is that one department of government was favouring one location and another department was favouring another. They were working at cross purposes to the point where a multimillion dollar redevelopment project for the Charlottetown waterfront was being undermined by the Department of Public Works and a sister department, namely that of Regional Economic Expansion, had already invested millions and millions of dollars into the Charlottetown waterfront project.

In my speech I was making the point that it is terribly important for the left hand to know what the right hand is doing and to co-operate with one another. Time and again in departments of the federal Government we have seen one department doing one thing and another department doing something entirely different. They work at cross purposes to each other. I used the DVA location as an illustration of the point in question. We need harmony between departments within the same government and between federal and provincial governments. During the 16 years in which the Prime Minister has been in office, we have had discord rather than harmony, confrontation rather than co-operation. I think that is at the very heart of the problem with regional development policies in the country.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions if I have time. Where does the Hon. Member stand on the free trade issue? If we move toward freer trade with the United States and other countries, how will that affect Atlantic Canada?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I think a bit of history is in order here. When Prince Edward Island and the other Atlantic provinces were colonies, in their hey-day they had a good deal of what was analogous to free trade, largely between themselves and what is now the northeastern tier states to the south. When national tariff policies in Canada were devised under the national policy of Sir John A. Macdonald, and by every successive federal Government, the trade was artificially rerouted from north-south, as far as the Atlantic region was concerned, to east-west.

That is one of the prices that the Atlantic region has been prepared to pay to be part of the Canadian family. However, if we are to pay that price we must also get some compensatory advantages, for example, through freight rate policies. Instead, freight rate policies, which have been so important to trade, have gutted the advantages we once enjoyed. There are other examples of successive Canadian governments, mostly of a Liberal stripe, undermining our efforts to enhance our trade relations, not just with other countries, but even with other jurisdictions within Canada.

I myself am not a free trader, although I think there are some areas in which we can relax tariff and non-tariff barriers alike. However, I think that if we in the Atlantic region are going to pay the price of high tariffs in the country, there should be some corresponding advantages and those advantages have been in short supply, Sir.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a further general question. It seems to me that if there is one Party in the House which is committed to survival of the fittest, to what is called social Darwinism, it would be the Conservative Party. It seems to me that Party would be the least committed to egalitarianism. How does the Member square that philosophy of modern conservatism with a policy of making special provision for the Atlantic region rather than abandoning it to fend for itself, as is traditional conservative policy? That is what modern conservatism is.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is totally erroneous.

Mr. Crosbie: Moronic.

Mr. McMillan: No member of this caucus or of the Progressive Conservative Party who could rightly call himself a Conservative in the country has advocated or ever fought for social Darwinism, the survival of the fittest among individuals, governments, or for that matter countries. I am proud to be associated with the record of Sir John A. Macdonald who did not hesitate to use the instruments of the state for the advantage of society as a whole, sometimes against the interests of the individual. I am proud to be associated with the record of Sir Robert Borden and Arthur Neighen, who forged some of the nation-building links which were inaugurated by Sir John A. Macdonald himself through the creation of the CNR. That was no lily-livered approach to stateism, Sir. I am proud to be associated with the record of John Diefenbaker who, in some ways, was the father of modern medicare through specific initiatives that he took.

There are other examples which could be cited at the provincial level. These include Leslie Frost, John Robarts and William Davis in Ontario. Look at the record of Richard Hatfield in New Brunswick. Has the Province of New Brunswick ever hesitated, in modern times, to use the instruments of the state for the advantage of society as a whole, sometimes against, perforce, the interests of the individual when the two were in conflict? I could cite similar parallels with the record of the province of which I am a resident.

The Progressive Conservative Party has a proud tradition of compassion and sensitivity to the welfare, the problems and the aspirations of individuals and provinces alike. For the Hon. Member to stand and ask the kind of question which he has asked reveals only that he does not know the history of the Conservative Party and, what is worse, does not know the history of Canada, either at the federal or provincial level.

Mr. Crosbie: He knows nothing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there further questions or comments? The House will now proceed to debate.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I enjoyed that exposé on Conservative philosophy. I have always known that Conservatives really cannot afford to believe in the survival of the fittest. If they did, of course, they would disappear.

Mr. Crosbie: You are having a job to survive.

Mr. Johnston: I saw the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) squirming in his seat at the description of conservatism given by the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan). I must say that it is appropriate and rather ironic that the Member for Hillsborough would lead off a debate criticizing the federal Government with respect to its regional economic initiatives. I am surprised, in fact, that he has been able to make some of those tongue-in-cheek comments about the federal Government's participation in Prince Edward Island without blushing. Perhaps he will blush at some of the items which I will bring to his attention.

Only a few short days ago the sod turning for the veterinary college took place in the riding of the Hon. Member for Hillsborough. That is one of the most significant of the special recovery projects and it has been debated by the maritime Premiers for some years as to location. The cost of the project is $18.5 million.

He reminded us of the tremendous contribution which the Government has made through its decentralization proposals. One of the most significant of the decentralization moves has been the transfer of the Department of Veterans Affairs to Prince Edward Island. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I would say that of all the decentralization projects, with regard to the impact which they may have had on a particular community as that particular move to Prince Edward Island.

It is true that the Hon. Member has criticized the departments of the Government over the debate as to location. Surely that is a rather curious way of trying to undermine the validity of the efforts of the federal Government with respect to economic development on the Island itself. In fact, Prince Edward Island has benefited very substantially over the years from the initiatives of the Government.

I should point out to the Hon. Member when he starts citing figures that I am currently at the point of signing an economic and regional development agreement, which is one of the new series of agreements, with Premier Lee of Prince Edward Island. Premier Lee knows and the Hon. Member for Hillsborough knows that that agreement will maintain the historic funding levels from the regional fund with respect to Prince Edward Island. I will continue in a moment to describe the new arrangements and why they are in fact substantially better than the arrangements which existed in the past.

However, with respect to the regional fund itself which still exists, Prince Edward Island continues to have its fair share. I should also point out for the benefit of Members in the House something else which they probably know. When any of these subsidiary agreements are entered into under a general development agreement as in the past or by economic and regional development agreements in the future, it is clear that the cash flow tends to rise slowly at the outset, peak with respect to particular projects or agreements and then decline. Any decline in spending in any of the regions of Canada—I might say the pattern is consistent—is simply a natural result of the flow of funds with respect to projects and programs undertaken according to these subsidiary agreements. Clearly this will vary from agreement to agreement but it is transparently misrepresentative of the funding under a program to say that it has declined in the last several years, because of course it has declined in the last several years. The fact is that for all intents and purposes there should be no money spent at all toward the end of an agreement because the program is one that has a definite period within which it is intended to operate.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to appear here today to say a few words about economic and regional development. As the Hon. Member himself admitted, it is an area to which this Government has made a very strong commitment and we continue to have an even stronger commitment today. That is the reason for some of the reorganizations that have taken place and with which I will deal in a few moments.

A number of my colleagues here today will be following up with more specifics in some specific areas of funding.

Mr. Crosbie: Specificity.

Mr. Johnston: I see that the Hon. Member from St. John's is looking over here.

Mr. Crosbie: St. John's West.

Mr. Johnston: He is another obvious beneficiary of the economic and regional development programs of the federal Government. He knows full well the impact that they have had in his province.

Mr. Crosbie: Just wait until I get my chance.

Mr. Waddell: Two third placers.

Mr. Johnston: I think the Hon. Member for Hillsborough was referring to a new team. Surely a new team would not include the member from St. John's. He must be referring to some other new team and I will not go into that now.

The fact is that the whole issue of economic and regional development has received priority attention from the Government and continues to receive priority attention. That is why, as I mentioned a moment ago, the Government has taken significant steps to strengthen that commitment. I will outline a few of the measures.

The Hon. Member made reference to some historical evolution and pattern of development in this country. I suppose that it is true that Canada has been created against compelling economic logic, namely that it should have developed on a north-south rather than east-west basis as it has. I suppose as well that a triumph of Canadian history has been our ability to tie together, across this great, vast land, areas of such differing regional and economic opportunites and strength.

Of course, that has also developed over the years what the Hon. Member referred to obliquely as the so-called heartland-hinterland syndrome. The historical thrust of the past several decades has been to recognize this phenomenon and seek a solution to it. The creation of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion by the Prime Minister's Government in the late 1960s I suggest was a daring, creative and innovative way of attacking that very issue.

What has DREE done? In my judgment, notwithstanding some of these rather silly criticisms about the location of buildings and so on, it really has been an outstanding success. That has been said to me time and time again by Members of Parliament from the Atlantic region. DREE undertook to put necessary infrastructure in place and that has been done.

Let me cite a few examples of what DREE has accomplished in the Atlantic Provinces. For example, in New Brunswick, the Market Square project virtually transformed the face of Saint John. The Village Acadian is the centrepiece of a growing tourism industry in northeastern New Brunswick. Silviculture infrastructure, such as tree nurseries, greenhouses and seed collection centres, has established the most intense forest management program of any province.

The member for St. John's might be interested to know and in fact knows very well that in Newfoundland a network of industrial parts has been established that expanded the industrial or commercial base of St. John's, Grand Falls, Carbonear, Corner Brook, Gander and Wabush. As well, there is a second industrial park for Corner Brook and industrial malls and parks in Port aux Basques, Pasadena, Windsor and Gander.

There are waterfront developments in Nova Scotia, such as the kind the Hon. Member mentioned in his own province, both in Halifax and Dartmouth. The Hon. Member from Halifax was here a moment ago. He is very familiar with and probably very proud of that particular program.

Coal reserves in Cape Breton were proven up as a result of these DREE finance projects. There was port and transportation facilities for communities in the Strait of Canso development. There was general improvement in agricultural production right across the province as a result of DREE initiatives. Again, there is forest management in Nova Scotia and of course there is the tourism industry.

Let us look at Prince Edward Island itself. I will not repeat some of the specific initiatives, such as decentralization which was not a DREE project, the special recovery capital projects program or all of the small craft harbour programs. These are all parallel and complementary to DREE. In the case of Prince Edward Island, DREE contributed to the construction of 20 schools and assisted in setting up industrial parks in Charlottetown and Summerside, funded three grain elevators, helped to construct some 350 miles of highway, and contributed to major projects in the core areas of Charlottetown and Summerside, including the waterfront project to which the Hon. Member made reference. DREE was instrumental in constructing the electrical interconnection cable to New Brunswick.

It was the Prime Minister's view, as expressed by the Government, that the time had come for another bold initiative to build on the accomplishments of DREE but in a way that would make all departments of government sensitive to the needs of the region. That is fundamental to the reorganization which was announced by the Prime Minister in January, 1982.

I must say that I get angry when I hear people say that this Government has in any way backed off from its commitment for regional development. Quite to the contrary, that organization is intended to make every single department, not just one such as DREE with responsibilities singled out for regional economic development, but all departments of governments represented in the committee of economic and regional development which I chair sensitive to the regional dimension. Furthermore, apart from the sensitivity that has been instilled in all of these departments and the putting in place of an economic development co-ordinator in each of the provinces, the regional fund has remained intact and has been singled out for the financing of specific projects and specific undertakings under the economic and regional development agreements in each of the provinces in order to maintain the historic spending levels.

I believe that the reorganization, as I refer to it, has marked a fundamental initiative to promote much more effective federal policies that serve the objectives of this nation, namely in building up the strengths.

The Hon. Member for Hillsborough made the very point that self-sufficiency is the thrust of solid economic and regional development. We are attempting to achieve self-sufficiency by identifying the strengths of the regions and by doing precisely what the Hon. Member has said, namely by designing our projects and our priorities with respect to each province to build upon the strengths of the region, upon the agricultural strengths of Prince Edward Island, upon the aquaculture strengths and upon the technology bases which are gradually springing up across the country. Of course, we see this at the University of Prince Edward Island and at the community college.

• (1150)

The whole thrust of the Government is to sit down and participate in joint planning with the provinces to determine together the areas of mutual interest. What areas could we identify with the Province of Prince Edward Island? We have done this in several ways. The first way, as we have done in each of the provinces, was to develop an economic development perspective, developed by the economic co-ordinator. In the case of Prince Edward Island, the co-ordinator is well known to the Hon. Member for Hillsborough, Mr. Doug Johnston, who is the senior federal Government economic presence in that province. There is one such person in each province of Canada. They are part of this reorganization.

One of the most important elements of the reorganization is that for the first time federal departments, which as I explained to the Hon. Member are supposed to be sensitive to the regional dimension, are now brought together horizontally in a regional council chaired by the economic development co-ordinator to address in a complementary fashion the economic development requirements of the provinces. As I said, in the case of Prince Edward Island that council is chaired by Mr. Doug Johnston.

Based upon the input of all departments, based upon the input of local chambers of commerce, business communities and labour representatives, and based upon what we know about provincial economic development priorities, the economic development co-ordinator brings forward to me, as the Minister responsible in this case, an economic development perspective for the Province of Prince Edward Island. That is the case for every province in the country. The regional ministers responsible and members of Cabinet then have an opportunity to review that economic development perspective and to select the priorities in which various departments should be participating with respect to the economic development of a particular province. Thereafter we sit down—the departmental ministers responsible for areas which are of a clear priority and I—to determine what the provinces see as their priorities.

I am happy to say that in the case of negotiations with each of the provinces, there has been compatibility of economic objectives in nearly every instance. The whole thrust of the new reorganization is to permit both levels of government to move forward with complementary packages of economic development proposals; in other words, less of the so-called cost-sharing arrangements and more joint planning as well as parallel delivery. That has been the approach.

The presence of our economic development co-ordinators and the economic and regional development agreements which grow out of the economic development perspectives of course is key to the process. In other words, instead of backing off from regional development, we have opened up full throttle on regional development by bringing the entire resources of the Government of Canada, through the economic and regional development committee, to bear in terms of regional development itself. Apropos of that, I might say that what one sees in terms of what may come out of the regional fund for a particular province—and as I said, the historic spending levels will be maintained—is but the tip of the iceberg as to what the federal Government may be spending in a particular province through various line departments.

Let us not look simply at the regional fund. Let us look at other initiatives. In the case of Prince Edward Island I mentioned only two this morning. First I mentioned decentralization, which of course goes back some years. Also I mentioned the veterinary college and the $18.5 million. That is not figured into the calculation of the regional fund; that comes out of the special recovery capital projects program, the $2.4 billion allocated to capital projects across the country.

I did not mention the various small craft programs in Prince Edward Island. We have one at Graham's Pond for $1.9 million; Launching Pond for $1 million; Naufrage for $1.2 million; North Lake for $1.5 million; and the list goes on.

Mr. Forrestall: Whose ridings are they in?

Mr. Johnston: I could do the same thing with respect to Dartmouth-Halifax East, if the Hon. Member would like me to.

Mr. Forrestall: Don't bring that porkbarreling stuff on to the floor of this Chamber.

Mr. Johnston: I believe there will be an opportunity for questions at the end of my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There is a period provided for questions and comments. The Hon. Minister has the floor to make a speech.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I only have three minutes remaining, I would like to close with a few general remarks, leaving the specifics with respect to funding levels and other initiatives which have been taken to my colleagues who will be speaking today.

All Hon. Members should bear in mind that Canada is the sum of all the regions and it is represented by the Government of Canada. It is not a government for Ontario and Quebec; it is a government for Canada.

The establishment of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was a very creative initiative. It was established to address this heartland-hinterland syndrome. It was a specific department with a specific fund to address infrastructure requirements, primarily of disadvantaged regions. That was done. As I said, I suspect that department enjoyed a fair degree of support from many Members on both sides of the House because of the initiatives which were undertaken.

However, is it right in the long term, once that infrastructure is in place, to say that there will be a department responsible for economic and regional development in the regions and to ask what are the responsibilities or mandates of the other departments? Of course it is not right. That department had a mandate and it was carried out. The time has come to ensure that the full complement of government departments is sensitive to, and plan for, all regions of Canada. That is what has happened, and it is the thrust which must be maintained and pushed forward. In the past departments have often been criticized for not being sensitive. Regional offices have said: "Well, that is DREE's problem, go and talk to DREE about that". This reorganization is attempting to bring all departments into a more coherent system, all with regional sensitivity. I suggest that that is being accomplished. Far from backing off from regional development, it is an initiative designed to move regional development forward further and faster than in the past.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Minister reconcile for the House his claim that the Government has not back-tracked from its commitment to regional economic development with two facts. First, in 1971-72 regional development expenditures constituted 1.8 per cent of the total federal budget. That percentage has gone down steadily ever since, to the point in 1983-84 where it is only .6 per cent. Second, and since he stressed the line departments, the Government has steadily slashed its subventions to the Atlantic region in the line departments, for example, transportation and health. The Minister will have to reconcile his claim with the elimination of the revenue guarantee component in established programs financing in 1982, that elimination having cost the Atlantic provinces about $90 million per year in revenues they otherwise would have received.

Also he will have to reconcile his claim with the fact that the application of six and five to the post-secondary educational component of established programs financing in 1983-84 and in 1984-85 will cost the Atlantic provinces a further $30 million.

Will the Minister rise and admit to Parliament, and through Parliament to the people of Atlantic Canada, that while the Government has made expenditures on such projects as the relocation of the Department of Veterans Affairs and while it has made subventions to such projects as the Atlantic Regional Veterinary College, it has been a consistent pattern of giving with one hand and taking with the other?

• (1200)

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept that at all. The fundamental regional support, of course, is through the transfers under the Fiscal Arrangements Act, which we did not even get into today. We have been talking about the regional fund. That fund, of course, is administered by the economic and regional development committee. We are talking about commitments under that fund.

The Hon. Member talked about the percentage of the budget today as opposed to 1971, or whenever the period was. He may be right; I do not have that number in front of me. But so what? Let us look at what debt service was in 1971. That is now part of our budget. I recall from the 1984-85 Main Estimates that of something like $98 billion, $20 billion is now going out on debt service. Clearly there has been a diminishment in all areas relevant to the total Government budget. Playing with figures in this manner does not accomplish anything. The question is whether there has been an increasing commitment to regional development both through a structural change and funding over the years, or there has not.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that the evidence is clear. It is readily apparent from the numbers which I have with respect to the regional fund that funding is being maintained at historical levels from the regional fund without even talking about the other initiatives in the line departments.

He mentioned the cutting of subsidies, as he referred to them. What about the multitude of programs of government that affect Atlantic Canada as they affect other regions? What about the Atlantic fishery? Should we talk about that in terms of how much money is going into regional development to restructure the fishery? Implementing the Kirby report, $198 million. I have not talked about that this morning. Let us not get into a battle of numbers of that kind.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is certainly using specious reasoning. He does not want to accept the fact that the percentage of the budget spent on overcoming regional development has gone down shockingly to 0.6 per cent. Let me point out to the Minister that in 1979-80, for example, the Government spent $76.2 million in Newfoundland under the heading of DREE and regional economic development expenditures. That is the most that was spent in Newfoundland in any year since the program began.

The next year it went down to $46.5 million, the year after down to $36.8 million. In 1983-84, last year, the Government spent only $31.4 million, despite the intervening inflation. This year the estimate is that it will spend $28 million, about one-third of what was spent in 1979-80. That has nothing to do with the debt. This is total dollars. We have had inflation in the meantime. To spend the same this year that we spent in 1979-80, taking inflation into account, the Government would need to spend about $142 million.

Can the Minister explain this fantastic decrease in spending in Newfoundland, which is the province that suffers most from regional inequality? While doing that, can he also explain the failure to pay attention to the Everett Senate Committee, 21 Senators who last year presented a study on Government policy on regional development? They asked the Government to reconsider the decision to abandon the general development agreements. They recommended against eliminating the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. They said that the thrust of the federal Government was to get more profile for itself and that that was counter-productive. They asked who will champion the cause of the least developed provinces in Canada once DREE has gone. They said they were apprehensive. They said that the termination of the general development agreements was a serious mistake, that the Government's reorganization, while paying lip service to regional disparity, will be focused on the main chance megaprojects.

They had all these criticisms, all of which have been borne out in the case of Newfoundland and the Atlantic region. What is the Minister's comment on those two matters, the fantastic decrease in spending in Newfoundland and ignoring the Senate report?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, starting with the Senate report, I have not ignored that report. In fact, I went into the Senate and, as I recall, discussed the report before the committee. If one looks at the report, it is clear that there was a misunderstanding of the Government reorganization. There was not an understanding of the role of the economic development coordinators, which I explained this morning. There was no wide appreciation of the development of economic development perspectives and the economic and regional development agreements that flowed from those perspectives.

I am not suggesting the Senate committee did it intentionally at all, but I do suggest that if it was to redraft that report today, the conclusions would be considerably different if it takes into account the testimony or the answers which I have given before committees of the House and Senate.

With respect to Newfoundland, we are again getting into a battle of numbers. My numbers do not seem to correspond with those of the Hon. Member. Let me point out that that too is falling into the trap which I tackled at the outset, namely that these sub-agreements under the general development agreements and agreements under the new economic and regional development agreements will all have cash flow which peaks at one time and then declines.

You have to look at the total spending over a five-year period. If you spend $30 million in year one, $50 million in year two and $75 million in year three, whatever it is, one would expect to see that tail off towards years four and five. For example, the regional development economic expenditures I have for Newfoundland show for 1980-81, $42.1 million, and in 1981-82, $39.3 million, the kind of decline I was speaking of as one comes to the end of the general development agreement.

The 1977-78 to 1981-82 average in Newfoundland was $53.5 million. We then move to 1982-83, according to my numbers, $49.3 million, 1983-84, $97.9 million and 1984-85 projected at $70.3 million. Once again, we are not talking here of all the other initiatives that have been taken in Newfoundland by various line departments, whether it is the National Research Council, the Fisheries Institute and so on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is time for one brief comment.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Minister gave an interview to Charlotte Montgomery which is printed on the front page of today's Globe and Mail. It states: "When Donald Johnston—"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is not in order to quote newspapers in the way the Hon. Member is doing. Displays are not allowed in the House. I invite him to put his question directly and forthrightly.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Minister made a speech in Halifax recently in which he was critical of the policy of the leadership candidates and the federal Government's past policies, the lack of economic policies and so on. The Minister came into the House today and said: "I get angry when I hear the Government has backed off its commitment to regional economic development". He feigns hypocritical anger. Is the Minister not being inconsistent in his speech today in view of his speech in Halifax? Is he not completely inconsistent? Is he not sort of like the piano player in a house of ill repute who, when found out, says: "I hear no evil and I see no evil; I just play the piano there"? The Minister has been in the Government. In Halifax he made a speech critical of the Government and then he gives a speech here for the Government. Is that not the height of hypocrisy?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair appreciates that the Minister may want to reply, but the time for questions and comments has expired. The Minister could reply only with unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, we are talking apples and oranges. Any speech I made in Halifax had nothing to do with the Government's policy on economic and regional development. The speech in Halifax speaks for itself. My comments this morning speak for themselves. The question is whether the Government has a strong and continuing commitment to economic and regional development. That is the thrust of the motion which has been presented by the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan). It is clear from the evidence that I have laid before the House this morning that it does have that commitment. That evidence will be supplemented by other Members on this side of the House during the course of the day.

• (1210)

With respect to the reference to a piano player, I do not know whether that was an oblique shot at me or not. However, I can say that there are a number of piano players on this side of the House. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) and the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin) are piano players. I would only like to point out that there are piano players on this side of the House but there seems to be a lot of brass and a lot of wind on that side of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to debate.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, speaking of brass and wind, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) just stood up to speak. For those who are tuning in to this debate, he will be speaking after me. They can then hear the brass section and the woodwinds. I know that his speech will be very interesting.

Mr. Crosbie: The bull fiddle is up right now!

Mr. Waddell: I have a few comments to make about regional economic development in light of the speeches that have already been made. I must say to the Minister that I hope he plays the piano better than he plays tennis. I noticed that his celebrated black eye is beginning to fade a little bit. I hope his leadership campaign is not doing the same thing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I invite the Hon. Member to address his comments to today's motion? He is talking about everything else.

Mr. Waddell: That is precisely what I am doing. I will talk about today's motion but I am just setting the stage, as it were.

I know that the Minister must leave the House, but before he goes I would like to say one thing to him. I think it does not matter if the program is called DRIE or DREE or DRIP or DRAG. The name of the program will not make any difference. What is basically happening is that the Government is throwing some token money into Atlantic Canada and then, through other policies, taking it out again. It is being removed by the transportation policies and even by some of the East Coast fisheries and by the bailing out of the Bank of Nova Scotia. What is needed is a completely different regional development policy. It seems to me that some of the capital from central Canada must flow into the regions. The Minister can read my speech in Hansard as I will be offering him some suggestions on how he can do that.

The motion of the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) criticizes the DREE program. He says that the Government's gutting of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has been a failure. In principle, the idea of changing the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was not all that bad. The notion of spreading the problem throughout all departments of government because it was everyone's problem rather than having one ghettoized department was basically a good notion. It had some potential on paper. However, we must understand what the Government has done with the DRIE program. The Government has in fact created a way to pump money into Liberal seats in central Canada. It has created a way to increase grants in a political fashion and a way to pump money into seats that could be won in central Canada. The way the program has been implemented has been the real tragedy for the regions.

The Government changed DREE to DRIE in order to give Liberal incumbents a better chance by putting more money into their constituencies. Once again, those moneys have been concentrated in central Canada. The Government says that this is being done because different constituencies have different disparities and that is the way to give them money. However, this results in more money being channelled in a very political way. The DRIE program has been the most political of all programs and that has been its great failure. It has been a boondoggle patronage program. That is the sad thing about it.

The Hon. Member for Hillsborough correctly pointed out that regional development was a high priority of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he assumed office in 1968. However, that priority became warped and was then used for political patronage. From what I can gather, the people in Atlantic Canada should know something about political patronage. I am not from Atlantic Canada and I do not say this in order to downgrade Atlantic Canada, but it seems to me that successive Liberal and Conservative Governments have governed Atlantic Canada through the most gross forms of patronage and with the least amount of planning over the years.

I would like to say a couple of words about the speech of the Hon. Member for Hillsborough. He said that living in the regions of Canada was like living in a different country. I am glad that within that statement he included not only Atlantic Canada but western Canada as well. As a westerner, I can sympathize with that. We sometimes feel as though we are being treated almost as second-class citizens and foreigners in Canada. That has been one of the greatest failures of the Prime Minister's years.

There have been some successes in bringing the French language and the French fact to Canada and in giving it some real influence and power in Ottawa. I consider that to be the great success of the Prime Minister's years. However, one of the great failures of those years has been the increased alienation of the regions. It is not difficult to figure out why this has happened. The Government's policies have lumped all of the money in central Canada. In a moment I will discuss how some of the Atlantic regions have been hurt by that.

The Hon. Member for Hillsborough said he wanted to be fair. I would put a question to him about social Darwinism or the survival of the fittest. I do not know where he has been lately but he should listen to some of the dinosaurs in his own caucus. Day after day, Hon. Members like the Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) and the Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) get up to speak. The Hon. Member for Hillsborough should listen to them. If he did, he would understand the kind of neo-conservatism that promotes the survival of the fittest companies without government intervention. That will not work in Atlantic Canada.

The Conservative Party advocates certain policies, but what are those policies? Conservative members wanted Senate reform for regional economic expansion. Although the Hon. Member did not mention it, that was one of the offerings of Conservative members. It has been mentioned in the past that Senate reform will somehow solve our regional problems. It seems to me that that will not solve anything.

Another suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Hillsborough was that the chairs be changed, as it were. He suggested that if we throw out the Liberal black hats and put in the Conservative white hats, it will suddenly make a great deal of difference. The reason I put the question of free trade and John A. Macdonald's policies to the Hon. Member is that it seems to me that over the years Conservative policies if anything have hindered the development of Atlantic Canada.

I would like to say one more thing about the Hon. Member's resolution. He bemoaned the lack of federal-provincial co-operation. We all want to see federal-provincial co-operation. Alexa McDonough, the Leader of the New Democratic Party in Nova Scotia, said that provincially and federally the NDP is committed to regional development based on co-operation controlled by and for the people of Atlantic Canada. This has been said by a number of people in a number of ways.

Since I do not come from Atlantic Canada, perhaps I can afford to be a bit more frank in this debate than some of the other Members. As I see it, the problem with federal co-operation with Atlantic Canada is that the provincial governments in Atlantic Canada are such bad governments.

Mr. McMillan: Oh, come on.

Mr. Waddell: They are very poor governments. They have never had very much of a concept of planning. Many of their policies are strictly based on patronage. I am not being holier than thou. I know we have not had the best governments in the world in the Province of British Columbia. To be frank, I would like to see regional co-operation and federal-provincial co-operation. However, when we have that kind of co-operation with the present goverments in Atlantic Canada, we end up with worse programs. I believe the record will show that.

Mr. McMillan: What is the record? Give me one example.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member wants an example. Look at the growth record which he gave for Atlantic Canada and the economic problems which exist. The fact is that regional policies have not worked very well in Atlantic Canada.

• (1220)

Mr. McMillan: Give me one example of patronage.

Mr. Waddell: If the Hon. Member does not know one example of patronage in Atlantic Canada, he should go to the region during an election campaign. The last time I was in Nova Scotia during an election, it was getting very hot in the car because they were paving the highway beneath us. They paved it into the Hon. Member's riding because they wanted him to win.

With reference to the Hon. Member's motion, I would like to comment on federal-provincial co-operation. One of the great things which Atlantic Canada needs is capital inflow. What exists there is capital outflow. Nova Scotians, I am told, save much money. A lot of them, being of Scottish background like my ancestors and myself, are great savers. Much of the money that is invested in savings goes out of the Atlantic provinces. If we want real regional economic development, we must find ways of putting money into the Atlantic provinces.

Instead of talking about DREE and DRIE and debating what is happening in their particular programs, we should focus on putting money into the region. That means looking at the banks. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) talked about that. He spoke about decentralizing the banks. He only touched on it, he did not go into that idea very much. I do not think it is enough to speak only of regional offices and banks. We should be talking about taking over public ownership of at least one of the major charter banks in Canada. Then we should direct that money toward those regions and toward the small-businessmen. That would be a change in economic development. That would be a really different regional economic development program.

Mr. Crosbie: A real Canadair that would be.

Mr. Waddell: Well, I suggest to the Hon. Member that when we consider the record in Atlantic Canada by both Conservative and Liberal Governments, we see what has happened since Confederation, and we see the outflow of brains and capital, it may be better to consider taking a more radical approach toward the area.

I would like to quote some remarks which were made at a regional meeting in New Glasgow by Mr. Jim Mayne, the NDP Leader in Prince Edward Island, Mr. Peter Fenwick of Newfoundland and Labrador, George Little of New Brunswick and Alexa McDonough of Nova Scotia. They issued a statement about economic development in Atlantic Canada and I would like to read parts of that statement. They indicated—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am afraid the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) may find the present occupant of the chair rather obnoxious this morning because I have had to call him to order on a number of occasions. There is a rule regarding quotations in the House of Commons. The Hon. Member may, of course, want to quote and cite the source of his quote, but persons outside of the House are not part of the debate in the House. If the Hon. Member chooses to quote those comments that he has alluded to, he should make those quotations his own words. I should caution him about that.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, you will note that I do not give my speeches out of a departmental memo, as Ministers do and then read them. I am incorporating, as part of my speech, some remarks and ideas made by people from Atlantic Canada. As I do so, I do so indirectly, and I will do that.

The idea which has been advanced is that the federal Government has given up the pretence of stimulating eocnomic development in Atlantic Canada as a federal priority. It has done this by dismantling DREE. I said that at the beginning of my speech. The difference between DREE and DRIE is that DRIE will stimulate more money for central Canada.

The people of Atlantic Canada deserve better than that. We require co-operation in Atlantic Canada in a completely different way. We must focus on different sectors of the area. That is the key which I have come to understand in western Canada. That is our key to economic growth. I think we should be focusing on the strengths of Atlantic Canada—on energy, shipbuilding, transportation and getting some manufacturing of primary resources into Atlantic Canada.

I would like to focus on shipbuilding. Shipbuilding has been our proudest tradition in Canada, and certainly in Atlantic Canada. If we carried more Canadian goods and required that more Canadians goods be shipped on Canadian-built ships, we could develop our shipbuilding industry. Offshore development will help the shipbuilding industry, but we must have a commitment and certain requirements that goods be purchased in Atlantic Canada and that shipbuilding be developed there. This country has been lacking a comprehensive shipping and shipbuilding policy. That is one area on which we could focus that would help Atlantic Canada.

With respect to transportation, if we want to develop the region, it seems to me that there must be a strong co-operative approach on the part of the Atlantic provincial governments to oppose any move to erode the Maritime Freight Rates Act. In my view it is their historic right under Confederation to have that assistance. It is of immense importance. It will maintain jobs and economic development in Atlantic Canada.

I have already made reference to the fisheries. I think it is scandalous that the Minister bragged about the money which is provided to East Coast fisheries, when $70 million of $90 million went to bail out the Bank of Nova Scotia. It is the same story—patronage, bail-outs, and the lack of dealing with the issue at root in Atlantic Canada. Energy is another area which requires proper development and co-operation on the East Coast.

In conclusion, I would like to point out that it is the same in British Columbia and Alberta as it is in Atlantic Canada. We must have a commitment from the federal Government much like the commitment of the Prime Minister to give Quebec its rightful place in Canada. We must have a commitment to develop the regions. We must have a commitment from the federal Government to provide capital for those regions. That is why it will take more radical measures than is provided by changing DREE to DRIE. It will require provincial governments that are prepared to plan, not just sell out to the nearest multinational company that wants to come in, promise some jobs and milk the province for all it is worth. Perhaps these are not popular things to say. Perhaps I will be criticized for saying them. However, I am trying to point out the truth as I see it. It is time politicians spoke the truth to the people of Atlantic Canada. Then maybe in the future we will see policies which will provide some real development for that region.

Mr. McMillan: The Hon. Member who just spoke made the worst and broadest generalization I have ever heard in debate on any subject in this House since I became a Member of Parliament in May of 1979, namely, that provincial governments in the Atlantic region are bad administrators. I think he might have said lousy administrators. In light of that, would the Hon. Member cite a single specific program which he considers maladministered by any one of the four Atlantic provinces? Apart from general references to patronage or to general economic conditions in the region, which specific program has been maladministered and in what specific way has that program been maladministered? How would the NDP have administered that specific program differently from the way it was administered by the relevant province?

Mr. Waddell: I assume the Hon. Member has been to Atlantic Canada, as he represents a riding in Atlantic Canada. I am calling it as I see it. For example, with respect to snow clearing, if another government gets in, different people have the contract. Highways contracts change. There is a tradition of a kind of old-fashioned patronage down there which has died out somewhat in other parts of the country.

It seems to me that Atlantic Canada has lousy governments which have not served their people very well. I believe they have contributed to the lack of development there. For example, I believe Premier Peckford in Newfoundland has been a disaster in going to court on the question of offshore oil, spending all his time in court and not hammering out some sort of agreement with the federal Government. I do not believe that has served the interests of the people of Newfoundland.

It seems to me from afar that those governments would rather fight in very partisan talking fests which really do not get down to planning for the issues. I mentioned the example of multinational companies moving in, giving the people all sorts of breaks, including bad labour contracts or lack of unions and so on. They get into a situation where they are governed almost like a Third World country.

These are tough words but I believe someone should say what is going on down in Atlantic Canada. From my observation, I have never seen worse governments in Canada than in some of the Atlantic Provinces in the way they deal with their resources and mislead their people; and I make reference to Premier Buchanan with respect to the development of offshore oil and gas in Nova Scotia, which I believe is atrocious. I hope at some point the people of Atlantic Canada will throw these governments out. Whether they are Conservative or Liberal Governments they have not really provided decent development and decent planning for the people of Atlantic Canada. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. If the Hon. Member would just read his own speech about some of the economic problems in Atlantic Canada, he will see the evidence there.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who just finished speaking has made some of the broadest generalizations and most scurrilous imputations with respect to four of the governments of Canada and has yet to give us one concrete example. Does the Hon. Member realize that during the Peckford administration—and he may think it is an error in its approach to try to resolve the offshore issue—there has not been one instance of patronage or excess brought to public light in respect of that government yet? Does the Hon. Member not realize that the Government of Canada is rife with every symptom which he is alleging applies to the four Atlantic Provinces with respect to patronage on a gigantic scale across the country? Yet he sees fit to single out with a blanket indictment the four governments of the Atlantic Provinces. Surely that must be the reason why there is not a provincial representative from the New Democratic Party in Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick.

Does the Hon. Member not realize that this is the kind of smug, mainland attitude which the Atlantic Provinces have had to fight against now for a hundred years? And he is giving vent to the worst kind of ignorant prejudice in his remarks without putting forth one iota of evidence to sustain it.

Mr. Waddell: I take offence at the allegation of "smug, mainland attitude". I told the Hon. Member that I call them as I see them, as someone who has not taken part. The Conservative Party has been part of those governments, those poor governments. The Hon. Member who just spoke was a part of the Liberal Government there and he jumped ship—

Mr. Crosbie: I am Conservative—both.

Mr. Waddell: —both of them. He reratted, moved from one over to the other and back.

Mr. Crosbie: No, one to the other. Reratting comes later.

Mr. Waddell: Well, he has not done that yet. The fact is, and I stand by it, that the Peckford Government was wrong in dealing, I believe, with its negotiations in offshore oil, and it has not really produced for the people of Newfoundland. I do not know how the Hon. Member himself feels, but I believe if he looks at it objectively, he will see that there have been problems in not getting that development going. I blame partly the Peckford Government, although not entirely.

I cannot say—and I did not say—that the federal Government is not giving patronage and so on. I pointed out that the DRIE program in fact leads to greater patronage and that the DREE program was always infested with patronage. I just said, and I will stand by it, that there has been a difficulty in getting some of the programs going with the provincial governments there because they have not run the programs very well. They have not been particularly well planned governments in dealing with industry in the provinces. I stand by that; and if it hurts to tell the truth, then it may hurt, but it is the truth.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there further questions or comments? The House will now proceed to debate.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to deal any further with the remarks of the last speaker because I only have 20 minutes, except to say that I am surprised and disappointed at that particular Hon. Member making those kinds of sweeping statements and generalizations without being in the position to offer any particulars or any proof. I am surprised by him and disappointed with him. However, I do not have the time to spend any further on the subject of the offshore oil, or his allegations.

I might say that it is a disappointment also, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister, who is responsible for overcoming regional disparity in this country, made his own speech and then left this Chamber. It is not very often that regional disparity, and the attempts to overcome it, are debated in this Chamber. We have a chance today for debate because the Opposition chose this day to discuss these very real problems about Atlantic Canada. But the Minister most involved has made his own speech and gone, and there is not here in this House one other Minister of the Government to listen to what we are saying or to attempt to rebut us, or anything else. Mr. Speaker, this illustrates the fact that this Government has even given up any pretence of an attempt to overcome regional disparity in this country.

The Minister who did speak is supposed to be one of the intellects; he is the thinker. He is the Rodin of the Liberal Party, we are told. Well, the Gallup poll today shows us how high he stands. It says 30 per cent of the public would back Turner; 21 per cent, Chrétien; 2 per cent, Roberts; 1 per cent, Munro; 1 per cent, MacGuigan; and only 0.5 per cent would support this alleged thinker of the Liberal Party. That will show you how greatly Liberals esteem thinkers.

This is a motion, Mr. Speaker, which is most serious in its intent. I am going to produce some impartial authority to show how this Government has decided to give up on the battle to overcome regional inequalities across Canada. I want to start by referring to an article by Barry Lesser entitled "Regional Development Matters", in Policy Options of November, 1983, which deals with this subject. I want to give some quotations from this article:

> Regional disparities measured in terms of earned incomes have not been substantially reduced—

And that is over the years since 1968.

> —except to the extent that the oil-producing Prairie provinces have gained.

In other words, with respect to "earned incomes", nothing has been gained in this whole so-called battle against regional disparities since the federal Government took up that battle, starting with the present Prime Minister's statement of 1968. The article goes on to point out:

> Second, and most important, unemployment has become a national problem; it is no longer confined to pockets within less developed regions.

It was thought that unemployment was a regional problem in the 1960s. However, under the aegis of this Government, unemployment has become a national problem. It is no longer considered to be a regional problem. It applies right across the country, although it is worse, of course, in the Atlantic Provinces, and in my own Province of Newfoundland it is worst of all. The article continues with another conclusion:

> In 1968 when the Department of Regional Economic Expansion (DREE) began, its expenditures represented 2 per cent of the federal Budget. In 1980-1981, DREE expenditures were 1 per cent of the federal Budget.

We have already referred to other statistics. Since 1980-1981 there was 1 per cent of the federal budget spent in the battle to overcome regional inequalities. In 1981-1982, 0.9 per cent only; in 1982-1983, 0.6 per cent. Last year, 0.6 per cent. That will show you, Mr. Speaker, how the Government's interest in DREE has diminished and how its spending on DREE has diminished in no uncertain terms, just as this article points out.

● (1240)

Mr. Lesser says the Government's commitment has declined. He then goes on to mention that in January, 1982 the federal Government announced a reorganization. A new ministry, that of DRIE, and another new ministry, that of MSERD, were created. He says the implications of this reorganization are still to be determined. Superficially at least it seems to confirm the hypothesis of a lessening federal commitment to development in the "peripheral regions".

We are a peripheral region in the Atlantic Provinces, Mr. Speaker. It is very clear that there is a lessening federal commitment to developing the peripheral regions. He says that the new structure of these ministries creates the potential for a much greater centralization of decision-making which could mean less sensitivity to the concerns and needs of the region. That is just what has happened, Mr. Speaker. There is no sensitivity to the concerns and needs of the region. Decision-making is more centralized under the new structure.

The author points out that in 1970-71 the Atlantic Provinces accounted for 53 per cent of DREE expenditures. In 1980-81, the figure was 36 per cent. Now the Atlantic Provinces, as my colleague said earlier, are getting less and less of a diminishing amount. Only 36 per cent of all DREE spending in 1980-81 was in the Atlantic Provinces. The author points out that Newfoundland has fared particularly badly since 1980, probably because of the continuing political dispute between Newfoundland and Ottawa over the offshore. In other words, Newfoundland is being punished because it is standing up for its rights with respect to the control of offshore resources.

The author says that in constant dollar terms DREE expenditures in the Atlantic region fell—f-e-l-l—by 41.2 per cent between 1970-71 and 1977-78. Elsewhere in Canada they increased by 5.9 per cent. In the area that needs the money most, spending declined 41.2 per cent in constant dollars while elsewhere in Canada spending increased. Why? Because the DREE funds to overcome regional disparity were grabbed like they were garbage and scattered across Canada in other areas which the Government controls and where it thought it would do it more political good—in Quebec, Ontario and across the country. The money was no longer going to the areas that really needed it. By any objective standard it was just used as a grab bag across this country. That is what has happened, Mr. Speaker, and this article proves it.

He goes on to say that the Atlantic Provinces continue to be not only the relatively most disadvantaged provinces in Canada, but also the provinces which individually and collectively have the least ability to influence federal policy. That is obvious, Mr. Speaker. The representatives from those four provinces are the ones who have the least ability to influence federal policy. The votes are in central Canada, this is a government based in central Canada, and it does not give a good hoot about what happens in the "peripheral" regions of Canada. He quotes the late David Alexander of Memorial University who said that there must be some reason for having a country other than to provide a common market. It is possible, he said, to have a common market without having a country.

There must be some reason, Mr. Speaker, for this being one country. We in the Atlantic Provinces do not want to be just providing a market for the goods from central Canada. You can have a common market without having a country, so there has to be some other reason for our being a country other than just to provide a market for central Canadian goods, and for transfer payments so we can buy central Canadian goods.

The author says that a commitment to regional development in Canada and the sense of belonging to a country constitute a two-way relationship. Nationhood implies a commitment to development for all regions. A desire to develop a region may help to create a commitment to nationhood. That is a statement that I absolutely agree with, Mr. Speaker. This is an article worth perusal by any Member of this House. It supports our motion and the truth of our motion.

Just let me now look at Newfoundland and the punishment this Government meted out to Newfoundland because of its political dispute with the Government there. In 1979-80 it reached a high point: $76.2 million in spending. The next year, 1980-81, $46.5 million; 1981-82, $36.8 million spent under DREE; 1982-83, $34.9 million; 1983-84, $31.4 million. The estimate for the present year is $28 million. This is not just because the old programs were running out; the Government of Canada would not enter into new programs with the Government of Newfoundland because it wanted to punish Newfoundland for daring to stand up for what it felt to be its rights.

A ten-year general development agreement was signed in 1974. The federal Minister responsible for DREE said that $1 billion would be spent under that program. But all that was actually spent under that agreement and the 23 subsidiary agreements was $500 million, just 50 per cent of the expenditure level promised in 1974. Why? Because this Government decided to punish Newfoundland for taking an independent attitude on the offshore. That is why, Mr. Speaker.

In January, 1980 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went to Newfoundland to campaign. He said that the main message in the campaign is that to keep Newfoundland growing they have to get rid of the Crosbie Budget. That is what he said, Mr. Speaker. Well, they got rid of the Crosbie Budget that would have let Newfoundland grow. What happened in 1983? Why, the gross domestic product of Newfoundland was 2 per cent lower in real terms than it was in 1980. Unemployment in Newfoundland in 1980 averaged 13.3 per cent while we were in office and we had the Crosbie Budget. What did it average last year? Some 18.8 per cent. What is it in April of this year? Some 19.6 per cent. So much for the Prime Minister's guff that to keep Newfoundland growing we have to get rid of the Crosbie Budget. If we had had the Crosbie Budget, Newfoundland would have been growing today as it would have grown for the last four and a half years.

He then went on to say that they have not let Newfoundland down in the past and they will not in the future. All that Prime Minister has done for the last four and a half years is let Newfoundland down.

What was the fourth plank of the Liberal economic platform in the election? It was to build greater economic strength in each region of the country as the basis for over-all Canadian prosperity. That was the commitment. Has the Government done that? No, it has done away with DREE and replaced it with DRIE, and reduced its spending and efforts in the past at overcoming regional disparity. I mentioned the Senate report Government Policy and Regional Development which pointed out the weaknesses in the present program but I do not have time to refer to it again.

In September, 1983 the Premier met with the Minister who spoke today. They agreed upon ten initiatives on which subsidiary agreements should be concluded over the last year. Only two of the agreements were signed, covering minerals and planning; there are eight outstanding. Rural development, not signed; pulp and paper mill modernization, not signed; transportation, not signed; ocean industries, not signed; tourism, not signed; agriculture, not signed; Burin Peninsula development fund, not signed; fisheries infrastructure, not signed. That is why there is only going to be $28 million spent in Newfoundland this financial year under the whole DRIE program. It should at least be $140 million to remain at the same level of effort as 1979-80.

The Government is not signing programs and I can give instance after instance. Here is an instance of the federal Government ignoring the provincial government. There is no consultation or co-operation, but there is unilateralism, centralization, publicity seeking, bullying and imperialist tactics, Mr. Speaker. One of a long list of examples of that was the synchrolift at the CN dockyards in St. John's. The Government refused to go ahead with a synchrolifter for their own dockyard and the Newfoundland Government had to provide the financing for a federal dockyard. There was the offshore mineral resources dispute. That is the only way that this region can be pulled up by its own bootstraps to become economically self-sufficient, yet the federal Government refuses to co-operate or to let the provinces have any say in the management and control of the resource.

• (1250)

With regard to search and rescue facilities, there should be a separate region for Newfoundland with a rescue co-ordination centre in St. John's and fixed-wing support and helicopters. But no, the federal Government will not permit that. It knows better.

The federal Government announced a minimum security prison at Donovan's Industrial Park in my district in the city of Mount Pearl in a former RCMP building. No one was consulted beforehand. The zoning does not permit it. I will quote from The Evening Telegram of November 25:

> Rompkey said Wednesday such a facility is long overdue in the province, but renovating an old building in the middle of an industrial park is "madness and an insult to the people of Newfoundland."

The Solicitor General of his own Government was doing this, but Rompkey said it was "madness and an insult". The article continues:

> Rompkey said it would not be done anywhere else in Canada—"certainly not in Toronto, which is Mr. Kaplan's area."

That is the kind of co-operation and conciliation we have with the federal Government in Newfoundland, one federal Minister attacking the other. In fact, the Newfoundland Minister was treated in a scurvy, despicable manner. He was kicked out of the federal Cabinet last August 12. Another Minister was put in who did not last 10 days because of certain income tax problems he had. Six months later the Minister of State for Mines, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), was reappointed. He has no authority in the Cabinet, Mr. Speaker. He has no muscle, influence or clout. He was treated like a piece of lint. He was flicked off the Prime Minister's shoulder and flicked back on again six months later. Is it any wonder we get nothing in Newfoundland? We are not even treated like a good, decent carpetbagger. That shows you how strong Newfoundland is in the councils of the federal Government.

In March of last year they closed the Shoe Cove satellite station. They centralized the facilities in Churchill, Manitoba. What do we think of the Liberals? "De Bané lied to shield Tory, top Liberal says". Mr. Neary, the Leader of the Opposition, called the Minister of Fisheries a liar, as reported in the March 16, 1984, Globe and Mail.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: My God, it is not over already, is it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No. Order. Would the Hon. Member please resume his seat? The Hon. Member cannot indirectly call another Hon. Member of the House a liar by virtue of quoting an article. The Hon. Member for St. John's West quoted from a newspaper article which quoted a person calling an Hon. Member a liar. As I am sure the Hon. Member for St. John's West knows, that is against the rules. I would ask him to withdraw that.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I would never call the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) a liar in this House. I am just saying that the Leader of the Opposition of Newfoundland called the Minister of Fisheries of Canada a liar. I am not agreeing with it—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am afraid the Chair cannot accept that. As much as I appreciate the course followed by the Hon. Member for St. John's West, it is basic in this Parliament that one Hon. Member, directly or indirectly, does not call another Hon. Member a liar. I would ask the Hon. Member to withdraw that statement unequivocally.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I unequivocally withdraw the statement.

They closed the satellite station which was at Shoe Cove. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), who now has 36 delegates in Newfoundland supporting him, closed the satellite station. The 11 employees were laid off. The station was taken apart and sent out to Prince Albert, Saskatchewan and Churchill, Manitoba to save money. This station provided meteorological data for weather forecasts and oceanographic information. It could determine where the ice was off the East Coast shoreline and so on. There are a thousand reasons why that satellite station should have stayed there, but the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources closed it and showed his lack of concern for Newfoundland. Now 36 Liberal delegates are going to support that satellite knifer when they go to the Liberal convention here in Ottawa.

The Bowater Pulp and Paper Mill is closing in Corner Brook in late 1984. The Newfoundland Government is trying to get the federal Government to help them find a replacement company. There are three or four companies interested in taking over the Bowater operation. Can the Newfoundland Government get the federal Government to make a commitment to put up some money to help modernize the plant? No. That matter drags on while a town of 25,000 people is in peril on the West Coast of Newfoundland with their pulp and paper mill scheduled to close this coming fall. They have gotten no co-operation from the Government of Canada. This is another example of lack of interest in the Atlantic Provinces.

A fishing agreement with the U.S.S.R. was entered into several weeks ago without provincial involvement, knowledge or approval. Fishing is the main industry of Newfoundland, Mr. Speaker. That is an example of failure to consult or co-operate. There was an imposition of spending restraints on the health and EPF programs which is going to cost Newfoundland a total of $30 million this year. The regional development association funding agreement was allowed to lapse and was not taken up again until just several weeks ago, Mr. Speaker.

We are waiting to hear whether the federal Government will provide some financing for a convention centre in St. John's. It has provided financing for nine convention centres in Canada. Funding has been provided to Vancouver, Edmonton, Windsor, Hamilton, Toronto, Montreal, Quebec City, Halifax and Charlottetown. St. John's badly needs a convention centre. There are plans for a hotel, office tower and convention centre to go ahead at a total cost of $36 million. The federal Government has been asked to provide $3 million. Hopefully, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will act in the next few weeks on that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I really regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his speaking time has expired. Questions or comments?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, although the motion which is before the House says that the federal Government did away with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, is the Hon. Member not aware that there have been substantial agreements signed with the Newfoundland Government recently and that blanket over-all agreements have been signed for the next 10 years? Does he not agree that these recent agreements will see substantial progress, economically speaking, in the Province of Newfoundland?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that for well in excess of one year the Government of Newfoundland has been attempting to get the federal Government to conclude certain agreements. There were 10 initiatives agreed upon last September. There have only been two agreements signed since, one on minerals and one on planning. There was an agreement signed the other day, an ERDA agreement. One must be an alphabetical genius to keep up with the initials that the federal Government thinks up. An economic and regional development agreement was signed which is just a general over-all umbrella agreement. There may or may not be anything done under that agreement.

I do know that at the present time there is only going to be $28 million spent in all of Newfoundland and Labrador this year under the heading of DRIE or DREE or ERDA or A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, J, K, L, M, N, O, P, Q, R, S, T, U, V, W, X, Y, Z. There will be only $28 million spent when six years ago over $76 million was spent. This shows what a feeble attempt your Government is making to do anything to help overcome regional disparity in Newfoundland and how ashamed you should be to be a member of that Party. You should not even offer to run down in Gander-Twillingate with such a record to run on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for St. John's West should address his remarks to the Chair. It being one o'clock, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

ORGANIZATION FOR ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION AND DEVELOPMENT

SECRETARY-GENERALSHIP—CANDIDACY OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, now is the time for all patriotic Canadians to come to the aid of a worthy cause. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), not wishing to be relegated to the backbenches by either John Turner or the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), or indeed to suffer an even more diabolical fate planned for him by the Tories after the next General Election, wants to become the Secretary-General of the OECD.

After the famous photo opportunity, Canadians will remember that the last time the Finance Minister became concerned with his own career it cost them $200 million. However, this should not prevent us from shipping him off to Paris. Being the closest thing to an aristocrat Canada has ever produced, he should fit right in. Paris's loss would be our gain.

The United States, in believing that a Canadian Liberal is far more of a left wing interventionist than French socialist Jean-Claude Paye whom they support, may be correct. But we must convince them that the removal of our friend, the Minister, from the North American continent would be as good for them as it is for us.

Canadians can, however, take heart. In the OECD sweepstakes our candidate appears to be winning by a nose.

FRANCO-MANITOBANS' RIGHTS

DISSIDENTS IN PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party has done it again. The Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has now expressed her approval of the destructive position on Franco-Manitoban language rights taken by Bud Sherman. What is really surprising is the assumption that this Party would admit avowed anti-Francophones among its members. Far from being anxious to repent, the Progressive Conservative Members are continuing their incredible crusade against the rights of linguistic minorities in Canada.

Among those taking this view in the Progressive Conservative Party are, first of all, the Conservative Members from Manitoba, and especially the Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie); second, the Member for Simcoe-South (Mr. Stewart); third, the Member for Kingston and the Islands who gave Mr. Sherman her approval yesterday; and fourth, the prospective Progressive Conservative candidate in Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

I find it hard to reconcile these attitudes with a statement by the Leader of the Official Opposition in which he made it clear he would tolerate no dissent within his party. It seems Canadians will soon have a chance to put a stop to the linguistic foolishness of Progressive Conservatives.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BROADCASTING OF PROCEEDINGS—CALL FOR RE-EXAMINATION

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might use this opportunity to suggest to Your Honour that we somehow bring into the mid 1980s the daily televising of the House of Commons, and especially this hour of statements and questions. This is your show, Mr. Speaker.

The House of Commons' broadcast service controls the way in which countless viewers perceive Parliament in action. Since 1977 televising the House of Commons has been treated like an electronic Hansard. I submit that this turgid, automated form of broadcasting our proceedings has outlived its usefulness in terms of enlightening Canadians on the parliamentary process. If anything, we are frustrating viewers because they cannot see or hear the true stuff of Question Period, as only the Hon. Member who is speaking can be shown on camera.

Broadcasting proceedings of the House of Commons is no longer experimental; after seven years it is a reality and a ritual with hundreds of thousands of Canadian viewers. As one who has both a working knowledge of television production and a love of Parliament, I am getting the seven-year itch. I feel that it is time for a re-examination of this system before the next Parliament.

May I suggest that the Chair set in motion an evaluation of what we can do technically, to sparkle up the production and perception of these proceedings. A special committee under Your Honour's chairmanship could obtain a political consensus on where we want to go and how we control the best daily hour-long television program from the nation's capital.

Let us demonstrate to Canadians how lucky we are to watch democracy in action, but let us give them the full picture.

S.O. 21

AIR TRANSPORT

LACK OF COMPETITION IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, Canadians in most cities are presently receiving air travel sales, while in Winnipeg, where the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) comes from, Winnipegers must pay high air fares and are not receiving the benefit of any sales. Yet the Minister just announced the deregulation program that is supposed to bring about reduced fares by virtue of competition.

There is no competition in the air market in Winnipeg. The Minister is only threatening the possibility of such service in Winnipeg, while his constituents continue to pay very high prices for air fares.

PARLIAMENT

THE OFFICE OF SPEAKER IN THE PARLIAMENTS OF THE COMMONWEALTH—NEW BOOK BY COMMONS CLERK ASSISTANT, PHILIP LAUNDY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to a book which will be published on May 21. Its title is The Office of Speaker in the Parliaments of the Commonwealth. Its publication was sponsored by the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, and its author is Philip Laundy, one of our two Clerk Assistants.

Although the author published a previous book on the office of Speaker in 1964, the forthcoming publication is the first to cover the subject on a Commonwealth-wide basis. It deals with the Speakership in some 40 countries, ranging from the great subcontinent of India to the tiny islands of the Caribbean and the Pacific. One chapter is devoted to the history of the office, but the emphasis of the book is on the contemporary Speakership in these widely separated nations.

The common parliamentary heritage of the Commonwealth emerges very clearly from the pages of this book. A great deal of original research went into its preparation, and the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association considers it to be a significant contribution to the literature of Parliament.

It is for this reason that a subsidy was made available from the working capital fund to enable this book to be published. The fund was established to promote projects of this kind, and to assist smaller Parliaments of the Commonwealth to develop libraries or book collections.

Those of us who have been closely involved in the activities of the CPA have seen for ourselves the vital role that it plays in strengthening the ties within this great family of nations. We have seen that "unity in diversity" is more than a phrase; it is a practical philosophy which forms the basis of the Commonwealth. This is the theme that emerges from Philip Laundy's book, and I commend it to the attention of all parliamentarians.

POTATO INSPECTION SERVICES IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, once again I would like to raise the issue of potato inspection on Prince Edward Island. The Prince Edward Island Women in Support of Agriculture have written to express their concern over the proposal by the federal Government to cut back on inspection services for potatoes. I must commend these women on their efforts to ensure that the potato industry is maintained and improved, not eliminated as the federal Government proposes.

I would like to impress upon the House the importance of the potato industry to the economy of Prince Edward Island. The potato industry on Prince Edward Island is as important to our economy as the wheat industry is to the West. Unless the quality of P.E.I. potatoes is maintained, we will no longer be competitive in the market, and will suffer great financial losses.

This is an Opposition day in the House. We are debating the Government's failure to counter regional disparity within the provinces of Canada. It is important for the Government to realize that, unless it takes action to assist the potato industry in P.E.I., it will be contributing to the present disparity in that province by negatively affecting the main contributor to the economy.

I urge that the Government take steps to realize the importance of the potato industry to the economy of P.E.I. and maintain the present level of potato inspection on the Island in an attempt to keep Prince Edward Island competitive in the potato industry.

MINES AND MINING

CAPE BRETON COAL MINING INDUSTRY—NEED FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, direct government involvement in ventures to assist regional industry is sometimes the only sensible course. The Cape Breton coal mining industry in Nova Scotia is a prime example.

The Government of Canada decided to participate in the coal mining industry in 1967 when the Cape Breton Development Corporation was established. While Devco has not enjoyed success in all its activities, the Corporation has provided employment for thousands of Nova Scotians in coal mining.

The disastrous fire on April 5, 1984, at No. 26 colliery ended the most extensive project in the Devco mining operation. This fire resulted in the tragic loss of a life, and immediately terminated the employment of 1,000 coal miners. These Cape Breton coal miners, together with thousands of other Nova Scotians whose jobs depend on the coal mines, are looking to the Government of Canada for help through its Crown agency, Devco.

• (1410)

Billions of dollars are spent by the Government to assist industrial activity in Canada, most recently in the aircraft industry. Nova Scotians, dependent on the Cape Breton coal mining industry, are merely asking the Government to honour its 1967 commitment, and provide a fair share of help to an industry in Atlantic Canada which needs and deserves assistance now.

HUMAN RIGHTS

RAOUL WALLENBERG—GRANTING OF HONORARY CITIZENSHIP URGED

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the League for Human Rights of the B'nai Brith, supported by the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, the Swedish-Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Chinese-Canadian National Council, and the Fédération Internationale des Droits de l'homme, have asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) to declare Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen of Canada, and I wish to add my voice in support.

Mr. Wallenberg is known throughout the free world for his heroic efforts in rescuing 100,000 Jews from death at the hands of the Nazis during the Second World War. After the war he was arrested, and has remained imprisoned in the Soviet Union. In 1957 the Soviets claimed that he had died. However, reports continue to surface indicating that Mr. Wallenberg is alive.

In 1981 Mr. Wallenberg was declared an honorary citizen of the United States of America, only the second foreigner accorded that honour. The other was Winston Churchill. He has been nominated several times for the Nobel Prize, and is again nominated this year.

The Soviet Union continues to practise the worst cultural genocide against its Jews that we have seen in years. The Secretary of State has a rare and important opportunity, both to honour an extraordinary man for his extraordinary courage and commitment to human rights, and to signal to the Soviets that Mr. Wallenberg and all those for whom he fought should be freed and allowed to leave. I urge the Minister to act immediately.

NEWSPAPER REPORT OF STATEMENT BY HON. FLORA MacDONALD

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I was a little upset about a recent statement by the Member for Kingston and the Islands, when she said there was room for opposing views on the controversial French language issue within the federal Progressive Conservative Party. Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party ought to make up its mind once and for all, if it intends to be honest with the Canadian people. It seems to me the Party's Leader has already said he would never tolerate any dissent on such basic issues in his party. Perhaps the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party should take this opportunity to clarify the situation once and for all. Perhaps he could also tell us whether he intends to run in Central Nova, or in Quebec, or elsewhere. Here again, he does not seem to know where he is going. He is quite welcome to run in the riding of Témiscamingue, if he is short of alternatives. We are ready for him! I would therefore ask the Leader of the Official Opposition to tell Canadians exactly what his position is on these two issues.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HUMAN RIGHTS

HOUSE OF COMMONS' REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S.S.R.

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, over the years there have been several Motions under Standing Order 43, and now under Standing Order 21, dealing with the plight of political prisoners in the Soviet Union. Most of these Motions received the unanimous consent of the House for action to be taken. Would it be possible for the First Commoner, the Hon. Speaker, to give the House a name by name update on the results of these actions?

Some of the individuals involved have apparently not been granted any kind of reprieve, nor even a lessening of their difficult conditions of imprisonment, and most, if not all, are suffering from serious health problems. Some of these individuals are relatives of Canadian citizens and as such should receive consideration under the Family Reunification Program.

However, regardless of who they are, these persons have put their lives on the line in defence of the principles of human rights and deserve our continued support and intervention, for as Dr. Andrei Sakharov once said: "Without human rights, there is no détente—no peace".

REFUGEES

REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS—ORAL HEARINGS PROGRAM

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, for several years the Government has been delaying a decision on the question of whether to allow oral hearings for people who claim refugee status. There are now about 12,000 people in Canada claiming refugee status, and less than 400 of them have benefited from a pilot project initiated by the Government a year ago.

This pilot project has been dramatically successful. It allowed refugee claimants to be heard directly by one or more members of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee. It has shortened the administrative time from an average of about 15 months to an average of about two months, to the great benefit of refugees and in some cases of their families, and to the benefit of the Department which must bear the expense of staff work and maintenance work for refugee claimants while they are awaiting a decision.

The program has been strikingly successful, yet the Minister continues to delay giving a report. He has promised repeatedly to report on that project, and on the question of whether all refugees will be allowed oral hearings in somewhat the same fashion. However, to this day he continues to be silent on the subject, and has suggested instead that all matters relating to refugees should be the subject of yet another report by yet another—

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately the Hon. Member's time has expired.

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—GUIDELINES ON USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Who is it?

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps it is one of the nine. On April 11 the Prime Minister was questioned about the use of government jets by Liberal leadership candidates. He said on that occasion that any flight strictly or essentially taken for partisan political purposes should not be taken at public expense. Could the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that his Department or that of the Minister of Transport is enforcing those guidelines in the interests of Canadian taxpayers?

Some Hon. Members: Who is going to answer?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, obviously, the intent of the guidelines in question must be observed. However, there is no evidence that could lead us to believe there was an infringement of these guidelines. If the Hon. Member has some specific examples to give the House, let him do so. Yes, there are guidelines in this respect, and we believe they have been, and ought to be, observed.

[English]

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, with specific reference to the Minister of Justice, by Friday of this week he will have spent three and a quarter hours in three days on government business. According to his campaign committee, the rest of the time was spent meeting delegates to the Liberal leadership convention. That is his business, but when he uses government jets to meet delegates, that is taxpayers' business. Has the Acting Prime Minister satisfied himself, or will he satisfy himself, that it was strictly and essentially necessary for the Minister of Justice to be using government JetStars during his current trip to the Maritimes?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice, as the Hon. Member acknowledged, had to use these planes to attend to Government business, namely that of his own Department. I asked the Hon. Member earlier to be more specific in his accusations, if he really has any, and to show how a Minister, in this case the Minister of Justice, could have made improper use of planes that are at the disposal of the Government. However, from his question it is clear that the Minister of Justice used the aircraft to deal with his own departmental business and to represent the Government. If on the same occasion he happened to meet delegates, it was probably a coincidence.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Now that my colleague is the Acting Prime Minister, perhaps he will be put on the mailing list.

CHARTERING OF JETSTARS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister and the House will know that John Turner continues to fly as a corporate director of Canadian Pacific. Putting aside that conflict of interest, what steps will the Government take in the future to ensure that when Cabinet Ministers charter JetStars, they are really doing it on government business and are not just off on a frolic of their own, as my colleague in the legal profession will understand?

● (1420)

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, this is an allegation and a very vague one. I have challenged the Hon. Member to give us a specific example of abuse or infringement of the guidelines. The guidelines are clear, they exist and we follow them. Unless we have something definite about infringement of these guidelines, no comments are necessary at all. It is the Government's intention to enforce these guidelines, to see to it that they are observed, and we believe that to date, all Ministers have observed them.

If the Hon. Member has a specific accusation, if he has a blatant example, let him tell the House. In that case we will investigate.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PETRO-CANADA—PURCHASE OF FURNITURE BY EXECUTIVES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, on Monday I directed some questions to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. They dealt with possible conflict of interest, again involving a considerable amount of the taxpayers' money. In the absence of the Minister I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. Has the Deputy Minister of Energy had an opportunity to make inquiries with regard to my question and concerns and, if so, can he indicate the results of those inquiries? Also, can he indicate whether corrective action will be taken so that these perceived conflict of interest cases will not occur in the future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the matter is still under investigation and that I can give no report at this stage.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST RULES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. There is an obvious perception that some individuals are profiteering unnecessarily at the taxpayers' expense. Does the Prime Minister plan to come forward with concrete solutions to these concerns by implementing a firm set of rules dealing with conflict of interest, not only for those within the Public Service but also for those employed in federal Crown corporations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, such rules exist. They exist within the Public Service, for Members of Parliament and, by extension, for anyone who works for the Crown. I repeat, this particular matter is under investigation. I cannot comment on it any further. In so far as promulgating conflict of interest guidelines in the future is concerned, the Hon. Member will know that just about a week ago we received the report on conflict of interest and the various guidelines, a report I asked of the committee chaired by the Hon. Mitchell Sharp. I think it would be proper for Parliament to consider that report and for a future Government to act on it.

TASK FORCE REPORT

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister could tell us when that task force report that he referred to will be tabled in the House.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to table it very soon. The delay cannot be more than just a few weeks. I certainly want to see it tabled well before the middle of June, but I cannot give a precise date. I will take notice of the question and will attempt to answer it at the beginning of the week.

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM

PURCHASE OF FOREIGN MANUFACTURED OFFSHORE DRILLING RIGS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

[Translation]

Two offshore drilling rigs are now required on the East Coast. This project could create 1,000 new jobs in Canada. Could the Minister inform the House why the Government is maintaining a tax system under which oil companies can obtain subsidies to purchase offshore drilling rigs in Japan or in Korea?

Why use the Canadian taxpayer's money to create jobs abroad, when we can build rigs right here in Canada, in Lauzon, Quebec or Saint John, New Brunswick?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for asking his question in French, but I did not really grasp what he said, and I am not sure whether it is something that concerns my Department. If it does, I did not understand every aspect of his question. I think he asked a question about Government funds being used to support a project to purchase required equipment abroad instead of doing so in Canada. I had the impression, but I may be wrong, that the Hon. Member was referring to a program that is administered by another Department, and not by mine. If he is agreeable, I am prepared to take his question as notice and provide an answer later on.

USE OF SUBSIDIES TO CREATE JOBS OUTSIDE CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain my point again, this time in the other official language, for the Minister's sake.

[English]

The program I am referring to is the PIP grant program. The Minister is responsible for employment. He is a Minister of the Crown. In terms of his responsibility for jobs, does he agree with the policy which makes it possible for companies in Canada to obtain subsidies through the taxpayers of Canada to purchase equipment which, if produced here rather than abroad, could mean 1,000 jobs for Canadians? In other words, should Canadian workers through the tax system be providing subsidies to create jobs in Japan or Korea when those projects could be carried out, to name only two places, in the region of Quebec City or Saint John? Why are we not using Canadian taxpayers' money to create jobs for Canadians instead of abroad?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The question was better in the other official language.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is true the question is a bit more comprehensible in the other official language than it was in French. It still deals with a program which is essentially the PIP program, which is not within my area of jurisdiction. If the Hon. Member is asking whether it is appropriate for the Government of Canada to expend public funds to create employment in Canada, the answer is yes. We are already doing that. We are spending over $1 billion of government funds this year for direct employment creation within the Canadian economy. If he is asking whether I support the PIP program as it is applied by the Minister responsible for it, the answer is that up until this point, yes I do.

Mr. Broadbent: So much for Canadian jobs.

REQUEST THAT SUBSIDIES BE USED FOR CREATION OF JOBS IN CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister, who has ultimate responsibility for this program. I am sure the Prime Minister is aware of all the details of what goes on in his Government. The Government's PIP program enables corporations to get a subsidy from the Canadian taxpayer if they purchase equipment abroad, even if that equipment is available in Canada. Does the Prime Minister agree that the Canadian taxpayer should be providing subsidies for the creation of jobs abroad, especially when those jobs could be provided here in Canada, whether in Quebec, New Brunswick, or shipyards in British Columbia? Does it not make sense to abandon those subsidies for the creation of work abroad, and ensure that any subsidy used for the creation of jobs is used in Canada when the product can be produced in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is starting an ideal position, I would agree with him. I do not know if he is thinking of any particular case, but we would have to look at whether in practice you were in effect creating jobs or not. If the effect of forcing a corporation that is the recipient of grants to buy some of its supplies in Canada would be that the corporation cannot operate because it is not competitive, I would say that is a case where we had better keep the corporation competitive and operating, creating the jobs it can, rather than deny the very rationale of the grants, which is to create jobs, by forcing the company to take them on conditions which make it inoperable.

FISHERIES

SALE OF COD BLOCKS TO UNITED STATES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries, but some 20 Cabinet Ministers are missing.

Some Hon. Members: Where's Brian?

• (1430)

Mr. Crosbie: Where is Pinocchio? In the absence of 20 Ministers, my question is directed to the Minister who is responsible for foreign trade. That is Gerry Regan.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: I am sorry.

Some Hon. Members: Where is Brian?

Mr. Crosbie: I will ask my question when the clowns cease their braying, Mr. Speaker.

I trust that the Hon. Minister will be aware that the sale of cod blocks in the United States is endangered by the fact that the price has now descended to 85 cents a pound, the lowest price it has been in many years. The entire Canadian fishing industry is in danger.

Could the Minister advise the House what he sees as being the prospects for the sale of fishery products, particularly cod blocks, in the United States? Is the Government contemplating using the Fishery Prices Support Board to attempt to assist producers and fishermen so that the price of cod blocks does not cause a cessation of the entire eastern Canadian fishery this year?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has mentioned the problem of fluctuating prices for Canadian fish, and particularly for cod blocks in the American market. As a representative of Newfoundland he will be keenly aware of the different factors that affect the price in the Boston market, in particular.

I am sure he is aware of the fact that the softness of European currencies in relation to the strong level of the Canadian dollar is a factor that has led to sales of fish from European countries in the American market. This has depressed the price, and has to some degree tended to set the price and force the Canadian price downward. That, of course, is a problem that is difficult to address because it does involve the fluctuation of international currencies. The question of what can possibly be done by way of support prices is one which I would be happy to explore with the Ministry of Fisheries and Oceans on behalf of the Hon. Member.

IMPORTANCE OF COD FISHERY TO NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the same Minister in the absence of 20 other Cabinet Ministers who are out around the country and are not here doing the job they are supposed to do.

Some Hon. Members: Where is Brian?

Mr. Crosbie: Because of the failure—the Minister is having difficulty hearing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Because of the failure of cod block prices this year, the cod fishery in Newfoundland is being endangered. Many hundreds of fishermen may not find a firm to which they may sell cod this year. The Government has a heavy fiancial involvement in Fishery Products International Limited, as well as in National Sea Products. Is the Government prepared to advance further sums of money to Fishery Products International Limited so that it may meet its losses and continue to buy all codfish offerings from the inshore and offshore fishery of Newfoundland, thus ensuring that there will be a market for fishermen this year?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I rise to answer the hon. gentleman's question in the presence of 11 empty seats in the front benches of the Conservative opposition, at a time when the Leader of the Opposition is not present and they have a total of about 35 or 40 Members in the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair would simply observe that the practice of calling attention to the presence or absence of Hon. Members is not the custom of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: I certainly follow the lead of the Chair in that regard, but I had been following the example set by my esteemed colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's West.

May I turn more directly to the subject matter by saying that I am keenly aware of the importance of the cod fishery to the welfare and the survival of the people of Newfoundland inasmuch as some of my ancestors in Newfoundland depended upon that livelihood for a very long period of time. I might simply add that I am sure that in those days my ancestors had the opportunity to use the services of the merchants of Water Street who, of course, were the ancestors of the Hon. Member.

I would only say to the Hon. Member that the question of any further direct support for the company that he mentioned, the existence of which has been saved by the policy of the Government which gave it a very generous infusion of funds, is one that I would want to bring to the attention of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I would be happy to do that for my hon. friend.

NATIONAL REVENUE

PRIVACY COMMISSIONER'S REPORT ON DEPARTMENT'S ACTIVITIES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Revenue. The Privacy Commissioner has completed his report on the attempt by Revenue Canada to gain access to the computerized data base in the City of Kitchener. He found that if the Department had secured this information it might very well have violated Sections 10 and 11 of the Privacy Act, and he said that the Department's request to Kitchener was characterized by casualness and carelessness. I would like to ask the Acting Minister what specific actions the Department proposes to take as a result of the Privacy Commissioner's report.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister is not present in the House today, I will take notice of the question and bring it to his attention.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, that is certainly an improvement on the answers we normally receive.

DEPARTMENT'S POWERS OF SEARCH AND SEIZURE

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister because it is a concern of such importance. I would do so if I could have the Prime Minister's attention.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, it appears as if the lights are on but nobody is home over there.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member ask his question?

Mr. Beatty: In view of the fact that it should now have become as evident to the Government, as it is to most observers, that Section 231 of the Income Tax Act gives the Department such sweeping powers of search and seizure that it poses a very grave threat to the civil liberties of Canadians, is the Prime Minister prepared to undertake to have introduced in the House, prior to summer recess, amendments to Section 231 of the Act which would constrain those powers of search and seizure and bring them back into line with the basic civil liberties of Canadian taxpayers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member complimented the Parliamentary Secretary for his very good answer and said that it was an improvement on previous answers. I would only want to echo the words of the Parliamentary Secretary, and thereby share in the compliments of the Hon. Member.

EMPLOYMENT

GRANT MADE TO CANADIAN ALLIANCE FOR ITALIAN INTEGRATION AND CULTURE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On February 14 I raised and documented in the House the matter of a grant of $583,000 that he made to the Canadian Alliance for Italian Integration and Culture. I now have in my possession two letters from the National Congress of Italian Canadians, Toronto District, indicating that the Minister met with that group and agreed to scale the grant down to one-third of its original amount, and that he would meet with Mr. Joe Volpe to work out the details. Would the Minister confirm that he had that agreement with the Italian Canadians, and would he also confirm that he changed his mind and is now giving them the entire grant of $583,000?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. gentleman the confirmation that he seeks. It is true that I met with the group to which he referred and we discussed whether or not it would be possible for there to be a reduction in the amount of the grant. I indicated that I would support the reduction if it was possible for the various interested parties to work out an agreement about it. However, at no point did I say that I would impose such a reduction on the Alliance which received the grant.

The Hon. Member is incorrect in asking me to confirm his comment. I cannot do that because that is not an accurate picture of the commitment I made. Many weeks ago we did indicate that the original grant was confirmed after not one but two assessments and reviews were undertaken by the civil servants in my Department to see whether or not there was justification for the grant that was given. The report made by my Department's officials indicated to me that indeed there was such justification.

• (1440)

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL CONFIRMATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): On February 14 the Minister said:

I can assure him—

That is me.

—that there is not a political determination in the decision-making process when I approve or reject a proposal or project.

Would the Minister confirm that Mr. Joe Volpe, the person he spoke of meeting about the grant, on May 11 declared that he was a leader of a block of delegates who threw their support to him as leadership candidate for the Liberal Party? Would the Minister also explain to the House, and to the Canadian people, the ethics of his spending $583,000 of our money to buy 25 votes for his leadership aspirations?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm the first statement, that is to say, when the decision was taken on the grant to the Canadian Alliance for Italian Integration and Culture, I was not aware of the political affiliations of the people who were presented with that grant. That is a matter of fact.

With respect to the second part of the reference, I would have to check to see what it is. However, the fact of the matter is that when the grant was approved I was not aware of the political affiliation of the people concerned.

TRADE

IMPORTATION OF KOREAN AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, in the light of your earlier admonition I will go directly to the Minister responsible for International Trade. The Government has apparently already rejected the automobile task force study in favour of negotiated automobile restraint sales by Japan in Canada. This being so, may I ask the Minister what justification there is in the Government's encouragement of the dumping, duty free, of Korean automobiles into Canada? Is it anything less than something which would impair the negotiations with Japan? And is it anything but contrary to Canada's idea of fairness and fair trade?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain to Joe—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: —to the Hon. Member, that the situation is much more complex than the way he has presented it. Canada has always, like many other developed countries, given some preferential tariff treatment to those countries which are undeveloped and are attempting to pull themselves up by their own boot straps. This has been a general policy. Korea has benefited from that policy in a number of ways. In the past it did not export any motor cars to Canada. Indeed, it was only recently that it started to do so. This year the Pony has entered the Canadian market and it is anticipated that fewer than 10,000 will be sold in Canada in the current year.

If Korea becomes a very serious entrant into the Canadian market, the question of how those special policies affect it as against other exporters of motor vehicles to Canada, will have to be very seriously examined by the Government. There is no question about that. However, we are in the position that at the present time the only quota restrictions on the importation of vehicles into Canada are those that apply to Japan, based upon the fact that the Japanese had achieved such a serious percentage incursion into the Canadian market without having made any significant investments here.

What we want to do in relation to the Japanese is to continue our negotiations, which the Minister of Industry has been carrying on, in order to bring about Japanese investment in our market, if it is going to share in it to such a large degree.

Other European car manufacturers which have a very small place in our market, like the Koreans, are not subject to quantitative restrictions.

EFFECT ON CANADIAN AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I want to remind him that jobs and unemployment are still at the top on the agenda of concerns of Canadians. Might I also add that the concern of the automobile industry is a matter of major importance. Where is there any fairness in admitting into this country these Korean automobiles which sell for less here than in the country of their origin? Will the Minister keep in mind that there is an automobile industry out there which is concerned with the inroads made into our domestic market by the Japanese and other foreign manufacturers, especially when I hear the Minister accepting the position that the Government will encourage the dumping of automobiles into Canada?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member heard me encouraging the dumping of cars into Canada, then he was listening to the wrong sound system. I believe he was tuned into the wrong station. That is not the case at all. And it is the first suggestion I have heard that there is any element of dumping in the pricing of the Korean Ponys in this market.

However, in relation to the reference which the Hon. Member made to the Canadian automobile industry, I believe if he takes the time to go and speak to the principal people involved in that most vital of industries, they will tell him how far employment has come back in that industry as a result of the policies of this Government. They will point out to the Hon. Member the phenomenal increase in the number of motor vehicles sold this year over last year. I believe they will also tell him that the Government is working very closely with the industry, and the unions, in seeing to it that they continue to receive, for a period of time, the protection which is necessary while they modernize and become even more competitive than they have been in the past.

GRAIN FREIGHT RATES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Recently the Minister of Transport said that people should come first, and railways second. In the light of that statement may I ask the Minister of Agriculture how he can ensure that western Canadian farmers can be guaranteed that claim by the Liberal Party when grain freight rates are rising so dramatically, contrary to the projections under the Western Grain Transportation Act, and much to the benefit of the Government and the railways?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member forgets some aspects and parts of that Bill which are very important. That Bill also allows farmers to ship speciality crops. Where previously they have paid as high as $50 a tonne to ship to Thunder Bay or Vancouver, the rate now, Mr. Speaker, for those crops, including canola seed—which is second in importance to wheat—costs $7.50. From Saskatoon to Thunder Bay, and from Saskatoon to Vancouver, it costs $5.50. It cost over $45 a tonne before, so there are tremendous savings and benefits there. The increases the Hon. Member says are involved are not as great as he intimates to the House, according to the figures I have.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I am clearly disappointed with the answer of the Minister and his approach. What we are looking for is some assurance from the Minister that the farmers' interests will be protected from open-ended, escalated rail freight rates. How can the Minister ensure that this will be done? And how can farmers have any confidence in the Liberal Party when the Minister of Transport is serving as the policy adviser to Mr. John Turner, who is an active director of the CPR; when the former Chairman of the CPR, Mr. Ian Sinclair, was appointed to the Senate by the Liberal Government, and when you have Mr. Jack Horner, the former Chairman of CNR, heading the Grain Transportation Agency? I want to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he is taking this into account. Is he recommending any action to ensure that the interests of the producers will be preserved? And what action, if any, is the Minister going to take before the end of June?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my very action in entering a certain contest should be enough to show the Hon. Member the concern I have for farmers.

MULTICULTURALISM

FUND GRANTING PROCESS IN ONTARIO

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. It has to do with a memo from the Ontario Regional Director to the Assistant Under-Secretary of State for Regional Operations. It concerns the grants batching process as it pertains to the whole area of multiculturalism. The memo indicates that comments on Ontario's September and November batches, which is the money going out to various groups in Ontario, would indicate that the headquarter's review is neither coherent nor accurate. It goes on to say that the strongest reservations about the use to which the batching process might be put appear to have come to pass. Instead, a headquarters second guessing process has been institutionalized without any upfront checks and balances, and this has resulted in a situation where grants are inconsistent and inaccurately assessed on a minimum of information, a potential embarrassment to the Minister if the groups are given poor reasons for rejection. My question is an obvious one. What is being done to rectify this rather shabby situation?

• (1450)

Hon. D. M. Collenette (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen that memo and I am somewhat surprised at its contents. As with any federated organization, and the Government of Canada obviously runs its operations in that way in that we have regional offices across the country, from time to time there are creative disagreements or tensions between decisions taken in Ottawa and those taken in the regions. This is a normal course of events in Canadian federalism, and it may very well be that someone feels there is perhaps a little imbalance and perhaps too much direction from the Minister's office or our officials here in Ottawa. It is something I totally reject, but I certainly would be prepared to look at the memo and discuss it with the Hon. Member, or report back to him before the committee dealing with the Estimates meets next week. We might want to have an in depth discussion at that point.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, the memo is not exactly new. It is dated December 16, 1983. It is from the Ontario Regional Director to the Assistant Under-Secretary of State. If nothing has been done to change this rather shabby process in the past, I suggest very strongly that something should be done.

Oral Questions

DEPARTMENT'S WORK IN MANITOBA

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, in western Canada, especially in the Manitoba area, there is a great deal of concern that grants which normally go to various community projects have not been forthcoming. This has caused all kinds of disruption to language and other heritage programs in Manitoba. If the Minister is going to check on what is a reasonably old memo, will he also take a very close look at what is happening in Manitoba? It is not a good situation, and his Department certainly has to bear the majority of the responsibility.

Hon. D. M. Collenette (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I categorically reject the criticism implied in the Hon. Member's question. As far as I am concerned, the memo in question, and I have said I have not seen it, represents perhaps the opinion of one regional director. I will have to discuss it with our officials to see whether or not it is indeed a serious concern of his. It has not been raised in a detailed way with me, so I suspect it was a particular feeling at a particular point in time.

On the question of Manitoba in general, the Hon. Member should know, being from Manitoba, that the regional office of the Secretary of State is one of the most creative regional offices of any government Department. It has done an outstanding job over the past two years, not only in multiculturalism but in other areas. I find it somewhat odd that a Member from Manitoba would, in a sense, be criticizing the work being done by officials in Manitoba. That is essentially what he is doing. As far as I am concerned, the interests of multiculturalism are being very well attended to, especially in Manitoba where a leadership role has been taken by a number of people at the municipal level and in voluntary organizations, especially in the City of Winnipeg.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER CANADA PROGRAM—PROJECTS TO ASSIST SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment. In the employment programs funded by his Department in recent years there have always been two or three projects which tried to meet the needs of the elderly and sick by providing a service to cut their lawns, put on storm windows, take off the screens, and do a little painting. Of all the grants approved for summer work this year, there is only one program which meets those needs. That program is already telling people that they will have to wait for weeks before they can get the service they always got in the past. Would the Minister look at that situation and possibly find some money to fund some of these projects which operated so successfully until this year?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is referring to the Summer Canada programs which are administered by my colleague, the Minister of State for Youth. I will be happy to forward his representation to her so that she can consider it and reply to him directly.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister tell his colleague that there were projects, such as Work 80 and Community Home Services, which really went out of their way to meet and satisfy the needs of people? These people are phoning all Members of Parliament with hysterical and very well founded fears that they are not going to get the service they received in the past. We are not saying the programs funded for this year are necessarily bad; we are simply saying that they have not met an important need in our cities.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to provide my colleague with the views the Hon. Member has expressed and the representations he has received from the public. I shall do that.

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and is supplementary to the questions asked at the outset of Question Period with respect to the guidelines he laid down for Liberal leadership candidates who are members of his Cabinet. I know he has spoken to them and given them guidelines with respect to the use of government jets. Will he undertake to investigate the blatant misuse of government jets by his Minister of Justice? As an example, yesterday the Minister was with Premier Lee of Prince Edward Island from 8.30 until 9.00 a.m. discussing Senate reform. He then spent the rest of the day meeting delegates from Hillsborough and Cardigan. He had a meeting with a Mr. Joe Ghiz, and then flew to New Brunswick to meet with delegates from Northumberland-Miramichi.

If I give him the timetable of the Minister of Justice, will he investigate whether that Minister and others are abusing their privileges by using government jets for purely political reasons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I certainly will look into the matter. I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member does what he suggests and sends me the timetable. However, just listening to his version of the facts, I feel compelled to say that I personally asked the Minister of Justice to see the Premiers of all provinces to discuss Senate reform. This was a decision taken several months ago, and it was to follow on the tabling of the report of the Joint Committee on Senate Reform. Therefore, that he would be travelling on a government aircraft is something I find not only justifiable but demanded in the circumstances.

I am puzzled at how the Hon. Member would suggest the Minister conduct himself assuming he is in a province and has not been able to get an appointment with another Premier for the next 24 hours. Would the Hon. Member suggest that he should come back to Ottawa at government expense, sit in his office, and then fly again to the same area at government expense? It would seem to me this would entail a greater expenditure of public funds than staying in the area and seeing some friends, or people he would hope become friends. I am just thinking aloud, Mr. Speaker. I am curious how the Hon. Member would advise me to refine the guidelines in a case like this. Should the Minister be ordered back to Ottawa at government expense, and then fly out in the same direction?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A short supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Halifax West has been seeking to be recognized for some time.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONDUCT INVESTIGATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, in about two months time the Prime Minister will understand that we have commercial service, with Air Canada and Eastern Provincial Airlines, because he will be using them himself. The next meeting of the Minister of Justice was today at three in the afternoon. There were two commercial flights available to the Minister, and he did not have to come back to Ottawa.

Will the Prime Minister investigate this matter, and if in fact the bulk of the Minister's time has been spent with respect to political activity on his behalf and that of the Liberal Party, will he ask for a reimbursement from the Minister, as a very minimum, for this blatant abuse of the use of government aircraft in the pursuit of his political activity?

• (1500)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is attempting to be helpful. However, if there were commercial flights, even I would know it. As a suggestion, I would inquire whether that would be a wise use of ministerial time. If the Hon. Member is correct, he would, I suppose, suggest that every Minister should fly by government aircraft when there is a commercial flight. As he would know from when he was a Minister himself and used government aircraft rather generously, the factor of time is involved.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Oh, no. The use was cut by 75 per cent. Check the records.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: With regard to the two questions, Mr. Speaker, I have already answered the first. I said I would look into the facts and invited the Hon. Member to send me whatever knowledge he has of them. The second question was a hypothetical one.

PUBLIC WORKS

PROPOSED HALIFAX OFFICE COMPLEX

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. It is with regard to that mysterious office complex for the city of Halifax. As the Minister knows, it was announced in April of 1983 as a special recovery project. It was to be a $50 million building. One year later it was reduced to a $30 million building. When are the 1,000 Nova Scotians who were promised jobs on the construction of this office complex by his colleague, the Minister of International Trade, going to be put to work? Is there really going to be an office complex?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have had some difficulty getting final clearance to the title of the land. I must express amazement that the Hon. Member's political bickering extends to the point where he would deprive his own region of a very important government project.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister will allow me to take over his Department, I will have the office complex going in 30 days.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SITE EXPROPRIATION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, if the office complex was planned to the point where the Minister of International Trade could stand up and show models of it, why did the federal Government not even own the land in question? Why is it now expropriating the land and having the expropriation challenged in the courts of law? Why did it not consider these matters before it announced the complex?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member is able to explain to the Halifax Herald, which is very regionalistic in its approach to these stories, why he is not helping us solve the problem. The reality is that I was personally disappointed that a public body which should have co-operated with us to try to find a proper site, did not help us.

MR. PETERSON—TREATMENT OF SYRIAN JEWS

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BLAIKIE—OPPORTUNITY FOR MORE QUESTIONS DURING QUESTION PERIOD—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: On April 6 last the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) raised a point of order relating to the Question Period and invited the Chair to share its thoughts with the House on the conduct of that part of our daily proceedings. He said:

> I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether you are simply letting us slide until we muster the will to discipline ourselves. That may be a legitimate strategy. However, I, for one, Mr. Speaker, would urge you to use your role as Speaker to discipline the Question Period. If you do not feel people should be allowed supplementary questions, do not allow them.

Again on May 9, 1984, when the Chair did not allow a supplementary to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill invited the Chair to tell the House if it was changing the rules as they pertain to Question Period. While it is tempting for the Chair to make a comprehensive ruling on the conduct of Question Period, the present occupant is well aware that, without the co-operation of Members, the Chair's responsibility to maintain order is much more difficult. I would much rather seek the co-operation of all Members.

I will, however, deal with the use of supplementary questions which has been of concern to me for some time. I think it is timely that this matter be addressed. On May 9, in quoting from Beauchesne's Citation 371, I reaffirmed the principle that the extent to which supplementary questions may be asked is in the discretion of the Speaker. I also said that I would discourage supplementary questions which are not supplementary but which are, in fact, additional even though related questions.

I think I should remind the House what, under our practice, constitutes a supplementary question. There is a growing practice, after a first question has been answered, to ask a new, related question, or another question which is an expanded form of the original one. There is also a growing tendency to ask a Minister one question and to direct a supplementary to another Minister because it deals with the same subject matter.

Mr. Speaker Michener, in his statement to the House on February 26, 1959, qualified supplementary questions as "a matter of grace". It seems his comment was inspired by Speaker Lowther who laid down the rule for the British House. At column 41 of the House of Commons debates for July 5, 1915, Speaker Lowther is reported to have said:

> —all supplementary questions are irregular and are not provided for at all in any Standing Order. It is entirely a matter of grace.
> I may say generally that the object of supplementary questions is to elucidate any ambiguity in the reply of a Minister or to seek further information if he can give it;—

On April 14, 1975 Mr. Speaker Jerome, at page 440 of Hansard, defined a supplementary question in the following terms:

> The supplementary question is a follow-up device flowing from the response and ought to be a precise question put directly and immediately to the Minister without any further statement.

At page 346 of Erskine May's Twentieth Edition we find the following:

> A supplementary question may refer only to the answer out of which it immediately arises, must not be read or be too long—

I also wish to remind Hon. Members that supplementary questions should rarely be preceded by a preamble or contain any argument. Since the supplementary question flows from the answer to the original question, it should normally not require explanation or preamble. It should be brief and to the point. If, in answering, a Minister claims that another Member of the Cabinet is concerned with the subject matter of a question, then a supplementary to another Minister may be allowed; but the redirection of a supplementary question to another Minister must be clearly linked to the answer to the first question. It is not sufficient to claim that the supplementary question to another Minister is on the same subject matter as the principal question. There must be obvious cause from the answer of the first Minister for the Chair to allow a supplementary question to be redirected to another Minister.

In concluding my remarks I will quote a few words from Speaker Lamoureux who, on September 14, 1971, faced the same issue and sought the co-operation and support of the House in saying:

> I recognize the importance of the matter and the right of Hon. Members to ask supplementaries, but the rules are clear. Supplementaries are within the competence of the Chair; and when the Chair feels that we have reached a point when other members should be given a chance to ask questions, Hon. Members should try as far as possible to co-operate and give the Chair an opportunity to move on to another member.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West on the usual matter relating to House business.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to call upon the Government House Leader to give us the proposed order of business for tomorrow and possibly to the end of next week.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that this week the House Leaders had fruitful and productive meetings. It looks like the next week will be productive for Parliament. The order of the Bills which I shall outline is important. The number of Bills which I will outline flows from the discussions we had.

Tomorrow we will be dealing with the following Bills in this order: C-4, C-23, C-5 and C-31. On Tuesday we will deal with Bill C-24. On Wednesday we will deal with Bills C-11, C-16, C-8, C-7 and C-14. I designate next Thursday as an Opposition Day. Next Friday Bill C-33 will be dealt with.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the information which we have just received. There have been statements from all three Parties with regard to the need to obtain quick passage of Bill C-34 dealing with the Canada Labour Code. Would he be amenable to the suggestion that we agree to one speaker per Party at second reading? The Bill could then go to committee for careful but speedy consideration, with an understanding that that particular piece of legislation would in fact become law prior to the House rising at the end of June, and that he take whatever steps he deems necessary to then place that Bill on a priority listing to ensure that it will in fact be dealt with?

● (1510)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a matter to be negotiated in a regular House Leaders' meeting. The Hon. Member knows from my answer on the floor of the House yesterday that certainly the Government is willing to consider any serious offer or proposal made by the Opposition Parties in order to dispose of Bill C-34 quickly. The idea of having one speaker per Party to send it to committee is acceptable to the Government, except that we would like to have more precision from the Opposition Parties about how we will be dealing with the report stage and third reading stage.

I cannot give a commitment about passing the whole Bill before the end of June unless I have a firm agreement on a very short debate for the report stage and third reading. The Hon. Member has not been very specific about that.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. House Leader does in fact raise a legitimate point. I want to suggest to him that if we could get agreement to have this Bill dealt with speedily at second reading and dealt with speedily at committee stage, I would be prepared to enter into negotiations on a House order to deal with the Bill at report and third reading stage that I think would satisfy the need to have the Bill dealt with expeditiously.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, as I said, usually we negotiate or make deals in a regular House Leaders' meeting. The Hon. Member will understand that no deal is possible without the participation of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to stand at this time to support the point of view of the Government House Leader that normally if negotiations are being carried on with respect to House business, these matters will be discussed in the course of our deliberations, which prove to be successful from time to time. It is a well known fact that the NDP supports the Liberal Party on almost all of their legislation. It is not necessary for the Members for Hamilton Mountain to stand up and reaffirm this publicly.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to the Government House Leader that my recollection of what was said by the absent Leader of the Conservative Party was that he was in support of the principles contained within the amendments proposed to the Canada Labour Code.

With regard to negotiations, I am not attempting to negotiate; I am doing what I recall was done by the House Leader for the Conservatives in the case of the grain stabilization Bill. I am making an offer that I think perhaps cannot be refused.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Government House Leader will recall that there was a promise in the Throne Speech that the guaranteed income supplement for single old age pensioners would be increased by $25 a month. It is all very well to list 11 Bills on which he places a priority. I understand that this will require a Bill to amend the Pension Act. Where does he put this measure in his priorities?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I think we are prepared to go even further. We are thinking in terms of increasing the GIS by $50 a month. We intend to introduce such legislation before the end of June for sure.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I want to make an inquiry of the Government House Leader. I had hoped to be able to raise this question in the presence of the Minister of Agriculture but unfortunately he had to leave. It is with reference to Bill C-23, the advance payments for prairie grains.

He will recognize that that applies only to the grains produced within the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. Perhaps he will recall that in 1976, I believe, some comparable legislation was approved for the advance payment for crops produced outside the Canadian Wheat Board, primarily corn and beans.

Obviously we are in full support of Bill C-23. We are somewhat concerned that the twin Bill which should apply to grains outside the Canadian Wheat Board should go through the House in tandem with that Bill. Otherwise there will be a situation where there will be a greater advance payment available for producers of similar grains in one part of the country, yet there will be the old standard of advanced payments for the producers of other crops, particularly in Ontario, the Province of Quebec and Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comments. I will make sure that the Minister of Agriculture will be made aware of them. We will take them very seriously. If there is anything to be adapted or corrected, we will do it with pleasure. For the time being, we have had a House Leaders' meeting and agreed to dispose of Bill C-23 very quickly next week. I want to assure the Hon. Member that his concerns will be brought to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture.

MR. SCOTT (VICTORIA-HALIBURTON)—RECOGNITION OF MEMBERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, if this is the proper time, I have a question of privilege. It relates to something you said earlier when making your ruling. That is the problem with Question Period and other Members being totally ignored. I have watched this for some time and have raised this issue before. As a matter of fact, I have spoken to you about it, Mr. Speaker.

I have every confidence in you and would suggest that you throw away the slips that you are given by the House Leader in charge and go on your own merits. I believe we would probably have a more even distribution. That is a suggestion which I have to make to you, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is always open to suggestions.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1984-85

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, may I depart briefly from custom and point out that we have the honour to receive the first formal message in this House from our new Governor General.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

A message from Her Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates (A) of sums required for the service of Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985, and in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution Act, 1867, was presented by Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move, in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 63:

That the Supplementary Estimates (A) 1984-85, tabled this day, be referred to the several Standing Committees of the House as follows:

Since there is a detailed allocation of the estimates to the committees in the list, if it is agreeable with the House I ask that the list be printed in Hansard as if it had been read.

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. President of the Privy Council. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MR. THACKER—EXTENSION OF HOURS AT PORTS OF ENTRY

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from some 331 citizens of southern Alberta, many of whom I know. This petition is very broadly based. It calls for an extension of hours at the Del Bonita and Carway customs ports of entry from the United States. It asks for longer hours during the winter months. The current situation where they close early causes a great inconvenience to many people including businessmen, individuals and farmers. It is critical that the Government seriously consider this petition. I am hoping that my fellow colleagues will write to the Minister in this respect.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to introduce a Bill respecting the execution of mass murderers, under which any person found guilty beyond the shadow of a doubt of killing ten or more human beings will be executed by hanging. Clifford Robert Olson is at the top of the list.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

TRANSPORT

STUDY BY STANDING COMMITTEE OF NEW AIR POLICY

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, consultations having been held with representatives of all Parties in the House, I now wish to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins)—

[English]

—the following motion:

That the Standing Committee on Transport be authorized to study and report on the following questions relating to the "New Canadian Air Policy" as announced by the Minister of Transport on May 10, 1984:

(1) At what pace should the process toward the elimination of regulation be pursued?

(2) How should the Aeronautics Act be amended to make it consistent with a more permissive regulatory approach, and in particular

(a) how should the entry test of "public convenience and necessity" be revised?

(b) what provisions, if any, should govern the remaining controls on pricing?

(c) what special regulation is needed of airline mergers and acquisitions, and of foreign ownership?

(3) Should further instalments of liberalization occur at predetermined intervals to stimulate adjustment and facilitate planning, or should any further changes be preceded by reviews, perhaps at pre-set dates?

(4) Should Air Canada be broken up and/or privatized to improve the company's efficiency and to give smaller, privately-owned airlines a more equal opportunity to compete?

(5) As further regulatory liberalization proceeds, is there a need for direct operating subsidies to protect communities against loss of service as a result of regulatory change and for special labour protection provisions to protect airline employees against a related loss of employment?

(6) Does the Minister's working definition of northern Canada in the new Canadian air policy reflect the needs of the communities in northern Canada; and

That the Committee have the power to retain the services of expert, professional, technical and clerical staff as may be deemed necessary and after approval by the Clerk of the House of Commons;

That the Committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada when the House is not sitting in relation to the "New Canadian Air Policy", as announced by the Minister of Transport, and that the necessary staff do accompany the Committee; and

That the Committee report back to the House by November 30, 1984.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL

Question No. 745—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there an Atlantic Development Council and, if so, what (a) are its terms of reference (b) is the (i) name (ii) background or expertise (iii) term of appointment of each member (c) remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses (i) do the members receive (ii) did the members receive to date (d) other funding, if any, is provided by the Government?

2. During the fiscal year 1982-83, did the Council meet and, if so (a) how often (b) how often is it required to meet (c) what matters did it consider (d) what reports and/or recommendations were published?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): 1. No. Legislative authority for the Atlantic Development Council was repealed on December 7, 1983, with the proclamation of Section 22 of the Government Organization Act, 1983.

2. The Council was not operational in 1982-1983.

[Translation]

Mr. Evans: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I presume that stubbornness at some point along the line has to be accepted by even the best of us, as a result of the refusal of the Parliamentary Secretary and the Government to recognize the historic use of a starred question and their failure to recognize its place in our parliamentary process. This leaves me no other alternative but to ask when I will obtain an answer to my question No. 699. It deals with the amount of money being raised with respect to duties paid by foreign-registered vessels operating off our coast, so that we might understand whether or not the amount of money spent trying to collect these duties is at least equal to the amount of money we collect.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, it sounds like an eminently sensible question. The answer is soon.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise again to ask about a question of long standing; it has been on the Order Paper for some three years now. It asks what is the increase in real terms in the expenditures of the Department of National Defence, including statutory costs, and expressed in percentages, for each fiscal year from 1970-71 to 1979-80.

I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary knows that that answer has been prepared. One can only assume that Ministers are refusing to have it presented in Parliament because it will contradict the information they have been including in their speeches about Canada's effort to support defence. They have been exaggerating in their speeches, and answers of the type prepared by the department would contradict them. I suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary that that is why they have not tabled the answer in three years. There can be no other reason, can there?

Mr. Evans: I am sure that is not the case, but I will look into the matter for the Hon. Member and try to get an answer to him as quickly as possible.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—REGIONAL ECONOMIC DISPARITIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan:

That this House condemns the Government for abandoning its commitment to alleviate regional economic disparities and thereby encouraging continued economic inequality between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of the country through a policy of gutting the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, slashing investment in regional development, and downgrading, for political purposes, federal-provincial development agreements.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) introduced this Opposition motion with regard to regional economic disparities, specifically in the Atlantic provinces. I congratulate the Hon. Member, with some reservation, for bringing forward this subject. I congratulate him because such an important issue has not been raised or focused on earlier by his Party, and, I do so with reservations because he uses the words "condemns the Government" in his motion. I cannot agree with him when we analyze the millions of dollars this Government has designated, approved and expended in the Atlantic provinces. Thus I cannot understand why the word "condemn" is incorporated in the motion today.

Hon. Members will know that over the past dozen years or more the present Government has focused totally on the question of designated areas, areas that fall within the regional criteria of regional disparities. Certainly the Atlantic area has been more than fairly treated in the designation of funds within the legislation for the development of projects, infrastructure, highway development, port development and other major capital projects. This opportunity then allows me to take issue with the terminology in the motion brought forward by the Hon. Member for Hillsborough. I would like to put on record and correct the facts with regard to some of those expenditures, and his error in condemning the Government for the good work it has accomplished on the much needed projects in the Atlantic region.

In the new structure of Government, we have seen the reorganization of the former Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, which has been integrated into the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion with MSERD becoming responsible for policy, and the formation of the new Ministry of Economic Development, with the thrust of this legislation and the funds allocated thereto. We will also see the continuation of that very positive initiative that the Government put in place through the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. With trade questions being allocated to the Department of External Affairs, where there will be a more harmonious and efficient application of the kind of work that should be carried out jointly between the Department of External Affairs and Trade, it was, and is, appropriate that questions of international trade and trade matters be connected and that we have this type of co-operative effort within the Department of External Affairs. We see now that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Regan) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) will work in close harmony and will direct the operations and programs which fall within their responsibilities.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion together with the Minister for Economic and Regional Development will work jointly in a co-operative way on developing policies and developing the proper form for the continuation of economic expansion in those designated areas that continue to require the traditional assistance, such as many of the areas in the Atlantic provinces. Once a proper plan has been developed for economic growth in the four Atlantic provinces, those policies will be addressed and fully implemented through the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. The projects are funded with money freed up under existing agreements, agreements which have expired, and are allocated by region along traditional DREE expenditure lines. The Government has made a serious commitment to maintain regional economic development expenditures, at least at the historic level of the former general development expenditures agreements. The result is that we will provide resources in addition to those normally available through line Departments to support special regional development initiatives in all parts of the country.

Let us look at funding of the DREE GDA sub-agreement expenditures and a program financed from the regional fund. These figures show that regional spending allocation levels are being maintained. For example, in 1981-82, $155.9 million was committed to the Atlantic region. In 1982-83, under the new system, $214.4 million was committed to the Atlantic region. That is a substantial increase, even taking inflation into account. I firmly believe that these figure refute the argument that the system under which we now operate is detrimental to the Atlantic region's interests. The system now places more emphasis on agreement by the federal and provincial governments on broad, long-term development priorities in each province that can be approached in ways that do not necessarily call for signed sub-agreements or joint program delivery This will result in a smoother delivery operation. Such joint delivery remains possible under the current system, and there are already examples of this having happened, as exemplified by some of the agreements already in place or being negotiated under the ERDAs which the federal Government has signed with the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

What we are proposing with separate delivery is co-operative and co-ordinated planning but independent action. For example, if there is a clear need for a new port and a community to serve it, the federal Government can deliver the port while the province establishes the infrastructure for the community. It is a new approach. Without doubt there have been some start-up difficulties, some growing pains, over which we have all shared some concern. As the appropriate officials are put in place in the four Atlantic provinces and as the negotiations continue between the federal representatives, the Ministers responsible and the premiers of the provinces we will see a clear effort being made to ensure that those projects that are of priority and are ready to go ahead will go ahead as expeditiously as possible.

All the changes I have mentioned are designed to ensure that the whole economic development spending capacity of the federal Government, which I mentioned earlier, which involves billions of dollars, is used not only in pursuit of national objectives, as was the case in the past, but also is targeted increasingly toward regions such as the Atlantic area.

The priority that this Government has attached to this subject is evident in the actions that have been taken by this administration. An outstanding example is the creation of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion in the early years of our administration. This was a daring and innovative move towards a solution to tie together a variety of desperately thinly spread economies and to make them work within the scope of the nation.

• (1540)

Over the years, DREE has provided substantial physical infrastructure assistance to the less advantaged regions of Canada. In the process, it has laid the basis for economic expansion and indeed has resulted in job creation. Much of that necessary infrastructure is now in place. There are ports, municipal services, roads, industrial parks and much more that can be found in all parts of the nation as a direct result of the dynamic initiatives taken by the Government through the early 1980s. It was then that the Government recognized that the time had come for a bold initiative to build even more effectively on the base that was laid by DREE. The Government is now continuing that initiative.

It is more than upsetting to hear people deliberately attempt to misrepresent the facts. It is upsetting to hear the word "condemn", which is contained in today's motion, and it is upsetting to hear all that gloom and doom when indeed millions and millions—yes, billions—of dollars have been designated and approved for expenditure to assist the areas which need this assistance so urgently at this time. Support for the regional economies of Canada is and must remain a fundamental principle of the federal Government. If the federation is to have real meaning, it must at the same time associate this diversity with efforts to ensure that the Canadian economic market operates as effectively as possible. To attempt this in any other way would be foolhardy to say the least.

The reorganization of the federal Government Departments and the regional policies which flow from it mark a fundamental initiative to promote effective federal policies that serve the dual objective of ensuring that there are no barriers to trade and of ensuring that there is support for the maintenance of strength and vitality in the regions so that the nation can achieve a better balance and become more efficient on the economic common market. The key to the significance of the reorganization lies in the fact that for the first time in history, support of regional development is the goal of an integrated thrust of all the federal Government's economic development forces.

Through the reorganization, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has required that all Departments strengthen their organizational and programming capacities in the regions. The job of keeping a keen supervisory eye on regional interest and development and making sure that regional views are properly taken into account when formulating national policies was transferred to the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development (Mr. Johnston). As a central agency, the Ministry is in a position to ensure that regional concerns and priorities are brought to the attention of Ministers and are central to policy or program funding decisions.

To meet the challenge of the new regional emphasis, the Minister has opened regional offices in each province. These offices are headed by senior officials who are called federal economic development co-ordinators. Indeed, in the month of May of 1984, I am pleased to say that in my Province of New Brunswick there is a very senior, capable and able civil servant heading this responsibility, not only on the MSERD and economic growth and development side but also on the regional industrial expansion side. Mr. Patrice Blanchard is carrying out these responsibilities in a very efficient way, as is his counterpart, Mr. John McNaught, who represents the Department of Economic and Regional Development in New Brunswick. Both of these gentlemen have taken on their responsibilities in a way which will see the implementation of these policies and programs carried out in the efficient manner to which I have referred this afternoon. The appointment of these people testifies to the fact that the federal Government's commitment to reducing regional disparities is stronger than ever.

I would like to continue to use the Province of New Brunswick as an example of one of the provinces in Atlantic Canada to which there is federal commitment to alleviate regional economic disparity. On April 13, 1984, the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development on behalf of Canada and the Premier of New Brunswick on behalf of the province signed a new federal-provincial economic and regional development agreement commonly referred to as ERDA. This new agreement replaces the expired 10-year general development agreement that had seen the delivery of more than $450 million of federal money to fund a broad range of essential infrastructure projects. These projects provide a framework within which measures for economic development in New Brunswick may be taken through consultation and co-operation. Within this 10-year framework for joint planning and co-ordinated delivery, federal and provincial Governments are working together to develop concrete initiatives, including subsidiary agreements that provide for specific activities and a memorandum of understanding that provides a basis for the development of such activities.

In the last 10 years, both levels of Government have committed well over $500 million to the economic development of New Brunswick. We have made a commitment to maintain spending at the same level as under the previous GDA agreement. Previously, specific projects were realized through subsidiary agreements either on a sector-by-sector basis dealing with agriculture, forestry, minerals or fuels, or on a regional basis as was the case for the northeast and Kent regional subsidiary agreements. These GDA subsidiary agreements provide assistance for educational, industrial, municipal and transportation infrastructures along with specific priority initiatives.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that while we have done a hell of a lot through the previous GDA agreement and through the original DREE Department, much remains to be done. There are other specific areas in the region which must be targeted for development. That is certainly true of many parts of New Brunswick and particularly true of the northern portion of the province.

While we have spent millions of dollars assisting the province with respect to infrastructure such as municipal services, we are hearing all too often now that the provincial Government finds itself in dire straits. It has found itself strapped financially for one reason or another. I will not deal with the details of the causes within the administration of that Government for being in such a bad financial position.

Since the Government is crying that it is too strapped financially to pay for some of these projects from its own budget, it seems to me that while these negotiations are going on, Ministers in the provincial Government, such as the Minister of Municipal Affairs, should avail themselves of the opportunity to convince their own premier and Cabinet colleagues to focus on the possibility of achieving through those negotiations an agreement to allocate some funds targeted for the continuation of certain municipal and other projects to essential services, such as water and sewage or other infrastructure services that should already be in place. This being the year 1984, our people should already be enjoying the services that other Canadians enjoy. Therefore, I urge the Minister, when accepting his responsibilities, in spite of whatever planning or other problems exist within the province, to try to utilize the Government's new structure of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Department of Economic and Regional Development when allocating funds for this purpose.

The needs are there and they continue to be as great and as urgent as ever. We must continue to support the mining, forestry, fishing and transportation sectors until such time as we have achieved the goal we all wish to achieve of having modern facilities to give us the capacity to be productive and competitive in the marketplace.

● (1550)

While we have achieved a great deal, I repeat it is more than millions, it is in the billions of dollars that this Government has religiously and consistently allocated to areas such as Atlantic Canada. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the federal Government for the amount of money that has been targeted to date. We certainly appreciate this support and the co-operation of the federal Government. But, much remains to be done. We must continue to keep a close watch and work together to discover ways in the short term to achieve other major projects that will require funding for economic growth under the new re-organization of the government structure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? For debate, the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, in addressing the important motion which is before the House today, I would like to comment on the experience we have had in the Province of New Brunswick and then in the Atlantic provinces. I would like to identify the problems as I see them and propose constructive solutions that are preferable to the course that the Government is now following.

New Brunswick possesses a number of strengths which could be the basis for growth opportunities in the development of products and services embodying new technologies. These include the New Brunswick Research and Productivity Council which has attracted world-wide attention for its work in metallurgy, and a well-established engineering school at the University of New Brunswick, which offers the only Ph.D. program in North America in computer-assisted design and computer-assisted manufacturing. New Brunswick has excellent schools of computer science and world-class expertise in telecommunications technology. The province possesses a core of advanced metal working and machinery firms in strategic positions to capitalize on oil and gas developments on the East Coast. Use of CAD/CAM techniques, which I referred to a moment ago, assisted by the province's manufacturing technology centre, have the potential to improve greatly the competitive position of smaller companies. The province also possesses the country's most efficient shipyard, which has recently won a contract for the management of the naval frigate program.

The availability of skilled and semi-skilled labour is an important attraction for certain high technology operations. The availability of well educated young people and co-operative labour-management relations provide New Brunswick with vocational advantages over other centres in Canada. New Brunswick also has advantages to offer in the quality of life factors, such as housing costs, access to outdoor recreation and commuting time.

The resource sectors focus on capitalizing on the traditional strengths of these sectors in the New Brunswick economy. Priority is assigned to maintaining jobs in these sectors by increasing productivity and improving New Brunswick's competitive position in national and international markets and encouraging further resource processing prior to export. A number of opportunities exist to increase the production of key business, industrial and commercial services to serve not only provincial and national demand but export markets as well. For example, while the province's consulting engineering industry is small, it currently exports world-class expertise in areas such as forest products and transportation. The tourism sector has great growth potential as well.

It is interesting to note that the general development agreement, signed in 1974, took as its primary objective the reduction of the gap in earned income per capita between New Brunswick and the national average while minimizing net migration from the province. While it is clear that some progress has been made toward the general development agreement objectives in terms of accelerated growth of provincial output and employment and in terms of net migration, significant disparities remain between New Brunswick and the national average. Earned income per capita, for example, stood at only two-thirds of the national average. This statement is repeated on page 8 of the economic and regional development agreement signed between Canada and New Brunswick in April of this year.

In moving New Brunswick toward economic self-sufficiency, and by putting in place a significant secondary manufacturing segment, we increase the tax base and reduce New Brunswick's dependence on Ottawa. In other words, Canada's investment can significantly reduce New Brunswick's dependence and the amount of money required from Ottawa in transfer payments. While each of the Atlantic provinces has particular problems, they all share the same problem of disparity.

What can we do? How do we build industry in New Brunswick and in the other Atlantic provinces? Like any construction project, the first thing we must do is to lay a firm foundation. We must create a climate which is attractive to industry. We believe that that foundation can be found in the four Progressive Conservative pillars of economic growth: lower interest rates, technology, training, and trade.

First, I would like to discuss lower interest rates. If we want to revitalize the manufacturing sector and create jobs for our people, it is essential that we start to create the conditions which will allow interest rates to come down without destroying our currency or reigniting inflation. The Government says that lower interest rates are not possible. It says that Canada is totally dependent on American monetary policy and that it can do nothing. I disagree. Yes, American interest rates are a constraint; they always have been and they always will be. But no, we are not totally powerless. We can lessen our dependence on the United States interest rates over time without causing an exchange rate crisis, if we put upward pressure on the dollar through a strong export performance and then allow an inflow of job-creating capital. If lower interest rates is the first prerequisite for industrial growth and job creation, the second is a renewed commitment to technological innovation.

If we are to maintain our standard of living and create the wealth to finance desirable social and cultural programs, it is essential that we develop a nationally and internationally competitive industrial base. That means that we must produce, apply and diffuse modern technology throughout the economy in our factories, on our farms and in our offices. We must face the technological challenge and turn it to our advantage. But technology is not going to help us if Canadians are not trained and educated in its use. That is the third challenge facing us: To manage technological change and prepare Canadians who live in New Brunswick and the Atlantic provinces for the information age. We must make sure we are masters of technology, not its servants.

Managing technological change means ensuring that business and labour put in place effective in-house programs to train and retrain their employees in the new technologies. It means using the tax system to encourage such training prior to the introduction of new technology, and defining standards of labour-management consultation. It means working with the provinces to ensure that our education system prepares our youth for technological change.

Managing technological change means amending the Unemployment Insurance Act to allow recipients to upgrade their skills through retraining or experience in the voluntary sector. It means ensuring that women do not bear the brunt of technological change; that they are given the skills and the opportunity to secure true economic equality. What is most important perhaps, managing change means changing our attitude towards growth. It means ending our complacent reliance on natural resources, and shifting our efforts to human resources.

So far I have spoken about training, technology and interest rates. I would like to turn to the fourth pillar of our foundation for growth, that is, trade expansion. Access to foreign markets is an essential element of any realistic industrial strategy. We must pursue that goal vigorously by supporting efforts to begin a new round of GATT multilateral negotiations, by working to create an international framework for trade in services, and by continuing bilateral discussions with the United States of America in specific sectors. We must ensure that our industries have the opportunity to compete and the opportunity to grow. But opportunity is not enough. We must also help our companies to seize these opportunities. We must strengthen our export marketing support through the trade commissioner's service and better market intelligence. We must support exports by integrating the services of private and public sector financial institutions; ensure that our tax system encourages greater export trade; work with the provinces to develop regional export strategies; seek to establish export trade zones; use all available policy levers to encourage global product mandates for multinational subsidiaries; ensure better financing and marketing for agricultural and small business exports; and become a more competitive force in the new global environment of trading houses, export consortia, barter and countertrade.

● (1600)

In short, our goal is to help Canadian industries and producers become first class national and world traders and reliable suppliers of quality goods and services at competitive prices. That is what productivity is all about. That is how permanent jobs will be created. That then is the framework of our strategy for the manufacturing sector, a strategy which puts first things first and a strategy which recognizes that specific policies for specific industries are diminished without a solid foundation for growth in a climate attractive to industrial development. It is a strategy that recognizes that the primary role of the federal Government in economic policy must be to support the efforts of the builders and workers in our society.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments? Debate. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology.

Mr. Rolland Dion (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, that is quite a mouthful.

I am pleased to take the floor today, when the House is considering an Opposition motion concerning changes that have taken place and the new direction given by the Government to Departments with an economic mission.

Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, on January 12, 1982, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) created the Economic Development Ministry which takes in all Departments with an economic mission. At the same time, a number of changes were made in the Department of Regional and Economic Expansion when the IRDP program was created.

I would like to start, Mr. Speaker, by giving a short history of what the situation was at the time, and I shall then explain why the Government made these changes. In 1974, the federal Government signed general development agreements with the ten provinces. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion had concluded many subsidiary agreements with the provinces for the purpose of undertaking a number of joint projects and programs aimed at promoting development in the regions. Many of these programs are still in effect. However, the GDAs, most of which were for a ten-year period, practically all expired on March 31, 1984. On January 12, 1982, the Right Hon. Prime Minister announced there would be a re-organization of the Government of Canada. One of the objectives was to give all Departments with an economic mission responsibility for regional economic development, instead of having a single department like the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for that purpose. General co-ordinating of economic and regional development at the federal level has now been entrusted to a Cabinet committee responsible for economic and regional development. The new Economic and Regional Development Ministry, whose Minister is the Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston), has initial responsibility for implementing this co-ordination, as set forth in the Government Organization Act, 1983. Responsibility for present GDA sub-agreements has been transferred from DREE to the Ministers in charge of implementing Departments, while the Economic and Regional Development Ministry is responsible for developing and negotiating new general agreements with the provinces, to replace the GDAs expiring on March 31, 1984. Mr. Speaker, four provinces have already signed new agreements with the federal Government, for a ten-year period. However, there is now a new provision which stipulates that agreements may be renegotiated or reviewed by the various levels of government signing the agreements.

Last fall and last winter, the Minister met with representatives from the ten provinces to discuss general problems in connection with economic and regional development and the new general agreements. Today, a definitive agreement has been concluded with four provinces while discussions are under way with the other provinces. The purpose of the new economic and regional development agreements is to provide a framework for co-operation and consultation on questions relating to the economic development of each province and each region. As I said earlier, the agreements run for ten years and provide a framework for taking measures to promote the economic development of the province concerned. The agreements determine development prospects for implementation through subsidiary agreements, and provide for general co-ordination of the latter agreements. They will provide, as appropriate, for the adoption of economic development measures by federal and provincial governments through their respective programs and departments. They will ensure that effective consultation and co-ordination take place between federal and provincial governments regarding the implementation of economic development programs, and the instruments attached to economic development agreements will, if necessary, allow for joint projects with provincial governments. However, the measures to be taken by each government will be very precisely defined. Obviously, not all new regional economic development agreements will be identical. In other words, they will vary according to the discussions that will take place with each province. The agreements will, more specifically, take into consideration the economic responsibilities, resources and constraints of each region.

Each document will contain a general statement of objectives, a description of requirements and the consultation and co-ordinating process, as well as a section covering further details such as duration and evaluation. Each agreement will also include administrative provisions relating to medium-term development priorities for each province. Key factors will be the provisions for consultation and co-ordination. Each agreement will contain provisions providing for first: annual departmental consultation on priorities; second: determining prospects and subsidiary agreements, if any; third: ongoing consultation and co-ordination by designated officials, and steps to be taken by the Department concerned with respect to priorities.

Mr. Speaker, that is more or less how the Government has set its priorities and how it decided to make some changes in the general agreements with the provinces. I must say that, after looking at these changes and especially the creation of the new IRDP program, I would like to expand somewhat on this program and especially on what is happening in my riding.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is entirely in order. The House is aware that there were a number of federal-provincial agreements that were concluded with Quebec, and that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was active in the regions, as necessary. However, since the system did create a number of disparities within Quebec, I feel that the new IRDP program has been able to neutralize what was sometimes unfair competition among the regions. I am referring mainly to Quebec, since that is my home province. The system may, as I said, have created a number of disparities among the regions.

● (1610)

Under the new Industrial Regional Development Program, Mr. Speaker, the riding of Portneuf is now at the third level. As Hon. Members know, the new program administered by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion is now called IRDP; it has four levels and is applied throughout Canada. My riding is now at the third level. Mr. Speaker, for the information of everybody, particularly the people of my riding, I would like to give a few examples.

At the outset, when a businessman in my riding wanted to submit a project or a program to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the maximum amount available under the new IRDP was 25 per cent of total investments and, at the third level which is applicable to my riding, the maximum grant can now be as high as 50 per cent. The amount varies from case to case.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the principles underlying the IRDP and the changes made within the Government. The main objective was to simplify the programs. We had often heard constituents complaining that it was very hard to find out what department should be contacted, or through which program grants—or even information, for that matter—could be obtained. I think that the creation of the IRDP and the wholesale changes made in the realm of regional economic development were aimed at simplifying the various programs, as economic agents in my riding and throughout Canada had long been urging.

The Industrial and Regional Development Program will now be a lot easier to implement and will take into consideration the needs of the regions. In addition, the business community will find it much more effective than previous programs. There will now be only one set of regulations and only one way to apply them, whereas before there were series of regulations and a good many application forms. The IRDP retains the best features of the old programs. In other words, they did not throw overboard everything that was good. Another way of putting it would be to say that we now have what might be called the one-wicket formula. The new IRDP eliminates duplication and takes into account certain needs which were not even considered before.

Here is a list of seven programs which have now been grouped under the IRDP: the Industrial Development Program, the program under the Regional Development Incentives Act, the program to promote productivity in technical fields, the cooperative Program for Export Market Development, the Industrial Assistance Program, the Montreal Special Area Program and the Îles-de-la-Madeleine Special Area Program.

As I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, businessmen and economic expansion agents were at a loss and it was often practically impossible to find one's way through that maze of acronyms that were hard to identify. One of the objectives of all those changes was to simplify the program. It will now be a lot easier because the emphasis will be on regional needs and the business community throughout Canada will have ready access to all federal industrial expansion programs. For the first time, all programs sponsored by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion will be provided under the same roof in the various regions. That is quite important, because in my region a lot of programs had been administered by the regional office in Quebec City and others by the regional office in Montreal. It was all rather complicated.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have about five minutes left and I would like to refer once again to the various government levels and add a few comments about what could be acceptable under the IRDP in my region. Certain operations were not acceptable before as the region did not have the proper designation. In the area of economic development, for instance, one should recall the establishment of non-profit centres or institutions, the studies carried out by consultants on modernization and expansion, as well as the adaptation of technology, micro-electronics and electronics. In the past, all such operations were subsidized only up to 25 percent in my region but now they can be eligible for subsidies of up to 75 percent.

Mr. Speaker, the tourist development and promotion program is also very important. As everyone is aware, Portneuf is a constituency with an economy based on business and tourism; it is also a constituency where agriculture is very important. However, one of the most important features in the region remains tourism. For many years, people in the industry have made major efforts to develop our tourist industry since it generates a high level of economic activity in the region. By the way, I should point out that tourist development and promotion programs will continue to fall under the IRDP. There is Tourism Canada which will still be under the jurisdiction of ITC and DREE. This agency will use ITC and DREE programs as well as the special economic and regional development fund of the political reserve, if needs be, to stimulate the development of the tourist industry in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I have a few minutes left and I would like to close by saying that, personally and as a Member of the Government I hold the opposite view to what is stated in the motion. The changes made as far as the Ministry of Economic and Regional Development is concerned and those to clarify the federal programs in this sector can but promote economic development. It will now be a lot easier for people in the industry, people who can promote economic development and businessmen to make use of all these programs. In my opinion, such changes are more likely than not to promote economic development in our regions.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I must say that I disagree with the motion introduced by the Official Opposition and that I support the Government's position.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Are there any questions or comments?

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—REGIONAL ECONOMIC DISPARITIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan:

That this House condemns the Government for abandoning its commitment to alleviate regional economic disparities and thereby encouraging continued economic inequality between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of the country through a policy of gutting the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, slashing investment in regional development and downgrading, for political purposes, federal-provincial development agreements.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my remarks on this motion, which underlines the problem of regional disparity, particularly in Atlantic Canada, by commenting in a general way on the regional nature of Canada. Upon the creation of Canada in 1867, the Fathers of Confederation recognized and realized that the nation they established was a federation of regions called provinces. It was known and understood that the federation would alter the economies of each territorial area. Nova Scotia was a trader whose tall ships travelled international waters to buy, sell and exchange articles of commerce. The products of Atlantic industry were the source of substantial wealth in Nova Scotia.

● (1620)

One hundred and seventeen years later, in 1984, the great majority of our consumer goods in Nova Scotia are produced in central Canada. We pay a premium price for those products. The price would be willingly paid if it helped all Canadians and contributed to the expansion of the Canadian economy. However, Mr. Speaker, Nova Scotians, Maritimers and Atlantic Canadians all want to know how we in our region benefit from Confederation. Having phrased that question, let me respond immediately by saying in fairness that successive national governments, especially the Government of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, have addressed this problem. Many programs have been established, implemented and then abandoned. These programs were intended to rectify the problems in those regions of Canada which suffered from Confederation, particularly Atlantic Canada.

I wonder how many Members of the House remember the Atlantic Development Board. It was the orphan child of the interregnum between the Conservative and Liberal Governments in the mid 1960s. The Atlantic Development Board was to be the focal point of assistance to Atlantic Canada. It was to develop programs in a very specific way and enter directly into industrial projects and developments in the Atlantic area in the hope and expectation that it would contribute to the improvement of the economic processes in the Atlantic area. However, the Atlantic Development Board went the way of its predecessor programs.

The popular designation for this process of recognizing and responding to the economic problem, not only in Atlantic Canada but across Canada, is best described in the phrase "correction of regional disparity". That is what those in the national Government have set out to do, correct the problems of regional disparity. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the process of correcting regional disparity, which in fact benefits all areas of Canada, has been characterized by some as merely involving financial assistance for Atlantic Canada, a kind of civic welfare payment or social assistance for the poor provinces. Correcting regional disparity should and must be a national goal because Canada is only as strong as its weakest part.

The fact that correcting regional disparity must be a national goal and not simply a civic welfare payment accomplished by financial transfers and similar financial assistance, has really been recognized in Canada's Constitution. At this point I would like to pay respect to such people as the former Premier of Nova Scotia, the Hon. G. I. Smith, who later served as Senator. It was his personal goal to institutionalize the correction of regional disparity in the form of a constitution provision. Its characteristic of being a mere hand-out, a mere civic welfare payment was changed. The Hon. G. I. Smith and others who served with him, like the Hon. Robert Stanfield, were proud when the federal Government finally recognized that this was the sort of concept which ought to be institutionalized in the Constitution. In fact, Section 36 of the Constitution Act which was approved in 1972 by Her Majesty The Queen in this very Parliament, provides:

—Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to

(a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;

(b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and

(c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

Subsection (2) of the Constitution Act provides that:

Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

The correction of regional disparities and the equalization of services for all Canadians have been made a principle of the new Constitution and made effective by the Constitution Act of 1972. However, have we really taken equalization and the correction of regional disparities out of their former context? Are they not still a kind of civic welfare payment? Has the Government of Canada really changed its attitude in the area of correcting regional disparities? Mr. Speaker, I must say, after having made what I think is an honest assessment, that the attitude has not changed. The Government still thinks in terms of hand-outs. It still thinks in terms of solving problems as they arise. The Government still thinks in terms of correcting difficulties when they occur. There is no over-all plan. There is no grand expansion. There is no war on regional disparity such as President Kennedy established in the United States with his war on poverty. We have no war on regional disparity and that is what we must have in order to accomplish anything.

As one item of evidence I will point to the fact that the former Department of Regional Economic Expansion never had a role at the heart of the Government of Canada under the Liberal administration. It was always a Department of Government on the periphery of the real force and power within the Government. That has not changed with the change of name to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. The new Department is no different from the old. It is merely a change of name. It is not at the heart of Government. Mr. Speaker, that is the problem. There is no one, no officer, no person in the Government of Canada, who has taken responsibility for the vital national goal of the correction of regional disparity. Therefore, while we have the constitutional provisions, whatever they mean in legal terms, we do not have the spirit or the attitude of a government which will support in a real way that provision which has now been enshrined in the Constitution. Therefore, our problems remain.

I will examine those problems very quickly, Mr. Speaker. In Atlantic Canada there are four separate provinces. There are Canadians who would have those provinces unify and become one province. However, that is simply not possible. Each province, whether it is New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland, has its own separate identity. I have no reason to believe that those identities will be changed in the decades to come, so we must deal with the reality of the situation, that is, that there are four separate provinces. Each of those provinces has its own resources and merits. I am particularly concerned, of course, with the Province of Nova Scotia. However, I do not want to speak about the provinces in an abstract way.

The greatest resource of each of those provinces, and particularly of the Province of Nova Scotia, is the people. That is to say, the people are the greatest resource of the Province of Nova Scotia, so I would like to examine the people in the light of their problems, which result from the regional disparity inflicted on the Province of Nova Scotia since 1867. I will speak first of all about the problems of the people in Nova Scotia.

When one looks at the statistical analysis one finds two very important things. This applies to any Canadian. If your income is low and your debt is high, you are in economic difficulty. That is exactly the situation in the Atlantic area. The incomes of people in the Province of Nova Scotia are substantially below the national average, and especially below the incomes enjoyed by people provinces like Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario. By way of example, the average income in the Province of Alberta is $37,645, while the average income in Nova Scotia is $26,944.

One can also compare the public debt which has been incurred by the governments of those provinces and must be paid for by the people, the taxpayers, the income earners. We all know about the relatively debt free position of the Province of Alberta due to its Heritage Fund. The public debt in Nova Scotia has risen to $2 billion. That is not through any fault of the Government of the Province of Nova Scotia. In order to maintain the level of public services guaranteed by Section 36 of the Constitution Act, the Government of Nova Scotia has had to borrow to meet the needs and demands of the people of Nova Scotia in this modern Canada. That has resulted in a substantial provincial debt, although I hasten to add that that debt is not as high as those of the other Atlantic provinces. However, that is the situation generally in Atlantic Canada; low incomes and high debts. Therefore, the provincial governments are left without the resources to create economic expansion within their own area. That is a fact of life that can be established and documented and it cannot be blamed upon any of the individual governments of the Atlantic provinces, particularly the Province of Nova Scotia. That is why the correction of economic and regional disparity becomes a problem for the national Government and why the Government of Canada must set that as a national goal in the achievement of which all Canadians must participate. In making my own case let me say that that is why we have Section 36 of the Constitution Act of 1972. It represents the agreement of all Canadians to eliminate regional disparity as a national goal.

• (1630)

In standing in this Parliament of Canada and reminding parliamentarians, and through them Canadians, of these facts, I am simply making the case that the Atlantic area, provinces like Nova Scotia, require substantial and indeed massive government assistance to eliminate the economic disparity from which those provinces in that area of Canada suffers.

We have looked at the problems; let us look at some of the solutions. I have already indicated that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and its successor Department of Regional Industrial Expansion have not resolved the problem. I believe the reason is that those Departments are not and have never been an integral part of the Government of Canada. They are not at the heart of government policy but are, rather, on the periphery, just like the Department of National Defence is outside the heart of the Government. It is non-political and does not get the special grants such as we have seen paid out in the Liberal constituencies across Canada. It does not get special treatment.

Until special treatment is given to the problem of regional disparity, nothing will change. We have had special programs, some of which have been successful and some of which have not. Rather than deal in an abstract way with this very practical subject, let me examine some of the problems that we have in the Atlantic area that are particularly important to Nova Scotia.

If the Province of Nova Scotia is to develop, it must be through the basic industries and resources of the region, using the capabilities of the people of Nova Scotia. That means the development of the basic industries of fishery, forestry, farming and energy. While we are not excluding ourselves from the manufacturing industry, our success has been in the basic resource industry. When I say energy, of course I include coal mining as well as the substantive offshore development which is anticipated for the future.

Let us look at the fisheries. We have a potentially viable, indeed lucrative, industry in the Altantic fishery. But what has happened? For some mysterious reason, notwithstanding the world-wide shortage of protein food and the high price of red meat world-wide, apparently there are difficulties in marketing fish. Who is responsible for that? Is that the responsibility of a fisherman at Peggy's Cove or Indian Harbour in the federal constituency of Halifax West? No, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans must assume responsibility for that type of problem. It is only that Department, with the assistance of the Department of External Affairs through the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Regan) and other agencies, that must resolve that problem.

There is an even more vital problem at the moment in the fishing industry. First, there is the restructuring which has just been accomplished with yet unknown results. That creates turmoil. Furthermore, the Government of Canada has placed the matter of the jurisdiction over Georges Bank before the international court at The Hague. I have just attended a meeting of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. I asked the officials of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans what the alternative was if Canada loses its case before the international court? While no one wants that result, the point is that the Government of Canada is gambling in the international court with Nova Scotia's fisheries chips, if I can make that analogy. It put the Nova Scotia fishing resource on the table in the international court at The Hague and now it refuses to tell us what will happen if the case is lost. Any lawyer will say that when one goes to court one will either win or lose. That is an example of the problems we face. There is a viable industry in the midst of restructuring, and the Government is taking the risk of losing one of the most substantial resources bringing in $100 million and more in fish catch. I think that is a subject that bears close scrutiny. If the Altantic fishery is to be restructured and to become viable, it certainly will not happen without the resource of the fishery at Georges Bank.

Let me talk about another industry that needs federal help immediately, not a month or two from now. It is the Cape Breton coal mining industry. In 1967, the Parliament of Canada established the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The Government took responsibility for the coal mining industry. The largest portion of that industrial activity on the Island of Cape Breton, in No. 26 colliery mining coal in a submarine mine, is closed as a result of a fire on April 5, 1984. It has not been reopened and 1,200 miners are out of work. Thousands of other workers who are dependent upon that mining operation for their employment are out of work.

The Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion (Mr. Lumley) has failed to indicate clearly what action he proposes to take to have that mine reopened, which may be a physical impossibility at this point, or to have a substitute mining operation. It is curious that this matter is being debated in the provincial legislature of Nova Scotia by the provincial colleagues of the federal Liberals. They are asking the Government of Nova Scotia what it will do, but this is a federal responsibility. The Government of Canada took over the Cape Breton coal mines. I see that the Minister has just entered the House. I say that it belongs to the Government of Canada through its agent, the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It is a primary responsibility that is no different from de Havilland in the aircraft industry. It is the federal Government's responsibility to act now. There are substantial funds involved and substantial funding is necessarily required, but it is only a small portion of the money that has been spent on projects like de Havilland, Mirabel Airport and so on. Nova Scotia wants its share of the national wealth that is being spent in that way.

We will finance special development in the Atlantic region by stopping some of the wastage that now occurs. Let me give one small example. The Government of Canada has established a transportation subsidy of $7.3 million for Atlantic Container Express to ship goods out of the Port of Montreal, to the disadvantage of the Port of Halifax. The sad part of this is that just within the year, the Government of Canada made a payment to the previous carrier, Newfoundland Steamships Company, of over $5 million to buy out that subsidy.

I could go through the books of the Government of Canada and find millions and millions of wasted dollars which, if spent on industrial development in Atlantic Canada and the Province of Nova Scotia, would put every Nova Scotian on easy street.

Let me end with this thought and this hope for the future. It has been clearly established that the future of the Canadian economy, its viability and the creation of jobs depends on the expansion of international trade. That is no more true anywhere in Canada than it is in the Province of Nova Scotia, with the potential for energy and other exports and manufactured goods. I remind the House that $1 billion in exports produces 17,000 jobs and that there has been a dramatic increase in international trade. If we participate in that international trade, we will produce the jobs we need. If we direct development in Atlantic Canada, particularly in the Province of Nova Scotia, we will produce the activities and the jobs we need to give Nova Scotians and all Atlantic Canadians a real place in the Confederation of Canada.

• (1640)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on the motion before the House which condemns the Government for abandoning its commitment to alleviate regional economic disparities. I must say that I agree with that assertion because when the Government consolidated its programs and brought in new legislation with regard to regional economic expansion, it reduced the amount of money which went into Manitoba, particularly into northern Manitoba. In that process, the Government attempted to increase its visibility in the passing out of public dollars in the northern part of the province. At least, it appeared to be a political approach to economic development rather than an approach which really attempted to meet the basic human needs of the people.

In fact, during the last provincial election, rumours were rife throughout Manitoba that if one wanted money from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, one had to go to the local Liberal Indian chief. It took many dedicated individuals to sweep away this notion of patronage, to point out that it would not work and that a government could not be elected on that basis.

People are far too sophisticated. They want programs and policies which deal with their social and economic problems. The motion we are discussing deals with the Atlantic provinces. However, coming from the Province of Manitoba, I feel akin to the people in Atlantic Canada, particularly their need for help. The inner cities of western Canada are most in need of help. If there is one thing the federal Government could do which would be important in terms of regional development throughout western Canada, it would be to make funds available for development in core areas like Winnipeg, Regina and Saskatoon.

There is a program in Winnipeg known as the core area initiative program that will come to an end within a couple of years. It came about as a result of a great deal of pressure by local citizens upon the publicly-visible sitting Liberal member in Manitoba. It is important that government, of whatever stripe, begin to plan today to provide funds for the programs that were started under the core initiative program in Winnipeg. The people involved in these programs have started daycare centres, affirmative action training programs, as well as housing programs. The fundamental problem is one of resources. This is what regional economic development is all about. People, particularly poor ones, will be left hanging out to dry unless government plans where the money will come from to keep such programs going. These programs contribute to social justice in the country.

I call upon the Government to renew its commitment to regional development, particularly to make a commitment to the inner cities of Canada, so that people who are left out of the sharing of the wealth of this nation will receive justice, their children will be able to attend decent schools and they will have a future. The Government must ensure that old people living in inner cities have decent police protection, decent housing and grocery stores to which they can walk. The Government should do something significant and real in terms of regional econoic expansion in the Atlantic provinces as well as in the inner cities across the country, particularly western Canadian cities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to participate in this debate because it affects both your area and mine. I compliment the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) for initiating debate on a subject which requires a great deal of exposure at this point in time.

One reason for suggesting that is that recently the seven aspiring Liberal leadership candidates attended a policy forum in Halifax. One would almost have thought that that forum took place on the moon, as far as any particular discussion of problems in Atlantic Canada were concerned. They just did not seem to know where they were. One of the major complaints of their supporters or possible supporters in Halifax was the fact that the problems of the Atlantic provinces did not seem to be the problems of the Liberal leadership candidates. They preferred to discuss national policies rather than regional ones. I would have thought that policy conferences across the country would relate to regional problems facing the country. If not, why not have all policy sessions in Ottawa rather than travel across the country to discuss national policies?

I would have liked to have heard some discussion by those leadership aspirants as to what will happen to FIRA. FIRA has been a curse for Atlantic Canada. It has prevented many potential industries from coming to our area. For example, within the last six months in my constituency because of the regulations of FIRA, a potential employer in our blueberry industry was lost. That industry has become a very substantial one, not because of the initiatives of this Government but because of the initiatives of provincial governments in that area. It is a big dollar earner outside of Canada and is of benefit to Canadians. However, there was no significant discussion about FIRA or about the need to have money invested in industry. Where the money happens to come from is not really important, as long as the companies which come to Canada become corporate citizens of this nation and adhere to our rules and regulations.

As a result of the system which is in place at the moment, many potential investors in this country turn away without examining the situation because of substantial delays in the processing of applications. It is somewhat better than it was for a period of time, but FIRA is a major disability in terms of the attraction of industry to Atlantic Canada. As far as I am concerned, its involvement in the location of industry should be substantially reduced. Provincial governments should determine whether or not an industry will be a positive benefit or a detriment to a given province. They rather than the federal Government should have an input into the decision-making process.

● (1650)

The Canadian people are fortunate indeed to have had the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney), the Leader of our Party, make a deliberate decision, in co-operation with the Hon. Elmer MacKay, to represent a constituency in Nova Scotia. The Hon. Member for Central Nova had a long, useful and positive relationship with Atlantic Canada as a youth in university and as a prominent member of the Canadian business community. The fact that he represents a constituency in Atlantic Canada has given him the opportunity to have a deeper and better understanding of many of the problems that Members from Atlantic Canada have been fighting. We require special recognition of the disparities that exist between Atlantic Canada and the remainder of this nation.

When he becomes Prime Minister after the next general election, he will have a sensitivity to the problems we grapple with on a daily basis. He will look forward to positive suggestions. He will initiate new programs that will be of real and lasting benefit. This will go a long way toward eliminating the regional economic disparity that now exists.

As a veteran member of this institution, I can say that there have been times when special legislative initiatives were taken geared specifically to overcoming the disparities in Atlantic Canada. They were designed to assist in the industrial sector and every other sector in order to alleviate some of the difficulties faced by people from an employment and social justice point of view. Unfortunately, for the last decade, we have seen very little of a positive nature with regard to overcoming the disparities that we face.

It is obvious that the gap between Atlantic Canada and the rest of Canada is widening. We again face an out-migration of our people. For a period of time there was a turnaround when people were returning. There were jobs for them. They had an opportunity to participate in the area from which they came.

In the days ahead, dramatic initiatives must be taken that will say to the total business community, inside and outside Canada, that the Government is going to put in place special programs and policies that will give them the opportunity to realize their specific goals. At the same time, this will provide new jobs in place of the LIP, "gyp" or whatever the programs are called. They do nothing more than guarantee that for 10 or 12 weeks people will be employed. However, forever and a day these people will be recipients of unemployment insurance. They have no hope of realizing their potential or the destiny they desire and have a right to expect. That is not happening.

I want to mention a few matters that could be of real value. This could be done almost immediately. It would produce a new atmosphere and new hope for the unemployed in our area who are becoming chronically unemployed. They see no hope for today, tomorrow or next year.

One initiative that could be taken by the federal Government could be through co-operation with our chartered banks rather than any legislative initiative. This initiative must come from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). The chartered banks would not pay that much attention to individual Members of Parliament. This Parliament, through the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, should ask the chartered banks to develop a sector that places special emphasis on Atlantic Canada. It should guarantee an examination of every proposal put forward by every enterpriser. New ideas could be fostered to produce new industries. I am not talking about megaprojects which employ 2,000 or 3,000. I am talking about small businesses which employ 10 or 15 people. Small business must continue to be the backbone of this nation, especially in Atlantic Canada.

The past two years have been times of great difficulty. Whether we want to admit it or not, these problems exist at this moment in Atlantic Canada. Atlantic Canada is not coming out of the recession. There is as much unemployment as ever, and not many new initiatives are being taken. Interest rates are again climbing. Whatever possibilities might have been in the minds of individual investors are gone. What might have happened is being flattened out because of high interest rates. Rather than trying to assist, the banks immediately call in their loans. This creates more and more bankruptcies of normally viable small business ventures. In 1981, 1982 and 1983, there was a tremendous increase in bankruptcies in Atlantic Canada. The chartered banks failed their customers by not riding with them through a very difficult high-interest period. With proper procedures, the Government could convince the chartered banks that they have a special responsibility, just like the Government, to assist in eliminating regional economic disparity.

My second suggestion is that there be an examination of our transportation policy, specifically with regard to Atlantic Canada. In the last two decades, if not three, there has not been an in-depth examination of the transportation policy in Atlantic Canada. One might say, Mr. Speaker, that we have always been like the tail wagging the dog. We receive whatever an examination of transportation brings forward that relates to the remainder of Canada but never to our own specific region of Canada. Last year, for instance, when we were supposedly coming out of the recession, the Minister of Transport, for reasons best known to him, decided that he would undertake an examination of the assistance that was available to industries in our part of Canada to see whether or not he could eliminate or reduce the transportation assistance that was available.

● (1700)

That examination guaranteed that nothing happened in Atlantic Canada for all of last year when the rest of the country was coming out of the recession. The industrial, agricultural, fishing and lumbering sectors did not know whether there would be any assistance and if so how much, so no one could make any long-term decisions. They were simply put on hold through all of last year when the rest of the nation was at least experiencing some movement in a positive direction.

We should examine the transportation policy as it relates to Atlantic Canada from the point of view of enhancing assistance in Atlantic Canada so that new incentives can be given to potential investors to move manufactured goods from Atlantic Canada to markets not only in the remainder of the nation but especially to markets in the northeastern United States. The people over at External Affairs should carry on negotiations with the United States to see how we could move goods from Atlantic Canada to the northeastern United States, an area with a tremendous population base which desires and requires the goods that are produced now. That movement should be made easier.

As well, an examination of the transportation policy could look into the tremendous shipping potential that is available in Atlantic Canada. Long before Confederation, maritimers realized that their greatest potential lay in the fact that they lived right beside the ocean. They realized that the world, and particularly Europe and the United States, was more readily accessible to them than to those in any other part of the country. We in the Maritimes utilized our shipping possibilities to an extent that they are not being utilized now. As a matter of fact, through duty-free ports and things of that nature, we are allowing other nations against which we compete to have an advantage over us. Without duty-free ports, we are attempting to compete with those nations and are finding that they are beating us almost every time. We must put in place new policies that allow the industrial sector to compete on an equal footing, in a way which they cannot at this time, with some of the other nations of the world. That is another example of what a transportation study could do for us.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention the blueberry industry because at this time it is a big dollar producing industry in Atlantic Canada. The people involved in that industry have done a tremendous job in developing new markets as a result of their accessibility to the ocean.

I just got the sign which indicates to me that my 20 minutes are up. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments related to the remarks of the hon. gentleman?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates) on his speech. In light of the point that he made that there has not been a major study of Atlantic transportation issues for a long time, a point that I think is well taken, I wonder if the Hon. Member would think it advisable for the federal Government to establish a royal commission broadly representative of people in the public and private sectors of the Atlantic region and beyond to investigate certain transportation issues.

Such a commission could investigate, for example, the federal Government's steady cutbacks on maritime freight rate subsidies and the effect of those cutbacks on regional development. It could investigate the dismantling by the federal Government of the railway system throughout the region, including my Province of Prince Edward Island, and it could investigate the steady deterioration under this Government of air service throughout the region, a service which can only get worse, I should think, with the sale by EPA of its assets to CP. In short, would the Hon. Member think it advisable for the federal Government to set up a royal commission to look into these and other transportation issues affecting the region?

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the point I was attempting to make in my speech. I tried to make the point that such a commission was needed, whether or not it was a royal commission.

It has concerned me over the years that even the MacPherson Royal Commission did not undertake a really in-depth examination of transportation problems in Atlantic Canada. As a result, we see these aberrations like the examination that was undertaken by the Minister of Transport last year that lasted for six months. Then everything was put on hold and we were told after six months that the Government was not going to do anything one way or another with regard to assistance. However, it did almost totally eliminate any possibility of movement or expansion and it did impair the ability of the people who were affected by that particular subsidy to make any decisions at all.

Such an examination should certainly take air service into account. We hope that the Minister's recent announcement about the deregulation that comes with his new air policy will eliminate some of the problems to be caused by the amalgamation of CP and EPA that are envisaged by some people. I think the people in the area have a right to know what that deregulation will do and what guarantees will flow from it. They have a right to know if the various provinces will be served as well as or better than they are being served at this point in time.

Mr. McMillan: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am not quite sure, but I think that when I posed my question, I may have referred to cutbacks on maritime freight rates. If I did say that, what I really meant was cutbacks on maritime freight rate subsidies. I hope that the Hansard reporter will record my meaning accurately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any other questions?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question to ask. I do not want to make a speech although I would like to make one in a few moments, if I may. The hon. gentleman was just about to mention a very important area for possible development in the rural areas of Atlantic Canada, that is the blueberry industry. I would like to know what the hon. gentleman was about to say when his time ran out.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member. I will be very interested in his remarks regarding the fishery because I know that he has views that could be very helpful and valuable to the House in that regard.

I was going to say that there has been a tremendous expansion in the blueberry industry in my constituency as well as throughout Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I am not sure about the situation in Newfoundland but there should be a great potential for that industry there as well. Provincial governments have been of tremendous assistance in helping to move that product to New York and to Japan. When we see something like that happening, and we see movement, then I believe that there should be within our agricultural policy the ways and means through transportation policy or through some other area of agriculture—through the development of frozen food plants and things of that nature—to take greater advantage of it. I believe that a transportation study could look at a product similar to this, see how it is developed, see how it has taken off as far as sales are concerned, and see how we can assist it to a greater degree than at the present time.

● (1710)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any more questions? For debate, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few brief remarks. I am sorry that I was not present for all of the debate, but I had to leave halfway through this afternoon to chair the Fisheries and Forestry Committee meeting. However, I did listen to some of the remarks that were made prior to that committee meeting. I would like to make some direct reference to the general implications left by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and, generally speaking, to comment about the perceived intent of the subject matter of the motion before us.

First, there have been many times when provincial governments and federal politicians have said that with the elimination of DREE there has been a substantial reduction in agreements with provincial governments. If one goes back over the figures for the first year that the new system came into being, some $214.4 million was committed for the Atlantic region, whereas in the previous year, 1981-82, the figure stood at $155.9 million. We can do anything with figures as far as DREE and the set-up which we presently have are concerned. However, we must understand that just recently in Newfoundland, a new ten-year umbrella agreement was signed with the federal Government. That agreement will facilitate the same types of agreements that were in effect under DREE. Even without the ten-year umbrella agreement, we saw a continuation of cost-share agreements into foresty and into ocean industries—which was a recent initiative on the part of the federal Government with the provincial government. We have seen the same discussions on the rural development agreement and on tourism.

The rural development agreement between the federal Government and the Government of Newfoundland appears to be bogged down. Unfortunately, the Hon. Member for St. John's West did not explain why that agreement was bogged down. The federal Government actually wanted to give more money to the development associations than did the provincial government. That is a fantastic idea on the part of the provincial government! The federal Government actually wanted to give them more money each year. Now they have a dispute on what that amount of money will be.

I have always had a basic problem with the general development agreements that are signed with the provinces. It is this: What they have done over the years is to create a disparity within an area of regional disparity. We have had agreements signed over the years that saw infrastructure established not in the small rural communities or in the rural areas as much as in the urban areas. If we examine the general development agreements for infrastructure under DREE, we find that to be true in every province in Atlantic Canada. It is unfortunate. When a Member represents an area, as I do, where people must travel over dirt roads day and night, where people cannot paint their houses because of the dust flying in the middle of the summer, where people cannot travel the roads in the fall and in the spring because the mud is up to the axles, and where people cannot get from point A to point B where there might be paved roads without travelling over an extensive area of dirt roads, then the federal Government and the provincial Government of Newfoundland under DREE would sign a big, let us say $55 million, agreement, to put an arterial road into the City of St. John's. The rationale used was that the main roads were congested. As I travelled throughout the rural areas in my constituency and saw what people had to live with, I was not too concerned about whether or not someone took ten minutes longer getting home from work in the urban area. There does not appear to be any rationale to those agreements.

The biggest problem in my constituency of rural Newfoundland is drinking water. There is no other problem that is as big as that. We have hundreds, perhaps thousands, of school children who drink water when they are home that is judged by the provincial Department of Health to have bacteria counts too numerous to mention. This is in 1984. That is the reality in certain communities. There are about 50 such communities in my riding where there is no running drinking water. Yet agreements have been signed by DREE to put water systems in the urban areas. The City of St. John's has a brand new water system because the level of the lake that it was using had dropped a few inches. I am not saying that it was not necessary to put in big infrastructure under DREE into our cities. I am not saying that. It was necessary. But there does not appear to be a mechanism to treat people fairly throughout a province like Newfoundland. It did not go to the root of the problem or to where the problem was worse than it was in urban areas.

That is basically what I find wrong with the system. What I found wrong with DREE is that agreements were signed, for example, in the fisheries infrastructure to build marine service centres. That is great. That is a fantastic idea. But in, each case the agreements were signed when the marine service centre was already finished or about to be finished. In other words, it amounts to this: all the general development agreements were made up by the provincial government to do things that the provincial government wanted to do. Not very often, if ever, would the federal Government say, "No, we are not going to cost-share this agreement". There was always the rationale used that it was for economic development. We had to stretch the interpretation of economic development. I suppose we could say that if we did not have a road on stilts made of concrete going into a city, then perhaps we would not have as many tractor trailer loads of products going over that road. Perhaps that encouraged business indirectly. I did not find that DREE actually got to the point of doing what it was supposed to do.

Industrial parks came under the DREE agreements. Those parks were congregated in certain sections of each province. Again, it was something that could not be changed because it was a priority of the provincial government at the time.

I recall that the Hon. Member for St. John's West who stood today to criticize the federal Government on development agreements was one of the key people who made sure that large sums of money went into the City of St. John's to the exclusion of some of the rural areas that I represent.

• (1720)

Basically, Mr. Speaker, what we have seen under this new setup which the federal Government has brought in is a continuation of existing general development agreements with certain exclusions. However, I do not believe, Sir, that you could say there was a reduction in the amount of money. For example, we still continued to build industrial parks, but they were more diversified. In the Province of Newfoundland for the first time an industrial park went into the Town of Gander. Tenders will be called on that in the next couple of months. We went to areas where economic development should be encouraged, but we found that the same agreements continued which existed under the old system of DREE, plus some other initiatives which were much more exciting than those under the old DREE program.

I notice in some remarks made here by Government Members that mention was made of such things as the national recovery program, the scrap program, which were certain initiatives taken by the federal Government recently. However, I would like to point out to the House the areas which really need economic development, a national recovery project. For example, in the community of Dark Cove in my district, it would be a slipway. The national recovery program in a small community on the northeast coast would be a Canada Works grant to try to put in a water system. A national recovery program to another community might be the provision of a community hall. The reason for that, Sir, is that out of all the grandiose programs of the provincial and federal Governements, about the only program in existence today which gets into the small rural communities, which does not have the tax base to become an incorporated town council and, thereby, does not qualify for normal municipal grants within the provincial structure, is the direct job-creation program, and that is it. If we looked at economic development today in the extreme rural areas of Newfoundland, for example, we would find that the biggest economic tool for that community is the direct job-creation program. That is it.

It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that sometimes people ask why this job-creation money, this Canada Works money or Canada community development fund money, cannot all be put into economic development. That is what you normally hear in the smaller communities. One tends to think that the reason for the question is that that is the only money that actually gets into the smaller communities, perhaps out of a budget of $10 million for all of Newfoundland and Labrador. People in the community concerned say it is marvellous, and someone else will say, "Why can we not put that money into economic development?" That is only $10 million, Mr. Speaker, and the Newfoundland Government, for example, gets $800 million in equalization payments to do the very thing which the fellow is talking about. When you add up all of the transfer payments, it comes to something like 60 per cent of the provincial budget. There are provincial and federal Government Departments which are supposed to deal with economic development, but the only economic development tool is that little Canada Works grant that goes into that community.

I was amazed and shocked to hear the Hon. Member for St. John's West, who is such a popular fellow in his riding, a fellow who is supposed to understand what is needed for economic development in Newfoundland, make the statement that we must do away with direct job-creation programs. Before the next election, the people in those rural ridings will have to know if the Liberal Party is going to continue with these grants to the smaller communities. Is that its policy? And is it the policy of the Conservative Government to continue with these grants to the smaller communities? Because it is the only delivery agent for economic development we have in the extreme rural areas of eastern Canada. That is a poor reflection on the existing economic agreements which we have with provincial departments of economic and industrial development which are receiving over half their funds from the federal Government in equalization payments.

The other problem I have with the general thrust of the debate, Mr. Speaker, is that when one looks at what it is possible to do—the previous speaker from the Conservative Party referred to blueberry production—one looks at what can be done in the fishery, and then one realizes that most of those great fish companies which got into trouble were sending their fish down to the United States to be made into a finished product. Most of the problem existed with frozen cod blocks, but you cannot find a fish company, any multinational fish company in Newfoundland, which produces a finished product for the marketplace.

When we consider that our raw materials, our resources, are going to another nation to be made into the finished product, then we must realize we have a problem. And when we realize what the potential is, then we must ask ourselves how that can be corrected. We then get back to the basic question of who, jurisdictionally, is supposed to do what, when and where. We have in the Province of Newfoundland, for example, as we have in other provinces, a provincial government which controls the issuance of licences and what an industrialist is allowed to do on land. You then have the federal Government controlling the actual resource, and never the two shall meet. Everyone agrees that one of the reasons why the fish companies got into trouble, and why we had such incredible lay-offs, was that too many processors' licences were issued in other parts of Newfoundland. The provincial government, not the province—and there is a distinction—was issuing licences everywhere. Something had to happen. I have no problem with the provincial government issuing those licences, Mr. Speaker, if the community had had a meeting and said, we want a processor's licence in this country to create employment. Instead of taking our fish and trucking them to another place, we want a processor's licence. This will create permanent employment in this community. You would have to be crazy not to agree with the people in the community, Mr. Speaker. In fact, if I were the provincial Minister of Fisheries I would have probably issued twice as many processors licences, because how can you deny the community employment? How can you deny the rationale that it is better to have the fish processed immediately rather than trucked down to some big multinational fish plant on the South Coast or the East coast?

• (1730)

But the problem is this. In Newfoundland, for example, which is different from Nova Scotia, a processor's licence does not mean you are going to process anything. That is the basic problem. It should not be called a processor's licence unless you are processing something. That has been our problem in the Newfoundland fishery.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments related to the remarks of the hon. gentleman?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the remarks of the Hon. Member, particularly with respect to the basic services required in a community in the Atlantic area to promote industrial development. I have never heard of an industry, whether it be fishing, manufacturing or any other activity, wanting to locate in an area which did not have adequate water supplies, sewer systems and other basic services. Those basic services become very much part of industrial development and expansion. When we think of assistance for industry, we often think of help in putting up buildings and other structures, and even assistance in obtaining working capital, but we sometimes get away from the very basic needs of communities.

I was interested to see that the Hon. Member has a problem which exists in my constituency of Halifax West, that being a lack of pure water supplies. Some areas in my constituency have water which is contaminated with arsenic. Other areas are contaminated with other deleterious substances, but arsenic is the principal culprit. Pure water is not available and the residents have a problem. Anyone looking at that area as a site for industrial expansion of course immediately looks elsewhere. I want to commend the Hon. Member for bringing to the attention of this House that these very basic requirements for services are important. Even though they are considered people services, they are related to industrial development and expansion.

I want to ask the Hon. Member if he has any thoughts or ideas on how the federal Government might involve itself in these very basic problems. In the case of the arsenic contamination in parts of Halifax West, I would have thought that the Department of National Health and Welfare might intervene on the basis that it was a serious health hazard, and then take some specific action. The Minister has not taken that receptive an approach to the problem. But if it could be characterized as a factor which militates against industrial expansion, perhaps there are other Departments or agencies of Government which might get involved in order to assist in the development of the area. It is only with that development that you can have any real economic activity. Whether or not you link the economic activity today directly to that special problem, it is certainly a problem which affects the people involved in the activity. If the Hon. Member has any comments on what the Government might do in this area I would be pleased to hear them.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I know from the Estimates for the Department of the Environment that there were three water systems put in this past year in certain parts of Canada. But I do not know how one would go about even applying for the money. It is done on the basis of fifty-fifty federal-provincial participation. But to answer the question, unfortunately and unless the federal Government were to pay the entire cost of the water system in most provinces, you could not have a water system installed in a small rural area. Unfortunately, financing the water systems by provincial governments is normally done on the basis of a bank loan or a loan from a provincially established bank. It is not usually government money. The interest is paid by the provincial government until the system is completed, at which time the province guarantees that the municipality will pay it back to the bank over a period of time. The problem you get into when you have a small community which is unincorporated, or if it were incorporated it probably could not make the payments, then the provincial government is not going to be too anxious to put in a water system. That is the unfortunate part of it.

The only way I can see in which the federal Government could put in a water system is to do exactly what the Hon. Member said. You need a water system in order to have anything happen in the community. I would say that that is where the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) should put some of the LEAD assistance which was newly approved by his Department. It is an excellent program. I think that is something they should look at. In fact, I have asked the Minister if we could not follow that same procedure in my constituency.

The basic problem is that we have provincial governments whose responsibility it is to provide pure drinking water and they are not doing it. Probably the biggest disgrace in this country is that we do not have adequate drinking water in this country today in 1984.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief comment, and I know the Hon. Member will appreciate this as well. I think both he and I realize and recognize the subject we are talking about, but it occurred to me that others might not understand that in the undeveloped areas of the Province of Nova Scotia—and I gather from the Member that the same situation exists in Newfoundland—you cannot always have access to ground water through the drilling of a well, because that water is contaminated. In the Waverley area of Halifax West and in others the waters are contaminated, so you simply cannot gain access to pure water through the use of a well, which is the normal method. As my colleague has pointed out, in some cases in rural areas there is no municipal support for that kind of elaborate system which would normally be an urban type of development.

Perhaps the Hon. Member will agree with my comment that this is in a sense a rural problem. But if you do not solve it, the area will not only remain rural, it will remain totally undeveloped where otherwise it could be a viable area for development if that problem were solved.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to pick up from the point where my colleague left off in his remarks earlier this afternoon on the motion in front of us when he referred to the role of international trade in Atlantic Canada to help us restore that level of activity which would tend to rid us of the disparity between us and the rest of Canada. It seems to me that the statistics with respect to international trade, their impact upon job creation, are sufficiently well known to government, to our officials and to our institutions. Some simple statistics, for example, show that for every billion dollars of new trade that we can develop in the export context we can create 16,000 or 17,000 jobs on average. With certain products the figure is much higher, or course, and with other products, much lower. I think we are beginning to reach up toward the $100 billion mark in export trade. Mr. Speaker, $1 billion or $2 billion of that export trade going out of Atlantic Canada would create 25,000 or 30,000 new long-term jobs and would, as my colleague says, rid us of most of our unemployment in Nova Scotia alone. It seems to me that that is an area to which the Government should perhaps start to turn its attention.

I have watched the evolutionary process of regional and economic expansion. I have watched successive governments struggle, with good intentions, with this problem of disparity between the regions. I have watched them move from rural programs to rural regional programs, to rural and agricultural programs, to rural and industrial programs, into simply regional development and now into regional industrial development. We still have not got a handle on it. I suppose that historians may say that 10 or 12 ad hoc programs were considered, put into place and tried. However, they were all found wanting. I do not condemn, out of hand, ad hockery, trial and error, because it is a difficult problem in the sense that we recognize that each step of the way the measures we have put in place have not in fact worked. The gap is still there and is widening. I suppose that what I am going to suggest is yet another piece of ad hockery, if you will. Nevertheless, I think it is something to which we should seriously direct our attention over the next 10 or 15 years.

A lot of the development money which comes into our region is lost. Our attempts to develop an industrial base, a secondary manufacturing base, the fishery, the forestry and agriculture, have been failures, to one degree or another. When we put a new water system into metropolitan Halifax, we spend $40 million or $45 million on it. We do not make the pipe in Atlantic Canada. We do not make the valves, gaskets or pumps. We do not make the electrical wiring which goes into the building which houses the pump that turns the motor. The slippage is extra-ordinarily high. On Pockwock alone, about 15 years ago, the slippage was very close to 90 per cent. While it seemed as though we were getting an awful lot of help, in fact all we got was some money to pay for labour content, to buy some bricks and perhaps a bit of concrete. However, we have no legacy from that, other than the infrastructure itself. We needed it and I am not condemning that.

We now know that of the hundreds of millions of dollars being spent offshore, only 20 per cent may stay. The other 80 per cent goes somewhere else. It does not stay in Atlantic Canada. There is no legacy of permanent employment. Those are just two examples. What else can we do? We have tried help in the agricultural sector. We have tried it in industry and manufacturing. It does not work. We will have to put money back into Devco one way or another to put those men back to work.

I am not talking about the ongoing things which we must do. I will talk about what we should be doing. The Minister responsible for manpower wants to put $11 billion into retraining. That is great. That will go a long way to help. Let us find out what it is that Canada can sell. Let us start so that 10 years from now the research will have been completed and we will know what we can market abroad. Atlantic Canada is in a position to sell offshore. We do not have the technology. We do not even know what the markets are.

I reject those who ask how they can research and develop a product and make it marketable if we do not know what we want to sell. We have not started. Let us start to identify our goals. We could take some of the money which we have been putting into GDAs and into the sub-agreements under them. The Minister spoke today about how they rise and fall because they are definitive programs which have a beginning, a peak and a decline. They start and they end. Let us use the concept of having a beginning, a peak and an end with respect to investment in market and product identification and the technology which would be required to put the products that are identified into the markets which are identified. Let us discover whether in Atlantic Canada we can develop an additional $2 billion in export sales. We are on the water. Why not take advantage of the sea? I am not talking about money to develop products for consumption in an already saturated central market or a midwestern or northeastern U.S. market. I am talking about markets that can be developed, such as the Caribbean basin, South America and Africa. That is Atlantic Canada's natural target area. It seems to me that for a relatively minor investment with the technology we have available to us we could identify those markets and their needs. I think we could be highly competitive.

As a Nova Scotian and a Canadian I would like to see the disparity between our regions end. I would like to see our accounts balanced in one way or another. We are net importers of our food. In Atlantic Canada, we have a $4 billion challenge in agriculture alone just to meet our own needs. I would like to see us meet those. I would like us to be able to settle the accounts of our own Atlantic provinces. We are out of balance in our own four Atlantic provinces. While some are more out of balance than others, collectively we are out of balance with the rest of the country. In fact, we are so out of balance that it will not be good enough to continue with the traditional, slowly evolving process.

I commend to the Government and those interested the idea of putting some seed money to work in national research, through a professional resource or institutional process, that could be put to use in Atlantic Canada to develop that type of product which is required there with traditional Canadian materials. We could identify the amount of research money required for the development of the products that we determine are necessary and then get on with the small infrastructure that would support that development.

We need permanent long-term jobs. While jobs at minimum wage and summer jobs are helpful, our young married families need jobs. If we are talking in terms of $100 billion in export sales, I suggest we could use $2 billion of that in areas that we could identify in Atlantic Canada. I commend that thought to my colleagues.

I make these suggestions because as I have watched DREE and its programs evolve over the years, I have not been able to forget a conversation that I had around 1963 with two gentlemen who were asked by the government of the day to prepare the next logical step in Mr. Diefenbaker's Atlantic development concept. That is where this evolution began. I thought it very strange and somewhat sad at the time, and still do, when they told me that the terms of reference with respect to their work clearly indicated that they were open-ended with no restrictions. Their only guideline was to devise programs that would quickly return the money they would have to spend in Atlantic Canada back to central Canada. That was their interpretation of the comprehensive guidelines. They were to devise programs but at the same time ensure that the money spent gets back to central Canada.

I suppose that I am not old enough to be so cynical as to believe that that is the cause of the failure of the programs. But it is certain that the programs have failed and the gap is widening. The so-called brain drain is still there. It is not that our children want to leave but that they must leave. This particular suggestion may not work and it might not be possible to achieve it. However, if we are going to attempt to establish various programs, let us try to see if there is an institutional process which could examine this proposal to see if it can be used. If it does prove favourable, it can be funded and we can begin to create those needed jobs.

Atlantic Canadians today, as I suppose they were 50 or 100 years ago, are proud people. We do not like being in debt. We do not like to say jokingly that everything is fine, just keep the money coming and keep the transfer accounts as high as possible. We are not accustomed to living like that, nor are we accustomed to hand-outs. On the other hand, we cannot always do things for ourselves that we know must be done.

It is to address that problem that I urge the House to contemplate offshore trade seriously. In one area alone, we spend 10 per cent of the value of goods on their transportation. Probably 80 per cent of that, with respect to export, is waterborne costs. Therefore, there is a possible recovery of $6 billion or $7 billion alone if we had the nerve to strive for our own offshore fleet. This would mean a re-emergence and gradual regrowth of a Canadian merchant marine, which would be a start in itself. Perhaps there is a conceptual approach within that suggestion.

I am simply saying that funds are available. As well, there is a private sector responsibility with respect to the development of offshore activity in trade. Perhaps there is even a greater responsibility by Government. But it is from Parliament that the lead must come.

The only observation I wanted to make with respect to the debate today is that the issue we are discussing is serious. We must find a way to overcome the difficulties of employment. Unemployment among our black community is a perfect example. Re-entry into the labour force for black women who have left it to raise a family is probably 1,000 times as difficult as it is for white women. We are not addressing that problem. Let us attempt to find in offshore development and trade a means of creating jobs to give these people a hope that is rightfully theirs.

I appreciate the time that the House has given in listening to me. I ask the House only to give my remarks some thought.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the Hon. Member's address very much. I regret that the Minister responsible was not here to listen to some of these excellent suggestions.

The Hon. Member talked about the necessity for training and deplored the lack of training. How can we expect to have this training when Bill C-12 reduced the amount of post-secondary entitlements for the four Maritime provinces by $24.8 billion over one year ago? Since it is reduced, how will we catch up with training?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 26(11), proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under S.O. 45 deemed to have been moved.

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS PROGRAM—HALIFAX WATERFRONT COMPLEX. (B) STARTING DATE INQUIRY

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, the adjournment debate provides me with an opportunity to place before the House of Commons a matter which has caused great difficulty and consternation in the City of Halifax, that is the construction of a federal office complex for the City of Halifax in the federal constituency of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Regan). I suppose this federal office complex could be described as the mystery of the April 1983 Budget. It was announced by the Minister for International Trade in late April, 1983 as part of the Special Recovery Capital Projects program, which was a major feature of the Budget of the Minister of Finance of April 19, 1983.

When the Minister for International Trade made the announcement of this office complex he indicated that it would be a $51.3 million building. He said that the multi-building complex would contain a series of low-rise structures and would be built on land owned by the provincial Halifax-Dartmouth Waterfront Development Corporation. Whether that is a proper designation of that party, I do not know, but it was made clear that the building was to be constructed on the Halifax waterfront.

What was not made clear was the information contained in the document which I have before me. It is an internal government document, authorized by one Ken Mackay. He said in that document dated November 28, 1983 that the Halifax federal building was not a $51 million building as indicated by the Minister for International Trade, but in fact a $4.97 million project which involved a lease-purchase agreement. Right at the outset there was some question whether the Minister was being less than honest in announcing the project. However, that is not the problem today. The problem today is whether this $51 million building, which was to provide a thousand construction jobs, will ever occur.

The next piece of information I have to offer the House of Commons arrived in February 1984, almost one year later, when the Minister of International Trade again called the press into conference and said that there would not be an office complex on the Halifax waterfront, but that there would be a more elaborate but less expensive complex on Gottingen Street in the City of Halifax. He was very proud of this new complex. He paid no attention to the fact that $20 million was lost in the shuffle from the first announced office complex to the new office complex announced in February 1984. He was joined by the Mayor of Halifax, an eminent Halifax Liberal and former member of the provincial legislature, who said that it was one of the most exciting complexes which the City of Halifax could imagine. He saw no problem with the change in site. He saw no problem in the reduction of the expenditure from $50 million to $30 million. No one commented on the number of jobs which would be lost by this reduction, and on they went.

The problem was that the Minister for International Trade in making the announcement forgot all about the place at which the building was to be sited. He just assumed that by some magical process this would become the property of the Government of Canada and they would go ahead with the construction which he estimated would take place within a few months; that is to say, Nova Scotians would be put to work on this Special Recovery Capital Projects program involving the construction of the building announced as part of the Budget of April 1983. That is not to be the case at all.

Now the announcement comes forward that the expropriation, which the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) instituted to acquire the land to build this $30 million building on the new site, has been attacked, it has been challenged. It is unlikely that this expropriation will ever take place because the owners of the property who are now employing people and creating jobs and activity do not want to give up the site. It is a simple exercise in property rights. They are saying, "No. Sorry federal Government, but we want to keep these properties that we have utilized for many years in our businesses and activities." The federal Government, through the Department of Public Works, has to defend its right to expropriate. I am sure the courts of law involved in this transaction will say, "No. Go find your own land."

The proposition now comes forward that there is to be a new site for this project, a third site. Meantime, all kinds of objections have been raised. While the Mayor of the City of Halifax said it was a wonderful project, according to a newspaper report in February, 1984, however, and I quote:

> Halifax Alderman Don Le Blanc says the decision to build a $30 million federal building at Gottingen and Cogswell Streets is impractical and illogical.

Experts brought before the hearing with respect to the expropriation said this is not the place to put that kind of a building, that it will not help North End redevelopment. What has happened is that we seem to be engaged in some kind of a publicity manoeuvre and machination by the Minister for International Trade. There apparently, will not as of this date, be a federal office complex built in Halifax.

Mr. André Bachand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond in greater detail to the question put by the Hon. Member on March 16 with respect to the construction of the federal building in Halifax.

When my hon. friend, the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Regan) first announced the construction of the building in question, our plans were for a project that would cost about $51 million, $50,795,000, to be exact. However, we then had to consider the impact the project would have on the owners of the buildings where public servants in the Halifax region are accommodated at the present time. Everyone finally realized that the owners would be put under undue pressure if all public servants that could be accommodated in the complex were to move at the same time. Indeed, the resulting vacancy rate in private sector office buildings would have caused a number of problems.

That is why, after reviewing the situation, we decided to reduce the scope of the project by about half, so as to eliminate most of the problems that could be expected, while at the same time meeting the need for bringing a number of public servants under the same roof.

Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, we tried to acquire the land required to build this project. The harbour front property mentioned by the Hon. Member was our first choice, but public reaction indicated that a building of this kind on the waterfront was unacceptable, especially since originally, the project was to include a laboratory for the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, in addition to the general purpose office building. It has now been decided that the Fisheries and Oceans laboratory will remain in its present location. We have also managed to find another location that will suit our needs. The property is on the corner of Cogswell and Gottingen. The choice of this site received the unanimous support of the municipal authorities, and it will definitely help to revitalize the Gottingen Street neighbourhood. We have published notice of our intention to expropriate, and work will start as soon as we have obtained title to the land.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that thanks to this project, we expect to create more than 500 jobs.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—UNITED STATES—OIL DRILLING LEASES OFF COAST OF BRITISH COLUMBIA. (B) CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in my question of May 15, page 3734 of Hansard I asked the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs about the protest note recently sent to the United States, last week I believe, over the proposed oil drilling leases being put out to tender to interested U.S. petroleum companies in the area of the Dixon Entrance off the British Columbia northern coast. I received anything but a satisfactory answer. My question raised not only the sovereignty concerns but environmental concerns as well.

• (1810)

Let me explain. The area for lease as cited by the Federal Register of the United States for March 30 at page 12763 extends into waters over which Canada has a claim. It seems as though the United States Government is also claiming waters in that area. In other words, the area is in dispute. Jurisdiction over this area is not fully determined. Therefore, it seems to me that the United States is building its case and Canada is to be commended for counterclaiming by means of a protest note and for strengthening the case for its claim.

That is fine for now, but the Canadian Government was asleep at the switch when hearings relating to the whole lease area were held in Alaska during the week of February 13, 1984, as cited by the Federal Register, the American counterpart to The Canada Gazette. Where was the Canadian Government then? Why was it not at the hearings? Why did it not make representations to the U.S. Government at those hearings?

The area about which hearings were being held at that time is exactly the same area over which the protest is now being made three months later. Aside from the sovereignty question over lands which Canada has claims, important as that question may be, there are Canadian environmental concerns implicit in any hydrocarbon exploration in the area which may be put up to lease. That is another reason for Canada's attendance at those earlier meetings which were called by the Department of the Interior.

The lease area blocks off, as it were, access to the open sea for Canadian salmon spawned in the Stikine, the Nass and the Skeena Rivers, just as it blocks off access for mature and spawning fish heading up those streams to do the thing that comes naturally; that is to spawn, fertilize eggs and produce more salmon. That area is up for lease to petroleum exploration companies and there could be environmental concerns.

Canada's interests are at issue. Why was Canada therefore not represented at the hearings in Alaska which were held in February 1984? Why has Canada only now awakened to the threat to Canadian sovereignty?

As far as I can tell, the salmon question was taken into account only as recently as this weekend. I asked for a copy of the note that was presented to the Government of the United States in protest over the sovereignty issue, and I asked if it covered the environmental issue. As I say, I did not receive a satisfactory answer. The Minister did not seem to know.

I do hope that the Hon. Member who is replying for the Minister will be able to say that that note will be made available to Canadians so that they will know how strongly the Government is protesting on the sovereignty issue, and whether or not it is protesting on the environmental issue. If it is not, I do hope that a second note will be sent making it clear to the United States authorities that there is an environmental issue as well, that there is a threat to the salmon stocks that spawn in Canadian streams, go through the archipelago, which is now a part of the Alaska panhandle, into the Gulf of Alaska to the Pacific Ocean. That is a legitimate cause for protest and I do hope that a second note will cover that issue if the first note did not.

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, in the absence of the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and also of his Parliament Secretary (Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet), I am pleased to answer the concerns of the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) who is to be commended for raising this matter. Regarding that famous diplomatic note that should have been sent to the United States and that indeed has been, concerning the leases to be put out by the United States Government of the West Coast, I would like to point out that these leases do not involve the area inside Dixon Entrance. Rather, they lie West of the Entrance. No agreement was reached on the maritime boundary between our two countries. The Canadian Government considers unacceptable the action taken by the United States to put out leases in that area.

The diplomatic note does not cover the question of jurisdiction. Clearly, Canadian environment laws and regulations apply to areas under Canadian jurisdiction. In March 1979, Canada and the United States signed two treaties: a treaty concerning fishery resources on the East Coast, and a treaty under which the dispute concerning the maritime boundary in the Gulf of Maine area is subject to mandatory resolution. The United States have not ratified the fishery agreement, and it has never been implemented. On the other hand, in 1981 the United-States Senate ratified the boundary agreement, under which the dispute concerning the maritime boundary in the Gulf of Maine would be referred to a division of the International Court of Justice in The Hague. Canada and the United States have just concluded the presentation of their case, and a decision is expected next summer or early next fall at the latest.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—WEST REGION TRIBAL COUNCIL. (B) VALLEY RIVER INDIAN BAND—PROPOSAL TO PURCHASE BALLAST PIT

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, my question pursues the one I raised on May 4, in respect to which I believe the Minister responding inadvertently misled me. He was referring to meetings other than the one I asked about. Perhaps it was the right answer for the wrong question.

However, on May 4 I asked why the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) had not yet responded to the West Region Tribal Council and Chiefs of the Crane River, Ebb and Flow, Pine Creek Waterhen and Valley River budget submissions which were presented to the Minister directly, in person, on March 29, when he had promised a response within 15 days.

My office was in contact with the West Region Tribal Council this afternoon and they have not yet received a reply. When will that reply be forthcoming? I am sure the Minister understands that this budget request is a very serious matter. The amount proposed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is not adequate to meet the combined funding needs of the bands.

At the March 29 meeting, the Minister promised to respond to the Pine Creek's education budget proposal in ten days. There was no reply. When will there be a reply? I would like to quote from their letter to me. It reads:

> We presented our budget to Mr. Munro on March 29, 1984.... Our of Meeting, the Chief and Representatives of the Education Authority were informed that the Minister's office would get back to them in ten days.
> To date we received no response from his Department.... The Department agrees with Local Control of Education on reserves and have said so many times, both to this Band and nationally; but when it comes to funding this program, either there is no money or all programs are based on a formula.

In my supplementary question I asked about the Valley River ballast pit. When will this long-outstanding matter be settled? The Minister and the Department are aware of the details of this matter, and how the gravel over the past two years for the Band has actually cost more than the price the pit would cost to purchase.

Once again, and I will continue if need be, I call upon the Minister and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to act immediately to secure this piece of land for the Valley River Indian Band under the Department's native land claims program. I trust and hope that the response from the Parliamentary Secretary will be more complete, and will give some positive response to this issue.

Mr. André Bachand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for the Manitoba constituency of Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) said that he is concerned about the financing of the West Region Tribal Council and the purchase of a ballast pit for the Valley River Indian Band.

The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is providing financial assistance to the West Region Tribal Council for the over-all management of its programs. I am happy to note that the Minister has approved in principle a new funding policy for the Tribal Council. Part of the additional funds which the Department needs to implement this policy have been allotted. The Minister has also announced that he plans to ask the Treasury Board for assistance to Tribal Councils throughout the country during the current fiscal year.

As for the purchase by the Valley River Band of a ballast pit located on their reservation, the Department is willing to provide assistance if the price corresponds to the market value. However, the owner is asking without any justification a price that is much higher than the estimated value.

Purchasing the pit is therefore not justified under these conditions. However, departmental officials in the Manitoba region are still willing to meet with the owner to negotiate any reasonable price. They will also encourage the Band Council to continue its own negotiations.

With respect to the financial problems affecting the schools administered by the bands, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is defining comparability in the field of education on the basis of the impact of schooling on the educational level of people whose culture, language and capabilities are different. This modern concept emphasizes the comparability of results and the social and economic fall-outs.

However, there are urgent problems which need to be solved. We recognize the fact that providing comparable services and obtaining comparable academic results depend on certain unique factors which represent the most important challenge for schools placed under the authority of the bands and those under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. Among these factors, there is the fact that most Indian schools are small and that many of them are located in isolated areas which are often accessible only by plane; there are also cultural and especially linguistic factors which require the development of special programs and the hiring of teachers with the proper qualifications.

During the last few months, the Department and the Indian leaders have examined the present situation in the field of education and they have agreed that much remains to be done in terms of program development, personnel retraining, special programs aimed at exceptional students, school facilities and global management framework. Some problems are fundamentally structural ones and will be resolved in the longer term within the bilateral process and through the Assembly of First Nations' Secretariat.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Hon. John Munro, has initiated the process with a view to obtaining the funding required to address the more immediate problems that were underlined by the Indian authorities responsible for education and by the regional representatives of the Department. In initiating this action, the Minister has set up a goal consistent with one of the fundamental values of Canadian society, that is, equal access to education as a basic right for all citizens.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order.

At 6.24 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.
