This amount was contributed to the Canadian Olympic Association as part of the agreed upon formula for government support for Olympic Teams. The COA has responsibility for the Olympic Team during the actual Games (including transport to and from Canada), while the federal Government shares with each of the national sport governing bodies the responsibility for the training and preparation of Canada's international athletes.

The cost to the federal Government of the transport and accommodation for the Sarajevo team was $250,000 approximately, while a further $6 million was contributed by the federal Government to the national sport governing bodies during 1983-84 for program costs associated with the preparation of the athletes for the Winter Olympics.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hawkes:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to work co-operatively with the provinces, business, labour, voluntary organizations and the educational community to provide adequate training and retraining opportunities that would enable Canadian workers to feel confident about their ability to deal with the challenges of rapid technological change.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted by the luncheon break I was in the middle of discussing certain social changes that were taking place in the field of employment. The fourth point that I have listed, Mr. Speaker, is that in the future people will have to be more self-reliant. They will find that they will not be able to rely upon a single employer for employment security throughout their lifetime, nor will they be able to rely on governments. People who put their trust in governments generally end up falling flat on their faces at some point in time. They will have to become more self-reliant as time goes on. Our education will have to reflect that.

Another change that will occur in the future, and which has to a certain extent occurred already, is that people will not rely on one single specific job for a source of income. Presently most people in Canada have a principal source of income from a job and very little income from other sources. Maybe in the future, as the number of hours per week consumed by working at a specific job decreases, you will find that people will have other things to do. It is quite conceivable that they might work in the standard, accepted sense and do other things which will bring in additional revenue. It may be a second job in an entirely different field in which they have a great deal of personal interest. It could be investment income because people will have time to do other things for themselves. It could be income from entrepreneurial activity of one kind or another, or from property ownership.

I have noticed that in certain professions this is going on today. Not too long ago I sat on the flight deck of a Hercules aircraft and spoke to the flight crew. Most of them worked a couple of weeks a month. They could only fly so many hours and after that they went back to their home bases. Most of them were involved in other things. They were involved in voluntary organizations as well as profit-making activities. I think that is a good trend to see. In the future people will not be tied to working 40 or 50 hours a week for one employer; they will have a series of sources of income.

This will blur the distinction that our socialist friends are at pains to keep. If people operate in the way that I have suggested, there will not be that clear distinction between what the NDP call the working class, the capital owning class, and other types. Everyone will be involved as wage earners, investors and entrepreneurs. The politics of the day will have to reflect this. It is happening today. We see support for the socialist party represented here waning day by day.

The developments that I have outlined appear to me to be exiciting developments. The Government should act in consort with these trends and not try to go out of its way to oppose them, as presently appears to be the case on occasion.

We still have very parochial thinking, particularly at the provincial level in certain provinces. I have been a party to this myself, but I think that on the whole we should take a Canada-wide or even an international view of matters rather than being restrictive in our thinking in terms of a single province or part thereof.

Again with respect to education, there is still a tendency on the part of government to look upon education as something that takes place between the ages of five and 20, or whenever one leaves university. The Government has not yet accepted the notion of education as being something that is ongoing and a process that will last a lifetime.

The Government is still very much involved with hand-out programs. It has not got around to addressing problems on a long-term basis. It considers that our current difficulties will go away and it simply throws a few dollars here and there into one of its various alphabet soup programs. It is not really addressing the long-term problems and long-term societal changes.

For these reasons I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) on the task force report on technological change and manpower retraining, of which he was the prime mover. It is a subject to which he has given a great deal of thought, both presently with this report and also with other members of the parliamentary task force on the same subject.

Many of the ideas contained herein are not really new, revolutionary ideas, but the task force has collected and collated a wide variety of views from Canadians in all walks of life and has effectively crystallized these ideas out of the vagueness that existed before. It is a distillation of thought and an arrangement thereof in logical order. I am sure that in the future we will look back at this report and it will serve as a blueprint of what governments might do in the field of technological change and manpower retraining.

I do not propose to have all of the solutions to some of the problems I have raised, but I have a few which I would like to deal with later. In the next couple of minutes I would like to point out some personal observations about where we seem to be going at the present time. I have three illustrations.

The first deals with the manpower offices as they exist in my constituency. Some 15 years ago we did not have any at all and things seemed to be going reasonably well. There were not high rates of unemployment and maybe we did not need them. It is hard to judge which came first, the chicken or the egg, so to speak. However, there were no manpower offices or anything of that nature 15 years ago. Today, they must be staffed with a complement of somewhere between 50 and 100 people, when one considers the Territories as a whole. The problem has not been alleviated. If anything, the problem that did not exist when we had no manpower offices has now become a very difficult problem with which to deal. I am not so sure that the hiring of 50 to 100 people, the provision of office space and all the money that is spent on these things might be the best use of resources, human, financial and otherwise, available to the Government.

Another illustration is the difficulty people face if they want to give employment, particularly to summer students. I know that it used to be my practice some years ago to hire one or two summer students. Now, the roadblocks that are put in someone's place are almost insurmountable. I would not consider doing this today because I know full well what would happen. For the next five years I would be getting reports from Statistics Canada threatening to throw me in jail unless I filled them in. There are problems with the tax people and unemployment insurance people. There are all manner of problems and roadblocks which prevent small employers from hiring people, especially on a temporary basis. That is unfortunate because surely part of the training of young people, apart from schooling proper, is to get experience in work situations, particularly during the summer recess. It makes it very difficult and is unfortunate for the student when the Government erects all of these roadblocks.

You are signalling that my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker. I have several pages to go and I will not be able to get to my solutions. I like giving the solutions better than stating the problems. However, the last illustration is that of a silly make-work scheme. Last summer I travelled throughout my riding in which there were Summer Canada Works programs into which the Government throws quite a few thousand dollars. In two locations I noticed that there were unused fields in the middle of towns. They were about 15 acres each. Students were out there with little sticks with six-inch blades on them, cutting the grass or mowing the hay on these waste areas. It was a scheme to employ perhaps a dozen young people for a period of six weeks. One man with a scythe could have done it all in one week and one person operating a power mower could have done it in one day. It represents a complete waste of government time and money and a waste of the talents of young people.

I believe my time has expired. It is unfortunate that you could not have heard all of my great solutions, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I will be able to give them to you on another occasion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Questions or comments?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I would be interested in hearing some of the solutions that the Hon. Member referred to in his remarks.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, it just so happens that the solutions take exactly ten minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must remind the Hon. Member, before he enters into his solutions, that both the questions and the reply must be brief and to the point. I could not, under any circumstance, allow him to continue for ten minutes.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, let me briefly put on the record some of those things which I consider would help in this area. First, I believe the Government should remove itself from administered programs. These programs include the illustration I just gave of these silly make-work schemes and the difficulties that they place before prospective employers or trainers. The Government can use its manpower and financial resources much more efficiently if it did not insist on running everything itself.

I believe the Government should concentrate on the basics, perhaps in the field of elementary education. While this is within the jurisdiction of the provincial governments, in my estimation government can do the most good by taking action on the basics, such as providing schools and teachers, especially in such areas as basic literacy, as we have heard on several occasions today.

I think the federal Government has a legitimate interest in sponsoring higher education. It is a shame that only the other day a Bill was presented to the Chamber and passed by the Government majority that would reduce assistance given to colleges and universities.

Another similar and related field that is especially important in my area is that of adult education. I think the critic of the Indian affairs and northern development portfolio addressed the need for adult education in his remarks to the House today. I think we should use the tax system to advantage, both industrially and personally. Employers might use this money for training in the plants. Individuals might set aside such funds for training purposes.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I am very interested in the Hon. Member's remarks. Would he clarify for us whether he is indicating his own view or the view of his Party with regard to direct job-creation programs? He said he thought that a lot of the Summer Canada projects in his constituency were not very valuable. Could he indicate to us whether it is the position of his Party that direct job-creation programs, administered programs as he calls them, were not a good thing to have in areas of high unemployment, whether they are geared to young people or to other people who are unemployed? Could the Hon. Member clarify that, please?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, had we not got ourselves into the predicament we have, it would not be necessary for these make-work schemes to exist. However, because of the way in which the Government has looked at these problems in the past, instead of trying to rearrange the structure they try to throw a few dollars here and a few more there and patch things up. We now find ourselves in a position where it would not be possible to cut out of all these things overnight.

What we have to do now, and what we will do when a Progressive Conservative Government comes into office, is this. At the same time as rearranging things of a structural nature and getting Canada back on track, making sure there are employment opportunities for everyone who wants them, we would adopt a system of phasing out these Liberal stopgap, alphabet soup programs. It cannot be done overnight but it will be done over a period of time as a gradual phase-out.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Questions? The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Dubois).

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred in his speech to the matter of summer employment, and also to what a Progressive Conservative Government would do. Maybe he was alluding to 1979. Could he tell us, since some of his colleagues, including the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), have been calling for more money for Summer Canada, what his party's position is? Are they for or against job creation programs, and Summer Canada in particular? It will be remembered that before February 1980, more specifically during their short stay in Government, between May 1979 and December 13, when they were overthrown, they brought the axe to the summer creation programs, including Summer Canada, which the Liberal Government has brought back. Are they for or against summer employment programs for students? What would they do for students, in light of the fact that in 1979 they had to cut into those programs?

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: That appears to be precisely the same question as the one asked by the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). The answer remains precisely the same, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there further questions and comments? Shall debate continue? The Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette).

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate with my colleagues in the debate on an issue which, to my mind, is basic, especially after travelling throughout Canada and meeting with employers, union members, voluntary organizations and young people, and then considering today the motion moved by the Progressive Conservative Party to single out our failure to work together with the provinces, business and labour organizations.

Mr. Speaker, it would seem that our colleagues do not work in the same country as we do, but there is indeed one undeniable fact: I am just back from a trip across Canada during which I visited the ten provinces and the Northwest Territories. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) should make an effort to recall that I was in Yellowknife about three weeks ago to attend the Arctic Games and at the same time to meet with employers, union leaders and all those who are involved in youth employment, as far as I am directly concerned, and to discuss the employment situation in Canada generally.

I am here today, Mr. Speaker, to speak on my own behalf since I happen to be Minister of State for Youth, and on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) who is now in Montreal to sign an agreement with a group called "EPOC" with which I met a few years ago and which is working with a group of Montreal businessmen to train young people and find employment for young drop-outs who are experiencing difficulties because they have been unemployed for several years or thrown out of the labour market as a result of their running afoul of the law, which does not make it any easier for them to land a job. Earlier today, the Minister signed an agreement with that dynamic group that, in nine cases out of ten, has been able to find employment for young people who have been rehabilitated over the past ten years through federal Government sponsored programs.

Today, I think we have not learned much from the report of the task force of our Progressive Conservative colleagues who said:

[English]

The task force reports that Canadian industry is slow to recognize much of the potential of merging technologies.

[Translation]

As if we were in 1940, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The task force terms a disgrace the fact that the public educational institutions are often unable to afford needed equipment for training and hence make appropriate changes in curricula to reflect changing skill needs.

There again, Mr. Speaker, I think that, even after voting on the estimates and the expenditure items approved by this House, the Opposition Members do not even realize that we have a Skills Growth Fund worth several million dollars. I would at least ask them to read the official document.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, in my tour of Canada and as the Members opposite have pointed out in their report, I noticed that the labour market has been undergoing a major transformation because of high technology, silicone chips, robotics, and so on. Of course, when we see challenger's Canadarm, we realize that Canada is involved in the progress of technology and that all our young people and our working men and women in Canada are anxious to play a role in the many new jobs created in the high technology areas.

[English]

Most of us have already felt the impact of the new revolution in one way or another. One has only to look at the proliferation of home computers, automated bank tellers and home video equipment to realize how quickly and completely the new technology has taken hold. Under its influence, our industrial and business environment is changing rapidly. Combined with the economic upheaval through which we have been struggling in recent years, the implications for our human resources are far-reaching and critical.

More and more across the country, jobs are being defined using computer technology. Those of us not conversant with terms like Cobol, Pascal "C", Fortran, Bi Sync, Unix, and Ominel may react with the jitters when scanning today's roster of job qualifications.

Microelectronics will eliminate many unskilled and repetitive jobs, but it will create even more new and high-paying ones. In some cases, it will change the very concept of a skill. For example, with the transfer of a machinist's tasks to computer-controlled machines, the job of a machinist changes into one of monitoring the computer-controlled equipment. However, a machinist's job could be upgraded by combining his traditional mechanical skills with new computer skills. Much depends on how we choose to link existing skills with computer technology.

The high technology business is regarded as one of the healthiest and fastest growing. It is also widely recognized that Canada must encourage and support the growth of these industries to escape economic stagnation. So high technology is here to stay. As a woman, I recognize the usefulness of a microwave oven.

I feel we have to be optimistic about the changes occurring around us despite the growing pains and confusion that are part of this transition. At the same time, we have to be realistic enough to devise strategies that will overcome current problems and lay the foundation for the future labour market. An especially important strategy is to forge strong links between training and technology to overcome the skills gap and spur technological progress.

Good training programs that equip people to enter growth occupations temper their fears and anxieties about the effects of technology in the workplace. This makes training and retraining programs for new computer technology jobs both a social and economic necessity.

When all is said and done, skills are the building blocks of individual self-reliance and economic growth. They are the means of remolding our human resources to meet the new requirements. High levels of employment and productivity can be achieved if workers are equipped with the skills that will be in demand in the years to come. It is for this reason that the Government reorganized its training initiatives in 1982 and established the National Training Program.

The Government does intend to revamp the system where necessary and direct the bulk of federal funding to training high demand occupations. In the old days, some of our resources were clearly wasted on training for occupations which already had a surplus of skilled workers. We do not want that situation to recur. As a former president of a school board, I can remember this happening.

To prevent it, a number of initiatives have been set up under the National Training Act. These include the designation of occupations of national importance which are or will be in high demand and requires special training efforts to increase the supply of skilled workers. Sources of information in the federal and provincial governments and business and labour have been consulted to ensure that the list of occupations is on target. It will be reviewed and updated each year to reflect the changing labour market.

The need to channel workers into demand occupations is equal to the need to bring training facilities and equipment up to date. Undoubtedly, there is no point in designating occupations of national importance and embarking on a scheme to train people on sophisticated equipment which only a few facilities can afford. The Skilled Growth Fund is the obvious answer. The fund makes funding available to private and public non-profit organizations so that they can modernize facilities, buy equipment and develop courses to train Canadians in national occupations.

[Translation]

The need to set up a truly effective information system for the labour market is obvious to anyone who has ever had to determine manpower training priorities. Last year, the Government launched the Canadian Occupational Projections System for the purpose of undertaking the enormous and complex task of compiling and integrating data related to the labour market and obtainable from several sources in addition to the federal Government's own sources.

While this project is still in its early stages, it is already showing that it can be of great assistance in forecasting future manpower needs and identifying occupations where demand will be greater. Identifying and solving human resources problems will be vitally helpful in providing sound information about the labour market. Seven workshops have been established throughout Canada to ensure the exchange of information necessary for such an effort. Representatives of the private sector and of the various levels of government will be meeting for a day or two in seven Canadian cities to identify regional and sectorial problems in order to obtain the most recent data on available human resources and to suggest how we should better orient our policies. In fact, one of these meetings will open tomorrow in Halifax.

[English]

The human resource workshops illustrate an important point. The Federal Government cannot do the job of developing Canada's labour force by itself. What is required is a combined operation involving all levels of government, business and labour. I am sure Hon. Members would agree that what we clearly need in this country is a continuing exchange of ideas and information, a partnership of dialogue in spirit. We also need to make a commitment to work together for economic growth as economic partners. We already have the instruments and agencies through which this can be done, but we must take advantage of every opportunity for meaningful contact.

Nowhere is the need for partnership as acute as in the sphere of human resource development. We all have a role to play in managing change, in rising to the challenge that change presents. The onus is on individual workers to train for new occupations. Unions must help their members to cope with the transition to new work environments. Employers must contribute to the training and development of their employees. Training institutions must ensure that adequate and relevant programs are available. All of us must work together to make it easier to adapt to change.

This Government has given top priority to involving business and labour as key players in resolving labour-market problems. We have not only worked with them in attempting to find the answers to problems, but we have been content to step aside while they jointly pool their expertise.

A prime example of this approach is the recently formed Canadian Labour Market Productivity Centre. The centre, although financed by the Government, will be a completely autonomous body, operated jointly by the Canadian Labour Congress and the Business Council on National Issues. It will be completely free from Government intervention to assess such issues as the impact of high technology on the labour market and of the need to increase industrial productivity.

This marks the first time in Canada's history that labour and management have had their every own mechanism for dealing together with matters of national economic importance. The centre's findings and recommendations will be eagerly awaited by Government. I take particular pride in the fact that I was a member of a government which was able to bring labour and management together in such a positive way. I should also add that I have been very impressed by the calibre of academics expressing interest in working for the centre or being kept informed of its findings.

Perhaps at this point I should mention the extent of our financial assistance for training. This fiscal year we will be spending more than a billion dollars to help Canadians upgrade their present skills or learn new ones. More than half the total training budget is directed toward the purchase of courses in both public and private learning institutions for individual Canadians. This will provide training opportunities for some 220,000 men and women, and nearly half of them will be young people.

Of course this billion dollar figure does not include the vast sums of money the federal Government channels into post-secondary education, much of which has a direct impact on preparing young Canadians for careers in such fields as computer programming. In addition, in recent years the federal Government has increased its grants to education councils so that more bright young Canadians can attain Ph.D.s in scientific and technical fields. To do so, the Government inspired itself with good reports like the one prepared under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), the Dodge Report prepared in the Department of Manpower and immigration and the Wallace report on part-time and job-sharing. There was another good report prepared on educational leave.

This Government was very active in preparing for the jobs of tomorrow. We have also built training into our job creation and work-sharing programs. Two of our job-creation programs in particular, Career-Access and Job Corps, make it possible for young people to gain valuable on-the-job training. The work-sharing program has been modified to enable workers to take advantage of their day's off to undergo training. Once again we are taking the initiative in relating training to actual work situations.

I think in my remarks today I have shown how the Government is co-operating with the provinces, management and labour and develop training programs which will help individual Canadians adapt to rapid technological change. Many of the mechanisms we need, such as consultative processes, are already in place. Because of this, we are in a better position than ever before to modify our programs as required.

I was not impressed by the progress we have made in fostering provincial-federal co-operation in the training field. I was particularly pleased to respond positively to the suggestion that labour and education ministers meet before the fall to examine the recommendations of the National Advisory Panel on Skilled Development Leave, including the extent of illiteracy in Canada.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker, some of the Opposition members may not be aware of recommendations concerning educational leave. Essentially, we are calling for a legislation which would give Canadians the right to accumulate educational leave credits with a view to acquire new skills while still earning a decent wage. I must stress that this kind of program exists in several European countries. I suggest the same could be done here in Canada.

I believe we can no longer expect that people will acquire during the first 18 or 20 years of their life all the education they will need in their lifetime. Within an ever-changing labour market, studying is a continuing process which musts be extended to the whole life of workers. Government must find means and take steps to make such a process possible without affecting the individual's career.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite my hon. colleagues to avoid negative criticism of a program such as Summer Canada which will help thousands of young people. At a cost of $200 million, exactly 81,000 young Canadian students, through this program and through Youth Employment Centres, will have access to a summer job.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the private sector has done its share last year by creating 330,000 jobs for youth. This was made possible by 1,600 young people who solicited these jobs, working within the Canada Employment Centres. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that this program enables young people not only to earn money to pursue their academic studies but also to gain experience which is a must. I deplore in these difficult times, especially hard for parents and young people, that Opposition members would reject any initiative taken by our youth. Young people may not be as experienced as their predecessors or their parents to establish a program and create jobs for themselves through the Summer Canada program; however, I can assure my colleague that 99 per cent of Summer Canada projects submitted are commendable initiatives and are quite remarkable efforts on the part of these young people. In my own riding, I can say that the work being done by these young people during the summer time enable them to pursue their academic studies and quite simply to gain a knowledge which they would not otherwise acquire through formal education.

I must remind my colleagues that I also call on the private sector to create jobs through the Summer Canada program. In my view, it would be a shame that such a Government program be criticized because of a handful of projects which may not have been profitable, while most of the thousands of projects which are funded bring enormous benefits at the community level to all beneficiaries of the services offered.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): We will now have a ten minute period for questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has indicated to the House that in her travels she has found that the Canadian industry is aware of advanced technology. The Science Council of Canada has said that even quite small economies have had a head start of at least four to five years with the kinds of studies and exhortations about a promising technology that began to surface in Canada only in 1982. A recent study by the Ontario Government tells us that 24 per cent of the Canadian manufacturing industry is aware of the computer-aided design systems, 37 per cent is aware of the computer-aided manufacturing systems and 17 per cent is aware of the integrated CAD-CAM systems. If the Minister really does not understand those facts, then I think we have gotten to the root of one of the reasons for the inadequacy of government policy as it affects the issue of technology.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Minister.

She claimed she held consultations with provincial representatives from labour, industry and the education sector. It matters little that consultations have been held in the past, since nothing has come out of them. This morning, I refer to the fact that the Liberal Party ignored report after report, study after study, work project after work project. Can you guarantee that this time, your consultations will yield concrete results rather than being ignored?

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, I want to answer the first part of the Hon. Member's question, where he referred to what seems to be the private sector's ignorance of some aspects of high technology implementation. I will remind the Hon. Member that there are special programs and provisions in my colleague's department of Regional Industrial Expansion, to promote the implementation of new technologies. But the issue at hand today is that of manpower, and it is my contention that in the present case it is a matter of adjusting manpower to our new technology. It cannot be said that the Allmand Report or any report, whether it be the Dodge Report or the Wallace Report, had no impact. I think your colleagues were part of the group that worked on the Allmand Report titled "Employment in the 80's", which gave an outlook and lead to the introduction of legislation to restructure vocational training financing.

On the basis of my experience as the former chairperson of a School Board that had to negotiate with employment centres concerning adult training, I contend that the new act, combined with moneys provided by the occupational skills development fund will make it possible to acquire highly specialized equipment, including computers, or more simply standard laboratory equipment biotechnology for instance. Therefore I feel that we did give labour and industry the means to adjust to new working conditions.

I am quite surprised, Mr. Speaker, at the Hon. Member criticizing the private sector because according to our Progressive Conservative opponents, private industry would be quite capable of creating jobs, while I have to fight to create the 550,000 jobs our young workers need. If anyone, the Progressive Conservative Party, the provinces or anyone else has a magic formula to propose I would be quite ready to recommend it as early as tomorrow morning to this Government. If they have not, there is no point in their criticizing the positive measures which have been taken and the $1 billion which is provided for vocational training each year, including $500 million for our young.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to congratulate the Minister on her appointment and I wish her good luck. She was very flattering about the task force on Employment Opportunities for the '80s on which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), my colleague, the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Marceau) who is present today, and myself served. That report contained 186 recommendations. I would like to ask the Minister three questions pertaining to the report.

First, has she read the report to which I have referred? Second, how many of its 186 recommendations has the Government implemented? Third, why was the chairman of that committee not informed of this debate today? Why did he have to rely on the Hon. Member for Calgary West to tell him about the debate during today's lunch hour?

[Translation]

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, in order to give a very accurate answer concerning the implementation of those 186 recommendations which relate to more than one Department, I would like to assure my colleague that I will be in a position to table a report in that respect. I am wondering why he has not raised that issue in the past two years, because the fact is that the report was made public at least two years ago. Since my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) is present, perhaps the Hon. Member should put his question to him directly.

[English]

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, the Minister claims that we as an opposition have criticized the Summer Canada Programs. We merely pointed out the ineptness of the Government when we referred to these programs. These programs were created as a court of last resort because the Government opposite had created such massive unemployment and the private sector did not have any hope whatsoever of creating the employment that was required because of the situation brought on by the devastating economic policies of the Government opposite.

The Minister has cited Training Initiatives in 1982, the National Training Act, the Skills Growth Fund and the Canada Labour Productivity Centre. All of these initiatives were taken in the 1980s. For 16 years the Government opposite has been in power. Could the Minister indicate why something was not planned in advance? We knew of the technological changes which were coming. They are still coming today. Why did it take so long for action to be taken?

• (1550)

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, I might simply point out to my colleague that, when we talk about training, we mean education, and that happens to fall under provincial jurisdiction. Having worked in the provincial Department of Labour, I can state categorically that we did not have to take any orders from the federal Government when I was a provincial employee. That is why, I suggest, we cannot talk about consultation and cooperation without the provinces being party to it. But that is a far cry from imposing our views on training, Mr. Speaker, and I think we would be rather naive to think that we have to show the provinces how to train young people and pinpoint priorities. I think they know them just as well as we do. As to upgrading our occupational training legislation, I happened to be with the provincial Government when discussions were begun concerning changes, since I was with the Government in 1977-78. It is a process which has been carried out through federal-provincial conferences.

I must tell my colleague that I do not think the provinces were against increased training funds. On the contrary, they are making a commendable effort to equip their school systems with computers and all necessary facilities. I should say that we want to do a lot more than just criticizing the provinces, we want to sit down with them and combine our efforts. That is precisely what we are doing to anticipate labour needs in the way of high technology training.

The conferences and seminars scheduled for this spring call for full participation by the provinces, the unions and the employers, and it is with them that we will make an inventory of their needs. However, it is not an easy task, and very few organizations can predict with any degree of accuracy which categories of skilled workers will experience shortages in the coming years. I have been following this file for many years and I know it is not easy. All participants concerned are now trying to find a solution which will probably not be perfect since no one can claim to know the labour market inside out. Still, I think that the initiative of the federal Government in that field can meet the needs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) on a short question.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, we have had 10 years of experience of band-aid programs in the wintertime and in the summertime which involve rather large amounts of money. They seem to satisfy the political psyches of some parts of the country, particularly the region from which the Hon. Minister comes; as long as the Government can say it is spending money people seem to be satisfied. Whether anything is done is another question. Since we are talking about formation, my first question to the Hon. Minister is: A formation for what?

[Translation]

Frankly, there ought to be a national goal with respect to formation, and that should flow from an agreement between the federal Government and the Provinces whose responsibility it is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Minister of State (Youth) is allowed a rather brief answer.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, my colleague is referring perhaps to the master agreements on economic development which are now being concluded with various provinces under the direction of the Hon. Donald J. Johnston. In my opinion, the planning of economic developments must, of course, be carried out through those departments and, with regard to human resources, we respond to the demand.

I should add just the same, for the information of my colleague, that training will be provided at the provincial level. I do not think that the Government of Canada should set up another Department of Education. And with respect to job creation, I would like to see for myself the full employment policy of the Tories. It has been a long time coming. They keep talking of lowering the deficit, but I think that further training would be unnecessary, because there would not be any jobs left.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I recognize that the 10-minute period for question is probably up. Since the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) is the only Minister present today, there might be a predisposition on the part of Hon. Members to continue the question period for the purpose of edifying them as to government programs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is highly unusual and would certainly require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Dubois: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There is not unanimous consent. On a point of order, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. MacBain).

Mr. MacBain: Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the House is disposed to returning to the tabling of documents, by unanimous consent, to permit me to file in both official languages this year's annual report of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Lambert: Why did you not do it at the proper time?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Does the House give its unanimous consent?

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, the usual discussions have taken place and on behalf of my Party I give that unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is there unanimous consent to revert to the tabling of documents?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McDermid: The NDP agree too.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

TABLING OF FIRST ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I take the blame for not doing this at the proper time as someone asked. On behalf of the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), I would like to table in both official languages two copies of the first annual report of the Department of Justice.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hawkes:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to work cooperatively with the provinces, business, labour, voluntary organizations and the educational community to provide adequate training and retraining opportunities that would enable Canadian workers to feel confident about their ability to deal with the challenges of rapid technological change.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) has just spoken. I awaited with great anticipation some of her answers. I must say that I was very disappointed to hear more of what we have heard for the last 20 years.

Mr. McDermid: Perhaps she did not even have the question.

Mr. Wenman: That is right, perhaps she did not even have the question. When referring to technology she asked, "Where have Members of the House of Commons been?" We have already felt the impact on our side of the House. She has, we have, the whole country has, as have 1.5 million unemployed Canadians. We have all felt the impact. It is the impact of the neglect of the Government over the last 20 years. That is what the impact is, that is what the neglect is, and that is the opinion of the public.

A good portion of those 1.5 million Canadian people are facing middle-age redundancy, and 500,000 young people do not even have an opportunity to face redundancy because they cannot find jobs in the workplace. However, they do face redundancy because their education has already proven to be inadequate and the possibility or probability for training or upgrading is closed to them. The Government has felt the impact, but why did it not do something about it? What did it do when it felt the impact?

Enrolment levels have increased of late. In other words, the youth of the country and those faced with redundancy are seeking ways through the educational system to obtain hopefully, retraining or a usefulness in the productive system. What does the federal Government do? It cuts back. The provinces will have less money for education because the Government brought in a Bill to reduce funding to educational institutions in Canada. Over the protests of the combined Opposition Parties, it forced the Bill through the House of Commons. There will not be more money to meet the training needs of these people next year, so that they will be equipped for the new technologies and new challenges. In fact there will be less. Of over $10 billion spent on unemployment last year, only 2.57 per cent went for training. I thought the Minister felt the impact. If so, how come only 2.57 per cent went for training?

One out of every five of those young people about which the Minister was speaking is today unemployed. They account for about 40 per cent of the total number of people unemployed in Canada. Of this 40 per cent, 73 per cent are at an educational level which does not exceed high school. We have read many reports about functional illiteracy. This Government two years ago, when facing this problem, showed great foresight and cut out all spending on training for basic literacy just to put these people back into the work force. We now have the impact.

I am disappointed, Mr. Speaker, in the Minister of State for Youth. She became defensive and described all the programs which Government had in place. But she did not listen to some of her own colleagues. We had a more honest and direct representation from the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). He indicated there had been a major drop during the last decade in the amount of moneys set aside for adult education and training. He saw this from the Government side of the House of Commons. He was a small voice back in the corner and the Government could not hear him. I hope that Hon. Member will hear our motion today, Mr. Speaker. I hope he will hear us address the basic problems, bringing forward some of the solutions which will, in fact, lead us into a better 1990 and beyond.

We should look at the solutions to this problems mentioned by the Minister. She announced that we were going to have a series of new meetings and workshops, city by city. That is commendable. She said we were going to have a new centre to study productivity. That is commendable. She said we were going to have a national advisory panel on the subject. That is also commendable. She stood there and listed report upon report of things which could be accomplished, reports which are now sitting gathering dust on someone's shelf.

What the people of my riding want the Minister to know, and what the million and a half unemployed people in Canada want the Minister to know is that they cannot eat a report, Mr. Speaker. They cannot pay their mortgages with a conference. Students cannot pay their tuition fees with another meeting, with another conference or with another report. What we need, Mr. Speaker, is not more and more dollars spent on researching the problem. What we, in fact, need is action. We need action which is on the major economical ill which is facing the country.

I believe most of us have now identified that Canada's recovery is predicated on its capacity to increase its productivity. We must increase our productivity both in quantity and in quality on a per man, per hour basis. Once we increase that productivity, it is no good to store it in a granary somewhere, or in a warehouse somewhere, it has to be sold. It has to be sold on international markets.

Through that increase in productivity, through that trading and selling in international markets, jobs will be found, Mr. Speaker. But that is where jobs are also being lost. For every 1 per cent drop in international trade, we lose the equivalent of $6.5 billion, and that is not new trade which we cannot get, but trade which we used to have. Our share of world trade has dropped by 33 per cent, two and a half points. And that is where the jobs are lost and where the jobs must be found.

In our industrial, educational and job retraining strategies, we must recognize that that is where we must head. The orchestrated restriction to the flow of trade to Canada is threatening to wrap a tourniquet around Canada's lifeblood. The low level of research and development and the lack of retraining response to technological change has led to stagnation in our economy and to the high levels of unemployment which we all are experiencing and suffering.

The Minister is right, in that the post-industrial society has arrived and it is breaking all around us like a tidal wave. Canada has a nationwide need for retraining, innovation and research and development if we are to catch that wave towards prosperity. The challenge facing Canada is to apply new technology without massive job displacement and economic dislocation. Without the opportunity to meet and solve the challenges of that new technology, the work force will actively resist change. Therefore, we will have to work towards that change with new attitudes, new opportunities and new specific ideas.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), who has already spoken, did not just talk about reports. He has made his report and has suggested from his report specific lines of action. This comprehensive study on the problem of technological change for manpower and retraining is the first breath of fresh air this House of Commons has felt for a long time. It is that kind of breath of fresh air which is going to carry us forward into the next Government of Canada. If the implementation of new technology means inevitably that some jobs will be lost, then those persons who are displaced must be adequately retrained so that they are full participants in the economic community.

Our Party has found that one of the main obstacles to solving the problem of technology lies in the vague wording of the Canada Labour Code, in particular, Sections 149 to 153. If you want an example, Mr. Speaker, of something which causes problems, which creates a tone of concern between labour and management, a lack of understanding, clarity and direction, it is the vague wording of the Canada Labour Code. The present Code does not satisfactorily address the problem of technological change today, much less the more comprehensive changes which will be required in the future. The present Code requires that the employer, who seeks to effect a technological change which affects the terms and conditions of security of employment of a significant number of employees, must give 90 days notice to the bargaining agent prior to the change.

I am not the first one, Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House to bring this problem to your attention. As I speak today, I want to recognize that this has been brought to your attention before by the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis), and I pay special tribute to him today for his distinguished parliamentary career. Hon. Members of the House will miss him. We wish him success. I hope that we will take the advice which he gave us as recently as a few months ago. He did address this problem but the Minister did not comment. Perhaps she should have talked specifically about what she can do now. She said she would listen to ideas from this side of the House but she did not listen to the Hon. Member for Perth. Perhaps she will listen today. We will try again.

This 90-day clause is of concern to us. The definition of technological change cannot possibly cover all types of changes in the way work is carried out as a result of new technology. However, the definition itself of technological change must be made more explicit. This section requires redress because the burden of proof lies on the employee to prove that the employer is introducing new technology and that it has an impact on his employment. The employee's task is virtually impossible if the employer does not provide the information on the change.

Phrases like "substantially and adversely affect" and "significant number of employees", are so vague that they do not allow the affected party to determine if notification is necessary. These phrases must be made explicit to avoid possible disputes that arise out of confusion because the definitions have not been clear. The opting out provisions of this section are unsatisfactory because they remove the compulsion to reopen bargaining. If an employer signs a collective agreement which gives notice of technological change prior to the conclusion of the last agreement, or has provisions which allow for the settlement of matters pertaining to technological change, or contains provisions to assist employees to adjust to the effects of changes, or if the agreement specifies that statutory provisions do not apply, then the employer does not have to bargain with his employees. The problem is that both parties may not have had sufficient information on the impact of the change when the agreement was signed. Opting out also means that there is no mechanism for redress should a dispute arise.

As both I and the Hon. Member for Perth said, the 90 day notice period is simply too short to allow for negotiation of adequate adjustment policies or retraining agreements. Employers are not required to provide well detailed information of impending changes. A minor change like this sends out a signal to management and labour that we want to add clarity. From that we can add a tone of leadership which we can all co-ordinate to create this better environment we all know must be found in industrial relations.

Apart from the obvious negligence of the present Government in providing for adequate retraining programs, it is becoming increasingly apparent that our young people are not receiving the kinds of training they need in today's world. Canada suffers from a critical shortage of skilled workers in many sectors of the economy. Yet, in spite of those shortages, 1.5 million people are unemployed. Although international comparisons indicate that Canada has one of the world's best educated work forces, we are less well equipped educationally than some of our major competitors and the over-all trend is indeed discouraging.

For example, in our universities there are 200 vacancies in our management faculties, 200 in engineering, and 600 in computer science. We are graduating fewer Ph.D.s now in mathematics, engineering, agriculture and biological sciences than we did in 1974. Where is the direction, Mr. Speaker? Where is the leadership? In disciplines critical to our competitive future we are going backwards, not forwards.

The OECD estimates that between 25 per cent and 30 per cent of Canada's work force is functionally illiterate. The application of new technology will require higher levels of skill than our work force presently has. Clearly, with such a large functionally illiterate work place, the general knowledge will have to be increased before they can in fact develop the opportunities to participate in any new technological society to come.

We sit here and debate. We pile words upon words. It is like another report. I feel almost guilty doing it because I know that of the people in this House and those listening to us today there is not one person whose family is not touched by the impact of the technological society. There is not one person who does not know of someone who is unemployed, someone who has dropped out of school in grade 11, grade 12, is unemployed now and unemployed forever. He is cast from our society. I just wanted to end with the plight of that person listening today, Mr. Speaker. I urge the Government that now is the time for action, now is the time for programs. We are fed up with studies. We are ready to build a new country. I was going to detail the recommendations of the studies by the Hon. Member for Calgary West, but they are now public and available. We will send them wherever we have to. To him we offer congratulations, and we look forward to getting on with the job. There is new hope for that young person out there. It will not take long, it will be just a matter of months until there is a new Government with a new vision.

Mr. Miller: I have listened with interest to the debate. Many of the things said by the Official Opposition and my colleagues in the NDP are things which I think most Canadians are anxiously awaiting to see from Government, whether it be federal or provincial. The Hon. Member who has just spoken and I both represent ridings in the Province of British Columbia. We all know that our forest industry is in some very serious trouble because of a declining timber base and world competition. The B.C. Government is cutting back in the forest service by 500 employees at a time when there is a critical unemployment rate in B.C. and more people are coming out of colleges and universities with forest training and looking for employment opportunities.

Would the Hon. Member consider it a failure on the part of the provincial and federal Governments to come up with an agreement on funding for education, and also a lack of a forestry agreement? I understand the federal Government was prepared to offer $37 million to British Columbia for reforestation and silviculture and that it was rejected. Could the Hon. Member comment on why we are not getting that co-operation from the Social Credit Government in British Columbia at a time when young people need employment, our forests need reforestation, and a large number of unemployed workers could be in those woods creating jobs now and in future?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I find it somewhat difficult to relate the question to the speech of the Hon. Member. Perhaps Members could keep that in mind. Questions and comments are supposed to be related to the speech.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to defend or attack other Governments outside of this House, but let me just say it was relevant because I made the point that the federal Liberal Government of Canada cut off all training programs two years ago for those who were functionally illiterate. This same federal Government has cut back on funding for education to all the provinces. It does not matter whether it is British Columbia, Alberta or Manitoba. What are the provincial Governments going to do to provide these programs when the Government of Canada is saying we are giving you less and less and less in these areas, which are its responsibility? The attitude is wrong, and the greatest wrong comes from the leadership process in this House. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Government are supposed to set a tone of non-confrontation, a tone of co-operation. They are supposed to find and develop new and real programs which filter all the way down the line. It is a long cycle but it starts here; let us keep the buck right where it belongs, in this House of Commons.

[Translation]

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague who referred to skills and young people whether he is aware of the Skill Growth Fund set up under the National Training Act. Could he tell us whether he is for or against the program specifically designed to assist young people? Is he aware of the program in the first place?

● (1620)

[English]

Mr. Wenman: The Hon. Member is aware that about three years ago in the House of Commons I first proposed that 25,000 unemployed young people be drawn into the reserves of Canada for the summer to have their skills upgraded and so forth. About six months after that a backbench Liberal got up his courage and took the idea that I had suggested in committee. He came in the House and said that is what the Government should do. The Government comes up with a program for 5,000 rather than for 25,000. When you have 500,000 unemployed, a program for 25,000 is relatively meaningless.

When the Hon. Member asks whether I know of programs, I can tell him that I know of bureaucracy piled upon bureaucracy trying to create jobs. We spend more money there than we do in the actual programs. I know of slush funds of Ministers on the other side that make my young people second class citizens. I know about those programs. They are too little too late and do not nearly begin to address the broader programs which have been addressed by the Member for Calgary West in his report. The Hon. Member should read that; then he would have some answers.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, would the Member like to comment on the fact that the Main Estimates tell us that the Government only intends to use $250 million out of $10 billion or $11 billion of unemployment insurance funds to support people during training? At the same time under the Special Employment Initiatives Program it spent $300 million to re-elect Liberals and less than that to support people in training with unemployment insurance funds. Would the Hon. Member like to comment on whether he thinks that is right?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): A brief comment, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman).

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, the question answers itself when you look at that percentage. I mentioned it in my speech, it has been mentioned in the question, and it is worth mentioning again. If you were a Government and really wanted to do something for people you would hopefully say that it is not good enough to leave them sitting on unemployment insurance. Hopefully you would not dole out the money to them from a fund of $10 million and tell them to sit there and collect their unemployment insurance. Hopefully you would spend 2.5 per cent of it to help the people get back to work by retraining them for jobs. The Government will not even do that. It will not allow people to collect unemployment insurance while attending a retraining program. If a person elects to take the retraining program the Government will not pay him enough to live on.

What can a 22 or 23 year old with a grade 11 or grade 12 education and almost no experience in the workplace do? The programs do not exist. The programs need to exist and the emphasis needs to exist. That is what the report that the Hon. Member for Calgary West prepared said. He said that the shortage of highly qualified teaching manpower can be alleviated by increasing funding to granting councils and private sector scholarships. We need private sector scholarships. Give that young person some money and let him get into the school.

He said that the availability of information is the key barrier to job mobility. Use of modern means of communication will enable us to provide information on job opportunities. That young person does not even know how to go and look for the job. He does not know what jobs are available. We are going to have to tell him. Those are the kinds of things that $10 billion should have been used for. It should have been used for so many things. It should have been used for an advertising campaign to make the public aware of the problems and solutions. We must get our society going and get with it. Young people must get training and jobs in order to create productivity. That productivity is sold in international markets. That gets our share of world trade back, and there are our jobs. It is difficult and it is simple, but it sure is hard to get that message across to the other side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the conclusion of the 10 minute period for questions and comments. For debate, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae).

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I was listening on two occasions last week when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) was on The Journal and on the program The House. On The Journal he seemed to be indicating that they have all the problems solved and when they come to power there will be a great deal more confidence by Canadians in the country and in the world. Therefore jobs will automatically flow and there will be some incentives. Then we will have a big training program and everything will be solved.

I just could not believe that Canadian people are so ill informed that they would believe this. I do not think they will believe that the problems which are facing most of the industrial nations in the world will no longer face Canada because we will have a Government in which the world has the greatest confidence. I do not think people will believe that with some incentives and training everything will be fine, they will all have productive jobs and that this is the answer to the problem. I am not suggesting that some of these things are not needed. However, the utter simplicity of it baffled me. The people who were interviewing the Leader of the Opposition were having a great deal of difficulty believing what they were hearing as well.

I read 15 or 20 pages of the task force report on retraining. I think there is a good deal of merit in the report. I do not think it contains anything unusual or new. Its merit is in restating some ideas which must be restated from time to time. I do not see anything basic in the report. I can accept the fact that all people on public assistance should have the opportunity for retraining. I can accept the idea that UIC funds should be devoted more and more to this and other purposes along this line. We on this side have been working on this for a number of years. I think there have been a lot of things done with the UIC dollar, including training.

The point of the matter is that the idea is not new. It is good to bring it up again and again to give it more emphasis, but I do not see that anything great is going to happen because of this report. It is not a new idea that we should be able to predict what kind of jobs are going to be available for people coming into the labour market and what kind of training is going to be required to equip people for these jobs. The Government itself set up a group called the Canadian Occupation Projections System, or COPS, with the idea of attempting to make these projections so that training programs can be organized correctly.

I have been wrestling with this problem for close to 30 years, both in this House and in the field of education before I came to this House. After 10 years of misinforming students I learned that this was not an easy question to deal with. We were always looking into the future and trying to get the best advice we could from our educational authorities, the provinces, and the federal Government, about the kinds of occupations that students could go into when they left school.

As soon as an operation becomes rather large, with many people employed in a specific area, such as when there was a great sudden demand for people in social work, there is a bulge in the system, and many are trained for this specific field but they find there are no jobs. This experience has led me, as a school administrator, to carefully consider the type of training to give students a chance to fit into the working community upon completion of that stage of their education. I came to the conclusion that it was a mistake to lead students or those returning to the educational system into a narrow occupational field, because very often the jobs in that particular field may not be available.

I have great concern that the emphasis in the last two years on high tech training to narrow, spin-off fields related to computer science could be carried to the extreme. However, I believe a general knowledge of computer science is important in order to be able to adapt when a particular computer field becomes crowded. When I see the number of students involved in the spin-off technologies of computer science, I question whether we are repeating what took place many years ago when far too many people were trained in the field of social welfare. While these people were eventually needed, they were employed elsewhere by the time the jobs were available. We should concern ourselves with general training rather than specifics. This report does make some suggestions in this respect, although I think many of us have already seen and acted on many of those suggestions.

We must also take into account the basic training that people need in order to fit into a world where they must be able to adapt or be retrained. We are told that some people may have to retrain three or four times in a lifetime. Thus, we should be concerned that people have the basic skills for this training and retraining. These discussions have not taken place in the House or among governments.

There have been some recommendations. First we must acknowledge that people must have a basic skill in such things as the English language and mathematics by the time they have completed Grade 11 or 12. In addition to these very important basic sills, one must include some general information about computer science, electronics and other components of the new world of high technology. I submit that people should not be trained at that point in their education to become specialists in a highly developed field, but be able to cope and understand the implications of the computer without necessarily becoming experts.

I fear that we may have already developed far too many specialists in certain branches of computer science. However, the era of high technology is something with which we must live. It is a new field that has added a dimension to our working world and many other aspects of our society. I believe we must have a good grasp of the fundamentals of this technology without being involved in specialization.

I am always concerned that people who are trained for a very highly developed field will have to start from the beginning if that field becomes obsolete or replaced. That should not be necessary. We should be able to train our students at a level which makes it relatively simple to move to a different field of which they have a basic knowledge.

There are many young people who, for various reasons, have not completed high school. There are good reasons why some people should not be taking secondary school at the time it is available to them. However, I find it is very common that these same people wish to complete their high school education later on when they feel they are ready to do so. We, as a Government, have attempted to encourage this.

The report discusses functional illiteracy. It is hard to believe that many people come under this category, as functional illiterates. Rather than condemn people for not completing high school when they had a chance, we should be ensuring the opportunity for them to return and complete the education that they missed. There are many reasons why people are wise to leave school at a particular point, and that is why I am disturbed that in the last two or three years governments at all levels have shown reluctance to deal with this particular kind of program.

While the report makes good suggestions with respect to functional illiterates, that term denotes one group of people, yet there are those who are relatively functional illiterates but do not fit into that category. They too must be trained to a point where they can move into more specific fields.

While much discussion has concerned training, it is only one solution, and perhaps may not even be a major solution for 1.5 million Canadians who do not fit into the labour force. While there is no question that the serious problem of training must be addressed, I had the impression, when listening to the Leader of the Opposition, that this was the answer; if there was confidence, incentives and training, everyone would be working and the problem would be solved. I do not see that happening. I envisage, and suggest, putting more money toward imaginative programs for training and retraining people. They should be prepared for the broad variety of experiences they will likely have in their lifetime.

I look back to the month of February. It was a typical kind of month in terms of jobs and employment. We had growth in jobs and in the number of people being employed. It was something in the order of 0.5 per cent, or, at the rate of 6 per cent a year. This is a very , very rapid rate of growth in jobs. If that could be sustained over a long period of time, we would be creating a large number of jobs. In round figures, it would be something like 60,000 jobs in that month. At the same time we had 0.5 per cent monthly or 6 per cent on an annual basis growth in jobs, we had a little over 7 per cent growth in the number of people in the labour force. Even with a 6 per cent growth in the rate of the creation of jobs we had an increase in the employment rate simply because more people were coming on the labour market than there were jobs being created. I suspect, and most people who think about this will say, that this will be continuous, particularly with the onset of more and more high technology. High technology will not create jobs. It will reduce the number of jobs available.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. McRae: One can expect over a period of time that growth in productivity will be attained by investment in high technology. But this will not satisfy the need for those people who want to work. I think we will find that high technology will replace many individuals. Therefore, some other alternative has to be considered.

I do not hear very much talk about things like renewing our forests and things of that kind which are tremendously important. Here we have a resource that exports in the range of $20 billion a year, more than agriculture, fisheries, and mining combined. We have not as a nation looked upon renewal of this resource, which is vital. In British Columbia if the resource is not renewed very shortly, we will not have an industry there. In Thunder Bay and throughout northwestern Ontario we have a situation which is very serious. In terms of the jobs that will have to be created to renew that force, these areas are labour intensive. It seems to me that is one of the areas at which we should be looking very seriously in terms of creating jobs.

I know the federal Government is in the process of putting together an agreement with the Province of Ontario and with the other provinces. I know the sums will be considerable, but even so, I do not think that will be great enough.

I know that my time is running out, but I would like to talk about the whole idea of work-sharing. I think the labour movement is pointing the way. We will have to start sharing work, perhaps by working shorter hours or taking early retirements. There may be many other ways in which work might be redistributed. I would like to discuss this at a later point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten minute period for questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon).

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae). He expresses a general attitude that we see emanating from the Government side consistently when the question of technology is discussed, the notion that technology is just not going to be enough to pull the country out of this massive economic crisis we are facing where over 500,000 young people do not have any reason to hope for a long-term permanent career. I am disappointed that that is the notion. One would feel there are other alternatives to achieving economic prosperity and to restoring employment.

The Hon. Member said this question of retraining is a serious problem and has to be dealt with. In that statement he expressed his view that there were certain limitations on the recommendations that came forward in the task force report prepared by this Party. What specific solutions does he see? Other than keeping pace with the explosion of technological development in the world, does he see any other option for employing people other than to restore our forests? Frankly, if he does not see technology as the number one means of up-grading our industry, restoring productivity and keeping abreast with the competitive challenge facing us in international markets, then I think he is sadly mistaken. His ideas are what is leading this country down the tube to ruin.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I suggest the forestry field is one field that we might look at. I am sure there are others that I do not have time to get into. My feeling about the approach you take is that there are some good ideas but they are not very basic. They deal with techniques on training, preparing teachers, and a lot of areas of this kind. They do not deal with what is an overall basic approach to an educational system which will provide the basis for retraining. Retraining becomes very difficult if you have very highly skilled individuals who have spent a lot of years in a very technical field and that technical field disappears. They have to go back to basics again. But if they have a good general background it is not so hard to retrain in another field. I think that is one of the major areas where I would suggest this. I do not know of any expert who can say that we as Canadians can continue to export, export, and export high technology because everybody else will be doing the same kind of thing. I am not convinced, and I do not know of anyone or of any authority who is saying that there is an unlimited high tech field. The technology itself, the robotization of things, is not basically an attempt to reduce the need for labour, and that is a good thing. It means in my books that, therefore, fewer and fewer people will be producing. Consequently, distributing that productive effort becomes much more important in terms of bringing many people into it. I do not see and I do not know of any authority—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I must remind Hon. Members again that questions and answers should be relatively short in order to allow everyone to participate. The Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis).

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I have one comment and two questions that I think I can put quite succinctly. I would not want the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) to underestimate the importance of confidence in terms of job creation. I am sure his riding is no different than mine. Two and a half or three and a half years ago, because of high interest rates, massive amounts of money went into that form of investment rather than into job creation spending, such as the purchase of motor vehicles, trucks and so on. That is one simple example of job creation or the lack of job creation because of lack of spending confidence.

My first question deals with what neither of us like to call functional illiteracy, but nevertheless that is the word used for it. Is the Hon. Member aware of the pilot programs in the United States run by volunteer agencies where retired teachers are recruited to assist in this type of program? If it can be done through the volunteer sector at less cost to the Government, it is something that I very much want to support. As an educator the Hon. Member may be aware of that. I have only been exposed to it through a couple of television programs.

The most important point is that the Hon. Member talks about the good general background, the academic training and up-grading from say grade nine to grade twelve or whatever. My experience has been that those seats purchased by Canada Manpower at various community colleges for academic training have been significantly less successful in terms of job procurement for those students than the narrow technical training. There is a welder's school in my riding. I disagree that someone trained in a very narrow field, as the Hon. Member puts it, has to go back and start over when that job becomes redundant. It is not a good approach to take because, first, that person has gone through the discipline of retraining. He has at least been exposed to an academic atmosphere. Second, he has at least had a job and is becoming aware that once one has a job, it is not secure until age 65 because in the eighties and into the next century all of us will have to go through processes of retraining. This will likely occur at numerous intervals during our working career.

Therefore, I have some serious difficulty with his approach of the good general background. I would far sooner put the carrot out and say to a prospective employee, if he is willing to go back to night school and get up to the Grade 12 or 13 level, he will have the first leg up on technical training with which we as a Government may assist him.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I have had some experience in this field. Work is being done in the voluntary sector in dealing with functional illiteracy. It is one area which is very successful. I am not sure that I agree with the Hon. Member's basic problem. One difficulty with those who come into a particular technical field of trade, particularly in the high technology fields where some basic background is required, is that one has to learn how to function in terms of mathematics, for example. One has to be able to read and understand directions.

I am not one of the critics of colleges. I find that where the colleges are doing this the students are having greater success. I do not have any empirical data on which to base this. However, I believe if those individuals had to be retrained in another field there would be some advantage because of this. The quality of life can be embellished by this.

If you just talk about something that leads you to a $7 or $8 an hour job, it becomes very dangerous. There are things that flow from this. I would not want to see this kind of general background lost, even at the retraining stage. I do not believe it is enough to train someone for a specific job and leave it at that.

When those who are not functionally illiterate, but not very literate, drop out, it is usually because they have a large gap in areas such as mathematics. That has to be attended to if that individual is to function in other areas. It is sad for those who drop out. They do not drop out because they are unable to continue, but for all kinds of other reasons. We found that in the schools—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but this puts an end to the question period.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Canada Post Corporation—Request for cancellation of Consumers Distributing project. (b) Request that project results be released publicly; the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Immigration—Replacement of court reporters with recording devices in immigration offices; (b) Quality of transcripts produced from tape recordings; the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble)—Income Tax Act—Taking of taxpayers' statements under oath—Minister's position.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hawkes:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to work cooperatively with the provinces, business, labour, voluntary organizations and the educational community to provide adequate training and retraining opportunities that would enable Canadian workers to feel confident about their ability to deal with the challenges of rapid technological change.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we are debating a motion today brought forward by the Official Opposition condemning the Government for its failure to establish adequate training programs in consultation with labour, programs which would fit Canadian workers to fill the jobs that will be created as a result of the introduction of new technology. We can support the motion, although to suggest that simply by a better system of training we will meet the problems of unemployment is oversimplifying the problem.

Let us look at the situation as it is today. At the present time there are 1.5 million Canadians unemployed, 40 per cent of whom are young people. There are probably another 200,000 or 300,000 unemployed who have not been counted because they are no longer looking for work; they have given up looking for work. Statistics Canada calls them the discouraged workers. The 1.5 million unemployed represents over 11 per cent of the labour force in Canada.

In 1969, a year after this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office, only 4.4 per cent of the labour force was unemployed. According to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) this 1.5 million unemployed will continue to grow for the next number of years. In his Budget forecast, he predicted that unemployment would stay at the double-digit rate of 10 per cent or more for the next four or five years.

If one can believe what one reads, hears and sees, we are in the beginning of a second industrial revolution. The technological changes which have been brought about by the microchip and computer have begun to have marked effects on employment in this and every other industrialized country. The effects are just beginning. As the computer and microchip take over, there will be tremendous change. In the manufacturing industry, the robot, microchip and computer are taking over. Thousands of workers are being displaced, and not just the unskilled worker.

This raises the question of what even the best training system would do. Thousands of the most skilled workers we have known up to today are being thrown on the unemployment scrap heap. Machinists, tool and die makers, molders, are having their job done better, more efficiently and cheaper by the computer and microchip. I am sure there is not a Member of Parliament who has not seen what the new technology can do in their offices with the word processors, xerox machines and so on. Much more work can be turned out with the same number of employees, or even with fewer employees. In large insurance and trust company offices and in the offices of all of the major industries and businesses which employ hundreds and thousands of people, it has been predicated by people who are knowledgeable and expert that hundreds of thousands of jobs will disappear. I have seen estimates which indicate that 40 per cent or more of these jobs filled almost exclusively by women will disappear in the next 10 or 15 years.

There has been an easy acceptance by many people in the Government and industry and, unfortunately in my view, by many academics that the era of high technology is coming and we cannot stop it. No one that I know of would want to stop it, but we are being told that it should be welcomed and that it will cause little if any dislocation. I am one of those who worry that the second industrial revolution which we seem to be entering will create as much havoc for the people of this country and every other industrialized country as created by the first industrial revolution. That revolution led to tremendous increases in productivity, but threw hundreds of thousands of people onto the scrap heap. In some cases, it took generations before these people were able to do productive work and live decent and comfortable lives.

If we are moving into a new industrial revolution, we must ask ourselves some very serious and fundamental questions. Let me pose three such questions about which we must think. First, how many new jobs will be created, and will as many new jobs be created in the new high technology industries as exist now in the traditional manufacturing industries? There is no indication that there will be as many workers employed in the new high technology industries as have been employed in the steel industries, the auto industry and the other industries in which so many of our people and the people of other countries have worked.

Second, we must ask ourselves where the new jobs will be located. It seems to me that if high technology industries do develop in Canada, it is likely they will be based in cities like Ottawa, where such a large proportion of the population is employed with the Government, and in cities like Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. We must ask ourselves what will happen to the workers in the steel industry, for example. Will the steel industry in Canada suffer the same fate as the steel industries in the United States, France and Britain suffered? Even if productivity in that industry is higher than it was 10 years ago, employment has been reduced because of the use of new technology.

With the advent of new technology, what will happen to workers in Hamilton, Sault Ste. Marie and Sydney? What will happen to the farm machinery workers who live in Brantford? These are questions which must be addressed. If the old industries disappear, what will take their places in cities in which people have worked in the older mature industries for so many years?

Last, what wages or salaries will be paid to the people who will be working in the new high technology industries? Some studies have been done in the United States which indicate that in the new high technology industries the average wage is $5,000 per year less than the average wage earned in the older manufacturing industries. That will have profound effects not only on the workers who will earn smaller wages but on all Canadians, because the purchasing power of the people who work in the new industries will be much less if we in Canada follow the same pattern as the United States.

The questions to which I referred are questions which must be addressed and understood, questions for which we must find answers. The Government has ignored these kinds of questions up until now and gives no indication that it will ever look at them seriously. From the Official Opposion, we get a motion which, if we can take it seriously, would seem to indicate that the only problem members of the Conservative Party see with the new technological takeover is that we have not trained people well enough. Of course we have not trained people well enough. Even if we had done so up until now, and even if we do so in the future, the fundamental problems which will be created by the introduction and wise use of new technologies will not be answered simply by providing training programs.

A famous American economist and Nobel prize winner, Wassily Leontief, when discussing the effects of new technology, said that he is afraid and predicts that the failure to redistribute the gains of automation and new technologies could condemn society to a paradoxical condition of rising productivity and rising destitution. There is no question that the new technology will permit and encourage a much greater level of productivity. However, hundreds of thousands of workers will be displaced and will have no jobs. As well, the people working in the new high technology areas will have to live with the lower wages paid. We in the New Democratic Party accept and support the motion which is before us today. Our training systems simply have not been good enough and are not good enough.

Let me take a moment to say that I was disturbed by the remarks of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae). He spoke very briefly about illiteracy while ignoring the fact that if there is one area in which the federal Government has failed and ignored, it is the area of illiteracy. Looking at the training funds provided by the Department of Employment and Immigration over the last 10 or more years, one finds that less attention is paid and less money is allocated to training programs for basic skills education. The Hon. Member spoke about the millions of people who are functionally illiterate, but his Government, through its Department of Employment and Immigration, had ignored and thrown them on the scrap heap. The Government has refused to deal with this through training programs.

Let me make some very specific suggestions which we in the New Democratic Party believe need to be looked at in order to really face up to the problems of new technology.

We cannot deal with these questions without the fullest possible consultation among governments, federal and provincial, labour and management. We will not attain co-operation for any program if the people most directly affected have not been consulted, such as the many young Canadians who do not have jobs or those who have had jobs and still have jobs but will be displaced by new technologies.

If we are serious about trying to deal with the new technologies, the first step which any government must take is toward real, meaningful and continuing discussions, consultations and planning on the part of labour, management, educational institutions and governments, federal and provincial.

What we have seen on the part of the Government has been ad hoc, hit and miss programs, in which the Government unilaterally, or sometimes in consultation with an industry group, brings in new programs such as ILAP. There are so many programs one could use every letter of the alphabet just to list them. That is one example of how the federal Government has completely failed.

The Government ought to look at making the Canada Pension Plan much more flexible. Workers, by increasing their contributions by a relatively small amount, should be able to opt for working part time at age 60 or 61. Perhaps they could work two or three days a week and receive the balance of their income, that is what they would obtain if they were working full time, from the pension plan. That could open up jobs for thousands of young Canadians who are now unable to find employment.

A similar idea would be to allow young parents of minor children to spend five years working part time but receiving full-time pay. It would be a good social policy. It would allow such parents to remain at home during the formative years of child rearing. At the same time it would provide additional employment for others in the workplace.

We need to look at what is happening in the economy at the present time. There has been a tremendous increase in the number of part-time workers. According to the statistics, in 1983 there were 400,000 fewer full-time jobs and an increase in part-time jobs of some 200,000. In the past 30 years, part-time employment has jumped from 4 per cent of the total work force to 16 per cent of all jobs in the economy. The new technologies will encourage and permit vast expansion in part-time work. With the shift to part-time work come the problems of the incomes of working people dropping. More and more part-time jobs are unorganzed, poorly-paid service jobs. People are being pushed out of the industrial sector of society by machines.

Both the Liberal Government and the Conservative Opposition stand on the same side of the fence. They put technology before people. If the companies benefit, those benefits should be shared by ordinary Canadians. That is the only acceptable policy. The policy of working with people and co-operating with business, labour and the provinces to develop programs which will put people first and machines second, will meet the needs of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon).

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a question to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I find a lot of reason for pessimism in the presentation of the Hon. Member. He talked about worry, fear and somehow increasing the opportunity for employment without increasing the national well-being. He talked about work sharing and part-time work as if there were some magic pie in the sky banker who could finance it. He knows full well that if we do not increase our national productivity, we will not be competitive around the world. Canadians have lost 750,000 jobs in the last 10 years because our share of world trade in primary resource-based products has declined. The doomsayers have been around since the time of the industrial revolution, and I think we are hearing too much from them again.

There is hardly anyone in the country today who is not employed in a technologically-related job of one sort or another. It is not so much high technology or electronics that is of concern, it is the application of the technology to provide meaningful, long-term work for Canadians. Technology and its application are revolutionizing the world.

I am rather perplexed as to how the Hon. Member feels we should continue to enjoy the level of prosperity which he seems to take for granted when the country and the Government are near bankruptcy. How does he expect us to provide meaningful full-time jobs for Canadians unless we move into the technological era without fear or trepidation?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member would find one sentence or paragraph in my remarks which would lead anyone to the conclusion that I oppose technological change or that I think we can somehow prevent it from taking place. We have to think about the results or the consequences of technological change. It is little comfort to steelworkers who have worked for 25 years, who have earned a good living and helped build the country, to be told that that industry can now produce as much or more steel with half the workforce of the past.

As I said, as we move into the technological revolution, we have to think of how the people who have been displaced will be able to work, produce, earn a living and live decent, comfortable lives. That is the point. Members of Parliament and everyone else must consider that problem. That is all I said. I did not suggest, nor would I ever suggest that we can or should stop this process. I have simply said that if it is to come about, it should be done with consideration for the people who will be adversely affected.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any more questions? On debate, the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie).

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, whatever the specific detail of the present program structure, it is clear that the combination of government employment programs and the responses of the private and public sectors have not set in motion a sustained employment process in the have-not provinces of Canada.

The Atlantic provinces lead our nation in the human tragedy of more people seeking employment on a per capita basis than any other region of Canada. The hardship, frustration, disillusion created by lack of work and an inability to find employment are difficult to describe. However, possibly the most tragic dimension is the feeling of helplessness on the part of the head of the family who is unable to clothe, feed, house and educate his children properly. The impact on his children is a genuine cause for concern on the part of thinking Canadians everywhere.

The ugly tenacles of unemployment strike at single parent families, two parent families, widows, widowers, children, working mothers and working fathers. There are no exceptions to this human tragedy. There are a million and a half Canadians looking for work and another 300,000 who are not included in those statistics. Behind every such statistic is a human being worthy of the best efforts this Parliament can make in resolving this horrendous problem.

Recently in Saint John, New Brunswick, a new hotel opened offering 150 jobs. Two thousand people lined the streets of Saint John to apply for those jobs. In my constituency of York-Sunbury, because of educational, government, military and health institutions, we have a better employment rate than many parts of New Brunswick, if not all parts of that province. We also have 8,244 people collecting unemployment insurance benefits at the Fredericton office. These are active files on the roles today. The Youth Summer Employment Program which, like Career Access, is a good program, will employ 198 young people this summer. That figure will probably be increased by one-third because of the recent announcement by the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette).

Being an educational centre, my constituency has over 5,000 young people, many of whom will be looking for work in our community. I support every job-creation program which the federal Government announces to the very best of my ability, and I applaud every job which is created. However, I tell you frankly, Mr. Speaker, that with a slender private sector economy there are just not enough jobs to go around. Where hundreds of jobs are provided, thousands are needed.

We have to rejuvenate our country, offer hope instead of despair and rekindle the initiatives, energy and knowledge of our people. We must encourage the new technology to rebuild our competitive position, generate the resources to finance our economy and expand our international trade. We have the means to build a new Canada, a Canada of which we can all be proud, a Canada we can all feel part of, where we are happy and secure and in which we can have confidence for the future. There must be a massive commitment in co-operation with labour, management, and government at all levels, to the development of the most thoughtful and generous manpower retraining program which a civilized society has ever put together. More specifically, there are basic themes which form elements of that description. Development policies must contemplate a concentration on people and productivity as well as on hardware and facilities. The key to the future is adaptation and innovation, product and process development and in techniques of management and marketing. We must promote a more effective role for smaller enterprises. We must recognize that the general level of skills in our population is inextricably linked to our rate of economic growth.

We have pursued the enhanced training of people in institutions but we have not always given appropriate attention to the need to relate certain kinds of training to the actual requirements of the work place. We need a very substantial emphasis on on-the-job training, not only in the conventional trades where this is already happening, but also in almost every other facet of enterprise. We must remember that training on the job uses industry as a carrier, and with the slender manufacturing base in the maritime provinces it does not address the need to the same extent as it does elsewhere in our country. This underlines the importance of institutional training and training in small businesses in the maritime provinces, and underlines also the tragedy of the fact that now that Bill C-12 is passed, each of the maritime provinces receives less money for educational training than it would have received if Bill C-12 had not been passed.

An altered view of the role of educational institutions to increase their relevance to community and economic development requirements is important. For example, an increase in emphasis on continuing adult education, and a design of business administration programs which have a greater small business orientation, are possible directions. Here I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) on his observations on the major drop during the last decade in money set aside for adult education and training.

A major theme which is essential is the need to adapt to changing conditions. We need new programs to encourage innovation in business such as a better transfer of information between the patent and licensing office in the business community in order to promote new technology. We need grants to industry and trade associations to promote and cost-share the running of management training seminars. Among other things, these seminars would familiarize business men and women with existing government programs. We need incentives to increase the supply of risk capital in underdeveloped areas. We need an expanded and altered mandate for research and further incentives to encourage process redesign and innovation. We need a stronger marketing orientation in the program structure specifically aimed at more effective penetration of local, regional, national and international markets. We need an improvement of incentive programs, enriching location grants for target industries and allowing tax holidays for companies locating in underdeveloped regions. We need an altered view of competition and of the role of the smaller enterprises.

Small production units are characteristic of the maritime provinces, and good export performance, effective research and development are often absent and require economies of scale. We need to achieve such economies but without, at the same time, destroying the distinctive positive qualities of smaller enterprises, effective employment generation, adaptability and responsiveness. We have to supplement our heavy emphasis on natural resources, at least in part, by an emphasis on people's skills and productivity.

Although we have perceived the need to move beyond the traditional industries, we have not always moved into better production in marketing techniques, more sophisticated higher quality versions of existing products, new products related to our existing basic skills or material expertise in marketing channels. We gain little when our agricultural products are shipping outside New Brunswick to be purchased back later as canned vegetables, meats or jellies, with good jobs going to other areas. We gain little when our forest products are shipped abroad to be purchased later as furniture and building materials. Deck hardware, navigational aids and fishing gear are purchased but not always manufactured in New Brunswick. More of these products should be manufactured in that province and more jobs should be created for the people of New Brunswick.

Building on our competitive advantages of resources, location and market access, we have done a great deal. The Japanese, however, have taught us that we can be successful without an abundance of material resources when people and organizations work together, particularly in the information economy. In order for people to receive the benefit of new technologies and advancement, it is essential that policies be developed in advance to enable the new technology to improve and expand the economy in order that more jobs can be created to offset the current trend of seeing jobs lost through mechanization.

Although federal initiatives, like the Skills Growth Fund program, provide an opportunity to offer advanced technological training, the difficulty remains that in a province like New Brunswick, and other small provinces, it is difficult to avoid coping with a continually changing list of nationally designated occupations, to the extent that we often have very little lead time between when occupations are newly designated and when training in those occupations must be delivered.

The relationship between technological change, employment maintenance and human resource planning is highly complex. In the case of New Brunswick, this complexity is further heightened by the lack of information which enables us to define with reasonable accuracy the economic sectors and activities in which technological applications should be actively encouraged, and to forecast the accompanying human resource needs. Clearly, the province's small population and economic base dictates that resources should be focused wherever our natural advantages would give our industries an optimal chance for success, and this focus should extend far beyond the technological field per se.

Against this background, the fundamental need for New Brunswick, the maritime provinces and Newfoundland, at this point is for quality information upon which we can base our training or retraining responses to technological change, and the financial resources to program effectively those responses.

On another aspect of this problem, there are two buzz words in Japan today that no self respecting small city mayor dares ignore: technopolis and teletopia. The words sound grand and futuristic but the idea behind them is simple. Japan's government wants to take high technology rapidly to the underdeveloped corners of the country and is designating a string of outlying model cities as a way of getting it there. Some will essentially be high tech industrial parks and research centres. Others will be fitted with advanced communication systems linking businesses, homes and government offices.

The technologies envisioned for the revamped communities are generally no more advanced than those found in North America today, and despite the space age titles, designated communities are not expected to become pioneering examples of urban design. What is expected is that promotion of high technology in communities off the beaten path will encourage Japan's unified entry into a new era of advanced industry and communications. Industries are to include electronics, biotechnology, software development and robotics. These will also include interactive video systems, high speed computer communications, expanded use of fibre optic cable and teleconferencing.

Communities like those in New Brunswick and the other Maritime Provinces will be allowed to offer special tax breaks and low interest loans to high tech companies locating in their industrial parks. The first group is scheduled for completion in 1987 when upgrading roads and airports, new housing and facilities for research staff and a core of high tech industries are to be in place. This is indeed good planning, and we should take a page out of the Japanese book, and take it now. It requires a conscious decision of government to bring it about and that decision should be taken now.

Finally, I feel we should significantly expand wage subsidy programs such as the career access program. We should institute a program of refundable employer tax credits. We also have to provide training and retraining in high technology skills in order to avail ourselves of the jobs that do exist. We have to work with universities, industry and labour, to ensure that Canadians are not victimized by technological change. We have to act long before the changes take place.

We have to greatly improve information exchanges through which people become aware of job opportunities. Too many young people graduate from training programs and cannot find work, not because their skills are not in demand, but because they cannot make contact with the employer who needs them. We have to remedy this defect. We have to institute programs specifically designed to address the chronic unemployment which tragically plagues certain regions of Canada like the Maritimes.

In the Province of Newfoundland 37 per cent of young people, that is 37 per cent of persons between 15 and 24, who were seeking work are without jobs. In New Brunswick and Nova Scotia the figure is 27 per cent, and in Prince Edward Island, 26 per cent. Wage subsidies and refundable employment tax credits are good incentives but may not always be of maximum benefit in these regions because of the slender industrial economy. Therefore, in these areas we should also institute programs of community based entrepreneurial development. We have to assist individuals and groups wishing to start new enterprises to raise capital, cut through red tape, indentify markets, train workers and establish constructive working relationships with local workers, educators and financial institutions. We have to offer what has been denied over half a million young unemployed Canadians and a million adults—a future.

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this discussion, I feel that I am fulfilling my first and foremost duty as a parliamentarian.

Can there be a more serious problem or a greater tragedy than that of a man or a woman who cannot earn a decent living or make a contribution to his or her family and to society? On the other hand, is there a more difficult problem to solve than that of reducing the current unemployment levels?

I have been listening since this morning to all those who have taken part in this debate and I have a feeling that we are all convinced of the seriousness of the situation and worried by the lack of any genuine solution to the problem. I am giving all the Members, wherever they may be sitting in this House, the benefit of the doubt, and I know they realize that, faced with such a serious problem which has reached proportions that can only be termed as tragic, what is most important is to call on the goodwill of everyone in this House and every group in our society, including the employers, the unions, the voluntary organizations, as well as the provincial, federal and municipal governments. People tend too easily to apportion our collective responsibility where unemployment is concerned. This is probably the basic reason why ideological, partisan and jurisdictional walls prevent us from doing anything and this is a failure we must all admit in the face of the increasing number of unemployed. I would like to invite my colleagues in this House, where we often have more work than we can handle, to make a collective effort to co-operate and face this increasingly serious problem of unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, one thing I do appreciate today is to be among my friends and former co-members of the task force on job opportunities for the eighties. I know the sponsor of today's motion, my colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). I am sure his intentions are good, but I would have liked him to be less radical in the wording of his motion. If the Hon. Member for Calgary West had simply said that the Government should do more to co-operate with voluntary organizations, business, labour and the educational community to provide adequate training and retraining opportunities that would enable Canadian workers to have confidence in their ability to deal with the challenges of fast technological changes, if these simple words had been used to ask for the co-operation of both sides of the House, I would have been happy to support the motion. However, I still agree with the thrust of the motion, which calls for this co-operation which I mentioned earlier, this co-operation which is the only way to bring about the decrease in unemployment that we all want.

Of course, this debate provides us with a golden opportunity, Mr. Speaker, as we are given a chance to refer to the amount of $1.2 billion that the Canadian Government is allocating this year to the important area of occupational training under its new National Training Program.

Naturally, nothing is perfect, especially when technological changes are causing an upheaval in the industrial sector. It is precisely for the purpose of discussing possible improvements to this program and other initiatives developed in co-operation with the Provinces that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) has announced right here in this House that he intends to have further discussions with his provincial counterparts in June or July of this year.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, this very interesting debate also concerns, rather strangely in my opinion, what the Official Opposition considered last week as an occupational training program, which they did not however call official and whose costs they certainly did not reveal. According to the Members opposite, this program would bring about a phenomenal increase in the number of jobs for reasons which remain totally unexplained except in the sense that it calls for a change of Government.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, I think that, on both sides of the House we all know that a change of Government does not constitute a solution in the eyes of the public. The polls show that, no matter which party is in power, the current serious unemployment problems would still exist. These problems exist because of the international juncture, the conditions prevailing in the United States, and the situations locally and regionally.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to appeal to my friends opposite, some of whose comments I have found very offensive. When my friends opposite ask for the elimination of some job-creation programs such as Canada Works or summer programs, I am ready to give them the benefit of the doubt. However I would like them to understand that in remote areas such as ours, particularly in these difficult times, the only solution is job-creation programs providing temporary work. Of course, they are not permanent jobs, but they give needy families the support and assistance which would otherwise be denied to them.

My friends opposite are inclined to plan their programs and their action for large cities. Big cities certainly play an essential role in the future of a country such as ours. However, I would like to remind all members of this House that in dynamic areas such as the one I have the honour to represent and in several others if not throughout the country, we usually find the vitality, the inventiveness, the spontaneity, the devotion and the labour necessary to keep and preserve a country as great as ours.

I make this appeal, Mr. Speaker, because I know that not only the members opposite but also some government members often take this attitude which I find disturbing when they feel that the answer to a problem is solely to be found in urban centres. I do not deny their importance and value but I think that they can only provide a partial answer.

When we find Canadians at work throughout the land, from coast to coast, our country will then be thriving, having recovered its strength and vigour. I am sure that it will recover in the years to come for in spite of our present problems. I have confidence in our future.

Mr. Speaker, in this program that is put forward by our friends in the Official Opposition, a program which they had the opportunity to discuss and refine over a weekend, I find that there are, on the one hand, some aspects which are already in force and on the other hand, some other aspects which seem unfeasible to me. For example, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party has suggested that we provide for the creation of education savings plans, contributions to which would be tax-deductible as is the case for Registered Home Ownership Savings Plans. This kind of proposal obviously benefits higher income earners. In fact, the National Training Program already entitles people in training to direct financial aid equal to tuition fees. In my view, this is a completely different and more satisfactory method than the one recommended by Official Opposition members.

Let me give another example, Mr. Speaker. The Progressive Conservative Party has recommended the federal Government give loan guarantees to people in need in order to enable them to benefit from training and other educational programs. Yet, lowest income earners are not even required to pay registration fees for these institutional training programs. They receive an allowance equal to tuition fees.

Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party has also recommended that fiscal incentives be given to employers to compensate for the cost of training and retraining of their employees. Yet, the Industrial Training Program already provides for direct reimbursement to employers of most of their training costs as well as half the trainee's salary. Training costs are already tax-deductible at the present time. I could list a dozen other examples of this kind, which would confirm that some of the proposed solutions are already in place.

Will all due respect for my friends opposite other proposals seem unfeasible in my view.

I have noticed, with considerable pleasure, that several of the solutions listed in the Conservative program originated from the task force in which we had participated and which I have referred to. I know that the hon. member for Calgary

West was a member of that task force, together with others, such as the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who made his comments a while ago. His contribution was very much appreciated, and so was the contribution of the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) who also did an excellent job. Partisanship has its place on certain occasions of course, however I feel that in this instance we have put forward very interesting solutions which have resulted in 186 resolutions now partially implemented. And when the hon. member for Winnipeg North asked a while ago just how many resolutions had been implemented, I felt that was a very relevant question I should direct to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Getting back to other suggestions from the Opposition, already implemented in the training programs, Mr. Speaker, there was the idea of using the Unemployment Insurance Fund. That is now a reality, for $259 million from the Unemployment Insurance Fund will be used this year for training purposes. And that, not to mention the federal contribution to a Quebec pilot assistance project for young welfare recipients under the Bégin-Marois agreement. Recently I had the opportunity to comment on this and emphasize the fact that we are contributing $58 million over a two-year period to cover at least 50 per cent of the costs involved in the Quebec program which aims at helping young welfare recipients who are able to work.

In the Opposition scheme many references are made to the tax cuts and special incentives for the purchase of equipment and improvement of training courses. This suggestion is already being implemented, Mr. Speaker, thanks to a properly operating formula. I am referring to the Skills Growth Fund through which we will pay directly for this year alone, $86 million to teaching and training institutions to up-date their equipment and training facilities and overcome the serious skill shortages resulting from technical and technological changes.

In that respect, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from a special article on robotics by Mr. Lucien Piché published in the April issue of the Commerce magazine, which I have just received and had a quick look at. The author talks about the "handouts contributed to the CEGEPs by the federal government", and goes on to say, and I quote: "since the Canada-Quebec agreement on adult occupational training was concluded in 1982-83, the CEGEPs have been literally showered with grants. The Skills Growth Fund established by the federal Manpower Department in February 1983 has already agreed to some Quebec projects for a total of $36 millions." In the few seconds left to me, Mr. Speaker, I would simply point out that the Jonquière CEGEP had submitted a projet. As you know, those projects must also be approved by the Quebec government. However, due to the latter's inaction and obstruction, the Jonquière CEGEP lost $2 millions because the Quebec government refused to give the go-ahead already given by Ottawa.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope that all Hon. Members will put partisanship aside and will turn with confidence to the future, all working together to reduce, if not elimininate this tragic problem of unemployment all across Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there questions or remarks?

• (1750)

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to what my colleague had to say about the Skill Growth Fund.

On the basis of the motion now before us, I would like first to ask him a question about his region. About the Jonquière CEGEP, can he tell us in fact, in what field did the CEGEP in the riding which he has represented in this House for several years now, want to specialize? And is it not one of the programs launched by the federal Government through the Ministry of Employment and Immigration to encourage people to further their schooling in that high technology field and to make sure that educational institutions offer students courses preparing them for the labour market where new technologies are in demand?

I know that for some time now there is in his riding a new pulp and paper mill, which belongs to a company from the Eastern Townships; high technology has surely some importance in the project. The Papier Cascade company bought a plant in his region and he talks to us about the CEGEP. Can he tell us in fact if, contrary to what the opposition says, the federal Government, through the Skills Growth Fund in the case of the Jonquière CEGEP, would have not agreed, had an agreement with the Quebec Government been secured, to a request for a job creation program in high technology because in his riding as well, they are trying to overcome unemployment and to improve their economic situation?

Mr. Marceau: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his excellent question, and commend him for his work as Parliamentary Secretary.

I would like to suggest that I am quite pleased indeed that he touched on the matter of Papier Cascade taking over a plant in our area. The Lemaire brothers, as they are called, are Quebec leaders, people with entrepreneurship, and I am very happy with this takeover. The Canadian Government contributed $1,250,000, and I think this bodes well for the future.

In answer to the Hon. Member, I must state that what the Jonquière CEGEP proposed was a training capacity increase in the area of computer assisted design and manufacture.

That proposal had been developed over many months. It enhanced the Jonquière CEGEP, which is playing a major role in that area on the regional level.

This was an opportunity for people in Jonquière, especially the CEGEP people, with the help and assistance of local firms, which brings us back to the motion now before us—local people as I said, whether Alcan or Price, to show they were interested in working very closely with the CEGEP to put in place those facilities so that our young, may get involved and work in keeping with technological change.

Therefore, this was an excellent opportunity for local heads of institutions of higher learning, and also young people to show that it is not only in larger cities that major projects can be launched. And the Government perhaps did more, by recognizing the needs of our regions and ensuring that in communities such as ours, people do not feel left behind. The Development Fund Progam would have made the implementation of this project possible.

Unfortunately, Quebec said no! It is our hope they will change their minds, because we are going to put forward another proposal. We will not let matters stand. We are going to try again, and it is our hope that Quebec will bear reason, at least for once.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. It being 6 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings on the motion, pursuant to Section 62(11).

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—REPLACEMENT OF COURT REPORTERS WITH RECORDING DEVICES IN IMMIGRATION OFFICES. (B) QUALITY OF TRANSCRIPTS PRODUCED FROM TAPE RECORDINGS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on January 30 I asked a very straightforward question of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) regarding changes in staff and staff policy in immigration offices. What is proposed is that some very skilled court reporters who work in refugee and immigration hearings be replaced by transcribing machines from which the court records would subsequently be typed by typists at a considerably lower rate of pay.

There are two problems with this policy of the Government. One is that women will lose more skilled jobs at a higher rate of pay, and be replaced by machines and other employees at a lower rate of pay. The other is the quality of the work itself. Peoples' lives depend upon accurate records for immigration and refugee status hearings. The quality of product which comes by the use of machines without having a person there to check on the material has been found wanting. We know from other places, that the records are not adequate and have caused problems.

The Minister said he would look into the matter. The union is pursuing it. There has been a grievance on the question. The grievance has now gone through two stages and has been turned down. It seems the department is going ahead to replace these skilled women with machines and other employees at a lower rate of pay. We have not managed to stop that.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that throughout all of this the department concerned has a policy on technological change. It has a personnel policy which would direct it in quite a different way. Let me quote from that policy:

> The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission/Department recognizes that technological change, and technological improvements generally, offer great scope and the ideal opportunity for the organization to not only improve the quality of the services and programs it offers to the Canadian public, but also to extend the capabilities and opportunities available to its staff and, to the fullest extent possible, improve the quality of the Commission/Department's work environment for the benefit of all employees.

Yet, here we see some employees who will be clearly disadvantaged by these changes which are in process, and certainly the quality of the service will go down. Let me continue quoting from the policy:

> In order to ensure that the maximum benefits to be derived from the application of technological change are earned and shared by all staff, the Commission/Department is fully committed to ensuring that the introduction of such changes in its work locations are both approached and accomplished in a manner which will minimize any possible adverse impact for employees whose work environment is to be affected.

Then it says there will be full consultation with representatives of the employees at all organization levels.

Further, the policy goes on to specify a number of principles which must be respected. It states that full and ongoing consultation to ensure the negative impact of the introduction of technological change on long-term employment is kept to an absolute minimum. Employees affected by the introduction of new technologies will be provided with an opportunity to acquire the necessary knowledge and skills to enable them to take advantage of new jobs emerging from technological change. But here we have people being deskilled; not being trained to do more difficult and higher paid jobs, but being deskilled. That is the opposite to what the department talks about when it has its fine principles on paper.

Further, this same department has an affirmative action program. Here we have a lovely affirmation action program, but it is on paper. It talks in very fine language: "It is our intention through this program to eliminate employment barriers faced particularly by women and other groups." It talks about the need for a stronger commitment on the need of federal employees to eliminate discrimination or discriminatory employment practices and develop a work force that is representative of the work force of the public it serves. Yet while it talks about all this, it is going in precisely the opposite direction, deskilling jobs, seeing that women have fewer job opportunities than in the past.

One job opportunity that has become open at the same department is for immigration counsellors. The first job description for this would have screened out these very women who are losing their jobs through technological change. Fortunately the employment and immigration union of the Public Service Alliance of Canada fought this procedure and a new definition for the job search has been set up. These women will now have a chance to apply for these jobs. That is a very small victory indeed. The very fact that this had to be fought so that women would have an opportunity to apply for these better jobs shows the mentality of the Department.

Finally, other people will suffer as well as the employees. The records that come out of these tribunal hearings are enormously important. Refugee and immigrant status will depend on what is written down at these hearings. This is supposed to be a service to the public. It is absolutely vital. Where machines are being used in other places there are notations of "inaudible", "sic", misspellings and all kinds of problems that lawyers for the people concerned have noted with the record. I urge very strongly that this matter be reconsidered, that the deskilling end and that quality service be provided by the Department for the people so vitally concerned.

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to elaborate on the answer given by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) to the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) on January 30, 1984.

There are 19 court reporters in Toronto and 15 in Mississauga, all of them classified ST-COR-1. Under the Commission's global strategy to reduce by March 31, 1987 the backlog of enquiries and applications for refugee status, the Ontario region plans to install electronic recording equipment in all courtrooms and to hire typists to transcribe the recordings which now exceed present capacity. The executive director for the Ontario region met with union representatives on December 6, 1983, in order to get their views on technological change. Later, on December 16, he confirmed the following in writing to Mr. William Fisher, Regional Manager of the Employment and Immigration Union, and I quote:

As far as implementation of electronic recording in the immigration group is concerned, and in accordance with clause 9 of the ST collective agreement dealing with technological change, I am pleased to confirm the commitment I gave your Union at our meeting. Management put in use electronic recording equipment to process enquiries and assess applications for refugee status in order to reduce serious backlogs in the Ontario region and particularly in the immigration districts of Toronto and Mississauga. Additional resources have been allocated for the present fiscal year and other resources have been requested for 1984-85 and 1985-86 in order to help with recruiting clerk-typists and take care of the backlog before March 31, 1986. Court reporters working presently with the Department will still record enquiries using either head phones, a transcription machine or shorthand and will then type required texts. Classification level for court reporters will not change. They will keep their status of employees hired for indefinite period and will still get the pay rate applicable to court reporters in the ST category.

Grievances were filed following that decision and they are being dealt with according to established rules. Besides, a study is being made of means to give present reporters the benefit of some opportunities for promotion. In the meantime, it is believed that the union had ample opportunity to make its opinion known on that matter and that the requirements of the ST's collective agreement regarding technological change were complied with. Those consultations were also held according to instructions pertaining to technological change in EIC and the policy relating to personnel. The training aspect has also been considered, because management has promised to make sure employees will be taught how to use more sophisticated typing and reproduction equipment when it becomes available.

In conclusion, as concerns the quality level of the work done with this equipment, the Quebec Region has been using it for several years now and no loss of transcription quality has been detected. So I hope this fully answers the Hon. Member's question.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF CONSUMERS DISTRIBUTING PROJECT. (B) REQUEST THAT PROJECT RESULTS BE RELEASED PUBLICLY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I directed a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) today in the absence of the Minister responsible for Canada Post. My question regarded the expansion of Canada Post service as it relates to Consumers Distributing, a direct invasion into the private sector. This invasion has been opposed by government Members as well as by members of the Conservative Party.

I would like to read into the record tonight some of the concerns of interested parties. We have received correspondence from Home Hardware in Souris, Manitoba. That letter reads:

Why should I, as an independent retailer, subsidize through my tax dollars a large company like Consumers (Distributing)?

The Canadian Retail Hardware Association which has member stores right across Canada points out the following in a letter of March 1, 1984:

The members of this association—over 2,000 hardware and home centre stores across Canada—will be significantly and adversely affected by this move. On their behalf, we register extreme displeasure and plead for an immediate review of the policy which has allowed such an "arrangement" to develop. Our concern is centered in three distinct areas:

1. The entry of Canada Post into this area does not serve any demonstrated need of the Canadian public. There is then, no reasonable rationale for a Crown corporation to enter this area of free enterprise.

2. The existence of Canada Post offices in virtually every community of Canada would immediately give one player in the competition game—Consumers Distributing Limited—access to all of these markets. The other players in the game in each of those markets is required to make significant community investment. The competitive balance will be upset. Legitimate retail businesses will suffer.

It is not the purpose of Government, Mr. Speaker, to be interfering in the private sector in the first place. I shall continue reading from the letter:

3. Canada Post has monopoly power to provide normal postal service in Canada. The monopoly implies an obligation on Canada Post to provide the best postal service of which it is capable. It is clear that Canada Post needs to concentrate on improving its level of service in postal handling and delivery. This is the challenge which should preoccupy postal authorities.

I could not agree more.

A letter to the President of Canada Post from the Pembroke City Council was reported in the Pembroke Observer of March 20, 1984, and reads as follows:

A meeting of the Pembroke and area Chamber of Commerce representing the interest of over 250 member businesses, was convened on March 9, 1984, to discuss concerns with regard to the pilot project recently undertaken by Canada Post and Consumers Distributing.

During the meeting it was decided that: whereas Canada Post was established and capitalized by the taxpayers of Canada,

Whereas the traditional mandate of Canada Post is to operate an adequate mail delivery service,

Whereas we believe the aforementioned pilot project is not in keeping with this mandate and is in fact an unwarranted intrusion into the private sector,

Whereas we strongly believe this arrangement will result in a reduction in the quality of the postal service,

Therefore we must vehemently oppose this type of arrangement and request that it be discontinued immediately.

I believe that it should be discontinued immediately, Mr. Speaker.

● (1815)

In the March 20, 1984 edition of the Pembroke Observer the following letter to the President of Canada Post from MPP Sean Conway appeared:

I wish to express my strongest disapproval of the arrangement which Canada Post has struck with Consumers Distributing to participate in their mail order business. I do not think it proper for a Crown corporation to involve itself with a private company actively competing with local businesses. If Consumers Distributing wishes to establish in the Pembroke area, we would be pleased to welcome them as a free standing enterprise. If however, Consumers Distributing is to enter our market area as a subsidiary of Canada Post, then such an arrangement is unfair and unacceptable. Tax paying local businesses should not be forced into competition with a joint venture which they are, in fact, subsidizing.

Also the following was reported on CHRO News in Ottawa on March 20:

Today, when the agenda of the Chamber of Commerce meeting in Pembroke turned to Canada Post's experiment with Consumers Distributing one could feel a definite charge run through the rooms. These people, many of them small business operators, are angry. They feel that having Consumers Distributing in the post office is the same as government subsidized competition. The Chamber received five more letters today from business people and consumers opposed to the experiment and correspondence was produced from one of the Quebec communities involved in the Canada Post experiment. The Chamber's President stated "We've just received a letter from Noranda and I'm glad to say that it's not only ourselves in Smiths Falls in Ontario that are objecting but also the test areas in Quebec. They have circulated a petition in their area and we're hoping to do the same."

Some of the correspondence I have received as official spokesman of the Opposition of Canada Post has come from cities such as Pembroke and Smiths Falls, from Home Hardware, the Canadian Retail Hardware Association and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Other individuals have written from across Canada. Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are also receiving mail in opposition to this intrusion into the private sector.

A letter to the Canadian Retail Hardware Association from the Chairman of the Board of Canada Post indicated:

The advent of new technologies will compel the corporation to alter its services in the future. If the corporation is to become self-sufficient, it is necessary that we do more than solely deliver "traditional" forms of mail.

They will be stopping the private sector from becoming self-sufficient. I suggest that the Government should force Canada Post to drop this proposal.

[Translation]

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to clarify the matter raised by the Hon. Member and to disprove certain erroneous ideas about the services that have been tested by the Canada Post Corporation in co-operation with Consumers Distributing.

First, Mr. Speaker, let me state once again the three main objectives which the Parliament of Canada has set for the Canada Post Corporation. Here they are: the Corporation must enhance the postal services, bring labour relations into line, and attain financial self-sufficiency.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the legislation that established the Canada Post Corporation provides that it must become financially independent. Besides, what matters is that in several areas, emphasis is being laid on the need to keep up with the times and supply products and services best suited to the requirements of the Canadian people.

Canada Post Corporation is responsible for the operation of a postal service involving the collection, transmission and distribution of messages, courriers, monies and commodities without accountability. It is expected, of course, to adjust to the changing needs of the Canadian users.

The tentative services which were set up in co-operation with Consumers Distributing and its clients is only the harbinger of what will be common practice in the 21th century. That company realized that postal services have always been a good publicity medium and have always managed to dispatch direct postal orders, money orders or parcels efficiently. By developing new processes, the Corporation has been able to offer new services specifically designed to Consumers Distributing and generate new revenues.

Canada Post Corporation is not doing at all what the hon. member is suggesting. It did not move into the retail business. It does not buy, own, stock or sell commodities and it does not offer any warranty or install material. In other words, it does not do the retailer's job. It dispatches written material, monies and parcels and carries out activities which have always been the responsibility of the post office for the last two centuries.

If we are to consider Canada Post as a retailer—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. Parliamentary Secretary as his time has expired.

INCOME TAX ACT—TAKING OF TAXPAYERS' STATEMENTS UNDER OATH—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, on March 22, I asked the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières)

a question to which I expected a reasonable reply. The question related to the application of Paragraph 231(1)(c) of the Income Tax Act and the consequential effects of that particular paragraph upon the liberty of the subject. That paragraph permits officers of the Department of National Revenue, in the course of undertaking their investigation, to obtain from taxpayers statements, including statements under oath.

My observation was that, having regard to that provision, there was the real likelihood that a taxpayer who had, in fact, complied with that requirement under Paragraph 231(1)(c) might later be prosecuted for tax evasion, having made a self-incriminating statement. The response of the Minister is found at page 2335 of Hansard.

In reading the response again, I suspect that never was there a better illustration of why we need these adjournment debates—because of the unsatisfactory nature of the response given to me. The Minister said, and I quote:

—perhaps the Hon. Member would care to examine various provisions of the Income Tax Act which are very specific and reflect the very nature of this legislation and the kind of tax system we have in Canada.

Well, of course, I did examine the provisions of the Income Tax Act. If I had not, I would not have raised the specific issue to the Minister which I did. I would have thought by now, having been in his post as long as he has, the Minister which he is responsible for administering. Yet that does not seem to be the case. He continued by saying:

If he does—

That refers to me.

—he will see that these provisions exist because of the nature of the legislation and the tax system we have in Canada.

It is because of that tax system that I raised that question. I suspect if we were to ask the people of Canada they would almost unanimously agree that the system itself is offensive and should be changed.

One of the offensive provisions is in the very section to which I made reference. I will not read the section, Mr. Speaker, because I briefly explained the intent and purpose of it, but let me read from the Act, under Part XV thereof, which is headed "Administration and Enforcement". The first subsection, 220(1) reads as follows:

The Minister shall administer and enforce this Act and control and supervise all persons employed to carry out or enforce this Act—

It is the Minister of National Revenue, Mr. Speaker, to which reference should be made with respect to administrative provisions, and not the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) who may be responsible for the generation of revenue in the country. Yet this Minister seems to be completely ignorant of the provisions of the very Act for which he is clearly responsible.

What are the implications of Section 231, and in particular, paragraph 231(1)(c) which, as I indicated, obliges taxpayers to give statements under oath? If one looks further under Part XV one finds under subsection 238(2) the following:

Every person who has failed to comply with or contravened subsection—

And there are a number of subsections listed including subsection 231.

—is guilty of an offence and, in addition to any penalty otherwise provided, is liable on summary conviction to

(a) a fine of not less than $200 and not exceeding $10,000, or

(b) both the fine described in paragraph (a) and imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months.

Looking further, Mr. Speaker, at paragraph 239(c), for example, it reads:

Every person who has

(c) made, or assented to or acquiesced in the making of, false or deceptive entries, or omitted, or assented to or acquiesced in the omission, to enter a material particular, in records or books of account of a taxpayer,— is guilty of an offence and, in addition to any penalty otherwise provided, is liable on summary convictions to

(f) a fine of not less than 25% and not more than double the amount of the tax that was sought to be evaded, or

(g) both the fine described in paragraph (f) and imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

Then, Mr. Speaker, Section 239(2) says that every person who is charged with an offence described in the Section I just read may, at the election of the Attorney General of Canada, be prosecuted upon indictment and, if convicted, is, in addition to any penalty otherwise provided, liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years and not less than two months.

These are serious matters, Mr. Speaker, not to be taken lightly. We are dealing with the liberty of the individual. When I make reference specifically to an offensive provision in this Act, I do believe that it is appropriate for the Minister responsible for the administration of this Act to stand in his place and give a decent, honest answer. This Section clearly should be amended or repealed so that the liberty of the individual is preserved.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble) may or may not be aware that the Department of Justice is carefully reviewing the Income Tax Act, as well all other federal statutes to identify possible conflicts with the Charter of Rights. Given this Government's commitment to that Charter, the review is of the most searching kind. I can assure the Hon. Member that Section 231 of the Income Tax Act is included in the review, and I thank him for his interest.

I am well aware of the Hon. Member's expertise in the tax field, and his keen interest in the validity or otherwise of such sections as Section 231 of the Income Tax act is understandable. That having been said, it is not my intention this evening to throw any doubt whatsoever upon the constitutional validity of Section 231 of the Income Tax Act, or any other aspect of the said Act. My intervention this evening is merely to assure the Hon. Member that the section he referred to will be subject to departmental review.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.27 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

CANADIAN INSTITUTE FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND SECURITY

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to propose to the House an Act to establish an independent institute which will make a major contribution to Canadian understanding and discussion of international peace and security issues. This proposed Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security should be seen in the context of increased concern in Canada over the state of East-West relations.

There have been some signs of improvement recently. However, we have not achieved an atmosphere in which conflict between East and West can be ruled impossible. The threat of nuclear war continues to loom. These spectres are of immediate concern to all Canadians. Fortunately there exists a broad-based, non-partisan consensus among us all that Canada has a right and indeed a moral obligation to play a lead role in efforts to reduce these tensions.

Canada has not stood on the sidelines. Since the Second World War, successive Canadian Governments have striven to achieve international peace and security. Highlights of this long road include Louis St. Laurent and Mike Pearson's contribution to peace-making and peace-keeping at the United Nations and Howard Green's dedication to nuclear disarmament. The valuable and timely initiative launched by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last Autumn was another demonstration of Canada's commitment to improved East-West relations and increased global security.

In last December's Throne Speech, this Government vowed to create a publicly funded centre to gather, collate and digest the enormous volume of information now available on defence and arms control issues. Fresh ideas and new proposals, regardless of source, will be studied and promoted. That was the statement in the Speech from the Throne. This Bill makes good the Government's commitment in that Speech from the Throne.

The purpose of the institute is two-fold. First, it will increase knowledge of issues related to international peace and security with particular emphasis on defence, arms control and disarmament. Second, it will encourage public discussions on international peace and security issues. The institute should not and could not duplicate the vast range of work already done abroad. It will develop Canadian understanding and expertise. It will bring a Canadian viewpoint and Canadian concerns to the issues of peace and security.

At present the principal sources of information on defence and arms control questions lie beyond our borders. This means that public judgment in Canada is shaped by perceptions of security devised by others and for the most part reported by others consequently. Issues of special importance to Canada have not received adequate coverage, nor have the concerns of Canadians been fully appreciated.

We cannot any longer rely in part or wholly on work done abroad. We must do more to explore these questions from a Canadian perspective. The proposed institute represents a major infusion of energy and resources by the Government of Canada. By complementing and assisting existing institutions, this independent institute will both add to the debate and increase the funds devoted to international peace and security in this country.

A prime goal will be to improve the quality and quantity of research and information available in Canada on peace and security. The institute will collect and disseminate information and ideas. The first priority will be to set up a library and data base for the voluminous published material on these questions. It will draw together and make available information. It will be a central resource for research and interest in this field by individuals as well as by groups and institutions.

The institute will promote scholarship in these areas and thus expand the pool of such talent in our country. As such, it will complement the excellent work already done, for example, in the five chairs of military and strategic studies at Canadian universities. These chairs will, of course, suffer no adverse consequences in terms of support, financial and otherwise, by the Government. The institute will have a limited inhouse research capability. It will depend largely in its early years on research by experts and institutions already existing in Canada.

The institute will not compete with existing groups, organizations and institutions. I assure the House it will not swallow up nor reduce government funding available to existing organizations. Neither is it our intention that this new institute would seek funds from non-governmental sources. It must not and it will not crowd out such worth-while bodies as the recently established Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament or overshadow the excellent work of universities from coast to coast. It will stimulate the levels of interest in peace and security to the benefit of all.

To encourage public discussion of these central issues, I expect that the institute will sponsor or hold conferences and seminars in all parts of Canada. The publication of the results of its research and activities will contribute to informed public debate in Canada. It is our intention that the institute will act as a major resource for scholars and the general public who are concerned with these issues.

The institute will be financed on an annual basis by appropriations from Parliament and will be funded equally by grants from the Department of External Affairs and the Department of National Defence. Financing for fiscal year 1984-1985 is projected at $1.5 million, rising to $5 million by 1988-1989. The Government intends this institute to be apolitical and a centre of excellence which will serve all Canadians. It will be governed by a board of directors composed of men and women who are knowledgeable in the field and who can be relied upon to carry out their functions in a completely non-partisan manner. In this vein, myself and my colleague, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais), will seek nominations from the Opposition Parties before any recommendations are made to the Governor in Council regarding appointments to the board of directors.

It is our intention that the institute will have maximum flexibility and independence. It will be free to engage in research and information gathering and dissemination as it sees fit. It will specifically be free to publish the considered findings of its researchers. It will be publicly accountable to Parliament. An annual report on its activities and finances will be submitted to Parliament through the Minister. Naturally, this report will then be referred for examination to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

A country like Canada, which does not have nuclear weapons, depends on the persuasiveness of its ideas on defence, disarmament and arms control rather than any military leverage it has to affect these questions. The Government wants to be able to tap this new source of knowledge and ideas. It may on occasion request advice and research from the institute. In this way future governments will be able to benefit from this additional source of expert knowledge. In so doing, it will increase Canada's ability to propose realistic and imaginative solutions to the difficult and complicated questions of arms control.

The institute will be devoted to both peace and security, to defence and arms control, and disarmament. This Canadian institute will neither be exclusively devoted to strategic studies nor to peace research. In our view, arms control and disarmament are inseparable from security.

The institute is only one manifestation of our commitment to peace and security. To encourage more public involvement in these questions we intend to increase funding for voluntary associations and private research groups. As an initial step, the Department of External Affairs disarmament fund has been increased from an original $338,000 last year to over $700,000 effective April 1. As well, funds for the study of verification procedures which are critical to successful arms control negotiations and agreements have been doubled to over $1 million.

The foundation of this institute, Mr. Speaker, is a reflection of the abiding interest of all Parties in the House and the response to many Canadians who are deeply troubled over global peace and security in the nuclear age. In planning for the institute we have sought the ideas of a wide range of Canadians and I would like to thank them for their views. This Bill has benefited from a number of constructive ideas which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) has put forward in correspondence with the Prime Minister. A number of specific changes were made which accommodate these concerns. The New Democratic Party also has put forward positive suggestions which merit serious consideration in this debate and at the committee stage. In a spirit of consensus and co-operation among all Parties, we remain open to suggestions for further change to the Bill.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that a nation's greatness lies in the power of its ideas, not only its armed might. Concern is not enough; it must be accompanied by informed views and constructive ideas. It is our hope that this institute will make a major contribution to deepening Canadian understanding of the fundamental questions of international peace and security.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put one or two questions, if I may, to the Minister. As the Minister knows, Clause 3 states that a corporation is hereby established—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but our Standing Orders do not provide for questioning at this time. We first have a round of three speakers, one from each Party, and then speakers will enjoy a 20-minute period for their remarks which would then be followed by a 10-minute question and answer period.

We are back in debate. The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark).

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be back in debate. I am pleased to be able to rise to speak on this Bill because I think there can be no question anywhere in the country that the concept of the establishment of a peace institute centred in Canada is of great importance to us. That concept enjoys wide support.

I think I owe it to the House to say at the outset that we believe the Bill that has been presented which sets up this particular institute is fatally flawed. While there have been some consultations to date with regard to improving the Bill, those consultations have not resulted in the kinds of changes that we hoped to see. We need changes that will guarantee the independence of this agency, changes that will guarantee its accountability to the House of Commons and Parliament, and changes that will ensure, more than the words of the Minister have, that there will be a complementing of the activities of agencies and institutions already engaged in the field of peace research in the country rather than a supplanting, directly or indirectly, of those agencies.

The House will know that last fall the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) asked me to undertake certain inquiries with an eye to making recommendations to him as to the policy that would be useful for a new government to follow in the field of arms control and disarmament. I have interpreted that mandate to involve public hearings across the country.

I come to this debate from five public hearings in five Canadian centres—Vancouver, Montreal, Halifax, Edmonton and Toronto—in which we had the opportunity to receive some 70 briefs from Canadian organizations and hear 92 witnesses. The most particularly valuable witnesses were those who came forward in an open session to make their contributions and to participate and express their views on an issue which they considered to be of deep concern to them. I have also had conversations with a wide range of Canadians and people outside the country regarding appropriate policies and institutions which should be established.

Without question, there is in Canada a deep and growing concern about the possibility of nuclear conflict and a deep and growing concern about whether our country is acting as effectively as it might to inch the world away from nuclear destruction. I will be reporting fully to the Leader of the Opposition later on my inquiries and recommendations. I think it might be helpful as we consider this institute if I touch on some of the testimony and bring to the House of Commons some of the views I heard in public hearings from concerned Canadians across the country, people who are not sitting in the House of Commons and are not part of the policy making, but who consider themselves very much affected by the issues that we are here discussing.

I would like to begin with a reference to testimony from a young woman who came from Great Island to the open forum at the hearing in Halifax, Nova Scotia. She came at considerable inconvenience to herself because she felt involved in these issues and wanted an opportunity to have her views expressed. She said that where she lives unemployment and poverty were very high. She said that disillusionment, apathy and despair were widespread, especially among the young, and that that disillusionment, apathy and despair were based primarily upon a deep sense of powerlessness. She suggested that many of her neighbours believed that the hearings which we were holding were simply meant to try to defuse the public's concern and play to their undying belief in the democratic process, but that nothing would be done. That was her fear when she came. She said that she came nonetheless because she dissents from that prevailing cynicism. She believes that governments and parliamentarians will listen to people on the peace issue and will try to translate the wishes of concerned ordinary Canadians into realizable policy. She said she would go back to her community and try to convince her neighbours that it is not hopeless, that parliamentarians and governments will listen and will respond.

She spoke for herself, but she spoke for much more than herself. She spoke for a wide feeling of powerlessness, concern and a sense of being isolated in the country. As we discuss institutions today which we might establish, we, the Parliament of Canada, must be conscious that we are responding to the concerns of Canadians like the woman from Great Island and others who have nearly given up on the system and who may give up on the system if they see us put in place something that appears to be strong but in fact is not, something that appears to be independent but in fact is controlled by the Government.

One of the startling pieces of evidence that came before our hearings concerned the growth of fear among children in the country. Many of us who have children know from our own experience the extent to which they are preoccupied and concerned about these questions. My daughter, who is seven, began one or two years ago to ask me when the war is going to come, when is the world going to end? I have no recollection of putting questions of that kind when I was six or seven, nor do most of us in the House.

That is not just random observation. That expression of fear is now common in the country. Coming before our public hearings across the country were trained psychologists, some of them based at McMaster University where there is now a cross Canada study being conducted of the effect of the threat of nuclear war upon the attitudes of young people. Most of the evidence that has now been gathered is evidence that has come from the United States. It is compelling! In a study published in 1982, 3,500 American children were asked what they expected if there were to be a nuclear war. Most responded eloquently and simply by saying "I will die. We will all die". They expressed bitter resentment against adults who had already lived a full life and were putting their chance for a full life at risk.

J. C. Mack, publishing in the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientist in 1981, after a survey of 1,000 schoolchildren, concluded:

> —young people are growing up without the ability to form stable ideals or the sense of continuity upon which the development of stable personality structure and the formation of serviceable ideals depend.

In Vancouver we heard from the Physicians for Social Responsibility whose testimony in part I will read to the House:

Scientific data indicate that a nuclear war would result in a catastrophe of degree and magnitude beyond comprehension, and that there could be no meaningful medical response to such a catastrophe. We believe that it is our responsibility, as physicians, to do all in our power to prevent what would be "the final epidemic".

There is a very real fear in the country among the sophisticated and among the innocent that we will destroy ourselves. I recognize, as does the House, that fear is no basis for foreign policy. But we recognize also that that fear is a wholly understandable reaction to a situation in which negotiations between the superpowers are broken and suspended. The number of nuclear weapons states is growing, not reducing, and the world is vulnerable to nuclear terrorists or accidents.

Canadians have cause to be afraid and, as their representatives in government and Parliament, we have a duty to address and reduce the causes of fear. I believe there is not much point in spectacular gestures. I believe we are more likely to find real progress by proceeding in a steady, sober, consistent, balanced way.

The second concern that was raised during the hearings quite consistently was a concern about how effective Canadian policy is now in responding to concerns that exist in our public and around the world. I want to summarize some of those concerns about our effectiveness that are germane to this debate.

One that was repeated frequently is that Government interest in these issues is sporadic and not well co-ordinated. That testimony is saying two things. It is making the observation that one year we have for a while a suffocation policy, then it lapses. Later we have proposals for a five-power conference, a tour and consultations, and then they lapse. But there is none of the persistence now in Canadian policy which helped former Governments achieve agreement on test bans, which helped the former Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, contribute to the establishment of the United Nations peace-keeping operations. They are saying that there is a sporadic, inconsistent nature to our public positions on policy.

Second, there is the concern that expertise is spread around in Government. Internal expertise is not co-ordinated. Much of it is concentrated in the Department of National Defence, for example, whereas the Department of External Affairs is supposed to be the lead Department.

A second theme that was consistent is that we have a greater capacity than we are using to develop and advance specific responses to particular problems on the path to peace or on the path away from tension now. Canada is, of course, doing important work in a multitude of fields, but we are not organized to contribute up to our potential.

A third concern has to do with individual Canadians, whether they are experts or simply worried citizens, who believe that they are outside our system, that they are affected by our failures, but have no impact upon the policies we follow. They have neither the information they require nor the influence they require.

Finally, and it is very important in the context of this debate for it to be understood, there is a very real concern—the Minister made reference to it—that there is an imbalance between the emphasis on defence studies funded and encouraged by the Government, carried on across the country, and the need for studies that deal particularly with the question and with the perspective of peace, and that that imbalance has to be corrected if we are going to be as effective as the country can be in moving the world, in inching the world, away from conflict.

I think these concerns provide a useful context for the consideration of this Bill. We are not discussing here a series of policy initiatives. There was to have been a resolution presented to the House. That resolution was the subject of extensive consultation among the Parties, but that resolution has not come forward. It dealt with the general question. We are here dealing with a very specific question. We are dealing with a specific Bill to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. It is a Bill to establish one agency in a field where several agencies exist. It is a Bill that has to do with one initiative on a question where several initiatives are needed.

I make the point to the House that what we do with this institute will affect what we are able to do in other ways to increase security and world peace. If the widespread concern of Canadians over the possibility of nuclear war is addressed, if what I call the fear issue, the force of fear in the country, is addressed, that can be a means of bringing Canadians into our foreign policy debate generally.

This involvement of Canadians should not be seen, as a threat to Canadian policy. It should be seen as it is, as an unparalleled opportunity if we choose to avail ourselves of the strong, sophisticated, deep interest that exists in these questions in the Canadian public.

On the other hand, if we choose to ignore public concern in the hope that it will simply go away, we run the risk of souring the public on the ability of their elected representatives to provide leadership on this crucial issue. They will turn then, in my view, from the tone of seriousness, of sophisticated responses, a tone that marked the hearings I held, and opt for more radical or for more unilateral solutions. It is essential that we find ways to bring interested Canadians into the discussion of what their country should do in a field of policy which affects them vitally.

Of course, the issues are complex. That complexity is not only a limitation to the participation of Canadians outside Parliament; that complexity is a limitation upon the ability of Members of this House to be as informed and as effective as we should be. Elected representatives, as well as the general public, have a great need of being better informed on the technical issues relating to peace and security questions. In short, the essence of the challenge facing elected representatives is to improve the quality of knowledge upon which we might act and then enlarge, in the country and in the House, the will to act.

What is needed is an institute designed to encourage and facilitate informed debate and to produce independent, non-partisan research and information, a world-class research and public information institution on international peace and security questions, not merely on the narrower question of arms control.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we believe that the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security could play a very useful role. It can make a very positive three-fold contribution to world peace and the Canadian policy: by helping the world nations to draft policies and plans likely to minimize the risk of nuclear conflict; by keeping Canada's own politicians and population well informed so as to increase their influence over public policies; finally, by symbolizing the commitment of the Canadian Government and Parliament to make the quest for peace one of our great national priorities.

Those are all worthy endeavours. In the course of this debate, we must stress the fact that the institute must have the independence, credibility and determination required to take up that challenge. In our view, this Bill does not give it the necessary independence and, therefore, restricts its credibility.

We also believe that we are duty-bound to establish clearly to what extent the activities of that organization would mesh with our national objectives to foster international peace and security. Other measures must be taken as well. The Government's internal structure must be much more coherent about any peace-related issue. The independence and integrity of research institutions already active in Canada must be maintained and protected. The Government itself must be much more open with Canadians and aware of the deep and sincere concerns about international peace.

[English]

I think it is very important, Sir, that we distinguish very clearly in this debate between the idea of an institute and the proposal that exists in this Bill. In our view it is important that there should be an independent institute centred in Canada to study peace and security. That is unquestioned; that is very clear. But we have a very deep and profound concern about this Bill, Mr. Speaker.

There have been extensive inquiries by the Government prior to this proposal being brought into the House of Commons. I rather regret that the full conclusions of those inquiries, the full range of alternatives, prepared for the Government were not presented to this Parliament. This, after all, is a parliamentary matter. We are establishing here a Canadian institute, not simply a governmental institute. It would have aided immeasurably the parliamentarians who have to make decisions on this question to have had access to the recommendations presented to the people making the inquiries by the Government and indeed to have had access to the recommendations made to the Government by those representatives.

There are, as the House will know, broadly two kinds of agencies, broadly two kinds of institutes in the world, two kinds of models, speaking generally, of approach to this question. One focuses internally. It is inward-looking. It serves the Government. It is, for example, like the National Security Council in the United States. Its purpose is to pull government advice together. Its purpose is to ensure that there is a balance in government decision-making internally to protect, for example, against an unusual influence from the military side or an unusual influence from somewhere else. It is an internal agency. That is one model which could be followed by an institute established by this Parliament. The other model is external—encouraging independent research, encouraging public information and having its focus beyond government rather than being locked into government.

Those are the two models, broadly, which exist in the world. They play very distinct roles. They are very different. However, what we have here in this institute is an attempt, in effect, to combine both approaches—not to have an agency which is strictly internal, not to have an agency which is independent and external, but to have one which combines features of both.

Our concern as we look at this Bill is that, in attempting to combine features of both, the Government creates a very real confusion about exactly what kind of agency we will have here. That confusion will almost certainly continue. That confusion, if it does continue, as I believe it will, could cripple the institute. If we are not careful in debate today, we could place upon this institute, if we adopt the Bill as it sits, restrictions which will severely, perhaps fatally, handicap its future. This institute has to be done right the first time.

Mr. Trudeau: Could you tell us how? Could you be more precise?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Yes. I am pleased that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is involved in the debate. Yes, I will be telling him how. The Prime Minister already has some recommendations from the Leader of the Opposition, most of which he has ignored. I will come to that later on.

Mr. Trudeau: Most of which have been listened to and respected.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): "Listened to"; that is exactly the point. That is exactly the fear one has here, and that is exactly why it is so important to have an independent institute. We do not want to have something which goes around listening to people and then ignoring them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Prime Minister has put his finger on the essence of our concern.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Well he should and well he could, because it is a concern which is born in part by the practice of the Government in so many other fields. We cannot afford to sacrifice this institute, which is so important to goals shared by all people in the House, to the practice and the fear of independent activity which exists on the Government side. This institute has to be independent or it is nothing. That is the point.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Tell us how to make it more independent and we will do it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): All right. If that is a serious offer—

Mr. Trudeau: Yes.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You will do it, all right. I would like to see the clause which indicates that the Minister can direct the institute as to what it should do—

An Hon. Member: Clause 28.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I will depart from the normal rules since I have been asked a question by the Prime Minister and quote precisely the clause. Clause 28 now reads:

> On request therefor, the Institute shall undertake research for or provide advice to the Minister in relation to any issue involving international peace and security.

I would like to see the word "shall" changed to the word "may", because that leaves the decision in the hands of the independent institute.

Mr. Trudeau: Just move an amendment.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Oh, no, I do not want an offer from the Prime Minister that we move an amendment. I want an undertaking from the Prime Minister that he will accept that amendment. Do I have that undertaking?

Mr. MacEachen: Come to the committee.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We are not discussing here a detail. We are discussing the fundamental independence of this institute. We are discussing a fundamental principle which affects the effectiveness of this institute. The Prime Minister has intervened. He has said that he will act on what we propose. I have just made a proposal which would guarantee, or take a step toward guaranteeing the independence of this institute. Will the Government accept that proposal?

Mr. Trudeau: If that is all you want, yes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): No, but it is a start; it is a start.

Mr. Trudeau: That is what we want to hear. Don't tell us about the ladies in Halifax.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The ladies in Halifax, the women in Halifax, have an interest in this issue because it is their lives and the lives of their children which are affected by what we do here. It is their future which is limited—

Mr. Trudeau: They do not want you to talk out the institute, which is what you are trying to do.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —if we create here an institute which is not independent, which is not credible and which intrudes upon the independence and credibility of agencies already in the field. They are very much involved. The Prime Minister would serve us all well if he showed less contempt for the women of Halifax, for the people of Canada and others who are very much concerned about this issue and this institute.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I was saying that this institute has to be done right the first time because institutions define their nature in their very early days. This Bill has the following faults. First, it is confused as to what kind of institute the Government wants. Second, it is far too dependent upon government. Third, it is not accountable to Parliament. Fourth, it is not clear, despite the Minister's words, how this institute would relate to other agencies which now exist in the field.

Those are all major flaws which have to be corrected now while we are defining the nature of the institute. It would be irresponsible to let the measure proceed with these defects which could be crippling. Those of us who unfortunately have had experience in this House with offers across the floor which are not backed up in practice will require a little more than casual statements by the Prime Minister from his seat before we will be satisfied that we have an institute which guarantees the independence that is essential to this kind of undertaking.

Let me very quickly review some of the limitations upon the independence of the institute in the Bill as it now sits. I have spoken about the most dangerous of them, Clause 28, but there are also others, Clauses 6 to 8 speak about the appointment of a board of directors. Under this provision Cabinet will appoint the directors and the executive director. We have had an offer that there will be consultation with the Opposition Parties. What use is consultation when the Government makes the decision alone? This Bill gives the Government the power to make this decision by itself. There has been a proposal put forward—and the Prime Minister is interested in proposals—which would have the board of directors appointed by consensus of the standing committee of the House interested in external and defence policy. That would provide independence. That empowers the committee to appoint. It does not merely permit them to be consulted, it empowers them to appoint. That gives a much greater degree of independence than does the present measure.

Clause 14 of this Bill, which limits the kind of independent institute that we need, gives Cabinet alone the power to fix the fees of board members and fix the terms and conditions of employment of the executive director—very powerful instruments in the hands of Cabinet. The Cabinet determines where the principal office will be. That is a fairly minor matter, but why should Cabinet decide it? Why should that not be decided by some agency more independent than the Cabinet of Canada?

In Clause 26 Cabinet has the power on its own to direct the board to make, amend or repeal any of its by-laws. In other words, what the board does after due deliberation, Cabinet can come in and has the power to undo. The effect of Cabinet coming in and undoing it is final. In effect Cabinet controls the by-laws of this institution.

I have spoken about advice to Ministers under Clause 28. Clause 29 regarding funding indicates that the institute's funding will come from "moneys apropriated by Parliament for the purpose", so it says. No other details are given, but in our view if we want to guarantee some kind of independence, consideration should be given to provisions for funding on a basis longer than one year to facilitate longer-term planning and, again, to promote the institute's independence from the Government's priorities for research.

We have had very serious and disappointing experiences with the problems of agencies that are supposed to be independent but in fact are not. There is, for example, a very clear danger in this Bill as it is written that this institute would be encumbered with political appointees who will either be reluctant to provide objective, independent analyses of, and information about, peace and security issues where such analyses would conflict with government policy or, should they be inclined to show that kind of independence, they could find themselves in the kind of situation that Doris Anderson found herself in when, as President of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, she dared to suggest that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms as originally tabled in the House did nothing for Canadian women.

We have had too much experience with agencies that were supposed to be independent but were not independent in fact. We cannot afford to risk the independence and credibility of this institute by imposing upon it the kinds of restrictions and limitations which have so weakened institutions in other fields of policy in the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) suggested that we should approve this Bill in principle here in the House and then work out the details in committee. What the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs called details go to the very heart of this Bill. They concern fundamental questions of independence and accountability. This Bill as it is written would allow the Government to control absolutely the work of the institute. The Government alone appoints its directors. The Government alone decides how they are paid. The Government alone has the right to dictate to the institute, to tell it what to do and then require it to do so. That is not the kind of independence which Canadians expect of this institute, nor is it the kind of independence we were led to believe this institute would have.

This Bill creates an agency which the Government can transform gradually, easily and completely into an instrument of government propaganda or indeed into an instrument of Party propaganda. If a government chose to do what this bill gives a government the power to do, the effects would spread well beyond this particular institute. This Bill effectively gives the Government the power to limit the independence of existing agencies which are working now for peace because the institute we are discussing here can move very quickly to centre stage. It will have an immediate and permanent profile high above private agencies already working in the field and it can become the standard against which they are judged.

I remind the House that this institute has behind it more than the power of example. It has the power of money. If this institute which has the power to fund other agencies or individuals is to be truly independent, no strings will be attached to that funding. But can it be truly independent when the Government alone appoints its directors, when the Government alone sets its salaries, when the Government alone can tell it what to do? That, Sir, is not independence. Without independence, this institute has the power to do more harm than good. The power this Bill gives the Government to control this institute and, by extension, to influence unduly the tone and direction of research carried out by other agencies interested in peace and security is one fatal flaw in this Bill.

Another fatal flaw in the Bill is that while this Bill gives the Government the power to control the institute, it does not give Parliament the power to hold the institute accountable. There is no accountability provision here. The Minister may lay on the Table a report. Many reports are laid on the Table of Parliament. There is no accountability of this institute to Parliament. There is instead tight and very fundamental control by the government of the day. That is inconsistent with the purposes of the Bill and is a very unfortunate aspect of it which we simply must see changed.

Reference was made to consultations that have occurred and to recommendations that have been made by the Leader of the Opposition, some of which have been adopted. Clause 5(a) of this Bill as it now reads reflects a recommendation of the Leader of the Opposition to create a national library and data base on peace and security agencies. Clause 5(e) reflects a recommendation of the Leader of the Opposition to provide facilities for conferences, seminars and funding for some other bodies.

There have been other important but minor agreements to proposals put forward by the Leader of the Opposition as a result of consultations. However, we must ask two questions about those consultations. Why did the Government agree only on the relatively minor questions and not agree on the questions which provided accountability or independence for the institute? Why did it agree only on the minor matters and disagree on the major ones?

The other question we must ask is why did the consultations end so quickly? The Prime Minister knows that there was a long process of consultation with regard to a resolution on the peace initiative, a consultation in which views were put forward by the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party, many of which were accepted. The Prime Minister shakes his head. Am I incorrect? I can speak only for the proposals put forward by the Leader of the Opposition. The Prime Minister now tells me that I am correct. I appreciate his correction.

There was a very fruitful process of negotiation on that question. I gather that problems with members of the NDP have made it difficult to bring the resolution forward, but agreement was reached on major matters between the Government and the Official Opposition in the House of Commons. The process of that kind of genuine consultation works. It began in relation to this Bill but was then suddenly stopped. Why was it stopped? Why did the Government bring this Bill into the House now rather than carry on the discussions that had begun to be fruitful regarding the production of a Bill which could come into the House and be accepted by all Parties in the House?

The Parliament of Canada approves the concept of a peace institute. We want to see something established along the lines of what was referred to in the Speech from the Throne. What we have here is something very different from what we were led to believe by the Speech from the Throne would be brought forward by the Government. It is different because it is not independent. It is different because it is not accountable. It is different in fundamental ways that go to the heart of the capacity of this institute to be seen as a credible institution in the Canadian community.

Because we have had too much experience to do otherwise, we are going to require from the Government some guarantees now that it is prepared to make this institute independent and that it is prepared to build in accountability. We do not want to see the Government sabotage its own institute by imposing upon it limitations that will kill its credibility in the country. If we do not do this right the first time, the institute may well be doomed. We think the issue is too important to allow the Government's concerns about independent activities to doom this institute.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) will know but apparently as the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) does not know, we in the New Democratic Party have been pursuing the subject of the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. We have been pursuing the subject of having peace research chairs to complement the chairs on strategic studies. We have been listening to the Canadian public for the last many years about their concerns with the nuclear arms race. We have participated actively in the reference in the standing committee on security and disarmament which, of course, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead would not know about. Therefore, it is a bit of a surprise to me to find out that the Conservative Party has just discovered the issue and the public's concern with this issue.

A Conservative Party task force held hearings in five cities and the Party discovered that the Canadian public is very concerned about the issues of international peace and security. I welcome Conservative members. I am glad they have finally discovered this.

The Minister knows that we did have an excellent series of sessions in the standing committee dealing with our reference on security and disarmament two years ago. He will also know the great importance that attaches to concerned citizens having their voices heard when it comes to such an important matter as setting up an institute for research in these subject matters. I will come back to this in a moment.

I just want to preface my remarks with not being too hasty. We agree with the Bill in principle. We agree with much of its content. I have half a dozen fairly important amendments to suggest and I will suggest them today. They will be discussed in committee. I urge the Minister and the Prime Minister, whom I am glad to see here, to ensure that the committee and its chairman, who is here as well, has time to hear the Canadian public and seriously to address amendments that would strengthen this Bill.

The Prime Minister will recall that when the International Development Research Centre was established, first reading was in the late fall of 1969. The Bill then went to the Standing Committee on External Affairs where it remained for several months. Several extremely important amendments were made. Indeed, final reading establishing the IDRC did not take place until the fall of 1970. Even the title of the centre was changed in committee. Many members on that committee took a very strong interest in the IDRC. Perhaps we cannot take that long, but I do urge that the committee not only have hearings for the members of the Canadian public who are concerned in this matter, but that it also have the careful, detailed discussion that the Bill needs when it comes to making some amendments.

There are two matters that bother me about the Bill, although it has a lot of pluses. It has not articulated in a sufficiently Canadian way the purpose of the institute. Second, Clause 28 seriously undermines the independence and the hands-off relationship that must exist between the Government and the institute.

From what the Minister said in his speech, I think he would agree that the institute must reflect the Canadian viewpoint on international issues of peace and security and start providing our own data base, information gathering, analysis and assessment. We have never had very much of this in the Government of Canada.

There must be a way, and I will not go into detail on this, in which we can make clear in Clause 4 that what we are looking for is a Canadian-based analysis and assessment of issues of international peace and security. We are not like SIPRI, the Swedish institute, looking primarily at the whole global range of issues of international peace and security from every possible perspective.

The Minister and the Prime Minister have argued, and I agree, that we need a more Canadian perspective. In a sense we have lost our independence in this country because we are so derivative, so dependent on the information and analysis of other countries, particularly the United States. There should be more mention in that clause of the hope that the institute will look at these matters from a Canadian perspective.

In the "purpose" clause, I would put 4(d) first, "foster, fund and conduct research on international peace and security issues of particular interest to Canadians or to the Government of Canada". That is the intention of the Government and should be the intention of all of us to emphasize.

Putting (a) first, "collect and disseminate information and ideas on international peace and security", instead of in the next section under "powers", does not give the clauses enough vigour. We hope this will be a go-getting organization doing basic and fundamental research, not just collecting information, and doing it in accordance with the needs of Canadians and from some Canadian perspective, whether it is talking about the nature of the Soviet threat or whatever. The purpose could be strengthened.

The other main area in which I have concern is Clause 28. The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead also referred to this. He suggested that it could be made more acceptable to him and his Party by changing "shall" to "may". The clause would then read:

> On request therefore, the Institute may undertake research for or provide advice to the Minister in relation to any issue involving international peace and security.

I heard the Prime Minister call out that he would be quite willing to change that word from "shall" to "may". The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead went on ranting and raving. If the Prime Minister did say that and if the Government is willing to do that, it should properly take out the clause entirely. It can remain silent. Anybody, Mr. Speaker—you, I, a citizen or group—may request the new institute to undertake something. An ordinary MP could make the request. I would hope the standing committee might do that occasionally. Anybody may request the institute to undertake research or provide advice. The institute's board would then meet and decide yes or no.

There is no reason that the clause should be in the Bill. It is not in the IDRC Act. What happens if the Government wants the IDRC to undertake something? This happened with the Conservative Government when the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) was Minister. When it wanted the IDRC to do something, it had to put in a request. This was in connection with an international science and technology conference. The board met and the IDRC said: "Yes, we may do this, this and this under these conditions". This was in the 1979 period. It was perfectly all right. However, that can be done without any clause at all. I was going to raise this point independently, that if you change "shall" to "may", you do not need the clause at all. You simply remain silent.

That is at the nub of the independence question. I do not agree with the Conservative argument; there are many other clauses in the Bill with regard to the appointment of directors by Order in Council and so on and the fact that you must have more than the tabling of the annual report and studies by the institute in Parliament and before the committee.

I judge this on the basis of similar Canadian bodies and a body like SIPRI where there are almost identical provisions. It has to report through a Minister and table its reports in Parliament. IDRC has the same arrangements, with one important exception in the choice of board of directors.

As I look back on Canadian history, I do not feel that the Government, whatever government has been in power, has abused the right to appoint directors and so on. That right may be terribly abused in appointments to the other place, but quite frankly I do not think it has in this instance. Maybe we could do as IDRC does and have a provision that two members of the board of directors may be MPs or members of the other place. That sounds terrific. I do not know whether Senator Steuart knew about this when he resigned from the IDRC after being made a senator. He could have stayed. That Act allows, as the Prime Minister will remember, up to two members of the board drawn from either House, and that might be a good idea. I feel we should explore it in committee.

What I am saying is that the other points raised by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead regarding the board, the executive director, appointments and parliamentary accountability, I believe, frankly, are adequately protected not only by this Bill but by the traditions of Canadian Governments, both Liberal and Conservative, when one talks about the Economic Council of Canada, the Science Council of Canada, the IDRC and so on. However, I do feel there is one change which might be made, and that is that after the first executive director is appointed, subsequent executive directors are chosen by the board. That is a suggestion I would make, and I have other minor suggestions in that connection.

However, it seems to me that we do not want to take away from what is the most important goal for this institute, and that is that it should freely engage in short, medium, long-term research; that it should foster such scholarly activities elsewhere, which we badly need in Canada; that it should be absolutely free to publish; and that if it is asked for advice or to do research, it may or may not do so and it may or may not do so whether the request comes from the Minister or from you or me, Mr. Speaker. That is what is particularly vital and that is why it is not even necessary to amend Clause 28. One simply removes it.

Therefore, we can liven up the purpose, make it more clearly of concern to Canadians, and in that connection, by the way, I really do not see why the Government copied the IDRC in one respect, namely, having non-Canadians on its board of directors. I believe that was and is essential for the IDRC but I do not believe it is essential for this institute. I believe this institute will be looking primarily at the Canadian perspective on international peace and security issues. In fact, if someone like George Ball or Paul Warnke or someone like that were asked to be on the board, I believe it would be of some embarrassment to them. The institute can always get their advice and, indeed, I am sure it would, as we all do. However, I am not at all sure that that particular copying of the IDRC legislation was necessary or desirable.

I will have specific clauses to help strengthen the purpose section. In the powers section we would put the collecting and disseminating of information. In connection with the publishing of studies, I would draw the attention of the Minister to Clause 5(c). This is kind of a mixed up clause. It states that the institute may:

—publish studies and reports prepared for the use of the institute and publish or otherwise disseminate scientific, technical or other information as it sees fit;—

The words "scientific, technical" came from the IDRC. I would say that that clause should simply read that the institute may "publish or otherwise disseminate reports, studies or other information relevant to its purpose". That is nice, clean wording. The phrase "for the use of the institute" is not, I believe, what the Government intends.

There are three kinds of studies and reports which the institute might undertake. It might do inhouse research. It will have a small inhouse research capacity. It might contract out research for its use. However, there might be research done out there—and the Minister pointed out how anxious he would be that this would complement rather than supplant research and scholarly activity—and the institute might well pick up a piece of research done out there, think it extremely valuable to its purpose and agree to publish it, even though it was not for its use, if the outside person wanted it published. Therefore, I simply guard against the use of the words "for the use of the institute". In fact, I would remove them entirely, and have clause 5(c), a very important clause, simply read" publish or otherwise disseminate reports, studies or other information relevant to its purpose".

While I am on Clause 5, I have another small point I would like to make. In order to ensure that the institute itself is not going to seek funds in the private sector, it would be quite simple to change Clause 5(g) from "acquire any property, money or securities by gift" to "accept any property". That is a more benign phrase, and I will be putting forth that amendment in committee. I am just giving the Minister lots of notice on these amendments.

Clause 7 reads:

The Executive Director shall be appointed by the Governor in Council to hold office for a term not exceeding five years.

Any executive director, subsequent to the first director who would be appointed in this way, should, I feel, be appointed on the recommendation of the board of directors.

With respect to Clause 18, I have already mentioned the question of non-Canadians on the board and I would appreciate a response to that at some time. As I said, I believe that is entirely appropriate for IDRC. It is certainly entirely appropriate for SIPRI. By the way, SIPRI responds to a Minister, the Minister lays its reports before Parliament and SIPRI is extremely independent. So we should take another look at Clause 18.

I have already discussed at length why Clause 28 should be removed. I agree with all other speakers, including the Minister himself, that one of the most important things is that the institute should have an arm's length relationship with the Government, and that it should be genuinely able to decide for itself on the research it does and the advice it gives.

On the financial side, the Minister mentioned that the funding would be $1.5 million in the present year, rising to $5 million by 1988-1989—it could well rise more than that, I assume—and that it would be jointly funded by annual grants from the two Departments, the Department of National Defence and the Department of External Affairs.

Again, going back into history, if I may, to IDRC—and the reason I compare it so much with IDRC is that it is so similarly structured—as I remember, IDRC was initially funded from an appropriation by CIDA, but it very soon achieved its own separate line item. I would hope that the same would be the case here. Frankly, I believe it should start immediately with its own separate line item, and I will have an amendment to that effect when we come to committee.

In summary, this Party has been in favour, is in favour, and shall continue to be in favour of such an institute being established, a Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. We believe it is badly needed. Far from suffocating other bodies engaged in this goal, we feel it will encourage them, help fund them, and will produce a good deal more scholarly material. I believe, frankly, it is superior to the Australian institute, which I received information about yesterday, which is tied solely to the Australian national university. I believe, if the purpose is made clearer, that this institute will for the first time—and perhaps this is something which governments should have done long since—provide a scholarly Canadian assessment from a Canadian perspective as well as from a world perspective on the issues of international peace and security.

I like the emphasis, as we all do, on peace and security issues. Of course, as the Minister has said, this will include strategic studies, although we have more accomplished in that field already. We want the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to have time. That is what worries me more than anything else.

Mr. Prud'homme: We give you one month.

Ms. Jewett: The Chairman is here. I know the Committee controls its own timetable because every time we ask the Government for something, it says it is in the hands of the Committee. I am glad, come to think of it, that they have always said to us: "Well, the Committee has the power; it is in the hands of the Committee".

• (1220)

Mr. Prud'homme: Five days a week for one month if you want.

Ms. Jewett: Well, what a commitment! We also have to hear from Canadians, as I say, because they are concerned about this. The fact that the Minister did not mention Clause 28 in his speech, Mr. Speaker—and it is so important that we not have Clause 28—

Mr. MacEachen: I want to argue about that.

Ms. Jewett: —I hope indicates that he, too, realizes that a Minister could destroy the institute. Not this Minister, of course, but a Minister could. He could have it so busy doing research for him and giving him advice that it would never do anything else. I am sure he will be the first to agree, when he speaks again, that if this is to be the first-class institute I know he wants and we all want, then it should decide, the institute should decide what research it does and what advice it gives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on a point of order.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, since the Chair indicated a while ago that under our Standing Orders the House cannot question the minister at this time, could I ask for unanimous consent so that we may have a brief question period on this bill?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Hon. Member will realize this is an extraordinary request. However, the House being master of its rules, I might ask if there is unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Does the House give unanimous consent to a question period?

[English]

There does not seem to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to speak today on second reading of this Bill to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, particularly after listening to the arguments of our two Opposition colleagues. I know full well that the former Leader of the Opposition had spoken at length on the question of independence, and particularly on the appointment of members of the new institute's board of directors dealt with in Clauses 6 to 8.

As I was listening to his remarks and his suggestion about Committee members reaching a consensus and making recommendations concerning appointees to the institute, I could just see him and the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) being on the same Committee, and I was wondering how we might possibly reach a consensus if those two sit on the same Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I do think we would be expecting too much if we thought that the Committee might agree on 27 appointments. Should the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) have a precedent in mind, perhaps he would enlighten us before the Bill is referred to Committee for consideration. I noticed that he and our colleague of the NDP did not see any need to dwell upon the first few clauses of the Bill dealing with the purpose and powers of the institute.

Therefore, we can safely assume that the two Opposition Parties see nothing wrong with the principle of the Bill and that their complaints bear on minor details. As I said earlier, the matter of appointments did come up—I can still recall the position taken by the Hon. Member for York-Peel during the Committee study on Latin America. Once again, how could he go along with a consensus on appointments? History usually repeats itself, Mr. Speaker, and that explains why I feel that such a solution is unrealistic.

Besides, our colleagues opposite always talk about the responsibilities of the Government concerning foreign corporations. In that respect, I think that the Government should indeed take its responsibilities. Given the impartial nature of the activities of the institute, the Prime Minister gave the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party the assurance that they would be consulted about the appointments. I do not see what more can be said at this stage but, in the course of Committee proceedings, we might come up with alternative solutions which would be more practical than the one advocated by the Member for Yellowhead.

With respect to Section 28, I think that many Members are concerned about the fact that the Minister can ask the Institute to give him advice or to undertake research work. Mr. Speaker, considering that public funds will have been allocated to an institute, whenever the Minister needs some advice to develop policies, the best source of information will certainly be this institute. The latter will certainly be in a position to provide him with ideas, not necessarily ideas that will please him, but well informed advice. Everyone in this House will recognize the need to establish an agency which will make a regular, in fact an ongoing examination of issues as important as international peace and security. I do not know to what extent the Minister may be criticized for asking the advice of this institute. Should this agency be established only to be ignored, either by the Government, by the Members of the Committee or by the public? I believe that the Minister should have the privilege of using the valid advice of the Institute in developing his policies, and, for this reason, I have no difficulty in accepting that the Minister should be allowed to ask for the advice of the Institute, even though, in fact, he does not necessarily have to follow such advice. The Institute will strictly be a major source of information for him. Since the Canadian public will be paying for the Institute, I think that it would be . . . Would it be better were the Institute to refuse to provide advice to the Minister, who would then have to spend additional public funds to have the same research done elsewhere? I wonder to what extent this can be considered as limiting the independence of the Institute since the contents of the advice given will not be dictated by the Minister. In this regard, I believe that the Minister should in fact be able to avail himself of the good judgment of the Institute and I have no difficulty in accepting that.

As far as salaries and benefits are concerned, I know that they do worry the Hon. Member for Yellowhead. Are we going to ask the Committee to set this gentleman's or that lady's salary, to approve the Institute members' expense account? The Hon. Member for Yellowhead said that he did not want the Government or the Cabinet to set either the salaries or the expense accounts. Who will do it then, Mr. Speaker? Should we ask, for instance, the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to determine how much money this or that person will be paid, as he suggested initially? I believe that, first, this would be asking the Committee to get stuck in red tape, and second, that it would be quite irresponsible for the Government to delegate this administrative responsibility to people other than those who, finally, are accountable to the public for it.

Section 26, which also seems to worry our friends of the Official Opposition, concerns the by-laws which will be passed by the Institute. The responsibility always comes back to the Government in the end, but, in any case, I believe that this type of provision is quite common and has already been applied to nearly all the Crown Corporations established to this date.

As we all know, this is not done regularly or routinely. It is the kind of unusual action which must be warranted and which in any case has not been the current practice these last few years, namely that the Government should issue Orders in Council which go against the by-laws of its own corporations, institutes or agencies.

I therefore do not share the concern of our friends opposite about the methods or the relationship between the Government and the Institute. I believe that the Canadian public feels the need for a group specializing in these matters which affect all of us. The Canadian public needs more information, and we do expect to obtain data of a less complex nature than those which come to us from all kinds of sources, especially foreign sources. This is one of the purposes of the Institute. Everyone is concerned by this issue. There are bonafide groups from all across the country which certainly want to have access to such an agency. In particular, I know hundreds of students who are concerned by the issue of international peace and who will certainly want to use the data, the library facilities and all the information compiled by the Institute.

In such wide-ranging negotiations, Mr. Speaker, the way a country is knowledgeable and familiar with the issue at hand probably weighs more heavily than the sheer number of its population or its political views. It is in that sense that, in my opinion, with such an institute, Canada will play a much more significant role than we would expect in terms of its current political, demographic or economic power. If our politicians on both sides of the House really know the issue inside out and can count on applied research done by experts totally dedicated to this cause, we as a country will certainly have greater influence on the international scene and more input in drafting our own defence and peace policies.

A lot of energy is being spent right across the country in the quest for peace—we know that some people are deeply committed to that endeavour—and the various groups will finally discover the kind of outlet they need—not within but close to the Government—to exchange ideas, air their views and propose their own solutions. Those discussions will certainly be launched from coast to coast and be of great use to all those who have public responsibilities. In that sense, I am glad to see that our colleagues opposite are generally favourable to the establishment of the institute. Once in Committee, they will have every opportunity to debate at length the various aspects that bother them, but I would hope that they will not tie up the proceedings by arguing about insignificant details. I know that our NDP colleague intends to introduce a series of amendments. Since the institute will not be the exclusive realm of the Government, because the main issue is much more important that any political faction, I am convinced that the proposed amendments will be given due consideration.

On the other hand, we should not attempt to come up with an organization so far removed from reality that we would defeat our own purpose. I heard the Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) insisting that the institute must be independent and, in the same breath, urging that it be consistent with our national goals. How can he reconcile that? That is what he said, and the blues are there to prove it, but I can see that it is not going to be easy. They also said that the institute must be accountable. Well, Mr. Speaker, that should not cause any problem since an annual report will be tabled in the House and, as we all know, such reports can indeed be taken under consideration since they are automatically deemed to be referred to the appropriate Committee. In other words, the members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence will have all the time in the world to scrutinize the reports of the institute.

This is a new procedure, of course, so perhaps it slipped the mind of our colleague from Yellowhead, although he is usually aware of the intricacies of our Standing Orders. As a matter of fact, if he were to sit on the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, he would certainly be in a position to read the annual reports and insist that they be gone over with a fine comb during Committee proceedings.

I have no qualms about the financial accountability of the institute. For instance, he spoke about two models—an instrument of internal information and an instrument of external information—and said that those were the only possibilities, yet he concluded that we are trying to have a little bit of both. In fact, Mr. Speaker, if we can at last establish a direct link between the people who are genuinely interested in this cause and who often are experts—some of them may be self-appointed experts—and the institute first, then with Parliament and the Government which will certainly act upon the recommendations of the institute, I think, Mr. Speaker, that that would complete the full circle. I am therefore convinced that, by operating along the lines proposed in this Bill, the Institute will certainly influence Government policy and the views of the Opposition, and this will be important. The Institute will be at the nerve center of all the activities related to the quest for peace and disarmament and actually everybody will benefit from it. As for the groups, and I know that the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead has probably met with hundreds of them which are concerned with disarmament, they always feel somewhat at a loss when they have to gain access to the system. I for one, I believe that the Institute can certainly be a window opening on the system with a capital "s" since some of these groups now deal with the Department of National Defence while others call on the Department of External Affairs without really knowing who is mainly responsible for such matters in the system. In this regard, the Institute will certainly be an access to the system for all these groups and individuals.

These groups will also certainly be useful to the Institute. I am certain of it. The Bill mentions the possibility of having research work farmed out or of using the results of research carried out by others, and there are about fifteen groups in Canada which are particularly interested in research in this field. The Institute can certainly use them. Finally, the Institute will be able to work in co-operation instead of always looking for confrontation.

The Members opposite claim to be against confrontation, but, to this date, I believe that in the quest for peace, there often is a high degree of confrontation. We know that there is a communications gap, especially where the pacifist groups are concerned, even though they often pursue the same objectives as we all do. The fact that the Institute will distribute information, develop ideas and communicate with these people will certainly bring about the new consensus we all need. I believe that our energies must be gathered together, and the focus of this concentration will certainly be the new Institute.

Mr. Speaker, I am more than happy to see that the commitment voiced in the Speech from the Throne is on the point of becoming a fact and that we are finally going to be able to pass this Bill with the co-operation of our friends opposite within the next few weeks. I am convinced that, in committee, with the suggestions put forward by both sides of the House, we shall be able to finalize the text of the Bill to make it as acceptable as possible to all without taking anything away from the very concept of the Institute. We already agree on what the purpose and the powers of the Institute should be. All that remains to do is therefore to work out the administrative details.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the House is dealing today with a subject which will certainly interest today's generation, as well as all future generations. In fact, the closer we come together, the greater the degree of confrontation there is and the more we look for some way to break the deadlock. This Bill represents a commendable effort on the part of the Government, and with the support of the other political parties, we can all do our share and contribute to the debate. I am convinced that the originality of the studies and the Canadianization of solutions will contribute to the international exchange of views. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I await impatiently the opportunity to examine each section of the Bill in committee. I am convinced that we shall be able to arrive at a peaceful compromise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Questions and comments.

• (1230)

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member indicate for the benefit of the House whether there is a model for this institute to follow? Is there another type of institution in the world that would be the Hon. Member's model for the Canadian version to follow?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to the Hon. Member that the Government has selected a model with special powers which would meet our expectations as a Government, Parliament and a country. Not being an expert on such institutes, I can only suggest that what the Government is proposing here is neither the internal nor the external models described by the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), but a sort of bridge between all interested parties. Although I am not aware of such a model, I am sure it does exist; we would have to ask our researchers to find out.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member indicate whom he would feel might be a suitable chairman for the new peace institute?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: I am not qualified to say who might be a suitable candidate to chair such an institute, Mr. Speaker, but I know for sure who would not be suitable.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today proposes to develop a Canadian peace research institute and it is certainly commendable. However, I fear that we are looking at another example of government hypocrisy. There is no doubt that research on peace and disarmament is necessary and the NDP will support it.

In addition to research, however, action and integrity on the part of the Government is also extremely important. One cannot advocate peace and disarmament and at the same time test the Cruise missile.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I just want to know if the Hon. Member is asking a question, making a comment or making a speech. This is a period for questions and comments.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, it is a brief comment to which I would like the Hon. Member to respond. One cannot advocate peace and disarmament and test the Cruise missile. One cannot advocate peace and disarmament and build components for nuclear weapons. One cannot advocate peace and disarmament and stand idly by while the Americans savage sister countries in Central America with what are illegal activities. Would the Hon. Member comment on that basic hypocrisy in government policy?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is giving me an opportunity to keep the record straight. In my view, establishing a Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security does not necessarily mean becoming irresponsible. To that extent, I submit that with his comments, the Hon. Member is trying to score cheap political points when he should be considering the bill itself.

Certainly, the Cruise missile problem could be examined by that Institute, as well as other arms-related problems, possibly in the light of American involvement around the world. In my view, the Institute could enlighten the Hon. Member and the whole Canadian people on those issues. I think the Institute will proceed with the studies the hon. member unfortunately did not have the time to make.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: I certainly do not think that the question of scoring points is the issue here. What is at issue is the apparent division between the Government's effort in terms of creating this peace research institute and the serious questions raised by the kind of activities it will be involved in and, on the other hand, its apparent attitude and activities in terms of permitting the testing of that Cruise missile. We in the House know the history of the proposals on the suffocation of nuclear delivery systems.

• (1240)

We are extremely concerned about the building of nuclear components in this country, the Government's attitude toward sister nations in Central America that are trying to free themselves from dictators and oppression there and the activities of the United States. These are not cheap political points, they are matters of extremely serious concern for the Canadian people. The Government would do well to respond in an effective manner to those concerns.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, the same comments exactly were made by the Hon. Member. Instead of criticizing, he should be happy that we took action along the lines he advocates. When he refers to the Cruise missile, or the suffocation theory, or the manufacture of nuclear components, he should welcome this initiative that he is apparently supporting. Hopefully, the Institute will yield enough influence, so that in the future that kind of thing will not happen anymore, but we should not be living in a dream world the way the Hon. Member would like to.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the Hon. Member have another question? Debate.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-32 is an extremely important and timely Bill. It is timely because of the widespread and growing fear and concern that is felt and expressed by thousands of ordinary Canadians that not enough is being done to move the hands of the nuclear clock back from midnight. It is also important because that fear and concern is justified.

Less than ten years ago I had the privilege of being part of an annual Remembrance Day service when it was possible to say with hope and gratitude that, for the first time since World War II, no wars were being fought anywhere in our world. Although the world was not calm, at least it was, for once, at peace.

Today, less than ten years later, the world is at war in far too many places. Tension, military confrontation and the concomitant risk of resort to the use of nuclear arms are greater threats than any of us can possibly believe we can afford.

The Bill is important because an institute for peace and security could contribute greatly if its mandate is designed properly. Imagine the progress toward true peace that effective research into conflict resolution and verification procedures alone could have. Canada is especially poised in the world as it sits today. We are one of the very few nations left with sufficient credibility around the world to produce such research and have it seen to be objective and intended purely for the development of international peace and harmony.

As Members of the House know too well, credibility is much harder to obtain than it is to lose. It is precisely because of that credibility that we have two obligations. The first is an obligation as a nation to do all that we can. An institute with a proper mandate is an important part of that goal. It is for that reason that we on this side believe that a Canadian institute designed to research ways to make peace happen should be created.

The second obligation arising from that first obligation is to make sure that as we debate this Bill and create this institute we are doing the right thing. It is to make sure that we are creating an institute that, by the very nature and words of its creation, can have credibility. That is why the issue that will be raised by our side consistently throughout this debate will be the question of the quality of the independence of this institute.

Let me divert and talk about the process of arriving at non-partisan agreements. Since coming to the House I have been privileged on two occasions to witness Parties in the House being able to resolve issues or resolve their own conflicts. One such case was referred to by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) when he talked about the way at least two Parties in the House were able to come to some agreement on the potential of a peace resolution. The other involved a decision by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) to allow the question of broadcast strategy to be referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture prior to the adoption of a firm position by the Government. I believe he did so because some of us told him that the Committee could do good work if it were given a chance. This, the Committee did. It adopted a unanimous report. Much of that report has shown up in the Minister's broadcast strategy.

I find it offensive that the opening comments of the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) contained an assumption in advance of any debate in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence that consensus is not possible. If that is the attitude, Mr. Speaker, that will be carried into the Committee, then, of course, consensus is not possible because it is that attitude which makes consensus impossible.

I want to put all my comments on the question of independence and the quality of research that needs to be done in the context that I believe consensus is possible. I believe consensus on this issue, among others, and perhaps on this issue above all others, is preferable to conflict. I suppose that is one of the reasons the process which led to the introduction of this resolution and the termination of a conversation between the offices of the Leader of the Government and the Leader of our Party concerns us, and why that conversation terminated so quickly. It should be clear to Members of the Government that an agreement worked out which would have overcome what is sometimes a natural tendency to mistrust each other would have been infinitely preferable.

Let me come to the Bill briefly, Mr. Speaker. Let me say a couple of words about what the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) had to say. I think what is instructive in his speech is that within five seconds of opening his speech today he thought it was important to refer to the creation of "this independent institute". It was his opening phrase and he returned to that phrase at least three times to my knowledge; the blues may show more. One cannot be surprised, therefore, as we read the Bill that has been tabled in the House and we know the question of independence is apparently important in the language of the Minister and that the question of the quality of the independence was part of the discussion between the Leaders' offices, if we ask where are the changes from the draft Bill to this Bill to guarantee that independence? They are not here.

The Minister indicated that the primary purposes of this Bill were, in his words, to increase knowledge of issues and to encourage public discussion. Both of those are positions we support. Both of those are terribly important these days. But, Sir, if the purpose of the institute is to do those things, then how can it be reasonable to argue that the institute should have an obligation to conduct research for the Minister at the Minister's suggestion? The Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) in her comments indicated that perhaps the answer was to abolish Clause 28. That may well be. But it must be clear to the Minister that we believe the Government should understand very early in this debate that it may ask this institute on behalf of Canadians to be one of two things, not both of two things. It can ask this institute to conduct research, to do issue-based research, to make comments to help Canadians and others perhaps understand these issues, or it can perform as a research arm of the Minister advising the Minister. But it cannot, with credibility, do both.

If the Secretary of State for External Affairs looks a little perplexed when I make this point, then let me take him back, through you, Sir, to a debate that occurred, again in the broadcast and communications committee, about two years ago on a similar kind of matter when the Government brought in its estimates of funding for the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council and, for presumably good reason, announced it was prepared to permit an increase in the funding of that Council provided that that agency began to do research into specific areas that the Government wanted researched. If the Minister wants to check, he will find that the hue and cry and furore that created in the academic community was unequalled in the five years previous, because the perception was created that the Government proposed to use an independent research agency to do the work the Government wanted done, not the work which the research community believed needed to be done.

We have exactly the same question here, Mr. Speaker. It is not going to go away. The quality of the credibility for all of us—for all the folks in the world—of the research that comes out of this institute will depend upon the degree to which it is perceived to be free from the possibility of direction from the cabinet and government of the day.

Let me go back for a moment to an example, if I may, Sir. In this world the greatest issue confronting us is to find a way to reduce tension. The way, in my view, to do that is to do everything we can in the area of conflict resolution. The quality of the work done on conflict resolution, if it is perceived as being dependent upon the Government or if it is perceived as being directed through Government policy, will suffer. It must be independent and be seen to be independent. Let us make that point over and over until it is adopted. Alone in the area of reasearch, if I may stay with it, I think there is a legitimate concern as to the degree to which this institute, for the best possible reasons, may impact upon other research agencies in the areas of defence, arms control and strategic studies.

It will be very important in committee, I say to the Minister, that the words he used which are different from the Bill, namely that this institute will have "limited inhouse research capability", be clarified. I may say to Members of the House—I say this with a sense of humour for the moment, not in a partisan way—that we are getting used to Liberals clarifying their comments. But I say seriously to the Minister that this issue of the degree to which this agency will complement and be guaranteed to complement in research terms is an issue. Some people outside as well as some people in this House have a fear that some other Minister, at some other time, will talk about the funds in this agency as meeting the Government's commitment to increased research as opposed to what we believe it should be—an independent, important and special project delivered with public funding through this institute. I never want to see anybody being able to turn to the research community of Canada and say: "We haven't really reduced funds for research in this country because look at the total, including this". That is a concern I have personally, Mr. Speaker.

While I am on that point and just before breaking for lunch, the Minister ought to know that in a way he has in fact introduced a note of confusion today. I may say it is a shame that Members of the Liberal back-bench chose to stop the practice of asking questions of the Minister today because that might have helped the whole debate. But the question will be asked of the Minister, if this agency is to do the work it is supposed to do, why does he talk about separate funding, doubling, for apparently separate work and verification procedures? Presumably if the Minister wants to argue that this institute may do what it wants to do, then presumably if it decides that verification needs to be studied, it must have that right.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

IMPACT OF TAXATION ON BUSINESSES

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, the results of a recent study by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business confirm that excessive taxation by all levels of government is driving businesses and jobs out of Canada.

Almost half the 300 smaller Ontario manufacturing firms contacted responded to the survey. Of those 16 per cent already have a plant or branch in the United States and a quarter of them have investigated such a move. John Bulloch warns that 75,000 manufacturing jobs are at risk in Ontario alone.

The businesses contacted believe that Canadian labour costs are at least 10 per cent higher than those in the U.S. They know that the cost of meeting labour standards is higher here and that municipal, business and payroll taxes greatly exceed those in the U.S. Excessive government regulation at all levels is at the top of the list. All levels of government share responsibility for taking the action required to keep businesses in Canada.

The federal Government has the responsibility to take the lead by reducing the onerous burden of payroll taxes and by seeking the co-operation of all levels of government to stop this drain of jobs into the United States.

THE MEDIA

NEWSPAPERMAN'S ALLEGATIONS ABOUT CHICOUTIMI

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that the people of Chicoutimi and the Saguenay area are incensed over an article published in the Toronto Star. A newspaperman, David Miller, has insulted them when he tried to make the English-speaking readers of that newpaper believe that Chicoutimi is the poorest city in Canada. It is dishonest to compare any city of Canada with Markham in Ontario which is allegedly the most prosperous city in Canada.

Why did that reporter launch an attack against Chicoutimi? The worst part of it is that, after checking the facts, it appears that all the individuals named in that article except one are nothing but figments of his imagination.

Finally, the article on Chicoutimi was entirely negative, the reporter giving no positive fact at all.

I wish to remind the Toronto Star that Chicoutimi is a university city with one of the best business schools in Canada. Its hospital complex is one of the most important in Quebec. A federal building of several million dollars will be erected to bring together 400 employees working in 20 federal departments in Chicoutimi. Moreover, Chicoutimi is a business city, having two large shopping centres with 250 shops and stores.

The people of Chicoutimi can rightfully demand apologies from the Toronto Star. They could demand a more balanced report which could easily show that Chicoutimi is on the verge of becoming—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

POTATO INSPECTION SERVICES IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to discuss an issue of utmost importance to the potato industry on Prince Edward Island concerning the inspection of potatoes. Potatoes exported from P.E.I. have achieved a standard of high quality throughout the world. It is this reputation which has made the potato industry so important to P.E.I. Good inspection practices for potatoes are essential to keep this reputation. Unfortunately the P.E.I. potato industry has been on a backslide due to the decline in the quality of these inspection services.

The reason for this has been the program of cross-utilization of inspectors which has been used over the past few years. Cross-utilization of inspectors, the use of table stock inspectors to inspect seed potatoes and vice versa, does not work. This is leading to disaster within the industry, as potatoes are being placed on the market which will damage P.E.I.'s reputation for high quality.

There is a continuing downgrading of inspection services on P.E.I. which is placing the industry in jeopardy. Not only has cross-utilization of inspectors hurt the industry, but the federal Government has indicated that it may be cutting back further on mandatory potato inspection. One government official has stated that the reason for further cutbacks in inspection services is due to the lack of available funds. I find this explanation totally unacceptable. The federal Government can find money for countless, less worth-while projects which are not nearly as important to the economy. The Prince Edward Island Potato Producers' Association has pointed out that the honour system does not work, that we need only look to Maine as an example of this, and that should these cutbacks occur we will certainly lose our world renowned status. I urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to study this serious situation surrounding inspection practices.

TRANSPORT

IRON ORE COMPANY'S DECISION ON RAILWAY SERVICE BETWEEN SEPT-ÎLES AND SCHEFFERVILLE

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, the Iron Ore Company has given notice to the Canadian Transport Commission of its intention to discontinue entirely its railway service between Sept-Îles and Schefferville.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly object to this decision of the Iron Ore Company to discontinue rail service between Sept-Îles and Schefferville because following a parliamentary committee meeting we were assured that the service would be maintained.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that in this intance we are faced with a major social and economic problem, and before the CTC has the opportunity to look into the representations submitted by Iron Ore it is of the utmost importance to hear what Indian band councils, as well as local unions and hunters' committees have to say about this problem, a local problem with an economic dimension. Such a decision is totally unacceptable.

Also, I suggest that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney), who knows quite well the Iron Ore people, should contact them to make sure that the railway service is maintained as long as all interest parties have not been heard. Because the Iron Ore Company had made a commitment to the Indians to provide them with this service, it would be unfair at this stage to accept its representations.

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PEACE TAX

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, two years ago the Queen proclaimed our new Constitution along with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This guarantees to all Canadians freedom of conscience and religion. Canada has long recognized freedom of conscience as a valid reason for refusing to serve in the military. In the two world wars many conscientious objectors found alternate ways of serving their country.

Today many Canadians are concerned about the spiralling arms race and Canada's part in it. They object to paying taxes for this insanity which threatens our world with nuclear holocaust. People who object to supporting the arms race with their taxes want a positive alternative which will neither do violence to their conscience nor destroy their reputation as good citizens.

I call upon the Government to establish a peace tax fund which could be used for such items as peace research and promoting international understanding. People who contributed would receive a 100 per cent income tax credit up to the percentage of their tax normally allocated to defence spending.

S.O. 21

A peace tax fund would not only make freedom of conscience a reality, it would also make a positive contribution to Canadian security and world peace.

TOURISM

EFFECT OF CUSTOMS SEARCH PROCEDURES ON INDUSTRY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, Canadian tourism is suffering at the hands of Canada Customs border officials. I have received correspondence from as far away as Florida where newspaper articles have slammed Canada Customs in no uncertain terms.

The St. Petersburg Times quoted Barry Pitegoff, Director of Research for the Florida Division of Tourism, who was harassed at the border. Ironically, he was heading to Charlottetown to present an address on hospitality at the annual meeting of the Tourism Industry Association of Canada.

In another instance, country music singers Shelly West and David Frizell have vowed never to return to Canada to perform. They were subjected to a strip search at a border crossing at Windsor, and were left embarrassed and devoid of personal dignity. Press coverage of this nature in the United States is doing untold harm to the Canadian tourism industry as a whole.

Reports claim that female customs officials tend to be the most severe with travellers. I am aware that the constant search for illegal goods must take place, but the situation is out of control. I would ask the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Smith) to speak with his colleagues at Canada Customs on this pressing and urgent matter. The present situation is counter-productive to reversing the sky-rocketing tourist deficit.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NON-ENFORCEMENT OF FAMILY MAINTENANCE ORDERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House a case which dramatically illustrates the serious inadequacies of the present system for enforcing support and maintenance orders.

● (1410)

Ms. Kerry Moore, who resides in Brandon, Manitoba, is owed more than $5,000 in maintenance payments by her ex-husband, money she has been unable to collect despite numerous legal proceedings which began in January, 1982. Meanwhile she struggles to support herself and her daughter. Her husband has failed to appear in court on more than one occasion, he has ignored court orders to make payments on his arrears, and at present his whereabouts are unknown.

Divorce is difficult enough without the added complications which result when one spouse does not meet his or her maintenance obligations. All too often women are the victims of this system and many of them, because of their financial circumstances, find it very difficult to pursue legal action. I regret that some have simply given up.

The Government has, at long last, indicated its willingness to establish a central registry which would keep track of all maintenance and support orders. That would be a good start. But as Kerry Moore's case demonstrates, it is not enough. Along with it must go the power to enforce the orders. Otherwise, single parents like Kerry Moore will continue to be caught between courts which tell them they have legal rights, and a system which offers them little means to protect those rights.

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT PRIORITIES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with priorities. During the last year western grain producers have been given a good indication of how low their priority really is with the Government. First the grain freight rates were raised by 20 per cent on January 1, and we can expect a raise of another 300 per cent in the next couple of years. Meanwhile the railways are guaranteed a 40 per cent profit on the movement of grain.

Branch lines are being abandoned, and each abandoned line increases farmer costs and decreases railway costs. Taxes on petroleum have pushed the cost of farm fuel and fertilizers up by 300 per cent or more. Meanwhile the oil companies are given billions of dollars in incentives and tax concessions.

Farm Credit Corporation interest rates have been increased to 14 per cent and 16 per cent. Meanwhile banks are increasing profits because the inflation and the real interest rate spread. Initial grain prices have been lowered.

The Government is unwilling to take a chance on farmers, while it risks billions of dollars on Massey-Ferguson, Chrysler, and other large corporations. Western grain stabilization money which could help many farmers survive sits idle while the Cabinet twiddles its collective thumbs. All these facts, Mr. Speaker, indicate that the Government's priorities are far from the prairie farm.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DENIAL OF ELIGIBILITY TO FORMER OVERSEAS VOLUNTARY WORKER

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, one of my constituents is a married civil engineer who selflessly undertook voluntary work overseas for a period of time which proved to be over a year. He received no remuneration for this work other than food and lodging. Upon returning to Canada and being unable to find work, this man learned that he was ineligible for unemployment insurance benefits even though he had accumulated many times the number of sufficient insurable weeks prior to his departure overseas.

Section 18 of the Unemployment Insurance Act stipulates that an extension to the 52-week qualifying period of 20 insurable weeks within the 52-week period prior to a benefit claim may be granted if the claimant proves to the Unemployment Insurance Commission that he or she was not employed in insurable employment during that time because he or she was incapable of working due to a prescribed illness, quarantine, or pregnancy, was in jail, was in attendance at a prescribed course of instruction, or was in receipt of temporary worker's compensation benefits. The qualifying period would thus be extended by the number of weeks a person was in jail, ill, or so forth.

I am suggesting that we treat this formerly employed Canadian at least as well as we treat criminals. The same fate awaits graduate students who study abroad for over a year, or teachers and professionals who are on extended sabbaticals. Is it just to extend the qualifying period for criminals, persons who already place a great strain on our national economy, and do nothing for individuals such as my constituent who contribute to our national and international well-being by volunteering their expertise in countries less fortunate than ours?

PENSIONS

PLIGHT OF SINGLE WOMEN PENSIONERS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, Canada's pension system remains a mess. Though criticized and debated for many years, this hard fact remains. Canadians do not have access to fair pension arrangements. Old Age Security with the guaranteed income supplement is the single greatest source of income for the elderly. Fully half of those over the age of 65 must accept income-tested GIS benefits because they do not have adequate pension income from other sources.

The pension system is failing to protect the elderly, and the burden is falling on women. Three-quarters of single pensioners receiving GIS, the poorest of the elderly, are women. Most have incomes well below the poverty line. Even with the Government's announced increase of $1.66 per day, the majority of single pensioners will receive a yearly amount which is over $2,000 below the poverty line.

The Government's response is shamefully inadequate. Changing the rules affecting occupational pension plans will not affect the more than 60 per cent of working women who do not have access to a company pension plan. The RRSP changes will benefit most those with an income averaging $86,000 per year, yet less than 2 per cent of women ever earn that amount in a single year.

The Government says that it has no money and that therefore pensions must wait. At the same time it issues Budgets which grant new corporate tax breaks worth $2.4 billion and provide full inflation protection for certain investments. In addition, the Budget of February 15 will provide tax breaks of up to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unfortunately the Hon. Member's time has expired.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND—CANCELLATION OF DASH-8 ORDERS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. However, in his absence I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance. I learned this morning that Richard Barton, the President of Time Air of Lethbridge, Alberta, has now cancelled orders for four of the Dash-8s which cost $6,900,000 each, for a total of $27.6 million. This news comes on top of an already threatened cancellation by Air Atonabee of another $34.5 million worth of aircraft, not to mention another possible cancellation by Norcanair of Saskatoon. In light of the fact that this threatens 2,500 jobs at de Havilland, not to mention the thousands of jobs in the spinoff industries across the country, what does the Minister of Finance intend to do about it?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is touching to hear the Hon. Member speaking for members of the Tory Party in this manner after their attack on de Havilland. The support that the federal Government has given to de Havilland to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars has been consistently attacked by members of the Conservative Party.

I would like to tell the Hon. Member that we have provided support to de Havilland and we will continue to provide support to make sure that this company is actively producing planes. Obviously, however, the Canadian Government cannot guarantee the intentions of every single company which is considering purchasing those planes.

Regarding the information to which the Hon. Member has referred, that is obviously a decision that a private entrepreneur can make on his own, for all kinds of reasons. He can decide whether or not he wants to put in an order for, or buy, a particular plane. That is a decision that is in the hands of the private entrepreneurs concerned.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, the Minister of Finance obviously does not understand that it was the Liberal Government that made the commitment to these aircraft companies that it would assist them if they placed orders for de Havilland Dash-8s.

Oral Questions

AIR ATONABEE—OFFER OF INTEREST TERMS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that an Irish company came to Canada and offered an interest rate of 7.5 per cent to Air Atonabee if Air Atonabee would switch their order over to that company, and in light of the fact that that particular Irish-built aircraft costs over $2 million less than the Dash-8, how could the Minister of Finance have stood in the House yesterday and, in answer to questions, said that Canada must respect its international commitments to other countries? If it is all right for an Irish company to offer 7.5 per cent interest rates to Air Atonabee, why is it not all right for the Canadian Government to offer 7.5 per cent interest rates to Air Atonabee?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is again interesting to hear that the Tories are recognizing that it is this Government which has guaranteed support to de Havilland, contrary to the attitude of members of the Conservative Party in that regard. I must remind my colleague that we are not only giving support to de Havilland but we are giving domestic support to a large number of firms through various fiscal incentives. We believe that the Dash-8 is an excellent airplane and that it compares favourably with other airplanes which provide the same kind of service. However, de Havilland must compete in the market.

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE INQUIRY

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, the Minister obviously does not understand that they are sitting with $100 million worth of orders and they are blaming the situation on the fact that they are members in the GATT agreement. These companies from offshore are coming in and disturbing the market where we need the jobs. The Minister says we are not in a position to help. If the Government is not going to help de Havilland in this situation, then the Government does not care. It is high time the Government honoured its commitment to these airlines when it said: "Order from de Havilland, the Crown corporation, and we as a Government will make the necessary incentives available in order that we will be competitive." Why don't you say it? You can't run an airline. You never could run an airline. Why don't you make some of those—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member should direct his remarks to the Chair.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, not only is the Hon. Member losing his cool, he is looking more and more ridiculous. The Conservatives have opposed support for de Havilland. This Government has provided support to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars. The Conservatives can talk out of both sides of their mouth as much as they want on this issue. The record is clear as to where they stand on support for the aerospace industry. They have attacked Canadair, de Havilland, and Bell Helicopter. The record is clear. We have supported the aerospace industry in this country to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars, and we are going to continue that support.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

MACDONALD COMMISSION'S APPROACH TO CHALLENGE OF TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology who seems to have found time to return to the House. Yesterday the Macdonald Commission produced a list of problems and choices, but little by way of solutions. In fact if McDonald's ran their restaurants the way Don Macdonald wrote his interim report, it would be all bun and no beef for the customers. Is the Minister happy with the ambivalent approach which Macdonald takes to the challenge of technology, or does he still support his submission to the Commission where he said that Canada must raise its commitment to research and development in a major way in order to create thousands and thousands of new jobs for Canadians?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, clearly I stand behind the submission I made to the Macdonald Commission. From what I have seen of the report, and I have not had the opportunity to study it in great detail, it does raise these issues. It seems to me the purpose of a report at this stage is to raise these issues for the attention and commentary of Canadians, those in public life, universities and industry. I believe the preliminary report will indeed serve that purpose.

Mr. Siddon: Some of us believe that, by the time Macdonald gets his act together, many of the solutions will be well on their way to accomplishment.

GOVERNMENT INVESTMENT IN RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister have an explanation for why, in the two years he has been Minister of State for Science and Technology, Canada's investment in research and development had dropped from 1.29 per cent of our Gross National Product to 1.28 per cent this year? According to Statistics Canada, it will only reach 1.24 per cent of GNP next year. That is totally at variance with his commitment, and his Government's commitment, to create additional jobs by increasing that investment to 1.5 per cent GNP by 1985, only a few months away?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, there are several points I would like to make in which the Hon. Member may be interested. First, the Government's commitment to research and development has been consistent. The Government's commitment is the only one that in fact has not decreased during that period. Second, during a recession it is unfortunate, but understandable, that in the industrial sector R and D suffers. We all know that. It is unfortunate, but that is one of the outcomes of any recession. It is one area where cuts are made. Third, the economic growth during the period, and this is the good news which I am sure the Hon. Member will want to hear, exceeded the anticipated rate of growth, and hence the percentage of R and D as measured as a percentage of GNP obviously declined.

BANKS AND BANKING

BANK OF MONTREAL—CHANGES IN EXECUTIVE POSITIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It concerns some very serious changes that are taking place in the managerial level of the Bank of Montreal. Yesterday we learned that the Government has given approval for upwards of 50, 60, and perhaps more positions in that Canadian bank to be taken over by American citizens, including the chairman of the bank, who is an American citizen and who recently said of the Bank of Montreal: "The bank is no longer a Canadian bank with international appendages. It is an international bank that happens to be based in Canada." Is the Minister concerned that this Americanization of key positions in that bank will lead to banking decisions being made in Canada that are not in the national interest of Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. I will give a little explanation. The Bank of Montreal has indeed become a very important international institution. In that sense I certainly welcome the fact that Canadian financial institutions are going to be able to take on other institutions on a world-wide scale. This country can afford large institutions that are able to compete around the world.

As to knowing whether decisions would be made contrary to the national interest, I remind my colleague that banks in Canada are very heavily regulated. They are supervised by the Superintendent of Banks. Also, they are in constant contact with the Bank of Canada.

As far as management in that institution is concerned, at the present time there are 196 officers in Canada with the rank of vice-president or higher. Out of that number, 19 are non-Canadians, including 12 Americans. In posts abroad, there are 15 Canadians in senior positions. I am not nervous about there being 19 foreigners working for the Bank of Montreal in Canada. There are 15 Canadians working abroad for that bank, in senior positions. This is 19 out of 196 positions. We should let those institutions try to recruit the best people for the job, realizing that there are people in Canada for those jobs, as 90 per cent are now Canadian citizens.

INVESTMENT IN UNITED STATES BANK—LEGAL CONSEQUENCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada will certainly be reassured to learn that a Canadian bank operating abroad has Canadian people in key personnel positions. The Minister says that as though we should be surprised. Most of us would take that for granted.

The Minister knows the Government has given approval for a whole batch of additional Americans to take on senior positions in the bank. Since he is not concerned about the decisions being made by the bank, I would ask about its current plans to invest some $700 million in the United States to take over the Harris Bank in that country. Will the Minister confirm that, if this operation is successful, the Bank of Montreal, allegedly a Canadian bank, in all of its operations abroad will be subject to American law?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking for a legal opinion. He knows that under the rules I cannot give a legal opinion in the House.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE ON EXTRATERRITORIAL APPLICATION OF U.S. LAWS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am not asking for a legal opinion. I had hoped that the Minister of Finance, who obviously did some homework in anticipation of this question, had looked into this crucial question, because 80 per cent of the profits of the Bank of Montreal come from Canadians. We expect that bank to operate according to Canadian law, not according to U.S. law.

• (1430)

Will the Minister assure the House that he will look into this matter, and if the Bank of Montreal has managed to take over this U.S. bank, will he confirm that it will be subjected to U.S. law, not Canadian law? If this has not yet happened, will the Minister give us his assurance that the Government of Canada will take steps to stop the Bank of Montreal from moving into this kind of U.S. operation and ensure that Canadian banks, with Canadian money in them, will be operating according to Canadian law?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell my hon. friend that he knows, or should know, the position of the Canadian Government about extraterritorial application of legislation, particularly American law. We have taken a consistent position in that regard over the years.

As far as asking for particular legal opinions is concerned, he knows that this is not permitted under the rules. I can assure him that indeed I have examined the situation and I am not going to take any steps to prevent the takeover of the Harris Bank by the Bank of Montreal. I believe this is a development which is a normal part of business and one which should be encouraged in terms of building strong multinationals in this country. I am not leaving the multinationals only to foreigners and foreign countries.

Mr. Broadbent: But subject to American law.

Mr. Lalonde: We should have strong Canadian multinationals based in Canada, and I will support such developments if they happen.

AIR TRANSPORT

PURCHASE OF EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS BY CANADIAN PACIFIC

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the widespread interest and concern over the Canadian Pacific takeover of Eastern Provincial Airways could the Minister tell this House whether, before the sale or the purchase was announced, he had conversations with top officials at CP and what assurances were given that the service in the region affected by EPA would be continued and there would be no displacement of jobs?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is quite right, that the purchase by Canadian Pacific of EPA is a very important step. We want to make sure that there is every protection of the interests of the Atlantic region. As we understand it, the commitment by CP is to maintain the headquarters and maintenance facilities in the Halifax region, and to maintain EPA as a full subsidiary. It will not be merged into the normal operating lines of CP itself, but will provide a subsidiary feeder system, and the full maintenance and activities will be retained in the Atlantic region. That, of course, will also be part of the examination the CTC will have to undertake when it approves the sale, as it must do under the National Transportation Act. That will be a proper opportunity for any conditions like that to be completely and quite clearly finalized as far as that sale is concerned.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION HEARINGS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that answer. However, would he just go one step further? In terms of my question, he did not quite touch on the assurances which were given to him or his officials. Were the assurances given by the President of CP, at that level? And because of the public interest affecting such a large area of Atlantic Canada, would he expedite whatever hearing procedures there are before the CTC so that there can be public input at that hearing?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should explain that I was out West when the announcement came, so I did not talk directly to the CP officials. However, officials of my Department did, and did report to me that, in fact, there were very clear commitments. I should say as well, Mr. Speaker, because of the interest of the Hon. Member, that one of the advantages of that particular purchase is the commitment by CP to invest substantial amounts of capital in the refitting of the EPA fleet. I believe the Hon. Member knows, because he has raised it in committee, that there has been some concern expressed in the Atlantic region about the equipment problems. CP is now prepared to invest money in its upgrading. However, we will make sure that those hearings are proceeded with as rapidly as possible. As the Hon. Member knows, if there is any question of public interest, then the CTC has a right to call public hearings in that respect.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE PAY-OUT TO FARMERS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. The Minister, I am sure, is aware that farmers enrolled in the Western Grain Stabilization Act are presently in the fields making an effort to produce grain and food for a hungry world. Many of those farmers, Mr. Speaker, are unable to secure the credit or the money to purchase the needed inputs for production. They do not have that ability because of falling grain prices. Is the Minister prepared, today or tomorrow, to bring in an amendment to the Western Grain Stabilization Act, which can be passed, in order to trigger a pay-out from the $1 billion fund?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I certainly share the Hon. Member's admiration for the work of western farmers. I was in his province yesterday and fully regarded the intense activity in which those farmers are engaged. I would say to the Hon. Member that this Government equally respects that activity. We are considering changes to the Western Grain Stabilization Act and, as soon as Cabinet has had a full opportunity to look at it, I know that the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board would be in a position to make an announcement. However, obviously there would have to be full cabinet consultation before that takes place.

REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, on April 5 the House Leader for our Party said that we would pass seven Bills for one so that the Government could clear the Order Paper to bring in this legislation. The President of the Privy Council on April 5, as reported at page 2763 of Hansard, stated: "The Government is responsible for the House business". I ask again, will the Government, which is responsible for House business, order that business so that the producers of food for a hungry world will have the ability to do what they are best at—producing grain?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. House Leader said in the first week of April, we are always pleased to have the Opposition make offers of co-operation. It happens so infrequently that it does catch us sometimes by surprise. However, the fact is that we are always open to overtures of that kind.

As I explained in my first answer, the matter is very much a priority with our Government and very much a priority with Cabinet. As soon as we are in a position to complete the quite complicated discussions about what is the best and most effective way of dealing with amendments to that Act, they will be, I know, announced by the Minister of State.

IMMIGRATION

RECRUITMENT OF FOREIGN EXECUTIVES BY BANK OF MONTREAL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister knows that the Bank of Montreal in the last few years has recruited two dozen or more senior executives who are non-Canadians. It also has authorization from the Minister's Department to recruit another 25 or 30 people. Given the fact that the Government of Canada, and the provinces, in recent years have spent tens of millions of dollars for post-graduate studies at our universities, turning out thousands of economists, graduates in business administration, and chartered accountants, many of whom cannot find jobs, will the Minister explain why his Department has been so generous in giving the Bank of Montreal permission to bring people into the country? That is the kind of generosity which no other company in Canada has been able to get.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be accurate to characterize this as some extraordinary generosity. The Hon. Member, I hope, will recognize that the bank is engaged in international activities. If we expect to employ Canadians abroad in the bank offices which are undertaking those activities outside the country, it is reasonable to expect that we should have some people entering the country from outside to take positions in Canada as part of their regular career development. If one were to look at the balance between the number of Canadians working abroad for the bank and the number of foreigners who are working in Canada in the bank, you would not find it was particularly favourable to the entry of foreigners, on balance.

The fact is that we have here an international operation which employs Canadians outside the country and we should, I believe, expect it would be natural that a reasonable number of foreigners would be operating within Canada as part of the career pattern they are following in the international activities of the company.

PERMISSION GRANTED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister knows that the Bank of Montreal is neither the biggest nor the most profitable bank in Canada, and the other banks have not followed this procedure. I say to the Minister that what we are looking at is not just the granting of temporary employment positions, but permanent employment positions. The Minister and every other Member of Parliament have had requests from constituents, from small-business people who have asked permission to bring people in and have been turned down. The Department has said that if there is a Canadian who can fill the job, it will not give permission. Why does the bank receive the kind of permission which no other company or individual in Canada has been able to get?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are other companies which make use of the same kind of provision.

Mr. Blenkarn: Not very many.

Mr. Roberts: I really cannot understand the basis of the Hon. Member's question. Is he really saying that it is desirable to have Canadians employed outside the country and absolutely refuse to have the same operation employ people from outside the country in Canada? Is he really suggesting that we can insist only Canadians be employed, both inside and outside Canada? There has to be a reasonable balance. If we expect Canadians to be employed in our banking activities outside the country, I think it is reasonable to accept that we are going to have to employ some people from other countries in the banking structure within Canada.

ENERGY

NEWFOUNDLAND OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy. John Turner was quoted yesterday as saying that under his leadership Newfoundland would get the lion's share of offshore revenues, and a more friendly reception in offshore talks with the federal Government. He also bragged that he had no battle scars. This statement may be clarified or changed today, Mr. Speaker, but can the Minister tell the House the Government's current position?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will wait for the clarification.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Domm: Great stuff, Jean.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, you are going to think we got together to write that.

OFFSHORE OIL INCENTIVE GRANTS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, recently the Minister of Economic Development questioned whether or not incentive grants are the best way of bringing in offshore oil. Can the Minister clarify the confusion this conflict is creating in the minds of the Canadian people, with his Cabinet colleague's statements on the one hand and the Government's position on the other?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the grants were established in the NEP so that it would be possible to Canadianize the oil and gas industry in Canada. That was the only mechanism available to give more grants to a Canadian company than to an international or multinational. You cannot do it by tax incentive because it is not permissible under the law. That is why we went with the system of grants.

If you want to depart from that system, Mr. Speaker, you more or less sacrifice a big aspect of the NEP, that of Canadianization. That is why it is the policy of the Government to carry on with the PIP grants.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): And frontier development.

TOURISM

GOVERNMENT FUNDING—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates to a statement issued this weekend by the Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism. He said: "If the tourism industry gets more bitchy or complaining, it will be hard to persuade the Cabinet to continue this current level of funding". It seems to me that a stupid statement like that qualifies the Minister to join the group of Liberal leadership candidates. Therefore I ask the Prime Minister if it is government policy not to allow the industry to voice its concern in public. If not, will he ask the Minister to withdraw that silly statement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the statement, but I will gladly take notice of the question and try and see what was said.

TAX ON ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): The Minister of Tourism may not like it, but I will raise a concern by way of a question to the Minister of Finance. The major concern facing the tourism industry is cost competitiveness, which last year alone resulted in a staggering $2.1 billion deficit. Will the Minister consider allowing hotels, restaurants, and tourist resorts to buy liquor and beer tax free? According to most studies this would not only help stimulate the industry but create a greater net return to the government Treasury? Would he consider such a move?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

NEED FOR FORESTRY AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He and his colleagues often stand up in this House and brag about how well their job creation programs have worked. The city of Port Alberni has tried all of the Government's job creation programs, including NEED, EBAP, CCDP, CRP, Canada Works, and Summer Canada. We have even had an ILAP program. Despite the best efforts of the community, we still have 3,000 people on unemployment insurance and 2,500 people on welfare in the Port Alberni Valley.

Will the Minister now tell the people of that area what plans the Government has, beyond these short-term job-creation programs, to reduce dependency on UIC and welfare? Will he indicate if he is prepared to open negotiations with the Province of British Columbia on a forestry agreement so we can get people back to work in that industry?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have undertaken discussions with most provinces about economic regional development agreements. We certainly are quite ready and willing to sit down with the Government of British Columbia also. Agreements have been signed with a number of provinces, and in some other provinces they are under negotiation. The same rule applies to British Columbia as to any other province.

Mr. Miller: Obviously one of the suggestions from a forest community is to see people go back to work in reforesting the land, Mr. Speaker.

VOLUNTARY EARLY RETIREMENT POSSIBILITIES

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue a question asked by my colleague from Hamilton Mountain yesterday. Some 1,400 people in Port Alberni indicated they would be interested in early retirement through the Labour Assistance Benefits Program. Will the Minister consider looking at the possibility of early retirement at age 60 on a voluntary basis, and what mechanism he can provide people in the age bracket of 55 to 60 who are unable to find work or get job retraining?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Hon. Member's question is really directed to the possibilities of ILAP adjustment relating to workers in situations he has described. These matters are before Cabinet at the present time, and I think he can expect an announcement forthwith.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST THAT SUBSIDIARY OPERATIONS BE PRIVATIZED

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance. If the Minister has had an opportunity to go over the financial statement of Canadian National Railways he will note that everywhere the railway operates in competition with private industry, as in the hotel, trucking, and express businesses, it loses money. Given that, can the Minister tell us why the Government does not direct the CNR to privatize its hotel, trucking, and other operations which cost the corporation and the Government money?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the CNR, along with other Crown corporations, has been contacted by me to discuss how to provide adjustments relating to various subsidiary operations. Their boards of directors are addressing this question at the present time. I would be quite happy if the Hon. Member wished to attend the committee, I think it is this afternoon, to discuss it. We could do so with more length, more leisure, and more edification than we can in Question Period. I invite him to join us this afternoon.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, can we take it that it is the policy of the Minister and his Government that the CNR will get out of these money losing businesses and turn them over to private corporations which will operate them at a profit? They only lose money because they are so inefficient and poorly directed. The hotel operation, for example, is a disgrace and, as the Minister knows, has been for some period of time. The Minister knows we have been losing money for dozens of years on CN hotels. Why do we still operate that business?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to draw to the attention of Members of this House that this Government most often shares a different point of view from the Hon. Member. We believe that there are often very good reasons for supporting a transportation service which is vital to the economic development of a particular region. I would draw to his attention the great importance of the maritime freight rates where the Government of Canada supports a major subsidy program for the railways. That in itself is a major source of jobs and economic development. I hope the Hon. Member might talk to some of his colleagues from the Atlantic region and learn something about how valuable the support of transportation services really can be.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CHARGE IMPOSED FOR RECEIPT OF GOVERNMENT MAIL

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Last Friday I was approached by a very irate constituent. He had been charged 10 cents by the Post Office before he could get his government cheque. It was explained to him that this was charged because the letter was non standard mail. When he asked why it was non standard mail it was pointed out to him that his postal code was not evident in the window of the envelope. When and why did the Post Office decide to charge this so-called double deficiency charge on benefit payments sent out under government programs?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised by the hon. member's statement. I had always thought that the cheques issued by the Canadian government bore the proper postal code. I am going to verify this, but I would be extremely surprised if indeed these government dispatches were not correctly addressed.

[English]

NON-APPEARANCE OF POSTAL CODE ON SECURITY CHEQUE ENVELOPES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Did the Post Office inform her that all benefit recipients would be subject to this double deficiency charge every time the postal code happened not to appear on the face of the envelopes?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it did not come to my attention, but I will check with officials.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

DRUG INDUSTRY—PROPOSED ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It is with regard to the proposed royal commission on the drug industry. Has the Minister in fact been planning such a royal commission? If so, when would that royal commission be reporting? In the interim, will the policy on generic or no name drugs, which had been enunciated by the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, apply?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are planning a commission. It has not been announced yet. I will release details when that announcement is made.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON GENERIC DRUGS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. When her predecessor considered the question of no name or generic drugs, he had a plan whereby there would be a longer period of time on a payback for companies that had developed drugs. Is that policy, which her predecessor announced prior to her assuming the porfolio, the policy of the Government, or has she backed off from that policy as well?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, obviously the commission will be looking at all facets of it. Until the recommendations come forward there will be no changes in policy.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Government House Leader. Would he consider bringing forward amendments to the western grain stabilization fund before the Easter break? If he would, we would be prepared to sit this evening, and perhaps again tomorrow evening if necessary, in order to pass it.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will consult with the Minister of Agriculture. I think I will be in a position to give the Hon. Member an answer when we come back after the recess.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GASOLINE CONTENT REGULATIONS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. The United States is considering putting further restrictions on, or even banning, the use of leaded gasoline, because the EPA has estimated that approximately 12 per cent of Americans are switching from the unleaded form to the leaded form due to price factors. Is the Minister familiar with the number of people in Canada who would be switching from unleaded to leaded gasoline because of price? What sort of compliance factors do we have in Canada for the regulations that are now in place?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the practice of switching comes under the responsibility of provincial Governments. I raised that matter at the last meeting of Environment Ministers in Winnipeg. It is a subject of continuous examination. It is my intention to raise it again next fall, to ensure that the practice is kept under control and ultimately reduced to a minimum.

ASSESSMENT OF COMPLIANCE WITH REGULATIONS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. I appreciate that there are provincial controls in terms of the regulations. However, certainly there is a federal interest and responsibility in terms of the concentration of lead in the atmosphere, and the total effect. Would the Minister consider asking the advisory committee which he appointed in December, 1983, or in fact the Department of the Environment, to undertake an assessment of the amount of compliance with the regulations which are in place now?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first we must assess the exact extent of the problem. That is a matter for the provinces to establish and convey, hopefully at the next meeting of CCREM. If that does not become the case, I will certainly consider the alternatives.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville on a supplementary to a previous question.

REQUEST FOR HOUSE LEADERS' MEETING ON INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Government House Leader. In reply to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain he said he would consider this after Easter. In view of the plight of the prairie farmers who are starting seeding very shortly, would he not consider meeting the two opposition House Leaders with a view to getting this amendment to the western grain stabilization plan passed before the Easter recess, perhaps by sitting this evening or tomorrow evening, so we can have a pay-out this spring?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the time to consult with the Minister of Agriculture since the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain asked the question. Therefore, the answer is the same.

INDUSTRY

ARTICLES PUBLISHED IN MONTREAL PRESS ON BELL HELICOPTER PROJECT

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, the Minister of Finance answered a question that was put to him by my colleague from Etobicoke Centre concerning the future of Bell Helicopter; the Minister merely took the opportunity to make a statement which I consider quite partisan.

The Minister of Finance is fully aware that an investigative study by Charpentier and Provost is making headlines in a Montreal daily newspaper. In light of commitments made by Bell Helicopter and in light of requirements stated by the Government—and I would like to state unequivocally that I am most interested in the success of this business venture—could the Minister of Finance, with a view to giving complete information to all Canadians, make an assessment of the study conducted by the authors of these articles published in a Montreal newspaper, articles which seem to me to be quite negative as to sales projections? In my view, this would be the best way to reassure the people of Quebec concerning the future of Bell Helicopter.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not make any partisan statement yesterday. I have simply put into the record the approach and the position stated by the Progressive Conservative party's official critic for industry. The critic, who appeared in various interviews on television and other media, has stated on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party a position which is quite negative concerning the Bell Helicopter project.

The Hon. Member could look up quotations on this matter, and if he is too embarrassed to ask, I will be very pleased to provide them to him. He will realize that the official position of the Progressive Conservative Party, as stated by the Official Opposition critic, was extremely negative regarding the Bell Helicopter project. I must say the Opposition was also very critical about Canadair on various occasions. I will be pleased to provide those references as well.

Conservative Members are now changing their mind because they realize that they have put their foot in it; they realize that they were being blamed by the population of the province of Quebec because of their attitude about both Bell Helicopter and Canadair.

Regarding the question put by the Hon. Member, I would invite him to read a speech which was to be delivered today by a spokesman from Bell Helicopter stating their answer to the allegations published in the papers.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REASSURE QUEBECERS AND OTHER CANADIANS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

The Minister is well aware of the fact that my party has made a point of speaking against Canadair and de Havilland's mismanagement; it now expresses the wish that Bell Helicopter be well managed. Never has my party denounced the idea and the objective of developing advanced technology in Canada generally and Quebec in particular. That is my party's position. I think the Minister should respond to these articles in a Montreal daily and state unequivocally whether there is any basis to these articles and whether the assessment made by the authors—who seem like responsible people—is appropriate. In order to reassure Canadians and Quebecers on Bell Helicopter's future, could the Minister deny these articles, unless he has no choice but to recognize that they are partly founded.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend should acquaint himself with the position taken by the official critic of the Progressive Conservative Party on industry, trade and commerce matters—

Mr. La Salle: On management!

Mr. Lalonde: —and I do realize how unhappy he must be with them, because the Progressive Conservative Party has systematically denounced the support which the government has given to Canadair—

Mr. La Salle: To the management! Senator Argue has given ample evidence of that and you know so!

Mr. Lalonde: —and the support given by the government to Bell Helicopter. The fact of the matter is that the Hon. Member is already complaining about the mismanagement of Bell Helicopter—

Mr. La Salle: That is not true!

Mr. Lalonde: —which is not in operation as yet. We know what is the position of the Progressive Conservative Party on this. Whenever the government is considering a major development or advanced technology project for Quebec—

Mr. La Salle: How dishonest can you get!

Mr. Lalonde: —his party has been against it, and the record is clear on this.

The Hon. Member, therefore, should find out about the positions of his own party generally, and read the statement which Bell Helicopter's representatives have made concerning this—

Mr. La Salle: I thought you were more responsible than that.

Mr. Lalonde: —to know exactly where his party stands on the Bell Helicopter project.

An Hon. Member: Listen to his reply!

Mr. Lalonde: This project will be developed in Quebec against the objections of the Progressive Conservative Party.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As a result of exchanges earlier, I think I must ask the Minister of Agriculture if he is prepared to advise the Government House Leader whether or not he has amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act ready—

Mr. Speaker: Order. On one day of the week there is a traditional question relating to House business. The Chair would entertain the question at that point, but it is not a point of order. Since we adjourn tomorrow, the Chair would be prepared to consider questions relating to House business tomorrow.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, since we are not sitting on Thursday this week, may I ask—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has indicated that it would be prepared to consider questions relating to House business on Wednesday instead of Thursday this week.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in order to prepare for the possibility of dealing with this matter tomorrow, I request the indulgence of the Chair in order to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he would be prepared to submit amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act to the Government House Leader and we will volunteer to meet tonight, tomorrow night or, if necessary, Thursday morning by special agreement.

Mr. Speaker: This places the Chair in a certain difficulty. There is a traditional way of dealing with House business. There are the usual channels by which information is transferred and discussions take place relating to House business. Regretfully, I must rule that this is not a point of order. It is not a question which the Chair will consider at this point.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

PRESENTATION OF THIRD REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the third report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments in both official languages, to which, pursuant to Standing Order 69(13), the Committee requests a comprehensive response.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by Ministers.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask whether the Minister of Agriculture would be prepared at this time to make a statemement on motions regarding the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is not raising a point of order. The Chair has called for statements by Ministers and the Minister has not risen.

PETITION

MR. BRADLEY—TAX ON TOBACCO PRODUCTS

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and honour to present a petition signed by some 14,700 constituents of southern Ontario who are extremely concerned with the effects federal taxes are having on the tobacco and related industries in this country.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide remedy, humbly sheweth that the federal excise tax placed on tobacco products is therefore a serious threat to employment and economic viability in the tobacco industry and the communities involved.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition you will find the petition in order and that you will exercise the discretionary powers vested in the Office of the Speaker of the House of Commons to allow discussion and referral to a committee at the earliest possible time in order that employment and economic viability in this region of Canada may be preserved.

NATIONAL FLAG OF CANADA MANUFACTURING STANDARDS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-234, an Act to establish standards for the manufacture of the national flag of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to ensure that a high quality of material, design and colour will be used in the manufacture of the Canadian flag. The objective is to reduce fading and other signs of wear which render our flags unsightly after a short period of use.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 148, 373, 472 and 605.

ATTENDANCE AT MEETING

Question No. 148—Mr. Crosby:

1. Did Mr. R.A. Bandeen, as President of the Canadian National Railways, refuse to attend the hearing conducted by the Canadian Transport Commission relating to the acquisition by Canadian Pacific Limited of the Dart shipping group and, if so (a) for what reason (b) was a legal technicality involved and, if so, for what reason did he not appear on a voluntary basis to explain relevant matters?

2. Was Mr. Bandeen paid fees or other remuneration by the CAST shipping group with respect to services provided as director, officer or otherwise and were any of the funds paid to him returned to the CNR?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. Mr. R. A. Bandeen, as President of Canadian National Railway Company, did not attend the hearing conducted by the Canadian Transport Commission relating to the acquisition by Canadian Pacific Limited of an interest in the Dart shipping group on the basis that both his appearance at the public hearing and the information requested of him, with respect to the CN/CAST relationship, was totally irrelevant to the terms of reference of a public hearing which involved the acquisition of an interest in a totally different shipping line, namely Dart, by a totally different railway company, namely Canadian Pacific Limited.

In addition, the subpoena contemplated that Mr. Bandeen would bring certain documents with him relating to the earnings resulting from CN's holdings in the CAST organization. It was Canadian National's position that, in addition to that information being irrelevant for the purpose of the public hearing, it was also confidential and privileged in nature since (1) CN's holdings/investments are in connection with private companies which do not disclose their financial statements and in which Canadian National holds only a minority shareholding interest and (2) that disclosure could only be detrimental and cause serious financial harm to these companies and their shareholders.

2. Mr. Bandeen was not paid fees or other remuneration by the CAST shipping group with respect to services provided as director, officer or otherwise.

COST OF COMMERCIALS

Question No. 373—Mr. Huntington:

1. To date, what was the total cost to the taxpayer or to any Crown corporation or agency of the production and screening of television commercials referring to Canadian National Limited which were shown on the CTV morning program "Canada AM"?

2. What (a) was the total cost of advertising on each morning program (b) was the total cost of production of each one-minute commercial (c) company or companies were employed to produce the commercials?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. All costs associated with placing television commercials on the CTV program "Canada AM" were paid by CN. The total for the two years 1982 and 1983 was $444,470.

The appearance of CN television commercials on "Canada AM" is part of a larger campaign that CN has had underway since 1968. The costs for any particular TV program are not readily available for the years prior to 1982 because earlier records were not maintained in such manner. However, the above sum represents a typical level of exposure that CN has purchased in recent years.

2. (a) Average cost per programme:

(b) All English language commercials produced for our advertising campaign each year appear in rotation on "Canada AM". The proportion of the total production cost relative to their exposure on "Canada AM" is $10,500 for each of the years 1982 and 1983. This is an average because expenditure is based on commercials having a two-year span of usefulness.

(c) SDA and Bob Harwood Productions.

REVITALIZATION PLAN

Question No. 472—Mr. Howie:

1. To the knowledge of the government what was the total cost of the downtown Moncton, New Brunswick, Revitalization Plan and did the government pay any portion of the cost and, if so (a) what amount (b) under what programs was the assistance given and, in each case (i) what amount was allocated (ii) how and when were assistance applications filed?

2. Did any department oversee the federal role in the project and, if so, which department?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): 1. The Revitalization of Downtown Moncton Plan dated July 27, 1983 was prepared by municipal staff. The federal government is not aware of the cost to produce it.

(a) and (b) Not applicable.

2. Not applicable.

FISHERMEN IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 605—Mr. Corbett:

Are there any licenced eel fishermen in New Brunswick and, if so, what are the names and addresses of such fishermen in (a) Queen's County (b) King's County (c) Saint John County (d) Sunbury County?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Yes (see attached list).

Following is a list of licenced eel fishermen in New Brunswick:

(a) QUEENS COUNTY DISTRICT #56

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Parliamentary Secretary when we might expect an answer to Question No. 759? I realize that it was only put on the Order Paper on March 26 but I would like to have the answer in time to deal with an adjournment debate shortly. If the Hon. Minister could give an answer quickly, we would certainly appreciate it.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I will bring that to the attention of the Minister to see if we cannot get an answer to that question in time for the Hon. Member's proceedings.

I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN INSTITUTE FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND SECURITY

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, this morning we had laid before the House our general support for an institute of this nature. We had indicated our reservations about the independence which this Bill appears not to grant to the institute proposed. I had come in my remarks to some concerns about research in general.

It seems appropriate, therefore, to refer Members of the House to an article in today's Toronto Star written by Mr. Adam Bromke of McMaster University. The very concern about this institute's relationship to research organizations is raised and very clearly expressed.

I left off referring to what I think is a confusion caused by the remarks of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and I would like to return to that briefly. The Throne Speech talked about the need for an organization to digest, disseminate and collate information. It had a second paragraph which talked about the Government's intention to increase its funding for voluntary associations and private groups. I think most members of the community read those two paragraphs as one, as part of the same organization.

I was confused, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure I am not alone, in fact I know I am not alone in my confusion, when the Minister in his comments earlier today referred to the Government's intention to proceed whith this Bill as it stands and, at the same time, increase funding for private organizations and double separate research funds for verification procedures. Clearly at some point the Government will have to answer the question as to what the relationship is between the institute and its research activities and private sector organizations.

I want to put on the record something that is of personal concern. I would hope that this institute will honour as completely as possible the words the Minister actually used even though the Bill does not use the words. The Minister said that this institute should have a limited inhouse research capacity. It is my personal view, and I hope we will be able to deal with this in committee when we get there, that it is important in terms of this institute's relationship with the universities and with the other research institutions of Canada that to the greatest extent possible this organization be a funder of research in Canada more than a doer of research. I think that is essential if the other research institutions are to believe that this institute is not in fact a competitor and a threat. I am confused by the Government's words in the Minister's speech. I make that point because I think it is essential that it be clarified.

Finally, in the couple of minutes I have left, I want to deal with a few points made by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett). She raised what I think is a most interesting point with regard to the apparent similarity of the appointments to the board of this proposed institute and those of the IDRC. The point she was making, I take it, was that while there may be some justification in the other operation for non-Canadian appointment, there may not be, in her view, that justification here. That is a point which had not occurred or been brought to me before. I think it is important. I think we will have to be very careful on that point in committee.

I was confused by the Hon. Member's comment that she was not worried about the total control of appointments to the board by the cabinet of the day, given her apparent willingness to allow the cabinet of the day to make those appointments. I think it is essential in understanding all of the concerns which the research community has, that we have and several of the organizations deeply interested in peace have, that if one is to understand the importance of independence, Mr. Speaker, then one has to deal directly with the degree of potential control, not just the degree of actual control that is available to the cabinet of the day with regard to this proposed institute.

I want to stress to the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam and to all Members of the House that here non-partisanship is of the essence. It is absolute in dealing with peace matters. I want to put right back on the record that I think the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam should rethink that concern.

It would be extremely useful if we could come to an agreement across the floor of the House to allow some body other than the Cabinet to have a deep and serious say, and preferably control on a consensus basis, regarding the appointments that are made to the board. I think that if Members were to understand the potential value of having the external affairs committee make those appointments on a consensus basis, it would be invaluable both for the institute in appearing to be independent, and invaluable for all of us in being able to say it is independent. If we can come to an understanding of that, at least we will have gone a long way toward taking what we all believe in its conceptual framework is an important and useful idea and making it what it really ought to be—an organization as non-partisan as possible to be of use in what I think we all believe is extremely important, the search through whatever means possible for an everlasting peace.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Questions or comments. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Blaker).

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the same references were made by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) and by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley). I am a bit confused about the concept of independence. If it is the intention of both Members to ensure the independence of a peace institute, the difficulty I have with that is that on the one hand both Hon. Members have expressed the view that that independence can best be guaranteed by recommendations, made, I take it, by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, as to appointments within the institute, or possibly by Parliament as a whole. My understanding is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had indicated to the Leaders of both Opposition Parties that a consultative process might be available. I am a little lost as to the specifics of how to appoint the chairman, executive director, and board of such an institution in a way that the Opposition might feel is non-partisan. I would encourage the Hon. Member for Don Valley West to express the mechanism in detail by which it might be done.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I will try to answer it in two parts. One is the concern we have about the proposed method of appointment, and then I will try to answer directly his question about what we believe would be better.

There is always a concern in terms of the Cabinet when by Order in Council appointments may be seen to be or may in fact be not as non-partisan as they should be. I think the Member would understand that. I think we are somewhat reluctant to accept the simple statement that the Leader of the other Opposition Party and the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition will be "consulted" as to whether that is good enough. On this issue we do not believe it is. What we believe ought to be done and what we should look for is a method whereby the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence could be asked to make appointments to the board on the understanding that the Committee had to operate on a consensus basis and not on a simple majority vote basis. We believe that out of the process of coming to agreement would come non-partisan appointments.

That is the process we believe should be used to make these appointments. The Hon. Member may ask whether Parliament could do that. I know of no mechanism that allows Parliament to do that as a whole. That is why I think we believe the committee should have that power.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, in this House the Conservative Party is on record as voting in favour of testing of the Cruise missile. The Conservative Party is on record as supporting the construction of components for nuclear weapons delivery systems. The external affairs critic and a number of other caucus members have publicly endorsed the position of the United States in Central America. Could the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) explain the contradiction of how the Conservative Party can in fact be supporting peace and disarmament on the one hand, while in fact in this House and on the public record it is supporting and endorsing activities which certainaly are not, in the minds of most Canadians, conducive to this nation's movement toward peace and disarmament? Could the representative from the Tory Party explain that contradiction?

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, we are also on record as supporting NATO. I presume the Hon. Member would go further in his comment and suggest, as he has argued before, that support of NATO is in conflict with the view we in this Party share which supports peace and disarmament. If the Hon. Member finds that there is confusion, I believe it is in his mind.

The issue for us, and I hope for the Hon. Member, is that whatever one's view about the appropriate defensive posture a country must take—and it is our view about NATO and some other positions—it is our firm desire to reduce tension in the world and to reduce the need to resort to military defence. That is the position which this Party has consistently supported. That is why we support this proposal, at least in its conceptual form. We believe deeply that we cannot simply attain disarmament or a lack of tension by saying that we want it. We have to do what we believe is necessary in the time and place. At the same time we have to find some way to create dialogue, a reduction of tension and a conflict resolution which will make it possible for all countries in the world to reduce their arms build-up and their reliance upon military measures.

I see no conflict, as the Hon. Member may, between our support for matters which relate to current situations of conflict and crisis and our desire to find a way to reduce the underlying tensions which lead to those conflicts. What we are saying here is that the importance of peace can never be over-estimated. We want to take whatever steps or measures we can to ensure that the institute created to inch us back, as the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) indicated, from the nuclear chasm will work. That is what we are trying to say today.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for a clarification of the word "independence". I have great concerns about this particular organization. I feel very strongly that it should go through, and I will be speaking on it in a few minutes. The independence I am worried about is that it be completely independent of Government Departments such as the Department of National Defence or the Department of External Affairs and that it functions independently in that way.

I am beginning to get the feeling that the Hon. Member is talking about political independence, that it be sort of non-partisan. I think it should be too, but I am wondering whether the Hon. Member is thinking about both kinds of independence, whether it be a Liberal thing, a Tory thing or something like that, or whether basically he is thinking about an organization that is quite independent of other parts of government in terms of coming to its own decisions. This kind of independence is crucial, and I think the other kind of independence can be easily worked out in the way we work out the Bill. However, there are two different kinds of independence. I would like the Hon. Member to distinguish between one or the other. Perhaps the Hon. Member could indicate whether he is in favour of this organization functioning without being dependent upon other organs or departments of government.

Mr. Bosley: I would be happy to try to answer the question. As I understand the system, Departments report to Ministers and Ministers are responsible for Departments. Therefore I find the concept of distinguishing between independence of Departments and independence of Ministries to be a null distinction.

If I may put it in a context which I know better, we believe that no Minister of the Crown of any political stripe, including our own, should have the right to tell the institute what it must research or to create an impression in the mind of the institute that it must do something in order to obtain the Minister's blessing.

If I wanted to put a parallel to the Hon. Member, it would be this one. For a series of extremely good reasons, we have over the years granted the Canada Council maximum possible independence from ministerial control, from governmental control and from departmental control, so that when it makes grants to people in the artistic community it is to the greatest possible degree seen to be acting independently of governmental, political or departmental control. I believe we are espousing that exact principle in terms of our proposals with regard to this institute. I repeat that we want this institute to be seen to be and to be independent of departmental, ministerial and political control, not for the sake of the government of the day but for the quality of research which will result given that independence.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I was not able to be here this morning to hear the opening of the debate because of other commitments. The Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley), in his few minutes of wrapping up after the luncheon adjournment, made a comment upon which I would like to ask him to elaborate. He may have done it this morning. If so, I apologize for asking him to repeat it.

He said that he would rather see this institute being a funder of peace research than a doer. Would he elaborate a little on that and indicate what are his concerns? I do not necessarily agree with his comments, but I would like to know his reasoning for them.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I want to be clear so that he knows I make no particular fuss about the institute doing some of its own research. However, I have a concern in terms of the academic institutions of the country, if the new direction for research is seen to be that the Government creates an industry which uses government research money to do research exclusively. My instinctive reaction would be that I think to the greatest degree possible we have two opportunities here. One is to increase the amount of money directed at "peace research". The second is to use that money to support institutions specializing in research by directing to the greatest practical degree possible the talent and resources to do the research and by asking the agency to do as much as it can in institutions which conduct research and to restrict its inhouse research activities to those areas where it has no other choice.

That is what I am trying to get at. I believe we would be risking support in the academic communities if we said that the Government's intention was to move its research funds exclusively into the area of inhouse research.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. For debate, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae).

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this debate because I feel there is a great degree of urgency in establishing this institute. On a number of occasions I have written to and spoken with members of the Government, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and so on, about the need for a very independent institute to conduct studies in peace and security. I am delighted we have finally arrived at the point where we can get around to establishing this institute. I hope there will be no difficulty and that in the next month or so we will be able to put it together and have it operating certainly by the summer.

I attended a meeting of 500 or 600 people in Toronto a couple of weeks ago at which United States Admiral Carroll was the speaker. He was asked about how much time he felt we had before a war would occur, or if a war would occur. His answer was that yes it would in about eight years and that the basic growth of very, very dangerous weapons and the attitudes of the two superpowers were such that this was a very real possibility.

This is something about which I have been very apprehensive. I find it difficult to accept that the House has spent so little time on this most important of all issues. We have a situation today where there are in excess of 50,000 nuclear weapons, nuclear warheads, that are pretty well distributed. There is a little more on our side than on the Soviet side, but theirs are larger ones. One way or another, there is an area where we have general parity. What I mean by general parity is that each side has the capability of destroying the other side almost completely and then being destroyed themselves. No one side could destroy the other side without they themselves being destroyed as well. That is the situation we are faced with.

There is in existence today something like 5,000 times the explosive power that was used in all of World War II. I simply do not understand those who say that we are not strong enough and need to build more arms. It is completely beyond my comprehension that we need more arms when we already have 5,000 times the fire power that was available in World War II.

We are told by some very eminent scientists on both sides of the Iron Curtain that we need to worry about more than just the explosive effects of these weapons. In total, these weapons have 100,000 times the destructive power of the weapons that destroyed Hiroshima. We have the situation of the explosive power and the nuclear fallout which, if the bomb did not hit Canada, would still kill about 12 million Canadians. More people from my own community of Thunder Bay would die than died in all of Canada during World War I and World War II. However, in addition to this, we are told by these eminent scientists that the effect of these explosions, even if only a small portion of them were used, would be to create a nuclear winter which would probably destroy most of the plant life in the northern hemisphere. Millions and millions of Canadians would then die from the cold and from famine. Civilization as we know it would cease to exist. Yet a retired American admiral, along with his friends, retired American generals and admirals, are saying that this can happen and that it can happen within the next seven or eight years. It can happen because the weaponry that is being built at this particular time can create a situation in which this can happen simply through computer error.

I would remind the House that as we sit here this very moment, a few Pershing II missiles have been installed in West Germany which have a six-minute to eight-minute time span between firing and destroying a target in the Soviet Union. The Soviets tell us that they now have weapons based six to eight minutes from the shore of the United States. We find ourselves in a situation in which a computer error could result in a mistaken firing which could result in return firing and a launch-on warning. This is the situation today and it is only beginning. It will become much worse. Shorter trajectory times and greater accuracy will be built into many weapons and the threat of a pre-emptive or first strike could cause the other side to strike in a crisis. These are the situations which exist today. It is possible that the world could be destroyed within 30 minutes.

It is absolutely essential that Canadians and people all over the world do whatever is possible to make sure that this kind of destruction is prevented. This is the reason why I support the need for this Bill. If we are to be successful as peace makers, then we must have access to good, solid, objective information. We should not have information from only one source like the Pentagon or another source like Soviet publications but we need good, solid information from all sources. There is an organization in Sweden called SIPRI which is set up to provide this kind of information. In the research I have done over the last three or four years, I have found that the information from that source has been very valuable to us in assessing the claims of both sides.

We have a situation where one side is saying the other side is superior and vice versa. Of course, all of the information available to me and the information from other sources like the Scowcroft Commission would point to the fact that there is no superiority, that we are in a situation of general parity and that now is the time to slow things down.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has done a great deal of travelling and has spoken to a great many leaders all over the world. He made a speech in the House on February 9 and came to the conclusion that there are about 10 major ideas which are common to the superpowers. We should begin to work with those common ideas. I will not deal with all of those ideas because I have only 20 minutes in which to speak, but I will mention two or three of them. One such idea is the agreement that a nuclear war cannot be fought and cannot be won. There is agreement that we must get rid of destabilizing weapons and there is agreement that the other side exists, will continue to exist and that there should not be an attempt to depose the other side. These ideas are very vital and were common threads which ran through all of the discussions the Prime Minister had with all of the world leaders including the leaders of both superpowers.

In order to make these common ideas work, we must know what we are doing. We must have access to good, independent information. It seems to me that there is a very direct relationship between the kind of thing the Prime Minister and others throughout the world have been attempting to do and the kind of thing that we hope to do with this Bill. I am particularly interested in seeing that, through this Bill, we set up an independent organization. To me, an independent organization means one which will not rely only on the Department of National Defence or the Department of External Affairs. An independent organization will not follow only the demands of those two Departments.

I would agree entirely with Members of the Opposition and particularly with the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) who said that from Clause 28 of the Bill, the word "shall" should be removed. I think the Prime Minister as well agreed with that. If not, the Department of External Affairs and the Department of National Defence could very well ask this organization to respond in a certain way or to do a certain study. That is a legitimate request, but certainly the obligation to do such a study will not, in my opinion, give the organization the kind of independence it needs. I think that the word "may" is probably more applicable to the situation.

I would disagree with the Hon. Member from the NDP who suggested that that clause should be removed entirely. I believe that the word "may" at least indicates that the Department cannot force certain things on this organization. If the clause were not included in the Bill at all, there might be some assumption that the organization could be forced by the Department to do things. I think it would be just as well to leave Clause 28 in place and replace the word "shall" with the word "may". I think that would give to the organization the kind of independence it needs.

I spent some time looking at what they are doing at the Swedish peace institute in Stockholm. I looked at the structure of that institute and I believe that this is a model at which we should all take a good look. That institute has established itself in a number of basic areas and, in my opinion, a number of things about the structure of that organization give it a great deal of independence and the kind of independence we would like to have here in Canada.

First, that institute is funded by the Government and not by the private sector. I would not object to private-sector funding for various peace institutes, but I think the institute to which the Bill refers must be funded by the Government partly because there is a need for credibility when dealing with both sides. If we are to study Soviet-American relations, we must be credible to both those groups. We must have an organization with that kind of credibility. If we are dealing with the Soviets, we will not be credible if the foundation is a legitimate one but is funded by large corporations from the private sector. It is important that we do it this way. It does not mean that other organizations, peace groups and study groups should not be funded by the private sector. This is one area where it is important that the funding come this way.

I may be running into some problems with the Opposition on this, but the Swedish Institute has an international board. It includes people from Sweden and also has an international component. I disagree with the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) who spoke about keeping this institute Canadian. I have had a great deal to do with the peace movement over the last few years, the last three years in particular. One of the dangers is the tendency to become pure, just to worry about what Canadians are doing, making sure that we are pure, not doing anything wrong and in no way contributing to nuclear armament, not worrying about what is going on outside.

I have had a great deal of concern about the testing of the Cruise. If this testing does not take place in Canada, it will take place somewhere else. It does not make much difference where it has been tested if a war should occur. It is important in terms of how we feel about ourselves.

It is nice to advocate that Canada be a nuclear free zone. We can feel good about that. However, if there is a nuclear war, we will be in the centre of it. It will come to us. If we declare that we are nuclear free, that does not mean we will not have to worry about the war.

I feel that Canadians are becoming a little bit too concerned about appearing pure rather than being concerned about preventing a war between the superpowers. Therefore, it would be a mistake if the board were to be entirely Canadian. It requires an international flavour. I believe that the structure of the board should include Canadians and a number of people from other countries. That is tremendously important. If we are serious about preventing nuclear war, we must have an organization with global concerns. We cannot solve the problem just by being pure. We have to be concerned about the two superpowers and how they can be brought together.

While we have talked about the structure of this organization, we have not talked about its role. Earlier I referred to the 10 points which the Prime Minister presented as areas where we could get agreement. Canadians have to focus on the nature of the two superpowers.

We are very close to the United States and know a great deal about it. Many of us worry about the present U.S. Government. We feel the worries would go away if the Democrats were in power. At least that is my feeling. Basically we understand the situation. We understand some of what has to be done to bring the two superpowers together. We do not have a good understanding about the Soviet Union. We do not understand them. Their ideologies are different from ours. We tend not to want to know very much about them, what they are like and what their Government stands for. We have a situation where it is impossible to destroy that Government. It is not possible to do very much to change that Government. We have to understand their Government and the people there.

I hope the institute is set up fairly soon because the situation between the two powers is critical. Basically they are not speaking to each other. There are some talks going on in Stockholm. They are going on not too badly, partly because the superpowers are surrounded by other powers, including ourselves. They are not really confronting each other in areas where they should be talking.

If we develop these studies, particularly in the area of understanding the superpowers, we can use this information to bring other middle powers together and develop a negotiating team which could work between the two superpowers to reduce the tension. This could be done along the lines suggested by the Prime Minister, beginning in areas of common interest, concern and agreement. There are the 10 points, and others could be added to the list. If we could learn how to deal with them, if we could have ideas through third power groups, possibly we could bring some kind of sanity to the two superpowers.

If we do not do this in the next few years, then Admiral Carroll and other knowledgeable people on the subject will be correct that a nuclear war, which has never occurred in the history of mankind, will take place and we will be destroyed. The stakes are so great that this is absolutely essential. Even though it is a small step, we should take it, pass this Bill and set up a good independent organization.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member quite closely. Several times he said how important he felt it was that the organization should be independent. Will he indicate if he feels in that context that it should be a government institution?

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I thought about this a good deal. I have been saying that it should be independent in the sense that it cannot be set up in such a way that the individual Departments, particularly DND and External Affairs which are the two most vitally concerned, have a strong influence on either the day to day or long-term operation. This is tremendously important. This is why I strongly support the Conservative amendment that will replace the word "shall" with the word "may". The problem that I see from the speeches we have heard today is that this could be done on a partisan basis. I do not want to see that. It does not have anything to do with partisanship. I do not see how we can set up this institute, without some government action. The point is that we have to do this together. The word "consultation" has to be worked as it has never worked before in terms of how we set up this organization. Who is on the board is terribly important. You can have the best structure in the world but if the people in it do not want to succeed, you will not achieve anything. That is terribly important. I believe, through the workings of the committee and so on, we can get to a point where we can be pretty independent in the way it is structured. Once it is set up on its own then I feel it is terribly important that it be set up in such a way that it cannot be influenced at any given stage. That is why I feel that word "may" is important. It is important to leave "may" in there. It should not be taken out as an Hon. Member suggested earlier, because if it is taken out there could be some suggestion that the word "shall', would be quietly implied. We know that the word "may" means that the organization itself can reject any suggestions of the Government. It seems to me that is the key point.

As far as setting up this institute is concerned, I believe one has to go along with the notion that there is an executive in every government. A Party which hopes, and I suppose expects, to come to power in the next little while is going to find that the executive has to act. However, I believe there is no difficulty in this situation if we are all concerned, and I know we are. I know Hon. Members who spoke this morning are very concerned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is taking a little too much time, in my opinion.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, on the question of this peace research issue being debated today, I would like to raise with the present speaker the matter of the conflict in Canada's role in Central America. Tension reduction has been talked about, but I would like to know the Hon. Member's opinion on how that conflict results, say, from the sale of Buffalo aircraft to Honduras that could be used for military purposes against Nicaragua, and the idly sitting by of the Government of Canada while the CIA and other paid apparatchiks of the U.S. Government mined the ports in Nicaragua? Canadians have failed to take a full measure of the responsibility—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I should remind him that questions and comments must be pertinent to the Hon. Member's speech. I do not see the relationship. I may have missed the point, but in any case would the Hon. Member clarify his question?

Mr. Skelly: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. I believe the previous speaker knows well that there are a number of key points where this Government has failed to take action which would reduce tension. Today Hon. Members opposite are attempting to put forward what would appear to be a worthwhile initiative, but will not provide some action which will demonstrate this Government's good wishes and goodwill in terms of establishing peace and tension reduction in the world. I would like to hear the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) explain that, and possibly explain as well the Cruise missile issue and the defence production material, where we are producing components for the Cruise missile.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not believe the Hon. Member should invite the speaker to introduce an entirely different matter into the debate. The questions must be pertinent and relate to the points raised by the speaker and not new matters. I do not feel I should allow the answer on this one.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed through you to the speaker. Would the Hon. Member tell us, please, whether he thinks, in terms of the all-important question of independence and non-partisanship, the endowment route would not be better than the year-to-year funding by the Department of National Defence and the Department of External Affairs? While he is answering that, would he perhaps tell us the reason for the sudden rush seemingly to get the Bill through before June 16? Why was it not brought in, in his view, months ago? Why are we suddenly being asked to get it through now quickly, in his opinion?

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the endowment part of the question, I believe the Hon. Member has a very good point. I personally would have preferred an endowment partly because one does not have to go from year to year on a set fund which has been established, having to go back to the appropriate Minister. I believe an endowment has some advantages and, personally, I believe that it is worth negotiating. I am not sure of the Government's view on this particular point. I feel there are some negotiable items here, but since I am not part of the Government to the degree that I can say, "This is the way we should go", I will just say that I feel this is something worth looking into.

Mr. Kilgour: Why the seeming rush to get it all done and through the committee before June 16?

Mr. McRae: I suppose if the issue had arisen a year or so before, and if the Prime Minister's moves had been made a year or two earlier—and I believe the Prime Minister's moves had a lot to do with a number of factors—I feel it would have been nice to get this thing going before. However, I consider that, having gone through all of this and having laid out these points, now is the time to try to get this particular piece of legislation through. It seems to me that there has been negotiation going on for several weeks on this legislation and other related matters. I still believe there is no great rush. I think the time available between now and the end of this sitting in June is more than adequate to deal with this particular legislation. I just do not see that this is being done in a rush. The Chairman of the committee was sitting here this morning and he indicated quite clearly that we could sit five days a week for a whole month, if necessary, and it may very well be. I believe the Bill is very simple, but certainly we should have a great deal of public input. The people of this country should be able to participate and there should be an occasion for a real discussion of this particular point. But I do not believe the time is too short.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the previous speaker to give us his thoughts on the internationalization of the directors of the board of governors. He seemed to make quite a point of that. Is that related to the role he sees Canada playing as the honest broker or mediator in trying to resolve the problems of East-West relations?

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I believe that is precisely what I had in mind. However, I do not mean that Canada alone is going to do this. It seems to me that we can participate. In the first place, just geographically we are sitting between the two superpowers. We are sort of the meat in the sandwich, if you will. It seems to me that we have some very strong reasons why we should play a role, and I believe that if we are going to play a role we must have good, solid, objective information. We must have good studies going on. I believe also that the international board will give us an ability to function in a larger arena. More than anything I was worried about the fact that we would become just Canadians and look upon the solution with the idea that as long as we are pure, everything else will be fine. There are many middle powers, particularly, who are very concerned about this, and I believe we can make a contribution to those middle powers and with those middle powers. I believe there is a very strong role to be played by the country which sits between the two superpowers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The time allotted for questions and comments has elapsed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz)—Labour Conditions—Lay-offs by INCO at Port Colborne. (b) Job retraining inquiry; the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky)—Visible Minorities—Use of Governor in Council appointments to increase representation. (b) Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission vacancy; and the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly)—Fisheries—Cowichan estuary—Government policy. (b) Application of policy.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN INSTITUTE FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND SECURITY

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate.

Mr. Stevens: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) on a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises out of the form to be followed in the questioning of an Hon. Member following his remarks. I put one question. Then I had two supplementary questions. I am looking for advice. It seemed to me that what I really wanted was to come back with the thrust of my question; but the Chair did not give me the opportunity to ask my second or third questions.

• (1600)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would like to compliment the Hon. Member for York-Peel for the brevity of his questions. He is playing exactly by the rules, the intent and the spirit of the reform. However, the Chair noticed a number of other Members rising at the same time, and so as to allow the widest possible exchange during this period, the Chair felt it ought to go to other Members. If a Member has one, two or three points to make, I think it would be incumbent upon him to condense those remarks or comments in the one opportunity provided to him. The Chair cannot guess whether the Hon. Member intends to follow up with other questions especially when a number of other Members rise at the same time wishing to be recognized.

However, the Chair is always in the hands of the House. If the House is disposed at this time to allow the Hon. Member for York-Peel to ask his additional questions, so be it. Does the House agree?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: I thank Hon. Members and yourself, Mr. Speaker, for your and their courtesy.

As you will recall, the main thrust of my question was whether the Hon. Member felt that this new peace institute should be a government organization. I took from the tone of his response that he found this to be a very difficult question. He referred to what had already been dealt with, Clause 28, and the changing of the word "shall" to "may".

My second question deals with Clause 32. He will note it has the effect of adding the new peace institute to a schedule entitled "Other Government Institutions". Clearly the Government intends this to be another government institution as the legislation is now drafted. Is this something the Hon. Member would like to see changed?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Having complimented the Hon. Member, I must remind him that at second reading stage his comments should be of a general nature and not go into the detail of the Bill, which study is reserved for committee stage. However, the question was put.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I just do not quite follow the line of questioning. I understand what I have been asked but I am not so sure that I understand what the Hon. Member is attempting to get at. There are various kinds of government organizations, some of them fairly close to the Departments where they function, some at arm's length. For example, the IDRC is a fairly independent organization. What I am saying is that it has to be a body which is independent of government Departments. The degree of independence is the crucial point. There must be a way of funding so that once the institute is on its own it will function independently. But it is still a government organization.

I hope the Hon. Member is not suggesting that it should be funded by the private sector as some kind of a foundation. That is not what I want. I want this to be a government-funded organization but with the Government at arm's length.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member then agree that the Library of Parliament might be a better model in that it is responsible to the Speakers of this and the other place, as well as to a joint committee, and is funded by a direct appropriation from Parliament? In short, it answers to Parliament, not to the Government of the day.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I have not thought of that particular model. It seems to me we could look at it. That might very well be just as easy, although if you had an endowment it might be simpler.

If a Government is in power—and the Hon. Member and his colleagues beleive they may at some point come into power—the Government tends to direct Parliament. We are a parliamentary system, not a Republican system where you have separate executive and legislative branches. It seems to me that even though we are a parliamentary system, there would be quite an independent approach through the committee. Fundamentally, in our system the Government has to be in charge. If we want to change the system, that is a whole different ball game, but the Government tends to be in charge of Parliament. It has the votes to do what it has to do. Therefore, I just wonder if we are getting into something that does not mean very much.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For debate, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon).

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have followed the debate with considerable interest since it began. I would like to compliment the Minister for his paticipation. I understand he has been travelling a lot lately and his speech was, in relation to the length of his trip, short, I suppose.

Mr. Nowlan: Inversely proportional.

Mr. McKinnon: Yes. He made a couple of remarks which indicated he was perhaps exhausted. He referred to a country like Canada which does not have nuclear weapons. That will be a great joy to many people who have been wishing for years that we get rid of nuclear weapons, if he is telling the truth. Otherwise he does not know about the nuclear weapons we have in various parts of the country as air to air missiles, and which have been a source of considerable conflict.

Mr. MacEachen: They are on the way out, you know that.

Mr. McKinnon: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced in December that they would be out of Canada by the first of July. I am rather surprised that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) does not listen to his Prime Minister as carefully as I do.

Mr. MacEachen: Split some wood, not hairs.

Mr. McKinnon: The other remark he made, which leads me into the main part of my speech, was that this institute could not and should not duplicate work done abroad. There are an awful lot of institutions in the world, 264 by count, which do work similarly to what we envisage. Most consider themselves to be international institutes. I noticed that the title of the Bill puts the word "international" in a different place in the sentence. It says, "the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security", whereas a world-famous institute calls itself the International Institute for Strategic Studies.

I notice the U.S. has 60 or 70 of these institutions. Some are more prominent than others, and most are prominent because they have established a record of precise, objective work. Everything else tends to fail in this field or else becomes the Bible of single purpose groups who can read what they want to read in some of the inferior books and papers published by the lesser known institutions.

I would like to speak for a moment about the International Institute for Strategic Studies. If we are going to have an institute that is supposed to study international affairs, I believe that we should have a good one. It is difficult for me to understand at the present time exactly what the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security is going to do, what its main role is going to be and what its subsidiary roles will be. They seem to change with every speaker. I think the International Institute for Strategic Studies is the top institute of its kind in the world. That institute says it has three major functions: research, information and debate. They put out some publications, namely, The Military Balance, Strategic Survey, Adelphi Papers and Survival. These come out as glossy books filled with tables. They are certainly accurate. The Stockholm International Peace Research Institute puts out a larger book which is similar but has much more in it than the tables. Those are the two best of the breed.

We want to avoid books such as the pair I have in my hands. One is entitled Soviet Military Power and the other Whence the Threat to Peace. They are very similar to each other. One would have to know the books to guess which one is published by the Soviets and which by the United States. Those two books are not used as reliable references. It is not that they ever lie to anyone. Everything in there is true. However, they are very selective about the truths they tell. A description of Soviet power described by the United States bears a remarkable resemblance to American power described by the U.S.S.R. However, when they describe their own power they are always on the weak side. They are just little country kids trying to get along in this world. I would recommend that neither one of them be taken seriously.

We should stick with the International Institute for Strategic Studies and SIPRI, the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute, and we will not go far wrong. You can check them against each other. Their tables always agree with each other. SIPRI discusses the terrible armament sales to Third World countries, which is one of the black marks in our society these days. These lists cannot be found in the publications of the International Institute for Strategic Studies. I notice that Canada is listed. We stand sixteenth as a producer of arms. Our main customer in the world is the Ivory Coast, which may surprise a few people. We really are a very small player in that particular international scene.

It may be worthwhile to understand the funding of these various organizations. The Stockholm International Peace Research Institute is funded by the Swedish Government in its entirety, as far as I can understand from reading the foreward. It has an interesting method of control. If we are going to produce a world class organization, I doubt if we will do it with even a preponderantly Canadian board of control. The Stockholm International Peace Research Institute is an independent institute for research into problems of peace and conflict. It was established in 1966 and is financed by the Swedish Parliament. The staff, the governing board and the Scientific Council are international. As a consultative body, the Scientific Council is not responsible for the views expressed in the publications of the Institute. So there is a difference between the Council and the Institute. Of their governing board, the chairman comes from Sweden and the vice-chairman is from the United Kingdom. Mr. Tim Greve is from Norway. The next two gentlemen are from the German Democratic Republic. The next one on the board is Professor Mates from Yugoslavia. There is also Professor Röling from the Netherlands and the director, who is presumably an executive director. He is Dr. Frank Barnaby from the United Kingdom. That is one system of organizing it and it works very well for them. I realize Canada is interested in having a majority, but I do not think we will get recognized internationally for our dependability and breadth of vision with an all-Canadian group, much as I wish that we could.

When I look around the national scene to see whom we could put on the board of directors, I find that the list is pretty short. We could have people such as Dr. Lindsey, who is an internationally renowned judge of armament and disarmament. Perhaps we could have Professor Dan Middlemiss, who is an objective viewer of the scene and knows what he is talking about. If we want to look for someone younger, Nick Stetham is a good man.

The International Institute for Strategic Studies is a slightly different organization. The structure of its council is composed of 30 members headed by a Chairman, a Vice-Chairman, an honourary Treasurer, President and four Vice-Presidents. Fifteen countries are represented. They have a staff of 25 people who are paid. They are financed by members' dues, which are $50 or £25 for a full member, $50 for an associate member and $240 for a corporate member. They are also financed by sales of publications, grants from American, British, German, Italian and Japanese foundations as well as donations. The budget for this year is £460,000. That is not all that different from what our budget is going to be for our organization. I hope we can turn out something as good as they do.

I am rather disappointed that in this older entry there is no mention of Canada's contribution. Our National Defence Department has made a contribution of $50,000, I believe, to this organization. The Minister worried me when he said in his speech that we could not have the institute duplicating work and that it should be complimentary to the organizations that are present here. I would have wished for a co-ordinating role for this organization that will be paid for entirely by the taxpayer. The forecast for the 1983-1984 defence budget indicates expenditures of $27,000 for the military and united services institutes, $586,000 for military studies at Canadian universities, $50,000 for the Canadian Institute of Strategic Studies, and $50,000 for the International Institute of Strategic Studies. They certainly see the value of the organization in London.

Another organization of a totally different type is the Centre for Defence Information in the United States. It is one of the 50 or 60 institutes they have there and is probably one of the best known. It operates entirely on donations. Its Director, Rear Admiral Gene La Rocque, boasts that it is "the only organization of its kind that does not accept government money or money from defence contractors". The Centre for Defence Information was set up by Admiral La Rocque in 1972. After reading its work I feel that it has, unfortunately, some bias against the present Government of the United States. I do think it operates with a political bias, as do several other organizations.

To try to set up this institute with the Bill which we have in hand is going to be extraordinarily difficult, particularly with the powers that are vested in the Cabinet. I believe that is what most of the controversy is about at the present time. The Cabinet has decided that it will do most of the picking and choosing of the people involved. For example, the Bill states that:

> The Directors . . . shall be appointed by the Governor in Council to hold office for such term not exceeding three years as will ensure as far as possible the expiration in any one year of the terms of fewer than half of the directors so appointed.

This is probably the exact same thing that covers the board which is appointed by the Governor in Council to run Canadair and de Havilland. Those are government boards appointed for running organizations which they know nothing about. If that is the way it will be, there will be one extremely important person and it will not be the chairman, who will also be appointed by the Governor in Council. I shudder to think of some of the people the Government might pick.

The executive director is the chief executive officer of the institute. He is also appointed by the Governor in Council. His function is to run the organization and hire the staff. What kind of staff would there be if the executive officer was the Hon. J. P. Goyer or someone like that? I am very concerned about that position and the fact that there will be no input unless one is a Cabinet Minister in the current Government.

I very much favour this amendment taking the selection of these people out of the hands of the Cabinet and giving it either to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence or a meeting of the House of Commons where the various options could be presented to us.

The Vice-Chairman will be elected by the board. Clause 10 states:

> The Board shall elect one of the directors, other than the Executive Director, to be Vice-Chairman of the Board.

According to this Bill, that is the only duty given to the board. After they elect the vice-chairman, they can go back to wherever they came from while the executive director continues to run the firm on direction from the Cabinet. I do not believe that that is the proper procedure.

I would prefer that the Bill be changed. While the purpose of the Bill is exactly what we need, in order to have a world class organization we must be very careful about how it will be structured, how people will be selected and what their terms of office will be. Will they have independence from the Cabinet? I do not believe that Canadair has independence from the Cabinet or from the Minister of Transport. I doubt very much that the provisions of this Bill will permit the organization to have independence from the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The directors themselves have a sinecure that might make them happy, but I do not think it will do much to increase the knowledge of Canadians about External Affairs at the present time.

I believe the only two items of importance in Clause 4 which lists the purposes are Clause 4(1) to "collect and disseminate information and ideas on international peace and security", and Clause 4(d) to "foster, fund and conduct research on international peace and security issues of particular interest to Canadians or to the Government of Canada". These are strange words to use. How can matters be of particular interest to Canadians when we are talking about world peace? It is rather difficult for me to understand.

I am also totally baffled by the funding of this institute. While there is provision for $1.5 million in the coming year, which is to go up to $5 million, I notice that a small section of Clause 5 provides that the institute also have the authority to acquire any property, money or securities by gift, bequest or otherwise. Presumably this means that it would be open to public funding, if someone wished to contribute money to it. I am not sure whether in hard years the Government might not use that provision as a barometer and cut down on government funding and tell the institute that it would have to do as the local museum does and raise money on its own. It is not satisfactory to allow the possibility of public funding without responsibility for deciding whether it will use it or not.

My main concern lies with the selection of officers. We would like to have it taken out of Cabinet hands, particularly at this stage in our political life when an election is coming, whether the Government wants it or not. It is not the time to leave behind three years' worth of political hacks for the rest of us to deal with.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, I generally agree with much of what the Hon. Member has just said, especially about his concern about who might be appointed to this board if it is left in the current definition.

Could he expand a little on how he would prefer to have members of that board appointed, including the executive director? His colleague from Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) suggested earlier today that this be done by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on a consensus basis. I question how that would work. What would happen, as might well be the case, if no consensus is obtainable in the committee? We know that these committees are set up with the majority of the Members being government Members. What would happen to the board if this process became stalemated in committee? Might it produce a stalemate in the entire operation of the organization?

Mr. McKinnon: I think the Member's question reflects the analogy of a man at the age at 90 who said he rather likes the life he is leading when he considers the alternative. That is how I feel in this case. When we look at the possible difficulties of the committee's selecting someone, let us consider the alternative, which is the Cabinet picking a friend or defeated Liberal candidate. There will be many of them available in the months to come.

However, I would trust the committee to do the right thing before I would trust the Cabinet to do the right thing with respect to selecting those people, particularly if it is in a period when we are getting closer to an election and some of the monolithic group over there would possibly get some urging toward freedom and decide to stand up for their principles.

Mr. Skelly: The comments about the funding mechanism available for the peace research institute was fairly interesting. Is it the Conservatives' philosophy that the organization will have to collect funding through bake sales, or would a Conservative Government guarantee an appropriate level of funding for the peace research institute? I was apprehensive about the Hon. Member's comments that funding would be flexible and it may have to depend on private charity. Would he clarify his position in that respect?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, my objection to the funding as provided for in this Bill concerns the vagueness of the clause which permits it to acquire property, money or securities by gift, bequest or otherwise. It leaves it up in the air. I assume that is the purpose of it, to make it flexible. I would prefer to see it funded entirely by the Government.

To put it in another way, I do not understand why the Government wants to give it the ability to acquire property, money or securities. If we are going to have this group and it is to be appointed by parliamentarians, then Parliament should pay for it. I would prefer that to having the Cabinet pay for it under Cabinet direction by two Ministers.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat puzzled by the remarks made by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) earlier today and subsequently by the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley). I would like to understand what proposition is being put forward by the Hon. Members of the Official Opposition about how this factor of independence can best be achieved, given the fact that we have the British parliamentary form of government, known otherwise as responsible government.

Would the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) tell us what he believes could be an alternative organism to Cabinet for appointing the chairman, board of directors and executive director of this institution? I say that not in an argumentative sense. I say it because I have sat here today and I would love to understand what alternative option is available and justifiably available. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that it would require the Members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to make an appointment of the executive or the board of directors and chairman of this institution and then he refers to a consensus, I begin to lose track of what he means. I do not know of a system of parliament or a system of government, either one of them, that has been used in that sense. I have never heard of that type of appointment system before. I would love to be educated on it.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the Hon. Member about his confusion with the word consensus. He has not had an opportunity to find out, but Cabinet committees operate on consensus. Although that itself bears some argument at times as to what a consensus is. It is generally thought of as being very close to totality, but not necessarily so. It keeps individuals from having a veto in committees.

As far as the funding goes and the organization that should look after this, recommendations have been made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) to the Prime Minister, and I understand a recommendation by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). I am not privileged to divulge them. This afternoon the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) made a suggestion that the institute could operate in the way the Parliamentary Library does, which is operating, as far as this side is concerned, very, very well indeed. The Library has a good executive director. He picks a good staff and they do well. I cannot see any reason why we could not do the same with this proposed institute.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) not understand that funding for the Library of Parliament is accessed through the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services? The fact is that the Library is run under the management of the Commissioners of Internal Economy, all of whom are Cabinet Ministers. That is our principle of responsible government. How does the Hon. Member propose to fund this committee? How does he propose to appoint members to this institution? How does the Hon. Member propose to run it? The example he gives confirms perfectly that in a responsible sense of British parliamentary democracy it is Cabinet Ministers who have to dispose of funds. Now the Hon. Member is proposing some committee of the House of Commons—or should we perhaps ask the Library of Parliament research committee whether or not it feels it should fund the peace institute? We would like a little clarity if we could.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, it is not my duty to write Bills because the Government is unable to write one that is satisfactory to Parliament. I think the group on this side of the House would prefer to have as much independence as possible for this institute. We feel that it would be absolutely impossible for the institute to have its independence if we go along with this Bill, which will give the Cabinet an ability to put its finger into the business of the institute at any time it wants. Indeed, there is a particular exception for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs can tell the institute what to do and if he wants some advice on any area or subject, he can insist the institute do it. That is the kind of interference we really do not want.

Mr. MacEachen: You do not want the Minister to be enlightened?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. For debate, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my intervention this afternoon will consist mainly of probing the Government to find answers to questions that are not satisfactorily answered in the Bill as it now stands. I think that is a very proper procedure on second reading. There are matters here and there will be comment and criticism as well of the Bill as it stands. But also, at least in the first part of my intervention, there will be some inquiries as to where the Government thinks it is going with this institute and why it is doing it at this time.

That, indeed, is my first question. It is a question of timing. Why in the spring of 1984 in Canada, in Holy Week, has this matter been brought before the House of Commons? I have heard it said that Holy Week is considered in some church circles as the week of peace. That is a very appropriate stance for the churches to take at this particular season of the church year. I do wonder, however, whether the Government is trying to come under this umbrella and make use of that particular time of year to sneak in its proposals about a peace institute.

The other question that comes to my mind, and I do not know whether I will ever get an answer to it, is whether there is some relationship between the introduction of this Bill now when the Government is talking about June 16 as a deadline for its completion and the retirement of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Or whether there is a thought in somebody's mind that maybe the present Prime Minister should be the chairman or the executive director of this institute as a form of occupation after he ceases to be the Prime Minister of Canada. Is that what lies behind the timing of this Bill? I think the whole country is interested in that. That matter of peace has been before the world for centuries. I venture to suggest that those of us who have worn uniforms are the strongest advocates of peace. Those who know and those who have been under fire know what peace is and what peace means. We would like to see peace. I wonder also about the political implications of the timing, because it has been my experience that very little is done by this Government that does not have some political overtones, either to discomfort the Opposition or to further its own cause with the electorate at this time. There is an election coming. I think peace, a peace institute and the concept of peace are much too valuable to play with in this way. I suspect, nonetheless, that there is an element of politics in this, a very strong element.

What about the economic climate in which this matter is being introduced? Is this just a smoke-screen so that the problems of unemployment can be forgotten and put aside for a time? What about the problems of the economy, the national debt and inflation? These matters that affect the lives of so many Canadians, are they being put to one side, obfuscated and made less clear by this particular introduction? There were other times when this particular matter could have been brought forward.

I gather from the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) that he has some notion that this institute is going to achieve peace in the world, that somehow or other Canada will act as the intermediary, the honest broker, the mediator between East and West through the medium of this institution and I wonder whether that is what the Government has in mind.

● (1640)

The other question which I have to ask myself I will ask aloud in the hopes that there will be a reply from the government side. It concerns the matter of haste. Why are we trying to rush through this matter just now? However, before dealing with that, there is one element which confuses me—the shift in emphasis in the title of this particular institute from the notion in the Speech from the Throne that this particular matter would be brought forward. We have heard the Speech from the Throne quoted before wherein it indicates:

> —the Government will create a publicly funded centre to gather, collate and digest the enormous volume of information now available on defence and arms control issues.

It went on further to indicate:

> The Government will increase its funding for voluntary associations and private research groups interested in security, arms control and disarmament issues. Resources for research and development of verification procedures, the basis of successful arms control agreements, will be expanded substantially.

The emphasis in the Throne Speech was upon defence, arms control verification and disarmament. The word "security" appeared there, and now we find it transmogrified or shifted in some manner or other and it has come out as the establishment of the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. Obviously there is a relationship between disarmament, international peace and security. Also there is a relationship—and I say this in pure objectivity—between armament and security. Therefore I find myself somewhat mystified by the shift in the wording as it appeared in the Throne Speech to the title as it now stands. I wonder whether this change of emphasis from the original purpose is intended to establish the linkage between defence and security, for example, or the linkage between arms control and international peace. What is it that underlies this shift of emphasis?

I think the Government owes Parliament an answer on that. I think it also owes the Canadian public an answer. The answers to these questions were not fully laid out by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) in his opening remarks. I listened carefully to see whether he would establish that. Somewhere along the line, perhaps in committee or if the Minister intervenes at some time, we should be able to probe this particular matter and discover what motivated the Government to change its mind in this way.

I mentioned earlier the matter of the haste with which we are now being asked to consider this Bill. Timing is one thing, and I have mentioned that already, but the urge to get the institute set up and operating as soon as possible is another. That is a matter of haste. Why the haste? What lies behind the need to have this institute set up?

Some notion was expressed somewhere or other that the committee to which the Bill will be referred should examine this matter in a matter of a week or so. Mr. Speaker, do you know how many institutes and concerned people there are in this country who are concerned with peace and will want to make representations to the committee? I do not understand how the Government considers it possible between now and June 16—and the mysticism surrounding this particular date escapes me—for this institute, with all the flaws in the Bill, to become fact.

It is vitally important that the hearings before the standing committee be of sufficient duration to obtain the input of all interested and involved Canadians, be they individuals, the academic community or organized groups of one kind or another. I am sure the Council of Bishops would be interested in making representations, urging changes and urging that the institute be set up. I will not speak for that Council, but many organizations will want to make representations to the committee. I think a full opportunity should be provided to them for that purpose. It would be an error of prime importance if there was any intention to let the axe fall on these hearings or on the discussions of this particular Bill.

I urge that there be no precipitated or under-considered action on this matter. Perhaps it is possible to be consistent with the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan. Perhaps what is needed is a Canadian centre for East-West studies so that we could understand the problem and get to the root, in Canadian terms, of some of our troubles. When the Bill goes before it, the committee should be allowed to hear the matters fully, not cut off debate.

I would like to turn to the purpose of the institute as set out in the Bill. Aside from the uncertainty created by the confusion concerning peace and security on the one hand and defence, arms control and disarmament on the other, with which I have already dealt, there is or ought to be a strictly Canadian emphasis in the purpose of the Bill. We are all exploring. The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) mentioned the need for internationalization. I happen to feel that there is a very strong argument in favour of Canadianization and the insistence thereon. In fact, if we look at Clause 4(d) of the Bill, we find that research on international peace and security issues which the institute is to undertake shall be "of particular interest to Canadians or to the Government of Canada". I think that is most important. After all, we are part of the Parliament of Canada. Surely it is in our interests to ensure that Canadians, the Government and all institutions in Canada are aware of the issues involved in this matter. Clause 18 leaves open the national bias of directors. I find that just a little odd, but I will return to it if I have the opportunity. Clause 18 reads:

> The Chairman, Executive Director and at least eight of the other directors of the Board must be Canadian citizens.

This leaves open the possibility of appointing seven non-Canadians to the board of governors. I tried to find out from the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan what he had in mind and why he felt it was so essential that the directors be internationalized. Unfortunately, I did not receive a satisfactory answer. I myself am not clear in my mind why that should be.

● (1650)

I wonder if the Government will ever let us know what kind of people it has in mind for this board. Are academics, retired public servants, retired Prime Ministers, retired Cabinet Ministers or unelected former Cabinet Ministers to be nominated to this board of governors? I believe it is time we had some clarification on that matter. I mentioned a few people in the international field who might be in the Prime Minister's mind. I do not know whether it might be the former Prime Minister of Jamaica, Georgi Arbatov of the Soviet Union or anyone else. However, I think the time has come when the Government should give us some indication of whom they have in mind for appointments to these other seven positions.

How is such a board to preserve the Canadian focus of which I spoke a few moments ago? How will it focus on Canada's interests? The names of the people to be nominated are not forthcoming. We do not know what kind of Canadians the Government has in mind let alone what kind of non-Canadians.

I turn now to another very important matter which has been the object of the concerns of all our speakers, and that is, the independence of this institute from Government and its accountability to Parliament. I did not receive a copy of the Bill until last evening but I went through it fairly carefully and I was a little worried by the lack of independence provided for the institute by the Bill. I will turn to the lack of accountability in a moment.

I was struck forcibly by the comments of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) this morning when he drew the attention of the House to Clauses 25 and 26 of the Bill. I had missed those clauses when I read the Bill last evening. Those who missed those clauses might well consider the words of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead. Clause 25 of the Bill reads as follows:

> The Board shall, forthwith after making a by-law, send a copy thereof to the Minister and the President of the Treasury Board.

Why should such a copy not be sent to Parliament as well? I do not think that that matter is too troublesome. However, Clause 26 reads:

> The Governor in Council may, by order, direct the Board to make, amend or repeal a by-law within such period as is specified in the order.

Is this independence of the Government, Mr. Speaker? I would ask the Minister that question to his face. Is this what he conceives as being independence of the institute from Government? As well, Clause 27 is relevant to the matter of independence.

I believe that it is absolutely essential that this institute be independent. There should be no question about its independence. There is a means of ensuring this. I believe it was the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker) who asked how independence could be secured by the process of having the standing committee approve proposed directors. He asked what would happen if consensus could not be reached. My answer to that is that we would bring forward another nominee if a particular nominee did not receive the approval of the committee. He may have had the approval of the Government—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair regrets to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time is up.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I regret that as well. I still have a great deal to say.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the stream-of-consciousness contribution of the Hon. Member and I especially enjoyed his indication that the Conservative Party was interested in receiving more input from Canadians and was very concerned about tension-reduction mechanisms. I recalled the speech of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) who travelled around the country talking about input from Canadians. A great number of Canadians appeared before his committee indicating that they were extremely concerned about the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada. In later news reports, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead indicated that even though there was an enormous amount of input opposing the Cruise missile, it was unlikely that that would change his Party's opinion on the subject.

I wonder how that particular statement squares with the comments made by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) about tension reduction. How does he explain that conflict? We are looking at a peace research institute that is designed to reduce conflict and provide confidence-building mechanisms. Yet the Conservative Party endorses the testing of the Cruise missile and Conservative members refuse to listen to input from the public even though they held public hearings on the matter.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) wishes to increase tension by keeping this matter alive, he is perfectly at liberty to do so. What he neglects to take into account is the fact that the name of this institute is the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. Security simply means security for the population of Canada.

With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I would place NATO in the forefront of the peacemakers of this world. NATO has maintained the peace in Europe for a good many years. Let us not forget about that. That means security for Canada.

I believe I have answered the Hon. Member's question about the Cruise missile. The Cruise missile deals with security and will deal with security in the future as well. Therefore, I do not see any inconsistency whatsoever between supporting the testing of the Cruise missile and supporting this particular concept.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, could I ask my friend a question? Since he and I were very active on the committee to which the Bill will be referred, it being the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, and since I will have to chair that committee unless you see otherwise, Mr. Speaker, could my friend give me an indication as to how long he thinks that committee should sit? I am prepared to sit on that committee if I am ordered to do so. I have always done so with pleasure.

The hon. gentleman said that we should not hesitate to call individuals, groups and organizations before the committee and that we should hear from them fully. I am not opposed to that and have no particular views regarding the length of time that this would take. However, since the Hon. Member raised the issue, could he give me some indication of the time this would take? Would we sit five days a week for a month or three days a week for a month? Could he give me an indication so that we can prepare ourselves mentally to do a good job and return to the House a very good Bill?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I fully agree that the Hon. Member is a faithful Chairman of the Standing Committee. He is the servant of that committee on all occasions and will work overtime chairing it. As to how long the hearings should last, I have no idea. It depends entirely on how many organizations, individuals and groups seek to be heard. I believe they should all be heard, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Shall all orders and items preceding item No. 90 stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Agreed. They stand by unanimous consent.

DAILY NEWSPAPER ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Jim Fleming (York West) moved that Bill C-226, an Act to ensure, at the national level, competition and independence of the daily press, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity, my first chance to put forward a Bill in Private Members' hour for some years. It is a very important issue for discussion this afternoon. Always the optimist as a Member of the House of Commons for some 11 years, I hope that it might gain support from all sides of the House, or at least go to a vote. I will not waste a lot of time pleading that case, knowing tradition during this hour.

This Bill is entitled "an Act to ensure, at the national level, competition and independence of the daily press". The Bill is essentially a carbon copy of a Cabinet-approved Bill put forward during this Parliament in response to the royal commission on newspapers in Canada. The only exception is the exclusion of the part of the Bill dealing with a national newspaper advisory council, its establishment and the creation of an endowment fund, and within that same section the offering of matching grants of up to $50,000 for up to three years for daily newspapers in Canada which would open up new bureaus outside of the region in which they are located or outside of Canada and reporting back to Canada.

I say that for clarification as I begin to make my presentation on this Bill. First, as we all know, Private Members' Bills are not allowed to put forward the expenditure of money. This removes that possibility. I might say that we do have across Canada, since the report of the royal commission and the proposals by the Government that followed at that time, the development of volunteer press councils across this country. Previously there were only press councils in Ontario, Quebec and Alberta. Frankly, in Ontario, less than half the daily newspapers with far less than half the daily circulation belonged at that time. Now almost all daily newspapers in Ontario belong and almost all in Quebec. Indeed, we now have a council for the Maritime provinces, a council for Alberta and Saskatchewan, a new council in Manitoba and a new council in British Columbia.

I am heartened by that, although I am still concerned about the issue of credibility of those press councils. They are largely funded by the publishers. The first set of appointments to those councils are made by the publishers. Often editorials and journalists suggest that we must not show either a conflict of interest or a perceived conflict of interest. Therefore, I see some problem with that credibility. The proof will be in how they perform. I want to be an optimist on that. When so many of our Canadian cities have only one daily newspaper, at least there is a place where individuals can go to vet their grievances.

In the case of the grants, which are not included in this legislation but were in the proposed daily newspaper Bill, there was a great deal of hyperbole from the newspaper industry about how they would not accept money from the federal Government, how that would somehow be government trying to get into the newsrooms of the nations. I found that absurd. There is no excise tax on newspapers. That is an allowance of government which saves newspapers in Canada many millions of dollars. The press facilities on Parliament Hill must cost many tens if not hundreds of thousands of dollars. They are used without question. I certainly do not see the press being bought off by having those facilities. There are postal subsidies which are of assistance today, particularly in western Canada, in helping some dailies reach their customers.

The complaint against the grants is a bit hollow. At least as I pass that part and note that it is not included because of the costs involved and therefore not allowed in a Private Members' Bill, I make the point that the Kent Royal Commission found, and I very much agree with it that, sadly, in this country there is very little reporting from one region to another. Out of that comes our continuing lack of understanding of each other as Canadians. When we count so much on our place in the international scene, and certainly 25 per cent of our Gross National Product relates to exports, we should have more Canadians in key centres around the world and experts on Canada reporting back to us.

I now want to move to the two major issues which are included in what is left of this Bill, which is almost word for word the same as the previously proposed Cabinet-approved daily newspaper Act. Those two major issues are the issue of concentration of ownership of daily newspapers in Canada. The second is to establish in principle for future purposes in the starting up of newspapers editorial independence from other interests.

First let me deal with the issue of concentration. In English Canada two chains, Thompson and Southam, now control almost two-thirds of daily newspaper circulation. They have arrived there within the law. That is not my attack. That level of concentration, as I will try to argue over the next few minutes, can have a critical effect upon what a free press must be in a democracy like ours.

Second, in French speaking Canada the concentration level by chains is 90 per cent or more, the difference being that in Quebec most of those chains are in head-to-head competition with each other. In the case of English speaking Canada, those two chains generally have exclusively to themselves, one or the other, a particular daily newspaper marketplace.

I believe at the national level, when we now have a higher level of concentration in this country than in any other democracy in the western world, a level of concentration of ownership four times as large as that in the United States, surely the time has come when we must stop this and encourage more competition.

When we use the famous phrase of free press, some publishers and indeed editorialists believe that it means it is free for them to use as they see fit. Indeed, that is an element, but finally and essentially a free press belongs to individual Canadians. Canadians have a right to a whole diversity of views and expressions of newspapers and information available for them to make their judgment on society at the local, provincial and national levels. A free press is the right of individual Canadians and of our society, not a right of parliamentarians, government or the publishers. It is a right of the people.

The free press must be diverse in order that we will have competing sources. Competing sources of information means a number of things. It means that journalists have mobility. If there are only one or two big bosses to work for, your boss does not like what you are doing, you feel in conscience you are honestly reporting something and you know there are not many other places to get a job, that may well hamper your ability to be an independent and outspoken journalist.

Second, when there is competition in the press, there is pressure for accuracy. If two papers in the same community, and very few communities now have two dailies, are competing with each other, there is a much better chance of a story of controversy being reported correctly. There is a better chance when that story is reported that the facts will be accurate.

Certainly at the national level, reporting on national occurrences, such as on this Parliament which is the heart of our democracy, the more competition, the more chance that diverse views will be expressed accurately. I suggest that when increasingly fewer and fewer own more and more of our daily press, with all the benevolence in the world on their part, that militates against having as much access for people with different views, for a greater variety of columnists, for greater pressure for accuracy of the information reported. It simply limits the amount of pages put out for various news stories to reach the public.

I also argue that with more concentration of ownership, more and more the newspaper becomes a business and in balance less and less something special which is the basic tool of democracy. I am not one of those who argue that a newspaper should operate, forget the bottom lines and not turn a profit.

But I also argue that there is a special responsibility, that newspapers are something special and that it is important that there be a conscience and concern, a responsibility to deliver information, to have controversy, to report facts, to put out stories that sometimes may not make you as the editor popular. As the head office gets further and further away, the individual daily newspaper becomes just one more piece in an empire, more and more head office will count the pencils. More and more head offices will have one columnist for all the newspapers. More and more there is the danger, when you are not competitive in individual marketplaces, that you will have less and less local content. All of that, I suggest to you, is one of the dangers of the very high level of concentration of ownership which we have in this country in the daily newspaper business.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill, in combination with the cross media directive which I myself and my colleague, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), worked on and sent the CRTC some months ago; that tougher rule on cross media ownership in individual marketplaces, along with this Bill, providing a national limit on concentration of ownership, will encourage others to grow and the big giants to stop, which surely is an incentive for a more competitive news marketplace.

I believe it is not in the interests of our country, our society and of our democracy to have the dream of going back to individual singly owned newspapers across this country, but more to have economies of scale, to have a number of competing media or information companies. They can own radio stations, television stations or daily newspapers, but they cannot dominate in any single marketplace and they would compete with each other as media companies on a national scale in Canada.

This very serious issue has been put under intense scrutiny at least once a decade for the last three decades, either by a major Senate inquiry such as the Davey Senate Committee, or earlier by the O'Leary Committee, or the Massey Royal Commission. For us not to act is an invitation at a crucial time in our history, a time of regional stress, a time in which advanced communications have led to some disruption and imbalance and individual and parochial demands. I believe not to act on this issue and at this time to stop further concentration at the very least is to threaten the health of our democracy and that fundamental right to a free press which we now have in our Charter of Rights.

There is a danger for the Southam chain, the largest. It owns not as many newspaper properties as Thomson but owns some very big newspaper properties. It is a company which many witnesses before the Kent Royal Commission suggested seems to be largely an information company, a company which appears to continue to have that traditional interest in news and diverse views and not just the bottom line, as was the accusation made by many to me and, in turn, to the royal commission about the Thomson chain generally. The danger is that Southam's is vulnerable with no limit on concentration. If this act comes into force they cannot get any larger, and in the future no one will have more than 20 per cent. If Southam or Thomson are sold, they will have to be sold to a company other than the major competitors so that others can grow and there is more competition.

Southam's is vulnerable, for lack of action, to someone who wants what I think the Kent Commission called a "cash cow" operation. A buyer might think that Southam's spends a lot of money on editorial content. It seems to have expenditures which the purchaser could cut. They could pay a pretty healthy price to get that company. They could cut back on the expenditures for news content and come out with a very profitable operation. And who would suffer? Canadians would suffer who count on that information to make their judgements about their lives here in our country.

Already Thomson and Southam publishers dominate our only major national news service, Canadian Press. They deny that, of course. They insist they sit there as individual publishers. However, they must be a superior lot if, unlike the rest, the best part of our society, they are not aware of who their boss is and what the interest of that boss is.

On the issue of editorial freedom, the second part of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, what I would like to focus upon is simply that there has been some suggestion that the new competition Bill, the new combines investigation legislation which is to come before this House soon, would remove the need for this particular action which the Cabinet agreed upon. I simply do not believe that is true. First, let me say that totally absent from that new competition legislation is any measure which would deal with the Kent Commission's major concern, that if you largely own other things than a newspaper, and you are running a newspaper, too often that editorial room, even without a phone call from head office saying, "Do not report on our labour disputes" or "Do not report on the criticism of the machines we turn out in another part of this company", just by the very knowledge that head office also has those other interests, the story might not be reported or as well reported. That was a major concern of the Kent Commission.

The proposal in this Bill is that if someone who is largely not in the information business is going to buy a newspaper or start up a newspaper, they would simply have to go to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission and demonstrate how they would ensure that that editorial room was independent of other interests. The penalties are not great because we only have the right to inquire. But that public focus, that need to be judged so that the public can point the finger and say, "Indeed, that is your intention," the independence that that would give to such an editorial operation seems to me to be very important, and it is totally absent from the proposed new combines legislation.

I also want to note that during my time as Minister responsible for the government reaction to the royal commission, the indignation of most of the publishers, in my view, approached the ridiculous. Concerns about concentration of press ownership have been tackled by most western democracies. I mentioned earlier some detail on that. That includes Britain, Germany, France, Italy and even the United States. Therefore, we quiver and shake and say, "Politicians, keep your hands off newspapers". I agree that no government, no politician, should have the ability to impact on or influence the editorial room, the news room. On the other hand, Parliament should not stand back when concentration of ownership, by the admission of all the publishers I have spoken to, has reached a point when that concentration of ownership can become dangerous, although they would not say exactly what that level was. When concentration endangers the free flow of information, diversity, accuracy, the mobility of reporters, then surely it is the responsibility of parliamentarians to act.

A free press does not belong to press barons. It is just the opposite. It is a principle which is fundamental to a healthy democracy. A free press means a free flow of information, neither intimidated by government censorship or the censorship of free flow which becomes possible and even likely when too much is held by too few.

This Bill is a minimum. It is limited. It is cautious but it is fundamental. It limits to 20 per cent the amount which can be owned in the future. It does not roll back. It encourages others to grow, and thus encourages competition. It notes the principle of editorial independence while keeping government completely away from the news room. Along with the already adopted cross media directive, it at least stops further concentration and declares the essential principles of competition, limits on concentration of ownership, and the independence of editorial operations from the other interests of the owner. To oppose this Bill is to support a less diverse, less free, less independent press in Canada. It is to climb in bed with a powerful few and to leave out in the cold more and more individual Canadians, in all their diversity and with all their need for and right to diverse information and views.

Parliament works because the system forces us to keep each other on our toes, open to competing views, positions and criticisms. That same pressure of competition and competing views is essential for the maintenance of a free press. Newspapers are special. They set the news agenda. They are more permanent. They are the printed record and have a special credibility. To ignore what has been happening in the Canadian newspaper industry, to bend to the vocal, powerful and largely self-serving few who already dominate, is to invite a weaker and a poorer democracy. I urge you all, my colleagues in this House, each of us as Private Member, to support this Bill and the fundamental freedom it is attempting to protect.

DAILY NEWSPAPER ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming that Bill C-226, an act to ensure, at the national level, competition and independence of the daily press, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Michel Veillette (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we cannot remain silent about the historical background of this Bill. The Government has been interested in the newspaper industry for many years now. Hon. Members may remember, first the 1971 Senate report on mass media and, more recently, the Kent Royal Commission on Newspapers which reported to the Government. As a result of that report, the Hon. Member made public in July 1983 a series of recommendations aimed at regulating concentration and conduct in the newspaper industry. The purpose of those recommendations was to elicit public reaction and to draft appropriate legislative measures. The Bill before us today is only an offshot of the July 1983 recommendations. The first question, of course, is whether it faithfully reflects the public reaction. The 1983 Bill contained provisions which fell under three categories. First, it made it a criminal offence for anyone to own more than 20 per cent of the daily newspaper national circulation. This provision was to be administered by the Director of Investigation and Research appointed under the Combines Investigation Act.

Second, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission was empowered to assess the editorial impartiality of newspapers taken over by non-media corporations.

Third, an advisory council would have been established to hear public complaints wherever such a council would not already have been created by the provinces. I see that Bill C-226 does not contain the 1983 legislative provision concerning a press council. Other than that, there is not much difference between the two Bills. We must ask ourselves whether this Bill is a good policy for Canada with respect to newspapers. The Bill we are considering flows from the assumption that the existing legislation cannot solve the problems of the newspaper industry. We have to know whether that assumption is still valid. In other words, is the newspaper industry so different from other industries that it has to be regulated by a special act? If it is, will Bill C-226 solve the problems of that industry?

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comparison with the situation before 1975. Before then, most service industries were not covered by the general act pertaining to competition in Canada, namely the Combines Investigation Act. Many distinguished Members of the House will recall that the Economic Council of Canada had raised a furore when it recommended that the service sector be governed by the Combines Investigation Act. The counter argument at the time was that service industries were different from manufacturing and resource industries.

And yet, service industries were responsible for a growing share of our national product. Fears were expressed that a wide-ranging legislation such as the Combines Investigation Act was not quite applicable to service industries. Indeed what a disgrace it would be to place the professions on the same footing as the manufacturing and the selling of products! It was pointed out that it was impossible to assess the quality or the quantity of the services provided. Many other objections were also put forward.

One of the major conclusions contained in the report of the Economic Council of Canada was that the competition policy should from now on apply to services. It said the following:

> There is, in our view, enough evidence pointing to the existence in the service sector of the anti-competitive practices detrimental to the public interest to lead to the conclusion that the continued exemption of parts of this sector from competition policy cannot be justified. We therefore recommend, first, that the per se provisions of the revised Combines Investigation Act be made applicable to all commercial activities, including services provided in connection with the sale or rental of land and buildings and the unregulated activities of "regulated industries". The only major exemptions would be those which already exist in respect of bona fide trade union activities, and arrangements between fishermen in British Columbia and their customers. Some de facto exemptions would of course also continue in respect of activities clearly subject to alternate social control in the form of direct regulation or public ownership.
> One of the effects of the recommended change would be to bring services related to "articles" immediately and clearly within the scope of the Act, without the protracted and socially wasteful litigation which the wording of the present legislation makes necessary in such cases. Personal services, such as those of hairdressers and travel agencies, would also be included, as would such business services as those provided by advertising agencies, building cleaners and telephone answering firms. The professions, financial institutions, a broad range of communications services, and all recreational services, including professional sports, would also be covered in so far as other types of social control did not apply.

The Council has observed a difference between goods and service industries in the sense that the products of the latter are intangible, and this creates problems, especially for consumers. Often, they are unable to check, return or resell what they are buying. In addition, they may have to purchase the service based only on an approximate assessment of the final costs. Such factors increase the need for competitive markets.

Another difference noted by the Council was the absence of import competition in many service industries. Actually, the nontransferability of some services also reduces internal competition.

While some people are asking that the law also apply to services, the Council had to examine whether some intrinsic aspect of true service industries justify their exemption simply because they provide services. After examining the question, the Council came to the conclusion that:

—while there are important differences in the nature of the products supplied by goods and service industries respectively, these differences are not such as to render an efficiency-oriented competition policy less relevant for service industries. On the contrary, it may in some ways be more relevant.

In 1975, the Combines Investigation Act was amended to apply to services generally. This is the policy of this Government with respect to competitive practices. This Government believes that the Combines Investigation Act should be universally applied.

As many are aware, in a few well-known cases, proceedings were undertaken against newspapers under the Combines Investigation Act. I refer mainly to the K.C. Irving case and more recently the Southam/Thomson case. Both these cases resulted in acquittals. Does this mean that a general legislation such as the Combines Investigation Act cannot be applied effectively to the newspaper industry? I do not know the answer to that. However, I doubt that such a conclusion could be drawn so quickly. Anyway, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) introduced a bill earlier this month to strengthen the Combines Investigation Act and make it more efficient. As many other members, I heard Mr. Fleming's comments on the legislation. Clearly, the Hon. Member for York-West feels that the Competition Bill cannot replace his own bill. In my view, the legislation put forward by the Hon. Judy Erola in many ways would deal much more efficiently with the newspaper industry than Bill C-226.

For instance, under Bill C-226, nobody could hold more than 20 per cent of the national, total circulation of daily newspapers. That provision is aimed at containing large newspaper chains. But competitionwise, would it not be better that there be a little more competition in New Brunswick for instance, where Irving controls 100 per cent of the market? An arbitrary figure bearing no relation to the relevant market would prevent the Southam or Thomson chains for instance from penetrating the New Brunswick market and perhaps compete efficiently with Irving. Moreover, there is nothing in Mr. Fleming's bill that would help remedy the situation in New Brunswick by making impossible for Irving to control 100 per cent of the provincial market.

On the other hand, the legislation put forward by the Hon. Judy Erola would require that large chains give notice to the Director of Investigation before going ahead with a merger. The merger would then be examined as to the degree of competition in the relevant market. Civil courts could issue orders to remedy the situation. That procedure in my view is more flexible and better adapted to the adjudication of newspaper mergers or takeovers than a bill based on arbitrary criteria leading to fines under criminal proceedings.

Under Bill C-226, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission would make inquiries to assess the editorial independence of newspapers acquired by non-media corporations. Mr. Speaker, why should the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission be asked to get involved in such matters? In giving the Commission powers of inquiry, is there no risk of jeopardizing the constitutional validity of the Combines Investigations Act?

It is not my contention that an amended Competition Act will solve all the problems in the newspaper industry. Far from that. I submit however that we should rely as far as possible on general laws, such as the Combines Investigations Act, to regulate the newspaper industry.

In my view, Parliament should discuss first the amendments to the Combines Investigations Act as proposed by the Hon. Judy Erola. In the course of that discussion, the parties concerned could be invited to put forward their views to a Standing Committee. The extension of the Combines Investigation Act to the newspaper industry could be one subject the Committee could study in depth.

As indicated by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Government is open to proposals for amending the Competition Bill, inasmuch as such proposals do not fly in the face of the aims of the bill. Although I commend the Hon. Member for York-West for his consistent efforts, I feel the House should look at other priorities. The special problems of the newspaper industry should be discussed at the relevant Standing Committee, during its discussion of Bill C-29, an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act.

[English]

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to join in the debate on Bill C-226, the Daily Newspaper Act, proposed by my hon. colleague from York West (Mr. Fleming). As he has already stated, this particular Bill in essence was originally proposed by the present Government as a document to, some suggest, stimulate discussion, and not necessarily as a hard and fast policy position. However, be that as it may, the Bill itself was never brought forth and introduced in Parliament. A great deal of discussion and comment has resulted. Hopefully, the present Government has taken the comments, views and wishes of those who have made representations regarding the original Daily Newspaper Act into consideration. That is perhaps the reason the legislation is not being presented by the Government.

In addressing Bill C-226, I would like to recall the circumstances which led the Government to propose the original Daily Newspaper Act. You may recall in 1980, and I believe the Hon. Member for York West has alluded to this fact, that the Southam and Thomson chains closed newspapers in Ottawa and Winnipeg. Although the director of investigation and research began an inquiry into this affair, the Government appointed Mr. Tom Kent to study the matter in the form of a royal commission. The royal commission on newspapers carefully studied the state of affairs in the newspaper industry and submitted a report which expressed concern on the high degree of market and ownership concentration in that industry as well as the need for measures to promote accountability and improve editorial quality of newspapers.

When the Government put forward the proposed Daily Newspaper Act, it was with the full intention, I am sure, of soliciting views of members of the industry and the general public. The proposer of this Bill, the Hon. Member for York West, has mentioned the fact that much was said on the part of daily newspaper publishers and editorial writers regarding this particular Bill. I would suggest to the House, Mr. Speaker, that while much of this comment at the time perhaps seemed rather harsh and extremely critical of that particular Act, many of those comments have been taken into account. That is one of the reasons this legislation was never introduced in Parliament.

I think it is important to consider how the environment has changed since the events of 1980. I would like to take the opportunity to make a few observations on these changes which have taken place since the Government proposed the original Daily Newspaper Act. I would like to share some of my views on how these changes are likely to affect the newspaper industry today and, more important, in the future.

You may recall that on April 2 the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) tabled proposals to amend the Combines Investigation Act. You may also recall that when the proposed Daily Newspaper Act was released a period of contentious debate followed. The criticisms that were levelled at that time included a statement that specific legislation geared toward a particular industry was a less preferred policy than the application of a general law of general application such as the Combines Investigation Act. The critics, however, conceded that the existing Combines Investigation Act needed to be strengthened. Indeed that is what the Minister's proposals are designed to do. The Combines Investigation Act, being a general law of general application, applies to all industries including newspapers. At the time the debate was going on I personally heard from a number of newspaper publishers and editors. They said that if the Combines Investigation Act of that time were strengthened it would look after some of the fears and concerns expressed by the Government and particularly the Cabinet of the day.

The proposals the Minister has put forward should alleviate these concerns about unchecked increases in concentration in Canadian markets. This, of course, applies to newspapers as well as it does to shoes. In the context of newspapers, I think I can safely venture that had the proposed Combines Investigation Act been in place in 1970, we would today have more competition and perhaps a lower degree of concentration in the newspaper industry. The Cities of Montreal, Ottawa, Winnipeg and Vancouver would have had a chance at having more than one resident English daily newspaper.

This is because the proposed amendments to the Combines Investigation Act make it a more flexible and pragmatic law which takes into account the business realities confronting Canadian firms. Mergers and joint production facilities in interests of efficiency gains would be allowed under the proposed Act. More significantly, and I think this is very important, the amendments would not treat businessmen as criminals. Rather, they would remedy the lessening of competition by taking all relevant market factors into account.

Another development I want to mention is the growth of voluntary press councils. The Hon. Member for York West has mentioned this because it was part of the original Daily Newspaper Act. He has dropped it from this particular Bill. I presume the reason is, of course, that initiatives have been taken by the newspaper industry itself to form voluntary press councils, to the extent that we now have councils in almost every province and region of the country from coast to coast.

Whether it can be argued that newspaper were forced into joining the voluntary press councils is another matter. There is no question that they certainly received the message and took the personal initiatives themselves and are now part of these voluntary press councils at which Canadians who have complaints or concerns to air about a particular newspaper can put their case forward. Hopefully their concerns will be dealt with in a very judicious, fair and equitable manner.

Finally, we know that the Kent Commission raised the issue of cross media ownership. It was in July of 1982 that the Governor in Council issued a directive to the CRTC pertaining to cross media ownership. We know that the directive asked the CRTC to examine, on a case by case basis, applications for broadcasting licenses by firms which also had a controlling interest in newspapers. This directive was partly designed to safeguard the independence in sources of news and information a community may receive. In issuing the directive, the Cabinet ensured that the CRTC would continue to have flexibility and discretion over matters that it is best equipped to deal with.

It is my understanding that to date, the CRTC has applied the directive in seven cases. However, I must admit that there is one aspect of the directive on cross media ownership that troubles me. As an example, let me cite a case in my own area of London, Ontario, where a particular company owns the only daily newspaper plus an AM radio station, an FM radio station and a television station. In applying for a renewal of the licence for its AM radio station, it had to address the issue of the cross media ownership, and rightly so because this was the Cabinet directive handed to the CRTC.

This particular company was prepared to address this particular issue to try to prove to the CRTC that especially in the area of news and information services, the individual companies did operate independently of each other. The CRTC eventually renewed the AM radio station licence and in doing so issued a glowing report about this particular company's independent operations when it came to news and public service events as it pertained to the four media outlets.

Approximately two months following the issuance of that AM radio licence, the same company had to apply for renewal of its FM radio licence. In my view it is unfortunate that it had to address again the issue of cross media ownership. This took a lot of time, money and effort on the part of the company. It had already been given a clean bill of health when it received its AM radio licence. It had to go through the whole procedure again in receiving renewal of the FM licence. Probably in another two months' time when it applies for renewal of the television licence, it will have to do the same thing again.

I would respectfully suggest that this is one area of Cabinet directive on cross media ownership that should be changed. Perhaps the Cabinet would take this into consideration, still allowing the CRTC to address the areas of concern and need. But once they have arrived at a particular decision, I feel that a company should not have to go through the same process time and time again.

I would like to reiterate that there have been significant changes in the general environment as it pertains to the newspaper industry. However, this is not to say that concerns in this area do not remain. I congratulate the Hon. Member for York West for bringing this Bill to the floor of the House of Commons at this time. But the solutions we may seek need to be tempered somewhat by the changes that I have mentioned.

I suggest that the House should give quick passage to Bill C-29 which looks after the entire area of competitiveness and combines investigation and the like so as to modernize the competition laws of Canada. This will give us an opportunity to stimulate newspaper competition. After we see how well the competition laws deal with the issue, perhaps we will be in a better position to see whether we do in fact need Bill C-226.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, as the previous speaker mentioned, the Bill before us today would place limits on the concentration of ownership of daily newspapers in Canada at the national level. Presumably its purpose is to ensure that concentration does not lead to restrictions on the freedom of the press or reduce diversity of opinion. It is assumed therefore, that concentration of ownership restricts freedom of the press and that concentration somehow restricts diversity of opinion. That is the assumption upon which this Bill was written.

The problem is that there really is no conclusive proof that concentration of ownership has such a result. I would like to point out to the House that it may be that concentration of ownership, in certain circumstances, may encourage a diversity of opinion.

The evidence is as follows. First, as many observers of newspapers can readily conclude, there has been a great increase in the number of one newspaper cities in the United States, Canada and Europe. One would assume that this would decrease the diversity of opinion. What has happened, however, is that there is a great diversity of news available through a variety of newspapers, all owned by the same person or company in many instances. There is competition within a newspaper. We are all aware of the journalists who often take opposing views on the same subjects and we find their views on the same day, on the same page of many newspapers in North America.

There is also competition within the media. Traditional types of newspapers, which I believe are referred to as broad sheet papers—I stand to be corrected—have been replaced in many markets by tabloid newspapers. It is clear that poor performance or perhaps failure to keep up with changing demand attracts competitors. We have the example in Canada of the Sun newspapers, which have developed at an astonishing rate across the country from absolutely nothing a number of years ago, which express an editorial point of view. It is clearly quite different from many of the traditional newspapers. In Quebec, there is a similar newspaper—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (1800)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Honour the Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, His Honour was pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

Bill C-3, an Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof—Chapter No. 6.

Bill S-2, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of General Harvey Fudge and Audrey Marie Saunders.

Bill S-3, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Louis Philippe Nadeau and Marie Thérèse Rita Brulé.

Bill S-4, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Ernest Hodel and Norma Dora Laurie.

Bill S-5, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Benjamin Josheph Andrade and Heather Winnifred Andrade.

Bill S-6, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Juan Andrade and Emilia Rodriguez.

Bill S-7, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Henri Patry and Aldéa Béa Pitt.

Bill S-8, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Joseph Roland Réjean Daoust and Marie Lise Sylvie Girard.

Bill S-9, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Pearl Kim Lee and Thomas Siegfried Wieland.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—LAY-OFFS BY INCO AT PORT COLBORNE. (B) JOB RETRAINING INQUIRY

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, as a result of questions I raised a short while ago, I would like to deal with the subject of research and development, a topic which has seen some media coverage in the last few weeks from Liberal leadership contenders who are filling the air with rhetoric on that subject and, indeed, on other subjects as well. Sometimes it is difficult to distinguish between what is Liberal Party policy and what is being said by these mini-Prime Ministers for their own purposes.

Perhaps we will have to wait until the leadership convention is over before the current Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) will once again have to contend with reality instead of catering to the whims of delegates to the June convention. It is easy to say that he will sell PetroCan stations and make many other promises when he has aspirations to be Prime Minister. However, if the Minister really wanted to be Prime Minister he should have taken part in last year's convention.

There is a lack of adequate incentives for companies to indulge in adequate research and development. Hand in hand with that is the lack of facilities for retraining workers who face extinction due to the ever-changing needs of the high-tech workplace. A case in point is the closing of a manufacturing plant in Fort Erie called Hart & Cooley, throwing about 70 people out of work. I think the first priority of those charged with the development of science and technology should be to get rid of the "pie in the sky" attitude which deals in science fiction rhetoric and concocts wonderful generalities about happenings in the future. What we need is a common sense approach to the questions facing taxpayers and indeed voters, not only in the 1990s but right now.

Take, for example, the response given by the Minister to a question directed to him by the Conservative spokesman on science and technology, the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon). The Hon. Member requested that the Government make a co-ordinated effort to ensure that jobs connected to the space program come to Canada. He specifically asked that the 88 Canadian companies that have already submitted proposals for contracts with the space program be given first consideration in the awarding of any contracts.

Instead of answering this specific question, the Minister carried on with generalities which gave no indication that he was prepared to guarantee that Canadians get priority in the letting of contracts. This is indicative of the Minister's and, indeed, of the Government's very fuzzy approach to the whole question of science and technology. It is clearly this approach that has led to the current lack of opportunities for Canadians in this very important field.

This attitude was underlined again in the last Budget which was supposed to consolidate the recovery, yet failed to extend research and development benefits as defined under the Income Tax Act to the development of computer software. This is one area which will bring Canada to the forefront of the high technology world, yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) failed to give consideration to helping out that fledgling industry, nor did he even consider adding to the funding available for the total research and development package sufficient funding to bring it back to the level which it enjoyed back in the year 1968.

Let us have some assistance for what I feel is a very important program. Otherwise we may find ourselves at the portal of the year 2000 with the technology of the 1970s, and we will have to blame someone for this problem. No doubt the Minister of Finance will be chosen for that honour along with the Minister of State for Science and Technology. To avoid such a scenario, it is absolutely essential that modern industry develop new products to make use of the workers and processes made obsolete.

Let me take a case in point. The Inco plant in Port Colborne had to lay off 490 workers because of decreased demand for its electrolytic nickel. Why does this kind of thing need to occur? It is a disaster, Mr. Speaker, when in a town of 20,000 people, 500 people are laid off. I know that is not the mandate of Government to tell private industry if it can or cannot shut down a plant or lay off workers. This is approaching too much the ideals of our friends to the left, physically as well as philosophically. However, it does make sense to provide adequate financial incentives to such companies to look into new markets and innovative products. That is what we need to do.

The same people in the same place could be manufacturing the products of the 1980s instead of opting for the nice sounding but unpleasant prospect of early retirement. One group which must not be forgotten is the unemployed people who are over 40 years of age, many of whom will have great difficulty indeed being rehired because of their age and lack of up-to-date skills. Therefore, the Government must take the responsibility to ensure that these people are retrained and encouraged to once again enter the work force. The Government must help them out of the lonely abyss in which they find themselves when they are too young to retire and too old to be easily redirected to another career.

Who is to blame for this problem? Indeed, the Government must accept some of the blame for not encouraging companies to pursue the new markets they need and the development of new products. The companies too must take some of the blame for not devoting more of their energies to those directions.

In conclusion, it seems sad and incomprehensible that we in Canada are spending only a shade over 1 per cent of our GNP on research and development while our competitors are spending considerably more. With a GNP like that of the United States, the amount of money spent is staggering, and it appears certain that if the same trend continues we are doomed to have a second rate branch plant economy.

• (1810)

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am happy that the Hon. Member arrived at the point of the question. When he began to speak, I was surprised; I thought he was dealing with the wrong subject when asking his question. The question is with regard to Inco at Port Colborne. I have a reply for him concerning the question he asked on April 3. I hope that the point I make tonight answers the question he asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), not the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston). I am not sure he was really on the point of the question. I have a response regarding the Inco situation which I will give in French.

[Translation]

As the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) is certainly aware, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian mining industry has been dealt a severe blow these past few years because of the softening of the demand on the international market. That is one of the reasons why INCO has decided to end its production of electrolytic nickel in Port Colborne. This restraint measure should improve INCO's position as a low cost nickel producer. The resulting layoffs will affect 415 hourly-paid workers who have received a 12 week advance notice, except those with over five years of service who are entitled to a severance pay of one week salary for each year of service up to a maximum of 26 weeks. In order to minimize the actual number of layoffs, the company has offered to study, together with representatives of Section 6200 of the United Steelworkers of America, programs of early retirement for eligible hourly-paid workers. They hope that by encouraging eligible workers to opt for an early retirement, they can reduce the actual number of layoffs. Some 75 other salaried employees will be laid off. The company has hired an independent professional counselling firm to help salaried employees thus affected to secure other jobs, to move to other areas or to plan their retirement. INCO has offered to examine manpower adjustment issues with Canada Employment and Immigration Commission officials and union representatives, and to set up a committee of the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council for the purpose of suggesting ways of helping these workers by offering them new jobs and career retraining. CEIC officials for the Ontario region have contacted INCO's representatives who have confirmed their intention to set up a committee of the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council. CEIC officials are to meet with union representatives to seek their support for this committee. The CEIC will study the economic context of the Port Colborne community and surrounding area to determine whether these special manpower adjustment measures are warranted. In the past, such cooperation between the CEIC, INCO and the union have solved similar problems resulting from job losses. I believe their continued cooperation will alleviate the current situation.

That is the reply I have for the Member concerning the question he asked of the Minister of Employment and Immigration on April 3.

VISIBLE MINORITIES—USE OF GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS TO INCREASE REPRESENTATION. (B) CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION VACANCY

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I will address my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Gourd). I am pleased he is here this evening. It follows a question I raised yesterday regarding the use of Governor in Council appointments to increase the participation of visible minorities on boards and commissions. I am, of course, following up on some of the recommendations in the Equality Now report. I begin by quoting one of the black actresses who said:

> If we are not accurately seen in the mirror that the media holds up to society, then clearly we are somehow not part of that society.

This last weekend at a conference in Winnipeg, which I referred to in my question, there was Focus on the Visible Minorities in Advertising Conference. We heard a very touching story from Ron Nadeau with native communications. He gave the illustration of a young native boy in school whose teacher asked him to cut out of the catalogue a picture of somebody who looked like his family.

The young native boy wrote to one of the catalogue companies and said: "I was not able to fulfil the request of my teacher because when I looked in your catalogue there was nobody like my family. Everybody was white." He said to the catalogue company: "In the next catalogue, I hope you will have somebody who looks like me."

There are seven Indian reserves in my constituency. The Indian chiefs often ask me why there are never any Indians in the advertising that we see over television. That same conference dealt with the question of the participation of visible minorities in advertising. I was a bit disturbed and appalled. Ad agencies and even large companies with public relations departments that spend hundreds of thousands of dollars on advertising failed to be present at that conference.

We should focus on the CRTC and various boards that deal with regulations and the way that visible minorities are portrayed in Canada because they have an awful lot of legislative clout. In terms of the impact on Canadian citizens the CRTC, and possibly the CTC, the Canadian Transport Commission, have an enormous amount of weight, and both have a fantastic impact on Canadian citizens.

Recommendation 21 of Equality Now report of a committee on which I had the privilege to serve, urges the federal Government to use Governor in Council appointments, to increase the participation of visible minorities on federal boards and commissions. On page 51 of that report we specifically refer to the CRTC.

When I asked the Minister yesterday to act on this matter, I specifically referred to the CRTC. He said he was very happy with the general principle of the participation of all racial and of all other groups of our society on these boards. But the 19-member board of the CRTC is an all-white board. There are no participants of the visible minorities. I was urging the Government to consider the fact that presently there is a vacancy. In fact, that vacancy has been there since February of 1983, for over one year. There is an opportunity for the Government to make sure there is a chance for all members of our society to participate.

There is a myth out there that all the visible minorities are not qualified. There have been enough studies which have shown that that is not true. In fact, the CBC had a trainee program and instead of using the old boys' network to advertise for the applications, they used the ethnic press and ethnic media. There were 800 applications of which they themselves judged at least 150 were eminently qualified to fill the eight positions which existed.

We are not asking for quotas. None of the visible minorities have ever asked for quotas. We are not asking that unqualified people be appointed. We are saying there are qualified people. Let us get going and implement some of the recommendations of Equality Now. Let us have some action now. I hope that the Minister will, if he has not done any kind of survey or study, undertake to make sure that in our society there is an equitable participation of all members of society, of all ethnic cultural groups, especially after the Equality Now report of the visible minorities in our society. I will await the answer of the Parliamentary Secretary. I hope that it is a much better one than the answer I received from the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Collenette) yesterday.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Gourd (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, as usual, the Hon. Member gets all his ideas mixed up. He talks about appointments, about the CRTC, about the CBC. All this is just a pretext to deliver a speech in front of his constituents. As for the answer to his question—

[English]

—it is the practice of the federal Government to use Governor in Council appointments to increase the participation of visible minorities on federal boards and commissions, as well as in the senior management of the Public Service and Crown corporations. The Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Collenette) since assuming office has been increasingly active in the promotion of candidates to various boards and commissions as positions became vacant.

The Minister recognized that the federal Government must tap the immense pool of talent and experience which is present in the visible minority community.

[Translation]

I could easily quote a number of people from visible minorities who have been appointed to various functions within commissions or the federal Public Service: Mrs. Ann Cools who was elevated to the Senate; Jean Augustine, who was appointed to the Royal Commission on the Status of Women; Juanita Westmorland-Traoré, to the Canadian Human Rights Commission; Jean Gamage, to the Harbourfront Corporation; Tom Shoyama, to Petro-Canada and to the Royal Commission on the Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada; and Mr. David Suzuki, to the Science Council of Canada.

• (1820)

[English]

In addition, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism has brought the matter of Governor in Council appointments of visible minorities to the attention of his Cabinet colleagues. He is confident they will all recognize the importance of that community and its contribution to this country.

[Translation]

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this provides an adequate answer to my hon. colleague.

FISHERIES—COWICHAN ESTUARY—GOVERNMENT POLICY. (B) APPLICATION OF POLICY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, since 1980 when this Parliament began I have been concerned and on a number of occasions have raised the issue of the Cowichan estuary. The people who live in that area, fishermen on the British Columbia coast, and myself as their representative, have been trying to get the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to protect the estuary as a very important part of our fish habitat. The importance of estuaries in the life cycle of salmon has only been recently recognized, but it is becoming increasingly clear that unless we protect our estuaries we do not have any hope of maintaining a salmon industry on the Pacific coast.

The destruction of fish habitat, Mr. Speaker, is equivalent to the destruction of the fishing industry. That in fact is what we see happening in British Columbia today. The neglect of fish habitat by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is a very important piece in the jugsaw puzzle of fisheries mismanagement. As they say, the chickens are now coming home to roost, but unfortunately the salmon are not coming home to spawn.

We face a very serious crisis on the Pacific coast. Cutbacks on fishing time for trawlers to supposedly help conserve dwindling stocks of Chinook salmon mean these fishermen are not going to be able to get enough weeks in fishing to qualify for their UIC benefits. They are cut back to two months instead of the usual five and a half months. That is one indication of the Department's mismanagement of that situation. As the President of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union said, the fisheries policy is really a fast track to bankruptcy for these trollers. The restrictions on the Gulf trolling fleet will be followed soon by restrictions on other gear types.

The Cowichan estuary is critical to one of the most important Chinook stocks off Vancouver Island. The loss of habitat there is inexcusable and will result in the direct loss of jobs. As a result of a trade-off or sell-out that the Minister participated in, Doman's Mill was able to trade 23 acres of farmland for the right to boom logs in some 40 acres of inter-tidal area within the estuary. Then the Minister and his Department have the nerve to call this a no-net loss of fish habitat. Let us get this straight, Mr. Speaker. We are not questioning Doman's right to be on the estuary and have some booming grounds. That was recognized several years ago. But we do question the need to expand that booming ground. The local economy badly needs the jobs at Doman's Mill, but it also needs the jobs in the tourist and fishing industry which will be lost if we do not protect our estuary. The mill does not need extra booming area.

A 1978 study for the fisheries and marine service of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, which was Appendix 11 of the Cowichan Estuary Task Force Report, estimated that at times Doman's were storing logs in the estuary in excess of 14 months. This is far beyond the normal requirements for a mill storing logs. It recommended that there should be a 20 acre limit for Doman's to store logs in the estuary. I would like to hear from the Department and the Minister why the Fisheries department abandoned that policy. Why did they abandon the policy of saying there would be a 20 acre limit for Doman industry to boom in that area.

On December 20 I asked the Minister questions about the so-called no-net loss policy. I asked if there would be a public process for any exchanges that were made. The Minister assured me that that would in fact happen. However, it did not happen. In fact, the public was kept completely in the dark about the conditions of the exchange. Members of the Cowichan Estuary Preservation Society were in fact isolated from everything that was happening. Fisheries Department officials did not even answer their phone calls.

I am not a person who traditionally likes to engage in bashing bureaucrats. I think that generally speaking they do a good job. However, there seemed to be some directive from on high that prevented these people from dealing in an open way with the people from the Cowichan Estuary Preservation Society. We want to know what studies were done to determine if the exchange was in fact a fair exchange, and if in fact there was a no-net loss of habitat. If there were any studies I urge the Minister to release them and make them available. I suspect that we will be waiting a long time because I do not think any study can possibly justify the trading of 23 acres of farmland for 40 acres of very valuable intertidal estuary area.

We want answers. The public is entitled to answers on this very important public resource. We want to know why there is a sell-out of our fisheries and a betrayal of fish habitat. We want to know if that is the pattern that will be followed with the Kemano II project. I would very much appreciate if the Parliamentary Secretary could be straightforward in the answers he gives to these questions.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, representing the beautiful constituency of Restigouche in the Atlantic area where we have the Atlantic salmon coming up the rivers to spawn, newsprint mills and the importance of forestry and fishing, I can fully understand the concern that is being brought forward here this afternoon by the Hon. Member. However, I would hasten to remind the Hon. Member that he would have had an equal opportunity to pose his questions at the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry the other day when we devoted the entire time to questions relating to the Pacific Coast. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we had officials on hand at the Standing Committee to respond directly on fishery matters in greater detail than we would have had the time for in the House.

However, the Hon. Member has raised a number of questions relating to the Cowichan Estuary and our Department's fish habitat management policy. In recent times the Minister himself and other Department officials have been making statements with respect to fish management, salmon management and the whole range of the subject he has raised here today.

The waters of the Cowichan estuary on Vancouver Island have been used for storing logs by a number of forest companies for many years. Our Department has been negotiating with these companies and with the Province of British Columbia to reduce the total amount of log storage in fish habitat areas within the estuary. I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, to announce that our regional staff are finalizing arrangements with these companies and the B.C. Government which will result in a reduction of more than 50 per cent of the total acreage of log storage in the estuary. This reduction will result in the restoration of valuable fish habitat and serves to illustrate well the fish habitat restoration goal which is clearly outlined in our Department's discussion paper Toward a Fish Habitat Management Policy.

Not only will fish habitat currently altered by log storage be restored but, in addition, some land in the estuary, which is currently not available as fish habitat, will be developed into productive fish habitat as part of our overall habitat improvement efforts in the estuary. This will serve to further increase the total amount of productive fish habitat in the estuary. The Cowichan estuary is thus an excellent example of the kind of habitat restoration project our department will be pursuing through the implementation of the fish habitat management policy.

The Hon. Member has also asked about opportunities for the public to review these projects. Our Department's discussion paper on fish habitat points out that public consultation on major development affecting fish habitat is a necessary strategy as part of an overall fish habitat policy.

While it is not the Department's intention to consult with the public on the numerous minor habitat issues it deals with on a regular basis, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that for those major new developments with potentially significant impacts on fish habitat, public consultation will be an integral part of our Department's decision-making process. In this regard, my Department has participated in public meetings which provided interested citizens—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The time allowed to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has expired.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.32 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

ALLEGATIONS MADE BY MEMBER OF QUEBEC NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

Mr. Paul-André Massé (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the National Assembly PQ Member for the riding of Saint-Jean alleged that I had sent to a group of senior citizens of my riding a threatening letter concerning a Canadian Government grant for the construction of a community and recreation centre for the elderly. First of all, Mr. Speaker, it is despicable to insinuate that I would have done such a thing to the detriment of any group of my fellow Canadians, particularly senior citizens. In fact, it was an attempt by the PQ Member to deceive the population and gloss over a commitment he failed to keep concerning the senior citizens of our region, unlike the Government of Canada and the Municipality of Saint-Jean which did live up to their promise. Besides, the information media in my riding unanimously reported that the PQ Member spent so much time pondering over the issue that he completely forgot all about his promise.

Mr. Speaker, no wonder the PQ Member for the riding of Saint-Jean could not care less about senior citizens, because his leader, Mr. René Lévesque, admitted himself during a trip to France in the summer of 1983 that the elderly are an obstacle to the independence of Quebec, which happens to be the true option of the PQ Government.

SPORTS

FUNDING FOR FEDERATIONS

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, according to information I received today from the Vice-President of the Council of Executive Directors of the National Sport and Recreation Centre, none of the sport federations have received funding as yet for this fiscal year. The normal procedure is for the federations to receive their first cheque at the beginning of April. In the case of this year, it would have been April 2. At the same time they usually receive a statement of the amount of funds allotted to them for the year, with a guarantee of funds on a quarterly basis.

This year no cheques were received, and no official communication has been received by any of the sport federations as to why the funds are not coming from the Department of Fitness and Amateur Sport. There is a total lack of communication between the sport federations and the Minister of State responsible for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Olivier).

The only information any of the federations have is by way of rumours going around the Fitness and Amateur Sport branch. It looks as if even the sport consultants in the Department of Fitness and Amateur Sport do not know what is going on. The rumours are, however, that the Minister has decided to examine each of the sports on an individual basis in order to familiarize himself with each respective sport and with the funding system.

One of the other rumours floating around is that one aspect which is receiving the Ministers' attention is the question of bilingualism within each sport. It seems that he is looking at a way of getting the sport federations to sign agreements on the level of bilingualism in each sport, by way of a contractual agreement. The initial reaction of the sport federations, of course, is that this would not be acceptable, but—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time, unfortunately, has expired.

AID TO MUNICIPALITIES

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN QUEBEC AND OTTAWA

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last weekend and again today, the newspapers have referred to the negotiations between Quebec and Ottawa on the issue of financial assistance for municipalities and have pointed out that the situation was worse than ever.

Mr. Speaker, we should remember that, with respect to the conversations which began in October 1983, the negotiations carried on between Quebec and the federal Department of Employment and Immigration have always dealt with temporary job creation programs such as Canada Works and the local job creation projects, as well as, according to an agreement signed some time ago, with "any other program which could be added with the agreement of both parties". The new provincial Minister of Municipal Affairs seems to be saying that the Province was cheated by the federal Government. When his predecessor, the Hon. Jacques Léonard, came to Ottawa early in October and later on to negotiate, the programs mentioned were for temporary job creation. This is what happened. Then this is why the non-profit organizations and the other groups which submitted projects under the Canada Works Program could get the grants. Under the agreement on temporary job creation programs, the new phase of the programs will begin next fall. Following an exchange of letters between the governments, the municipalities will be able to know what their share will be. These are the agreements which were negotiated. It is also important to point out that there will be correspondence between the Quebec Government and the federal Government about this situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The time allotted to the Hon. Member has expired.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

DECISION SOUGHT ON GANANOQUE CABLE TELEVISION LICENCE

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring the attention of this House to the continuing saga of the Town of Gananoque and its seven-year battle with CRTC to obtain cable television service. This town is located in the Toronto-Montreal corridor, and it is amazing in today's technologically advanced society that Gananoque is still in the stone age.

Seven years ago a licence to provide cable service was approved by CRTC but the company had difficulty in fulfilling the requirements, and CRTC was forced to lift the licence from the company. Last September CRTC received two submissions to provide cable service to Gananoque. Eight months have passed with no decision forthcoming, despite my repeated communications with the Chairman, and his assurances that it was a high priority item.

No response to my representations can only lead me to conclude that the Government cares little for the needs of a small community which cannot compete with the mandarins in their ivory towers. It is unthinkable that a government Department given a mandate to provide service to the public is so insensitive that it refuses to cut through its own bureaucratic red tape and produce a decision on whether company A or company B should be licensed.

It is long past the time when Gananoque should have had cable service, and I call upon the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) to intervene on its behalf to obtain a decision immediately, ending a seven-year long battle to obtain what most communities in this country have, cable vision service.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TAX TREATMENT OF WORKERS' HOLIDAY PAY

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, at the end of this month workers at the Gardiner Denver plant in Woodstock, Ontario, will be laid off because the plant is closing its doors. All of the workers have earned holiday pay for the amount of time they were employed by the plant. The Revenue Canada District Office in London, Ontario, has instructed the payroll clerk at the plant to consider holiday pay as bonus pay and to withhold 40 per cent of the employee's final cheques. Revenue Canada claims that when workers take holiday pay instead of holidays, they are attempting to increase their annual salary, and the 40 per cent deduction is there to discourage this practice.

There is, however, another provision of the Employer's Guide issued by Revenue Canada which allows a 15 per cent tax withholding. This is more in line with the standard payroll deductions for these workers. If the 15 per cent figure were used instead of 40 per cent, it could mean an increase of between $600 and $2,000 immediate cash for the workers at this plant who are about to be laid off with little prospect of further employment. Revenue Canada is penalizing laid-off workers by using a provision in the Guide designed in times of greater employment, and which today is simply and needlessly taking money out of people's pockets. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) should immediately instruct his Department to apply the 15 per cent standard deduction instead of the 40 per cent penalty.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

ATTITUDE OF PARTI QUÉBÉCOIS

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the statement made by my colleague the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois), I should like to denounce the hypocrisy of the PQ Government which claims that the federal Government will not contribute certain amounts of money to municipalities, while Minister Garon refuses to let the federal Government contribute $10 million to help Quebec's Middle and Lower North Shore fishermen build processing plants and install ice-houses.

The money is there. Yet, for the past 15 days, the Quebec minister of fisheries has been refusing to meet Middle and Lower North Shore fishermen, while the federal Government is ready to spend $10 million on fishing facilities.

I find, therefore, the attitude of the PQ Government hypocritical, for it claims that there is no federal money available for a particular program when he had known all along that none was available, while refusing the contribution of the federal Government which is willing to invest $10 million.

I think that by refusing to meet with these fishermen, the minister of fisheries is showing contempt for those people while the federal Government is always ready to cooperate when need be, for the common good.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

REPORTED PLAN TO CLOSE DEPARTMENT'S OFFICE IN SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, there is a real concern that the Department of Supply and Services is contemplating a move from Saint John. The Minister has confirmed the matter is being considered. Should this closure take place, it will mean a loss to Saint John of about 16 permanent jobs. However, that is just the tip of the iceberg. That Department spends approximately $35 million annually from the Saint John office, about half of which goes into the immediate area. Should that dry up, it could chop another 100 to 200 jobs.

The City is already staggering under an intolerable unemployment rate which the Government has done nothing but exacerbate. Despite our efforts to have additional grain shipments originate from one of the finest ports in North America, the Government does nothing. It crows about the great rail expansion in the West, and watches complacently while the CRP hangs another five or six jobs out to dry in Saint John. Speaking of the railway, this Liberal bunch cancels one of the most popular passenger runs in the nation, the Atlantic Limited, for purely political concessions, leaving New Brunswick's industrial centre with no direct link with upper Canada, and throwing more people onto the dole.

They close down Revenue Canada offices and cut back on post office operations. When is this outfit going to wake up to the fact that there is a part of this country which deserves more than an occasional visit by the Minister responsible for unemployment, mouthing platitudes which do nothing for the hundreds in that city who, along with thousands of other Canadians, can hardly wait for the chance to show their gratitude?

FINANCE

EFFECT OF TOBACCO TAX ON FARMERS

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I am on my feet again to address the problems in the tobacco and related industries. A 32 per cent cut in tobacco production is proposed for this year. That will relate directly to 800 farms not in production, a loss of some 10,000 jobs, and a $100 million loss to growers. Using an economic factor of six, that means a $600 million loss to local communities and businesses.

• (1415)

We agree that there is a slow natural progression away from cigarettes, Mr. Speaker. They can adapt to that. They cannot adapt to the stupid taxation spiral being placed on their product by the Government. Why does the federal Government need to tax a $280 million product in the amount of $1.14 billion? The devastating effect of this action cannot be adapted to by anyone. We need a halt to the taxation spiral, and a consideration of reductions. We need an increase in the Delhi Research Station budget from $1.6 million to $5 million to find other acceptable crops. We need the Minister of Agriculture to sign the amendment to the Farm Products Marketing Act, which apparently has been sitting on his desk since Christmas. Above all, Mr. Speaker, we need the Government to listen to the problems, show concern, and take action.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WOMAN'S FAST TO SECURE REUNIFICATION OF FAMILY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, today is the twenty-third day without food for Kazimiera Cebula, a courageous 50 year old woman who asks nothing more than to be reunited with her son, Janusz Lata, and his wife and children. She has been outside the Polish consulate in Montreal in rain and snow, with her companion, Ewa Szypura, who has learned that her husband and daughter will receive exist visas from Poland, but who has chosen to continue her 19 day old fast out of solidarity with her compatriot. They are dangerously weak, but determined to see their families.

Since the hunger strikes of other desperate people at Polish consulates, both in Montreal and Toronto last year, all of which were ended without tragedy, the Polish Government continues to violate the most basic of human rights, the reunification of families, guaranteed in the Helsinki Accord to which Poland is a signatory. With calculated inhumanity, some Polish citizens, often former members of the trade union Solidarity, continue to be blackmailed into leaving their homeland, while others are held to ransom and denied exit visas.

I wish to extend my deep felt sympathy and encouragement to these two brave women and to the many families suffering a similar plight. I urge the Department of External Affairs, which I understand has issued visas for all the persons concerned, to strengthen its representations to the Polish Government.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ALLEGED SOLICITATION OF FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS FROM ONTARIO COUNTY COURT JUDGES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of 29 of his Cabinet Ministers, my question is for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister comment on the propriety of county court judges in Ontario, whose political independence should be paramount even though most of them have been appointed by a Liberal Government, now receiving individually addressed dunning letters on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, asking for financial contributions, with these letters having a purported signature of P. E. Trudeau, and a return address on the envelope of 24 Sussex Drive, Ottawa?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member suggesting that I signed those letters and have some knowledge of them? I have to know what he is talking about.

USE OF PRIME MINISTER'S SIGNATURE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister indicate whether he actually authorized his signature to be used on such letters to the judiciary, or has the Liberal Party of Canada forged his signature?

An Hon. Member: Or is there another P. E. Trudeau?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Thank God for the Opposition, there is only one of those, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Thank God, and we would like to get rid of him.

Mr. Trudeau: I have no idea what the Hon. Member is talking about. I do know that I have received fund raising letters signed by the Leader of the Opposition, or the former Leader of the Opposition. Somehow I got on that mailing list. I was not disgraced, and I did not suspect that the Leader of the Opposition was unloyal to his Party and trying to come over to my side.

● (1420)

USE OF SIGNATURE MACHINE INQUIRY

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister of Canada indicating that almost any Tom, Dick or Harry can utilize the signature of the Prime Minister of Canada? Also, would the Prime Minister mind indicating if the rather expensive signature machine provided by taxpayers' funds in the Prime Minister's office was used for this particular purpose, and if government paid employees, for instance, are being used to collect and collate the returned letters, either at the official residence of the Prime Minister—not the Prime Minister's home but the official residence of the Prime Minister—or at the Post Office here in Ottawa?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I say for the second time that I have no idea what the Hon. Member is talking about. He may be fabricating, as he sometimes does.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: If he were really honest in his desire to obtain information, he would have had the courtesy of giving me notice of this and sending me at least a copy of what he is talking about.

I do not know. I do know that my name is sometimes used in vain. I do not know the circumstances of this particular case.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CABINET SOLIDARITY

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. A few days ago, he met with all the leadership candidates to ensure that there would be no breach in Cabinet solidarity and also, I believe, to set some guidelines for the conduct and liberty of action of those ministers who are candidates for the leadership. Yesterday, the Minister of Labour ferociously criticized the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and former President of the Treasury Board, when he said that he was largely to blame for the problems the Minister of Agriculture had with milk quotas in 1976.

Can the Right Hon. Prime Minister tell the House today whether he feels that the Minister of Labour is to be censured for taking such a stand? I think that all Canadian farmers and dairy producers would be very glad to know was actually responsible for the problems they had in 1976.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member had the courtesy, as opposed to his colleague from Ontario, to send me something in writing about the matter which worried him. I would like to thank him for this. He sent me a clipping from the Canadian Press which has one sentence between quotation marks. I do not know whether the quote is accurate. I could check on it, but, for the moment, I shall simply read it:

[English]

Mr. Chrétien was at the origin of Mr. Whelan's problems in 1976.

Concerning the problems with the milk quotas, this looks to me like a product of the reporter's imagination since he says that this may be what the Minister was talking about. I see nothing here which would justify the Hon. Member in saying that this is what the Minister of Labour meant. He referred to a problem in 1976. What problems did the Minister of Agriculture have in 1976? If he is like everyone else, he must have had many! Are they problems which come under his ministerial responsibility? I really cannot say. However, on the basis of this article, I do not see why anyone should be concerned, least of all the Hon. Member for La Salle, or rather Joliette.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER GIVE DETAILS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): The Right Hon. Prime Minister is well aware that the constituency of Joliette is La Salle's constituency.

Mr. Speaker, I can well understand that the Prime Minister does not want to look at this article seriously. In fact, I sent him the press clipping because I did not want to hear him say that he knew nothing about this statement. Obviously, the Minister of Labour ferociously criticized his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and former President of the Treasury Board, right in front of the press.

The Prime Minister recalls quite well the problems that come up in 1976 because of a reduction in dairy production. In view of the circumstances and because of the importance of the leadership race in which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is a candidate, does the Prime Minister find it appropriate for the Minister of Labour to blame, in a manner I would call disgraceful, his colleague for the problems which came up in 1976 and for which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is supposed to have been mainly responsible as President of the Treasury Board? What do the guidelines on Cabinet solidarity specifically prescribe? Will the Prime Minister feel like giving his Minister of Labour a good dressing-down or does he find it normal and helpful for the sake of Government management that his Ministers should tear each other's eyes out in public?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am greatly touched by the concern expressed by the Hon. Member for Joliette. He worries about solidarity on this side of the House. I am very thankful for this and consider it another indication that he is quietly withdrawing from his party to sit as an independent. In fact, this does not surprise me since we all recall that, a few years ago, he decided to cross the floor of the House to sit as an independent Member because of the hypocrisy displayed by his party concerning the language issue.

This having been said, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member used words like "disgraceful" and "ferociously criticized". He added nothing to the problems I raised. Mr. Chrétien, or rather Mr. Ouellet was quoted as making the statement to which I have referred. Concerning the milk problem and other issues, there is nothing to show that this is what Mr. Ouellet was referring to. He said exactly this:

• (1425)

[English]

Mr. Chrétien was at the origin of Mr. Whelan's problems in 1976.

[Translation]

What problem? Mr. Whelan had many problems in those days; so did I and so did the Hon. Member. I shall therefore have to see what it is all about, I mean, whether this is the newspaper's or the Hon. Member's interpretation, or whether Mr. Ouellet actually made these accusations, in which case, I shall have the opportunity to study them.

Mr. Speaker: One last supplementary.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER REVIEW SITUATION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): First, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the Prime Minister is no longer as clear-sighted as he used to be, for I have no intention of leaving my Party.

The question is this: it seems that the Prime Minister does not give much credence to that statement. Could the Prime Minister make a small effort—and I know he can do that and remember—he remembers very well the unrelenting fight of dairy producers against the Minister of Agriculture over the 1976 milk quota cutbacks. Could the Prime Minister tell us quite simply today whether his Minister of Labour's statement is true? Farmers and dairy producers would like to know if the then President of the Treasury Board was indeed responsible for those policies.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, according to the newspaper clipping which the Hon. Member himself sent me, Mr. Ouellet said a sentence which I will repeat for the third time:

[English]

Mr. Chrétien was at the origin of Mr. Whelan's problems in 1976.

What problem? Which problem? Which of Mr. Whelan's many problems?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: Leader problems.

Mr. Trudeau: The Member of Parliament is specifying a problem. He assumes that is the one Mr. Ouellet talked about. I repeat to him: do we know what Mr. Ouellet talked about? I went on to say that we all have problems. The Hon. Member has had problems with his own Party, for gosh sakes. Now he says he still wants to sit there. I said, Mr. Speaker, I will try and find out what Mr. Ouellet said. Nothing can be more fair than that. I think it is less than fair, when the Hon. Member assumes that, when he was talking of problems, he was talking of specific problems, and that is what the press is doing too.

Oral Questions

CRIMINAL CODE

VIDEO FILMS PORTRAYING VIOLENCE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. The Toronto police have reported that snuff video films that show an actual murder for entertainment are being rented out to children as young as 12 years of age. Is the Minister aware of this explosion of video films that peddle obscene violence? If the Minister is aware, and if he respects the opinion of police who say that we have lost control over pornography in the video boom, is the Minister taking time out of his leadership campaign for urgent action to help stop or curtail this culture of commercialized murder for fun?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that we are way ahead of him. The amendments which I have introduced to the Criminal Code will deal very explicitly with pornography, violence, and cruelty. I would suggest to all Hon. Members on the other side that if they co-operated in getting Bill C-19 through, we would have an earlier end to this problem.

• (1430)

Mr. Heap: It is not as simple as that. I am sorry that the Minister does not consider either the urgency of this Bill or the fact that he could have taken action much sooner.

It reminds me of how, six years ago, it took the murder of a 12-year old boy in Toronto to sting senior government Members into some kind of action on a similar problem.

PRESENTATION OF AMENDMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, nearly a year ago the Minister introduced a draft Bill on this very subject. If he had introduced it as a Bill, as legislation last fall, instead of it only being a draft, it would have been passed with widespread support and could now be used by the police.

Instead of introducing it when he could have done so, why did the Minister choose to bury it along with 306 pages of detail in the Criminal Code amendments? We do not know when he and his committee will be able to get it passed. Why did he not proceed with that one specific amendment which would have had immense support across the country?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman well knows that because of Opposition obstruction last year to our legislation, we were not introducing new legislation. We were awaiting the end of the session and the new Speech from the Throne. This legislation has now been before the House for over two months, and we have yet to have any enouragement from his Party in getting it through.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LIBYA—SHOOTING OF DEMONSTRATORS OUTSIDE LONDON EMBASSY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, could the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the House whether the Government has voiced its outrage and condemnation to the Libyan Government with respect to the recent, needless killing of peaceful demonstrators outside the Libyan embassy in London, England?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, like the Hon. Member, we are deeply shocked at the indiscriminate violence, and unjustified violence which has taken place from the Libyan headquarters or embassy in London, where a loss of life and injury to peaceful demonstrators have occurred, as I understand it.

We join with the British Government in condemning this terroristic act and urge the Libyan Government to take whatever steps are required to end it as quickly as possible. I have asked that our views be conveyed to the Libyan Government.

REQUEST FOR CANADIAN INITIATIVE IN LEADING WORLD-WIDE PROTEST

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, would the Government, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, originate some initiative, either within the United Nations or within the Commonwealth, to ensure that the United Kingdom is not left alone in protesting and condemning this savage breach of international order? Would Canada take the lead in a world-wide process with respect to this atrocity?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we would associate ourselves with the British Government in the statements and actions which it is taking. If that Government finds it useful in the resolution of the situation to undertake measures such as the one suggested by the Hon. Member, we would be receptive to our association and support. However, I think in the present circumstances we ought to allow the British Government, which in the past has shown particular skill in handling these situations, to take the lead. We would support it in whatever actions it thought useful.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDING FOR FEDERATIONS

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Will the Minister tell the House why he is holding Canada's amateur athletes hostage for the $30.6 million allocated for amateur sport in the Estimates, and why he has refused to sign the sport federations' funding agreements for this fiscal year, thereby jeopardizing the competitiveness of our athletes in the summer Olympics?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I have already signed the funding agreements with most sports federations for the first quarter of this fiscal year.

We are merely demanding that certain federations fully respect the laws and principles of this Parliament.

CRIMINAL CODE

PRESENTATION OF OBSCENITY AMENDMENT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. It follows on the questions of the Hon. Member for Spadina. The Minister knows that he has my support and the support of the New Democratic Party for the obscenity amendment to the Criminal Code. He must realize that 306 pages of amendments will take a great deal of time to process, even with every extensive co-operation. Would he consult with the Official Opposition and, if he obtains support, would he undertake to bring in a specific Bill with that one amendment so that we can deal with violent pornography immediately after the Easter recess?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, of course I am prepared, as I have been, to discuss these questions with the Opposition and to be as accommodating as members of the opposition Parties are prepared to be. I should remind the Hon. Member that there are many parts of the Criminal Code Bill which are of the utmost urgency. For instance, the drinking and driving provisions are of extreme urgency. If she is suggesting that the only thing which matters in this whole piece of legislation is that one provision; let me indicate that we need all that Bill, not just parts of it.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE CANADA

REQUEST FOR EARLY RETIREMENT FOR CERTAIN EMPLOYEES

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. There are in my riding several major penitentiaries, including the Archambault Institute, the regional admission centre and the minimum security facilities at Sainte-Anne-des-Plaines.

Very often staff members let me know of their concerns, Mr. Speaker; their assignment is getting increasingly more difficult, for they have to deal with individuals accused of aggressions and other violent crimes. In fact, we are all aware of the situation at the Sainte-Anne-des-Plaines institution.

It is difficult for people outside the Correctional Service to fully realize what is involved. Mr. Speaker, in its report the subcommittee has recognized the complexity of these people's assignment and has made recommendation as to the possibility of early retirement.

My question is this: What progress, if any, has been made concerning this recommendation which aims at preserving the health of these staff members who have greatly contributed to the Canadian judiciary system?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to inform the House that the Government is ready to recognize the stress under which prison guards and other employees dealing with convicts have to labour, and Treasury Board is now ready to start negotiating with Correctional Service Canada and the unions for the purpose of setting up and early retirement scheme for members of the Correctional Service who have lived under stress throughout their careers.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—PRESENTATION OF TASK FORCE REPORT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who, in July of last year, appointed the Hon. Mitchell Sharp and the Hon. Michael Starr to joint chairmanship of a task force to review conflict of interest guidelines relating to Ministers, Parliamentary Secretaries, exempt staff, full-time Governor in Council appointees, and public servants. In letters to the co-chairman, the Prime Minister asked that the matter be dealt with and that the report be submitted by the end of last year.

Last month Mr. Sharp indicated that the report would be ready and available for distribution at the end of this month. Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether or not that deadline will be met so that he may table in the House of Commons, upon receipt, the report of the task force?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would think that the deadline is likely to be met, but I cannot give a precise assurance. I talked to Mr. Sharp, perhaps a month and a half ago, and my recollection is that his report was finished, or almost finished, in English, and that it was going to be translated. If I recall correctly, I undertook to table it in the House when it was received. I will check on that latter point, but I think I made that undertaking. If so, I will be happy to inform the Hon. Member as soon as I know when it will be ready for tabling.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERCEDE ON BEHALF OF POLISH FAMILIES

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of External Affairs. The Minister has received a number of telegrams requesting his support on behalf of the families of two Polish women on a hunger strike in front of the Polish consulate in Montreal.

The Minister knows that the condition of those two women is rapidly deteriorating. Could he indicate if he has attempted to persuade the Polish government to allow those families to leave Poland?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been quite active on these particular cases. We know that the blockage is not as a result of Canadian practice because the persons involved can receive visas for admission to Canada. I understand, as a result of representations made by the Canadian Ambassador, that one particular case has been solved. The Polish authorities have indicated that Mrs. Szypura and her family will be reunited in Canada. That is very good news. I am not sure whether the Polish authorities have conveyed that directly to the persons concerned. We are still working on the second case. We hope to have good results.

I should add that among the Eastern European countries the Polish authorities have been the most receptive in this area of easing the reunification of families. I hope that their attitude will prevail in this second, unresolved case.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

FRIGATE PROGRAM

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. The Minister will know a report says that the memorandum of understanding on the NATO frigate project which was to be signed on April 6 last, was in fact not signed because of last minute demands by the United States. The report further said that the other seven countries involved in the project were outraged at the U.S. action and decided to go it alone without Washington. Can the Minister confirm this report and advise us if Canada is one of the seven outraged countries that plan on going ahead with the project without Washington?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I, with the Hon. Member, was disappointed at the indication that the Americans, although they had initially indicated they would sign the agreement, at the last minute identified some difficulties and did not sign. However, I want the hon. gentleman to consider that, in view of the advantages of having the largest possible group involved in the NATO frigate program, we are making every effort in order to rectify any difficulties that might have been identified by the United States in order to have them join in the program.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows the effect this loss of American technology will have on the project, not the least of which will be the increased sharing of costs and the increased sharing of the development. From the Minister's comments, we are obviously committed to go ahead. Will the Minister tell us what will be the additional cost to Canada if the United States stays out? What steps are being taken to ensure that Canada gets her share of the work on the project that was previously targeted for the United States?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I might indicate to the Hon. Member that the NATO frigate program is one that I identified in my previous responsibility as being one for us to participate in, in the national interest. Therefore I have insisted that we proceed within that agreement and that arrangement. However, as he will know, we are at a relatively preliminary stage. In effect, we would not be in a position to identify the total cost of the program nor the total involvement of Canada within that program.

I want to advise the Hon. Member that there would be a very close rapport between the amount of Canadian involvement and the industrial benefits that could be extracted from it. I might also indicate to the hon. gentleman that within the Canadian frigate program there is an amount of American technology that will be integrated. Of course our participation may include the aspect of weapons management and systems integration within the NATO frigate program.

AMENDING LEGISLATION REQUESTED TO PROVIDE PAY-OUT FOR FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I will direct my question to the Minister of Transport. He will recall that the question of amending the Western Grain Stabilization Act has been before this House, the Minister, and Cabinet, for some time. It is crucial to get a payment to farmers in this cash-short period when seeding is beginning. There has been agreement from this side of the House, and assurance, as to speedy passage of any amendments which might be proposed. Since the Minister of Agriculture said outside the House yesterday that he was discussing final arrangements with his Deputy, can the Minister of Transport tell us what progress has been made, and how soon the amendments will be presented to the House so that farmers can get this much needed cash?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I responded in the House yesterday, to virtually an identical question, we treat the matter of western grain stabilization as a very high priority, but it is a matter that has a number of complicated financial provisions to it because of the nature of the joint contributions that come from both farmers and government. As the Minister of Agriculture was rightly reported, he is now discussing those arrangements with his officials. As soon as the proper and complete amendments are ready and available, they will, of course, receive the highest priority from this Government.

TIMING OF PRESENTATION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister and his Government have had considerable time to look at these amendments, can he assure the House, with an ironclad guarantee, that any amendments will produce a payment before the end of June so that finance companies will know that the farmers are expecting some money and that there is some guarantee for short-term loans as a result?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, what I can provide to the Hon. Member is the same kind of ironclad guarantee of assurance that this Government has always provided to protect the interests of the western farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FISHERIES

WEST COAST SPORTS FISHERY—NEW CATCH LIMITS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Is he ready to announce the new catch limits for the sports fishery on the West Coast and, if so, what they will be?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as you know, three years ago the Department entered into an agreement with the Sport Advisory Board, called the seven points agreement, whereby the sports fishermen of British Columbia accepted a reduction of about 30 per cent in their catch, particularly of Chinook.

In view of the very serious situation that we are facing this year, I have decided that other measures will have to be added to the seven point program. What I am aiming for is to reduce the catch of our sports fishermen, not through a blanket closure, but through spot closures, or catch and release, and other means, to a target of about 160,000 pieces. I have asked my officials to sit with the Sport Advisory Board to see how that target can be achieved through mutual agreement. An option I have rejected, because I do not think it fits in with our tourist industry in British Columbia, is a total closure on a certain date when an automatic figure is reached. That is not appropriate for our tourist industry, so we will try for a target of about 160,000 pieces.

MANAGEMENT OF GENERAL FISHERY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems to be prepared to reveal some things which have been kept secret from us. Is he therefore prepared to give us some views on the buy-back program for commercial fishing boats, as well as some views on the native food fishery?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, my colleague is asking me questions that relate to the annual management plan. That information, of course, is made public as quickly as possible. He asked if there would be a buy-back program or not. Those questions, of course, are ones of policy which are before Cabinet. As I said some time ago, Cabinet will be making such decisions, and I trust that the Hon. Member and every Member in the House will support the new Pacific fishery policy when it is made public.

MINING INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR ASBESTOS INDUSTRY

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State (Mines). As everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, the asbestos industry is plagued with extremely serious and awkward problems.

Would the Minister tell the House what the Canadian government is doing or plans to do to help the asbestos industry?

[English]

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that the Government certainly feels that, if the international standards are followed, there will be no risk to either workers or the public as far as asbestos is concerned. We have been lobbying very hard in the United States for that Government to accept the international standards as well.

I might tell the Hon. Member that we hosted an international conference on asbestos in Montreal last year. My colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, recently announced that an asbestos institute would be located in Quebec. The Government is fully in support of that industry, both in this country and internationally.

Oral Questions

FORESTRY

NEGOTIATION OF AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES ON FOREST RENEWAL

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment who is responsible for forestry. Since it is now apparent that it will not be possible for the Minister to negotiate forestry sub-agreements with the Provinces of British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec, may I ask the Minister why it is not possible for him to gain the acquiescence of the provinces to these agreements in the area of forest renewal? Is it because of the very stringent criteria that have been attached by the federal planners to the national priorities, with which incidentally I agree, or is it because the Minister really does not have the money to take to the bargaining table? In that connection, could the Minister tell us just how much of the $130 million, which was earmarked for that program, he has authority to spend in this current year?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will try to bring the Hon. Member up to date. I think he should know that the forestry agreement with British Columbia has been renewed, and we have negotiated with the Government of British Columbia an extension of one year to the end of March, 1985. We have also concluded agreements with Manitoba and Saskatchewan. We are in the process of negotiating an agreement with Ontario. In the case of Quebec the matter is still in the hands of those who must negotiate an over-all ERDA agreement which, if agreed upon, will likely lead to the conclusion of a forestry agreement under the general ERDA heading.

I might also draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that during the fiscal year which concluded at the end of March, the federal Government provided well over $200 million to forestry in a number of ways which are too numerous to list.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary. The Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, if you would permit me to do so, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister knows, another critical problem related to the forestry industry is that if the industry were to convert to a more intensive management style, there would be a critical shortage of skilled manpower and scientists. The Minister has before him a proposal for the development of an internship program which would permit—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's question should be supplementary to his first question, and not a different question asked of a different Minister. In this case the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Skeena.

FISHERIES

TRANSFER OF LICENCES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and deals with the transfer of A and L licences. I know that the Minister is aware that in some cases transfers have been stalled in his Department for up to five months. As the Minister also knows, the transfers are supported by the Appeal Board, and I know the Minister is personally interested in seeing those licences issued expeditiously. Because the Fisheries and Oceans offices in British Columbia will be closed from Friday through Easter Monday, will the Minister telex those offices today in an attempt to assure the House that the fishermen affected will be able to pick up their tags from those offices today or tomorrow, so that they can participate in the halibut season which opens next Wednesday?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I can give the assurance to the Hon. Member that if the Department's legal adviser tells me that I can issue those licences, I will gladly issue them. The only thing that could prevent me from doing so would be a legal obstacle rather than the lack of will.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I trust that means that those fishermen will be able to get out on the fishing grounds next Wednesday.

FISH PLANTS IN PRINCE RUPERT AND PORT EDWARD

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, some of those affected vessels have historically made deliveries to Cassiar Packing Company in Prince Rupert and Port Edward. I wonder if the Minister would give us the assurance that he will contact the receiver to see that those plants will be reopened, either for this coming halibut season or certainly for the coming salmon season. The Minister should keep in mind that there are hundreds of jobs involved, and that some $600 million has been directed to eastern Canadian industrial fishing concerns for similar restructuring of the industry.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I cannot be more forthright than I have already been. I am telling the Hon. Member that I will gladly issue those licences if, according to the legal adviser of the Department, I have the legal authority to do so. I am sure that if the Hon. Member were himself the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans he would abide by the law and by the advice of legal counsel. If the regulations as they have existed for years do not allow what the Hon. Member has suggested, then we must consider amending those regulations. It is a legal problem; it is not that I do not wish to issue those licences.

INCOME TAX ACT

CANADAIR—SALE OF DEBENTURE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister was responsible for piloting Bill C-2, an amendment to the Income Tax Act, through the House. That Bill provided for 50 per cent tax credits to those who invested in companies with R and D components and provided that R and D tax credits would transfer to the investor. Is the Minister aware that Canadair has sold a government guaranteed debenture for $33.4 million to Imperial Oil in order that Imperial Oil could save $16.7 million in corporate tax? Does he view this use of government debenture by a Crown corporation as an appropriate transfer of funds to fund that Crown corporation?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the specific case mentioned by the Hon. Member. I would gladly look into it and discuss it with him. Broadly speaking, however, the tax incentives for research and development which were provided for by Bill C-2 are proving to be successful and effective in promoting R and D in Canadian industry.

DE HAVILLAND—ISSUANCE OF DEBENTURE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister also aware that because of the intelligent approach taken by Joel Bell and his cohorts at CDIC, de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited issued a $25 million debenture to Gulf Oil of Canada to save Gulf Oil from paying $12.5 million in corporate tax? Again, I would ask the Minister if it is government policy to fund these losing aircraft companies through the back door by using gimmicky tax systems.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member opposite had given me some notice of his intention to ask these two specific questions about these two specific cases, I, of course, would have been happy to provide him with the information he seeks. However, I shall take his question as notice.

AMATEUR SPORT

NEWSPAPER REPORT OF ALLEGATIONS BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun-Saint Paul): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Amateur Sport. Yesterday's Globe and Mail reported that the Leader of the Official Opposition has promised that a Conservative Government would contribute to the construction costs of a domed stadium in Toronto. I dare hope it would do the same thing for the Verdun stadium.

My question is this: could the Minister tell the House if, in light of the remarks made by the Leader of the Official Opposition, and I quote:

• (1500)

[English]

"It's only fair" . . . in reference to the Liberal Government's financial bail-out of the 1976 Olympic Games where one of the biggest cost overruns was the Olympic Stadium.

Since the Leader of the Opposition is deeply shocked at the huge amounts of money spent on the Montreal stadium, could the Minister tell me how much money the Government did spend in Montreal?

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): One thing is quite clear, Mr. Speaker: I think that the Leader of the Official Opposition has absolutely no idea of the federal Government's contribution.

The federal Government did not directly fund the Montreal Olympic Games; it was all indirect funding with revenues from the Olympic coins and the Loto Canada lottery. Those are the very revenue sources which the Progressive Conservative Government gave away to the provinces when it was in office, and those are the funds we will not have to build stadiums elsewhere in the country, not only in Toronto. We did not pay for similar facilities in Edmonton and Vancouver.

It is in that respect that the Leader of the Opposition has yet to understand that we will not be able to provide that kind of funding for amateur sports as a result of his unrelenting battle against sports pools.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Leader of the Official Opposition needs more information on this issue and I am quite prepared to enlighten him.

REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my brief supplementary is directed to the Minister of Transport and it follows on the question of the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre regarding the western grain stabilization fund. The Minister said—if I got him down right—that there are complicated financial matters associated with revising the Bill. I would like to remind the Minister that producers in western Canada are going through some financial complications this spring; they do not have any money with which to operate.

There is willingness on this side of the House to co-operate and do anything we can to facilitate amendments to that Act. We are prepared, if the Government is serious about it, to pass amendments very quickly if they will benefit Canadian farmers. I would like to ask the Minister, and encourage him, to bring some of those amendments forward as quickly as he possibly can. When is he going to do it?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, of course we are always pleased to receive any gestures of co-operation on behalf of the Opposition.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We are nothing but helpful.

Mr. Axworthy: It is a welcome change, and one which we will certainly take into account when we bring forward the legislative package after the spring break.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to call to the attention of the House, on the assumption that we adjourn at six o'clock, that all Hon. Members will be welcome in Room 16 for a short reception and the usual liberation. That invitation is extended also to the Hansard staff.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. House Leader of the Opposition on the usual question relating to government business which is to be dealt with today on a Wednesday.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, you have received notice of a subsequent question of privilege which I hope I can raise right after we have dealt with business of the House. Since ostensively we are about to adjourn for the Easter recess, I wonder if I could ask the Government House Leader, the President of the Privy Council, to tell us the intentions of the Government with respect to business for the days following our return from the Easter recess.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, on Monday, when we come back, we will resume debate on Bill C-24. The back-up legislation will be Bill C-25. That is for Monday and Tuesday when we come back. On Wednesday, we will go to finance Bills C-7, C-8, C-11, C-16, C-6 and C-14. Thursday will be an allotted day. I hereby designate Thursday, when we come back, as an Opposition day.

For the rest of the new semester, under the new rules, and to respect the spirit of the new rules, I will send a letter to my colleague House Leaders later today outlining generally the business we would like to see done from the return after Easter until the end of June.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, there has been a considerable amount of interest, as the Government House Leader will appreciate—and I raise this question again, having raised it last week—relating to the amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. The Minister of Transport said today that Cabinet is close to concluding its deliberations with respect to this matter. Can the Government House Leader give us a specific date by which it is anticipated such amendments will be tabled in the House so that we can give this most important item of legislation the appropriate consideration?

Mr. Pinard: This morning, Mr. Speaker, in discussion with most concerned Liberal Members on the subject, I was much encouraged to realize—and it was made clear from the answer given by the Minister of Transport—that progress is being made on this legislation. However, as House Leader I usually deal with Bills which are on the Order Paper. It is likely that the Bill will be placed on the Order Paper shortly after we come back. I hope that will be the case. When that is a reality, then I will be pleased to remind my hon. colleagues opposite that they are on the same wavelength as my colleagues on this side. We all want to see this legislation dealt with as a priority, just like the other Bills on the Order Paper.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) served notice of a question of privilege. Does the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) have a point of order or a question of privilege? I will hear the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West and then the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HNATYSHYN—USE OF PARLIAMENTARY FACILITIES FOR LIBERAL LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a brief question of privilege relating to the use of parliamentary facilities and privileges for non-parliamentary purposes.

As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, in response to a question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) in February of 1978, Mr. Speaker Jerome outlined a set of general guidelines for a policy on the use of the Parliament Buildings. At that time, the Hon. Member voiced his concern about the fact that the Liberal Party was intending to make use of parliamentary facilities in conjunction with a Liberal Party convention which was being held in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker Jerome observed:

> Anything taking place in these buildings certainly ought to have a parliamentary connection and ought to be in keeping with a number of conditions that respect the dignity of the premises.

His full comments may be found in the Debates for February 14, 1978, at pages 2833 and 2834.

I happened to walk past the post office entrance to the Centre Block on my way into the building this morning. As you will know, Mr. Speaker, a variety of general information is left on tables and notice boards in and around the foyer at the post office entrance. This information usually relates to job vacancies and competitions, charitable appeals and other information of general interest to employees of the House of Commons or to Members' employees. You can no doubt imagine therefore, Mr. Speaker, how surprised I was to discover that, along with all of the other notices and literature, were three cartons of pamphlets extolling the virtues of a certain John Turner and bearing the logo of the Liberal Party of Canada.

The pamphlets were issued in the name of an organization called "The Friends of John Turner" and take the form of an open letter "To Liberals in Canada" from the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois) and a Françoise Gagnon. The letter solicits support for Mr. Turner and asks that the attached form be filled in and returned "quickly" by those who agree with "The Friends of John Turner". The form, in part, reads as follows:

I support wholeheartedly the movement to favour the election of JOHN TURNER as Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada and Prime Minister of Canada and I want to join his team.

Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that "The Friends of John Turner", the Hon. Member for Terrebonne included, have nothing but the highest of motives in mind in causing this pamphlet to be printed and distributed. I am certain that Mr. Turner, whoever he may be, needs all the friends he can get as "quickly" as possible. Nonetheless, I question whether leaving these pamphlets out for distribution in the post office entrance to the Centre Block is an activity which has a parliamentary connection or which respects the dignity of the premises as outlined by Mr. Speaker Jerome. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that when last I checked, the cartons and material in question had been removed, I understand by the Sergeant-at-Arms. However, Mr. Speaker, if such activities continue to occur I see nothing which would prevent the other leadership candidates from setting up tables in various places around the building to sell memberships in the Liberal Party or pass out buttons and balloons.

According to press reports, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Terrebonne left these pamphlets in the place that he did because certain translation errors had been made and because he wished to have the pamphlets destroyed. He is further reported to have said that new literature is being prepared and that he intends to distribute these pamphlets by making use of his franking privileges as a Member of Parliament.

I find it odd that the Hon. Member would leave these pamphlets in a public place where pamphlets are often set out for general distribution if it was really his intention to have them destroyed. The Hon. Member admitted that it was his intention to use his free mailing privileges as a Member for Parliament for the purpose of distributing obviously partisan pamphlets in connection with the Liberal leadership contest now going on. I think this is contrary to the spirit and rules respecting the use of the mailing privileges accorded to Members of Parliament. If it is true that the Hon. Member is using his franking privileges in this way, then an abuse is taking place which requires the attention of and investigation by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

If you, Mr. Speaker, find that I have established a prima facie case of privilege, I would be prepared to move that the matter of campaign activities in the Parliament Buildings and the use of parliamentary services and facilities be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. At the very least I hope that you might take this opportunity to outline guidelines on the use of these buildings and facilities.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, it might help us understand the Hon. Member's grievances and draw conclusions, if we could see the document he is referring to. I invite him to table that eloquent material here, so that we may decide if his complaint is warranted in the circumstances. Further, I think we should be well informed about previous leadership conventions, especially the last one, so that we may assess the facts, in a more objective and reliable context. I think the Hon. Member put forward his own version of the facts. He is referring to documents we have not seen. It is difficult for us to infer anything. It would certainly help Hon. Members and Canadians in general if the document to which he is referring was made available.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West seeks permission of the House to table the documents in question. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed. The Chair can only observe that it has also been the recipient of communications from various groups, including the Party of the Hon. Member who has just spoken, inviting me to contribute. I have had a number of such invitations recently. I would like to assure Hon. Members that the Chair treats all such communications with neutrality under all circumstances.

It is difficult to avoid the circulation of documents of this nature. However, if there is a violation of franking privileges, that is a serious matter and it will certainly be looked into. Any circumstances in which literature which might not be in the best of taste and which reflects on the dignity of the House will be brought to the attention of the Sergeant-at-Arms and promptly removed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Which has been done, Mr. Speaker. A bad case which has been taken care of.

Mr. Speaker: In the circumstances, the Chair will examine the remarks of the Hon. Member and the documents which have been tabled. It will also look into whatever evidence the Hon. Member cares to offer concerning the use of the franking privilege.

The Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) on the same point of order.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, in view of your undertaking to look into this, may I call to your attention the fact that about four years ago I raised a similar question of privilege when the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), who was Leader of the Official Opposition, was sending out under his frank copies of a Tory Party newsletter.

Mr. Speaker: It is very difficult for the Chair to take note of all the things which have happened in the past in this House. It will do its best to deal with matters currently taking place which are brought to the attention of the Chair.

MR. LAWRENCE—NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I believe I heard during Question Period what I consider to be a rather uncalled for personal reference to me by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicating that I frequently promote fabrications in the House. I want to make sure of what was said and consult the rule book. May I just give you notice now that I reserve my right to raise this as a question of privilege at some later time?

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member follows the procedure of sending a written communication to the Chair, I can assure him that due and proper attention will be paid to all communications received.

MR. HNATYSHYN—USE OF PARLIAMENTARY FACILITIES FOR LIBERAL LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I believe I heard you say that you had received literature from other Parties, including the Progressive Conservative Party, asking for donations, etc. My point of order is basically that I trust, Sir, you have made equal contributions to each one of the Parties in order to maintain your total independence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair considers itself to be equally flattered by the attention offered by Members on all sides, and wants to assure Hon. Members that they are all treated equally.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, if I understood your response to the question of privilege, you said you would look at the issue of the franking privileges to ensure that they are properly observed. I would like to bring to the Speaker's attention—and although I do not have the material today, I could make it available—issues of householders, which are issued under the franking privilege, with pictures of congratulations to poll captains in previous elections and things of that nature. I have wondered about them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services has taken note of these matters. The Chair has been guided by recommendations from that Committee, which represents Members from all political Parties in this House. The matter has been considered and if the Hon. Member has a concern I suggest he take it before the Committee.

PETITION

MR. BRADLEY—TAX ON TOBACCO PRODUCTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley), by filing it with the Clerk of the House on Tuesday, April 17, 1984, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT OF ENGINEERING BOARD

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 46(2), I wish to table two sets of documents today. First I would like to table in both official languages the annual report of the Columbia River Treaty Permanent Engineering Board to the Governments of the United States and Canada for the period from October 1, 1982, to September 30, 1983.

PETROLEUM COMPENSATION CHARGE

TABLING OF SUMMARY OF COMPENSATION REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table in both official languages the revised petroleum compensation report on revenues and expenditures for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1983. This report will undoubtedly be referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

PETITION

MR. BERGER—ESCALATION IN THE ARMS' RACE

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from 1200 residents of the Laurier constituency and the Montreal area.

They humbly state that they are concerned by the continuous escalation in the armaments race and the breakdown of negotiations aimed at limiting and reducing nuclear arsenals. They are encouraged by the efforts of the Right Honourable the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to promote a dialogue between the superpowers, and humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support the Prime Minister in his efforts.

Most of these petitions were signed after the Prime Minister's resignation. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, they can be interpreted as expressing the hope that this initiative will be pursued by the Canadian Government and become part of this country's external policy.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING MONDAY, MAY 14 SITTING

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, consultations have been had on this subject. I think you will find there is unanimous consent for the following motion:

That when the House adjourns on Friday, May 11, 1984, it shall stand adjourned until 2 p.m. on Monday, May 14, 1984.

The reason, Mr. Speaker, is that the new Governor General will be sworn in in the morning of May 14. The House will not sit in the morning but will sit at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council have unanimous consent to move his motion?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate on behalf of our Party that for the purpose of accommodating the Government with its arrangements for the swearing in ceremony of the Hon. Jeanne Sauvé as Canada's Governor General, we not only consent to the presentation of this motion, but will agree to the contents of the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have heard the terms of the motion. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ATTENDANCE AT OLYMPIC GAMES

Question No. 677—Mr. Hawkes:

1. Did the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) offer to take athletes who did not meet the olympic selection criteria to the 1984 Olympic Games as guests of the Government and, if so, was he aware that (a) sports governing bodies had set the criteria for olympic selection two years prior to the Games (b) the selection criteria for the Games were accepted by all sports governing bodies except that of track and field (c) all Canadian sports governing bodies, plans and budgets for the Games were established prior to the Games based on meeting the criteria for selection to the Games?

2. In future, will the Government (a) intervene in the administration of national sports governing bodies (b) create a new set of selection criteria not based entirely on athletic skill for the choice of Canadian representatives in international athletic contests?

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): 1. The Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) did not offer to take athletes who did not meet the Olympic selection criteria to the 1984 Olympics as guests of the Government.

The Minister did extend an invitation to athletes in the sports of Nordic Combined and Biathlon to observe the Games (as guests of the federal Government), after the Canadian Olympic Association declined to select any athletes to represent Canada in these sports at the Sarajevo Olympics.

There are no minimum criteria for selection for the Olympics in these two sports laid down by either the International Olympic Committee or the International Federations which control the two sports.

With respect to criteria for the Olympics being set two years prior to the Games, the criteria referred to are, presumably, the general selection principles set out by the Canadian Olympic Association—not by the Canadian sport governing bodies responsible for these two sports in Canada.

Further, while the general selection principles were set out by the Canadian Olympic Association in mid-1982 subsequent discussions between the COA and officials of Sport Canada led to an agreement to select athletes who were 1988 potential athletes provided that the federal Government paid for these athletes, and provided that these athletes were clearly participants in long-range training programs aimed at 1988. In the final analysis, when the actual selections were announced in January 1984, these athletes who will likely represent Canada in Calgary in 1988 were denied the Olympic experience in 1984, and so the Minister offered to send them to Sarajevo as observers.

With respect to the process of setting criteria, since Canada became the host nation for 1988 only in mid-1982 and made a major financial commitment to preparing athletes for 1988 in early 1983 (including a doubling of resources to $50 million for the period from 1983-88), it appears reasonable that the approach of Canada's host nation status and major financial commitments to success in 1988. This answers the question of whether sport organizations' budgets were set based on meeting criteria for selection to the Games. Clearly other factors intervened after the initial criteria had been set—but in any event, budgetary factors were not an issue.

2. No, the Government will not generally intervene in the administration of national sport governing bodies. But, yes, the Government will attempt to prevail on the judgment of organizations such as the Canadian Olympic Association to establish selection standards which will assist in the fulfillment of a public interest in Canada's eventual success in international sport as evidenced by an annual federal Government expenditure on sport of nearly $50 million.

CANADIAN INSTITUTE FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND SECURITY

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration from April 17, 1984 of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. Speaker: The last speaker was the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). There are five minutes remaining in the questions and answer period. Is the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) rising to put a question? The Hon. Member for Edmonton East on debate.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, as the culmination of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) peace initiative we have before us Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. The principles involved in this legislation are sound. Let us cease this ongoing nitpicking and send this legislation to committee where we can adjust the language and change "shalls" to "mays" if advisable. Let us get on with this legislation. With regard to the principles behind this legislation, we need only ask whether it is needed, what its dimensions are to be, and where the institute shall be located.

Let us first ask ourselves whether peace is possible in our world today or if it is a social illusion. When the differences in affluence and poverty are so great between world segments, and when ideologies are a major conflict as to the very purpose of life itself, can lasting peace be a reality? What universal intelligence or universal spirituality can decree that humanity is not bent on self-destruction? What are the characteristics of peace and how are they to be taught and promoted? Can we aim so high as to state that through trust we shall promote international brotherhood and goodwill and through understanding we shall be free from oppression of body and spirit and from uncertainty and fear? Can we state that to understand we must study and analyse and to trust we must discern and know?

We must establish the mechanism to analyse and to understand and then to know and to trust so that we might live without fear, apprehension and oppression. To know and to understand we need a centre of study and analysis and projection and dissemination of information on arms control and defence. Yes, Mr. Speaker, the need is there. The need for an institute for international peace and security is timely.

Where should this institute be located, Mr. Speaker? Let me again suggest that it should be located in Edmonton, halfway between Washington and Moscow, midway between our two mighty neighbours that are armed to the teeth with nuclear weapons.

When we officially open the institute let us invite the President of the United States and the Chairman and President of the U.S.S.R. to cut the ribbon and then to shake hands and have their summit meeting. Every second year these two giants of peace or war should be invited to revisit the institute in Edmonton. Let us bring together in this peace institute in Edmonton both American and Russian experts so that they might learn to communicate, because knowledge and communication should be the prime objectives of this institute.

When I spoke in the Throne Speech debate on January 24 this year, I said:

> Some international superpower agreements on the military use of space must be realized in the next five years. Initially, the nuclear delivery mechanisms involved hours in their delivery time... This has now been reduced to minutes... and space deployment will reduce the time frame for delivery to seconds.

● (1530)

War by accident and massive escalation will then be beyond the control and reason of man and totally under the control of computers. To the modern mind, technological development is the very essence of mankind. Without technological progress some people believe we die as a human race. The very pride of man decrees that space will be conquered and space systems both for military and peaceful use will be developed and deployed. That is the general view in America today.

I suspect it is the general view in Russia.

What we must find is the human will to rationalize and then regulate these systems for the continued constructive evolution of civilization itself. The converse is only darkness.

The institute must study all aspects of accidental initiation of nuclear war. It must develop systems to provide instant communications between the two superpowers to prevent and halt massive escalation.

Indeed, I have frequently envisaged a communications satellite positioned in a stationary orbit above the North Pole which would provide instant communications between the U.S.A. and Russian military commanders and heads of states in order to prevent accidental war and massive escalation.

Surely a Canadian institute for peace would at least perform such a function. Surely one of its first tasks would be to examine the possibilities and the probabilities of launching such a communication satellite. Indeed, the Canadian Government should undertake discussions immediately with both the United States and the Russian Governments to initiate such a satellite project.

Without much more fuss, let us pass this legislation on principle and send it to committee for some minor refinements. Let us give it third reading and get on with the establishment of the institute in Edmonton. Edmonton is the place. Let us get it away from Ottawa, the political centre of Canada, so that political interference in its functions can be minimal.

If we locate it in Edmonton, I feel quite certain that within a few years, or even a few months, it would be named the Pierre Trudeau Institute for International Peace and Security. It would be a fitting tribute to a Prime Minister who really tried to do his best for world peace and now rides into the sunset.

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the previous speaker, the Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko), who pointed out that we should not wait too long before adopting this legislation, so that the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs can discuss any changes or amendments it may wish to suggest.

[English]

My colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), described the proposals to establish a Canadian institute for international peace and security. He has explained the purpose of the proposed institute and why this Government considers its establishment and development to be a matter of some urgency.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am very reluctant to interrupt the Minister's speech, but I understood he had risen on a question. I wonder whether you had called for questions prior to the resumption of debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I must admit that I did not because I did not see anyone rising. I was aware that the next speaker was to be the Minister. Ordinarily, there would have been a ten-minute question period following the speech made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko).

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the customary procedure is to call for questions. I think that Members of the House, on questions being called, tend to rise in anticipation of that. The introduction in the Minister's presentation led me to believe that this is what he was doing. I had waited for your call to rise on those questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member's point is well taken. Perhaps I could ask for the Minister's indulgence in order to call for any questions that might be posed to the Hon. Member for Edmonton East. He would then be able to continue his speech.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am in your hands.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In that case, there will be a maximum ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Skelly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I took particular notice of two important issues which the previous speaker raised in his presentation. One was the use of weapons in space. One issue that has arisen and has concerned many Canadians is that of the defence production agreements in which Canada is involved and the construction of components for nuclear weapons delivery systems. Would the Hon. Member comment on his support or opposition to Canada's constructing components for nuclear weapons delivery systems and on the involvement in the aerospace programs that might lead Canada to assist in providing components for such technology in space?

Second, the Hon. Member mentioned accidental nuclear strikes. What is the Hon. Member's opinion of a first strike situation? What is his position on the Cruise missile, which does not only concern an accidental strike as it has been the subject of first strike possibility because it is unverifiable and undetectable?

For the record, would the Hon. Member give us his position on the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada and the further development of this very dangerous weapon capable of being used not only for accidental strike but for first strike?

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the use of weapons in space, let me say first that I am of the opinion that technological progress in regard to the use of space both for military and peaceful purposes cannot be stopped. It will go ahead irrespective of what is said in this Parliament or in almost any congress or parliament. I have tended to touch on that matter in several speeches I have made in the House. The question in my mind is the deployment of the deadly device itself, the nuclear weapon. There are now 50,000 in the world. We have to return to the question of reducing the number.

The danger is not with the development of technology because all technology that is developed, whether it is the jeep or the initial airplane, can be used for destruction or construction. Indeed, we have gone through several systems in which the initial development was for military purposes but then they have been used massively for commercial or peaceful purposes. I cannot think of any single development in technology that has not gone through this variation from possible military use to usefulness in society. I suggest that we must deal with reducing the number of nuclear bombs themselves.

One of the most interesting aspects, of course, is Canada's position in regard to the CANDU nuclear reactor. Canada is trying to market nuclear reactors all over the world in a very significant fashion. I know quite a bit about CANDU reactors because I have worked on the design of some. Yet this is a reactor that we sell which makes it possible to build a nuclear bomb without too much difficulty. We must examine closely our position in regard to the development of technology. I am not suggesting that we should not sell CANDU reactors. That is my answer to the first question.

With respect to the second question regarding the testing of nuclear Cruise missiles, I have stated my position in the House very emphatically. I think I was the first person in the House to take a position in respect of testing the Cruise missile. It was that we should go ahead. To support that view, I return to the process of verifiability and the timeframe for delivery systems. The Cruise missile is a slow delivery system. I feel rather safe with the Cruise missile, as I feel with an airplane, because I believe that nuclear war can start by design, which is first strike capability, if you wish; by escalation as a result of initiation by a small country, such as one in the Middle East; or by accident. I do not fear the first alternative at all. I know of no nation that will start a nuclear war knowing that it will accelerate very rapidly and will not stop until the world is destroyed.

I fear the second instance, of a bomb dropped in Israel, the Middle East, or somewhere else, which act of aggression would then escalate. But I mostly fear the third alternative. I am a technologist. I have worked on nuclear reactors and I know how accidents can happen. My fear is that the Cruise missile has a slow delivery. We have time to react. It is verifiable—not the Cruise missile itself but the bomb itself when it is stationed at some particular point. The bomb is verifiable. A nuclear bomb when it is stationed somewhere brings around it a massive system of protection against somebody stealing it. There is no harm in stealing a Cruise missile. The harm is in stealing the bomb. It is the bomb that will provide the verifiability with respect to the protection systems around it. With respect to the Cruise missile, it is slow. It will give us time to react and stop any escalation process. Second, the nuclear bomb itself and its location is a verifiable process.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I commend the Hon. Member for his support of the Bill. I agree with him entirely that we should move it along, get it into committee, have a good look at it in committee and make the changes necessary. But let us get this thing going. However, I tend to agree to some extent with his answer to the last question.

When he is talking about the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) peace efforts, has he examined very closely the ten points which I think are tremendously important which really represent a distillation of what the Prime Minister found out when he talked to dozens and dozens of world leaders? Has he examined whether or not these ten points do not offer a much better approach to solving the world's problems than the arms control approach, which is the one we have been using?

Let me give you a quick example, Mr. Speaker. Imagine two people standing in a tank of gasoline; one has ten matches and the other has seven. One says, "You have more matches than I do". Maybe the answer should be that we should try to drain the gasoline away. Perhaps that is the real answer since we are not very successful at the other one; the weapons might disappear at some particular point if we do this other thing. But included in those other points, one of which is destabilizing weapons, which the Hon. Member has mentioned, is the Pershing II.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take a long time to answer this question. I believe the discussion in this House has basically given the answers to the question which the Hon. Member has asked with respect to the ten points put forward by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). There is no doubt that the ten points are significant and indeed distil the very essence in this matter. My difficulty is that there are fantastic dynamics to the whole question. It is not a stationary one. The dynamics of the question change almost daily, certainly monthly and yearly. The reason they change is that there is a vast potential for technological development in the world today, particularly in certain nations. Where you think there is stability under one particular system, a new development or technology suddenly creates instability. Therefore, the need for constant, dialogue, discussion, co-operation and, if you wish, analysis, particularly between the two superpowers, is absolutely vital. That is what I see and hope is the purpose of this type of institute, an institute which must bring—as I have constantly indicated—the two superpowers together in a summit and put together the mechanism for constant dialogue. I know a summit meeting between the five nations is a second step, not the first step. The first step is dialogue, if you wish, at a summit and an agreement for co-operation between the two superpowers. They are our neighbours. We are in between the two superpowers. I believe we have a role to play, which is very significant in this world, in bringing our two neighbours together at every possibility for dialogue, for co-operation through sports, for co-operation through tourism or through trade. We must get these two nations to get to know each other so that at least they can talk. Then we can move toward the process of establishing some permanent type of peaceful structure for the future. I want to say that at this time I am not very optimistic.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The period for questions and comments has expired. Before I recognize the Hon. Minister for National Defence (Mr. Blais) I should say that, because I interrupted his speech, he will be accorded the full twenty minutes, if he so desires. The Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, I subscribe fully to the sentiments of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the expressions that he made and to the Government's commitment to search for world peace and security. Today's strategic environment is characterized, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, by uncertainty and by change. It is essential, therefore, that we all understand the nature of the world in which we live so that we might effectively provide for our security and that of all peoples.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) embarked on his initiative with the intention of defusing some of the worrying aspects of the East-West relations and seeking a way out of the current preoccupation with military strength. He strove to give new political impetus to the search for accommodation. The institute is being proposed in this spirit.

As Minister of National Defence, I support every effort to strengthen peace. My Department and myself are devoting time and effort to work with other Departments, especially the Department of External Affairs, in looking for ways to achieve arms control and disarmament. I am pleased to say that all these initiatives, the latest of which is the proposed Canadian Institute of International Peace and Security, will complement the work of my Department, of which I have the honour to be Minister.

Our defence policies have long been aimed at preserving peace and security and need no elaboration here. One only has to look at the experience of Canada in peace-keeping operations. We have used our military forces, not to make war but to secure peace. We have been the greatest contributor to the United Nations peace-keeping operations, having participated in each one of the peace-keeping operations mounted by that international institute.

As the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said, Canada's investment in defensive collective security agreements has been consistent since the Second World War and has paid the dividend of peace for more than a generation of Canadians. Again, as Minister of National Defence, I support whole-heartedly the act to establish the Canadian institute. The institute, by adding to our store of public knowledge and understanding of the issues has a real contribution to make to the preservation of peace and security. The Department of National Defence will demonstrate its commitment by financing 50 per cent of the institute's budget in partnership with the Department of External Affairs.

Although some of those who are newly aware of the question of peace and security and strategic studies may tend to feel that there is an instant solution somewhere if only goodwill could be found, we recognize that the issue is an eminently complex one and needs to have a great deal of attention and concentration given to it if we are to make any progress.

The Members of this House are aware of the activities of the Department of National Defence and know that for many years, the Department has played a continuing and active role in the field of research on peace and security. A large part of these activities are carried out by the Operational Research and Analysis Establishment, which works together with the policy planning staff of the Department of National Defence.

The subject is a very important one, Mr. Speaker, and the group in question carries out studies that are to be used in formulating departmental policy, more particularly in the field of East-West relations. In many cases, it has also provided assistance to the Department of External Affairs, when so requested, in the field of analysis. Projects were either short or long-term, and some might be classified while others would be for public release. Often, outside help has been obtained, and research projects on a variety of subjects connected with Canada's defence have been entrusted to eminent academics. In recent years, research on, and analysis of, problems relating to arms control and disarmament has been stressed, with special emphasis on areas where Canada plays an active role, such as reduction in conventional forces and the development of confidence and security in Europe.

In addition, the Operational Research and Analysis Establishment has concentrated on the repercussions that a balance of nuclear power and increasing use of space for military purposes might have for Canada.

Since the foregoing has been the subject of various studies within my Department, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was able to call on the Department's expertise to help establish strategy for his peace initiative. Similarly, my Department has extended its activities beyond its own confines by encouraging and supporting civilian universities as part of the Military and Strategic Studies Program. Started in 1967, the program's major objective has been to encourage the training of Canadian experts on military and strategic issues, in order to respond to present and future security requirements and arouse a nationwide interest in these issues.

Mr. Speaker, it is common knowledge that the program had humble beginnings. In fact, at the outset, interest in the program was not universal. However, it now helps support five research centres located at the University of British Columbia, the University of Calgary, Queen's University, Laval University and Dalhousie University, and also three teaching centres which are located at York University, the University of New Brunswick and Acadia University. The program also provides a number of bursaries for Canadian university students desiring to pursue a course of study in areas related to national security. The administration of the program is strictly neutral, and the Department does not try to influence the universities. The Military and Strategic Studies Program has been remarkably successful, considering its relatively low budget. I may add that this week, representatives of participating universities, with senior officials responsible for the program, will be meeting in Ottawa at their annual convention.

[English]

I have described briefly to the House how the Department uses and promotes the research function associated with national security both within and outside the Department. These DND programs are tailored to the broad needs of national security and will continue to do so. At the same time we must recognize recent developments which led the Government to consider the formation of the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security as necessary, desirable and complementary to the work of others in the field of military and strategic studies.

The first of these developments is the explosion of information in the field of military and strategic studies. The Speech from the Throne referred to the need for a publicly-funded centre to gather, collate and digest the enormous volume of information now available on defence and arms control issues. As Minister I can attest to the volume and I can see how difficult it is even for trained personnel to understand and assimilate the flow of information. I tend to be on a large number of mailing lists these days. I tend to receive a large volume of documents from a large number of sources. I am not belittling the information which is being provided nor the opinions which are being advanced, because more thought is being given to the particular issue of peace and security than to any other issue facing public administrators and individuals concerned with the public interest.

There is a clear need to collate, collect and digest information and a responsibility to communicate. We as Members of Parliament, men in public life, recognize the need for communications. We recognize how difficult communications are, especially when the issues are so complex and imbued with emotionalism.

The second development is the increase in public interest in matters of peace and security. I can vouch for the fact that since I assumed this particular responsibility public interest in the issue is much greater. I can well understand why. One has only to look at the developments and the difficulties in 1983. Of course, 1983 was the period when the western alliance had to implement its two-track policy with the beginning of the deployment of modernized delivery systems in western Europe. It was the time of the Korean airlines flight No. 007 being shot down and of an increase in tension. Indeed there was and is an ongoing concern. Historically Canadians have tended to be relatively disinterested in peacetime—and I stress in peacetime—in matters of peace and security because Canada has had the major advantage of having seas which isolate it from major threats. Also, we have a very friendly neighbour—and we are very lucky in that respect—on our southern border. Relatively speaking, Canadians have felt very secure. Indeed, there was a period of time when the interest relating to these issues was not that great. However, now there are clear signs that the public is no longer content to leave these issues only to professionals and even to politicians. There is a genuine desire to learn more about the complex issues of peace and security.

Ten years ago it was difficult to attract students to military and strategic studies programs. Today there are 598 undergraduates taking military and strategic studies at three teaching centres, and many more than could be accepted within the limits of the current graduate program. At the graduate level, four times as many students applied for scholarships than could be accepted within the funds available. The establishment of the proposed institute will greatly facilitate response to this increased public interest.

One of the characteristics of both the increased public awareness and the explosion of information is the wide variety of opinions expressed. No single Department of government could hope to encompass this spectrum of concerned public opinion, least of all the Department of National Defence because its attention, of necessity, must focus upon giving effect to the Government's security and defence policies. It is the Canadian democratic tradition to seek consensus and reconciliation, not to polarize the discussion of peace and security into what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has called a dialogue of the deaf.

We reaffirm our determination to maintain a strong defence in co-operation with our democratic allies. At the same time we must recognize the overriding imperative to explore new ideas which will go beyond the historic and traditional concepts of national and international security.

• (1600)

There is going to be, of course, a by-product. As the institute gets involved in areas of public concern and in communicating views relating to various solutions and the various positions being proposed, that will make Canadians more conscious of the fact that they belong to a global community. In the past, we have tended to be rather insular. During Question Period very seldom are questions asked relating to international concerns and to peace and security issues. It is to be hoped that with this institute, the internationalization of our interest will be secured and Canadians will become more and more aware of the great world out there and the fact that decisions made outside of Ottawa and the provincial capitals have an impact on their day to day lives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Minister indicated that he wholeheartedly supports the Bill, which must mean that he read it fully and understands how this institution will operate. Will he indicate what access the institute will have to classified information within his Department? I refer specifically to the data that is exchanged virtually daily among NATO members which in some cases is highly classified. Will the institute have access to that information?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the Hon. Member that we will consider each application for information on its merits. As the Hon. Member knows, we are very sensitive to the security that we obtain. He is very much aware of the source of much of the information which is essential for the Canadian Government to deal with matters of public policy. We will make every effort to ensure at all times that the needs of the institute are met, mindful, of course, of the necessity to ensure that each bit of information received is preserved within its classified status.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Minister must be more forthcoming to the House. It is fine to say you will deal with each matter as it arises. Would he indicate two things to the House? First, would he be more or less inclined to share classified information with an institute that has foreign members on its board? Second, would he consult with our allies before such information in any event is shared with the institute?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, allies are allies. The source of information would have to be fully informed of any exchanges that there may be regarding any classified information. That is the course that has always been followed. As the hon. gentleman knows, there are various classes of information and various standards of confidentiality and secrecy. I cannot give the Hon. Member a complete reply relating to what attitude would be taken by our allies regarding each classification.

The Hon. Member also asked whether there would be a greater tendency to make available information if the boards of directors were from countries other than Canada. The Hon. Member will have to wait to see who the non-Canadian members may be, who will be appointed. The pertinence of Canada to an alliance is very much in our mind in terms of identifying the personnel who will be appointed as directors. I might indicate to the Hon. Member as well that I will be fully consulted, as he may have noted, on the appointment of these directors. That will be a consideration that I will keep in mind.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the Minister touched on a very important subject. That is the involvement of tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands, of Canadians in this issue over expressed concern for demonstrations. I would like to correct him. In this House, on dozens and dozens of occasions our Party has raised and stressed the concerns being raised by those people. Just a couple of quick points to refresh his memory: Abandonment of the testing of the Cruise missile; abandonment of construction of components for a nuclear weapon system in Canada; a declaration of a nuclear free zone in this country; support of Canada for a referendum on nuclear disarmament; and some active, specific involvement in the Central America issue that would see Canada joining with other peaceful nations to stop the war there, bring about a peaceful settlement to the problem and attempt to ensure and guarantee the protection of Nicaragua. These problems have been raised dozens of times.

With the issue before us today—with the tour of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and this peace institute—is that Canada is giving the appearance of doing something. This Government—even the Conservative Party—is trying to get on a bandwagon within the country, rather than doing something specific as a Government that would reduce tension and bring about security through active disarmament. Will the Minister comment on the perception that this Government is not really taking action but trying to create the appearance of action for political purposes?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicates from his question that he still does not understand that the decision taken by Canada relating to the Cruise missile issue was one that was justified as a result of our belonging to a multilateral security arrangement. The hon. gentleman is exactly proving the point that I was making, that the NDP, relating to its attitude on the Cruise, was very internally focused. NDP members were saying: "We do not want to be part of an international association or alliance that has the principles of collective security that NATO has and we do not support the Government in its effort to meet its commitments within that association". The only area they have addressed that has international implications is the question of Canadian involvement within Latin America. That question has been dealt with fully by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, in commenting and asking a brief question of the Minister on Bill C-32 and his comments thereon, I draw to his attention a submission made by my colleague from Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) yesterday under Standing Order 21. I will quote briefly from it as it may be relevant. It will allow the Government and this Parliament to do something that many Canadians have been asking for. I quote:

> I call upon the Government to establish a peace tax fund which could be used for such items as peace research and promoting international understanding. People who contributed would receive a 100 per cent income tax credit up to the percentage of their tax normally allocated to defence spending.

My colleague at that time made reference to the tradition in Canada of accepting that conscientious objectors, who are so for religious or other serious personal reasons, may be excluded from military service. This institute is to be an agency somewhat independent of government. Would the Minister or his colleagues consider amendments or suggestions that would make contributions to this institute, contributions either directly related to the suggestion of my colleague yesterday or with a slight variant, to allow contributions to be treated as tax credits? This would allow conscientious objectors to feel that they were acting lawfully as regards the payment of their taxes while acting in line with their consciences. Further, this would not set a precedent that might create difficulties in other areas of revenue collection and expenditure.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate to the hon. gentleman that as the Bill is presently formulated, the funding will come totally from government general revenue. In effect, that is the intention of the Government. However, perhaps the hon. gentleman feels that he wishes to encourage groups to make donations in the cause of peace. When I was the Receiver General, I received bequests similar to that or transmission of funds to the Receiver General for government purposes. If any group would wish to make those kinds of grants to the Receiver General and indicate that they are to be expended for certain purposes, they are welcome to do so.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the time allowed for questions following the speech of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) is over. However, I would like to mention that I found something puzzling when I read over the comments made in the House by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) yesterday when introducing the Bill. I compared those comments to Clause 5(g) of the Bill which indicates that the institute may acquire any property, money or securities by gifts, bequest or otherwise. I found that to be contradictory, and at some point I would like to have that point clarified for my benefit and for the benefit of other Members of the House.

Mr. Blais: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Sargeant: It is simply a little bit confusing. The Minister said that the Government would not seek funds from non-governmental sources, but at the same time the Bill indicates that the institute may accept or acquire money from other sources. I believe that to be a little contradictory. I am not being critical. I am simply saying that it is contradictory.

Being afforded the opportunity to speak on the second day of the debate on a piece of legislation gives one a certain advantage. One has the opportunity to read carefully speeches and comments made by other Members on the previous day of debate. I did that this morning as I was unable to be in the House yesterday morning because of other commitments. As well, it gives one the opportunity to read the editorial comments that have been made on the day's debate.

After reading yesterday's debate, I must admit that I was struck by some of the similarities in the speeches of Members from all Parties. I myself would have felt quite comfortable making some of the comments which were made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I can say the same for some of the comments made by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). Yesterday afternoon when I was present in the House, I listened to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) and the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) and agreed completely with much of what they had to say.

I think it is clear that for the most part, all Members of the House of Commons are in support of the general intention of this Bill. However, I believe that there is no doubt that all Members and particularly those of us on this side of the House, have some problems with some of the proposals contained in the Bill.

Last December, we heard a Throne Speech that was rather bland and without much promise but that contained a couple of paragraphs which gave us some hope. I will quote the following portion of the Throne Speech as reported on page 2 of Hansard for December 7, 1983:

> —the Government will create a publicly funded centre to gather, collate and digest the enormous volume of information now available on defence and arms control issues. Fresh ideas and new proposals, regardless of source, will be studied and promoted.

At the time, Mr. Speaker, many of us in the House considered that portion of the Throne Speech as being a victory of sorts. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), said yesterday, we in this Party have always been in favour, remain in favour and will continue to be in favour, of the establishment of some sort of Canadian peace research institute.

It was another sort of victory for me because two years ago this month, I was a member of a group of parliamentarians which included Members from all three Parties, which put out what was known at that time as "Security and Disarmament: A Minority Report." At that time, we called upon the Canadian Government to accept the proposal made by former Secretary General of the United Nations Waldheim that governments contribute one-tenth of 1 per cent of their defence budgets toward disarmament and peace efforts. We specifically recommended that Canada use such money to strengthen disarmament education, information and research activities. We recommended particularly that the Department of External Affairs establish chairs on disarmament or peace research studies at Canadian universities in an attempt to counterbalance the chairs on strategic studies which are funded by the Department of National Defence.

While the efforts the Government is making at the present time as indicated by this Bill do not yet approach an expenditure of one-tenth of 1 per cent of the defence budget, we welcome these efforts as being a positive step toward achieving the Waldheim formula When the Government tabled this Bill the other day, I was pleased to learn that the Government would actually live up to one of the promises made in the Throne Speech.

That does not always happen. I do not think any of us in the House will deny the fact that over the last few years, there has been a dramatic growth of concern among Canadians about the possibilities of a nuclear war. There have been fears expressed about the too rapidly escalating arms race. At the same time as the concerns of Canadians have grown, many Canadians have questioned whether or not the Canadian Government is doing all that is possible and all that is within its powers to alleviate international tensions and to turn around the arms race.

While we welcomed to a certain degree the initiatives taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last fall, we were as well critical of some of the contradictions in those initiatives. We questioned whether or not the Government has done as much as it could. This afternoon, I do not want to concentrate on the specifics of the concerns of Canadians about a possible nuclear war. I do not want to talk of my fears or of the fears of Canadians in that regard. I do not want to talk about the horrors of a nuclear war, nor do I want to talk about issues in Central America, the Cruise missile or Canada's involvement in the development and construction of nuclear weapon components. I think I have spoken often enough both in and out of the House about those issues. As well, that is really not the point we are debating here today.

When I learned of the introduction of this Bill, I had two hopes for what would be contained in the Bill. I would have thought that what I had hoped for is rather obvious. First, I hoped that the mandate of the institute would be to concentrate on the studies of issues of peace and disarmament. Second, I hoped that the institute would enjoy enough independence from government to gain universal credibility and to be able to criticize existing government policy if it sought to do so.

It has been said in debate during the last day and a half that for too long we as Canadians have had to rely on offshore information and analyses. Canadians who are interested in the subject have not had available to them a large amount of information and analyses that deal with the issues from a strictly Canadian perspective. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam, said yesterday, we have in a sense lost some of our independence because we have not had access to information within Canada.

Many Canadians and Members of the House feel that the Canadian institute on peace research studies should follow the example of SIPRI, the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute. As has been pointed out by Members on all sides of the House, SIPRI has gained a high degree of credibility, stature and respect throught the world community. It is the Institute which many of us think the Canadian Government should use as an example when setting up the Canadian institute.

One of the things that is most striking about the Stockholm Institute is that it is completely independent of Government. It is funded by the Swedish Parliament, but the Government keeps its hand off the Institute. The Government does not get involved with the Institute by indicating which studies it wants the Institute to undertake. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that if the Canadian Government intends to keep some kind of a hands-on control of the Canadian institute, and if it is not prepared to allow it complete independence from Parliament, from Cabinet, and from possible political interference, then I would say that the Government is simply wasting both public money and the time of this House in setting it up. I would think that under those kinds of circumstances it will not enjoy the credibility it requires to make a meaningful contribution to Canada's public search for peace and disarmament.

There are probably three areas which I have been able to find in this Bill which make me suspect that it is not going to be as independent as we would like to see it. First of all, despite the assertion that the institute will not be an agency of the Crown, Cabinet will still have the power to order the board of directors to repeal, amend or make whatever new by-laws the Government requires or desires. Second, the Government will be able to influence what topics are examined by the institute. That is because one of the purposes of the institute is to foster, fund and conduct research of particular interest to the Government of Canada. Third, the institute, under Clause 28—which was debated at great length yesterday in this House—shall be required to research for or provide advice on the peace and security issues with which the Minister wants to deal.

I am not quite sure why the Government wants to do this, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it is not lacking in other agencies which have the power and capability of researching issues of special interest to the Government. In the Department of External Affairs there is a committee of deputy ministers. There is also the arms control and disarmament division. In the Department of National Defence there is a director general of strategic policy. There is an office of the director of nuclear arms control policy. The operational research establishment has its own director for strategic analysis. The defence research establishment conducts research into issues of nuclear, biological, chemical warfare, and so on. There are in place a number of government agencies which have the power to give the Government the capability to study issues of its own interest. Why does it want to tie the hands of this new institute we are setting up today?

I would agree with my friend, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), with respect to the issue of whether it should be "shall" or "may" in Clause 28. I agree with her that it should be completely scrapped.

On another point, however, I have perhaps a slight disagreement with that Hon. Member, that is, on the appointment of directors to the board. I am not quite as trusting of the Government as she is. She gave the example that SIPRI, the Stockholm Institute, has its directors appointed by the Government. Obviously, however, the Swedish Governments over the last number of years have proven that they can be trusted a little more than has the Government of Canada. I would hate to think, for instance, Mr. Speaker, that someone like Jack Horner, an old Liberal-Tory hack, might be appointed to be chairman of the board of this peace research institute. I would like to see some kind of control on the appointment of directors.

A suggestion was made yesterday by a couple of Hon. Members of the Conservative Party that we might have the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence make these appointments. That is one suggestion I would certainly consider. Another suggestion one might consider is that the standing committee have the power to approve appointments which are initially made by the Governor in Council. We could also turn it around the other way and have the standing committee make one, two, three recommendations to the Governor in Council, who would then choose however many are needed out of those recommended persons. This would have the added benefit of strengthening committees, something which is desirable to most Hon. Members of this House.

Whatever route we choose, whether it be these suggestions or something completely different, I believe we have to change the way in which directors are appointed to the board of this organization. I will give credit—which is something I do not often do—to the Conservative Party. The Hon. Member for Don Vally West said yesterday in this House that this Party would not want this power were it to form the Government. I really hope that if it does form the Government some time in the near or distant future it will really live up to that assertion.

I would like to give an example, Mr. Speaker, of what I have discovered in the last few days as to how the Liberal Government of Canada has skewered this whole peace issue for its own political benefit, and it is something which makes me worry about what it has in mind for the new peace research institute. Just recently I learned about a "new kid on the block" peace group in this country. It is an organization known as INPAX. Very few people have heard of it until very recently. After quite a bit of research I discovered that it is being organized by some young students at the two main universities here in the City of Ottawa. Somehow or other they seem to have gained a lot of influence with Members on the government benches. This is a brand new group. Its main raison d'être, or current purpose, is to set up a jamboree here in Ottawa at the beginning of September, bringing some 600 students together from various parts of the world to talk about issues of peace. That is a very admirable initiative.

However, my concern is that this group somehow or other has managed to convince the Government—I will say that the final decision has not been made yet but it looks as if it may well be—to give this group $600,000 toward this jamboree which is coming up. I said that this is an admirable initiative. However, given the fact that very little money is available from the Government of Canada to fund national broad based peace groups, why does the Government give something to a brand new group which is centred solely in the City of Ottawa?

There are a lot of questions which have to be answered, Mr. Speaker. One question to which I would like an answer is, why did the federal Government pay for a reception which was held on the Hill here last week, on the invitation of people from this INPAX group, organized by the office of the Minister for External Relations (Mr. Pepin), with free bar and hot food, which was billed to his office? Organizational details for this reception were handled by the office of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae). I have a terrible suspicion, Mr. Speaker, that this INPAX group, with its admirable initiative, is really a Liberal front. Somehow the Liberals are trying to get on the peace bandwagon. I would say that if the Government were really interested in educating Canadians about issues of disarmament and peace, there are far better ways to spend $600,000 than on this particular effort.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to caution Hon. Members of this House on both sides that this institute must not be politicized. I was a little disturbed to read first in the press and then in yesterday's Hansard that the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead has decreed or decided that this Bill is fatally flawed. Certainly it is flawed and a number of Opposition Members from both Parties have pointed out the flaws. However, "fatally" is such a final word. I would hate to think that those Hon. Members are going to kill it. Perhaps it is an indication that they do not want to let this legislation go through. On the other hand, I would caution the Government that it must not attempt a politicization of this institute, either. We read in today's press, the Ottawa Citizen, comments by Charles Lynch that there is a sneaking fear—perhaps it is part of the Parliament Hill paranoia which comes over all of us—that this institute is being set up in legislation which is rushed through the House of Commons so quickly so that the Prime Minister, when he retires in mid-June, can be given a job perhaps as the executive director or chairman of the board of this organization. I would hate to see this happen.

If the Government really believes in this institute, that it is a worth-while effort, when I call upon the Government to allow changes to be made in committee, at report stage or wherever, to ensure it is completely independent and can acquire and enjoy a lasting credibility on the world scene. Otherwise we are wasting our efforts. I say do not rush it, but on the other hand it should not be needlessly stalled. It is an important initiative but must be done properly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, this was not my question, but since the Hon. Member brought it up, I am a little disturbed about his concern over the peace group being sponsored by my office. I am glad to sponsor any legitimate peace group which wants to have a meeting on the Hill if a room is available. All Members have this privilege. It is my understanding this group talked to the other Parties, it was not a single Party operation. What they are trying to do is worthwhile. I am a little surprised that the Hon. Member would see this as a partisan effort because we have both worked together very hard on this thing.

I want to preface my question by saying that it is extremely important to us both that this be the most independent body we can possibly find. We know what it was like when we were sitting in committee and listening to one-sided information coming steadily at us. The Hon. Member would remove the word "shall", and we talked about replacing it with "may". I agree with that entirely but I suggest we should leave the clause in. I would like him to think about this and comment on it.

It seems to me that if the clause was left in, then there would be no question about whether the Government could make a private agreement with the institute, that it would do what it is asked to do. However, if the word "may" were left in, then the organization itself could say: "But it says "may"; that means we may not if we do not want to". I suggest that would be a much better idea in order to give it the kind of independence we want it to have. I say this with the idea in mind that I want this thing to be completely independent.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, on the first point, I said I found it to be an admirable initiative. However, I have serious concerns about it. I do not think it is anywhere near the best way for the federal Government to spend $600,000. I have a cloying or nagging suspicion that this is a Liberal front. If that is the case, I definitely would be opposed to this initiative. If not, then I still have reservations about how best to spend $600,000.

Concerning Clause 28, I am willing to take the Hon. Member's advice and spend some time thinking about it. I am not so sure that I definitely agree that the word "shall" has to go. I am not so sure having the clause in or or out will make that much difference to the ultimate independence of the institute. However, I am prepared to give it some thought and I hope it will be debated at some length in committee.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned a number of important issues. He referred specifically to Central America. I would just like to remind him of a number of events I think this Government has remained silent on. The CIA has organized, funded and armed rebels who have killed 13,000 Nicaraguans to date. Canada was silent on that. The CIA has assisted in the mining of three major ports in Nicaragua to destroy the economy. Canada has been silent on that. The CIA has provided aircraft which have bombed refineries in Nicaragua. Canada is silent on that. Canada has not responded to calls from other nations to become actively involved in seeking peaceful solutions to the conflict in El Salvador. In essence, Canada has acquiesced to the United States. The Conservative Party has supported the U.S. role in that area.

Can the Hon. Member comment on an active role, in addition to the peace research funding, which Canada might take to ensure that people inside and outside this country know that Canada is totally committed to the cause of peace and disarmament?

Mr. Sargeant: I agree with all of the statements made by my colleague from Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), Mr. Speaker. I and others in this corner of the House have often called upon the Government to take an active, even a leading role to try and bring some kind of peace to the tragic situation we see in Central America. I have openly and often spoken against the CIA funding of the contras in Nicaragua and the mining of Nicaraguan ports, et cetera. I agree with him that if the Government is going to be completely credible on this issue, if it is going to set up a peace institute, then it has to lead by example.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am extremely disappointed with the question of the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River and the comments of the previous speaker. They say they do not want this to be a partisan issue, but as I listened to their comments, they were extremely partisan and extremely biased. In the question that was put to the Hon. Member—

Mr. Skelly: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Chair has admonished me on many occasions to address my comments directly to the speech of an Hon. Member. I challenge the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) at any time on that Government's dismal role, but certainly it is not appropriate at this time for him to criticize my questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I do not consider that a point of order, I consider it a matter of debate.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is unfortunately a bit sensitive to the truth. I was in Nicaragua in December with a Member from his Party and when I was there the Canadian Government had been very critical of the funding of the contras by the CIA. The Canadian Government was very supportive of the Condadora proposal to solve the problems in Central America by peaceful means. I am a bit discouraged by members of that Party who say they want to approach the issue of peace and war in a non-partisan manner and who then spread around the kind of false information as they have just done in their remarks.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) and I, and indeed almost all of us in this House, say we support in principle the Bill before us. However, there has been no Government-sponsored debate on the subject of defence and foreign policy in the last four and a half years. Also, the Minister of Defence (Mr. Blais) himself said, just a few minutes ago, that there has been a tremendous amount of public interest and debate during that same period. Can the Hon. Member make the Government's claim jive in his own mind with the heckling in this House yesterday of the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) by the Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence? He kept on interjecting along the lines: "we can only give you one month", and "five days a week for one month". He suggested it has to be out of committee in one month."

Considering the Government's undue haste in trying to have this thing wrapped up and passed in one month, as compared to the lethargy of that Government in this whole sphere for the last four and a half years, what does that lead the Member to believe is the motivation of the Government in introducing this Bill?

• (1640)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) is to reply, it shall have to be a very short response.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the Government's motivation in introducing this Bill is very well intentioned. I was not in the House yesterday when the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) was speaking.

With regard to the heckling attributed to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, my only comment would be that I hope the Bill is not rushed through with undue haste. I also said that I do not think it should be needlessly stalled or blocked.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the end of the ten-minute period for questions and comments. For continuing debate, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Blaker).

Mr. Blaker: As the Parliamentary Secretary who has some responsibility for organization on the Government side with respect to this Bill, yesterday I was agreeable to two Members of the Official Opposition speaking—if I may use the expression—back to back. I see that the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), who is the foreign affairs critic for the Conservative Party, also rises to be recognized. I wonder whether, with the good grace of the House, we might agree on this. I think it would be important to hear him. I would like to have the opportunity to respond to his comments because I would be interested to hear what he will have to say following the remarks of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). However, I would ask that if he and I were to be permitted by the kindness of the House to exchange places, then the Hon. Member for York-Peel would be now recognized. Following him I would respond, and following myself another Hon. Member I should think the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) would have the next opportunity to reply so that we would hear two members of the Government Party in a row for the purpose of debate. I do not know if that is agreeable to the Hon. Member for York-Peel.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I suggest the Parliamentary Secretary has put the Chair in a rather awkward position. The Parliamentary Secretary was recognized for debate. He did not suggest initially that he was rising on a point of order. Obviously, having recognized him for debate, I could not recognize him a second time on this same subject. However, if the House was to give unanimous consent, I could accept that his intervention was in effect a point of order and not debate. However, I would need the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East on a point of order.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to agree to the proposal made by the Hon. Parliamentery Secretary that if it is agreed that we now move to an Hon. Member for the Official Opposition, that when we come back to the Parliamentary Secretary I can keep my place in the proper order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I should indicate that the Chair is not in a position to indicate that there is any order of speakers. The Chair reserves to itself the right to recognize speakers. I would indicate that it is my intention, if no one else rises, to recognize the Hon. Member for York-Peel for debate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to forestall the serious participation of Members on this important debate. However, I do not quite understand what is going on here this afternoon. You have been excellent in terms of dispensing equity. I do not know if having two or three Members on the Government side speaking in a row is what I would call exact equity. I would have thought that the normal tradition of allowing us to alternate and have Members from the Official Opposition participate at this point in time on a regular basis on this important debate would be foremost in your mind. I simply draw to your attention the fact that I do not understand what they are asking for on the Government side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member's point is well taken. I suggest we will resolve this matter by saying that it is the intention of the Speaker to recognize for debate the Hon. Member for York-Peel, and that by unanimous consent it has been agreed that the intervention of the Parliamentary Secretary was a point of order and that he was not recognized for debate, thus allowing him, if he so wishes, to rise and possibly be recognized by the Chair in due course.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in joining in this debate on Bill C-32, which I feel is perhaps one of the most important debates that will come before this session of Parliament, I thought it might be fitting if I first quoted from a person who has had much to do with the nuclear threat which we now live with. I refer, of course, to Albert Einstein who said: "Peace cannot be kept by force. It can only be achieved by understanding."

I think that is a very relevant quote when we are considering something such as is contemplated by Bill C-32, the establishment of what is often referred to as a peace institute. I say that because on the issue of peace I suggest there has never been any dispute over the need for a bipartisan foreign policy or position. In fact, it was the Leader of my Party, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney), the Hon. Member for Central Nova, who called for the matters now being generally discussed by us today to be brought before the House for unanimous resolution. I suggest that resolutions agreed to in the House by all Parties of the House have much more moral force than a resolution decided upon by only one man. We in the Official Opposition believe fervently in the need to search constantly for any means to make our country more secure and the world more peaceful.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in this nuclear age peace is indeed a moral imperative. Yet there is a new dilemma. While the goal of peace is a mark of civilization, we find the democracies which desire peace also live with the fact that if they divorce their desire for peace from a commitment to defend freedom, they could easily turn the question of peace into a weapon of blackmail in the hands of the most ruthless. If, in our anxiety to avoid nuclear war, we become consumed with hysteria, nuclear blackmail may well be encouraged. This balancing of power with peace will be the genius of this age. That is our great challenge. Our objective must be to preserve our freedom, our way of life, our civilization and peace. To develop a strategy that relates the end to the means, to build military forces that avoid the choice between an Armageddon and surrender, is a pre-eminent moral, as well as political, problem for our period.

The principle of trying to be better informed by having basic research done with Canadian persons on matters of peace, disarmament and security should be unquestioned, and I dare to say is unquestioned by every Member of this House. It is especially in this context that I feel that the Throne Speech put it quite correctly when it stated that the Government hopes to improve "the climate among nations" and in improving that climate it hopes to acquire knowledge, creativity and a determination to find solutions.

The Throne Speech reflected on Canada's concern about current international tensions. It said that the Government will "create a publicly funded centre to gather, collate and digest the enormous volume of information now available on defence and arms control issues". "Fresh ideas and new proposals, regardless of source, will be studied and promoted", the Throne Speech said. No one has objections to this. However, the draft Bill, Bill C-32, that we are being asked to accept quickly I suggest is little more than a first draft and certainly not even a good first draft of those high hopes that were set out in the Throne Speech at the beginning of this session.

I say that because I think we must not lose sight of the fact that there are two distinct roles that an institute, such as the one whose creation we are debating today, could fill. First, it could be an inward-looking kind of institute, perhaps along the lines of the American National Security Council, funded by the U.S. Government, as we know, which in turn is responsive to government and essentially deals only with the federal Government. Such an inward type of group would fill the role of essentially pooling brain power within the country in this field in order to give the federal Government a very serious input on the matters of the day and as a possible counterbalance to what government may be told by the military, for instance.

The idea is to give government insight and advice in an inhouse advisory group. Such an institute would be useful for a government not only in policy deliberations but also for choosing what arguments could be advanced during negotiations at arms reduction talks. In short, this would be a pooling of brain power and knowledge for the advice of the government of the day, to make it better able to deal with these broad questions of how to secure peace on the one hand while maintaining proper security. There would be a minimum public exposure with respect to that type of activity.

However, there is an alternative type of activity that an institute could serve. I would suggest, though, that it is an activity in which it must be an entirely independent body in order to perform effectively. It would be an outward-going type of institute that would do original research and would assemble and distribute information. It would possibly advise the government but in no way would be looked upon as speaking for the government. It could advise various groups in society. In short, it would be the type of group that was recently set up in Canada, the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament. That is an outward-looking type of group, which I will come back to in a moment.

This is where the Government's dilemma apparently first began. Given what it said in the Throne Speech, we understand that it was unaware that a group had, at that time, been formed in Ottawa. It was called the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament. When the Throne Speech referred to a centre, this meant that the word "centre" could not be used in the Bill now before us. That is why we have the word "institute". Again, the Government changed its wording from the Throne Speech to what we have now, a Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security.

I say this because I and I believe most Members in the House were quite startled yesterday to see how prickly the Government, particularly the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), seemed to react with respect to any debate about Bill C-32. You will recall that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) commenced his remarks yesterday at 11.17 a.m. and stated, as reported at page 3118 of Hansard:

> In a spirit of consensus and co-operation among all Parties, we remain open to suggestions for further changes to the Bill.

He mentioned that it was, in truth, an independent institute. Yet what did we find within 30 minutes, at 11.42 a.m. yesterday morning, when my colleague, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) stated at page 3121 of Hansard:

> This institute has to be done right the first time.

It triggered the Prime Minister to heckle and intervene through a considerable part of my colleague's speech. The Prime Minister ended up by stating at page 3122:

> Don't tell us about the ladies in Halifax.

And:

> They do not want you to talk out the institute, which is what you are trying to do.

Within the first 25 minutes of comment on this Bill by the Official Opposition, after having taken the Secretary of State for External Affairs seriously, our first speaker, who in this case was a former Prime Minister, was told by the Prime Minister that he was trying to talk out the Bill.

In debating the Bill before us, we must remember that that type of confrontation did not have to occur. There is no need for it. I can only ask, is that really the tone of a peacemaker? Bear in mind that what we are discussing and what we have heard from the speeches today is general agreement with the principle. All parties have indicated that the idea is worth considering.

We must also accept that this is not a new or unique thought. I read recently that in 1793 the Americans were actively debating what we are debating today. They wanted to set up a peace academy The argument was that if they were to have a department of war, should they not have a department of peace? Oddly enough, that debate with respect to the establishment of a peace academy is now before the Congress of the United States.

The arguments that are being raised there are not dissimilar to the arguments that we have already heard with respect to the Prime Minister's Bill that is now before us. I am saying that I hope all Members in this debate will perhaps accept that it is not the principle that is being debated; it is simply the question of whether the Bill reflects an institution that in truth would serve our goal in a meaningful way.

I have indicated that there are two types of institutions. There is an inward-looking institution that would solely advise the Government, or a more publicly oriented one that would in no way be dependent on the Government. Unfortunately, what we have before us is a hybrid. It is a cross.

I think the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) demonstrated the dilemma that the Government is already living with in his response to an earlier question that I put to him. When I asked him what access the new institute will have to classified information, he said that, of course, he would have to look at each case. When I asked him if he will consult with his allies, bearing in mind that there may be foreign directors on the board of this institute, he said that he would, of course, have to take it up with his NATO allies.

If this institute was solely confined to advising government, that would not be necessary. It would be a think-tank solely to advise the Government. However, because of the public aspect and that it is a hybrid, it will do one of two things. It will either make classified information available and possibly run the risk of having leaks, or it will withhold all information. If it withholds all information, the institute will not be able to function fully. Much of the information which it should have at its disposal will be denied, for the simple reason that those who are furnishing the information will say: "We are uneasy about into whose hands the information will ultimately fall". That is the dilemma in which this early draft of a Bill has left us. It is why during my remarks this afternoon I want to point out the tragedy of the ongoing dialogue that was taking place between all three Parties, the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) and the Leader of the Socialist Party (Mr. Broadbent) being broken off. Why? Why on the twelfth of this month was the ongoing discussion as to how to make this institution truly independent, how to ensure it will not needlessly affect and impact on the 26-odd organizations that are already in this field in Canada broken off? Why were those discussions terminated? Why was the Official Opposition and presumably the Socialist Party told: "In any event we are introducing the Bill, and we can discuss it later"?

You know that the type of thing that was being raised at that time, Mr. Speaker, was the question, for example, of the appointment of the board of directors for this institute. It was suggested that before any board is settled there should be a consensus of this Parliament. The chairman, the executive director, and the 15 other directors could be suggested name-wise by the various parties. We should arrive at a consensus. But what we heard in reply was "That is our business". There is to this date no indication who the chairman might be, who the executive director might be, or indeed who any of the directors might be. All that we were assured of is that we would be given the right to nominate but without even a suggestion that a nominee would be appointed.

I believe if you read Clause 3 of the Bill you will see the importance to which I am referring, Mr. Speaker. What we are establishing in this Bill is this, and I quote directly:

> 3. A corporation is hereby established to be called the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security consisting of a Board of Directors that is composed of a Chairman, an Executive Director and not more than 15 other directors to be appointed as provided in sections 6 to 8.

The latter in effect says "to be appointed by the Government".

What we are creating here is essentially an institution that has to be constituted by a board of directors. They will speak for this institute. I suggest it is absolutely irresponsible on an issue such as peace and security for us in Parliament to pass a Bill like this in its present form and leave up to the government of the day the right to say who in fact will comprise the institute.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Let me touch, if I may, on the other important questions. For example, we have already touched on—certainly my colleague the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) has—the right of government to require the institute to come up with certain studies. I think there is general agreement that the word "shall" must get watered down to something more like "may". But again there is the question of the reporting by this institute. There is no guarantee in the present Bill that the reports of the institute will go uncensored, or that the institute will be free to publish as it sees fit with or without qualification.

For example, the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament has just brought out its first edition of the Arms Control Chronicle. I recommend that all Members read it. It consists of 14 pages. It is a very interesting overview of the past month in this field. I would hate on the one hand to have any suggestion that this entity be killed off by this new institute we are now discussing. Second, I would hope the freedom this centre has to publish what is in its chronicle this month would be the type of freedom without government interference that the new institute contemplated in Bill C-32 would have if it is formed.

In conclusion—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I must inform him that his allotted time has expired. The House will now proceed to questions.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, could you ask whether there is unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to continue?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is normally for the speaker to request. The Chair cannot put it to the House unless the Hon. Member himself seeks that extension of time. That is the rule. In any case, I will hear the Hon. Member on a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my conclusion would not be more than a minute. Would it be possible to have that extension of time?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree to extend time to the Hon. Member for York-Peel so that he may complete his remarks?

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I extended considerable courtesy to Hon. Members opposite when I invited the Hon. Member for York-Peel to speak before me. I did not get the courtesy and co-operation of the Hon. House Leader for the Conservative Party, so unanimous consent to continue is refused.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan).

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) what he would have said if he had had extended time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my final point is this. When we are considering such an important question as peace and security, I think one of the basic things for us to do is to say, "How do we get a better understanding with respect to the two superpowers involved in this nuclear escalation?" I think most of us feel that we have a good understanding with respect to the United States of America and I would urge Hon. Members in considering the need for an understanding with respect to the U.S.S.R. to remember the words of Andrei Sakharov, who stated:

> The opportunity to criticize the policy of one's national leaders in matters of war and peace, as you do freely, is entirely absent in our country. Not only critical statements but also those merely factual in nature, made on even much less important questions, often entail arrest and a long sentence of confinement or psychiatric prison.

Mr. Sakharov, of course, was referring to the present state of conditions in the U.S.S.R. We must not forget that we indeed do live in two worlds.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Blaker).

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). The Hon. Member seemed a little sensitive at one point during his remarks to the effect that yesterday the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made some comments from his seat while the former Prime Minister and Leader of the Conservative Party, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), was speaking. The Hon. Member for York-Peel was annoyed that there was an accusation of talking out the Bill. He referred to that in his comments. He went on to say that, as far as he was concerned, the principle of this Bill is not really in debate.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member a simple question. The purpose of second reading is to determine where the Parties stand on the principle of the Bill before the House. The Hon. Member has indicated that in his view, and I gather he speaks on behalf of his Party since he is the foreign affairs critic, the principle of the Bill is clear—

Mr. Nielsen: The principle of the Bill is all its provisions.

Mr. Blaker: —that he accepts that it is not in debate, and that we ought to have a peace and security institute. My question to him is simple. Is he prepared on behalf of his Party to see this Bill go to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence tonight?

• (1710)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, when I indicated that there was no disagreement with respect to the principle, what I was saying was that there was no disagreement with respect to the objective or goal. However, what we have before us is an attempt to reach that goal which we say on its face is inadequate. The Bill does not guarantee the independence which this institute must have. It has funding implications which may well jeopardize the ongoing activities of existing institutions in the country which are doing a very credible job. It has implications which may impact upon the recruiting of personnel by existing institutions. In short, I say that the Bill is imperfect on its face and that at second reading is the appropriate time to debate those imperfections, not railroad us into committee and let the Government use its brutal majority, which it always likes to use in committee, to frustrate the wishes of the Canadian people.

Mr. Blaker: What an argument!

Mr. Taylor: A sensible argument.

Mr. Blaker: The External Affairs Committee has less of a majority membership, as the Hon. Member who is a member of that Committee ought to know, than prevails in the House of Commons.

May I ask him something else. He seems dissatisfied with the notion that it ought to be a Cabinet responsibility to recommend or appoint who shall be the directors, the chairman and the executive director. In his dissatisfaction he has recommended an alternative. He says that it ought to be based on a consensus of Parliament. Is the Hon. Member serious? Is he suggesting that we should have in the House of Commons, with 282 Members present, a vote on each and every one of the possible recommendations as to who shall be a chairman or director of this institution? I cannot believe that he is serious. Is that what he is proposing, that Parliament will vote on every recommendation and on the chairman and the executive director of this institution?

Mr. Stevens: If I could reply to that, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member who is supporting the Prime Minister so loyally has seen correspondence between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. If he has, he will know that the suggestion from our side was that the consensus could be arrived at in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on behalf of this Parliament and that it would not be necessary to go to the 282 Members.

I suggest that if the Hon. Member does not like that solution, we have the Library precedent in which the Library is responded to through the Speakers of each House on the advice of all Parties in each House. If we accept the consensus as the proper approach, the mechanics can be worked out, I can assure him.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that I regretted that the first person you recognized following the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) was the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) because I thought the courtesy should have been extended to the Member for York-Peel by a Member of another Party. I would have wanted to do that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are a great Canadian.

Mr. Siddon: You are hard to see down there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair has full discretion and it is usually guided by seeing the first Member who rises. I thought that I did that. If I missed somebody else who rose first, I am sorry, I apologize.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, there is no need to apologize. I was not in any way attempting to criticize you. I was just expressing a regret that I should have liked, on behalf of my colleagues, to have made that offer and extended that courtesy because it certainly was deserved.

I have two brief questions. I gathered very much from the tone of the Hon. Member for York-Peel, who is the external affairs critic for his party, that he supports the principle of the legislation before us. However, I also got the distinct impression that the Conservatives were opposing second reading. Is it their intention to oppose second reading of the Bill, approval in principle, or to vote against it? I got that impression from something he said, although his comments seemed to be somewhat contradictory.

My final question will be a very brief one. Last April 10 in the House of Commons, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), who had just been promoted to the PC shadow cabinet by the Leader of the Conservative Party (Mr. Mulroney), in a statement pursuant to Standing Order 21 in the House of Commons, ended his remarks by saying:

> For these reasons, we will never be able to disarm unilaterally—

I think many of us could agree with that, but he continued:

> —nor can we ever trust the murdering Communists in disarmament, or even disarmament negotiations.

Does the Hon. Member concur with that statement of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, who is a member of the shadow cabinet of the Conservative Party, along with himself?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could first reply to the Hon. Member's last reference to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie). If he takes exception to the statement of the Hon. Member, perhaps that is something he could ask the new institute to look into. However, as far as the other point is concerned, I was the first speaker from our side this afternoon and I could only assume, knowing the interest which exists in this Bill, that likely there would not be second reading before we recess for Easter. I would hope that the Prime Minister would reconsider his position and would reopen discussions, certainly with my Leader, to see if some of the earnest changes for which we have been asking can be made and we can all agree as a House that this is a desirable institute which will serve a worthy cause.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rod Blaker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Hon. Member on the Opposition benches for his applause as well. I had invited the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), who is the foreign affairs critic for the Conservative Party, to take my place in debate and to precede me so that I might have an opportunity to hear not only the remarks of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), the former Prime Minister of Canada, but also his remarks. I admit to a certain frustration, although before I begin my remarks I might say there are indications that there is a considerable number of Members who may wish to contribute to this debate. It is my intention, therefore, to be brief and to take less than the time accorded to me under the Standing Orders.

However, in listening to the Hon. Member for York-Peel, I found that the essence of his speech seemed to be that in the first instance it was vital, essential and seminal that this Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security be independent. When I looked for the methodology which he might be seeking or promoting as to how to make it that much more or completely independent, the only proposal I heard was that the appointment of the chairman, the board of directors and the executive director ought not to be made by Cabinet.

Mr. Stevens: Do you want to give me more time?

Mr. Blaker: I think the Hon. Member has had more than enough time to make a point which I thought could have been made in about two minutes flat.

I did not hear from the Hon. Member similar comments as I heard from the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead about accountability and the problem with respect to existing alternate institutions or centres for studies along these lines.

Mr. Stevens: I agree with it all.

Mr. Blaker: If the Hon. Member for York-Peel says that he agrees with the remarks made by his former Leader, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead, I think what I would like to do is address myself to the remarks of the Right Hon. Member.

First I want to indicate that the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead said publicly, as we all know, that he had been mandated by the Official Opposition to go up and down the country and criss-cross the country seeking the opinion of Canadians on the subject of peace and international security. He made three points as to what the public seems to want. His first point was a criticism of the Government of Canada. He said that government interest in the subject of peace and security is sporadic and inconsistent.

I put to members of the Opposition that we have before the House a Bill which evidences a consistent interest and makes the subject an ongoing, publicly-funded research project. The criticism of the Government interest being sporadic is contradicted by the evidence that we have a Bill before us which apparently members of the Opposition are not going to allow to go to committee. The sporadic interest in the subject seems to be on the part of the Opposition, not the Government.

The second comment by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead was that there was a problem, and that is that internal Public Service expertise is distributed throughout the Government and is not brought together in a way that can be most useful. One wonders whether to laugh or cry. The purpose of the Bill is to bring the expertise together, not only from Government representation in the Public Service, but from the private sector as well.

Again, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead calls for a condensation of intellectual power. The Government proposes to do precisely that. The Official Opposition now intends to delay putting the Bill in front of a committee. There is no consistency.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are the one who is filibustering.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, if the House Leader for the Official Opposition will give me the assurance that if I sit down, the question can be put on division or on the nod to go to committee, I assure him that I will sit down in two seconds flat. I understand that the House Leader for the Official Opposition cannot make a commitment, a difficulty we see with that Party at all times. I would be in my seat if the Hon. Member would make an agreement to which he can have his Party agree.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You have people on your side who want to talk. They will not allow us to say our piece, and you know it.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Opposition House Leader wants me to respond.

The third part of the public tour and access to views of Canadian citizens raised by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead was that there is an imbalance between defence studies as opposed to studies about peace. Once again, we put in front of the House of Commons a Bill which would provide for an institute for the study and research of matters related to peace and security. We have the Official Opposition, and I might add for the drama of it, on Easter weekend refusing to allow this Bill to go through on principle.

I can assure members of the Opposition that we are not clear as to the precise objections. I want to assure the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) that, as far as I am concerned, we are all interested in the same thing. We would like to see the institute put in place. Details are normally handled in committee, not on the floor of the House of Commons. What on earth is the practical point of delaying movement of this Bill to a committee?

Mr. Lambert: You are talking in principle.

Mr. Blaker: Precisely, and the spokesman for foreign affairs for the Conservative Party said in principle there is no debate on the value of this Bill and its purpose.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would suggest that the Parliamentary Secretary not mislead the House, albeit unconsciously, in insisting that the present reading, called second reading and reference to committee, if he will read his Order Paper, is an acceptance in principle of this Bill. He has enough experience in the Chair to know that that is utter tripe. In committee the Bill is considered clause by clause. Amendments may be brought forward by both the Opposition and the Government and disposed of or accepted by the committee. Then there is a report stage at which Members or the Government may put down amendments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am listening to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Lambert: I am on a point of order. Through you, Mr. Speaker, you will find—I know what I am after.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I also know the rules, and the rules say that when the Speaker is on his feet the Member should resume his seat.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, but there should not be unnecessary interruptions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. In my opinion the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is interrupting the speech being made by the Parliamentary Secretary. A point of order has to do with process. The Hon. Member is arguing about the remarks made by the Parliamentary Secretary. He is not questioning a matter of process and, therefore, is out of order.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, this House will easily understand the difficulty of a Member of Parliament who served in the Chair being brought to order by an Hon. Member who was the Speaker of the House. In courtesy to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, a former Speaker of the House, I would not want to argue his point of order.

I might now go to a couple of details referred to by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) and, I might say, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), the New Democratic Party's spokesperson on this issue. This is referred to in the House, in terms of this debate, as the "Section 28 problem". The problem is that the Bill before the House suggests that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) ought to have intellectual access to the work done, the research done and the views of a Canadian peace and security institute. Not only do I not find that offensive, but it seems that those who argue against that point are really arguing that the External Affairs Minister ought not to have access to very valuable information.

For those who want to make that point, I bring to their memory and recollection that yesterday, in what I would call partly speech and partly chit-chat between the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and it is on the record, the Prime Minister indicated that if that is all that is wanted, if that is the only problem, we agree. It is obvious the House has not yet come to an agreement. If we remove the possibility of access of the External Affairs Minister and either remove the entire clause as the NDP spokesperson suggested or change "the Minister shall have access" to "the Minister may have access", that ought to satisfy that point.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): What about the by-laws?

Mr. Blaker: The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich has been here for some considerable time. Every time we set up a Crown corporation, that clause is in it. That is called Cabinet responsibility. It is known as responsible government. It is the British parliamentary system of government. Of course, the Cabinet has the capacity, right and responsibility to examine and accept or not accept the by-laws of a Crown corporation.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is not arm's length.

Mr. Blaker: If the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich seriously proposes that the Government ought to fund the Crown corporation, but ought not to bear the public taxpayers' responsibility to examine the by-laws and to repeal, amend, change or alter, I suggest that he first put that to his own Party, and certainly put it to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. It is not a proposition that I have heard before. It is a standard clause in the existence and creation of every Crown corporation.

We on this side of the House do not hear from the Opposition specific suggestions, which in due course can become amendments before the committee, as to what the members of the Opposition Party agree on.

I have a sense that I understand the views of the New Democratic Party. I do not particularly like some of those views, but I at least understand that there is a consistent approach as a Party. What I cannot find out is what the Official Opposition of this country wants in terms of a peace institute. We go on and on listening to the word "independence". Then we go on listening to the word "accountability".

Mr. King: Now you got it.

• (1730)

Mr. Blaker: This is the most remarkable suggestion I have ever heard from any parliamentary system anywhere in the world. It is remarkable to suggest that this peace institute would not be accountable to the government of the day but would be accountable instead either to Parliament or to a committee of Parliament. That is what the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) has suggested.

Mr. Bosley: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Oberle: That is parliamentary democracy; you got it.

Mr. Blaker: I do not know if the Hon. Member is serious. That is the most unusual way to operate a parliamentary democracy any political scientist has ever heard of.

Mr. Oberle: If Parliament does not have any jurisdiction, why do you need it?

Mr. Blaker: Why do you think we have majority and minority governments?

Mr. Oberle: You know your Cabinet is not running the Government, your bureaucrats are.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Could the House please proceed to orderly debate?

Mr. Blaker: My apologies, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I was getting out of hand.

I would like to make one final point. I did say that I did not wish to take up my entire time with one point and I am a bit concerned that I may have done that.

Mr. Oberle: We are too.

Mr. Blaker: This point arises from the two concerns about public funding raised by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead. If my recollection is correct, it is he who asked why we would limit funding to one year. The Government has stated that funding is currently $1.5 million for this fiscal year and will grow to $5 million in fiscal year 1988-89. If Hon. Members of the Opposition would like to move an amendment to suggest that funding ought to be guaranteed for a five-year period, I would be willing to bet my shoes that the Government side of the House would have no difficulty in that regard. Therefore, why do we not simply dispose of that argument?

Let us turn to the question of whether or not government funding of this public institute means that private institutes will suffer in some way.

Mr. Stevens: Are you familiar with the correspondence between the Leaders?

Mr. Blaker: The Hon. Member for York-Peel has asked me whether or not I am familiar with the correspondence between the Leaders of the Parties. I am familiar with that correspondence and I am aware that that problem was raised. The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead said that if we create a premier institute for peace and security, it may reduce the amount of private donations made to private institutes across the country. The Hon. Member for York-Peel must first recognize that the Government has already increased its funding to two of the private institutes in the country. Second, the most obvious thing to be said is that such a premier institute is mandated by the Bill to be able to contract with such private institutions so that the private institutions as well will receive additional funds for the purpose of bringing in the best possible expertise and research.

I do wish to sit down so I should say something to conclude my remarks. I suppose that my conclusion is simple. I think it is regrettable that members of the Official Opposition have been unable to come up with a simple and clear statement telling us why they will not let this Bill go to committee. Hon. Members have said that they are in favour of the principle of the Bill. Why do they not act in accordance with that principle?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Questions or comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour).

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) on a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I thought that you would entertain a question directed to the Hon. Member who just spoke. I was hoping to put such a question myself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair asked if Hon. Members were disposed to put a question to the Hon. Member or to make comments. No one rose at that particular point. The Chair then proceeded to call for debate and two Hon. Members rose. However, the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) did not begin to speak.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I will defer to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He will defer to the Hon. Member so we will proceed with questions and comments.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I thank Hon. Members for their courtesy. The Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker) said that he had had an opportunity to review the correspondence between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) and presumably the Leader of the NDP. Has he, during those ongoing discussions, been informed as to whom the Government has in mind for the Chairman of the new institute? Can he give us an indication of who the directors might be?

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, the answer to both questions is no. If I may, I should add to the knowledge of the Hon. Member for York-Peel and the knowledge of all Members of the House that it is very clear in the correspondence that the Prime Minister and the Government of Canada have offered to both opposition Parties that there be consultations on such a selection.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief comment and then ask the Hon. Member one or two questions. The Hon. Member seemed to have some considerable difficulty understanding what I thought was a clear and unequivocal position set forth by the spokespersons on behalf of our Party, including my colleague, the Hon. Member for York-Peel, and my colleague, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead. The Hon. Member had difficulty understanding those comments as they related to some of the serious concerns that we have with respect to the independence and accountability of this institute.

In the course of his remarks, the Hon. Member somehow suggested that I made a commitment on behalf of our Party that if we would let this matter go to committee, he would be prepared to sit down, and I appreciated that offer. I thought it was very reasonable for him to make that offer.

The Hon. Member will know that there has been extensive correspondence between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Official Opposition with respect not only to this Bill but also to the content of a peace initiative resolution to be considered by the House. If these negotiations regarding the resolution itself were to be successful, we would be able to come to an accord on that basis. However, in terms of the peace institute, when the Leader of the Opposition put forward specific proposals and tried to obtain the commitment on the part of the Prime Minister to agree to those specific amendments to the Bill, that agreement was not forthcoming.

Is the Parliamentary Secretary in a position to agree to the amendments which were proposed in the correspondence and indeed in debate on the floor of the House, or does he still suggest that the matter should go to committee and be dealt with there without any commitment being made by the Government?

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, so that the record of the House is clear, the Hon. House Leader of the Conservative Party is asking that I, by reviewing the entire correspondence between the Leaders of the three Parties of the House, would agree without limitation that all comments, suggestions or concepts raised by the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition would be automatically accepted as amendments in committee. Is that the question the Hon. Member has put to me?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The specific proposals put. Is that agreeable to the Government?

Mr. Blaker: That is really a remarkable question. In the normal course of evens, one does not ask for commitment based upon correspondence that is not entirely private at this point. No, no one could make such an undertaking. It is foolish. Send the Bill to committee and let people get to work on it. Do not delay the Bill. That is the answer.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to put to the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker) who is also the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of International Trade. I have been very interested in the attitude of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. He wishes to push this matter through the House with some dispatch. I and my colleagues can agree with that aim in spite of our reservations and the questions that we have put during consideration of this Bill so far. However, because he is a member of the Government and a Parliamentary Secretary to a Minister with international responsibilities, I would like to ask him how he squares his wish to have the Bill go speedily to committee so all of these things can be adequately considered with the comments made by the Chairman of the External Affairs Committee yesterday.

In his comments yesterday during the speech of my colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), he made it very obvious that once the Bill got to committee it was his intention to give us one month. He said: "We give you one month". Later on he said: "Five days a week for one month if you want", suggesting that there was some hurry—that this had to be crammed through committee once we finished dealing with it in the House.

I am sure the Hon. Member is sincere in wanting to give this Bill appropriate and proper consideration in order to ensure the institute's independence, proper funding and all of the other concerns raised by all Hon. Members. Is he now taking issue with the suggestion made by the chairman of that committee, who is a Liberal member as well, who suggested that it is going to be rammed and crammed through that committee once it gets in there?

Mr. Blaker: The Hon. Member knows as well as I do the procedures of the House and of committees. I do not know whether he is speaking for the record with an intent to confuse or what. I was present in the House yesterday when the Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence made those remarks sotto voce, not while he was on his feet. The intention was perfectly clear. He was offering unlimited availability of meetings of the External Affairs Committee five days a week for at least a month, and as much more as was necessary.

Mr. Kristiansen: He said: "We give you one month".

Mr. Blaker: That is the spirit in which it was offered. Obviously I cannot interpret another Hon. Member's comments, but it is clear that in the House of Commons when any chairman suggests not less than five days a week of meetings, he is suggesting the greatest possible time be spent and the greatest possible co-operation. I encourage the Hon. Member to turn to his right and see whether or not he can get the Official Opposition to agree to put the Bill in committee and then watch. I am sure he will be satisfied with the time given to the Bill.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions. One is very short. Surely, Mr. Speaker, does not the Hon. Member and the Parliamentary Secretary, in trying to expedite this matter, realize that this is the second day of debate? We have had five Opposition members, four Government Members, two New Democratic Party members and one independent member, for a total of 12 Hon. Members, speaking on a Bill which is pretty fundamental to peace, security and disarmament. Whether it is going to produce all the things we want, at least the objectives are pretty fundamental. Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary believe it is really dragging the heels of the House when there have been 12 Hon. Members speaking on a Bill which has such fundamental importance in terms of, certainly, objectives? That is my first question.

Because this is sort of a peculiar Bill which deserves and warrants bipartisan support, as stipulated initially in correspondence evidently between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney), does the Parliamentary Secretary not really believe that there should be some difference in the appointment of directors? Under the present Clause 8, directors are appointed the same as they are for the CNR, Air Canada and any other government board. Quite frankly, we know they are not quite as independent even though they may be honourable people. Certainly an institute on peace should warrant some other extraordinary procedure for such an extraordinary objective.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might take the two questions in reverse order. I appreciate the question of the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan). With respect to his question about the appointment of the chairman, board of directors and executive director, I believe that is a matter which Hon. Members in their commitment to this concept can and should examine. I believe I have answered that question.

With respect to the Hon. Member's previous question, ought there not to be more time for debate, my problem is that there is an opportunity to move quickly on a very significant matter. The same points about independence and accountability have been raised again and again. I gave what I believe was a good faith answer to the Hon. Member. I put in turn a good faith question to the Official Opposition. I asked: "Do you want to see the Bill go to committee where we can work out those differences, or do you want to talk out the Bill here tonight?" For God's sake, if that is what you want to do, would you mind telling the country why you want to talk it out?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary relative to precisely what he has said now, and also his acceptance of the motion he told us earlier was in principle. He has sat in the Chair and knows that if the House pronounces itself on principle, there is absolutely no possibility of making any major amendments. We have had speaker after speaker, time and time again, inform the House of this matter. Therefore, a chairman of committee who must act as Mr. Speaker does in his role vis-à-vis the committee could not accept those amendments.

Second, what does the Parliamentary Secretary deem to be the report stage following the bringing in of the committee report? What does he understand is meant by the last question asked by the Speaker after receipt of the report, on completion of the report stage: "Shall the Bill be read a third time?" When is it an acceptance in principle, according to the Parliamentary Secretary?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. By consent, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary could be allowed to reply because the time for questions and comments has expired. Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I am going to be very brief. I would prefer that we not look to the procedural argument raised by the Hon. Member but to the substantive argument. The substance of the matter is that we are faced with an important Bill. The Prime Minister has given written assurances—in particular, assurances to the Leader of the Opposition—that suggested amendments of the Opposition would be very well received and very well considered.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Blaker: It may be that the hon. gentleman opposite cannot accept the Prime Minister's word. I do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The House will now proceed to debate. The Chair had earlier recognized the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour).

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, now they are all going to leave! The basic thrust of my speech can be stated very directly. The nuclear threat, East-West relations, international peace and security, defence, arms control and disarmament are so important to all of our constituents, including my three young children, that the institute proposed in Bill C-32 must not be tainted from birth as a partisan, dependent body.

The burden of my argument here is that, as currently drafted, the Bill is a prescription for an institute very susceptible to following the wishes of any government in office. Why do I say that? First, the language of the Bill establishes the institute as neither independent from government nor part of government. We on this side would prefer language which clearly protects the institute from interference by a government, and, conversely, if you like, an elected government from the institute. What we have here is neither fish nor fowl, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps it is some form of a stew.

Second, the funding issue is crucial to the independence question. The present position of the Government is, I gather, that the Department of National Defence and the Department of External Affairs will contribute jointly to the institute on an annual basis by government appropriations. However, this model, Sir, keeps the institute on a very short leash. Would its independence not be likely to suffer accordingly? The Damocles sword would be that if the institute displeased a government in year one, its funding would be cut, or substantially altered, in year two.

I remind Hon. Members that only yesterday in British Columbia, the Government of Premier Bennett cut funding to a women's group action committee, and I fear the same thing might happen to this very important institute. Surely, Mr. Speaker, a more responsible approach from the standpoint of independence and non-partisanship would be the endowment route. We should establish an endowment fund and allow the institute to operate from endowment resources.

[Translation]

Third, the proposed formula for setting up the Institute raises the serious question of the Institute's total independence vis-à-vis the Government. The Chairman shall be appointed by the Governor in Council for a term not exceeding three years. The Executive Director shall be appointed by the Governor in Council to hold office for a term not exceeding five years. Fifteen directors shall be appointed by the Governor in Council to hold office for respective mandates not exceeding three years.

Who will they be? I maintain that, considering our experience with many federal agencies, the Canadian directors will be defeated Liberal candidates, presidents of Liberal riding associations and other individuals known for their partisan activities.

• (1750)

Why not a more imaginative appointment structure to ensure more independent-minded and competent people on the board, Sir? For example, a phrase in Clauses 6, 7 or 8 indicating that any person appointed might have before appointment "eminence in peace, security or disarmament matters"? Or a phrase such as "appointed after a consensus" by all members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence? Why not a phrase indicating that nominees must have the approval of the Opposition Leaders?

It is hardly reassuring to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) say here yesterday that the Government will seek nominations from opposition Parties before making appointments. From too much past experience we know this Government will wait only long enough to hear our proposals and then go ahead and appoint its own choices. The Minister said yesterday that he wants the institute to be "apolitical and non-partisan". We agree. Why not then build in an appointment mechanism which guarantees these qualities for our institute? Why not some phrase indicating that the chairman should be appointed by the Governor in Council "upon recommendation by the board of directors"? Similarly, why not have the executive director appointed by Governor in Council "upon the recommendation of the board of directors"? All of these suggestions would enhance the independence and credibility of the institute.

If we want truly independent-minded directors of the institute, it would also seem to me that Clause 21 should make it clear that members of the Public Service of Canada are not eligible to become directors. Can a public servant, albeit competent and respected, be truly independent? The current wording appears to make them eligible. On the other hand, why not allow the institute to second public servants for "a period of up to three years" as staff members? Clause 12 should be changed to reflect this.

[Translation]

In the course of this debate, there has been considerable emphasis on the implications of Clause 28 which provides that, at the request of the Minister, the Institute "shall provide" in relation to any issue involving "international peace and security" . . . In fact, this clause might allow the Minister to set the order of priority of the Institute's activities. By substituting "may provide" for "shall provide", and "Government" or "Parliament" for "Minister", we might be able to reduce the risk of having such situations occur.

[English]

Another error in principle lies in Clause 5(c), which appears to authorize the institute to publish studies and reports in the name of the institute. Basic intellectual integrity requires that institutional research be published on an attributable basis. That clause should be changed to include the phrase "on an attribution basis".

Let us look for a moment at three other similar federal agencies in this regard. First, the Science Council of Canada, which provides independent policy advice to the Government, works only with publicly available information, makes no grants and has no research capability. In my judgment the credibility of the Science Council suffered when those opposite filled the chairmanship with a retiring Liberal politician in the Province of Ontario. Stuart Smith is to be sure an intelligent individual, but in my judgment the Government tainted the work of the Science Council with his appointment because it indicated to one and all that it preferred an active Liberal to some eminent, non-partisan scientist as chairman. How do we know it will not do the same with this institute unless we build in legislative guarantees for its integrity from the start?

Second, Mr. Speaker, the International Development Research Centre, and I will refer to it as IDRC, shares similarities in its organizational structure with the institute, including the provision for foreign directors. In passing, I wonder why we need foreign directors. Do we not have enough qualified men and women across this talented country with sufficient eminence in the field to fill all the directorships in this institution with distinction? I think so. However, let us look at only some of the Canadian directors of the IDRC as an indication of whether the present Government really intends to make non-partisan and apolitical appointments when given the chance.

The first name on my list is Donald S. Macdonald, chairman of the board of the IDRC. He is a former Liberal MP now earning $800 per day as a Royal Commissioner who produced an interim report two days ago which won something less than wide critical acclaim. Second is Maurice LaClair, CN President and a former medical doctor who did a stint in the Prime Minister's Office. Third is Ivan Head, president and chief executive officer, and formerly an adviser to the Prime Minister. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, will Tom Axworthy, Frank Fowler and other members of the Prime Minister's Office be the most likely candidates for early nomination since all of them will, I assume, be technically out of work as of June 16? Fourth, Mr. Speaker, we have John Stewart, formerly a Liberal MP and recently appointed a Liberal senator.

I do not know enough about the other Canadian directors to be certain, but from past experience I doubt if many of them are politically neutral. However, my point is that unless we build in non-partisanship in this Bill, the strong probability is that a dying Government will see that the institute is politically tainted from the start. In the case of the IDRC, there is at least some attempt in Section 10 to assure excellence in governors by specifying that "at least 11 of the governors must have experience in the field of international development". Unfortunately, this good intention is largely vitiated by the rest of the section which says "or experience or training in the natural or social sciences or technology". That is a pretty big basket and it includes an awful lot of people.

The third body is the Law Reform Commission of Canada which, since its founding in 1971, to my knowledge has never actively criticized the Government of Canada or its policy. I am told that nothing in the legislation founding the Commission deals with this question, so again we must look to the partisanship or non-partisanship of members of that Commission. Let us start with the first chairman, Mr. Justice Patrick Hartt. I have no knowledge of his political affiliation and I say nothing further on that. However, the second chairman was Mr. Justice Antonio Lamer, past president of the Young Liberals of Quebec, I am informed. The Third chairman was Mr. Justice Frank Muldoon, who as you probably know, Mr. Speaker, is a past Liberal candidate provincially in Manitoba. The present chairman is Mr. Justice Allan Linden. In fairness, he was never a Liberal candidate, but he has long been known as a defender of Liberal causes in the city of Toronto.

Am I running out of time? May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before making a final statement, the Chair would like to take this opportunity to wish all Hon. Members a happy Easter holiday.

[Translation]

I wish all Members a very happy Easter.

It being six o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 3, this House stands adjourned until Monday, April 30 at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m., the House adjourned without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, March 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words this morning about Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. I have read many Bills during my lifetime but I have never read a Bill which contains so many contradictions as this Bill. In fact, it is a jungle of contradictions. I want to deal with some of these contradictions today. If this Bill is eventually to pass, certainly a number of its measures, particularly the ones I will mention this morning, should be amended, completely overhauled or completely restructured.

The first contradiction that I find is that the Bill implies that the Minister is responsible for the Crown corporation. It would certainly be commendable if that were true. However, when one reads the Act further one finds that the Minister really has very little authority. It is the Cabinet that exercises most of the powers, not the Minister. The Cabinet appoints the directors and gives approval to operating and capital budgets. It appoints the chief executive officer. In other words, the Minister is not responsible for the operation of the corporation. Since the Cabinet is responsible this means that there are 20 or more Ministers who are responsible. In other words, what is everybody's business is nobody's business. This explains why many of our Crown corporations have gone awry and have fallen into ridiculous financial positions. Crown corporations are responsible to several Ministers yet really responsible to no one. That is the first contradiction.

The second contradiction concerns the duties and responsibilities of directors. In the private sector an essential duty of a board of directors is to hire and monitor the chief executive officer. This is not so with Crown corporations as it is set out in this Bill. It is not the board of directors that has that responsibility but the Cabinet which appoints the chief executive officer. Therefore, the chief executive officer is responsible to the Cabinet. The Cabinet hires and sets out the pay of the chief executive officer and, of course, it is unheard of to fire a chief executive officer. That authority rests with the Cabinet, not the Minister or a board of directors, even though it is the chief executive officer who will be responsible for the day to day operations of the corporation. That is the second contradiction.

Third, in the private sector the board of directors appoints the auditors. They are responsible to the board of directors. This is not the case here; according to this Bill, it is the Cabinet which appoints the auditors. This means that the auditors are responsible to the Cabinet; in other words, to no one. When one is responsible to 25 Ministers, one is responsible to no one since there is no one to assume that responsibility.

Another contradiction is that the board of directors in the private sector approves, varies or rescinds by-laws. While the Bill states that the board of directors may make by-laws, this is not so according to Clause 124(1) and 124(2). Cabinet approves, varies and rescinds by-laws. What do the directors do? They rubber-stamp whatever Cabinet does. Anything or everything Cabinet does is rubber-stamped by the board of directors. Cabinet can even order the board of directors to approve a by-law or to repeal a by-law. The Minister responsible does not do this. Cabinet may order the board of directors to approve or repeal a by-law. One begins to wonder why we even have a board of directors under this Bill. Everything has to go to Cabinet. No wonder most of our Crown corporations are losing money when Cabinet takes on these responsibilities and the chief executive officer and board of directors are responsible to Cabinet.

There are a few other interesting items about directors in this Bill. If Cabinet gives a directive to the board of directors, the directors must implement same. The board of directors is set up to run a particular corporation. It is supposed to be closest to the corporation and very close to the chief executive officer. However, if Cabinet gives a directive to the board of directors, the directors must implement it. It has no choice at all, whether it is right or wrong. Again, no wonder many Crown corporations are losing money with a legislative set-up such as this. The directors are not accountable for any consequences arising out of the said directive. I suppose that is understandable when Cabinet tells the directors that they have to do it. Even though they think it is wrong or bad, they still have to do it.

Then the Bill indicates that the directors will not be held responsible in cases like that. Then who is responsible? The Cabinet, which means nobody is responsible. When there are 25 people responsible for something, what is everybody's business is nobody's business. In other words, no one is responsible.

That is not the worst of it. While the Bill gives Cabinet authority to make directives, it denies that authority when it comes to certain corporations such as the CBC. The programs can be as bad as the corporation likes, but Cabinet cannot give the CBC any directives, nor can it give the Canadian Film Development Corporation or the National Arts Centre Corporation any directives. In other words, these corporations become the government, responsible to no one. They do what they like. Even the Cabinet cannot make recommendations.

I used to think it very odd when the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) would write to me indicating that he had no authority to give directives to the CRTC in connection with Playboy or pornography. The Minister of the Crown responsible for that corporation cannot give a directive. Cabinet can give a directive, but even it cannot direct the CBC, the Canadian Film Development Corporation or the National Arts Centre Corporation. Who runs it? It runs itself. It is like the government of the country. It becomes the government. Why any government would want legislation like this is beyond me.

Let us look at one or two examples. A few weeks ago an item was issued by the National Film Board on a great Canadian war hero, Billy Bishop. This film smeared the courage of not only Billy Bishop, but others like him. Men who gave their lives so that we can be free in this country are smeared in that film. What does the Minister say? He says he has no authority. In a letter to me, the Minister said that we pride ourselves on having freedom of speech. Freedom of speech to smear men like Billy Bishop? What a cheap and sleazy attack.

The Minister says that each agency is accountable to Parliament for its action. When does Parliament have an opportunity? After the fact, never before. We are placing into legislation that a board set up by government cannot be controlled by government. It cannot even receive a directive from the government. Read the Bill. I wonder how many Members have read it. I read it going on home on the plane at Easter. It is so bad that I felt like throwing the Bill and everyone connected with it out of the airplane. That is just one example.

Another example is the CRTC. I attended a CRTC hearing in Edmonton. The board chastised a company because it dared to show American films in the Banff-Canmore area. Those same films are shown almost everywhere else in Canada. I told the directors that every one of them had access to those films, but not the rank and file in Banff-Canmore. The CRTC threatened to cancel the licence of that company because it dared show a film it was not authorized to show.

If American films can be shown in Toronto, Montreal and Calgary, why can they not be shown to those in the rural areas? If you have a lot of money, Mr. Speaker, you can see anything. If you have an extra $2,500, you can buy a TV saucer. Where would the rank and file in this country find $2,500 to buy a saucer to put in the front yard, if indeed they have a front yard? You do not need a licence for a saucer. You can watch any program you want, American or otherwise; it is entirely up to you.

The Minister is doing nothing about this even though it is ruining some of our cable companies. Everyone who purchases a saucer is a potential customer of a cable company. The cable company has to pay taxes. It has to beg the CRTC for a licence. It must get down on its hands and knees because it dares to show a program in Banff and Canmore which the board said it could not show even though the board members watch the same films in Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa. Isn't that a fine how do you do? The Minister says there is no authority to change this situation. This is the kind of Act that is being set up in this country. I will move on even though we could spend the whole day on this one clause.

There is another contradiction in the Bill. Clause 104(1) provides that no Crown corporation may carry on any business or activity that is not consistent with the objects or purposes for which it was incorporated. That sounds fine. A Crown corporation should not do anything that Parliament has not given it the authority to do. However, there is an exception to this. Clause 104(2) indicates that if a Crown corporation is already doing something illegal, it may continue to do it. That makes we wonder how many of these corporations are already carrying out programs for which they have no parliamentary authorization. Some of them must be doing it or there would not be a clause in this Bill authorizing it. This clause indicates that it is all right for a Crown corporation to break the law if it had broken the law before but other Crown corporations cannot break the law in future unless another exception is later added to the Bill.

That makes me think of sin. These days, even some of the churches are supporting sins about which they used to decry. A King of England had to abdicate because he married a divorcée. Now the same church to which he belonged is authorizing divorces right and left. Divorce has suddenly become right. If enough people do it, it is fine. The Government says: "Enough corporations are breaking the law so they can keep right on doing it because they did it before but no new corporations can do it". What kind of a moral attitude is this kind of legislation building in the country?

Some Crown corporations must now be doing things not consistent with their objectives. What are these illegal activities that are being carried out? I would like to know. How many corporations are guilty? Perhaps I should ask how many of these corporations are not guilty of doing this very thing that is now being authorized by legislation. I say shame to any government that would do that.

It must be wonderful to be a director of one of these Crown corporations. Clause 112(1)(c) provides that the director of a Crown corporation may issue a document for which he or she had no authority and the document is still valid and genuine. If a director were to issue a document for which he or she had no authority, it is still valid and genuine unless someone can look into that director's brain and determine whether he or she knew that it was wrong to do so. That is not evidence. Again, the Bill authorizes illegal operations.

Even worse, Clause 112(4) gives a Crown corporation blanket permission to do things it has no power to do. That action becomes valid. Clause 112(4) reads:

No action of a Crown corporation, including a transfer of property, is invalid by reason only that the corporation was without the capacity or power to so act.

What is our country coming to? Clause 116 of the Bill is equally ridiculous. This clause does not give the power to appoint or reappoint directors, chairmen or chief executive officers if they do not meet the requirements of any Act. I would think that a chief executive officer would have to meet the requirements of an Act. However, this does not apply to ex officio directors, chairmen or chief executive officers. They can be appointed even if they do not meet the requirements. In other words, top officials do not need to meet the qualifications set out by Parliament. I suppose the only qualification they must meet is to be cronies or members of the Liberal Party.

Clause 125(1) is another dandy clause. It reads:

(1) Every director and every officer of a Crown corporation in exercising his powers and performing his duties shall

(a) act honestly and . . .

(b) exercise the care, diligence—

And so on. Is that not splendid? However, Clause 125(2) indicates that a director or officer is not liable for breach of his duties under subsection (1). In other words, he can be dishonest and does not need to be diligent. He need not be accountable for his dishonesty or carelessness as long as he did not know that he was doing wrong.

I believe this Bill is a shameful piece of legislation. It needs to be overhauled completely. Any government that authorizes the things which I have pointed out should not only resign but should be kicked out and kicked out fast.

• (1130)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and/or comments. The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River?

Mr. Sargeant: Selkirk-Interlake, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: Close!

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) made some scandalous statements in my constituency last week, I will have the House know!

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) a question. In his speech he sounded as if he was advocating that the Cabinet exercise some kind of control over the CBC, the CFDC and the National Arts Centre. I wonder if he could tell us if this is indeed the case. Does he believe that those bodies should not enjoy complete independence from Cabinet? If he does believe that, how does that square with the statements in this House of a week and a half ago made by the former Prime Minister of this country, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), when he was criticizing the Government, and rightly so, for not giving this new peace research institute complete independence from government?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, what I was advocating was that there should be a Minister responsible and that the board of directors should be responsible. It should not be shoved up to the Cabinet where nobody is responsible.

Second, I certainly believe there should be no political interference, but a government that appoints a board should have some authority over that board. They do not need to censor it, but surely if it starts abusing women or children through pornography that is disgraceful and completely contrary to the thinking of the people of the country, then the government should say: "We do not want that type of thing". If the Hon. Member for the NDP thinks that type of thing should go on, he is not reflecting the thinking of the people he represents.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member give the House examples of when any of those three bodies—in particular, the CBC, CFDC and the National Arts Centre—have abused women and children in this country? Also, could he answer my second question about how that squares with the comments of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead about the need for complete independence of another government body?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member does not have examples of the things that have gone on at CBC and done by the CRTC, I do not know where he has been hiding the last few years. I saw a program a few years ago called "This Hour has Seven Days" that was complete lies. It was carried out in Alberta, and it was complete lies. That type of thing should not be permitted to go on. Independence and political interference are two entirely different things. Certainly any body that is appointed by a government should be responsible to that government. Do not tell me that the Minister does not talk to the chairman of the board of the CBC. I know he does.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, as one who has humbly practised the journalism profession for some time before I came to this new profession, I am a little bit concerned about the tone of the remarks I hear from the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). I hear him saying: "If they speak the truth as I see the truth, then they are fine. But if they speak lies as I declare something that has been carried on the public networks is lies, then we have got to do something about it".

When I hear a Member of Parliament who supposedly is here to protect what is near and dear to this country, who has just witnessed in recent days the passage of a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, whether he knows it or not—and that is the frightening thing—he is advocating censorship. He is advocating censorship when it suits his own political, philosophical and ideological beliefs. Can the Hon. Member ensure us—because I am concerned—that that is not the position of the Conservative Party of Canada? Also to assign to a board responsibility for what may be carried by a network, to imply that the board sets up programming in the various private networks of this country, including the CBC, is an unfair, dangerous and very loose allegation. Would he please clarify his statements? Mr. Speaker, I am concerned.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member and his Party would be a little more concerned about the people of this country and less about the corporations. When pay-TV was introduced, thousands of people wrote to the Minister, wrote to the Hon. Member and many other people. We are not talking about censorship. We are talking about decency. It is not what I think and it is not what the Hon. Member happens to think. We are not talking about censorship. When thousands of Canadians object to programs being aired because those programs will ruin the lives of their boys and girls, government has a responsibility to reflect that thinking.

Has the Hon. Member ever heard of democracy? No, they do not practise it over there. Democracy is supposed to reflect the thinking of the greatest possible number of people—not tell them what is good for them, but reflect their thinking. This Government is not doing that. Censorship is not part of our policy, but we certainly want to make sure that we reflect the thinking of the people because that is democracy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the comments of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), because it seems to me that the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) was castigating the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) just a few weeks ago, saying that the Government would have the power to direct the CBC and the National Film Board. In fact, the Bill really exempts those cultural organizations from directives as to the program content. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member for Bow River is arguing against the Hon. Member for Rosedale in his comments, but it seems to me that they should get their mutual acts together.

The other thing I would like to ask the Hon. Member about is that the Bill sets out and gives responsibility to the board of directors on exactly the same basis as it is given to the board of directors for the efficient and effective operation of these Crown corporations and to every other corporation under the Canadian Business Corporations Act. I think that that is spelled out very clearly in the Bill. I would like to know why he thinks that the board of directors has less responsibility to effectively manage and operate the Crown corporations than any other business corporation under that Act.

The other point that the Hon. Member made is that Cabinet does have the power effectively to override a by-law made by the corporation. He is arguing on one side that they should not have that power and on the other side he is saying that they do have that power. It seems to me that he has got to go down the middle and clarify exactly where he stands on this Bill and those provisions of it.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, in connection with the first question, the Hon. Member is talking about political interference. No government should say: "We want the CBC to carry programs just telling our side of the story". When talking about the absence of common decency that will effect the lives of boys and girls in this country, the Government has a responsibility. If Hon. Members cannot see that difference, there is something wrong with them.

Second, no one is advocating censorship and no one is advocating political interference. We are not saying that the board should have the power to broadcast pornography that will be distasteful to 90 per cent of the people of Canada. I do not agree that the board should become the government of this country. It does not in practice either. When it comes to the duties of the board of directors, they are so limited that they cannot do anything. The Cabinet does all of the real work. Why are you paying the board of directors? They should have some authority. They cannot even hire their own chief executive officer. They cannot fire him. They cannot hire their own auditor. Nor can they fire him. If we must have a board of directors, let it be like the private sector where they have some authority; put some teeth into it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the end of the ten-minute period for questions and comments. To continue debate, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter the debate today because it will take my mind off the cheque I have to write in favour of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) later on today. It is a hell of a birthday present, Mr. Speaker!

Before I go into the details of the Bill, I would like to lay out my credentials as an expert on Crown corporations. Coming from the Northwest Territories one cannot help but be an expert on Crown corporations, as you will see when I read out the list of those we have to deal with. In the transportation field, our railway is CN. If you want to travel by water, Mr. Speaker, you can use the inland river system and the freight services made available by Northern Transportation Limited. I must here congratulate the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) on his initiative in promising to privatize this corporation. We had that in mind when we formed the Government in 1979. It is certainly a logical choice for privatization.

If you want to ship your freight by truck, Mr. Speaker, you have the opportunity of using Grimshaw Trucking, a subsidiary of our famous NTCL. I hope that is privatized at the same time as the parent corporation. If you want to travel by air,

Mr. Speaker, for most routes you are obliged to go on Pacific Western Airlines. Although that company does not come under our jurisdiction because it is owned by the Government of Alberta, it is still a Crown corporation. In my opinion that is another candidate for privatization. I do not know what the Government of Alberta is thinking of when it wants to run an airline; it is just as wrong for that provincial Government to run an airline as it is for the federal Government to operate its airline, Air Canada.

If you do not want to ship your freight on the river system but you do want to ship it on the high seas, then you get involved with Canarctic Shipping Limited in which the Government of Canada has a major participation. Therefore, in the transporation field they have us covered, coming and going.

Similarly in the field of communications, another very important part of Canadian life, we have the CBC, with a virtual monopoly on much of the video and TV in the north. Our telephone services are provided by a subsidiary of CN, the famous Northwest Tel. Much of the radio and electronic communication in the north is done by satellite, which satellites are owned by none other than Telesat Canada, another Crown Corporation. Therefore, in those most important aspects of life, the field of transportation and communication, we are veritably at the mercy of Crown Corporations, whether federal or provincial. I might add that it is provincial Crown corporations rather than territorial. The Crown corporations of other provinces are acting extra-territorially, as it were.

In the resource field, the most important aspect of economic life, you have Petro-Canada busily raking in its 25 per cent back-in on all the oil and gas plays in the Beaufort, High Arctic and Mackenzie. You have subsidiaries of Petro-Canada getting involved in the mineral business. We have that famous corporation, 107744 Canada Inc. busily engaged in mineral exploration. I would like to address this particular matter later because in my opinion Petro-Canada is not allowed, by virtue of the Petro-Canada Act, to get into the mineral exploration business. Yet it has set up a subsidiary that purports to have that authority. It is certainly not the authority that Parliament wished to give Petro-Canada.

In the oil and gas business, too, we have Panarctic and Polar Gas and a number of other corporations or consortia in which the Government of Canada in the case of Polar Gas, and also the Government of Ontario through Ontario Energy, have the major say. One other thing I would mention is the Government's participation in mining companies such as Nanisivik, and the Government's 30 per cent interest in the Norman Wells oil field.

In the field of fishing, the Government, through its Crown corporation, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, has a monopoly on the buying and selling of fish. It holds the lives of those fishermen in its control. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the north has been used as a proving ground too often for Liberal social theories. Very often this social theorizing has utilized the mechanism of Crown corporations.

After that brief introduction, I will now look at the Bill itself. Basically, as I read the Bill, there is not a great deal of difference between what it proposes to do and the status quo. What it does is rationalize the status quo to a certain extent and try to introduce some uniformity of treatment for various Crown corporations doing things of a similar nature. But it is certainly not revolutionary legislation. It does not address the great, outstanding public concerns which have been debated in the press and in Canada at large for some time. There is very little on the question of accountability. In my opinion what is more important is the prevention of government abusing its powers and authority by using Crown corporations so to do.

Frequently what the federal Government would be unable to do through democratic institutions such as Parliament, it can do through the back door route using Crown corporations. Major policy and financial commitments can be made using this back door route when the Government is unwilling to appear before Parliament to argue its case. One of the most obvious examples of this was the Petro-Canada acquisition of Petrofina. There was no debate; only a privileged few knew what was going on. However, Canadians were eventually presented with a bill for $1.5 billion, which they had to pay in taxes imposed on gasoline. All this was done through the secret back door route using Crown corporations when it should have been done up front in public. It is that route which scares off the present Government.

The Bill will not prevent an abuse we have been witness to on many occasions in this House. The Government will stand up one day in reply to questions and say that, so far as a Crown corporation is concerned, it is an autonomous body, that it has no control over it at all if things go wrong. On the next day it will take quite a different position. The Minister will get up in his place and say that he represents the shareholders of this Crown corporation and is, therefore, quite right in dictating major policy changes for that corporation and telling shareholders and the board of that corporation what they should do.

The gentleman who is now Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and who was formerly Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is famous for the use of this tactic, especially when dealing with Petro-Canada. In dealing with the Petro-Canada acquisition of Petrofina he said that he told Petro-Canada to take over Petrofina. He justified that as acting on behalf of the shareholders of Petro-Canada, the public of Canada. On other occasions when things went wrong with the operation of Petro-Canada, he denied that he had ever heard of such an organization.

In looking at the Bill we find that it is virtually a skeletal Bill, as is so much Liberal legislation. Most of what really happens will be dependent upon regulations which we have not yet seen. We have objected to this approach to legislation so many times in the past that it is hardly worth devoting a lot of time to it now. We should make careful note of the power that the Governor in Council would have under Clause 124(4)(b) of this Bill whereby certain corporations can be exempted from the general provisions by regulation. The Government can say of its own accord, without any debate, that it will suspend the operation of Bill C-24 with respect to certain corporations by way of an Order in Council.

I would like to speak about the question of accountability. Who is accountable? Is it to be the chief executive officer of the Crown corporation? Is it to be the board of directors? Is it to be departmental officials? Is it to be the Minister, or is it to be the Cabinet collectively? If anything, this Bill diffuses accountability so widely that in reality no one is accountable. When everyone is accountable, no one is accountable. That is the route we are taking with this Bill. I believe the Bill puts the emphasis on the Cabinet collectively being responsible for major decisions, such as major appointments of chief executive officers, directors and auditors. Cabinet as a whole approves budgets, corporate plans and by-laws.

However, the Cabinet cannot do that detailed type of work. There is no way that the Minister of Transport, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) and their colleagues can sit down in a Cabinet meeting and go over the details of literally hundreds of Crown corporations. It is impossible. The hon. gentlemen are already overworked. They have already ceased to think because they are so overworked. We do not want to give them more detailed work. We should take it away from them and allow them to do what they are paid almost $120,000 a year to do; that is to think. That is what they do not do at the present time. When Cabinet as a whole is made responsible for details, the whole system falls apart.

There is no mention made in this Bill of a parliamentary committee which in my opinion ought to be set up to take Crown corporations under its wing. This is not a perfect solution. Everyone who knows anything about parliamentary committees knows they are not perfect bodies, but I believe this type of approach has worked out reasonably well in the provinces. I believe the Province of Saskatchewan was the province which implemented that idea. This would take some of the load off existing parliamentary committees. We should provide a committee on Crown corporations with competent staff so that it can look into the affairs of Crown corporations in reasonable detail.

There is a tendency for parliamentary committees, especially those which have forceful representation from the Opposition, to want to uncover and publish as many facts as possible that are not particularly advantageous to the Government of the day. This can be good or bad when dealing with corporations of a commercial nature. However, it is no worse than the other route whereby things are dealt with solely by Cabinet and Cabinet committees and the natural tendency is to hush things up and slide them under the rug in hopes that no one will notice things that are seriously wrong with Crown corporations.

I would like to say a few words about the board of directors of Crown corporations. I have always been very puzzled as to what is the real function of a board of directors of a Crown corporation. In private companies they represent the shareholders. On behalf of the shareholders they approve or disapprove of major corporate decisions. For example, a prime function would be to hire, fire, oversee and set the remuneration of the chief executive officer and certain other top employees. However, in Crown corporations that is not a function of the board of directors. Under Bill C-24 that is done by the Cabinet rather than the board of directors. In a private corporation the appointment of auditors and changes in by-laws are the responsibility of the board of directors, subject, of course, to approval at annual general meetings. In the case of Crown corporations those things remain a Crown prerogative.

This Bill would impose the penalties of the Canada Business Corporations Act upon the directors of a Crown corporation for failure to fulfil their duties and obligations. However, Sir, the Bill does not give them any authority with which to exercise what would normally be the duties and responsibilities of the board of directors. The only conclusion which I can arrive at, that being born of careful observation of Crown corporations, is that the function of the board is to provide patronage and honorary positions, sometimes with reasonable remuneration attached thereto. Let us not kid ourselves. Most appointments are made on a partisan basis as a reward for past services, or occasionally to placate regional interest.

There are a number of other things I would have liked to discuss; however, time does not permit. In conclusion I would like to say that this Bill is full of half measures. Real reform is conspicuously absent. It is a far cry from Bill C-27 which was introduced in 1979 by the Clark Government. Had that Bill been passed it would have cleared up some of the outstanding problems which we have with Crown corporations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and/or comments.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the comments of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). I would like to ask him a couple of questions.

• (1200)

He suggested that the board of directors normally appoints the auditor. If one looks at the Canada Business Corporations Act one will see that the auditor for any company is appointed by the shareholders. In this case it is the Government of Canada.

I think it is also important to note that in this Bill the auditor is appointed by the Government of Canada, who is the shareholder, after consultation with the board of directors. I do not understand how the board of directors, which is not the shareholder, can appoint the auditor. Appointment by the shareholder is a standard business procedure and is in fact a requirement of the CBCA rules.

It is important to note that even Bill C-27, which was introduced by the previous administration, only provided for consultation with the board of directors under Schedule II, the commercial corporations. I believe this legislation provides for that consultation for all Crown corporations and that the auditor would be appointed by the shareholder as is the normal business practice.

I also wanted to question the Hon. Member with respect to his remarks about parliamentary committees having a chance to review the work of Crown corporations. I believe he thinks there should be one parliamentary committee. While the House could do this if it wished, this Bill provides that the corporate plan, the budget and the annual report for each Crown corporation would be referred to the standing committees of the House. He stated that there are many Crown corporations. It seems more practical to me that more than one committee should be working on examining their activities. In any event, the legislation does not prevent the House, in its wisdom, setting up one committee with special responsibility.

My other question concerns the point raised by the Hon. Member when he said that Ministers do not have time to review each by-law that is made by a Crown corporation. I think that is good advice. I simply point out that Bill C-27 of the former administration, I believe, provided that every by-law made by Crown corporations had to be approved by the Government within 15 days. However, according to this Bill the board of directors make the by-laws of the Crown corporations and while they can be overridden by the Government they usually are passed and become effective as they are approved by the board of directors.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made some interesting and quite valid observations. Perhaps he should have listened more carefully to what I was saying because I was at pains to point out in my initial presentation that the appointment of auditors for public corporations that are not Crown corporations is made by the shareholders of that corporation, normally at an annual general meeting. However, the process of arriving at this is that the board of directors will make the initial decision as to who should be the auditors. It could be on the advice of the operating officers of the corporation but not necessarily. They then take the recommendation to the annual general meeting. I do not know of one instance when the recommendation of the board of directors on the appointment of auditors has been turned down. It would be something that happens very, very seldom. Certainly it should not happen if the board of directors is properly representing the ownership in the company.

What concerns me in the case of Crown corporations is that the Minister may tell a certain Crown corporation that he is not particularly interested in discussing the matter with anyone in the corporation because he wants to appoint a certain friendly firm of accountants as auditors because he owes them a favour for the work they did in the last election. That is what we are concerned about on this side.

With respect to the question dealing with parliamentary committees, I am of two minds. I always dislike establishing new committees because we have boards and committees coming out of our ears. I sometimes wish that we could not have quite as many. Given that, it is always hard to recommend the etablishmment of yet another committee but I think that when it comes to Crown corporations that operate in the commercial realm, there is a need for a good deal of expertise.

I suggested the formation of a parliamentary committee to which all of these matters could be referred. However, this committee would have available to it the expert staff who are skilled in things financial, accounting and in the operation of corporations of this nature and like non-Crown corporations. They would be able to go through the various reports, budgets and corporate plans that were made available and isolate those things which should be brought to the full attention of Parliament. It would be similar to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. When the voluminous material comes in, the counsel for the committee goes through it and brings to the attention of members those things which are in need of more public debate. I prefer this to other committees, such as the Transport Committee or the Communications and Culture Committee, getting clogged up with work on Crown corporations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Further questions or comments?

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, for the record I am sure that my colleague would not object to my making a small correction. It is that PWA was privatized by the Province of Alberta last November.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Continuing debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I believe no one will dispute the need for this particular Bill. We certainly need legislation which will do something to affect the control, development and future work of Crown corporations within the economy of Canada. There is no doubt that Crown corporations are a continuing part of our economy and the nation as a whole. However, we must review what has happened to Crown corporations. I suggest that a study of this Bill in the House and in the committee might help us better understand what happens to Crown corporations that makes it necessary for us to change the legislation which controls them.

I could easily give at least six examples of how Crown corporations have strayed from their original purpose. They are costing the country money without contributing any money to the economy. I suppose the best and most publicized example we have had lately is Canadair. Looking into Canadair gives one an insight into the need for some kind of legislation to control and make Crown corporations accountable.

When Crown corporations are formed, they are formed for some particular reason. They are considered to be vehicles of public policy which will do something for the country. If they are of no value, they will not do something for the country. If they do not fulfil some government policy, they should not be formed. We develop these Crown corporations so they will provide some kind of economic direction, some kind of commercial entry into a particular market, some need, or some kind of development. Possibly they provide a service to Canadians. Many of our Crown corporations are exactly that—service organizations. For example, we have provincial telephone companies. The understanding of Crown corporations as being necessities for the offering of utilities in most of provinces is an accepted reason for having Crown corporations.

But what happens to a number of these Crown corporations? We pass a Bill here, which is one method of forming Crown corporations or has been in the past. Possibly passing a Bill in this House is the best method. In the process of passing a Bill, we look at the reason and the objective for having a Crown corporation. Therefore, the social responsibility of a Crown corporation is put before the House. We develop objectives which are acceptable to the people of Canada by being acceptable to this House. That is the theory.

What happens after having formed a Crown corporation? This Government and the Official Opposition have developed a philosophy that if we have a Crown corporation, it must be at arm's length, that we must not have anything to do with it because if we do we will be affecting the marketplace in some way. It leaves corporations to wander through the economic world and they eventually become entities unto themselves. Every decision made by a Crown corporation is quite often for the benefit of that Crown corporation, possibly for the benefit of the managers or the board of directors or for the benefit of those people most closely concerned with it. The Crown corporations then loses some of its public responsibility.

We in the New Democratic Party believe that Crown corporations are a necessity. If we establish Crown corporations, we should do so with clear mandates of public responsibility and public direction. As these Crown corporations operate, we should keep a hand on them to see they operate within the mandate and the objectives this House has placed upon them. But that has not happened with a number of Crown corporations. As a result this Government and its philosophy has given Crown corporations in Canada a bad name. Walking down the street you quite often hear it said: "What can you expect? It is a Crown corporation".

There is no reason to believe, Mr. Speaker, that a Crown Corporation cannot be run as efficiently and effectively as any private corporation. Besides that, if a Crown corporation is run effectively and efficiently as a public corporation, it will be run in that way for the benefit of Canadians, not for the benefit of the people who own the shares and live in New York, Houston, London, or Berlin. Basically the reason we form Crown corporations is to have them operate for the benefit of Canada.

What we have right now is a conglomeration of Crown corporations that have no relationship to the public mandate which they originally had. Besides that, our Crown corporations have been allowed and have been encouraged to move into the market and pick up competitive organizations. Sometimes they pick up organizations which are not even relevant to the area in which the corporation operated initially. For instance, if you were to look at the back of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, you will see a list of corporations. Actually it is only a small list of the corporations which actually make up part of Canada's Crown corporations. But a number of them are second, third, and even fourth tier corporations. In other words, there is no relationship between the original corporation that was formed and a secondary corporation that was purchased which owns a third, fourth, or fifth corporation and consequently becomes part of the family of Crown corporations in Canada.

We need to look at this Bill very thoroughly. In the last few months we have become very concerned about the accountability of de Havilland and Canadair. These companies have been before us so often. It has been dramatized that they are important in our every day life. We have decided publicly in this House and outside of this House that there is a need for more accountability of Crown corporations. The Government has proceeded to try and put before us a Bill which is supposed to affect the accountability of Canadian Crown corporations.

As a matter of interest, in various committees of this House we have been studying the effects of the Crown corporation structure. Particularly in recent weeks we have been studying the effects of the structure of Canadair. In various committees we have made a number of recommendations to the Government as to what could be done to improve the responsibility of the Government for Crown corporations, rather than letting them become corporations in their own right.

We had hoped that this Bill would incorporate some of the recommendations that came out of the Finance Committee, the Public Accounts Committee, and various other committees which have had to deal with Crown corporations either directly or indirectly. We hoped that the Government would adopt some of these recommendations and provide the kind of Bill which would make it possible for this Parliament to feel secure that if a Crown corporation, such as Petro-Canada, is started, it would do what it is supposed to do.

We have found out—and Petro-Canada is probably as good an example as any—that it does not matter very much what the mandate was that was given to the Crown corporation initially; it is the mandate carried out by the Crown corporation that is important. We can have all the fine words we want in the definition of the objective or mandate, but if the government in power does not have the will to control the company, it will not be controlled. If it does not put people in charge of those companies who recognize that their responsibility is to Canadians, not to the corporations or to the government, we will not have the kind of accountability which we see as necessary.

A number of criticisms were made of Canadair, and I would like to indicate what can happen to a Crown corporation which does not have the accountability it should have. I will spend just a few minutes dealing with Canadair. What role does a Minister in charge of a corporation play? The new Bill suggests that it will be a Cabinet role and that reporting will be to Cabinet and so on. I agree with the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) to some extent that if we disperse accountability too widely we will not have accountability. The Standing Committee on Public Accounts suggested that the Minister must be aware of the financial status and the activities of the corporations at all times. Possibly the Act suggests that that is what should happen as well. However, if we look at the Act, we see that there is plenty of room for corporations to go in their own direction, to spend money and to make Canadians responsible for it later. One suggestion was that they must present a corporate plan to the Government of Canada and eventually to committee. However, that is not a solid operation because it occurs only in the case of parent corporations. Subsidiary corporations are not required to make that same kind of public explanation.

Also the Public Accounts Committee suggested that every significant decision made by corporations which would change their direction should be within the knowledge of the Minister. If the Government had a particular direction in which it wanted to go, the Committee also suggested that it was the responsibility of the Minister to present that direction to the board of directors of the corporation. Of course, he also had responsibility to see that there is a strong and effective board of directors and management of the corporation. As well he had responsibility continuously to put before the company the objectives which the Government expected from it.

The Minister has failed to do all these things in the case of Canadair. As the shareholders' representative, he said: "Here is all the money you want. We will pass letters of comfort and give you further financing if you need it, but we trust you and you go in the direction you want". That corporation did not stop its direction until it was $1.4 billion in the hole.

This Bill should be looking much more thoroughly at the responsibility of boards of directors and how they relate to the Minister or to Cabinet. Also it should look at the responsibility of management. For example, the management of Canadair was related too closely to the Minister's office. The board of directors was left out in the cold and it became an ineffective operation before too long. If one has been watching CDIC developments closely, one will have seen the suggestion that government should have a much more effective control of management and be much closer to management, possibly eliminating the need for a board of directors. Perhaps that will happen.

There are a number of recommendations at which we should look closely when considering this Bill. When Crown corporations are used as vehicles for public policy, the direction in which the Government wants them to go should be enunciated clearly and directly at all times. That has not happened with Canadair, Petro-Canada or CNR, which has been a Crown corporation for many years. The need to make companies operate for the benefit of Canadians is important.

Somehow we have developed in Canada government by bureaucracy. For instance, CDIC has four or five deputy ministers on its board of directors. Although we need a connection, we do not need too much control. The Government should monitor Crown corporations to ensure that they do what they are supposed to do. However, we do not need a situation where the bureaucracy advises the Government as well as the management and passes the word back to the Government that things are going well. In the case of Canadair, that cost us $1.4 billion. It is likely to be the case in other situations as well. There is no need to have ineffective or inefficient management, but this can happen if we allow too much direct intervention of government in situations without a mandate which everyone knows should be there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a period of up to ten minutes for questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson).

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, how would the Hon. Member recommend that we hold Crown corporations to their mandates? For example, in the case of Petro-Canada, Parliament approved its mandate. As I recollect it, it was to have a window on the industry and primarily engage itself in frontier exploration. We know that it has strayed from its original mandate. However, what sanction process would the Hon. Member visualize to come to grips with a great number of Crown corporations, not only Petro-Canada? As all Hon. Members know, in all good conscience we approve a particular mandate for a Crown corporation. A number of years go by and it has strayed so far from its mandate that its original purpose is completely lost. What process or what means of sanction would the Hon. Member recommend putting forward?

My second point concerns the appointment of deputy ministers or bureaucrats to boards of directors. The Hon. Member suggests that perhaps a bureaucrat is needed on a board of directors to act as the conduit of information from the corporation to the Government. Surely if the Minister is held accountable for a corporation, it is incumbent upon the board of directors and management to provide the Minister with that information without the bureaucracy being represented on the board. As the Hon. Member pointed out, there is the danger, as in the case of Canadair, that the bureaucrat on the board ends up talking to himself as the bureaucrat representing the Government. As the Hon. Member correctly points out, this is one reason for the problems that have evolved in a number of Crown corporations, including Canadair.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member entirely that quite often the mandate of a corporation becomes unrecognizable. The process of keeping the Crown corporation to its mandate is partially dealt with in this Bill, but not the method that will guarantee it. I suppose that is what the Hon. Member is talking about. Public exposure is one factor that could do it. In hindsight, this certainly occurred in the case of Canadair.

The other approach is the necessity for a Crown corporation to get money, if it requires money, from Parliament rather than having the authority to get it as it pleases. That would be restrictive for the corporation but maybe that is what is needed. Maybe we should not develop corporations without the direct knowledge of Parliament.

On the second question, I agree entirely. I do not think we need bureaucrats on the board. Although they have been there, I believe it would be possible to have a reporting system work well without the deputy minister or a bureaucrat on the board. If the board has the responsibility to report to the Minister, you could dispense with the conduit or whatever. The structure, mandate and necessity of the corporation to stick to the mandate must be there, as well as the will of the Government and the corporation to fulfil it properly.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member expressed concern that subsidiaries of parent Crown corporations would not be subject to the same corporate plans and budgets being approved by the Government and reported to Parliament. Has the Hon. Member looked at Clause 130, which states:

> Each parent Crown corporation shall annually submit a corporate plan to the appropriate Minister for the approval of the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the appropriate Minister and, if required by the regulations, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance.

Subclause (2) states that the corporate plan of a parent Crown corporation shall encompass all the businesses and activities, including investments of the corporation and its wholly-owned subsidiaries, if any. It goes on to spell out the details of that corporate plan. The Hon. Member may have overlooked that. It is an important point that the corporate plan of parent Crown corporations spell out the details of activities of subsidiaries, and those subsidiaries can act only in areas in which the parent Crown corporation has responsibility for financial or corporate activities. Has the Hon. Member had an opportunity to look at that clause?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I recognize exactly what the Parliamentary Secretary is talking about. However, if you look through the Bill very carefully, you find it is quite possible for the corporation to buy or sell a subsidiary corporation without referral to Parliament. In the process, you lose control of that operation entirely. When subsidiaries at the second, third or fourth level become a line in the development plan, if the will is there, it might happen. A third tier corporation with a manager who has done his own thing for a long time is not going to make a report which has to go through the second and first corporations to get to the Cabinet. It might be there, but that does not guarantee it will happen. The mandate has been there before, but they have not fulfilled the mandate. Why should we believe because it is here in this form without a requirement for development and expenditure of money that it will happen any more now after the Bill is passed than at present?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there any further questions or comments? If not, we will continue debate.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, when the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) tabled this Bill on March 15, 1984, he put out the usual press release. I refer to Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. The press release stated what the objectives of the Bill would be. In very grandiose terms, the Minister stated:

> The objective of the new Bill is sound management of these important instruments of national interest.

He went on to say that the legislation is designed to strengthen the control and accountability of Crown corporations. That is a very laudable goal. It certainly is an objective that should have the endorsation of all Members of Parliament. I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary, or the Minister if he were here, recognized that strengthening the control and accountability of Crown corporations is something that members of the Official Opposition have been advocating for years.

As the Government, we introduced a Bill designed to do that. That was some five years ago. If this present legislation could meet that objective, I am sure it would have the support of all Members of this House. The problem is that it does not meet that objective. It fails lamentably in meeting the objectives spelled out by the President of the Treasury Board. I will spell out some of the shortcomings as I speak. I mention this because we have heard so much about Crown corporations over the years. They have come to assume a massive place in the economic development of this country both in number and in financial importance.

If one were to look at the number of Crown corporations listed by the Government, there are currently some 315 Crown corporations. More are being created each year. There are also 180 mixed and joint venture enterprises in virtually every field of economic and social responsibility. These 315 corporations are of enormous difference and variety. They range all the way from such grand operations as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Canadian National and Petro-Canada to such minute Crown corporations as the Crane Cove Oyster Farm in Nova Scotia and the Mingan Association fishing camp in Quebec. There is obviously a great variety of Crown corporations. However, the true importance of the situation with regard to Crown corporations becomes apparent only when one realizes that the Auditor General, in his 1982 report, calculated that Crown corporations have combined assets of $67 billion and that they employ something like 263,000 people. They employ 25,000 more people than the Public Service of Canada. In his report of 1982, the Auditor General said:

> In the majority of Crown corporations audited by the Auditor General, financial management and control is weak and ineffective. Moreover, co-ordination and guidance by central government agencies of financial management and control practices in these Crown corporations are virtually nonexistent.

That statement was contained in the very important document put out by the Auditor General in 1982. I presume that the Minister brought in this piece of legislation to address that very criticism. The need for that is so critical because of the magnitude and variety of Crown corporations, the amount of money involved and the fact that the Auditor General had indicated that they were out of control.

We are speaking of $67 billion worth of taxpayers' assets. There must be accountability for that money and there must be ministerial responsibility for the way in which that money is expended. Those things are the very underpinnings of our political system and are the things to which the Bill should be addressing itself. That is why we have urged that the Government come to grips with this issue and that is why we have waited so long for the Government to do so. I must say that having advocated greater control over Crown corporations for so long, it is a great disappointment to see that the proposals in the present Bill do not provide the means by which these goals will be adequately realized.

Because the Bill is so full of shortcomings, my colleagues on this side of the House and the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) in particular have articulated our opposition to this particular piece of legislation and pointed out its defects. What is perhaps most disturbing to me is the realization that this is not simply an isolated incident. In fact, the objections that we have made to this particular Bill are almost identical to those which have been made with regard to other pieces of legislation which have recently come before the House and some which are currently before the House. Bill C-24, which deals with Crown corporations, is only the latest example of the Government missing an opportunity.

The Bill attempts to deal with a problem which is crying out for meaningful reform but all it contains are cosmetic changes. We have seen that happen not only with this Bill but with others. The Minister has stated that Bill C-24 is designed to strengthen the control and accountability of Crown corporations. However, he neglected to tell us that the Bill does not affect all Crown corporations. There are currently some 315 Crown corporations listed by the Government but this Bill deals only with 183 of them. Another 108 Crown corporations are not mentioned at all. There are a number of mixed and joint enterprise and their subsidiaries which are not affected by the provisions of this Bill. As well, a number of the provisions in the Bill could exempt many of the affected Crown corporations from the public scrutiny.

There are many important matters which are not touched upon by this Bill. For instance, there are no rules regarding the spawning of completely autonomous subsidiaries; the Parliamentary Secretary just made mention of that. The Bill does not come to grips with the increasing prominence and influence of state-controlled corporations in the economy. In other words, the Bill does not accomplish the Government promises. In his press release, the Minister promised to strengthen the control and accountability of Crown corporations. I wish the Bill did that. However, it does not.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, little bits and pieces of the overall problem are being addressed but there is no comprehensive plan of action to deal with an extremely serious situation. The extent of the severity of that situation was made clear at least five years ago at the time of the report produced by the Lambert Royal Commission. The issue has been debated and raised time and time again since then. However, this is not the only example of the Government neglecting to come to grips in any meaningful way with a serious problem. I can say to the Minister whom I see in his seat that it has happened to others of his colleagues.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) recently brought in a Bill called the Canada Health Act which initially proposed to reform the entire health care system. It did no such thing. It tackled the problems of extra billing and user fees, something which was quite necessary, but it did not come to grips, at a time when it should have, with means to produce a more effective and efficient health care system, nor did it come to grips with the way that health care system should be funded. That particular Bill solved a few problems but, once again, it ignored the larger questions hidden below the surface. I would say that it did so to the detriment of all of us.

The same thing holds true with regard to Bill C-10 which is designed to amend the Divorce Act. That Bill is currently in the process of debate at second reading. The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) who is sponsoring that Bill has claimed that the amendments put forward in the Bill would make the process of divorce simpler, more equitable and more just. I would say that the need for that is undeniable. However, the Bill does not deliver what it promises to deliver in the same way that Bill C-24 does not deliver what it promises to deliver. The Bill which deals with the amendments to the Divorce Act could not in some measure make the legal aspects of divorce simpler. However, the effects of that Bill upon women and children could be devastating. The real problem was not dealt with in that particular piece of legislation.

Like the two Bills I have just cited, this Bill, which could have provided the opportunity for meaningful reform in an area that is in great need of attention, simply does not do the job that it set out to do. I would say that a large part of this failure is because of the way the Bill has been drafted. Rather than include strict rules and guidelines which would be incorporated directly into the Bill, the Government has chosen to use regulations as the means of controlling Crown corporations. Yet although it says it will use these regulations, we do not have the regulations. We do not know what is contained in the regulations; they were not tabled with the Bill.

I can only assume, therefore, that if the Bill were passed, all regulations would be made by Cabinet and away from public scrutiny. Once again, the accountability that the Government is speaking of and that we are demanding simply would not be there. It would mean that Cabinet would be the judge, jury and police officer all rolled into one. This would hardly be in keeping with the so-called objective of the Bill, as Cabinet could, I suppose, change the regulations whenever it saw fit.

As I have said, this is not an isolated incident in the way in which government introduces legislation to this House. The control that the Government seeks to have within Cabinet in this Bill is not very dissimilar from the bill dealing with the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, Bill C-9. Once again, in that piece of legislation the Government did not spell out what it meant with precision. For instance, such words as "sabotage" and "espionage" are left undefined, leaving the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and the Cabinet far-reaching powers. They will have discretion under that Bill to do anything. Will the President of the Treasury Board and the Cabinet not have discretion under this bill to continue to do anything they want with Crown corporations? Even the so-called "watch-dog" of the agency would be powerless, as it would be made up, as we know, of political appointees.

This Bill, like the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Bill, seems to me to show once again the arrogance that this Government takes unto itself by saying: "We can look after you. We will make the final determination, because we will put before you only vague and general wording, and we will retain the far-reaching powers in the scope of what we want to do". Mr. Speaker, that kind of power in the hands of any government or cabinet is dangerous. What we really want to see is that kind of power and that kind of accountability reintroduced into the House of Commons. This Bill does not do that.

I want to come, finally, to the whole question of the lack of respect for parliamentary accountability that has been exhibited by this Government with increasing rapidity ever since its re-election in 1980. This Bill is like others. The Government has continued on its favoured path of excessive administrative discretion by the Cabinet. It ignores the need for extensive ministerial responsibility and financial accountability. Despite claims to the contrary, when one studies the Bill, it does not bring Crown corporations under control. It actually gives more power to the Cabinet. I would say that it is a case of patronage appointments, which are certainly allowable under this piece of legislation. Those patronage appointments and the way that the Government will be able to go about them ignore the rights of Parliament and the public to scrutinize all of the Government's decisions.

In fact, the power of the Cabinet reaches down into the corporate structure itself. I would say that it thereby reduces the role and the importance of the directors of Crown corporations. In this way, it makes it much less possible to trace the responsibility for poor performance and inefficiency. It would, in fact, make it virtually impossible to hold anyone accountable for such failures as Canadair and de Havilland, which, despite record-breaking corporate losses over the last three years, retain virtually the same executive officers. There is no way to get at them. This Bill certainly would not make it any easier to do that.

We have seen, as I have said, a number of pieces of legislation come through the House in the current session of Parliament where the Government has literally failed to deal with the major problem. In some cases we have managed to force the Government to make amendments. That was certainly the case earlier this month with the borrowing authority Bill, Bill C-21. We said that the Government had to be more accountable to Parliament. Eventually we forced some amendments, not enough but some amendments, to that particular Bill. We opposed that Bill because the Government would not be responsible on a ministerial basis or have financial accountability, which are the very underpinnings of our parliamentary system of government.

This particular piece of legislation is really symptomatic of the weakness and ineptitude of the Government, indeed the ongoing weakness and ineptitude, particularly when it comes to the drafting of legislation which is intended to deal with critical issues. There is an over-all pattern emerging. The Government is content to tinker with nuts and bolts but it will not move to correct serious problems. That, above all, is a commentary on a government that has run out of initiative, energy and ideas.

The Government is old and it is stale. This Government, in its dying and decaying state, is very soon going to have to meet not just the Members of Parliament, it is going to have to meet the people of Canada. They will be the judges of the inept legislation that it has been putting forward. I would say that when the voters of Canada get a chance to have their say on pieces of legislation such as this one, and on the Government now sitting in office, they will reject not only Bill C-24, but they will reject its authors as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows the ten-minute period for questions and comments. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Foster: I would like to make a couple of comments with respect to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). I think she left a few things not particularly clear. She suggested that there were something like 315 Crown corporations. I think that if she checks a little closer she will find that there are in fact some 67 parent Crown corporations, another 128 subsidiaries and another 112 corporate interests.

She is suggesting that the Bill does not give complete control for mixed investments and for joint ownerships. I really would like to know just how she would propose to do that. If PetroCan is investing in a joint venture in oil and gas exploration—surely because it is a joint investment activity, perhaps PetroCan's investment is only a small percentage, 5 per cent, 10 per cent, or 20 per cent—it is not possible to deal with that kind of investment in the same way that it is for a parent Crown corporation or for a wholly-owned subsidiary. Those investments have got to be made by the Crown corporation itself and not be subject to directives by the Government.

She also pointed out the criticism of the Auditor General's report. I would like to point out to her that this Bill was drafted in close consultation with recommendations and suggestions by the Auditor General.

I have a couple of other questions to put to the Hon. Member but perhaps I will call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I regret the response of the Hon. Member will have to wait until this afternoon.

INDUSTRY

SHUTDOWN OF BRITISH COLUMBIA SHAKE AND SHINGLE INDUSTRY

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, a study just completed in the eastern half of my riding by the Dewdney-Alouette regional district has found that the unemployment rate there is 47 per cent, or nearly half the work force. This unemployment is largely due to the shutdown of the shake and shingle industry. In spite of millions of tax dollars having been paid to all levels of government by this industry, no assistance or incentives have been put forward for research and development, or market development. We now have a major export industry in trouble simply because no planning or forethought was undertaken. We need economic development and diversification in our local economy to address this crippling unemployment problem. With almost half the work force unemployed, no retail operation, business, or family remains unaffected.

I am not looking to blame anyone; I am looking for solutions and immediate action. Partisan politics must be shoved aside. I call upon the Government to sit down with the Dewdney-Alouette regional district representatives when they visit Ottawa next month, along with myself, to discuss this problem. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, and I believe, we must take this opportunity to initiate a major reforestation and R and D effort to preserve this area's largest industry. Haggling between the provincial and federal Governments over reforestation is hurting our entire country, not to mention the citizens of my riding.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CO-OPERATION

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, last week, the plan to modernize Davie Shipbuilding Limited entered a new phase when the Government of Quebec decided to provide a grant of $4.95 million. Although some time ago, the Quebec government decided to put everything on hold because of the possibility that Davie Shipbuilding might be sold, for some reason it has now changed its position. However, its initial refusal has set back a study of the plan by several weeks. In any case, it seems that federal officials have been informed they can proceed with consideration of the application for a grant from the federal Government.

I therefore urge the federal authorities to act as soon as possible, bearing in mind the importance of Davie Shipbuilding for the Quebec City region. I would ask all intervenors to give this matter the attention it deserves. The situation at Davie Shipbuilding is not very encouraging, but if this plan were to become a matter of co-operation instead of confrontation, both the company, its employees and the region would benefit.

HOUSING

CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO ASSIST HOME OWNERS

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, in his February Budget, this fancy brochure of unfulfilled promises I hold in my hand, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said that owning a home is an abiding goal in life for millions of Canadians. He vowed that help was on the way for mortgage rate protection, fixed-rate, long-term mortgages, and more humane penalties for renegotiating existing home loans. More than two months have passed and there is no sign of even draft legislation to ensure that Canadians might realize their aspirations, especially now that interest rates are once again on their way upward.

Parliament will soon rise for summer recess and possibly an election campaign. It could be a year or more before home owners are offered any type of protection. Government advertising presently suggests that home owners add insurance premiums to their mortgage principal, instead of paying it up front, making the cost of the plan more expensive.

We received the speech, the glossy brochures, the budget papers and the broken promises. Before it is too late, Mr. Minister, I ask you on behalf of Canadian home owners and prospective home owners: where is the beef?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHANGE IN LANDSCAPING—REQUEST THAT SPEAKER CONDUCT INQUIRY

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I want to express my indignation about what happened here on Parliament Hill on April 19, when in the course of their activities, workers trampled flower beds and cut trees. All this may seem rather minor, compared to the country's present problems, but it does show a lack of sensitivity on the part of certain officials. If they gave prizes for this kind of complete lack of judgment, I think I would nominate the person who gave these workers the go-ahead.

Mr. Speaker: I sincerely hope that in future, you will be given advance notice of such activities—I do not think that is the case now—so that you will be able to safeguard the aesthetic environment of the House of Commons and Parliament Hill.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, before I give my statement I would like to note that on Saturday some 115,000 people in Vancouver, by police estimate, took part in the largest demonstration for peace in Canadian history. I think that is most heartening.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member should make his statement, if that is his statement.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, my statement is tied in with that.

United States Ambassador Robinson gave some very remarkable interviews in radio and print this weekend. He revealed that the Americans had objected to the Canadianization of our oil industry. There had even been a White House meeting to discuss retaliation against Canada, but the Ambassador recommended against that and said to wait and see if Canada would come around. Sure enough, he said, Canadians have come around and have backed off from Canadianization. He said he hoped that Messrs. Turner, Chrétien, and Mulroney were "sensible" enough to change the back-in provisions which further Canadian control of our industry.

Canadianization has collapsed, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that there is an alternate policy out there, which is continued Canadianization, continued efforts for an independent Canadian economy, because that is the only way we are going to solve unemployment. We also have to get an independent Canadian foreign policy, a policy for peace. I hope to raise in the House this week the next test of Canadianization which I see coming, that is, the takeover by Socal of Gulf Oil.

TORONTO SICK CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL INQUIRY—ONTARIO COURT OF APPEAL RULING

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, a little over two weeks ago the Ontario Court of Appeal gave a ruling which gave me some solace with respect to the Grange Commission and the inability of the commissioner to name names with respect to that investigation. However, in the last two weeks counsel for the Attorney General of Ontario and counsel for the Metropolitan Toronto police have, in my view, made a mockery of the ruling of the Ontario Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal said this:

> Such an inquiry is a coercive procedure and is quite incompatible with our notion of justice in the investigation of a particular crime and the determination of actual or probable criminal or civil responsibility.

What we now have, Mr. Speaker, is the unseemly and unfair spectable of counsel for the Attorney General asking a nurse to take truth serum. This is such a marked departure from everything we find fair, and everything we expect from a representative of the Attorney General's Department, that I think that particular individual ought to be censured, or removed, as a result of his lack of judgment.

● (1410)

The second thing that concerns me, Mr. Speaker, is the attitude which has been taken by counsel for the police. He is persistently the most aggressive attacker with respect to the witnesses. Time after time Mr. Percival is trying to get to the question of whether any of these particular nurses are the murderers. The police officers in this particular investigation have much to answer for, and—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

THE JUDICIARY

SUPREME COURT'S DECISIONS ON WOMEN'S EQUALITY RIGHTS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, there is now a vacancy on the Supreme Court of Canada. In the next few years the Court will be charged with ruling on a flood of human rights cases when Clauses 15 and 28 of the Charter of Rights come into effect. Many of these cases will affect women's equality rights.

To date the Supreme Court's record on women's equality rights has not been good. For example, in 1928 the court declared that women were not persons. This decision was overturned on appeal to the Privy Council in England. Then Canadian women did become persons. In 1972 the Supreme Court upheld Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act which allows native men to marry non natives and retain treaty rights, but women who do the same lost theirs, as do all their children. In another famous 1972 judgment, Irene Murdoch, who had contributed for 25 years to the development of an Alberta ranch, was told by the Supreme Court that her contribution was "only what was expected of any wife".

Three years ago when the Charter of Rights was enacted to enshrine equality in our laws for all claimants, women had to fight relentlessly to ensure that the wording of the Charter would in fact grant them equal rights. The battle to ensure equality for women in interpreting the laws of the land now falls to the Supreme Court under the Charter.

As evidence of its intention to achieve a more just balance on the Supreme Court, and a broader perspective on issues affecting over half of the population, I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party urge the Government to appoint a woman to fill the present vacancy.

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately the Hon. Member's time has expired.

HORTICULTURE

EFFECT OF WINE TAXES ON GRAPE INDUSTRY

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, where and when does making progress mean going backward? Ask the Ontario grape growers. Increased investment and careful plantings in Niagara brought record tonnages of the highest quality wine grapes. The wineries responded by earning recognition around the world. Domestic wineries supplied 52 per cent of the domestic market. Jobs were provided by some 16,000 persons.

However, what are the prospects for this year and the next for what should be a Canadian growth industry? Whoever heard of stimulating an industry by taxing it at 120 per cent, continuing an oppressive, inequitable tax on the domestic product? Our share of the market has dropped 20 per cent. Wineries have already had lay-offs. Employment is expected to be down 15 per cent from last year.

The grape and wine industry was able to establish the dumping of subsidized wine products in this country. Wines are being landed in North America at prices between 40 per cent and 80 per cent below prices in the countries of their origin. Yet it was determined that our industry was not hurting enough. How badly does our industry have to hurt before the Government will face up to the challenge of Italy and France dumping their surplus products in this country? No sales mean no harvest, no jobs, and, ultimately, no fruitlands.

How does the Government expect to preserve and protect—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has, unfortunately, expired.

SIZE OF ANNOUNCED PAY-OUT

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, proposed amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act announced recently by the Minister of Agriculture fall far short of what is required. For more than a year the Progressive Conservative Party has sought changes to the Act in order to trigger a pay-out to farmers, yet it has taken until now for the Minister to propose something.

In the first place, his proposals will not result in a pay-out until October, even though farmers need the money now. Second, individual producers are not sure how much they will receive. It is clear, however, that most of them will not get back anywhere near as much as they have paid into the fund over the past years. Certainly the pay-out will provide some relief. However, with the average farm debt load in excess of $200,000, it is not about to solve the economic problems of western grain farmers, especially in light of recent cuts in initial grain prices.

If the Minister were truly committed to helping western producers, he would have persuaded his colleagues to authorize an interim payment. As one elevator agent told me this past weekend, Manitoba farmers are bitterly disappointed by this proposal for a meagre and belated pay-out, and it certainly has done nothing to alter their opinion about a Government which has ignored them for far too long.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND—PAYMENT OF BONUSES TO SENIOR EXECUTIVES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue in his capacity of replying in the House to questions about the Canada Development Investment Corporation. The day after Parliament recessed for the Easter break we learned that substantial bonuses totalling $155,000 had been paid to 12 senior executives of the Crown corporation, de Havilland. Just a few days before that, it had been announced that hundreds of workers were going to be laid off by de Havilland, and that others would be asked to take cutbacks of one kind or another.

The Canadian people want to know how the Government can justify these bonuses being paid to already highly paid senior executives of de Havilland, when rank and file workers are being threatened with cutbacks and lay-offs.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member and the Members of this House that the bonuses were paid for the year ending May 1983. Furthermore, the bonuses are paid to ensure that this aircraft manufacturing company will be viable and sound. If we want sound management and expert research teams that will safeguard the jobs of company workers, as this Government has always insisted on doing, we must be able to offer competitive salaries to the managers of such companies.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely incredible. Any other corporation that had the kind of record that de Havilland had last year would have fired its senior executives rather than paying them bonuses.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Last year de Havilland lost $236 million which the Canadian people had to pay. I would like to ask the Minister about government policy. Can he give us an explanation for government policies which look after the need to pay bonuses to these senior executives while, at the same time, there are 1.5 million Canadians without jobs, and thousands of students coming out of our colleges and universities hoping to get work during the summer months but who simply cannot find work? What is the explanation for paying off one group and ignoring the other? Where is the Government's sense of priority?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to forget that the Government has always been consistent regarding the billions of dollars it invests to provide jobs for those who have trouble finding work and especially for the young people graduating from our universities. When the Hon. Member's party was in power, the first thing it did was to cut back on this kind of investment and on programs to provide jobs for young people.

Furthermore, her party has always criticized the Government's support for companies like Canadair and de Havilland. We, as a government, have always supported the development of these corporations, and we are now safeguarding the jobs in those corporations while the Opposition is criticizing the Government's action.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, that explanation does not go down with the 1.5 million people who are unemployed. I must tell you it does not even go down with the Minister's colleague, the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION—PAYMENT OF EXECUTIVE BONUSES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, bonuses were also paid to senior executives of the Canada Development Investment Corporation, the company which controls de Havilland. When the spokesman for CDIC was asked about this he said that the payment of these cash gifts—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Reading of material on a second supplementary should be very restricted.

Miss MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The spokesman for that company said that it was due to the fact that these senior executives had had an extremely hard year. If that is the rationale why these people received a special bonus, would the Minister please tell me what special bonuses can be expected for the unemployed, for the single, elderly poor, and for the one parent families headed by mothers? What can he tell us about the rationale for these people who also have gone through an extremely hard year?

• (1420)

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the Hon. Member is a bit mixed up.

If she wants to argue about this Government's social programs, she should go right ahead and criticize the millions of dollars the last Budget provided for single pensioners. Let her criticize the hundreds of millions of dollars that have been added to many of this Government's social programs and job creation programs.

Now, if the Hon. Member also wishes to criticize this Government's policies aimed at revamping the financial situation of corporations such as de Havilland and Canadair, let her do so, by all means. However, our objective is to ensure that these companies are commercially viable and to maintain an aviation industry in Canada that is technologically superior.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cambridge.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Minister of Justice who is expected but is not in his seat. I wonder if I may stand down.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TAX ON FARM FUELS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. We noticed that many of his colleagues were in western Canada on the weekend making promises about what they would do for the West. I notice that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has not recovered from the shock in terms of the reception he got. In his absence I wish to ask the Minister of Finance a question concerning something that he could do now, that would provide benefits for the West.

He is aware that grain prices are down by some 6 per cent this year. He is aware that bankruptcies in agriculture all across Canada, particularly in the West, are up by more than 100 per cent over last year. Considering that the federal taxes of all types that remain on a litre of diesel fuel or gasoline amount to about 6 per cent, will the Minister do something concrete for western farmers and, I say, for fishermen who have the same problem, by removing this tax?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Welcome aboard! Better late than never.

Mr. Shields: Where have you been, Ed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Conservatives are getting away from their shock. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that the federal Government has been contributing to the well-being of western farmers to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars. As a matter of fact, through the Crow rate benefits and other benefits, the benefit granted to western farmers is getting close to a billion dollars in the course of the last year.

In terms of our commitment to the welfare of western farmers, I do not think that the Government has any lesson to take from any of the Opposition Parties. There is no doubt in my mind in that regard.

My friend knows that the gasoline used by farmers is eligible for reimbursement of some federal taxes and the farmers are resorting to this opportunity that has been made available to them over the years. I am sure that farmers will continue to use that particular opportunity.

Mr. Broadbent: The farmers will be more than a little amused—in fact they will not be amused at all—to hear the Minister say that the Government has been aiding them in the West, particularly when their brankruptices are up more than 150 per cent year over last year. They can do without that kind of assistance from the federal Government.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, considering that the removal of all remaining taxes at the federal level on gasoline and fuel would amount to approximately $190 million, in terms of its impact on the federal treasury, which is almost exactly the same amount the Minister gave to the oil companies in his most recent Budget, will he show some justice and fairness, apply a consistent standard here, and give the farmers the kind of assistance that they need today?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be very surprised if the western farmers would listen to the advice of the Hon. Member and do without the assistance they receive from the federal Government, whether it is in the form of Crow rate benefits, in the form of crop insurance, or in the form of the very many programs that exist in terms of price stabilization and others which come under the Minister of Agriculture in particular.

As I have said, the support that is being provided by the Government of Canada runs into the hundreds of millions of dollars every year. I would invite my friend to look at those figures and seriously consider whether he is recommending that we do away with those programs.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister is a little more confused than usual. We are not talking about doing away with the minimum number of programs the Government has to aid farmers. We are talking about providing some justice that is comparable to what the Government gives to the big companies, particularly the oil companies. We want some justice for the farmers.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Farmers face increased costs, their prices are going down, and their bankruptcies are increasing at an alarming rate. Since the removal of this tax by the federal Government would provide the typical grain farmer with about $2,500 in assistance that he badly needs this year, will the Government, just for once, deliver on its commitment to western Canada and remove this tax?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to the previous answers that I have given. The Hon. Member does not seem to have understood them. I invite him to read them and maybe he will realize that we have covered the point extensively in the previous answers.

CANADIAN UNITY INFORMATION OFFICE

ISSUANCE OF DOCUMENT—ROLE OF MINISTER OF LABOUR

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. He will know that at a cost of approximately $158,000 the most flagrantly partisan political document was issued. His Department is responsible for the document.

In this document the Minister of Labour asserts that he is responsible for eight South Shore Quebec ridings. There are pictures of all Liberal MPs and, with respect to one Member, the Member for Chateauguay, it is asserted by a constituent that he has acted really like a father watching over his family to see that it lacks nothing.

The head of the CUIO has stated that the Minister of Justice approved this document although it was instigated by the Minister of Labour. That occurred in February. Will the Minister of Justice tell us what conversation went on with the Minister of Labour, whether he approves of this document, and how he can so dishonour the high office he has by using it for such a mean spirited partisan purpose?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am not sure what the "Oh, ohs" are about, but I thought I would inform the House that during the leadership race period I have asked the Minister of Justice to be the administrative head of that office, the CUIO, but that he would be relieved of his duties for policy questions in order that they would not be applied unfairly to other leadership candidates, and that I would take questions on the subject. That is in answer to the "ohs" I heard from the other side.

Mr. Speyer: I respect the fact that the Prime Minister is taking questions with respect to this, but this question pertains to facts that occurred prior to the leadership candidacy commencing.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Justice whether he had any conversations with the Minister of Labour with respect to this document, whether he in fact approved it, and whether he will do anything with respect to future documents which were approved during the currency of his administration?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with respect to future documents, I think my previous answer would cover those. They will not be under the policy direction of the Minister of Justice. As far as the past ones are concerned, I will look into this particular document and perhaps inform the House with my answer.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ADVERTISEMENT

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He will know that there was a three-quarter page advertisement placed recently in the Thunder Bay Times-News which featured the Minister himself in a pictorial manner. This advertisement just happened to appear prior to the coming to the area of one of his leadership opponents, and prior to local Liberals choosing delegates for the upcoming Liberal leadership convention. How can the Minister of Agriculture justify the use of taxpayers' money for what would appear to be blatant political purposes?

• (1430)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member reads that paper very often, he would find that is a request we receive from it from time to time. Agriculture is an area the paper wants to develop. The picture of Whelan being there probably could be coincidental, because I think I am in 14 papers today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: How many funny papers?

Mr. Foster: Wait until tomorrow.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, unlike Members on the other side of the House, we on this side, and Canadian taxpayers in general, do not appreciate the misuse of public money in order to assist any leadership candidate at this point in time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TIMING OF ADVERTISEMENTS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Agriculture. Perhaps he has already answered it. Does he in fact intend, as he travels about the country, that there should be such co-incidental newspaper advertisements placed in appropriate newspapers at opportune times?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: John Munro could not get away with it.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that agriculture—he has heard questions about agriculture and I am sure he has listened to them already in the House today—is a very important industry and that there is a lot of concern about it. And even if I am in another contest, it does not mean that I should neglect agriculture. I am here today because the House of Commons is here. I meet the French Minister of Agriculture at four o'clock today to discuss world problems. There might even be a picture in the paper tomorrow. I shall also meet him at a press conference tomorrow. The Hon. Member himself can come and get involved in that if he wants.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—ROLE OF CONTRACT EMPLOYEE

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is a related one, directed to the Minister of Justice. In CTV's Question Period program on April 15 the Minister of Justice stated that his leadership campaign manager, Jim MacDonald, had ceased to be on the public payroll two weeks earlier as a contract employee in the Minister's office.

Given that the Minister's office has now released information that the same Jim MacDonald's company has a speech-writing contract with the Minister's Department until June 30, two weeks after the Liberal leadership convention, how can the Minister reconcile this conflicting information from himself and his office?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises an entirely different question. There are several pre-existing contracts involving a company in which Mr. MacDonald, I believe, has an interest but in which he is not involved in the execution thereof, that are being continued. One of them has been completed. The contract for the Second People's Law Conference was completed before I spoke. But the other one, the speech-writing contract, continues. My hon. friend will appreciate that I have to continue to make departmental addresses during this period. In fact I am making one tomorrow and the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West will be pleased to hear it will be in his region.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You bombed out yesterday. You can try again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MINISTERIAL STAFF GUIDELINES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. On April 11 the Prime Minister told the House that his guidelines dictate that there should be no active involvement of any ministerial staff in a leadership candidate's campaign in any important way "without that staff either resigning or asking for a leave of absence."

In light of those guidelines, how can the Minister justify the fact that his campaign manager, Jim MacDonald, is continuing to draw a salary from the Government and from the Minister's own office, albeit through a company, while serving as the Minister's campaign manager in the leadership contest? How can he justify that fact? On the one hand there are the Prime Minister's guidelines, which are clear enough, and on the other hand, and equally clear, is the fact that the Minister's campaign manager is deriving his income in large part from the Government of Canada and the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Taylor: It is the Liberal way.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend would wait until he hears the answer to draft his supplementary question, he would not have bothered asking that question. I have already answered it.

TIMING OF PAY-OUT TO FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Liberals have been promising the world to the Prairies this last week. In the case of the Western Grain Stabilization payments, their promises come a little short.

My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture and the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board unveiled some changes to the grain stabilization Bill which the New Democrats had suggested in the 1974-75 session and which the Leader of the Opposition got around to a couple of weeks ago. Of major importance in these changes is the timing of the pay-outs. Will the Minister explain to the House and to the western Canadian grain producer why the pay-outs cannot be made immediately after the passing of the enabling legislation in Parliament?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the pay-outs could possibly be made, if you want to get in trouble with the Auditor General. I said at the press conference in Winnipeg that I would not mind getting in trouble with the Auditor General for that kind of a cause. You could estimate what the pay-out would be. The idea and the reason we were putting it forward would be so that farmers could use this issue as collateral at the bank, to have an advance, or to use it with their suppliers for seed or fertilizer. A maximum pay-out, Mr. Speaker, to anyone would be close to $6,000, but the average pay-out is about $2,500 to $3,000 and the Hon. Member knows that, I am sure.

Mr. Benjamin: Do it now.

Mr. Whelan: This is not going to go as far as a lot of people would like. They would like a lot bigger payment for a lot of farmers who are in dire need this spring perhaps because of bad crops, and that kind of thing.

Yesterday evening I was in Hudson Bay, Saskatchewan. I would say there were about 400 people there, and they were good-natured people, too. They listened. They asked questions. I could not have had a more responsive—

Mr. Speaker: The Minister appears to be straying from the original question. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert has a supplementary question?

PAYMENT OF INTEREST

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, we have noted that the whole $300 million will come from the pockets of the farmer and not from the Government. However, the Minister stated that the change is due to the possibility of the payments being illegal. Could he not use the present timing that is in the Bill and establish the trigerring mechanism retroactively so that the money is paid out December 31, 1983, rather than at the end of this crop year? Alternatively, would the Government pay interest on the money it is withholding from the farmers for this period of time?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that the Government pays interest on all of the money. When the Hon. Member talks about $300 million being all farmers' money, I am sure he realizes that the farmers have paid into this program on a voluntary basis. About 75 per cent of the farmers in western Canada belong to this program. For every dollar they put in, we put in $2, but we pay interest on it and we also administer the program. The interest last year and the total payment in that program came to $131 million. When the Hon. Member says it is all producers' money, he is wrong. It is not all producers' money. Producers have got back every cent which they put into that program since its very beginning. They have actually received more than the maximum amount they could put into it.

Mr. Benjamin: That is not true.

Mr. Whelan: It is a good program. The legislation, when it is brought to the House, will be readjusted. If there is a way, Mr. Speaker, that we can make a payment before the legislation even receives its final passage in this House, I am told—and our legal people are checking with the powers that be today—that there is a possibility that, after it receives second reading and the intent is clear, that possibly you then would not get in trouble with the Auditor General.

REQUEST FOR INTERIM PAYMENT

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the proposed changes in the grain stabilization Act. The Minister is aware that the Agricultural Stabilization Board reviewing the 1982-83 crop payment on corn calculated that on a calendar year, and there was no payment. The Board then recalculated it on a crop year and made a payment. The Minister is also aware that in 1978 and in 1979 interim payments were made from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. More than 50 per cent of the expected payment was paid out in the spring. Would the Minister bring forward immediate legislation for an interim payment based upon half the $300 million? If he does so, we will pass it immediately upon it coming into the House.

● (1440)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about the payment that was made for corn in the Provinces of Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec. It involved producers mainly in those three provinces. I am fully aware of how that program worked and why the readjustments were made. It was not as simple as the Hon. Member tries to make out. It was because farmers delivered a lot more corn and, in some increases, some held it. Because there was no real record system in that organization, no real organization which keep tabs on what they do, you have to go back to the elevators and all the grain handlers and get the evidence again from them as best as you can. A lot of it is on supposition until you have the final year-end receipts from the producers. That is why this was done.

I hope the legislation will be presented to the House this week or early next week. The Hon. Member will have the opportunity to see it then, and hopefully that provision will be there.

REQUEST FOR PAYMENT TO ASSIST WITH SPRING PLANTING

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, again my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He neglected to answer my previous question concerning the precedent set in 1978 and in 1979, with interim payments being made from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund in the spring rather than mid or late summer. I will quote a brief sentence in the 1979 annual report of the Western Grain Stabilization Fund which reads: "A two-instalment procedure was used to enable at least a partial payment to be distributed in the spring period rather than waiting until mid or late summer".

Would the Minister bring forward legislation to make an interim payment on the expected pay-out, which he has already announced, of some $300 million? Would he make that interim payment now when farmers need the money to go through with their spring planting?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that under the present Act you use the calendar year to make that kind of payment. If you follow the present Act, there is no triggering mechanism which will allow you to make a pay-out. This is why we are changing the formula, so that a pay-out can be made, mainly because more grain was shipped and sold than was ever expected, even surpassing the most optimistic viewpoint of all the advisers and everyone else concerned with the Western Grain Stabilization Act. They never dreamed that 37 million tonnes would be sold in one year. This is why the amount of volume, the amount of money and of returns are so high. They do not allow a triggering mechanism for a payment. We will be going on a different basis so that we can make a payment if it is possible. I am as concerned as the Hon. Member that a payment be made as soon as possible.

INCOME TAX

EXTENSION OF FILING DEADLINE FOR MANITOBA AND SASKATCHEWAN TAXPAYERS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. He will know that over the weekend the Province of Manitoba experienced a very severe ice and snow storm which disrupted hydro, closed roads, and generally made life very miserable for its residents. Many people who had intended to file their income tax returns of course could not, and accountants were unable to complete returns. Has the Minister or his Department given consideration to extending the deadline from midnight tonight until some time in the future to allow the backlog of tax returns to be filed in a proper manner?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I reviewed that situation with my officials this morning. I am now in a position to announce to the House that the tax filing deadline for all taxpayers in Manitoba and Saskatchewan will be extended from midnight tonight to next Monday, May 7.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TABLING OF LEGISLATION TO REMOVE DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On International Women's Day the Prime Minister's office announced with great fanfare that the Government would repeal Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act, which would remove discrimination against women. There are only 36 days left before the summer break. Did the Prime Minister mean what he promised and, if so, when will he table the legislation to remove this discrimination against women?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes. As to timing, we are attempting to have that legislation moved forward in parallel with the legislation on self-government for natives. We would hope that the House would be prepared to deal with both expeditiously.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. Recently the Minister threatened to resign if no action was taken on this matter of repealing Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act. I understand from the Prime Minister's statement that the self-government legislation and the equality legislation might be tabled at the same time. Does she agree with that, or does she support the view of Canadian women that the discrimination in that Act must be removed first?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately my resignation is not imminent, I must say to the Hon. Member, because the Prime Minister, as he indicated a moment ago, has said that the legislation will go. The words I used at the time the press picked up the remark were that the legislation had to go and, if it did not go, I would go. Unfortunately they could not plan on my going because the legislation was being amended.

Yes, I feel that that must come first. When the Prime Minister indicated that the legislation was coming forward as a package, he did not say that it would be one neat package but that they would be coming in together. Certainly the amendments to the Indian Act will be separate.

AGRICULTURE

POTATO INDUSTRY IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that of the Hon. Member for Kindersly-Lloydminster, and it is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He has explained the reasons why there was no payment in the west. Could be tell us why the application for price stabilization for the potato industry of Atlantic Canada has been on his desk for about a year and a half and there has been no reply from him? Will he be giving that reply before he makes any major leadership campaign in New Brunswick?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that there is an eastern district that you make payments on, and a western district. If you follow the policy, there is no payment on the 90 per cent of the five-year average in western Canada. If you use eastern Canada, there is no payment either. I am sure the Hon. Member knows that it is so small that it would not be worth the effort to go and pay it. If you are just going to use it for New Brunswick, there would be a payment. If you were going to use it for Prince Edward Island, Quebec or Ontario, there would be no payment. The other provinces are saying that they do not want any payment.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression when I participated in the passing of the legislation for price stabilization that there was a point of income which triggered a payment for price stabilization for virtually any commodity in Canada. Certainly the application which relates to the 1982-83 crop was on the basis of sales which would trigger it by a formula that could be applied to the Act as far as New Brunswick is concerned.

MINISTER'S DISCRETIONARY POWER

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, why has the Minister not used his discretionary power which gives him the opportunity to relate cost of production and return on crop as well as the individual five-year average for that crop? If he uses that return on the particular crop, it is triggered very generously.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know from where the Hon. Member is getting his figures, or what formula he is using. The formula for Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island is such that it does not trigger a payment using the five-year average and a 90 per cent payout. If I were going to go to 95 per cent or 100 per cent, there probably would be.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEPARTMENT'S SEIZURE OF OLD CROW CO-OP'S BANK ACCOUNT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. It concerns an emergency situation which his Department has brought about the native village of Old Crow. The co-operative store there is owned by and operated by native people. It serves the people of that community as the only commercial outlet. His Department has now seized the entire bank account of that store, preventing the native people from getting much needed gasoline, flown in at $6.50 per gallon, so that they can go trapping on their traditional trapping lines. When did the Minister commence a policy of shutting down native industry in such a fashion in this country?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would give me a chance to look at the facts. I may remind him that often, even very severe measures are justified by the circumstances.

However, if the Hon. Member will allow me to look into the particular facts relating to this matter, I would then be able to judge the situation in the light of those facts.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONSULT COLLEAGUE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted if the Minister would look into it. I would have directed this question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but he is not present today, having priorities elsewhere. When he does look into it, will he consult with his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, about this very urgent situation of the closure of the outlet which provides the necessaries of life, the only one in Old Crow, by his Department, so that these people can go trapping? Perhaps the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development might be persuaded that the $10,000 he received from native groups would be better spent in keeping outlets such as this open.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that whenever there has been a situation involving my Department and native groups in this country, I have always consulted, and indeed shall continue to consult, with my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PACIFIC PETREL INQUIRY REPORT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. He has had the board of inquiry report on the Pacific Petrel for some four months. I finally got my copy the other day. The board of officers reported that there is financial chaos in the Pacific region and that the Minister would do well to look at the other regions to see if they are any better off. They tracked down $1,092,000 of taxpayer's money spent on this project, all of which seems to have been misappropriated. What has the Minister done about it in these past four months?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is quite right in terms of the analysis that was done in the circumstances. There was a very thorough review. Indeed, as a result of the fact that the navy cadet budget on the West Coast was lacking sufficient control, there was a review of all the various budgets of like kinds throughout the whole system. The evaluation was carried forward. It was ascertained that there were no other instances except the specific case of the Pacific Petrel.

OFFICERS' RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. The board of officers supplied the names of five officers of flag rank and three of general rank whom they found were particularly responsible because they had direct executive authority and all knew in greater or lesser detail of the scope of this project. Some or all of these eight officers must be in direct contravention of Section 24(4) of the Financial Administration Act. What does the Minister intend to do about that?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, a finding having been completed through a board of inquiry, the board of inquiry submits to commanding officers individuals who are identified within the board of inquiry. The board of inquiry so being staffed by the commanding officers, they make a determination of what measures ought to be taken, disciplinary or administrative, relating to any individuals so identified. The Hon. Member knows that in one instance there was a court martial. In others, internal administrative measures were taken.

SIZE OF ANNOUNCED PAY-OUT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, and deals with his exchange with the Leader of the New Democratic Party. It is obvious that neither one of them knows what they are talking about. The Minister of Finance is taking credit for the pay-out from the stabilization program. Is he aware that the Government is not even returning the money which the farmers put into that?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member not aware that the federal Government is contributing more than the farmers to that plan?

CONTRIBUTIONS TO FUND

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Finance aware that the proposed pay-out does not return the payment that the farmers have made to the program, aside from any government input?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance); Mr. Speaker, I would like my hon. friend to consider the Government's contribution to that program. The program has been set up to be self-balancing in the medium and long term. This is what the program will do.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE INSURANCE LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister has stated that she will bring in some form of mortgage insurance in the near future. When the Throne Speech was presented, the Minister is reported to have said that mortgage insurance is a long way down the road. Will the Minister reconcile the two statements "the near future" and "a long way down the road"? Can she be more specific and give us a date, a week, or a month, when she will bring forward mortgage insurance legislation?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member is somewhat confused, because mortgage insurance does not fall within my domain. I think he is referring to changes to the Canada Interest Act, changes which I have promised and which I hope to bring into the House with other new housing proposals.

Mr. Kempling: Mortgage insurance and amendments to the Interest Act are all in the same release from the Minister's office. She should read it.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said she would resign if certain legislation was not passed. Will she make the same commitment on mortgage insurance and amendments to the interest Act, and will she resign if it is not passed by June 30, 1984?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one commitment at a time.

CONTROL OF OIL INDUSTRY—FUTURE OF GULF CANADA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The Minister must be aware that Standard Oil of California, Socal, proposes to take over Gulf Oil of Pittsburgh, the biggest American corporate takeover in their history. That, of course, will affect Gulf Oil of Canada. What is the present level of Canadian control of the oil industry percentagewise? Does the Government of Canada intend to take action so that Gulf Canada can become Canadianized and in fact become a Canadian controlled company?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, since 1980 Canadian ownership in the oil and gas industry has increased from 28 per cent to 38 per cent, an increase of 10 per cent, practically one-third compared to what it was before. On the second question, this is a matter that will go before the Foreign Ivestment Review Agency. The minister responsible for the Agency will report the recommendation made by FIRA to Cabinet.

Mr. Speaker: One single supplement. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

POSITIONS ADVANCED BY LIBERAL LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN CANDIDATES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. That means that 62 per cent of the oil industry is still foreign-owned. Is the Prime Minister disappointed that all the leadership candidates appear to be abandoning the concept of Canadianization of the oil industry in Canada? Is it the present position of the Prime Minister and his Government to abandon that path?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the question is supplementary to the first.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR PROGRAM TO ASSIST DEWDNEY-ALOUETTE REGION IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister recognizes that unemployment is the biggest issue facing Canadians. In the Dewdney-Alouette regional district, which is the eastern half of my riding, 47 per cent of the people are unemployed. In committee the Deputy Minister stated, and the Minister has stated this, that fast-tracking programs for troubled areas would be instituted. Will the Minister consider instituting one of these programs for that area due to the problems in the lumber industry at this time?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will look into the way in which the LEAD Program might apply to that area. I will be happy to take the representations of the Hon. Member seriously and do just that.

REFORESTATION PROGRAM

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister consult with the Minister of the Environment with regard to a possible reforestation program to employ some of the unemployed in the lumber industry? I am sure that these people will be able to find good, long-term employment in the reforestation industry. Would the Minister look at this aspect of it as well?

● (1500)

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have just consulted with the Minister of the Environment who assures me that he would be happy to discuss the matter with me further.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ALLMAND—COLLECTIVE BARGAINING FOR HOUSE EMPLOYEES—APPEAL BY INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION TO FEDERAL COURT

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has served notice to the Chair of a matter of privilege which he wishes to raise. Before giving the floor to the Hon. Member, the Chair would like to make the observation that the matter affecting the unionization of House of Commons employees is sub judice. However, the Hon. Member is raising the matter as a question of privilege and I invite him to restrict his remarks to the question of how his privileges are affected.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the notice which I gave you earlier today, I wish to raise a question of privilege which affects my rights as a Member of the House and which I believe affects the rights of all other Members of the House. The employees of this House, whether they are messengers, security officers, interpreters, cleaners and all others, work for all of the Members of the House and not only for the Cabinet or for the Board of Internal Economy.

When the Canada Labour Relations Board decided on April 9 that employees of the House of Commons had the right to collective bargaining under the Canada Labour Code, it was a decision that affected all Members of the House of Commons and one that was welcomed by many. It was therefore with some surprise and dismay, I might say, that I learned on April 19 after the House had adjourned for Easter that the Board of Internal Economy had decided to appeal the April 9 decision of the Labour Relations Board to the Federal Court.

I take strong exception to the fact that a small group of Members of this House, being the Board of Internal Economy—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member was invited to address his remarks to how his privileges are affected.

Mr. Allmand: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was about to do that and I had already begun to do that. I was saying that a small group of Members of the House have decided to appeal that decision to the Federal Court without consulting all of the other Members of the House and without referring the matter to them for decision. This is a matter which touches upon the work of every Member in a personal and intimate way. It is not a matter which should have been dealt with by the board without wide consultation. It is a matter for the whole House and not just for the Government to decide. Since these people work for me, I feel very strongly that I should at least have been consulted in some way or another.

I submit very strongly, Mr. Speaker, that I have a prima facie case of privilege. I would ask that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on privileges and Elections where it can be examined and decided upon. I understand that this matter was discussed at a much earlier date by a committee—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has allowed the Hon. Member to make his argument. The matter is sub judice. In the opinion of the Chair, the Chair cannot make a prima facie ruling of privilege which would have the effect of giving priority to this motion at this time. Therefore, the Chair will have to so rule.

Mr. Allmand: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If these matters cannot be raised in the House of Commons—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member cannot reflect upon a decision of the Chair. That is what he is seeking to do as a point of order. The Chair has given consideration to the matter. The Hon. Member gave notice and the Chair, under the circumstances, has no option but to decide that it cannot rule that there is a prima facie question of privilege in a matter which is now sub judice and before the courts.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

MR. WADDELL—COMPUTER-GENERATED TELEPHONE SOLICITING

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition that humbly sheweth that many Vancouver-Kingsway residents, including Eileen Sayman, Lloyd Fox and Harold and Phyllis Boalch, find telephone solicitation, expecially computer-generated telephone solicitation, to be an invasion of their privacy and that these computer-generated calls have lately become more frequent in my constituency. Therefore, the petitioners request that the CRTC intervene to put a stop to these calls and to look into the matter of computer-generated telephone soliciting in general.

RECRUITMENT OF FRANCOPHONE EMPLOYEES

Question No. 12—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Was there correspondence between a R.W.B. Bailey, Chairman, SGPE Sub-Group and a Mr. R. Gagnon, Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, dated February 17 and February 19, 1982 respectively on the subject of a hiring team to recruit Francophone employees?

2. Are the contents of the correspondence factually correct and, if not (a) in which parts do they vary (b) what are the correct facts?

3. Does the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs have such a hiring team in the SGPE Sub-Group and, if so, in which other sub-groups, bureaus, directorates or divisions does the Department have similar hiring teams?

4. In the Department of (a) Agriculture (b) Communications (c) Consumer and Corporate Affairs (d) Employment and Immigration (e) Energy, Mines and Resources (f) the Environment (g) External Affairs (h) Finance (i) Fisheries and Oceans (j) Indian Affairs and Northern Development (k) Industry, Trade and Commerce (l) Justice (m) Labour (n) National Defence (o) National Health and Welfare (p) Public Works (q) Regional Economic Expansion (r) National Revenue (s) Secretary of State (t) the Solicitor General (u) Supply and Services (v) Veterans Affairs (w) the Treasury Board (x) the Ministry of State for Science and Technology (y) the Canada Post Corporation, are there hiring teams for ensuring a certain level of Francophone recruitment and, if so (i) how many in each department (ii) how many members are on each hiring team (iii) what is the total cost of maintaining the hiring team?

5. For each of the departments and the corporation listed in part 4, what schools and universities are the hiring teams visiting in each province and territory?

6. For each of the departments and the corporation listed in part 4, what other employee pools are being approached by the hiring teams and in which provinces and territories is each employee pool being approached?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): As the Hon. Member knows, this question raises matters that had already been under review by the Federal Court of Appeal for several months on the date of the question, and continue to be sub judice. The Government is not, therefore, in a position to deal further with the question.

TREASURY BOARD—PERSONS ENGAGED IN PUBLIC RELATIONS

Question No. 91—Mr. Howie:

How many persons engaged in public relations, media relations or publicity are employed by the Treasury Board?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Six.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—LEGAL SERVICES

Question No. 381—Mr. Howie:

Does the Department of Justice provide a legal service to Canada Post Corporation and, if so, what (a) is the estimated cost of this service for the current fiscal year (b) was the expenditure for such service during the last fiscal year?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): The Department of Justice provides legal services to Canada Post Corporation on a cost recoverable basis. (a) $815,000; (b) $607,000.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

Question No. 393—Mr. Howie:

Did the Canadian Human Rights Commission require any additional staff to implement the recently proclaimed amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act and, if so, what (a) were these requirements (b) was the estimated cost of them?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): In so far as the Canadian Human Rights Commission is concerned: (a) Thirty person-years for the period 1983/84 to 1986/87. (b) The total estimated cost is $1,548,000, of which approximately $950,000 is for the salaries spread over a four-year period.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT RESEARCH CENTRE

Question No. 570—Mr. Howie:

What are the (a) names (b) positions of the persons who occupy positions on the Executive and Board of Directors of International Development Research Centre and, in each case, what amount was he/she paid in respect of that position in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1983?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): The International Development Research Centre informs the Government that:

Pursuant to the International Development Research Centre Act (Section 3), the Board of Governors is composed of the Chairman of the Board, the President of the Centre and not more than 19 other governors. Subsection 11(1) of the Act further stipulates that the Executive Committee of the Board shall consist of the Chairman, the President of the Centre and at least five other governors, annually elected from the Board in such a manner that a majority are Canadian citizens.

Members of the IDRC Board of Governors for fiscal year 1982/83 are as listed below. An asterisk indicates those governors who comprised the Executive Committee of the Board for the period in question.

Mr. Allison A. Ayida	Chairman, Fininvest Associates (Nigeria) Ltd., Lagos, Nigeria.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Speaker: There were seven minutes remaining in the period following the speech made by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). Are there Hon. Members rising to ask questions or make comments? I would recognize the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands is not in her place but the Hon. Member does have the right to ask questions or make comments.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might mention for the record a couple of the points to which the Hon. Member referred in her speech. I would like to put the questions to her; perhaps she will be able to respond to them at a later time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should mention that the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) is temporarily out of the Chamber. She is meeting with a large group of constituents who have come to meet with her and she expects to return to the House very shortly. Possibly by the time the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) has finished his intervention, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands will be back and would be prepared to give an appropriate and adequate answer to his inquiries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The period allowed for questions and answers can only be extended by unanimous consent. I suggest that the Hon. Member might wait until an appropriate time to make such a proposal. In the meantime, the Hon. Member for Algoma could continue with his comments or questions if he so wishes.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary would care to put his questions on the record. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has indicated to me that if she is not back in the House in time, she would be more than happy to respond in writing to the questions of the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I have two points to make. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands mentioned that much would be done by regulations and she pointed out that the regulations had not been tabled with the Bill. Of course, that is true because regulations are seldom tabled. However, at second reading debate the Minister indicated that at the committee stage the regulations drawn to the Bill would be made available to committee members. I think that is a good procedure to follow so that the members will know exactly what the regulations provide for. Certainly the Government is prepared to co-operate in every way in that regard.

• (1510)

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands also suggested that the Bill really does not provide proper parliamentary accountability. I would like to point out that this Bill does provide for a great deal of parliamentary accountability. The Minister has to table the corporate plan, including the details of not only the parent Crown corporation but subsidiary Crown corporations. There is a great deal of information there. The operating budgets of the parent corporation and the subsidiaries have to be tabled in the House and stand automatically referred to the appropriate standing committee. Directives that are made by a Minister of the Government to Crown corporations would have to be tabled in the House. I would be interested in knowing in the debate that is going on whether the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands favours the position of the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), who thinks that those directives which relate to the CBC and the Canadian Film Development Corporation should not relate to programming, whereas other Members on the opposite side seem to suggest that there should be a wide discretion to make directives relating to programing.

The annual report of the Crown corporation and subsidiaries would have to be tabled in the House. Of course the auditor's report, and a new feature, the annual summary of all Crown corporations, would be tabled by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). These, of course, would be referred to the appropriate standing committee.

The Hon. Member also mentioned amendments. It is important to note that the Government is fully prepared at committee stage to consider constructive and positive amendments from Hon. Members opposite. We are, of course, anxious to move to committee stage so that we can hear those suggestions.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was not here when the Hon. Member began his comments. He will understand that I had to meet with a school class from Kingston and the Islands for a few minutes just outside the Chamber. I therefore missed a bit of what he had to say.

Very briefly, the first question that he asked this morning was about the numbers that I used when I was quoting figures with regard to Crown corporations. I want to tell him that those figures came from a document entitled Crown Corporations and other Canadian Government Corporate Interests, issued by Treasury Board in December, 1982. He used some other figures, and I know they are broken down into categories, but the information that I took from that document totals the figure of 315, which I used. It may be that that figure has changed since December, 1982.

With regard to the question of accountability, which is really the major one that we are discussing here, I would say in response to the Hon. Member that nothing shows me the need for greater accountability, accountability that I think is still lacking in this Bill, than the questions that I raised during Question Period and the responses from the Minister who was speaking on behalf of the granddaddy of all Crown corporations—the Canadian Development Investment Corporation. He not only did not seem to comprehend what the questions were all about, but he rather shrugged them off.

We were talking about bonuses paid to executive officers of Crown corporations at a time when they are cutting back on their staff and causing lay-offs. This seems to me just incredible from the point of view of any kind of accountability. How does the Parliament of Canada get legitimate responses for a situation like that? This Bill still would not provide for the Members of this House to get legitimate answers to a situation such as that. That is the difficulty that I have with this Bill.

Earlier the Hon. Member asked whether or not I would agree with joint ventures and how I would bring those under a Bill, since I had indicated that I would favour moving into more control than is exerted now where both public and private funds were involved. I would say to him that as long as public funds—the taxpayers' money, not the money of the Government, not the money of the Members of Parliament and not the money of this Chamber, but the taxpayers' money—are involved, I feel there must be a much stricter means of holding companies, Crown corporations and individuals who work for them, accountable, much more than appears to be the case in this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the end of the ten-minute period for questions and comments. For continuing debate, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada (Mr. Evans).

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question which was just raised about the number of Crown corporations, I think there is still a bit of confusion. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's question related to whether or not the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) believed that the same rules for accountability as outlined in Bill C-24 should apply in cases of partial interest or joint venture where the Crown does not own a 100 per cent interest in a corporation. For example, in the case where Petro-Canada—I think the Hon. Member used that example—goes into a joint venture for offshore exploration with two or three other oil companies, would the Hon. Member believe that Bill C-24 should allow the Government to issue directives to a jointly held public and private corporation? We do not think it should be the case. That is why they are not included. It is not a matter of having these corporations outside of the control of government; it is because they are, by definition, joint ventures between the private sector and the public sector. If the Government were able to give directives in the way that Bill C-24 would imply, and if that kind of reporting was required publicly, it is highly unlikely that such joint ventures could ever be put together. That is part of the problem. I do not think the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands dealt with that particular issue.

There are 315 Crown corporations and corporations in which there is a public interest. The total number of Crown corporations is 67, and there are 128 wholly-owned subsidiaries. The legislation will apply to them. The additional corporations in which the Government has an interest are not covered in that way by the legislation for the reasons that I have just described because they are joint ventures with private sector companies. They are investments by the Government, partial investments in ventures and so on.

The second thing I would like to say is that this particular legislation has come about as a result of a great deal of consultation between the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), the Minister's officials, and the Auditor General who really is the instigator of the move to put together legislation of this kind. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands read part of the Auditor General's 1982 report into the record where he said that there needs to be greater accountability; there needs to be greater control. The Auditor General, it could be said—and I think over the years it can be said quite honestly—is the instigator of this legislation. I think that was what was behind the legislation that was introduced by the previous Conservative Government under the title of Bill C-27.

And so, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General is the driving force and the revelations that he made are the motivating force behind this legislation. Therefore it would seem to me that an assessment of the legislation by the Auditor General would have some validity and carry some weight in this House of Commons. It happens, Mr. Speaker, that the Auditor General has been in consultation with the President of the Treasury Board and he has examined the draft legislation.

Mr. Thomson: Not until after the Bill was tabled.

Mr. Evans: He knew what was to be put forward in the legislation. The Auditor General has written to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I believe, indicating that he strongly supports the legislation. I think the wording was that it should find the support of the broad base of Members of Parliament from all sides of the House. That is not a direct quote but I remember seeing such correspondence. The Auditor General was saying that this legislation should receive the support of Members of the House of Commons because it deals in very large part with the issues raised by the Auditor General himself. He, after all, as I just mentioned, was largely responsible for bringing to light the need for this legislation in the first place.

There is also a need to make comparisons, Mr. Speaker. I know the previous Conservative Government brought forward legislation in the form of Bill C-27 in the 1979 Parliament which was meant to deal with this issue. We have brought forward Bill C-24 which stands before us today, and I think it is important that we compare these two Bills to see if, as the Opposition seems to be saying, this particular legislation before us today has serious shortcomings of a kind not found in Bill C-27. In other words, to find out if Bill C-27 was greatly superior to that which we find before us today.

Nowhere is the contrast more revealing, Mr. Speaker, than in the degree of clarity and the standards of financial management and auditing required of Crown corporations by Bill C-24. The requirements are far more clear than they were in the previous legislation in that corporate books must at the very least be kept in accordance with standard accounting practices required in the private sector. Examination of management performance is specifically designed to ensure that management practices are adequate and fulfil the purposes of the corporation.

Our Bill privides, moreover, that information provided by Crown corporations must be shown according to major business activities. This is terribly important because Members of the House of Commons have said in the past that while we get an annual report, we do not know how it relates to individual areas of corporate business in general or the business being done by wholly-owned subsidiaries. This legislation requires that Crown corporations report on a line of business basis so that Members of Parliament and the public generally can have a clear idea of what it is the Crown corporation is doing and in what way these activities lead to the accomplishment of the goals and objectives originally set out for the corporation.

All Hon. Members will also recognize that in this new Bill the audit regime has been strengthened substantially. It will ensure the Crown corporation will be acutely aware of its responsibilities to directors, the Government and Parliament for the continuous monitoring of corporate operations.

The Opposition, in particular, Mr. Speaker, cannot fail to agree that we have responded more fully to the concerns of the Auditor General with respect to his mandate and the general auditing position than would have been the case in the previous legislation. Under this legislation he will have the right to become the auditor of Crown corporations. It is necessary to remind the House that Bill C-27 made no provision to confer a statutory right on the Auditor General to audit any Crown corporation. It merely included a provision which made him eligible to be appointed to audit those corporations where he did not already have that right conferred upon him in the incorporating legislation.

With respect to the borrowings of Crown corporations, the provisions of the legislation now before us are demonstrably superior to those found in the Conservative Bill C-27. Under their approach it was possible for the Minister of Finance to give a Crown corporation access to the consolidated revenue fund regardless of whether its legislation provided for such access. That simply ignored the view that unless there is explicit provision for such access, the corporation should not be allowed to use public funds in that way.

Furthermore, in our Bill there are clear measures for protecting the Crown's assets, including restrictions on the right of Crown corporations to retain proceeds from the sale of real or personal property. The proposed legislation carefully circumscribes the right of Crown corporations to pledge government property as security for loans. Also, Crown corporations are required to inform the appropriate Minister, indeed the Treasury Board, of new developments which could affect performance or funding of those Crown corporations.

Let me turn now to two features of the new Bill on which there has been considerable debate here today and previously; that is, the power of direction and the appointment of the chief executive officer of a Crown corporation. Bill C-24 recognizes in a forthright and realistic way the critical role the chief executive officer must play in the sound management of a Crown corporation. Surely in any situation where there is a single shareholder, as in the wholly-owned Crown corporations and wholly-owned subsidiaries, the shareholder, that is to say the people of Canada represented by their elected government, should be responsible for the appointment not only of the directors of the corporation but also of the chief executive officer. It seems to me any other arrangement is patently inconsistent with any reasonable concept of improved control and accountability. It is reasonable to assume that in making such appointments the Government would consult the appropriate board of directors. However, there is no question in this Bill on where the appointment responsibility resides. Under Bill C-27 the chief executive officer would have been appointed by the board of directors. However, it is important to note that even under the Conservative administration's approach, such appointments would have been subject to government approval. Therefore, while there has been some to do about who appoints the chief executive officer, under the Conservative Government the appointment would have been by the Government as is in Bill C-24, because the Government—

Mr. Thomson: Come, on, John, that is a misrepresentation.

Mr. Evans: The board of directors would appoint the chief executive officer subject to the approval of the Government. That was part of Bill C-27 and Hon. Members opposite simply cannot deny it.

The provisions in the new Bill as to where the responsibility lies are much clearer. When you come right down to it, it seems to me that responsibility has to lie with the sole shareholder, being the people, who are represented in Parliament by the government of the day. The government is in turn held accountable by other Members of Parliament. Where else would the responsibility lie for appointing the directors, the people who are going to run corporations which operate on assets belonging to the people of Canada? It seems to me obvious that Bill C-24 puts the matter in proper perspective and deals with this issue in the manner in which it should be dealt with.

As for the directive power, Mr. Speaker, the proposals of this Government and of the Opposition in Bill C-27 are for a broad universally applicable power of direction. What is sought here, of course, and there is no dispute on this objective, I believe, is the power of direction by which the Government can unambiguously direct its Crown corporations to pursue public policy or other objectives the Government has determined to be in the public interest. After all, if that were not the case, there would be no rationale whatsoever to Crown corporations. In Bill C-27 these directives would have been made available to Parliament. The same provision is found in Bill C-24. Bill C-27 said that the directives have to be made available to Parliament, and Bill C-24 says the same thing. In Bill C-27 the cultural corporations would have been excluded from directives touching on issues of artistic integrity. The same general principle is incorporated in Bill C-24.

The difference arises on this directive power in that while we believe the measures we have suggested for preventing improper use of directives are just as effective as those which were included in Bill C-27, they do not provide opportunities to the Crown corporations to evade their responsibility in complying with the directives issued to them by the Government. Unlike Bill C-27, the proposals found in Bill C-24 make no universal provision for compensation to be paid to the Crown corporation for the implementation of a directive given to it by the Government that would result in increased costs or losses to the corporation. Hence, Mr. Speaker, by taking this route, the Bill provides no explicit means or incentives for Crown corporations to attempt to defer the implementation of programs which would be called for under public policy directives.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, that if the Government in its wisdom feels, subject to the scrutiny of the Opposition in the House of Commons, that a public policy interest needs to be served by a Crown corporation, it should not be possible for that directive given to a Crown corporation to be circumvented by the Crown corporation saying that it would not be a money making proposition or that the costs would be exceeded by what the Crown corporation feels to be the benefit, when in fact the matter is of a public policy nature, the responsibility for which is being taken by the Government's being held accountable in the House of Commons. It is not the place of the Crown corporation to say it will not comply with that directive under certain circumstances.

The Conservative Government's approach would have held the board of directors entirely responsible for carrying out Government directives. Our Bill retains the board's responsibility for efficient and effective implementation of the directives. However, we acknowledge that the ultimate responsibility for the directive itself belongs squarely with the Government. The Government is to be held accountable here in the House of Commons and in committee for the directives it gives. The Government should not be able to push the responsibility on to the board of directors. The Government should be held responsible in this place. Therefore, we specifically absolve the board of directors from any consequences arising from the implementation of directives given to it by the Government. Surely this is a much more direct, honest and reasonable assignment of roles and responsibilities than was found in Bill C-27. It maintains a direct responsibility where it belongs, with the elected Government of the day in the House of Commons, which is terribly important to my mind.

In all these respects and others, Mr. Speaker, this new Bill is a vast improvement over the former administration's proposed legislation. It is direct, clear, understandable and, above all, it gets us all where we want to go, that is, into a long overdue system of comprehensive control and direction of Crown corporations and the affirmation of the accountability of Crown corporations to the Government and thereby to Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a 10 minute period for questions or comments.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comments. There is a lot more involved in Bill C-24 than the auditing of Crown corporations and the general accounting standards concerning Crown corporations. The whole question of accountability goes far beyond simply auditing and generally accepted accounting principles. I am sure the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary would agree with that. We are also talking about the proliferation of Crown corporations in this Bill.

The point is that in his correspondence with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) the Auditor General addressed himself to the audit provisions contained in Bill C-24. That is all he dealt with. Incidentally, in his own statement to me personally he said that the Bill had been reviewed in draft form with the Auditor General prior to tabling in the House, and it was on the strength of the draft document which he saw that the Auditor General corresponded with the President of the Treasury Board. However, in final form, the Bill differed substantially from the draft with which he was presented. Those are the facts of the matter in so far as the Auditor General is concerned. The implication by the Parliamentary Secretary that the Auditor General was implicitly endorsing the entirety of Bill C-24 is misleading to this House and the Members. That is one point. I think it is an unwelcome input into the debate in the House to imply that that is the case.

Miss MacDonald: He has not seen the regulations.

Mr. Thomson: Nor have we seen the regulations. The Parliamentary Secretary is well aware of that. In its humbleness the Government has agreed to let us see the regulations when we get to committee. I can tell you right now that we are never going to get to committee until we do see those regulations.

The Parliamentary Secretary also referred to the magnificent set of general auditing standards which have been introduced in Bill C-24. I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary is cogently aware that one of the provisions in Bill C-24 is the reference to special investigations. If the Auditor General deems it necessary, he can make a special investigation of a particular Crown corporation. What is a special investigation? It is a new set of words dreamed up by the draftsmen who put together Bill C-24 which completely confuse the auditing issue. Clearly the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Foster), the President of the Treasury Board himself, and the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) know full well that we are talking about comprehensive auditing. They do not want to come to grips with it so they decided to muddy the water. They decided to do another flimflam job and confuse the issue. Comprehensive auditing is a reality which is understood by the Auditor General and by the general accounting profession, but the Government does not want to submit its Crown corpses or Crown corporations to comprehensive auditing. So what does it do? It dreams up—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order please. I must draw to the attention of Hon. Members that they may have a chance to ask another question but the question should be relatively short. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Queen's Privy Council of Canada.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I beg to differ with the Hon. Member opposite on a number of points. If he is concerned with the question of proliferation of Crown corporations, I believe that is dealt with in the following way. A Crown corporation has to state its goals and objectives. Any investment in a wholly owned subsidiary of a Crown corporation must fall within the mandate given to that Crown corporation. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if Parliament has said that this should be the mandate of a Crown corporation and this is the field in which it should operate, and the Crown corporation operates in that field, then it does not seem to me that there should be a great hue and cry that this is somehow improper. If it was improper, then why did Parliament say that it was all right for Crown corporations to perform certain functions?

I am given to believe that there is no substantial difference between the draft Bill that the Auditor General had an opportunity to examine and the Bill that was introduced in the House. If there is substantial difference and if the Auditor General does not approve of the changes that the Hon. Member alleges were brought into this Bill, can he table or put evidence before the House that suggests that the Auditor General is acting contrary to what he said in the letter he sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), that he was hoping the Bill would move through smoothly? I will quote from the letter. It reads:

> I recollect that last June I wrote you, expressing my concerns about the need for a more effective accountability framework for Crown-owned corporations. I think it therefore only appropriate that I write again now when there is such tangible evidence of action that will help to alleviate my concerns.

If the Hon. Member has written or other evidence that he can place before the House which shows that the Auditor

General refutes or retracts this statement about the Bill on the basis that there is some vast difference between the draft Bill that was shown to the Auditor General and the Bill that was tabled as Bill C-24 in the House, then let the Hon. Member place it before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I should point out that it is the Hon. Member's speech that is being questioned and upon which comments are being made. He should not be putting questions to another Hon. Member who is putting questions to him.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary. Is it his view of government policy that the matter of the independence of the Auditor General ought to be brought before the House? My conversations with the Auditor General indicate that he did not expect any of his letters to be quoted in the House. Does the Parliamentary Secretary not believe that he has compromised the office of the Auditor General by quoting from his letter without allowing the Auditor General an opportunity to explain further? Is it the Government's intention to put the Auditor General out to dry? I want to tell the Parliamentary Secretary that I personally have had dinner with the Auditor General to discuss this matter. If the Government intends to continue to hang the Auditor General on a letter that he wrote approving the general thrust of the Government's proceeding with Crown corporation legislation and trying to say that the letter implied full approval of that legislation, he is totally wrong. If he continues this course of action and the Government continues in this way, it is hanging the Auditor General out to dry and destroying the office of the Auditor General.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General is not being hung out to dry here any more than he is being hung out to dry when the attacks the Government in his report. The Auditor General has sent a letter that was neither private nor confidential. It was sent with carbon copies to others.

This does not happen to meet his political objectives, and if the Hon. Member is so concerned that the Auditor General is being hung out to dry, which he is not, then the Hon. Member can simply pass this Bill at second reading so that we can send it to committee. The Auditor General can then come and testify and say whether or not he approves of this Bill and its direction. The Auditor General might point out certain other action he might prefer. However, the Hon. Member must realize that the Auditor General is not the elected government of this country; we are.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the end of the ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could we continue this line of questioning with the consent of the House?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There must be unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There is not unanimous consent. Continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling).

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to speak on the second reading of Bill C-24, a proposal to amend the Financial Administration Act for Crown corporations.

The Government has pointed an accusing finger at the Opposition many times, charging us with trying to delay the legislative process. Bill C-24 serves as a prime example of proposed legislation that must be scuttled in the best interests of the Canadian people. As has too often been the case, this Bill is designed to take the power from Peter and give it to Paul.

It is the Government—which is not to be confused with Parliament—that will absorb that power through the Cabinet. Should this Bill pass, the board of directors of Crown corporations will be virtually relieved of their existing mandates.

The absence of regulation in the proposed Bill bestows an awesome power on the Government. This open-endedness and lack of upfront commitment is an insult to the parliamentary process. The potential for clandestine wheeling and dealing behind boardroom doors is fantastic. I believe that acceptance of this piece of legislation would set a deadly precedent whereby the Government would be no longer accountable to Parliament. The willingness of a government to create regulations to suit its needs for the moment is just part of an elaborate smokescreen. So long as it refuses to lay its cards on the table, it will be impossible to know exactly what it will do. For example, so long as the Treasury Board can exempt corporations from presenting operating and capital budgets at their whim and fancy, the temptation for cover-ups will be immense. That temptation should be removed. There is a vast difference between trying to remain flexible and throwing caution to the wind. It seems unfortunate that the Government failed to make changes where they are most required.

As is now the case, the Cabinet would retain the responsibility for making major decisions on behalf of Crown corporations. Instead of placing the onus on one Cabinet Minister or the board members themselves, the entire Cabinet shoulders the responsibility.

To echo what has already been said, being accountable to so many means that Crown corporations will continue to be accountable to no one. Why should the responsibility for a corporation's success or failure not rest on the shoulders of those who run them, namely the board of directors? Instead, Bill C-24 undermines their authority and cuts their legs out from underneath them.

What kind of work can we expect from capable men and women who are not trusted to use their own judgment and their own specialities? Surely the Government can efficiently monitor Crown corporations without tying the hands of the experts. If anything, an amendment of this nature should enhance and upgrade the responsibilities of the boards.

Of course, in the private sector a board of directors may hire and fire a chief executive officer as well as decide how much she or he is worth. If the Government had its way, this essential part of the decision-making process would be handled at a distance by the Cabinet. Such action is the embodiment of authority usurped. It is simply a matter of time until Peter and Paul are no longer on good speaking terms. In this sense, the Government is moving 180 degrees in the wrong direction.

There is a great deal of concern within the Opposition regarding the proliferation of Crown corporations, and for good reason. Although Bill C-24 requires parliamentary approval to create a new parent corporation, it ignores the subsidiaries. In other words, while the Government holds the gun to the mother's head, the kids are out stealing your hubcaps. The subsidiaries, which have sprung up like crocuses, will continue to proliferate unchecked. To keep the progeny of Crown corporations from becoming an unruly bureaucratic tangle, birth control is the only answer.

Another loophole in the Bill would give the breath of life to a new corporation so long as an existing Act of Parliament will facilitate it. We are stepping back into that smokescreen. It is obvious that there are already so many such Acts in place that refusal of a new corporation would be a real problem.

The Government also seems interested in tying the hands of Parliament in the future. With its outlandish suggestion that debate of special Acts be limited to 30 days in committee and seven hours of continuous debate, it is forcing future Parliaments into dangerous limitations. It is frightening to imagine what effect this would have on other Bills brought to the House by the Government. It would be a dangerous precedent indeed. The restriction of time leaves no fail-safe mechanism for extenuating circumstances or particularly controversial applications. In suggesting such legislation, the Government is claiming it can see the future. It is becoming apparent that the Government is having difficulty even seeing the present.

There are many vital issues which Bill C-24 fails to address. It shies away from presenting policy on matters of internal government organization. Does the Government intend to make the rules as it goes along? There is no reference to the privileges and immunities of Crown corporations. The Bill does not specify regulations as to whether public servants may sit on Crown corporations' boards of directors. Surely at least minimum qualifications for board personnel must be clearly delineated by legislation. The Bill sidesteps the suggestion that parliamentary oversight committees should monitor Crown corporations. In this matter, the Government could easily avoid the threat of cover-up accusations. If all Parties are taken into the inner sanctum, there is bound to be less suspicion of sleight-of-hand tactics on the part of the Government or the Cabinet itself.

I trust it is becoming apparent, Mr. Speaker, that the present proposal is somewhat narrow in scope, to say the least. The Bill refers only to corporations owned entirely by the Crown. There are over 100 enterprises only partly owned by the Crown in tandem with independent bodies. Those corporations in which the Crown has invested, but does not own, represent a healthy chunk of revenue. Why then, have they been excluded from Bill C-24? I believe that these omissions reveal the haste with which this Bill was drafted by the Government. It is the duty of the Opposition at this time to quash the haste in this issue.

It is our mandate to inject some expertise and finesse into the creation of a Bill concerning Crown corporations in Canada. We intend to institute the necessary checks and balances to prevent the Government from running out of control. The people of Canada require an amendment regarding Crown corporations, but Bill C-24 is nowhere near the answer. Instead, it is the product of Government whistling in the dark. When the Liberals hand us the reins in a few months—which is a decision of Canadians but which the polls show will certainly happen—then perhaps the Liberals will be able to see just how bright the prospects can be under new and responsible leadership.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), mentioned the news item which appeared in The Citizen of Ottawa and in all other papers regarding the de Havilland chiefs being given big bonuses as debts mount. Those bonuses were pretty healthy sums. I can understand a board of directors voting its officers bonuses if they are doing a good job. But de Havilland lost $500 million, give or take, and yet here the officers were presented with bonuses in the neighbourhood of $13,000 each, on top of their salaries which in all cases are probably well over the $100,000 mark. I am not sure whether the bonus announcement has been made by Canadair but, on the same basis, if it is following the principle that the more you lose the more you get, I am sure Canadair officials will be licking their chops when the Government makes its announcement in that respect.

I think we are all aware of matters in Chrysler Corporation. It was almost on the verge of bankruptcy. It pulled itself up by its own bootstraps, aided by some guarantees by the Government, and I will give the Government full marks on that. Chrysler Corporation is a company that has come back and is a real success story. Its recent financial announcement revealed that the corporation had made, I believe, $715 million in the first quarter. Chrysler Corporation also paid Lee Iacocca, the President, a bonus of $700,000, give or take. That is a hell of a lot of money, but that bonus is justified. I suppose it was calculated on the basis of 10 per cent. If Mr. Iacocca was able to turn that company around, then he earned the money. I guess he will pay a good deal of it in taxes. When Crown corporations are able to make profits, then the officers should be given bonuses. And until that time, officers should certainly be paid the originally agreed salaries, or else get their fingers rapped or be fired.

Miss MacDonald: Right.

Mr. Darling: This brings up another point, Mr. Speaker. It concerns government Departments. I see the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) is here. What about deputy ministers who are able to save their Departments a considerable amount of money? I know that deputy ministers are not the most underpaid section of the bureaucracy because most of them get a hell of a lot more than Members of Parliament, and I doubt if they put in the hours that Members of Parliament do. Instead of doing what we know these deputy ministers have done in the past, that is, scurry around in the month of March trying to find places to spend money, to spend any unused portion of their budgets so they can go back to the Treasury Board for the same amount of money or even more the following year, if they were paid bonuses if they could save X-million dollars a year, that would be a positive step. I would not be adverse to giving a deputy minister a bonus of $100,000 if he could save the tax payer $1 million. This is something to which we could give consideration. It is certainly a suggestion I hope the next government will take when it comes to power, whether in three months or six months. I know the Government can hang on almost another year. That decision, as you are aware, Mr. Speaker, remains in the hands of the Prime Minister, whoever he or she may be within the next year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten minute period for questions or comments.

If there are no questions or comments, we will continue with debate. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, this Bill is so faulty, so full of defects, that I scarcely know where to begin my criticism of it. I am really astounded that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) should bring forth a Bill which has so many faults in it. There are faults in basic concept. There are faults in translation, which I shall mention as I go along, or perhaps if they are not faults in translation, they are at least attempts to rewrite either the English or the French language, and I am not sure which it is. But so faulty is the Bill that I suppose the best way to get at it is to start at the beginning of the Bill, look at it and see where it seems to be going. I hope the criticisms that I will be able to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and to the attention of the President of the Treasury Board will be sufficiently cogent to persuade him that the Bill needs to be withdrawn.

First, I look at the front page of Bill C-24 and I see that in the English version it is called an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown Corporations. The French version reads:

● (1600)

Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'administration financière à l'égard des sociétés d'État—

[Translation]

It therefore seems that Crown Corporations—

[English]

—as they used to be called, have now become "des sociétés d'État." This is exactly the way it was being introduced in the statement by the hon. President of the Treasury Board in March when the Bill was being brought forward. His introductory comments referred to the control and accountability of Crown corporations.

I would like to quote the first paragraph of that statement wherein the Minister indicated that the federal Government believed that new measures were required to strengthen the control and accountability of its Crown corporations. He indicated that this could best be done by clarifying the roles and responsibilities of Parliament, the Government, the boards of directors and the managers of Crown corporations. The whole focus of that opening paragraph was on Crown corporations. What did he do? He brought forward Bill C-24 amending the Financial Administration Act.

I wonder whether the President of the Treasury Board even bothered to look at Bill C-27, which was introduced in the previous Parliament, a Bill to establish the legitimacy of Crown corporations within the Government structure, the means of controlling them, the means of ensuring their accountability and, in addition—and this is one of the greatest defects in this legislation—the means of ensuring that if their job is done they disappear, or sunset laws. There is not even a notion of a sunset law in these particular amendments to the Financial Administration Act relating to Crown corporations. Is that assuming that all Crown corporations which have come into existence deserve to remain in existence? Is there not some provision that the Government could make or ought to make to assure itself that once the functions of a Crown corporation have been satisfactorily concluded or fulfilled, it ceases to exist as a Crown corporation? There is no such notion whatsoever in this Bill of some 140 to 150 pages and all its appendices; it has at least 156 pages of text.

This particular approach strikes me as being not only unusual but an insult to Parliament and to the Canadian people. There are so many Crown corporations in existence—and probably a good many more in the mind of the Government—that they deserve a statute of their own on which to stand or to fall, a statute which could look after the entire structure of Crown corporations and certainly ensure that once they have fulfilled their functions they will be withdrawn. The concept of approaching control and accountability of Crown corporations through amendments to the Financial Administraton Act is a defective one. On those grounds alone this particular legislation deserves to be withdrawn.

I will have occasion to contrast portions of this Bill with Bill C-27 from the Thirty-First Parliament. There was a Bill which dealt exclusively and positively with Crown corporations. It is one which ought to have been a model for the Government to follow in bringing forward legislation purporting to do no more than deal with the control and accountability of Crown corporations.

I said that I would start at the beginning, and perhaps that is a good place to start. Having looked at the title page, I will deal with some of the definitions which are provided. Even there I find either defects, faults or attempts to rewrite either the English or the French language. In English the title of the Bill is, "an Act respecting Crown corporations and matters related and incidental thereto". In French, the version is:

Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'administration financière à l'égard des sociétés d'État et modifiant d'autres lois en conséquence.

We find that the Crown corporation, a notion which has been around for a good many years, has now shifted and is no longer called "corporation de la Couronne", but "société d'État". Is this deliberate? Is this evasion or avoidance of the mere word "Couronne", something of which this Government is ashamed? Why has it decided to rewrite the French language at this particular time? I find this particular instance strange, and I also wonder a little about the expression "société d'État".

[Translation]

Indeed, I have reservations about that French translation. Would it be not more accurate or more correct to say "les sociétés de l'État"? We say "sociétés de la Couronne", so why not say "sociétés de l'État"? If anything is to be changed, it ought to be done correctly. In any case, perhaps it is not too important—

[English]

However, it tells me a great deal about the slipshod manner in which this Bill was drafted so that it could be brought forward to the House at this particular time.

Also, I notice in the definitions section of the Bill that the "Crown" is used in English and "Sa Majesté" is used in French. I wonder why they shifted from the symbol to the person. This does not make good sense. Why are they avoiding the use of the symbol "Crown" in French and using the person in its place? I do not know who did it. I know that the Minister is very articulate in both languages. I am surprised that he should have let this slip through. I think it is necessary—and the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) would probably agree—that there is a distinction to be made between the person and the symbol. Why get them mixed up in a Bill like this? I thought the Minister of Justice provided some of the legal advice on the drafting of Bills. Was it just slipshod workmanship by the Department that allowed the shift from the English symbol to the French person to be slipped in? I find it most extraordinary that the Government by this means should rewrite one or the other of the two official languages of Canada.

The legislation is drafted in a clumsy, even unmanageable manner. I suggest that it be withdrawn. Back at the drafting board, Bill C-27 could be used as a model to assist the drafters. This is not a Crown corporations Bill as it has been touted. It is an amendment to the Financial Administration Act. It is regrettable that in this day and age, with all the Crown corporations in existence, we should have a Bill brought before us in this shoddy manner.

One of the problems of Crown corporations, particularly in Canada, is the subsidiaries created by Crown corporations. The Salmonid Enhancement Program in British Columbia could take a few lessons from Crown corporations. On the Pacific Coast we are having difficulties in spawning enough fish to make the salmon fishery a thriving industry again. Meanwhile in Ottawa, the Government is busily engaged in producing Crown corporations that spawn subsidiaries at a rate that put our salmon to shame.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, how many subsidiaries Petro-Canada has? I bet you do not. I read some of the literature related to Petro-Canada, if it can be called literature. Sometimes I look in the appendix or the schedule to the Financial Administration Act. Sometimes I look at the report of the Crown corporations. I find that PetroCan, for example, and I use this only as an example, has 33 listed subsidiaries. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if you know what Rocair Limited does. I doubt that anyone in this House knows. It is a subsidiary spawned or acquired by Petro-Canada and listed as such. Is GMI Co. (Bahamas) Limited the summer resort to which the PetroCan officials retire when they have had enough of the cold Canadian winter? That is possible. What would it do other than that? These subsidiaries are barely acknowledged in this Bill. They can spawn without let or hindrance.

I am not talking just about PetroCan, which is fairly well known. One of the earlier Crown corporations is CNR. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, how many subsidiaries CNR has spawned in the course of its life? That company which is ours, if we are to believe the advertisements, has 45 subsidiaries.

I placed a question on the Order Paper. I received an answer about two weeks ago. I find that Autoport Limited was spawned in December, 1971 to operate the storage, servicing and distribution area for imported automobiles. That is part of the CNR. Canadian National Steamship Company Limited makes a fair amount of sense. There is Canadian National Hotels (Moncton) Ltd. Canat Limited has its home base in Delaware. It was created for the sole purpose of owning and managing railway equipment purchased with incentive per diem funds in accordance with Interstate Commerce regulations. That is a subsidiary of Canadian National Railways. Some have their operating base in Canada. I do not think there is one in the Bahamas yet.

CN Tower Limited is a subsidiary. Whoa! I had the feeling that we in this House passed legislation creating CN Tower Limited. There is another one related to CN Tower, CN Tower Restaurants (Ltd.). That was created in order to facilitate the separate operation of the restaurants in the CN Tower. That, as you would expect, has its headquarters in Ontario. Another subsidiary is in Minnesota, the Duluth, Winnipeg and Pacific Railway Company. There are several in Delaware. I guess Delaware is a great haven of Crown corporations.

I did not realize my time is about to run out so quickly. I became rather involved in all of these subsidiaries.

A major criticism is the fact that this legislation would put shackles on the House of Commons or the Senate, whichever House receives a motion relating to the creation of a Crown corporation. That is absolutely unacceptable to any respectable parliamentarian. I am ashamed that the President of the Treasury Board would allow that clause to creep into the legislation. The limitation on the length of debate on this legislation that may be permitted in this House has been written into this legislation. That is absolutely deplorable. There is a period of 30 sitting days, seven hours debate and all that sort of thing.

I want to draw one further matter to your attention, Mr. Speaker, in the half minute I have left. Clause 15 of the Bill requires the parent corporation to report to the appropriate Minister the creation of subsidiaries, not to Parliament but to the Minister. Depending on how much goodwill he has, the Minister may report the existence of a subsidiary to the House of Commons.

Those are some of the criticisms I would level at the Bill. I urgently suggest that the Minister withdraw it and produce a better Bill more closely related to Crown corporations and less to the Financial Administration Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. If there is no one rising to put a question, to continue the debate, I recognize the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

• (1620)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I found it fascinating when listening to my friends from the Official Opposition—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member before he has started but I have a little job to perform right now.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields)—Crown Corporations—Northern Transportation Company Limited (a) Date of decision to sell (b) Disposal of Athabasca assets; the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—Canadian National Railways (a) Request that subsidiary operations be privatized (b) Government policy; the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight)—Railways (a) Level of investment by railroads (b) Size of investment to move grain.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I found it interesting and a little bit amusing to hear my good friends from the Government side and from the official opposition side speaking about Crown corporations, because they are all somewhat schizophrenic about Crown corporations. They believe in Crown corporations if necessary but not necessarily in Crown corporations.

In the history of the western industrial world, Crown corporations have been inaugurated when Governments of all political stripes have taken over or provided the services of the private sector. There is nothing new about that. The question to be asked is why Crown corporations exist. If the free enterprise capitalist system is so good and if it works so well, there would be no need for Crown corporations. However, even the free enterprisers and the capitalists have admitted that the weaknesses in their own system have necessitated the inauguration of Crown corporations. When private enterprise Governments have asked themselves why they have inaugurated Crown corporations, invariably the answer has been because the private sector could not or would not occupy that area of economic or social endeavour in the economy.

There is another reason for the existence of Crown corporations which was endemic in the early years of Crown corporations in Canada. A federal Liberal Government or a federal Tory Government would start a Crown corporation, not because it believed in it; not because it served a necessary public good, need or demand; not because the private sector would not fulfil the role, but because the private sector could not fulfil the role. The histories of Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines-Air Canada are classic examples of this. Canadian National Railways was made a Crown corporation not because the Government of the day thought there was a need for a publicly-owned national railway system but because the Government wanted to bail out five bankrupt railway companies. The Crown corporation started off with a debt of something in the order of $1.5 billion, which in 1922 or 1923 was a sizeable sum in today's terms. It was done for that reason only. The bondholders and the banks got their money and the taxpayers have paid ever since.

During the 1920s, the 1930s, the 1940s, the 1950s and the early 1960s, we heard the hue and cry how Canadian National was losing money and Parliament would have to vote to give it $200 million or $800 million. Since I came to the House, every year we have had to vote to supply Canadian National with amounts of money which were in that range whenever the CNR financing Bill came to the House. We heard the hue and cry about how terrible it was that this Crown corporation was losing all that money. However, as soon as it starts to make money, we hear the hue and cry from the same people who now say that these Crown corporations have no business making money and they should be privatized. I find that strange.

When a Crown corporation is making money, surely it benefits the taxpayers. Members of the Official Opposition and the Liberal Government claim to be sound businessmen who use sound business practices. Why would they want to sell off the corporations that are making money? Why do they not try to privatize the corporations that are losing money and save the taxpayers that expense? In my province, we have heard that same hue and cry over the last two years. We have heard it in this place and we read about the hue and cry over privatizing Crown corporations in the financial pages of the newspapers. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that in a modern industrial economy, whether it be that of Canada or of a host of other countries, enterprises take the form of one of the following or a combination of two or three of the following: public enterprise, co-operative enterprise or private enterprise, That is called a mixed economy. The trouble is that Crown corporations run by Liberal and Tory Governments create a mixed up economy.

Our national governments have never formed Crown corporations because they believed in them. They set them up either to bail out bankrupt private-sector companies and save hundreds of millions of dollars in losses for mainly wealthy investors or because there is a public need either locally, regionally or nationally which the private sector refused to fulfil. In the latter case, the Government of the day has no choice but to establish a Crown corporation. There is nothing intrinsically bad or intrinsically good about Crown corporations.

The necessity for accountability of Crown corporations is something about which Members on all sides of the House agree. The question is how we go about getting that accountability. I am proud of the history of the Government in my province. In the early days of the Tommy Douglas administration of the 1940s, a legislative Crown corporations committee was set up. The annual reports of provincial Crown corporations automatically by statute went before that Crown corporations committee. I do not think that that would be practical in the federal Parliament because there are several times as many federal Crown corporations as there are provincial Crown corporations in any given province.

No one parliamentary committee could by itself deal with all of the annual reports and get accountability from all of the Crown corporations. Therefore, it would seem to make sense that, by statute, the annual report of every Crown corporation should be referred to the appropriate standing committee of Parliament. That would be a good beginning, and that system is in place in the case of a number of Crown corporations. One of the very few times, and in fact perhaps the only time, a former Minister of Transport, Mr. Lang, accepted an amendment I proposed was when it was made statutory that the annual report of Air Canada be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport. That requirement is now incorporated into the Act and applies to Canadian National Railways as well. It should apply to all Crown corporations.

Something more must be done regarding accountability. First, each standing committee should be appropriately staffed with accountants, research staff, actuaries and whoever else is required so that every member of a committee, no matter to which Party he belongs, can be armed with information and questions to ask which have been arrived at independently. This must happen if any member of a committee is to be able to fulfil his duties by asking appropriate questions and demanding appropriate answers.

Second, as and when a Crown corporation's annual report goes before a standing committee, the committee meetings should not only be public but the public should also be free to appear and put forward their concerns, complaints and questions. I hope I am not speaking out of turn, but this might be starting to occur. It may well be that in the next week or two, the Transport Committee will decide to hear one or two witnesses other than those of Via Rail when it deals with Via Rail's annual report. And why not? Why not provide an opportunity for groups and individuals to appear? It would seem to me that when a committee reports to the House on its dealings with an annual report of a Crown corporation, it should feel free, even though it may well recommend things that are contrary to current Government policy, to report such and to recommend such. It still remains the prerogative of the Government, whoever is in power, to decide whether or not it will accept or reject those recommendations in whole or in part. That is the final responsibility of the Government. I have no quarrel with that, so long as each individual member of a standing committee has some degree of independence, whether he be on government side or on the opposition side.

It seems to me also that there will be—and undoubtedly should be from time to time, depending on the kind of enterprise that it is—joint ventures. There should be a mix. Frankly, I would like to see, for example, Petro-Canada, federated co-operatives, the United Co-operatives of Ontario, and one or two private companies in joint ventures.

I think my hon. friend from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) raised the matter of privileged information, private and confidential information, in joint ventures. I would see nothing wrong with having part of the hearings—where it was a joint venture in which the private sector and the co-operative sector were involved—held in camera. The committee could report in confidence to the Government with its recommendations. Because every Crown corporation has to operate within the framework of the general policy laid down by the government of the day, and it is the duty of the board of directors to pass the internal policies of the Crown corporations that stay within that over-all framework laid down by the policy of the government of the day, in terms of the over-all accountability it is the duty of those who administer and manage the Crown corporation to manage it on a day-to-day basis and conduct the operations within the context of that policy. If there are any failings by way of policy, then it is the government of the day and the board of directors who are accountable. If it is a failing in day-to-day operations, the day-to-day, week-to-week, month-to-month management of the corporation, then it is they who are accountable. They can be and should be accountable to a standing committee of this House.

I would like to turn now, Mr. Speaker, to the matter of the right of the Auditor General to audit as a matter of right. I have no objection to that provision being there. I would be very surprised, in fact, and it would be an extremely remote occurrence if the Auditor General exercised that right on every single Crown corporation every year. He would pick out two, three or four a year and maybe different ones each year. If he were to audit, as a matter of right, every single Crown corporation, he would need a staff of another 2,000, 3,000 or 4,000 people. Then of course he would have the Chartered Accountants Association of Canada madder than heck at him. But in any case, there is no reason why the Auditor General should not, if he feels that a standing committee was unable to dig up enough information or could not adequately carry out its task, pick out a certain Crown corporation and do an audit on it. Why should he not? Then the appropriate standing committee could deal with that audit also in the next annual report of that same Crown corporation.

When it comes to Crown corporations, one hears much about losses, breaking even or profitability. It depends on what kind of Crown corporation it is and what it is there for. If it is of a public utility nature, something that the public utilizes, something for which there is a public need and of which there is a public acceptance regardless of whether it loses money some years, breaks even some years, and makes money in some other years, those are not the criteria for the existence of that Crown corporation. If it provides an essential public service and most years loses money, then the nation as a whole shares in the cost of those losses. In order to provide an essential and needed public service or public utility, whether it be national in scope, regional, or local, you cannot have a Crown corporation operating only on the criterion of its profitability.

Mr. Speaker, one looks at Canadair, de Havilland, Chrysler and so forth. Governments, of whatever political stripe, have to decide if they should make it a Crown corporation, or do they lend it money, or do they guarantee its loans? Whatever route they choose to follow they have to take it in order to keep that particular enterprise viable either economically or in terms of long-term prospects to preserve employment, to preserve technology and to keep well trained people in the country. That is a legitimate decision for a government to make. The question is not how much de Havilland or Canadair lost. The question is, on the other side of the coin, are the present short-term or long-term prospects and benefits sufficient to make any losses now perfectly justifiable? Some of that will have to be guesswork. But it seems to me in general that it is a worth-while effort for a government of any political stripe to make.

It was also mentioned that every Crown corporation should have its own legislation. I for one agree with that. We have been trying since 1975 to get a VIA Rail Canada Act out of this Parliament. We still do not have one. VIA Rail Canada operates on a $1 vote from the Estimates of 1975. The operations of VIA Rail Canada are subject entirely to whatever the Minister of Transport of the day decides. He can do absolutely anything he wants with it. Even if he were to do something that we all agreed with, would that be appropriate? Is that appropriate? Surely a Crown corporation should have the legislation that allows it to exist as a totally legal entity, accountable and answerable to Parliament.

On the issue of accountability, we all agree that there should be a maximum of accountability from Crown corporations. I only wish we had the same degree of accountability from the private sector. In the overwhelming majority of cases, shareholders in private corporations do not know and cannot find out what is being done with their investment. They cannot find out about the goofs and mistakes that occur in private corporations. I am sure there is nobody in this House who will tell me that private corporations do not make goofs. They do. If you went to the annual meeting of Canadian Pacific Limited and tried to find out, Mr. Speaker, you would not have a chance. I wish we had legislation that would require the same kind of accountability from the private sector as that which we are asking for in Parliament from Crown corporations. Let us keep, Mr. Speaker, the principle of the necessity of Crown corporations in various sectors of the economy as an essential part of a western industrialized nation. It is in conjunction with a mixed economy, the co-operative movement and the private sector that Crown corporations should function, not only with full accountability but also with the ability to go into joint ventures and derive the maximum benefit, whether economic, financial or social, for the people who put up the money, namely, the people of the country. That is all that is required, but that is a large order. Surely that is what this Parliament should be doing.

● (1640)

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the Hon. Member could advise us whether it is still the position of the NDP to call for the nationalization of CPR by turning it into a Crown corporation? In view of the fact we have had a number of Crown corporations losing money, is that the kind of thing he says we should continue to do?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I than my hon. friend for the question. I was afraid he would not ask it. Too often, and it has occurred with Liberal, Tory and NDP Governments, we have taken over losers. Well, here is a winner we should take over.

Mr. Gamble: Then we can make it a loser.

Mr. Benjamin: I say that because, for historic and economic reasons relating to the welfare and good order of the entire national economy, it does not make good private enterprise economic sense to have competing railroads. They are a public utility and provide a service everyone has to use, directly or indirectly, whether they like it or not. If it were logical to have competing railroads, it would be equally logical to have competing highways, sewer systems, water lines, power lines, and telephone lines. However, anyone suggesting that would be locked up.

It is a longstanding Party policy to take over Canadian Pacific Limited. This will continue, I am sure, for a long time to come, until it happens, as it will one day. It may well be a Liberal or a Tory Government which will have no choice but to take it over. We suggested a way of doing this during the debate on the Crow Bill last year. In return for any capital funds given to CP by the Government of Canada, the Government would take common voting stock in the company. What is wrong with the taxpayer as a public investor having an opportunity for a return on that investment the same as a private investor? It makes good business sense and protects the taxpayer's investment.

We need to put that enterprise under public ownership, Mr. Speaker. Some of it we might sell off. I do not know if we would want to stay in the hotel business. I am sure we could make a bundle selling off Marathon Realty. That would be a nice change for the taxpayer. However, given the transportation needs of this country, Canadian Pacific Limited, in all of its transportation aspects, should be under public ownership as a Crown corporation and answerable to Parliament.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, in view of his statements, would the Hon. Member agree that the CNR should sell off its hotels, which, as he knows, lost $2.7 million last year? Is it his view that the Government should be running hotels and supplying accommodation for the less fortunate, as the Chateau Laurier does? Or does he think we should build more CN hotels so we can lose more money? Is that the policy of his Party?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member did not ask me that question in any year when CN hotels made money.

Mr. Blenkarn: When did that happen?

Mr. Benjamin: There were not very many of them. Private as well as public transportation companies, airlines, and railroads all over the western world have hotels as a necessary adjunct to their transportation system in order to keep their customers as long as possible. What is wrong with that? CN was looking at privatizing its hotels and shopped them out to the Hilton chain to operate them for CN. That was a disaster and so CN has had to take some of the management them back. The hotel business, whether owned by a Crown corporation or privately, has been going through some tough years. That is no reason to condemn public ownership of hotels. If it is, I suppose there is no reason either why Canadian Pacific should own hotels, because that is costing shareholders money. But the CPR directors are not accountable to their shareholders the way CN is to Members of Parliament. I would be inclined to keep the hotel operation.

I note there are various rail, airline and other sundry operations in Europe which own, in whole or in part, hotels, resorts, condominiums and shopping centres, you name it. It is strange that it is all right for the private dollar but not for the public dollar. That kind of double standard has been prevalent too long under successive national governments. What is so holy about a private dollar and unholy about a public dollar? Public dollars do as much or more good than private dollars. If a hotel as an adjunct to a transportation system is a good and sensible part of the operation to deal with tourists and the travelling public, then it should have some hotels. Why not?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I am interested to find out that the railways are carrying passengers again. It was my understanding that the passenger service had been designated to VIA Rail. Perhaps the Hon. Member could tell us about the express operations of CNR. For example, CNR has lost considerable money over the past several years on its trucking services. Would he have them sell those trucking services? As he knows, private truckers all make a profit and pay corporate taxes and so on. Does he think it is the business of the Government to own trucking companies?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, first I should tell the hon. gentlemen that VIA Rail, even though it is a one dollar item in the Estimates, is classed as a class of railway. Under the laws of Canada and under the North American Association of Railroads, it is a class 1 railway.

Do I think CN should sell its trucks? Mr. Speaker, I do not think they should, because no one would buy them right now. It would be a dumb time to try to sell them if they are losing money, unless you plan on giving them away to some friends. I do not think my hon. friend is like that. There might be some Members on the Government side willing to do that, I do not know. But, again, where a Crown corporation like CN uses trucks to take advantage of the highway system and the various laws and regulations in each province which enables it to do it cheaper than it could do it by rail, that is one thing. But if it is at the same time hauling heavy bulk commodities by truck, that is economic stupidity. I would prevent CN from long distance trucking iron ore and heavy steel products and what not. That is not the place for the trucking industry. I would prevent CN from entering that area of transportation which any transportation economist will tell you is just sheer nonsense. It is a loser, and it has been finding that out the hard way.

We had the bitter experience in Saskatchewan of trucking potash. The province had to rebuild a highway and then the potash mine, which was privately owned, had to agree to pay so much money to rebuild the highway. In the end both the taxpayer and the potash mine lost money. That is dumb. You do not haul heavy bulk commodities on the highway for long distances at high speed. It makes no sense. No government of any political stripe would countenance that, given the experience we have had.

If CN's trucks are a necessary adjunct to its transportation operation, then it should retain its trucking sector. That is part of the whole transportation package.

• (1650)

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have just a quick comment and then a question. When the President of CDI Corporation checked Canadair last year he found that it had 22 vice presidents and he cut them down to 12. A few were retired. The difficulty with Crown corporations is that the employees multiply like rabbits. If the hotels of our railways were taken over by the Government, the first thing that would happen is that the number of employees would double. That is a bad part about Crown corporations.

If Crown corporations can do so well with hotels, why are they not doing so well with the post office? They have certainly had a wonderful chance there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. I am afraid that the time allowed for the question period is over now. We are reverting to debate.

Mr. Benjamin: Will you not let me answer his question? I am sure you will get unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent for the hon. gentleman to answer the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the only thing I have to say about the post office is that no one anywhere in any political party in the whole western world, or perhaps the whole world, would suggest for one moment that postal services should be part of private enterprise. That is some kind of dream world. I do not know of post offices that make money anywhere in the world, at least it would be very rare. The public does not expect them to as long as they get the service. If there are some losses, the public is prepared to share in the cost as long as they get the service. That has been the problem.

On the matter of the number of officers of Crown corporations, I plead with my good friends to the right, both physically and politically, not to condemn Crown corporations because of stupid government policies that allow a Crown corporation to have a dozen vice presidents. It is not the fault of the Crown corporation; it is the fault of government policy. Do not condemn a Crown corporation because of that. Go after the ones who did it. Do not blame the person who happens to be the vice president in charge of Wicker Chair in the lobby of all the hotels. He may have been a former Liberal organizer or something. Blame the Government that allows that to happen. It lays down the overall policy.

One of the disasters of laying down an overall policy occurred when Mr. Lang, a former Minister of Transport, instructed the board of directors of Canadian National to start making a profit. Ever since then it has been downhill. There have been lay-offs and cancelled services from coast to coast because of an outrageous demand by the Government for CN to start making money. This has hurt a lot of Canadians. Surely that is the wrong reason. It is not the number of vice presidents but the policy of the Government which allows that to be at question. It is not the principle of whether you should have a Crown corporation.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to join my colleagues today in expressing my condemnation of this latest attempt by the Government to hoodwink Canadians. There has not been a major overhaul of Crown corporation legislation since 1951. The Liberals have been considering changes since 1972 and, as my colleague from Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) has pointed out, have been promising reform since 1977. This has not come about.

Now that we are into an election year, the Government has produced a most flawed piece of legislation in an attempt to convince Canadians that they will gain control over the monsters that have been created. Most of these are not really Crown corporations but are Crown corpses and should be buried.

As has been pointed out by previous speakers, there is no provision for any sunset laws in the legislation. The legislation will not work the way it is, Mr. Speaker. It will not work because the legislation is flawed and because we will let Canadians know that this is another example of the tired Government that has run out of fresh ideas. The current leadership race of the governing Party is evidence of that.

The biggest flaw in this Bill is that it does not deal with all of the Crown corporations that have been set up by this Government to interfere in the private sector, which is the engine that drives our economy. It applies only to about 183 Crown corporations, a little less than half of the total amount. Note, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot talk precisely about the number of these corporations because no one really knows for sure how many there are or what they do. Any number of Crown corporations can be exempted from this legislation by Cabinet. That is one of the major flaws. The Bank of Canada, the Canadian Wheat Board and the IDRC are excluded. If this is a good piece of legislation, why does it not apply to all Crown corporations? If it is bad legislation, why apply it at all? The trouble with this legislation is that it raises more questions than it answers.

Why, for example, will Cabinet be given the power to deny information to Parliament without explanation? Why is this so in a Bill that purports to make Crown corporations more accountable to Parliament? Why will Cabinet be given the power to amend the Bill, by regulation, without informing Parliament? There were see shades of metric. Why will a Crown corporation be able to operate freely, with Cabinet approval only? Why will Cabinet have the power to regulate how Crown corporations dispose of property and what is done with the proceeds? Why will Cabinet be responsible for appointing boards of directors and chief executive offciers as well as setting pay scales? Why is there a clause giving Cabinet the power to alter the by-laws of Crown corporations?

I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker. It is very simple. It is because, to a Liberal, parliamentary accountability is a contradiction in terms. Everyone in Canada now realizes the low esteem in which the lame duck Prime Minister views the institution of Parliament and its Members. He has expressed it publicly. It often borders on contempt. Government by Order in Council has become a way of life under that administration, and Parliament has been turned into a rubber-stamping organization. Its only corollary that I can think of, Mr. Speaker, is the Politburo of the U.S.S.R. State and centralized control is the desired effect. That is why we have Bills such as this before us. That is why this Bill gives all the power over Crown corporations to the Cabinet. It would never occur to Members opposite to seek the approval of Parliament when it comes to spending the taxpayers' money, as has been pointed out by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) this afternoon.

Lack of accountability and lack of trust is what this is all about. In this morning's The Toronto Sun there is an editorial about the Canada Unity Information Office, which is a Crown corporation. It indicates that it began in a tiny way with $10 million, which is mere peanuts to the Government. The CUIO was supposed to counter separatist rhetoric. Perhaps it did, but the CUIO is still operating after the separatist business is all washed up and its budget has tripled. I would like to quote the final paragraphs of that editorial, Mr. Speaker. It says:

> And that's how come the CUIO got into the business of printing a 52 page booklet praising the virtues of eight Quebec Liberal MPs to a few hundred thousand households in their ridings.
> The booklet didn't cost that much—just $158,000—but multiply that by all the other patronage, rip-offs and handouts our governments give their favorite sons and daughters and it adds up.
> A lean, small, accountable bureaucracy is not just knee-jerk thinking. It's necessary to prevent layer after layer of civil servants, playing with taxpayers' dollars in a moral vacuum that destroys the citizens' trust in government and bureaucrats' own moral worth.

That is why we want accountability in this Bill. We know what the Government has done. You cannot trust it. Canadians do not trust it. Canadians will remember that from 1968 to 1984 Government spending increased 751 per cent. That is why we want accountability. The deficit increased almost 6,000 per cent and the interest on that debt increased over 1,300 per cent. Right now 31 per cent of the Government's revenue goes for interest alone. That is why it is not trusted. That is why it must be replaced. That is why we oppose this legislation. People will remember that the dollar fell from 93 cents U.S. to 78 cents. Business bankruptcies increased 314 per cent. Should we trust it not to have accountability? I hope not. Why has all this come about? Because the Government did not care to consult Canadians on how their own dollars were being spent.

MEASURE RESPECTING TENURE OF SENATORS

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East) moved that Bill C-231, an Act to amend the Constitution Acts, 1867-1984 (tenure of Senators) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to bring before the House once again the urgent matter of Senate reform. More specifically, I move second reading of Bill C-231, an Act to amend the Constitution Acts, 1867-1984, tenure of Senators.

Permit me to read the last paragraph on page 41 of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform. It reads:

> The question may be asked: if a system of direct election is not established, should the term of those senators who have already been appointed for life or to age 75 be shortened? We believe that this question should be addressed if and when it becomes clear that an elected Senate is unlikely to be put in place. It may, however, be noted that the turnover of membership in the Senate has been fairly rapid. From 1970 to 1980, for example, 59 per cent of the seats in the Senate became vacant. This would suggest that not many years would elapse before most Senators had been appointed for nine-year terms.

I would like to read the explanatory note from Bill C-231 before I get into my remarks. It reads:

> Recently, the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform recommended a single nine-year term for newly appointed Senators. If implemented, such a recommendation would create three classes of Senators: those appointed for life, those appointed until age seventy-five, and finally, those appointed for a nine-year term.
> This bill, in contrast, would create one class of Senators by making all existing appointments subject to a nine-year term or retirement at seventy-five years of age, whichever occurred first. Because this amendment would not affect paragraph 42(1)(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982, 'the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators', it could be passed by Parliament exclusively without recourse to the general procedure for amendment requiring provincial approval.

Concurrently with the passage of this Bill, it can be expected that Parliament will pass legislation to adjust the statute law relating to the retiring and severance allowances of Senators.

I recognize fully that the current problems facing the nation are economic in scope and priority. Nevertheless, there is a larger problem facing Canadians that must be seriously and urgently addressed. That is the need for the reform of our federal institutions, and Senate reform tops the list.

The speech given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on March 30, 1984, at the colloquium organized by Laval University students concerning reform of federal institutions is well worth reading as reference is made there to the need for Senate reform.

On this matter of Senate reform we must ask ourselves two questions. The first question is, why has Senate reform been pursued with such vigour over the last dozen years? Second, why have we failed so miserably in effecting any meaningful reform whatsoever?

Permit me to try to answer these two questions from my own perspective. First, the reason Senate reform has been pursued so vigorously over 12 years is that Canadians in general and we in Parliament have realized that the Senate has lost its relevance. It has neither legitimacy nor accountability nor independence and it has doubtful authority. It sure has continuity. Longevity and stability.

There is an increasing public revulsion against any institution giving lifetime tenure without accountability to anyone in our society. There is a revulsion against handing out guaranteed tenure of 30 to 40 years because of political friendship or political compatibility. There is no sense of fairness, no sense of justice, not even a sense of propriety to such overwhelming patronage.

Canadians are saying that political patronage is acceptable but it must have limits and not be abused. An increasing number of Canadians are becoming committed to Senate abolition if meaningful reform is not soon effected. I am against abolition.

In 1972, a special joint committee of the Commons and the Senate co-chaired by Senator Molgat and the then Minister of Justice extensively studied Senate reform and put forth a proposal. In January of this year, another joint committee chaired by the same Senator Molgat and the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Cosgrove) issued another report after extensive hearings. How greatly the two reports differeed! They are as different as night and day. What a revelation occurred in a mere 12 years!

In the interval between these two special joint committees we had the following studies and reports: the federal Government Bill C-60; the Ontario Government proposal; the B.C. Government proposal; the Pepin-Robarts Council of the Federation proposal; the Quebec Government proposal; the Senate 1980 proposal; the Alberta Government proposal; and the eighth was my own proposal, Private Member's Bill C-640. All the nine previous proposals prior to the present one recognized and advocated the need for direct provincial involvement in the senatorial selection process.

Why has this matter of Senate reform been pursued so vigorously and yet no action has occurred? It is downright irresponsible, though a significant effort was made by the federal Government with its Bill C-60 in 1978. The 1972 special joint committee chaired by Senator Molgat and the Minister of Justice recommended an appointed Senate of 130 Members, with one-half appointed federally and one-half appointed from provincially supplied lists. They were to be lifetime appointments with mandatory retirement at age 70.

The western provincial representations were doubled to 12 for each of the four western provinces. The Yukon and Northwest Territories representation was also doubled from one to two each, increasing the total from 104 to 130 Senators.

Twelve years later a special joint committee, co-chaired by Senator Molgat and the Member for York-Scarborough, recommended an elected Senate, expanding the size from 104 to 144 Senators. It also recommended a doubling of the Members from each of the four western provinces, with an additional increase of 12 Senators for the four Atlantic provinces and an increase of four for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. All Senators in this most recent proposal would be elected for non-renewable terms of nine years.

Almost unanimously, the recommendations were for: one, the election of Senators to provide legitimacy and accountability; two, a nine-year non-renewable senatorial term to provide independence and a more frequent turnover to increase effectiveness and remove the deadwood; three, equal regional representation from what might be considered the six regions of Canada, each with 24 Senators, for a total of 144 Senators. These six regions, as I see them, are the B.C.-Alberta region, or the Mountain region; the Saskatchewan-Manitoba region, or the Prairie region; the Ontario region; the Quebec region; the Nova Scotia-New Brunswick region, or the Acadia region as I call it, and a supposedly complex, somewhat fanciful region composed of the Yukon, the Northwest Territories, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, having a total of 24 Senators altogether. I must conclude that the above distribution may be difficult for Ontario and Quebec to swallow. Of the above structural recommendations only the term of nine years can be effected constitutionally by Parliament. All other structural reform recommendations need the constitutional approval of seven provinces having at least 50 per cent of the Canadian population.

In my view, Parliament should move immediately to introduce the nine-year term to provide more independence, more frequent turnover, and more effectiveness. This type of amendment, which is what Bill C-231 effectively accomplishes, is politically responsible and necessary. It is a giant first step in Senate reform. If a nine-year non-renewable term is desirable for an elected Senate, then surely it is even more desirable for an appointed Senate.

In my opinion, a nine-year non-renewable senatorial term would provide the turnover dynamics which would tend to reduce regional and federal-provincial tensions. Co-operative federalism would be advanced and national unity would be enhanced.

This simply must be the first act on Senate reform. The other recommendations may bog down in federal-provincial wrangling. Let us do it as a House of Commons. We must effect Senate structural reform a step at a time. During the last 18 years, two minor Senate reform proposals were passed. In 1965, the senatorial tenure was limited to forced retirement at age 75. However, 16 senators still have lifetime tenure. Canadians do not accept the continuation of this anachronism of the past, and neither does Bill C-231. All present Senators above 75 years of age should retire or be retired. The Senate should establish a senior advisory council of retired Senators which would meet periodically and provide advice to Parliament. Former Senator Forsey is performing a useful and similar advisory role now. The Senate should implement an appropriate pension plan. In 1975, another minor change was passed which added two additional Senators to give both the Yukon and the Northwest Territories representation.

But why has there been no meaningful structural Senate reform in the last dozen years in light of the ten proposals put forth? I believe it is because the size of the package has always been too large and too complex for the Canadian federation to swallow in one gulp. A more step-wise process is advisable. Was not the pursuit of too large a package the prime reason for decades of failure in constitutional reform and patriation itself?

Of course it was. The Prime Minister in his March 30 speech at Laval University effectively acknowledged this realization. A two or three stage or step-wise process for reform of the Senate is also necessary and workable.

I simply do not agree with the contention that if Parliament acts to effect Senate reform, where it can do so without the agreement of the provinces, it may jeopardize the achievement of reform where approval of at least seven provinces having 50 per cent of the Canadian population is necessary. In fact, I believe the converse to be more accurate. Indeed, if Parliament acted to incorporate the nine-year non-renewable term on its own, this would signify the beginning of reform, and the Canadian people would then put significant pressure on the provincial Governments to go all the way with the joint committee's recent recommendations. Certainly such action would whet the public appetite for Senate reform.

I agree fully with the statement in the special joint committee's report which stated:

> We were told frequently that, after so many abortive attempts at Senate reform, the time has come for vigorous action—for fundamental change in the Senate—and that it would be a mistake to adopt inconsequential reforms.

Well, Bill C-231 is a giant step and the first step in fundamental reform of the Senate. And it can be done by Parliament. So let us do it. And as we do it, let us continue negotiations with the provinces to entrench constitutionally the remaining recommendations of the special joint committee. I believe that the provinces will accept some of the recommendations, such as increasing the size, perhaps even to 144, to provide more equitable regional representation. However, in my view, many moons will set before the provinces accept an elected Senate. The people of Canada will have to push the provinces into accepting a fully elected Senate. The provinces will continue to demand direct or indirect provincial appointment of Senators as was proposed in all nine proposals prior to the present joint committee report. But in time either a fully elected Senate will be a Canadian reality or else the Senate will disappear. Only then will a Senator have legitimacy, accountability, and independence.

Since coming to this House in 1979, and even as a provincial Member, I have worked increasingly on federal institutional reform. Senate reform has been one of my top priorities, as was patriation of the Canadian Constitution. In the last five years, I have issued many letters and reports, and I have taken several initiatives through private Member's Bills and resolutions in this assembly on Senate reform. I am convinced that we are now on the threshold of reform of this institution, mainly because the people demand it. Reform of the Senate should be a major plank in the election platform of each political Party in the next election. Those politicians and would-be politicians with an eye focused on the future will make it an issue.

I trust that the people will respond to their cries for Senate reform and that the next House of Commons will be filled with elected Members in all Parties demanding Senate reform. I think that Senate reform will come to pass during the four to five-year tenure of the next Parliament of Canada. It is interesting to recall that the Prime Minister in 1968, when he was seeking to become Leader of his Party, had Senate reform as one of his top planks in his platform. What are the views on Senate reform of today's would-be Prime Ministers who roam the country? Why do they not speak with conviction? Some have, but not all.

But let us approve second reading of Bill C-231 today and let us send it to committee for additional consideration.

Hon. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) on his continuing campaign to encourage parliamentary and public debate on Senate reform. Indeed, some of us will recall that just over a year ago, in April 1983, we discussed another Bill proposed by the Hon. Member for Edmonton East, Bill C-640. It dealt with structural reform of the Senate. It was a detailed and comprehensive proposal, and a number of Members recognized then, as they do now, that it was a good and thorough piece of work on the part of the hon. gentleman.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton East later appeared as a witness before the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform. He modified his proposal somewhat on that occasion, but I know his ideas and strong belief in Senate reform caught the attention of the members of that committee at that time.

Tenure of Senators

● (1720)

On April 4, 1984, the Hon. Member introduced Bill C-231 which is now before us. It proposes that all future Senate appointments be for a single nine-year term and that all existing appointments be subject to a nine-year term or retirement at age 75, whichever occurs first. The Bill's explanatory notes show that there is some similarity between the proposal before us today and one of the recommendations in the recent report of the special joint committee. I would suggest that in order to assess the merit of Bill C-231, we need to look first at the work of the special joint committee, for its work has influenced public debate on Senate reform and, arguably, accounts partially for the nature of the constitutional amendment which is now before us as proposed in this Bill.

The Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform was established by a motion of both Houses of Parliament in December 1982. The most important part of its mandate was the following:

To consider and report on ways by which the Senate of Canada could be reformed in order to strengthen its role in representing people from all regions of Canada and to enhance the authority of Parliament to speak and act on behalf of Canadians in all parts of the country.

The committee began to hold public meetings in Ottawa in May, 1983. By the end of June, it had already heard from a large number of academics, interested groups, Members of both Houses and others. During the committee's first round of hearings, the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) appeared as a witness and presented a discussion paper on Senate reform on behalf of the Government of Canada. That paper did not put forward a detailed government position on Senate reform. However, it contained a number of significant statements that revealed both the Government's interest in Senate reform and some of its general inclinations on the relevant options. I would like to refer to a couple of those statements this afternoon.

First, it seems clear that the Government saw the launching of the special joint committee as the beginning of a second phase of constitutional renewal. In its introduction, the Government's discussion paper referred to the three steps in constitutional reform that had been suggested in 1968 in Mr. Pearson's paper entitled "Federalism for the Future". The discussion paper stated that with the patriation of our Constitution and the adoption of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the first stage had been largely completed. The paper then went on to say:

The Government of Canada believes that it is now time to begin the second: to strengthen the national institutions of Government, beginning with the Senate of Canada, the chamber of Parliament in which Canadians were intended to be represented on the basis of regions, rather than strictly on the basis of population. In due course, we will then be able to take the third step on the path of renewal, for which the Royal Commission on the Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada is already preparing the ground.

I believe that those words in the introduction to the discussion paper on Senate reform are worthy of note. In my view they illustrate this Government's interest in the reform of our national institutions and its belief in the importance of Senate reform in particular.

It seems clear to me from reading the discussion paper that the Government hoped the committee would give particular attention to the Senate's role in regional representation. The paper defined the regional representation role of second Chambers in federal states as "the representation of the regions or the constituent political units on a basis other than representation by population". The Government's particular interest in improvements in the Senate's regional representation role was stated at another point in the paper, and I quote:

Although there are a variety of potential functions for the Senate, the Government of Canada believes that, if the second chamber of the Canadian Parliament is to help us respond to the challenges facing our country and make a contribution similar to second chambers in other federations, the role which needs the most attention at this time is the role of regional representation. Yet the strengthening of regional representation in the Senate should be undertaken, if at all, for the purpose of stengthening Parliament too, and enhancing its authority to act on behalf of Canadians in all parts of the country.

The Government's discussion paper also noted that substantial provincial agreement under the amending formula would be required before major reform of the other place could occur. The paper specifically stated that "before such changes can be made, the federal and the provincial governments will have to discuss Senate reform and reach a sufficient measure of agreement". However, parliamentary consideration was to precede intergovernmental discussions. In the words of the discussion paper, Parliament would first "consider its own reform and reach conclusions about the best means of strengthening its role as the primary focus of our political life as a nation".

I thought it might be helpful to remind Hon. Members of some of the views the Government of Canada submitted to the committee last June. I think they give us an idea of the Government's reasons for encouraging parliamentary and public debate on Senate reform during the past year.

The special joint committee resumed its work in September, and between then and the end of October it visited all provincial and territorial capitals. It heard witnesses and held meetings with members of six provincial Governments. Although it had invited all provincial Governments to speak to the committee, the other four chose not to do so. Nevertheless, the committee should be congratulated on its decision to consult closely with provincial Governments. Those Governments will have a major influence on the course of Senate reform. It is in the public interest that their views be part of that process at this stage.

The committee deliberated during the last two months of 1983, and on January 31, 1984 it tabled its report. I would add a comment on the support behind that report. Committee members of the two major Parties and both this and the other House endorsed it. It thus bears the stamp of a bipartisan, bicameral consensus within that committee. That is a significant achievement, especially when one considers that the report proposes a bold, clear-cut plan for Senate reform. That bold plan is centered on the committee's most important conclusion, which is found on page 1 of its report to Parliament, and I quote:

An appointed Senate no longer meets the needs of the Canadian federation. An elected Senate is the only kind of Senate that can adequately fill what we think should be its principal role—the role of regional representation.

The committee stated in its report that it did not reach that conclusion lightly or easily. It obviously had an ample body of evidence and research before it, and it drew on the background and political experience of its own members. The committee also looked at the Senate's historical origins and the role it was meant to play within the federation, as is plain in the report's statement that "only an elected Senate can satisfy the original intent of the Fathers of Confederation".

Apart from its being elected, what are the characteristics of the reformed Senate proposed in the report? First, the report suggests the Senate should have significant powers, "but it should not be able to undermine Canada's well-tried system of responsible government". With that in mind, the report proposes that the reformed Senate have a suspensive veto of a maximum of 120 sitting days over ordinary legislation. On legislation of linguistic significance, the report recommends that the Senate would have an absolute veto, and its own approval of such legislation would have to be by a double majority.

The committee proposed that the number of Senate seats be increased to 144 from the present 104. Ontario and Quebec would retain their present 24 seats each, but all other provinces would have their number increased to 12, except Prince Edward Island, which would receive two additional seats for a total of six. The Northwest Territories and the Yukon would be allotted four and two seats, respectively. The committee thus did not opt for equal provincial representation in the reformed Senate, even thought the proposed distribution, in the words of the report, would provide for "substantial over-representation of the less populous provinces and territories".

The report recommended that Senators be elected in single-member districts according to the first-past-the-post system values for the House of Commons. Although the committee considered proportional representation, and many of the witnesses who advocated an elected Senate also favoured some form of that method of election, the committee concluded that the same electoral system should be used for the reformed Senate as for this House. In proposing that the method of election used for the House of Commons be adopted for an elected Senate, the committee did not explain how this would significantly improve the Senate's role in regional representation.

The report recommended that Senators be elected for a nine-year term, which would not be renewable. One-third of the Senate would face election every three years, and those elections would be held on fixed dates so as not to coincide necessarily with elections to the House of Commons.

The proposed term has received a good deal of comment so far. It might be helpful to recall the committee's rationale for it. The committee in its report said:

Tenure of Senators

If Senators are not able to seek re-election they will have more independence of Party influence and greater freedom to speak out as regional representatives, they will be less likely to get involved in the kind of constituency duties that would duplicate those of Members of the House of Commons, and they would be able to devote most of their energies to sitting of the Senate and its committees.

It is worth considering whether such a long, single term would allow Senators truly to be effective regional representatives.

There are other recommendations in the report, some of which are meant to be acted on in the short term. Nevertheless, the committee did not produce an overly detailed set of proposals. Public comment so far has noted the clarity of the report and the straightforward manner in which its conclusions are presented. I think I can speak for other Hon. Members when I say that we owe a great debt to the committee for bringing forward such a broad analysis of the problem and a clearly presented proposal for a reform of the Senate.

Under our rules, the special joint committee requested a response from the Government. That response was tabled in both Houses of Parliament on April 10. I do not know whether Hon. Members have read it, so I would like to take some time this afternoon to review the key points in it. First, the Government, through a letter from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the co-chairmen, has given its general response to the committee in the following words:

The Government of Canada believes the committee report contains a useful set of proposals on which a fruitful public debate might be based. I am therefore pleased to inform you that the Government intends to use the report as a whole as its working document on Senate reform for future consultations with provincial governments, interested groups and individual Canadians.

The response goes on to refer to the report's recommendation that the reformed Senate's primary role should be regional representation. The Government states that it accepts the committee's assessment of the problem and its recommendation that the primary role of the Senate should be in the area of regional representation.

Within the response, the Government states its specific acceptance of some of the committee's other recommendations. For example, the Government concurs with the Committee's view that in addition to the primary function of regional representation, the Senate should continue to make the two complementary functions of investigation and the improvement of legislation. The Government has not yet accepted the report's specific proposal for the distribution of seats, but in the response it agrees with the committee's suggestion that any revised seat distribution should substantially increase the proportion of seats allotted to western Canada.

It seems clear from reading the Government's response that it sees the committee's report as a very useful analysis and proposal for Senate reform. The Government has announced its intention to use the report as its working document on Senate reform. Moreover, the Government has said it will include provincial governments in its consultations and that it will use the report as the point of departure for those discussions. In my view, the Government is on the right track. Substantial provincial agreement will be required if any significant change in the other place is to come about. It is wise, I think, to begin to involve provincial governments in planning the way for that reform.

With that bit of background on the Government's discussion paper, the recommendations of the special joint committee and the Government's response to those recommendations, I will return to Bill C-231. It seems to me that the Hon. Member's proposal is inspired by a recommendation in chapter 7 of the committee's report. That chapter is entitled "Reforms that should be made now", and in it the committee proposed that all future Senate appointments should be made for a nine-year non-renewable term.

The Hon. Member's Bill points out, quite correctly, that if that recommendation were implemented, three "classes" of Senators would result: those appointed for nine years, those who would retain their seats until age 75, and those others, not very numerous, who would keep their seats for life. Therefore, he has proposed in Bill C-231 that those now holding Senate seats should be obliged to give them up after they have served nine years or reached the age of 75, whichever occurs first, and that all new appointments be made for nine years.

I think the Bill before us is a useful contribution to the ongoing debate on Senate reform. However, I do not think that, on its own, its acceptance will bring about the degree of change the joint committee had in mind and which many Canadians expect. I do not think we should take one small part of the committee's report, separate it from its context and act on it at this time. The Government has stated its intention to pursue the issue actively, particularly with provincial Governments. When we have a better idea of the general reaction to the committee's proposals as a whole, we might be better equipped to decide whether action on all or on any part of it should be undertaken.

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I join with the Hon. Member who just spoke in extending my sincere thanks to our colleague from Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) on bringing the matter before the House for debate. As he likely knows, I was a member of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform since its inception until its report. I hasten to point out that I do not pretend to speak on behalf of that committee, nor do I speak necessarily on behalf of my Party, I speak, rather, as an interested Member of Parliament during Private Members' hour.

As I said, I compliment the Hon. Member for Edmonton East. I deplore the fact that more initiative in terms of this type of debate has not been taken in the Senate. If the Hon. Member has been following the proceedings of that Chamber, he will know that little of substance has been said, not just with respect to the committee's report but to the broader subject of reform which the Senators are quite capable of initiating in any number of matters. Frankly, to their discredit, they have not sought that initiative. That is not to cast aspersions broadly, because I believe there are a good number in the other place who are generally concerned with the status quo and generally interested in seeing some reforms initiated.

I believe that the Hon. Member for Edmonton East quoted the exact sentence from the report. An appointment for a nine-year term was recommended almost as a last resort. I believe that that is what our general thinking was at the time. The Hon. Member has put that in a much different context. I believe I heard him say a few moments ago that if a nine-year term for an elected Senate is important, it is even more important for an appointed Senate. I might get into a debate with him on that point. I do not think I will, but it seems to me that the thinking of the committee was not necessarily along the same lines as his in terms of those priorities for the nine-year term.

I would like to deal with the explanatory note. I hope that I am not doing the sponsor of the Bill an injustice. He indicated that his Bill may have an advantage over the committee's report in that the committee's report could result in more than one class of Senator. That is absolutely true. He says that his Bill will eliminate that possibility. Something about that, however, does cause me grave concern. I am not sure that it is a good analogy, but the Hon. Member will recall the Government's six and five program. At that time, a number of us thought that that program was in part a moral breach of contract if not a legal breach of contract. Its effect on some of those in the Public Service troubled me deeply.

I do not know why I should be the spokesman or defender for those in the other place who are well able to speak for themselves, but it would trouble me somewhat to think that a person who had been appointed either for life or until age 75, despite having been given that rather enviable appointment, now finds that the rules have been changed. I would be less than frank if I did not say to my colleague that that causes me some concern. I am not so concerned that it would cause me to ract totally negatively to this Bill, but it would be something that I would want to think about and explore very deeply in committee before saying amen to that particular proposal.

I absolutely agree with the sponsor of the Bill when he says that, because of economic priorities, little or no attention has been paid to this issue either by leadership candidates, leaders of Parties, or the public in general. I think his timing is dreadful. I thought that the timing of the special joint committee was dreadful, coming as it did in the penultimate year of a Parliament when our Party had just chosen a new Leader and an election was being expected, and now that we have a leadership contest in the Government Party. Despite all that, what is really wrong with the timing is the natural preoccupation of the electorate with economic matters. I would think that we would really be living in a fool's paradise were we to say to ourselves that a leadership candidate or the leader of a Party could make this a burning issue across the country in a general election.

Frankly, I did agree with the Hon. Member for Edmonton East when he said that the leadership candidates and leaders of Parties should be put on the spot. They should be asked how they feel about Senate reform. There is nothing wrong with that, but to think that this issue will be a major vehicle with which to persuade or dissuade the electorate would, I think, be pretty naive.

As the Hon. Member has said, there is no question that those who are thinking about Senate reform want accountability. As well, they overwhelmingly reject patronage. I believe they were simply saying to the committee that if we could not as a committee, a Government and a part of a constitutional process effect significant Senate reform, then we might as well abolish it. I think that was the difference between what the committee heard as evidence and what was contained in the seven, eight or nine reports. I myself was a member of the committee which dealt with Bill C-60.

Attitudes have hardened and I believe that that is the difference between this report and previous reports. I think many of the institutions of Government have fallen into some disrepute. I think there is a cynicism and suspicion that exists, and that is natural for a population suffering economic pressures. This cynicism and suspicion has resulted in a hardening of attitudes, and there are very few people other than several here in Ottawa who would be great defenders of the present Senate system.

I would like to deal with my concern about, to use the Hon. Member's words, "provincial involvement in the Senate process". We must be extremely careful at least to attempt to differentiate between the involvement of people who live in a province and the involvement of provincial Governments in the Senate process. Those two things are dramatically different. It is simply too trite to say that because a provincial Government has been elected, it should be directly involved in the Senate appointment process. I have always had grave difficulty with provincial appointments. Again, I do not wish to be too cynical, but let us be realistic. Say that I am a premier of a certain province and I have a Cabinet Minister who has outlived his usefulness, is causing me trouble or is a threat to my leadership, and I have the power of appointment.

Mr. Bloomfield: Put him in the Senate.

Mr. Jarvis: As my friend, the Hon. Member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield), just said, I would solve the problem by putting him in the Senate. I would do the same thing to my fund raiser who had made too many calls to the same well.

I believe it goes deeper than that, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe that a provincial Government which has successfully sought from its electorate a mandate on a certain set of issues has ipso facto or automatically a mandate to involve itself directly in the appointment of a person to a federal institution. Unless senate appointments were part of the campaign issues of that Government, its electorate has given it a mandate to act within the boundaries of that particular province.

I believe that I as a member of the committee and all members of the committee diligently sought an alternate and more acceptable form of an appointed Senate. It was not to be found. I can say to the Hon. Member for Edmonton East, that with respect to regional representation, it was made clear to us by witness after witness that in the minds of Canadians a region is now a province. It is not the western region or the Atlantic region or the maritime region. A region is a province. I think we should forget all about lumping Manitoba and Saskatchewan together or lumping two or four of the Atlantic provinces together. We should forget that because it is not going to work.

I am absolutely convinced that when people now talk in terms of regions, they talk in terms of provinces. That is why, instead of proportional representation or election at large within a province to the Senate, we recommended a senatorial district or whatever it might be called. Those of us from Ontario, and I am sure those from other provinces, know that there are extraordinary differences in the interests, ambitions, prejudices, fears, hopes and aspirations of those who live in rural southwestern Ontario and those who live in metropolitan Toronto. Even more dramatically, those who live in northern Ontario from North Bay up to James Bay have different interests. I am sure the same is true in every province. Therefore, we said to ourselves that if we need greater regional representation in the Senate, then we cannot do so by election at large or by using a list of eligible candidates from our particular Party from the Province of Ontario. If we have as our pillar the principle of greater regional representation, then we must carve the regions into districts.

Frankly, I would be one of the first to support having this Bill go to committee if I were convinced that it would act as an effective lever to get the provincial premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the bargaining table. If that is all that it accomplished, it would be worthwhile. There is no question about that. We in the committee had serious doubts about using that kind of lever. We are very anxious for the next First Ministers' Conference to see if anyone will take the intiative to put it on the table. We have some hope that the premiers, who have their annual conference I believe in August of each year—just the provincial premiers, no federal Government involvement—will put it on the agenda for the next conference.

• (1750)

With respect to the Hon. Member's remarks that no reform had occurred because the package was too large to swallow, he may be right. There is no question about the present report; it is a package. It is a package and it is inextricably interrelated—an elected nine-year term senatorial district. It is very har to carve out the pieces, pull out the district and put in proportional representation. One will find that argument very flawed if one accepts the regional representation argument. It is very, very flawed. That concerned me deeply with respect to the reply of the Prime Minister. I do not think that the Government has thought through those three principles and how they were interrelated. I appreciated receiving the reply of the Prime Minister well before the time required for that reply.

I certainly hope that the subject matter raised today by the Hon. Member for Edmonton East will be the subject matter for further debate and, particularly, I hope that it is a matter for further debate in the other place where, so far, that debate has been saddly lacking.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain).

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) on the work that he has done on this subject matter and the literal thesis which he wrote about it. Whether I agree with him or not is another question.

Unfortunately for us, we have lost sight of the purpose of the Senate. The Senators themselves have lost sight of the very basic philosophical and political logic on which the bicameral system was instituted in Canada at the beginning. The initial understanding of Canada was that it was, in fact, made up of regions; that these regions had differences of needs and opinions, and that the best way to have these represented was by a Senate with a regional representation rather than to have representation by population. This, of course, has been the principle on which the Senate of the United States was formed. State by State there are two Senators. There is a regional impact in that Senate at any point in time they wish to exercise it. It is perhaps more noticeable in the farm belts of the United States than it is in any other region. The Senate, by virtue of its two Senators per State, has been able to exercise the interest of the region which it represents in a fashion which is in the best interest of the nation as a whole. There has been very little criticism of the failure of the Senate to be there by representation by population.

Again I am very sincere when I refer to the very hard work the Hon. Member for Edmonton East has done. Of course the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) and others who sat on the committee did an equally diligent job of considering the subject matter. What we have not considered in any of the remarks today is the fact that the Government of Canada, since I have been here, has chosen to issue ultimatums to the Senate, and the Senate has chosen suppliantly to give them exactly what they ask for in the ultimatums. For instance, budgets have gone from this House to the Senate and back in the same afternoon. That means that the Senate has absented itself from its—

Mr. Evans: Matters of supply do not go to the Senate.

Mr. McCain: Supply and other items of a comparable nature do go, but they cannot change supply, I agree. Let us take Canagrex. Canagrex was a Bill in which there were regional inputs, with regional differences of attitude toward that particular Bill. That Bill went there about noon and was back not later than the next morning. In that case, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that those regional Senators did in fact divest themselves from the responsibilities of their office as appointed and as it was intended that they should function.

I submit that another primary example is the lassitude which Maritime or Atlantic Senators have shown toward to the reduction in federal allocations of money for cost-shared programs, which has put the Atlantic provinces in a very, very serious financial position. Yet, there has been no debate that I am aware of with Atlantic Senators speaking up on behalf of the Atlantic provinces. In round figures—and I cannot get an exact figure; I perhaps could get one from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde)—the Minister of Finance has stated that in a five-year period we will have some $6 billion. With respect to the Bill on health care, which will pass, that Bill and that attitude, coupled with the reduction in the percentage of cost-sharing which the federal Government has exercised recently, will put Atlantic Canada $1 billion short of its needs to render service on the same level as in the rest of Canada. This is an opportunity for the Senators of Atlantic Canada to speak up and to exercise their input.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that an elected Senator is not the answer. It might be the answer if elections were simultaneous, because in that case the body of the Senate would in fact correspond with, in most instances, the Government that might be elected at a particular moment in time. But if perhaps a senatorial election should happen some 18 months after a change in Party of the federal Government, there is no doubt that with any backlash against an 18-month old government in this nation—18 months after its mandate was granted by the vote of the people—the Government would find itself in conflict with that Senate which was elected 18 months thereafter.

I do not see it as a solution. I see it as an amplification of the problems which we already have in respect to the purpose of the Senate, namely, to give second tought to all legislation as well as to give regional representation which is so badly needed. I come from that region and understand that need.

I would have to say to you that I agree with the Hon. Member for Perth when he said that each Member should have his own constituency as far as an elected Senate is concerned. I also agree with the Hon. Member for Perth when he suggested that it is very difficult for provincial Governments to make appointments. I give the instance of the last siege of federal Government, which has gone on since 1963. If the provinces of Atlantic Canada, which are all Conservative, were to appoint Senators, I submit to you that the same problem would exist in the Senate, if they exercised their regional influence as they should, as would, in my opinion, result from elections of the House of Commons and Senate which were not simultaneous.

I submit to you that the Senate is in disrepute because it has neglected its regional responsibilities and, secondly, because the Government has issued ultimatums to it, to which it has unfortunately submitted itself and thus brought upon itself the great bulk of the criticism which has been levelled at it of late. It blame the Prime Minister of this day and the Senate itself for its capitulations to ultimatums one after the other which have been issued to it by this Government. Properly appointed and with their responsibilities exercised as it was perceived they should be exercised, the appointed Senators can accumulate skills which I do not believe can be accumulated by the election process. I do not believe it can be accomplished.

If a government were conscientious in the selection of skills in its appointments to the Senate, it would be a much stronger Senate. If it is to be the home of bagmen and people in need who have supported a particular Party, then of course it will not function very well. I can think of a multitude of Senators who have outstanding ability and who have done outstanding work. Perhaps one of the best examples is the work which the Senate committee on Agriculture did some 15 years ago. In its study of that national problem, it produced a work which was very complimentary to the Senate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair regrets to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but the time provided for the consideration of Private Members' business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CROWN CORPORATIONS—NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY LIMITED—DATE OF DECISION TO SELL. (B) DISPOSAL OF ATHABASCA ASSETS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, on April 9 I posed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) regarding Northern Transportation Company Limited. I requested information concerning the date the decision was made to privatize NTCL. It becomes clear, when one reviews the activities of NTCL and its abandonment of the Athabasca run from Fort McMurray to Uranium City, Fort Chipewyan and places in between, that management knew full well, probably two years ago, that they were going to privatize this Crown corporation. The line from Fort McMurray north on the Athabasca River was a profitable line. The volume of shipping was starting to drop because of the closedown of the mine in Uranium City and the subsequent drop in tonnage from that mine.

If one reviews the history of Fort McMurray when the land was purchased to accommodate the yards and dockage facilities for NTCL, one can see that a great deal of capital gain has been made in transportation with NTCL in that area. NTCL did not announce they were closing down the line, Mr. Speaker, they simply failed to apply for their license to be renewed. They did not hold public hearings to allow the people in the communities to participate. The transportation authority went up there, announced they were taking applications for the rights to handle the run, and NTCL failed to submit an application. In so doing, it circumvented any public inquiries or public input as to whether they should or should not close down.

It became clear when we examined some of the issues in committee that NTCL did not lose money on the run north from Fort McMurray to Fort Chipewyan and Uranium City. Indeed, they charged back some of the capital expenditures made on the Athabasca run and then transferred tugs and barges, charged to the Fort McMurray run, over to the eastern Arctic. This all looks very suspicious, Mr. Speaker, as if the directors were attempting to run the operation down to a point where it could be easily purchased when it was privatized. When you look at the annual report of the corporation you see that it shows assets at book value, somewhere around $40 million, when in fact NTCL records indicate the value of this Crown corporation exceeds probably $200 million. One begins to have suspicions when a group of people made up of directors and managers of the existing Crown corporation join with two other groups to form a consortium so they can make an offer for this company.

I asked the Minister if he would make the commitment in this House that the right of first refusal for the purchase of the land located in downtown Fort McMurray would go to the City of Fort McMurray. Mr. Speaker, that land was bought 30 years ago when land values were absolutely nil in the community. It is now a prime piece of real estate in the community. The City of Fort McMurray wants very badly to become owner of this property in order to develop it for the betterment of the community of Fort McMurray. I have yet to receive a reply to this request.

If I could refresh your memory, Mr. Speaker, the Minister said:

> I will take the Hon. Member's representation and examine it. I would point out that we took a position on the Fort McMurray alternative almost a year ago. There is a private development taking place in that area under agreements with other federal Departments. In terms of a specific request, I will refer to the proper authorities and get an answer for the Hon. Member.

I would assume that the private developments which the Minister is referring to are the developments which are taking place in the oil sands. Clearly, if developments are going to take place in the oil sands and the mining operations, it is not going to require the type of property which exists in a high density and high commercial area in the City of Fort McMurray.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to answer the question raised by the Hon. Member with respect to the sale of Northern Transportation Company Limited, although I should add that the Minister has spoken to this subject several times within the last few weeks.

The Hon. Member suggested there was a connection between the Government's decision to privatize Northern Transportation Company Limited and the allocation of costs on the Athabasca run. I can give the House the assurance that there is no connection between the two.

Some time ago, the corporation's management informed us that losses incurred on the Athabasca run were too high. We received this information quite some time before the thorough study made by the Government with respect to privatization of this corporation.

In any case, as the Hon. Member is aware, allocation of expenditures to the components of a corporation is not an arbitrary exercise. On the contrary, it is governed by the principles of accounting practice. We are convinced that Northern Transportation Company Limited was acting in accordance with generally recognized accounting principles when it determined the cost of the Athabasca run.

The Hon. Member has argued that facilities no longer required for the Athabasca run should be sold. As far as tugs and barges are concerned, I can assure the House that this equipment will be used in a manner that is appropriate. Northern Transportation Company Limited is negotiating a contract under which a number of tugs and barges will be leased to other businesses providing a service on the Athabasca. The rest of the equipment will be transferred away from the Athabasca system, and no surplus equipment will be kept.

Sale of the tugs and barges has become rather complex owing to the privatization of this corporation. We believe it would be preferable to leave such decisions up to the corporation's new owner.

As for the land owned by Northern Transportation Company Limited at Fort McMurray, it will be sold in the same manner as the corporation's other assets. At the present time, the Government, as shareholder, wishes to sell Northern Transportation Company Limited intact, rather than selling each of its components separately. However, perhaps the Government might consider the sale, at market value, of several assets not required by Northern Transportation Company Limited for its operations, depending on the effect that would have on privatization of the corporation as a whole.

In this connection, the town of Fort McMurray would be free to make an offer to Northern Transportation Company Limited for the land located within the town limits, and such an offer would certainly be taken into consideration, at the same time as offers to purchase the entire corporation.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—REQUEST THAT SUBSIDIARY OPERATIONS BE PRIVATIZED. (B) GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, last April 17 I raised with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) the question of certain subsidiary operations by Canadian National Railways in competition with the private market. Those operations are CN trucking operations that are in competition with private trucking operations across the country, the hotel and restaurant operations that are in competition with small businessmen across Canada who are hotel and motel owners. In those kinds of operations a small private businessman makes a profit and pays taxes; that is not the case with the conglomerate run by the CNR. Frankly, the hotel operations by the government through the railway has been a disaster for well over a decade and a half.

• (1810)

The railways originally got into the hotel business to actively promote passenger transportation by rail. We know that for some time now the whole matter of transportation of passengers by rail has been delegated to VIA Rail, and that the railways are no longer involved. It would seem that the railways would try to get out of the hotel operation and let private hotel, motel and restaurant operators run this business. Surely there is no public necessity for the Government of Canada in terms of transportation and maintenance to in fact own hotels.

However, on reading the annual report of this Crown corporation it seems that it wants to expand its hotel operation. For example, it is building a 600-room hotel in Toronto, next to its tower. We know that the tower only cost approximately $60 million, plus the cost of the land it is on. It has not made a nickel since it was built; it is a loser. Now a hotel is to be built next door to the tower. Toronto has lots of hotels, and private entrepreneurs who build good hotels. It is ridiculous that the Government of Canada under the auspices of this railway should build a hotel.

It will also spend the taxpayers' dollars to refurbish the MacDonald Hotel in Edmonton. This might be acceptable if it were making a profit. However, in respect of the hotels owned by the railway in this country there is $124.5 million on a depreciated basis. That means, taking capital cost allowances into account, this year this operation lost $2.7 million. It lost also money last year and the year before. While it made a very slight profit the year before that, every year prior to that it lost money.

In this situation more and more money is being poured into hotel operations every year than is allowed in capital cost allowances or depreciation. The Government of Canada, through the railway, gets more deeply involved in an activity from which it has proven it cannot make money. It should not be involved.

I ask the Minister why he simply does not turn the hotels and restaurants over to people who know how to run them? The Government should sell them and get out of the business. I am suggesting that it should not only get out of the hotel business but the trucking business as well.

Let me name some of the companies involved in the railways' trucking business. One is CNM Incorporated. I am not sure if these are trucking companies but they include Domestic Four Leasing, Domestic Three Leasing and Domestic Two Leasing. There is the Royal Transportation Company, Transport Husband (Quebec) Incorporated and Transport Route Canada Incorporated. There is Empire Freightways, and the list goes on. This is not a complete list. It loses money in trucking. There is some $30.4 million involved in trucking. The loss last year was $8 million. The whole investment is doubled in losses every three and one-half years. There is no justification for that.

Let me deal with the express service. At one time it was necessary for the railway to be involved in moving express. The total investment by the railway in express service at the present time is $23.8 million. Last year it lost $25.4 million. The railway would have been better off to turn the key in the lock and not operate a single express facility. It would not have lost $25 million. If it had written off the whole $23.8 million in assets, it would have saved $2 million on the balance sheet.

• (1815)

That is the kind of thing that is happening with Crown corporations, not only with the Canadian National Railways, but everywhere. Subsidiaries of Crown corporations and Crown corporations themselves are pretending to do a job in the public interest, pretending to do a service that must be done. But invariably when that service is performed by a Crown corporation in competition with private entrepreneurs a loss is incurred. Let us consider this area of express. The bus companies deliver express packages, the airlines deliver express packages, Purolator delivers express packages and Courier delivers express packages. Everybody is in the express business, and a loss is incurred. We have the Government of Canada through CNR in the express business showing a loss of $25.4 million. This is disgraceful and it must end. The assets should be sold to those who can handle those assets and make a profit and pay tax. That is the way business ought to operate. Things ought to be done properly, reasonably and effectively.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, from the very outset the railways in Canada have had to undertake many peripheral activities to ensure efficient operation of the railroads as such. They had to provide their own telephone lines and they also had to provide the infrasctructure for traveller accommodation. In addition to these peripheral activities, the railways were also granted non-monetary privileges. The latter included title not only to land but also to minerals and oil.

With the passage of time, the needs of the railways and the value of their assets have changed. Canadian National Railways had to decide whether it would sell its assets and made a financial profit immediately or optain a maximum profit on a long-term basis. The Government, as shareholder, will have to decide whether CN's activities with respect to non-rail assets are appropriate. The question of privatizing the corporation has been the subject of several studies. With the exception of CN Rail, CN's assets are managed by CN Enterprises. This division has been given the mission to manage and control assets so as to ensure maximum returns on a long-term basis and also to develop new projects that would complement and enhance current CN projects. In 1983, CN Enterprises made a profit of $65 million, specifically in communications systems, marine services, real estate and oil. These profits have enabled the corporation to increase borrowing by $100 million without changing its debt/asset ratio. This means that CN has been able to finance other projects such as expanding railroads in western Canada.

Like other hotel chains, the Hotels Division and the CN Tower have suffered from the recent recession. In 1983, the Division incurred a loss of $2.7 million. In 1982, it incurred a loss of $0.7 million. In 1981, it made a profit of $0.9 million, and in 1980, a profit of $2 million. In 1984, the corporation expects the market to expand and its income to increase. Over the next five years, the corporation intends to integrate all its hotels in a unique and distinguished chain of first class hotels. The Government is confident this project will be a success.

RAILWAYS—LEVEL OF INVESTMENT BY RAILROADS. (B) SIZE OF INVESTMENT TO MOVE GRAIN

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in the adjournment debate regarding a question I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on April 16, 1984.

It is very interesting to follow my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who spoke on the Canadian National ownership of hotels, trucking lines, parcel services, restaurants and towers in downtown Toronto. The CNR, which is supposedly in dire straits financially, has to charge the farmers who produce the grain for a hungry world more to move that grain. Yet it continues to operate in areas where it could very well be displaced by enterprising individuals who wish to make an investment and obtain a return. The investments the CNR has made in hotels and the trucking industry, as my colleague pointed out, have not brought a return to the taxpayers of Canada.

• (1820)

On April 16, following a question by the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) to the Minister of Finance, the Minister stated that over $1 billion from the Government of Canada was being put into the farming industry in western Canada. I would like to quote briefly from Hansard for April 16, as reported at page 3080, wherein the Minister stated:

> The Hon. Member's Party opposed the improvement which we put forward in the Crow legislation, but the Hon. Member should realize that with that legislation goes substantial support to the farming sector and to the grain community.

Anyone who has ever sat on a tractor for more than 37 seconds, or grown any more than a half bushel of grain would understand that that is a complete fallacy. The people in western Canada will give action to that knowledge by way of the ballot box when they have a chance.

Let us determine, by using Westack figures, who uses the railroads and who benefits from the investment. In 1982 coal took up 45.5 per cent of available space on the railroads in western Canada. In 1990 coal will take up 60.5 per cent of the available space on railroads in western Canada. In 1982 potash took up 7.5 per cent of available space and by 1990 it will take up 7.9 per cent of that space. The percentages for lumber and petrochemicals will increase. But grain, which took up 32.5 per cent of available traffic space on railroads in western Canada in 1982, will decline by 1990 to 23.7 per cent. That is the only commodity which will decline between now and 1990 in movement in western Canada over the rails. Yet the Government said that it had to charge producers of grain more to move their product because they would use the rails and displace all other available traffic. However, we find that by 1990 grain will use the rails less than any other available product.

The Minister said that there would be huge investments in western Canada. Now the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) is saying that $1.1 billion will be invested this year in railroads in Canada. That is true, when we take into consideration all of Canada, but the figures of the railroads for capital investment in 1984 indicate that CNR will invest, in western rail related investment, $281 million and that CPR will invest $345 million, for a total of $646 million.

However, what are these railroads getting from the Government of Canada this year? They will be getting $652 million from the people of Canada. This is the great investment which was to come about in the western transportation system with the passage of Bill C-155! The railroads are not even investing in western Canada the total amount the people of Canada are giving them. These are exact figures for the two major railway companies in Canada.

Also we find that the original proposed investment of $16.5 billion has now been cut to $12.5 billion. The Department and the Minister say that that is because things have changed. If they have changed that drastically; if the proposed investment has been reduced by 25 per cent from the supposed commitment of the railroads to the people of western Canada, perhaps the tariff proposed in Bill C-155 should also be reduced by 25 per cent. In terms of the investments which will take place, the drop of some $4 billion in those investments, roughly $2 billion is due to changes in plans by CN, $1 billion is due to changes in plans by CP and $1 billion is due to inflation.

Canadian National Railways, which is committed to double-tracking in the next five years, has said that it will not do it in five years, but will push it to seven years. Maybe in two years' time it will be pushed along another seven years. It will be deferred. It is like the deferred maintenance that used to be done on the tracks in western Canada. They got paid for deferred maintenance but never did the maintenance. It was never done.

This year Canadian Pacific will only invest $95 million more than it invested in 1983. In 1983 it spent $355 million on rail capital programs and in 1984 it estimates it will be spending $450 million. When we look at the share the farmers will have to pay, and the cap put on in Bill C-155, we see that the producers will pay 5 per cent more because of additional volume. The Government will benefit. It will pay 7 per cent less because of the blended rate. We are very concerned about that because we remember the promises in the 1980 election about a blended gasoline price. Now it is higher than the world rate. That is what we will have in western Canada with this blended freight rate in Bill C-155.

I look forward to hearing an explanation from the Parliamentary Secretary as to the rationale for the lack of investment and the need to charge producers of food and grain more so that railway companies can invest less in western Canada.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the question put by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) to the Minister of Finance on April 16 of this year, the Hon. Member asked why the Minister of Transport rationalised that investment by the railroads would be down some $4 billion from what was in Bill C-155, because substantial financial support of $1 billion was being made available by the Government to the grain producing industry.

There is still a certain amount of confusion with respect to these two amounts. First of all, the $4 billion represents a reduction in the expenditures forecast by both Railways for the period 1982 to 1991. At the beginning of 1982, on the basis of the economic situation and traffic predictions, it was estimated that railway expenditures during the decade in question might go as high as $16.5 billion. Since that time, however, inflation rates have dropped substantially, and predictions with respect to growth in railway traffic have become less optimistic. Forecasts by the Advisory Council on Western Transportation for shipments of grain, coal, sulphur and potash to this part of Canada, for the period from 1981 to 1990, dropped by about 13 per cent between October 1981 and August 1983. As a result, predictions have been revised to allow for the present economic situation, which also means that new coal cars will be introduced at a slower rate.

Furthermore, regarding the amount of $1 billion mentioned by the Hon. Member, I would point out that this represents the Government's total expected annual expenditures for grain transportation. The Western Grain Transportation Act does not in any way oblige the government or the railways to make specific investments. It does require the railways to invest sufficient funds to make the system viable and efficient and adapt it to changing needs with respect to the movement of grain. However, it obliges the Government to pay the Crow subsidy after 1986, that is, $658.6 million per year, plus part of the annual increase in the costs of the railway companies, this to help pay the expenses incurred by producers as a result of the grain transportation rate.

We estimate that this year, the Government will pay a total of $580 million. Furthermore, during the current financial year, the Government will spend the following amounts on grain transportation: $84.3 million for the purchase of hopper cars; $20.6 million to lease hopper cars—

Adjournment Debate

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, April 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, when I left off speaking yesterday I was stating that the Government does not really care to consult Canadians on how their dollars are spent. The Liberal economic record is something that any intelligent leadership contender would want to distance himself from. Unfortunately, all of them are somewhat tarred with that brush. The new would-be leaders will not even stage an honest to goodness debate with each other as we did in our leadership race. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because they are afraid to say something that might give Canadians some type of policy, something to look forward to. All you have to do, Sir, is pick up The Toronto Sun for this morning and take a look at Donato's cartoon. That cartoon says it all very clearly.

I suppose the only positive thing to have come out of the past 16 years is the clear lesson that Canadians have learned, namely that socialism does not work. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has provided proof of that. The phalanx of Crown corporations is central to the attempt to create a socialist state in Canada, and of that there is little doubt.

The Government, through its army of state-owned enterprises, has a hand in everything. It is active in all forms of transportation, in telecommunications, in energy, in exploration, in computers and aircraft and in the nuclear, fishing, and agricultural industries. Most of them are identical. We have "Cana-this" and "Cana-that" to the point where we "Cana-do" anything right economically and we have lost what once was a proud economic record. It would be quicker and easier, Mr. Speaker, to list all the things into which the Government has not put its hand.

Today's Crown corporations represent the most massive intervention by Government in the private sector that we have ever seen in Canada. This network of state-owned agencies outside the control of Parliament—and I say in all seriousness outside the control of Parliament—has almost as many employees and almost as large a budget as the regular Public Service. It is disgraceful.

This parallel government has been used to carry out the centralizing policies of the Prime Minister. I thank God for his dénouement from the political stage. Through the CIDC, CDC, the NEP and FIRA, power has become increasingly centralized in Ottawa, and specifically in the Prime Minister's office. These corporations have siphoned off investment and jobs from the private sector. They have intervened massively in the ecomony and they have used taxpayers' money to compete with the free enterprise businesses of this great nation. The result has been the loss of foreign investment and the concomitant loss of jobs, pushing up an already high unemployment rate. These policies have bankrupted small businesses across the country, and this is in spite of the established fact that small business is the only sector that is generating new jobs today. Statistically in the last two years only the private sector has created new jobs.

The Government has invaded the free marketplace with a vengeance and with our tax dollars. When governments use our money to interfere with our livelihoods, then something has gone awfully wrong and it certainly has in Canada.

William Simon in his book entitled A Time for Truth repeatedly warns that if you lose your economic freedom, then you lose your individual freedom. Personally I do not want to see that happen in this great country of ours. When governments waste our money in this way without accounting to us for the way it is spent, then that is doubly wrong. And that is exactly what has happened through the creation of these Crown corporations, Mr. Speaker.

In response to the Opposition's repeated demands for corrective action, what does the Government do? It brings in a Bill that will only make the situation worse. If this legislation were to pass in its present form, and we intend on this side to see that is does not, accountability would be curtailed even further and Cabinet control of a significant amount of taxpayers' money would actually increase.

Exactly what is the magnitude of the problem we are considering here, Mr. Speaker? As I have already pointed out, we do not know for sure how many Crown corporations there are. We do know that annually they account for more money than do the annual budgets of some countries, for example, Switzerland, Greece and Austria. The Auditor General was by no means exaggerating when he referred to Crown corporations as sub-governments. In the countries I have mentioned, the taxpayers have control over how their dollars are spent.

The problem is that in the case of our sub-governments we have no control.

Bill C-24 will do nothing to change this sorry state of affairs. It has not happened by accident. It has come about as a result of the deliberate socialistic policies of the Prime Minister; it has been financed by taxpayers at the gas pumps, in the hotels, motels and restaurants; by old age pensioners, farmers and fishermen; and by small business owners. All of this has been at the expense of over 1.5 million unemployed.

The Crown corporations may be "ours", but has it been worth it? A recent poll indicated that 41 per cent of Canadians believe our national oil companies should be sold, while 34 per cent do not. One Liberal leadership aspirant is already making mouthing sounds about selling off the stations of Petro-Canada. I do not think we will see that come to pass because it is contrary to the policies of these fellows.

Has it been worth the outrageous deficit, the staggering unemployment rate and the loss of investor confidence in the country? I think the answer is obvious. I would suggest, however, that it has been worth it for certain individuals. It has been worth it for Jack Horner of CN and Ivan Head of IDRC. It has been worth it for Bud Drury of the NCC and Donald Macdonald. It has been worth it for Pierre Juneau of the CBC, Jack Austin of the CDIC, Joel Bell and Bill Hopper of Petro-Canada, as well as another host of Liberal hacks. They are blatant public hacks. They are parasites of the worst kind, feeding on Canadian taxpayers and dragging down the country to a state of not a banana republic but surely of a snowball republic. I would say that it has been good for the Liberals. There have been nothing but job-creation programs.

The grave concerns expressed by the Auditor General with regard to the lack of accountability of Crown corporations are well known and totally documented. There is no need to repeat all of them, but I would like to quote from his 1982 report because it goes to the heart of the matter before us today:

> Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

That was the reason every one of us was sent here by our constituents. Unlike Hon. Members opposite, we over here will not quietly sit by while the authority of Parliament is eroded in this way.

How can we be expected to carry out our responsibilities when we will be shown under Bill C-24 only summaries of the corporate plans and operating and capital budgets, and only after the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) has had a chance to determine just how much of those will be shown to the public? Are we really expected to trust the Cabinet? Are we really expected to have confidence in legislation drafted by Ed Clark? Ed Clark gave us the disastrous National Energy Program, but what was his claim to fame? It was writing a thesis on the socialism of Tanzania. That is who is running the National Energy Program; that is the type of people we have in Crown corporations. Where is the control over Crown corporation subsidiaries? There is none. This is the area where the greatest proliferation and mismanagement have taken place.

Why are there severe restrictions on debate of legislation to set up new Crown corporations with only 30 committee days and seven hours of debate? That is closure by statute. The Government has run itself on closure and on Orders in Council ever since it came into power.

Can we imagine a Bill which purports to give Parliament more control over Crown corporations but comes equipped with built-in closure clauses? That is legislated closure before the fact. Bill C-24 contains all that we have come to expect from the Government—increased powers for Cabinet and a gag on parliamentary debate. To Hon. Members opposite I say that this Bill is totally indefensible, no matter how many of them stand in their place, no matter how many platitudes they offer supposedly from the Auditor General. One leadership candidate is speaking out against the Bill. It would be refreshing if more of them would carry the ball as it relates to Petro-Canada alone.

This Bill will do nothing to meet the real concerns of Canadians with respect to Crown corporations. How will we address the intervention of Canada Post into the marketplace, for example? Mr. Warren appeared over national television the other day. What did he say? He said if the unions demand more money, they will increase the price. That was his answer. This is happening in all Crown corporations. The post office will continue to compete with private retailers by subsidizing the operations of Consumers Distributing. It will continue to use subsidized staff to the tune of hundreds of millions dollars a year to create unfair competition, government-controlled. There will be no recourse under the new competition Bill.

Bill C-24 will do nothing to curb the huge appetite of Crown corporations such as Canadair and de Havilland. What happens to the executives who mismanage billions of taxpayers' dollars? As we are all aware, they are given bonuses of up to $20,000 for mismanagement and ineptitude. What happened in CIDA when $25 million in taxpayers' dollars was funnelled into Haiti? They knew that fraudulent payments were being made to the people in the government there. It was a proven fact. Was anyone fired? Was one word said about it? Not a word.

We know what would have happened to those individuals in the real world. They would quickly have become part of the growing army of unemployed. Under this Government they are rewarded for ineptitude and for doing nothing. How can productivity in this country be increased in that fashion? There are unending examples of this type of fiscal ineptitude both in the Government and in the sub-government. It is fitting, is it not, that Senator Austin, who was unable to get elected, controls over half the budget of the sub-government over which the public has absolutely no control? Bill C-24 has nothing whatsoever to do with accountability. It is the reverse. What it does is increase Cabinet control over the state-owned corporations and ask Members of Parliament to trust Cabinet to make the right decisions. When we go to the polls, the people will show the trust they have in this Government. This Government has given us no reason to trust it. A government that would attempt to mislead Canadians with a Bill of this nature obviously cares not a whit about the electorate, the money extracted from it and the purposes for which it will be used.

There has been the National Energy Program, the unilateral imposition of metric, the Canadian ownership charge at the gas pumps, the Liberal slush fund for Liberal ridings, the Department of National Revenue and on and on ad infinitum. Are we really expected to trust that Government? I am afraid not. In almost 15 years the Liberals have not been able to come up with anything better than Bill C-24. I suggest that it be defeated, as that Government will be in the next election. The new Progressive Conservative Government will show Canadians that not only can the job be done, but done without porkbarrelling and done with accountability. We will show them exactly how it can be done. I urge all Members to put Bill C-24 out of its misery, or at least ensure that it is amended to the point that it will give Canadians something they really need.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): At this time in our proceedings a ten-minute period is provided for questions or comments.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart). I wonder whether he has actually read the Bill. He talked about accountability to the Government and to Parliament. Has he had the chance to check that each Crown corporation will have to table a summary of its corporate plan before Parliament? The plans will be referred to the appropriate standing committee, as will the annual report as well as any instructions given to the Crown corporations, as will a summary of all the Crown corporations held by the federal Government. This represents a continuous flow of information which will automatically be tabled in the House and referred to the appropriate standing committee. Parliament will have a great deal more information. Ministers will have the responsibility for defending those Crown corporations both on the floor of the House of Commons in Question Period and before the standing committees.

The Hon. Member also mentioned the recent Gallup poll concerning PetroCan and the support for it in the country. I thought we had been through that in the 1979-80 election. Has the Hon. Member had a chance to read the Gallup poll this morning which indicates that the Liberals have 46 per cent support in the country, the PCs 40 per cent and the NDP 13 per cent? I wonder if the Hon. Member had had a chance to read that Gallup poll as well as the one to which he referred.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, what the Bill purports to do is very obvious. It is nothing more than a smokescreen. When the Bill does come before Parliament, it goes back to Cabinet and the decisions are made by Cabinet. Cabinet has full authority after the Bill has been in the House. The fact that these Bills come to the House first has no real meaning whatsoever.

The Bill does not provide for control of the subsidiaries. This is not because the Bill has come before the House but because there is no one Minister who will be responsible for a Crown corporation which makes a mess like Canadair did. As the Hon. Member knows, there is no control over the appointments of the chief executive officers, chairmen and directors. Cabinet does that. In my view, that is politburo and state control.

As far as the Gallup poll is concerned, I think it is wonderful. Just maybe those fellows over there will screw up enough courage to go to the people. Then we will see what happens.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any more questions or comments? We will resume debate.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue the debate on Bill C-24, the Crown corporations legislation. I would like to draw to the attention of the House the fact that the most conspicuous examples of government mismanagement in recent years have been in the operations of Crown corporations like Canadair, de Havilland and other companies which are 100 per cent owned by the Crown as well as companies like Consolidated Computer, AECL and Devco, to name just a few.

Having been burned by some of these disasters which have stemmed from lack of control, lack of accountability and lack of lines of responsibility between the Cabinet and Parliament and between the board of directors and management of the companies concerned, the taxpayers expect the Government to make a serious effort to address this problem. They expect the Government to set in place some structures, rules and systems to help avoid a repeat of these problems which have cost the taxpayers billions of dollars and which have obviously cost the Liberal Government grave political embarrassment.

Addressing those problems should have been the objective of this Bill. It should have been the objective of the Bill if Government members had understood the problem, if they were serious about addressing the problem if they were really concerned about the loss of those billions of taxpayers' dollars and if they understood the political significance of the fact that when the average voter thinks of government mismanagement, he or she thinks of Canadair, de Havilland, Maislin and AECL. The voter thinks of Crown corporations or government investments which have gone sour.

What is shocking about the legislation that has been put in front of us today is that it simply sidesteps the problem. It ignores the fundamental problem of the lack of control and the lack of accountability which led up to this tremendous loss of taxpayers' funds. That is one major reason why taxpayers and other voters in Canada are saying that this government must go and that it must make way for a team of people who are competent in management, who understand management problems, who understand how to deal with a lack of accountability and who understand that a lack of management control leads to a loss of money. It must make way for people who understand that managers who do not know whether their superiors are the Cabinet, a public servant, a board of directors or management end up with no one controlling them. When there is too much flexibility in the system, it leads to too much ad hockery and too little discipline, both of which combine to lead to a tremendous loss of money.

It is obvious that Government members do not understand these problems. They do not understand what good management is and what good management must try to do. They do not understand the significance of the questions we ask about Crown corporations. They simply do not understand. When we ask them why the Government did not replace the directors of Canadair who preside over a company which lost $1.5 billion in one single year, they say that we are against the development of that company in the City of Montreal and that we are against job creation in the City of Montreal.

That is simply not the point, Mr. Speaker. When we ask whether they have done a cost-benefit analysis and why they are willing to spend nearly $1 billion of taxpayers' money on a new program for de Havilland, which they say is not commercially viable, they say we are out to destroy de Havilland. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how can we destroy de Havilland? The company has had a great record of success over the past 40 or 50 years but this company has undertaken the Dash-8 program which they say in black and white will not be commercially viable period. I do not understand.

What will destroy this company is not the Opposition Parties, but a lack of attention to the problem, a lack of understanding of the problem and an inability to deal with the problem on a timely basis. That is what is hurting these companies today and that is what has led them to the position that they are in today.

I would like to give some insight into the attitudes of the Ministers of this Government. We all remember the Consolidated Computer Limited debacle that took place two or three years ago. Consolidated Computer was purchased by the Government about ten years ago. It ended up being given away, effectively, by the Government at a total loss to the taxpayer of some $124 million. The Government tried to hustle the final loss past us in December, 1981, or the end of November, 1981, at the last possible minute, through supplementary estimates. The House was given no chance to consider the problem and no chance to get an understanding of the lessons which could have been learned by the mess that we had gone through.

I listened while the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) asked questions of the Minister, the same Minister who is putting this legislation before us today, the current President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). I listened while the questions were being put to him and then my turn came just shortly before ten o'clock. I said: "Mr. Minister, I have one question to ask you. Who in the Department was responsible for the $124 million loss?" I asked that question four times in different ways and the answer that I kept getting was: "Look, I do not think it is right for me as Minister to reveal the name of a public servant; that is something that must be kept within the Department". He was not going to answer that question. So, I said: "I accept that, Mr. Minister. I do not agree with you, but I accept it. Let me ask you one other question. Did you find out who was responsible"? I received a double-talk answer. I said: "No, I want a straight answer, Mr. Minister, yes or no. Did you ask who was responsible for the $124 million loss?" Again I received bafflegab. I asked the question four times and each time I got the same ring around the rosy. Then I put the answer to the committee, which was not denied by the Minister. I said: "All I can take from the way you are answering the question, Mr. Minister, is that when this came on your desk you said, 'How can we sweep this under the rug? How can we avoid parliamentary concern and parliamentary debate on this? How can we avoid publicity for a $124 million loss? What is the best way to cover up this problem?' "

That is the attitude of the Ministers of this Government. That is the attitude of the Minister who presented this legislation today. I give that insight because that is what this Bill is trying to do. It is attempting to give the Government the flexibility to sweep problems under the rug. There are no precise rules for accountability. There is a lot of ministerial discretion in this Bill and that was the answer the Parliamentary Secretary gave—that the discretion is there to avoid putting things in front of Parliament if the Minister decides that he does not want to do so. That is the weakness of this Bill. There is no requirement for a precise mandate for Crown corporations. We have a general mandate in the legislation, but no mandate is required to take into account the changing circumstances under which a company is operating.

There are increasing opportunities here to rely on that favourite tool of Liberal Governments for the past 15 years—the Order in Council. The Government tells us in this Bill that it can do things by Order in Council because there are a lot of things that it does not want to put under parliamentary scrutiny. It wants to do things quietly in the Cabinet room and then have the question come out after the fact, after we cannot do anything about it, after it is totally beyond our control to have any impact on the decision that has already been made.

Bill C-24 is not what we want. it is not what we need, but sadly it is what we should expect from this Government. Let us look at some of the things that have been presented to us as Members of Parliament in this piece of legislation. Bill C-24, first of all, does not cover nearly the extent of Crown investments as it should. It omits mixed and joint enterprises—de Havilland, Canadair and investments such as Consolidated Computer. It includes only the parent companies, so there is a great gap in the control that we as Members of Parliament will have over vast investments by the federal Government. As I said previously, there is a lot of room for ministerial discretion. Most aspects of the Bill are covered by regulation. We have not seen the regulations. As far as I am aware the Government has no intention of informing us of the regulations before the legislation is passed.

Some aspects of the Bill look pretty good at first glance. There is a requirement for the operating budgets, the capital budgets that my colleague referred to previously. The Government also has the option to exempt individual corporations from these requirements, so that we are kept in the dark like the growing of mushrooms.

The result is that Parliament could end up with less information than it is receiving now. The operating capital budgets will only be put before Parliament if Treasury Board and the Minister allow. The Bill restricts Parliament's ability to debate special Act corporations. This, as my colleague and other Members from this side have said, is a tremendous gap in the powers that we have as Members of Parliament. My colleague referred to it as closure by legislation—30 days of committee time and seven hours of House of Commons debate for the formation of Crown corporations which could have a tremendous impact on the economy and on the operations of government. There is simply no more control given to Parliament when there are big gaps like that in the legislation.

Let us look at the position of Ministers who are supposedly responsible for the Crown corporations. They are designated as the shareholders. They are the ones who are supposed to control the operations of the company, but effectively under the terms of this Bill that is fully taken away from them by either Cabinet or by Order in Council. There is no increase in real responsibility. In fact—I will develop this thought later, Mr. Speaker—when there are so many focal points of possible responsibility, either of the Minister, of the full Cabinet, of the Public Service, the board of directors, or in management, and there is no indication within this Bill as to where the final authority resides, it means that everybody's business is nobody's business. We are left floating in a sea of ill-defined responsibilities. That is bound to result in more disasters. The Minister, as others on this side have pointed out, becomes simply a post box address. That is purely and simply the result of it. The role of the board of directors, the chief executive officers and the senior officers of Crown corporations is set not by the Minister or the board of directors but by Cabinet. That is a very major weakness.

If you think back—and I encourage you to read this, Mr. Speaker—on June 7, 1983 there was a very important report released by the Senator from the other place on the operations of Canadair. This was a text book example of how Crown corporations should not be run. It pointed out all the problems from which Canadair suffered because there was lack of responsibility and lack of understanding of where the lines of authority lay. The result has been that we got into this $1.5 billion loss.

This new legislation does nothing to remedy that situation. It learns nothing from the problems we suffered and from the tremendous loss that we, as taxpayers, have underwritten here. The quality of the people who are appointed to these boards of directors by the Liberal Government will continue to be the same. We all know the problems of the Mackaseys and the Horners, but there are also the financial contributors, the bagmen for the Party and the campaign people who are on the boards of directors of these companies. I do not have anything against campaign people or boards of directors, but I do have a very serious difference of opinion when these people are put into jobs for which they have no training and no understanding as to what corporate affairs are all about, what budgets are or what corporate planning entails.

Bill C-24 does nothing to change that situation. It does nothing to indicate to these people the importance of the job which they are being asked to do and the reasons why they should not be appointed to those positions by this Government. Bill C-24 reinforces the problem we have today and leaves us in a position where the directors of these Crown corporations are eunuchs; they are cyphers and they are simply there to collect a political pay-off. The result is there is no accountability, no check and balance at the board of directors' level of the performance of the senior officers, or the company at large. Until the Liberals demonstrate by their actions that directors have a clear role to play, that they have specific responsibilities, we must expect a continuation of the problems of the Canadairs, the de Havillands, the CCIs, the Devcos, and so on.

With respect to ministerial responsibility, Bill C-24 leaves the Minister as the shareholder by law but requires the Cabinet to approve most of the major initiatives, a responsibility which one would expect the shareholders to take, such as appointments of directors, auditors, chairmen, chief executive officers, preparation of the budgets. All this is taken away from them by this legislation and put into the hands of the Cabinet. The result will be a significant lack of accountability and that simply is not going to serve the taxpayers of our country well.

Let us now look at where some of the responsibility does lie. Bill C-24 gives authority to the Governor in Council, subject to the approval of the Minister of Finance, to approve borrowings and guarantees. The Minister of Finance is provided with the final authority for these Crown corporations. What I was looking for in this legislation was something I have been asking for in this House for about three years now, that is, overall control of borrowing, not just the direct borrowing of the Government of Canada which comes under the borrowing authority legislation, but an overall authority which covers the direct and indirect borrowing of Crown corporations plus the guarantees and the letters of comfort and things of that nature which add up to the hidden deficit. I am not talking about just the $31 billion but about the larger hidden deficit of the Government of Canada of $36 billion or $37 billion. I have asked the Minister of Finance, both the previous Minister of Finance and the current Minister of Finance, for this. I have been told it would be looked into but to date it has been totally ignored. This is a very major gap in this legislation.

The final point I would like to cover, Mr. Speaker, is the mandate of Crown corporations. This is a problem which has developed in recent years as Crown corporations have suffered some setbacks, and I use that word in a very gentle way. There have been instances such as this with AECL and with Canertech, where the Crown corporations, with the full financial support of the Government of Canada, have moved into areas which are not covered by their mandate at all. The result has been very unfair competition between these Crown corporations and the private sector, which previously has been able to look at that area of business as part of its own area of responsibility.

Let me give the example of Canertech. It is doing retrofits on buildings which involves a very extensive capital expenditure. What Canertech is saying to the owners of the buildings is: "We will do this business for you. We will pay for the total capital cost of it and you pay us by the savings which you make on the heating and air conditioning as a result of the retrofit". This is a very good deal. It is a deal which no one can refuse. But it is a deal which no private sector company could possibly offer. I say in the best of parliamentary spirit to the Parliamentary Secretary, since the Minister is not here, to take back this thought of giving Crown corporations and federal Government wholly-owned companies such a mandate and give them a much clearer mandate so that they are restricted in their ability to compete on unfair terms with the private sector.

In conclusion, this Bill is a major disappointment to us as Members of Parliament. We have no confidence that the Government has learned the lessons of the past and that is an overwhelming reason not only for a change of government but to scrap this Bill and allow a new government which understands the problem to bring in better legislation which will deal effectively with the situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate because I believe it is a very important debate. All of us realize that Crown corporations have taken an increasingly important role in implementing the policy of this Government. As a result, any changes which are made to the way in which these Crown corporations can act, in the way they can respond and generally do their business, becomes increasingly important to deal with in this House.

First in my remarks today I would like to comment on what essentially we had hoped to see in the Bill, in fact what, I suppose, we expected to see in this particular piece of legislation. What we wanted to see dealt with was ministerial responsibility for Crown corporations, which becomes very important when we look at a simple example, one with which I am familiar, of Canada Post. Time and time again we have addressed questions regarding that particular Crown corporation in this House of Commons only to have the Minister say: "I will have to check with the responsible people in Canada Post. I will have to see what they say". The Minister never gives a direct, straight answer here in the House of Commons. It is always a circuitous answer. That is the kind of thing which we as parliamentarians want to address because we see it as being absolutely essential to make sure that Crown corporations are responsible to Parliament.

The second thing we had hoped to see in this particular piece of legislation is a statement of principle on the role of Crown corporations. What is happening with them? In what direction are they intending to move? That has to be important to any kind of parliamentary overview of Crown corporations in our present set-up.

Third, we looked for a classification system of Crown corporations which was based essentially on the level of subsidization which they received from the Government. In other words, if you have a Crown corporation which is accepting a high level of funding from Parliament, then obviously it has to be very much accountable to Parliament because it must be responsible for the use of public funds, taxpayers' money. On the other hand, if a Crown corporation receives little or no funding from Parliament, perhaps then we can be a little less stringent in relation to that corporation.

The fourth thing we saw as being significant and important to this legislation is that there should be controls over Crown corporation subsidiaries. In other words, the subsidiaries of any particular Crown corporation must be held accountable, must be responsible and must in some way answer to Parliament, thereby to Members of Parliament, and ultimately to the Canadian people.

The fifth thing we were looking for is comprehensive public business plans. The Canadian people have a right to know where any public agency is going. They have a right to know what kind of plans are being made for that agency and in which direction it intends to move.

The sixth thing we looked for is very important. It is an effective and meaningful audit by the Auditor General. That is very important when we consider the number of examples we have seen lately that have demonstrated waste by Government.

We also wanted to have some form of standardized accounting procedures. We have heard a lot of discussions on the significance of comprehensive auditing lately. We feel a need to have those accounting procedures standardized.

The eighth thing which we felt was essential was to have boards of directors comparable to those in the private sector. In other words, they must have some clout, authority, impact and ability to give direction to the organization they are dealing with.

The final thing which we were looking for is something which I personally feel is extremely important. We wanted to see a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate set up with a mandate to initiate periodic reviews of Crown corporations. That becomes essential.

A short time ago I was very pleased to work with the special committee on parliamentary reform. We spent a good deal of our time studying this particular area of concern. We studied it because we felt there was a tremendous interest by Canadians in knowing what is happening with Crown corporations. Canadians felt a need to make sure that these corporations were accountable to Parliament. We spent a good deal of time considering various ways of making sure that sort of thing was addressed.

One of the recommendations which I thought was significant was put forward in the report commonly referred to as the Huntington-Lachance report. That was a recommendation to set up a special committee to look into what we called the quasi-government agencies. It would be a committee to look at Crown corporations which are once removed from Parliament, but which at the same time play a significant role in the policies of the Government and the directions that these corporations were taking. We felt that kind of scrutiny was essential.

We needed those things because of the central role of Crown corporations and other agencies and their growing impact upon Canada.

I would like to speak for a few minutes about why we were looking for those things to be done and why we expected to see them in this particular legislation. Anyone who has paid any attention to the subject for any amount of time will know that there has been a great deal of debate and interest in this subject. There have been various reports by the Auditor General calling for the nine basic points which I have discussed briefly. The Lambert Commission is another example of a group and a report which was seeking reform in the way that Crown corporations were dealt with in Parliament. There is the Privy Council Office blue book. There was previous consideration in the forefathers of this particular Bill—Bills C-27, C-123 and C-153. In addition to those Bills and reports there have been a number of academic papers done on this subject across Canada, all of which have stressed the very important need for reform in our ability to deal with Crown corporations.

In addition to that, probably one of the most important elements calling for reform has been Canadians themselves from coast to coast. Any Member of Parliament, whether on the Opposition or Government side, will tell you that Canadians are very much concerned with the impact Crown corporations are having and how they are held accountable by Parliament for the Canadian people. All of the groups which I have just referred to expected to see these nine basic principles addressed. All of them stated the need for reform and control over Crown corporations.

The reason these various groups have come up with these essential points can probably be broken down into five general statements. The first reason or need for reform is the dramatic increase in the number of Crown corporations. I understand that the piece of legislation which we are debating today will apply to 183 Crown corporations, all of which have an impact of varying degree upon our country and the policies and directions taken in our country.

Second, there has been a significant increase in the number of Crown corporations and agencies and in their importance, but there has not been the corresponding balance of accountability. That is the sort of thing we want to encourage.

The third reason is that there has been no comprehensive system of control or accountability. Another reason dealing with accountability is that accountability has tended to be spread out. When accountability is spread out it becomes diluted and ultimately there is no accountability.

My colleague who spoke before me addressed the fifth reason. It is the idea of political appointments of directorships. When that happens frequently it becomes increasingly important to have well-defined regulations, guidelines and policies to ensure that things are carried on in a businesslike and efficient manner.

I have essentially spoken about what I feel we need. I have spoken about who I believe has suggested the kind of things we need. I have also spoken a little bit about why I think we need these particular amendments. I would now like to touch briefly upon what I believe we have ended up with in this Bill. As I see it, it has essentially been a contrast between what we needed and what we ended up with.

I would first like to discuss ministerial responsibility. By looking at the way things are laid out we find that the Minister shares his responsibility. He shares it generally with Treasury Board and specifically with the Finance Minister. He shares it generally with Cabinet and specifically with the board of directors. There is a lot of shared responsibility. It goes back and forth and in and out. We end up with no one individual taking absolute responsibility. This can have a tendency to create confusion and misunderstanding. The essential concern is that with that watered down approach individuals will be passing the buck in an endless cycle and no one will take responsibility.

I will refer back to the Crown corporation Canada Post. There is a situation within Canada Post which is having a tremendous impact upon Canadians and is causing a great deal of concern to small business people across the country. Canada Post is doing some testing on the idea of getting into the catalogue business by way of serving as a counter to take orders. Several times in the House the Minister has been asked what is going on, what is happening, where we are going. Time and again his response has been that he will check it out. The ultimate response we have received is that Canada Post will make a decision after the results of those tests are received. The question that Parliament wants answered is: If the results of those tests are good for Canada Post, is that all that is required for it to proceed or does it have to be good for the business community at large and the Canadian public? Those are the issues which need to be addressed.

Let me give an example. There is a lady in my area who makes her living by running a shop in which she takes orders for a particular catalogue company. That provides her with her livelihood to support her family. As well, she has two or three part-time employees who earn part of their living from that particular business. If Canada Post proceeds to open up this type of business in the post office in that small community, that woman will immediately be out of a job. Her business will cease to exist. Her family will have lost its means of support. Is that the kind of action we as parliamentarians want to encourage? I do not think so. The only way we can prevent that from happening is by having an accountable and responsible Minister in the House who can stand up and give a definitive answer and make a decision. One would certainly doubt that this is the case at the present time.

Let me proceed and talk about the statement of principles regarding Crown corporations. I do not see a clear definition of that in this legislation, nor is there a classification system according to the subsidization level that I referred to in my third point. Rather, there seems to be a somewhat arbitrary list. For example, Air Canada is put together with CDIC. However, what is included within CDIC? It is Canadair. One corporation has been very successful while the other has not.

There is a corporation and an administrative agency lumped together. These are Canada Post and the National Capital Commission. It is difficult to understand how they relate to each other. Of course, the joint or mixed enterprises in which government agencies are involved are not even included. I think that lack of a comprehensive guidance system, which we believe is so essential, has allowed, and in fact in some ways encouraged, Crown corporations to invent their own policies and objectives. How can Crown corporations really be effective policy instruments without that kind of clear direction and guidance?

The question remains: Is this legislation going to create a standard approach to Crown corporations? Will it end the jumbled and ad hoc approach that exists at the moment and make an actual improvement? We on this side suggest that there will not be much significant improvement as a result of this particular piece of legislation.

We do not believe there is a meaningful attempt in this legislation to control the creation of Crown corporations, their subsidiaries or affiliates. We do not believe there is an assurance for the presentation of clear business plans so that there will be good, clear financial reporting. We do not believe there will be a standardizing of the necessary accounting procedures to ensure that its practices are clear and understandable to allow us quickly and efficiently to understand if the corporation is operating as we believe it is.

I believe there are a number of reasons why there is no real attempt to accomplish those goals. First, there are contradictions within the legislation. Second, this Bill has not amended the original Crown corporations and incorporation legislation that allows open-ended treatment of these particular agencies by Cabinet.

The third reason concerns the wide exemptive clauses that are imbedded in this particular Bill. The final reason involves the regulatory powers. One only needs to look at Clause 135(4) to have an example of that. It reads:

> The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, make regulations
> (a) exempting a specified Crown corporation or a Crown corporation of a specified class from the application of subsection (3)—

One can see that exemptions are already taking place. There are loopholes in the legislation that allow a particular corporation to get around the particular concerns that we believe should be addressed in the Bill.

This legislation also allows the exclusion of individual Crown corporations from the requirements of the Bill. That exclusion is contained in the clause to which I just referred. I immediately see a red flag whenever such a provision is brought to my attention. I know there are some dangers inherent in such a clause. It also provides that regulation will allow individual Crown corporations to be treated differently from others. Again, one must see a red flag warning because there is concern for potential problems and difficulties.

Therefore, in my view this Bill is one that advocates the ad hoc treatment of Crown corporations rather than the standardizing of the approach. I think this legislation goes part way in clarifying the role of the auditor. The Bill makes some clarifications in this case, but since it is a very important area it is not sufficient to move part way. Essentially, the Bill limits the scope of the special examinations by the auditor. For example, Clause 148 indicates that he cannot really get involved in reviewing policy. That is very important because we as parliamentarians want to make sure that policies are being enacted and carried out.

I thank you for the time given to me, Mr. Speaker. It is an important piece of legislation but I think it is inadequate. We are not satisfied with it and I will not be supporting it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there questions or comments related to the Hon. Member's remarks?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I have some questions for the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) concerning the Bill. I am not sure that he has read the same Bill as I.

He talked a great deal about the question of ministerial responsibility. It seems to me that the Bill clearly sets out that there will be a Minister designated for each Crown corporation. Of course, decisions are made by Cabinet but there is only one Minister who is on the firing line, whether it is during Question Period in the House or when legislation is put through the House. Whether the Minister is defending his estimates, the corporate plan, the budget, the auditor's report or the Auditor General's report, it is the individual Minister who is responsible.

In our system of collective Cabinet responsibility, I find it difficult to understand how the Minister who is designated to be responsible for a particular Crown corporation is somehow not responsible. In the case of Crown corporations which are totally owned by the Government, he is the shareholder and there can be no question about his responsibility.

The Hon. Member raised the issue of Canada Post and its trial business with the Consumers Distributing Company. This Bill gives the responsible Minister directive powers. I am not certain this is contained in every special Crown corporation Act but clearly this Bill is one which overrides all other legislation relating to Crown corporations. All Crown corporations must comply with it. I suggest that meets the concern that the Hon. Member has already expressed. Clearly, the powers of the Bill apply to wholly-owned subsidiaries just as they apply to parent Crown corporations.

The Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) I believe mentioned one corporation in which the Government has an interest or share. I am not clear how the Government can completely control a company when it only has a partial investment. Clearly, this Bill provides that where there is 100 per cent ownership, those subsidiaries will be subject to the same directive powers as the wholly-owned parent Crown corporation.

With regard to auditing, the provisions set out in the Bill are that generally accepted accounting principles must be used. These principles are contained in a book that is approximately four inches thick and they guide and control all Canada Business Corporation Act companies. It provides that not only must those accounting principles be used, but the Minister may require that stronger provisions be made.

I agree with his argument that the House should consider whether it wants to have a special Crown corporation committee or a joint committee with the Senate, but that is a question for the House rules committee to deal with. I do not think that matter needs to be dealt with in this Bill.

Clearly with the number of corporations, I believe it is 60-some parent Crown corporations and many subsidiaries, it would be impractical not to have those corporate plans, the budgets, the audits and so on all referred to regular standing committees. It seems to me it would be impractical to have one special committee of the House deal with them on an ongoing basis.

The Hon. Member suggested that the Bill does not cover the growth of Crown corporations. Clearly it is set out in this Bill that there are only two ways Crown corporations can be established. One is through the Canada Business Corporations Act, which the Government has used in the past. When Crown corporations are set up under that provision now, a motion has to be brought in the House stating exactly their powers and prerogatives. The motion would have to be referred to a committee for some 30 sitting days and then it would be subject to at least seven hours' debate in the House as well. If it was a special Bill, such as the CDIC Bill which is before the House now, something like Petro-Canada, or other major pieces of legislation relating to Crown corporations, these special cases would continue to be brought forward under special legislation where there is no limitation on debate or discussion.

I think many of the concerns which the Hon. Member raised will be apparent when we get into discussion in the standing committee. A lot of them have been dealt with. I hope the Hon. Member will have a chance to read in more detail the provisions of the Bill and perhaps be reassured in our committee discussions.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, obviously if I went into a detailed response, I would need another 20 minutes to answer the Parliamentary Secretary, but let me reply in this sense. Why, if we have such ministerial accountability, can we never get a straight answer from the Minister responsible for Canada Post? Why, if the Liberals are so concerned with this Bill and feel that this Bill clearly demonstrates urgency, while we in this Party are concerned about parliamentary scrutiny, is closure in advance applied to Crown corporations? Third, if the Liberals are so impressed with this idea of a special committee, why do they not show some leadership and put that suggestion forward as a recommendation attached to this Bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any more questions or comments? We shall now resume debate. The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields).

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-24 with a great deal of apprehension. I see in this Bill exactly the same process that was imposed when the National Energy Program was introduced into this House of Commons.

First, Bill C-24 was an initiative by the Government for the so-called control of Crown corporations because of the pressure building across the country and because of a position which our Party took in laying down policy. We indicated some of our ideas that were necessary for Canada and the taxpayer to gain control of a government, a hidden government, and I am referring to Crown corporations.

I think we all know, Mr. Speaker, that the total number of people employed by Crown corporations exceeds the total number of people employed in the federal civil service. It is clear that these corporations have to be brought under control. The Government, at the urging of this Party, has introduced Bill C-24. The Bill is a typical smokescreen which we have seen this Government use on the taxpayers of Canada time and time again. This Government is introducing legislation and tying every major point of control in that legislation to regulations that will be imposed or set up after the Bill becomes effective; after the Bill is passed by this House. Then we will see the regulations and the regulations will be tied to the very substantive clauses within the legislation.

Let me give you an example, Mr. Speaker. The National Energy Program was introduced and the regulations were introduced afterwards. These regulations gave wide discretionary powers to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is the Minister who can determine who will or will not get grants which are being paid for by the taxpayer for off-shore drilling. It is the Minister who by regulation will determine whether there is or is not enough Canadian content for companies to become eligible for grants to drill in the Beaufort Sea or on Canada Lands. It is the Minister with discretionary powers, not tied to legislation but tied to regulations, which allow him to determine who in fact will get a contract and who will not. That takes the complete control, the complete accountability, out of Parliament and puts it into the Minister's hands.

Those huge regulation-making powers of the Government insulates a Crown corporation from any public scrutiny, any parliamentary scrutiny. I ask you, Sir, what individual would invest in a company and allow that company to take part in the kind of activity required of it that may be set down in its by-laws? What individual investor would allow that to happen if a company were exempted in all cases from tabling before that investor the result of its year's activities through a profit and loss statement showing how the company spent its money, the investors' money? This practice is fundamental to the business world. Individual investors would not accept exemption of the tabling of a profit and loss statement and neither should taxpayers.

Crown corporations must be accountable to the Members of the House of Commons who represent the taxpayers and shareholders of Crown corporations. What many people fail to realize but are starting to understand is that Crown corporations like the CNR, Air Canada and Petro-Canada must be held accountable to the shareholders, namely the taxpayers. They are not the Government; they are the taxpayers of the country. Crown corporations must be made accountable, and this legislation will not bring that about.

As I said, virtually every clause of substance within Bill C-24 has attached to it a regulation-making power by which government, not the people accountable to the taxpayers, defines how the clause will operate or which Crown corporations can be exempted. Without seeing the regulations, which the Government continually stonewalls and refuses to table in the House of Commons, how do we know how the Government intends to use the Bill? It is absolutely impossible to expect Members of Parliament representing the taxpayers of the country to pass Bill C-24 without knowing beforehand how the Government intends to use it.

I hearken back to the Petro-Canada Act. That company was formed so that the Government would have a window on the industry. There had been some poor forecasts of oil and gas reserves in Canada. The Liberal Government of the day brought in an Act to form Petro-Canada. Its members now say that Petro-Canada is ours. It is not ours, it is theirs, because that company is not accountable to Canadian taxpayers. The original intention was to form a window on the industry, as I said. It has grown by taking over and purchasing other companies. The clear intention of the Government has been to make it very large and unaccountable to taxpayers. That cannot continue. That was not the original intention. If in the debates at that time we had asked the Government what it intended to do, its members would have said: "We do not intend to open up service stations across the country". By regulation they have been able to do that because the Government controls what happens to Petro-Canada.

A mirror of the Petro-Canada legislation is the Canagrex legislation. Because of the regulatory powers vested in that legislation, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) can open up corner grocery stores from coast to coast. If we ask him whether that will happen, he will say: "Of course we will not do that; we never intend to do that". There is lack of control by taxpayers, the people who indirectly own every lock, stock and barrel of those Crown corporations. We cannot go to those Crown corporations to obtain the inside information which is required by investors. It is ludicrous, absolutely ludicrous, when we as taxpayers and as Members representing taxpayers are not privy to the information within those companies concerning their day to day operations because it is a closed door.

The Auditor General of Canada cannot go to Crown corporations and demand that their books be opened to him. The chairmen and presidents of those companies have stated publicly, as all Hon. Members of the House know, that the Auditor General has no business within our Crown corporations. The Auditor General is appointed by the House of Commons to account for the spending of taxpayers' dollars. Everyone agreed that the Auditor General should be the watch-dog and should point out where money was being wasted or spent unwisely. He is not privy to information from Crown corporations unless Crown corporations on their own or the Minister decide to open the books to him. We see this fiasco time and time again.

The very sad state of affairs of Crown corporations today will not be covered or changed by this legislation. Appointments of boards of directors and chief executive officers are made and approved by the Minister or some of his colleagues. That has clearly been abused in the past and continues to be abused. I will not name specific appointments but there have been appointments of clear political hacks. The time has come for every Member of the House of Commons to be satisfied that Crown corporations have the best possible choice of people in chief executive officer positions and on their boards. We have had case after case of appointments to various boards of Crown corporations where the people appointed had absolutely no concept of how business was run or even what the Crown corporations were supposed to do.

Crown corporations are needed in a mixed economy like that of Canada's to provide service where the private sector does not have the capability to do so. We have seen it with the Northern Transportation Company, with which I am familiar. It operates off the eastern Arctic. It operated a tug and barge service from Fort McMurray up to Uranium City and all points in between. That Crown corporation decided five years ago to sell off that company, and some of the chief executive officers or members of the board were to try to buy it. They used the excuse that Uranium City was shutting down and drove the profit margin of the Fort McMurray to Uranium City part of the operation into the ground so that they could show a loss. Also it is becoming clear that they repaired and put new bottoms on barges, repaired tugs on the Athabasca line, moved those tugs and barges over to the eastern Arctic, and charged the repair, the upgrading and the transportation of those vessels to the Athabasca run. In my view that was done purposely to show that it was operating at a loss so that they could shut it down and free up some very valuable land in downtown Fort McMurray.

All of this has been done. When you question the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy), you do not get an answer. He is not accountable because the Crown corporation operates as a separate entity. It is accountable to no one. In their wisdom, Crown corporations have spawned other Crown corporations by forming subsidiaries and the subsidiaries have done the same.

We ask questions about these corporations in this House, but they are not accountable either to this House or to the taxpayers of this country. When a Crown corporation runs a severe deficit, the Canadian taxpayer picks up the tab with no questions asked. We make noise in this House. We question the Minister. We asked the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) why the chief executive officers of a Crown corporation received bonuses of $130,000 and $150,000 while at the same time the employees of that corporation were being asked to take a cut in pay. The Minister replied they had to do that in order to keep top management; otherwise the corporation would not operate and there would be no jobs for the workers.

The shareholders in a corporation the size of that Crown corporation would demand the resignation of those chief executive officers. Private investors and shareholders in such a company would demand the removal of the board of directors. They are accountable. We have seen that done time and again. One need only look at the history of the major corporations in this country to see that they are truly accountable. Chief executive officers constantly get canned if they do not do their jobs. A board of directors is removed if it does not do its job.

This Minister stood in the House and said that even though Canadair lost $250 million of the taxpayers' money as a result of poor management decisions, we have to pay bonuses to the chief executive officers in order to keep top-notch people. There is no accountability to the taxpayers of this country. There will be a revolt in this country with regard to our tax system if we do not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. Are there any questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, has some serious flaws. The Act will not be binding. It is just more window dressing and another Liberal smokescreen. Bill C-29 will be coming up for debate in the near future. It contains a clause which states:

> This Act is binding on an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province that is a corporation, in respect of commercial activities engaged in by the corporation in competition, whether actual or potential, with other persons, but not in respect of commercial activities engaged in by the corporation that are directly associated with its regulatory activities.

That is what is weak in Bill C-24, namely that it is not binding. When we see the disgraceful performance of our Crown corporations, Bill C-24 should be more binding. It took this Government five years to bring forward this legislation. It lacks several important features that are contained in Bill C-27. In 1979 it took the Conservative Government six months to begin the clean-up of the Crown corporation mess.

Bill C-24 does not cover mixed and joint enterprises. Although it catches 183 Crown corporations and subsidiaries, the legislation does not cover 109 Crown corporations, mixed and joint enterprises and their subsidiaries. It is strange that it would leave out 109 Crown corporations. It is impossible to know the effect of this Bill because everything is done by regulation and we have not seen the regulations. Assuming the Bill is passed, all regulations will be made by the Government behind closed doors. In the majority of instances they will not be made public. Therefore, Bill C-24 is just mere window dressing.

When the Canada Post Corporation Act was formed in 1981, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) introduced an amendment asking that the accounts and financial transactions of the corporation be audited annually by the Auditor General. That would be a complete audit. It was voted down by the then Liberal Government.

Bill C-24 is supposed to bring more accountability to Crown corporations. Bill C-31, recently tabled by the Government, an Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, states:

> All that portion of subsection 17(2) of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act following paragraph (b) thereof is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> "shall not exceed thirty million dollars".

That is increasing the borrowing authority just like that. The current level is $20 million. The board will have the power to borrow an additional $10 million with absolutely no explanation. The manager of that corporation is a local Manitoba Liberal who is obviously going to carry on in the Liberal tradition. Their solution to all problems is to spend more borrowed money. There is no explanation or accountability clause, no calling in the corporation to explain the increased borrowing.

Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs are parading around the country. I refer to John Turner and the others who are running for the leadership of the Liberal Party. They have a goodies list, bribing taxpayers with their own money. Each one of them has the qualifications to take over as leader of the Liberal Party, especially John Turner who, when he was Finance Minister, introduced the "blank cheque government" to Canada. He played a large part in the uncontrolled spending.

They are talking about moving Crown corporations around. They are going to give Manitoba a Crown corporation. Mr. Turner did not explain to his audience that if a Crown corporation moves from Ottawa to Winnipeg, under the Public Service Act the employees do not have to move if they do not want to. He would move the Crown corporation to Winnipeg. Perhaps only 10 per cent of the employees of that corporation would want to move. What would we do with the other 90 per cent of the employees? They would stay here and we would have to find jobs for them some place. This would be an excellent way to almost double the size of the bureaucracy. He neglected to explain this to his audience. He did not explain what it would cost the people and he did not explain that it would almost double the size of the bureaucracy. Not very many employees would want to move from Ottawa to Winnipeg or any other place because they are already established here. Of course, "Three-position Turner" did not suggest that a cost-benefit analysis be undertaken before moving Crown corporations. He simply said he would move Crown corporations. He is a true Grit.

The expansion of these hundreds and hundreds of Crown corporations began around the time that Mr. Turner was the Finance Minister. During Mr. Turner's tenure, government spending rose almost 100 per cent. He holds the marvellous record of inheriting a $700 million surplus and turning it into a $5.4 billion deficit during his tenure as Finance Minister. So much for controls under Mr. Turner, the man who introduced blank cheque government to Canada.

Mr. Turner is promising to move Crown corporations and he is promising many other goodies. We will see in the future whether he will suggest that a cost-benefit analysis be undertaken. However, since he is a true Grit, I would doubt very much it would. The promises of Grits mean absolutely nothing. In the last election we heard the Grits promise cheap gas and lower interest rates. We never did see that come true.

As well, Mr. Speaker, we are concerned about the activities of Canada Post which is in direct competition with the private sector and is making things as awkward and difficult as it can for the private sector through its latest venture, Consumers Distributing. I have noticed that a number of Liberal members have complained about the post office venture into Consumers Distributing and I hope that they will put some pressure on the Minister who is responsible for Canada Post so that he will take some direct action to have Canada Post withdraw from the Consumers Distributing venture.

That venture is causing serious concern across Canada. The Canadian Retail Hardware Association has expressed its concerns about a Crown corporation competing directly with that association and its operations. Mr. Thomas M. Ross, the executive director of the Canadian Retail Hardware Association, pointed out the following in a letter to me dated April 25, 1984:

> It is my understanding that Mr. Warren's mandate at Canada Post is so broad, that he can really do anything he desires. If this is the case, I am greatly troubled as to the outcome of this affair since Mr. Warren seems to have "painted himself into a corner".

It is not the purpose of government to compete with the private sector. It is not the purpose of a Crown corporation to receive government hand-outs to establish programs like the Consumers Distributing venture and all the other plans Canada Post may have. The main function of Canada Post is to see that the mail is delivered. When Mr. Warren was questioned before the Public Accounts Committee, he did not give straightforward answers about how this scheme would work and whether it had been costed. We really do not know what it will cost Canadian taxpayers.

Years ago under a Conservative Government, the post office was run in an orderly and efficient manner. As an example of how efficient the post office was under the Diefenbaker Government, the post office made a profit of $1,836,713 in the year 1960. That is a remarkable profit and a remarkable record. However, after the year 1963 and under continuous Liberal Governments, the post office went from disaster to disaster. We have some very serious concerns about Canada Post being a Crown corporation and about its being accountable to Parliament and to the people.

Speaking of control, the list of executives who are employed by Canada Post is unbelievable. There is a huge chart consisting of five pages which breaks down the executive of Canada Post. I doubt if any large multinational corporation could come close to the expansion that has occurred at the executive level of Canada Post. Canada Post has six executive vice-presidents, 27 vice-presidents, 11 executive directors, 69 directors and 18 divisional general managers. Canada Post is certainly solving the unemployment problem for high-priced personnel. I would surely question whether it needs that many executives.

The chart to which I have referred goes on to mention managing directors, treasurers, special assistants, co-ordinators, human resources officers, regional directors and senior directors. The list goes on and on. All of those people have cars and we do not know how many of them have chauffeurs. Dating back to May 24, 1983, I have put questions on the Order Paper to try to get a breakdown indicating what these individuals are paid, how many cars they have and what all the rest of their benefits are. However, I cannot get an answer from a Crown corporation that is supposed to be accountable to Parliament and to the Canadian people.

Another example of lack of accountability is Canadair. In 1976 I warned the Government that Canadair was on a disaster course. At that time I said that the Government should come clean, state its plans and expectations for Canadair and begin revealing true information about Canadair's financial position. However, the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), who is now running for the leadership of the Liberal Party, said that things had never been better in Canada and that things were going very well. Well, today we can see the absolute disaster that has occurred with the management of Canadair. We have had to bail Canadair out to the tune of about $2 billion, so far but one can never get a point across to a Liberal.

We pointed out that the National Energy Program was on a disaster course. We did not use partisan rhetoric but documented evidence to point out that the Government was on a disaster course. In 1976, we pointed out that Canadair was on a disaster course but Government members do not pay any attention. They simply carry on in their wild and crazy manner. It is the Canadian taxpayer who must pay for that.

Of the group of people who are running for the leadership of the Liberal Party, not one can offer any kind of explanation. The present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said that he is proud of his 20-year record in government. That must mean that he is proud that there are a million and a half people unemployed, proud that there are record bankruptcies, proud that Canadair is on a disaster course and proud that de Havilland and other Crown corporations are on disaster courses while their executives are getting big bonuses. He has said that he is proud. What on earth is there to be proud of, Mr. Speaker? He is probably more guilty than all of the rest of them combined because he has been in the Cabinet the longest. Obviously he has no administrative ability at all and is not the least bit interested in seeing that Crown corporations or any other government departments are accountable to the people.

It is unfortunate that the Liberal Party could not find any responsible people to run for the leadership of that Party. It is unfortunate that the Liberal Party could not find people who are prepared to have government departments or Crown corporations accountable rather than making ridiculous promises to taxpayers and saying they will move a Crown corporation around without doing a cost-benefit analysis.

There is no doubt that Bill C-24 is nothing but a smokescreen. This type of legislation would certainly suit John Turner. When he was the Minister of Finance, we witnessed his position on accountability. He was not accountable to the people at all. He should be explaining to Canadians why this is so and he should be apologizing to them.

In closing, I have had other representations made to me about Canada Post going into Consumers' Distributing. The publishers of Ontario are very, very concerned. The Ontario association passed a motion opposing Canada Post being in any business other than the delivering of mail. Talking about delivering the mail, I have reports about big tractor trailers sitting in lots. The computer system does not work and, therefore, the trailers cannot be located. Trailers full of mail are sitting in lots. Thousands of pieces of mail are sitting in lots for a period of up to six weeks. These are the issues we should be dealing with. Let us find out why trailers full of mail are sitting in lots instead of competing with the private sector. I hope the Government will reconsider and get some teeth into Bill C-24.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments on the Hon. Member's remarks? The Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Roy).

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) whether he is aware of the fact that where advanced technology is concerned, when a country decides to manufacture an aircraft, its efforts are financed by various departments. I am referring to France, Great Britain, Belgium and the United States, which have built aircraft with funds provided by the Department of Defence or other departments.

When the Canadian Government decided to buy Canadair and de Havilland in 1975, Canadair had 750 employees. Today, ten years later, there are as many as 7,500 employees in this high-tech field. When I hear Progressive Conservatives making their usual partisan remarks about Canadair, I wonder whether they are really helping Canadians who are looking for jobs.

In Montreal we now have 16,000 graduates from twenty CEGEPs in this field, who are looking for and are interested in a job in the high-tech industry. That is why Canadair is building an aircraft, why we are developing the aeronautics industry. This is part of research and development and should appear in our appropriations as part of the Canadian Government's investment in research and development in the aviation industry. Unfortunately, this is not emphasized often enough.

I would therefore ask the Hon. Member whether the Government's position is against developing advanced technology. That is exactly the kind of development it has had in mind with respect to de Havilland and Canadair. As far as management is concerned, I believe corrective action has been taken. No one here was particularly proud of Canadair's administration. I have spoken many times about Canadair here in the House. I feel that the federal Government's objective has been to give Canadians a chance to develop expertise in the area of advanced technology. Quebecers no longer want to concentrate exclusively on the so-called soft industries such as textiles or footwear. They want a share of the high-tech industry, and that is why the Government of Canada is investing in Canadair. I intend to keep on defending the appropriation of funds for advanced technology, and I think it is unfortunate that some people are making gloomy speeches about advanced technology because the industry seems to be concentrated in the central provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that countries that have invested in the aviation industry and have developed aircraft have done so, not on the basis of short term operational funding but with funding provided by the Department of Defence. They did so with funds that were set aside for research and technology, for R&D. About Canadair, they keep saying that it is costing us $1.6 million; all kinds of figures are mentioned. It is true! This is the book cost. But if we consider the contribution to technological development and job creation for young people, the investment in research and technology, in research and development, I agree with the Progressive Conservatives that perhaps we have not increased our funding enough. The present rate is 1.3 per cent of the Gross National Product for research and development, which should be increased—and we want to do this—by one-tenth of a percentage point per year. Of course Canadair's operational deficit exists on the books! However, we must not forget the multiplier effect all this has had on the field of advanced technology. In fact, the funds thus invested in advanced technology should be considered a vital contribution to research and development. And that is exactly what it is, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I do not need the Hon. Member to put words in my mouth. I did not mention anything to indicate that we are against high technology. We are talking about management. There has been definite mismanagement at Canadair. I would suggest that he read the Auditor General's report.

The only change that we have seen at Canadair is that the president has resigned. The rest of the staff is there. The de Havilland corporation and the disastrous conditions which exist there, is another example. What did the Government do? It reappointed the same board of directors. Every one of them should have been replaced. On top of that the Government gave them bonuses. They do not deserve bonuses. They are not running the plant properly. The management has not changed at all. That is what we are talking about, not the workers. We are not against high technology.

There is a problem with the Challenger. I understand that that plane cannot be serviced in Europe. If it cannot be serviced in Europe, I do not know who is going to buy that aircraft. There are many executive aircrafts being built in North America; it is a highly competitive business. If we are to compete with the United States in building executive aircraft, we must ensure that we have the right people running the plant or there will be a lot more youth unemployed in the Province of Quebec. They will not be able to sell those planes. They will not be able to service them. The Government simply has not got the right personnel at the top. That is the point which we are making.

We want more accountability. That is what this Bill is all about. If we get the right people, we can start selling the aircraft. It is a tremendous investment. I would suggest that the Hon. Member read the Auditor General's report. The Auditor General is very disturbed about the management and the way it is handling funds. Another example is de Havilland.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the splendid address given by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) and particularly in the examples that he used.

I was amazed at the question which was asked by the Liberal member who seemed to be proud of the fact that as a private enterprise company there were 150,000 employed and now that the Government has taken over there are 600,000 people employed. That is what we are worried about. We are not worried about high technology development. That would save money, not cost money. That should be able to give better service for every dollar spent. Yet Joel Bell, president of the Canadian Development Investment Corporation, said when he looked over the Canadian company that it has become large and cumbersome. That is what the Hon. Member just said he was proud of.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, can we not expect this situation to get worse, if the Liberal regime keeps on going, when Clause 112(4) of the Bill reads:

> No action of a Crown corporation, including a transfer of property, is invalid by reason only that the corporation was without the capacity or power to so act.

Anything done by a corporation today is valid according to this clause. I wonder if the Hon. Member would like to comment on this terrible type of legislation?

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, that is typical of the blank cheque government we have. That is a blank cheque clause and it has absolutely nothing to do with proper accountability at all. The Hon. Member is absolutely right. He is 100 per cent right.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is highly appropriate that I speak on youth unemployment on May Day. Canadian citizens from age 15 to 24 have been in an employment tailspin since the Government took office in March of 1980. The Liberals have cast a deaf ear on those individuals who are crying "Mayday", and the youths who manage to make it to the parachute stage are Roman candelling into the depths of despair.

During the recession, from June, 1981, to November, 1982, the number of young people with jobs decreased by 388,0000. Those youths accounted for a whopping 68.9 per cent of job losses across the board. Since the advent of recovery, such as it is, only 9.4 per cent of the employment recovery involves Canadian youth. To put this debauchery into perspective, there are 293,000 fewer young people working today than when the Government took over four years ago.

Instead of addressing the problem, the Government has not allocated any more money to youth unemployment this year over last year. The Liberals are guilty of mass pacification. Their training programs are not working, and neither are half of their graduates three months after completing those programs. This is a fine way for the Government to treat the future leaders of the nation. No wonder young people are bitter and see the Government as the enemy. It is time—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

GOVERNMENT POLICIES AFFECTING GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is nauseating to hear the Liberals attempting to woo the western farmers now that an election is forthcoming. Where were they when we needed them? They were all busy in the East, ignoring the western farmers whose importance in grain production cannot be underestimated in the Canadian economy.

Initial grain prices are going to drop by from 6 per cent to 10 per cent on August 1, which could mean 40 cents on a bushel of wheat. At the same time the farmers are producing more grain and will be shipping more than anticipated over the 31.5 million tonne cap that the Liberal Government insisted be put into place. What this implies is the increased cost for moving grain will be approximately between 20 per cent to 25 per cent on that amount.

The Government is destroying every incentive for western Canadian grain producers to become more efficient in producing more for the hungry world. The farmers cannot sustain a 10 per cent loss in selling price, and a 25 per cent increase in the cost of moving the extra production.

GARRISON DIVERSION

UNITED STATES RESPONSE TO MANITOBA GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, a delegation of government representatives from Manitoba came home from a three-day trip to Washington last week with some good news. After meeting with American officials, they were able to report that the Americans have agreed, in principle, to fund studies for alternative designs for the Garrison Diversion unit. This means that, for the first time in any public way, the American Government is acceding to Canadian requests that this massive irrigation project be redesigned so as not to affect Canadian waters on the northern side of the Continental Divide.

People in Manitoba are happy with this turn of events. We have watched for years as the Americans poured more and more money into the first phase of Garrison construction. Finally, they have agreed to spend some money on ways of altering the project to allay Canadian concerns about biota transfers.

In congratulating the provincial Government on this breakthrough, I want to extend my thanks to federal officials as well, who have been working hand in hand with their Manitoba counterparts in recent years in fighting Garrison. However, I must point out that this is far from being a complete victory. It is but one, small, albeit important, step. We will continue to monitor the situation and to press our concerns vigorously when and where needed.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT

COMMENT ON STATEMENT BY MEMBER

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to comment on the remarks of the first Progressive Conservative Member who spoke this afternoon about youth unemployment and the programs made available by the Government. I must challenge those remarks. In the February Budget, the Government earmarked one billion dollars for young people, and the Minister of Finance added another $150 million. In addition, the Government created a Ministry of Youth, and not long ago, Hon. Members heard the Minister of Youth say that a total of $30 million was being set aside for summer job creation. I would also urge my hon. friend to check the programs of the Department of Employment and Immigration, especially the Career Access Program which is aimed at helping young people who, after finishing their education, have entered the labour market, are having trouble finding work and lack financial resources. The Department of Employment and Immigration is prepared to give financial assistance to employers who hire these young people for a number of weeks. The programs are aimed at young people who are looking for a job. The Hon. Member's remarks show how ignorant Opposition Members are of the federal Government's programs and may explain why Canadians have decided to stop supporting them.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO PARLIAMENTARY INTERN KILLED WHILE CYCLING HOME

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, each year some ten young men and women from across the country are carefully selected on the basis of academic excellence and extra-curricular accomplishment to participate in the Parliamentary Internship Program. Through the Program, each of these young people is exposed to the practical day-to-day workings of Parliament, and to the Canadian political system as a whole, by working in an individual Member of Parliament's office of the intern's choice.

One such intern was Maureen Dobbin of Vancouver, British Columbia, who worked in my own office for the past two months. Before then, she worked in the office of the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin). Last Thursday, in the full bloom of youth, Maureen was killed. An automobile struck her down while she rode her bicycle home from work on Parliament Hill.

Maureen was an intelligent, conscientious, hard working, and deeply religious young woman who was a credit to her family, to the Intern Program and, indeed, if I may say so, to Parliament as a whole. A memorial service for Maureen is to be held this evening at five o'clock at St. Matthias' Anglican Church on Parkdale Avenue. I know all Members of the House join me in expressing to Maureen's father and mother, and to her brother, heartfelt condolences and our own deep sense of loss.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member speaks for every Hon. Member of the House in the words he has just spoken.

MEDICAL CARE

NEED FOR HOSPITAL ETHICS COMMITTEES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the time has come when all large hospitals and medical schools must have a formal ethics committee. With the current rapid social transformation, and with the continuing advances in medical technology and techniques, doctors and society at large face dilemmas beyond the imagination of other generations.

It is not enough, as is the custom now, for complex ethical decisions to be made at a meeting of the medical advisory board of a hospital, or by a special committee struck for a specific issue. A formal ethics committee in a hospital must consist of medical staff, social workers, religious representatives, and legal advisers. Less formal committees are more ideal in difficult situations such as making a decision as to whether or not to discontinue life support systems and should, therefore, involve only people most closely involved with the patient—the family, the doctor, and the religious adviser.

These groups in their discussions need the expertise of a person trained to deal with the ethical question, that is, an ethicist. Such people may come from a variety of professions, medicine, law, philosophy or theology. At least one year's intense training is desirable to prepare such individuals. There are only a handful of such persons at the moment in Canada. As an important matter of concern, I feel that financial support from the Government is the stimulus which is required to encourage and promote the establishment of the essential services of ethicists throughout our country.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CALL FOR DEBATE ON GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, it was quite astonishing to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in a speech last night to a conference in this building on Parliament and foreign affairs, lay the blame for inadequate discussion of foreign affairs on the Opposition. It is not the Opposition that controls the principal use of House time, but the Government. The Minister then excused the Government's lack of making Statements on Motions by saying the Opposition wants to debate them too much. Mr. Speaker, the Minister cannot have it both ways.

The real reason Statements on Motions have fallen into disrepute is that the Government cannot stand probing by the Opposition into weak and ineffectual policies. What is the Government's stand on the Central America crisis today? What is the Government's stand on the full meaning of the U.S. action on UNESCO? What is the Government's stand on the breakdown in the quest for global economic negotiations? These are but three of the many critical areas of foreign affairs that need debate in the House.

There is an urgent need today for Canada to play a stronger role in international action to put into place a new system of collective security and in implementing a strategy of international development co-operation. Coherent and comprehensive policies on these two paramount issues should be placed before the Parliament of Canada.

INDUSTRY

WESTERN RESOURCE INDUSTRIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, like many Canadians, I noted with interest the meeting of the Liberal leadership candidates in Saskatoon last week to discuss western alienation, and their solutions to that problem. By and large I found the solutions to be generalities and platitudes, and very disappointing. In the 60 seconds I have left I would like to suggest an approach.

When you look to western Canada, Mr. Speaker, you must look to the primary resources of fish, mining, forests, agriculture, oil, and gas. You have to remember that these are cyclical industries. With the exception of the Province of Manitoba, our western provincial Governments are gutting these resources. My province of British Columbia, for example, is losing its forests. There is no way that we can keep up with Japan and high technology as an alternative. Therefore, you must look at these problems with a sector by sector approach. For example, we must consider reforestation in forestry.

We must also look at the Pacific Rim to see what markets are there and where we can sell. Finally, we must look at education and planning. People in western Canada want to train, but what are they going to train for?

I suggest that we need a regional plan for western Canada to integrate industries there. We must have a new type of labour relations, perhaps based upon worker ownership. We should look at regional marketing and re-investment of profits that are taken out of the West. Finally, westerners want politicians to look into the future of Canada and tell the West with concrete policies—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

POLITICAL PARTIES

REPORTED REFERENCES TO NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY IN SEIZED GRENADIAN DOCUMENT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, a United States unclassified document reports that, during that country's rescue operation in Grenada, evidence was found titled "Report on the Meeting of Secret Regional Caucus Held in Managua, Nicaragua, January, 1983". This secret document of a subversive strategy meeting lists the NDP of Canada as a strong political ally of the revolutionaries with "good potential".

This "good" revolutionary "potential" has also been discovered by the Committee of Friends of El Salvador. As reported in an interview by the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, an armed rebel communist organization, an invitation has been extended to the Leader of the NDP to "publicize Canadian's reaction to the Salvadoran situation, and to represent social democracy" in El Salvador.

The people of Canada join me in condemning the NDP for their involvement with the Communist Marxist Leninist and revolutionary organizations, for the persual of a common goal with the Communist Party of Canada to establish a socialist society in Canada—

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. McKenzie: —as reported in the June 21, 1982, Communist Canadian Tribune, and for their 1981 resolution to terminate Canada's membership in the NATO Alliance.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

GROSS NATIONAL INCOME AND UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I am sure the Minister was disappointed at the announcement today of a 1.2 per cent drop in the gross domestic product of the country for the month of February. He must realize that it has been flat for the last six months. That explains why the jobless rate today has resulted from two upward increases in the past two months. What action does the Minister propose to reverse this trend which is putting the skids under those 1.5 million people who are trying to find a job today?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no doubt the Hon. Member knows that this year the Government is spending more than ever before directly on job creation, either through programs of the Department of Manpower and Immigration or the special recovery capital projects. Several hundreds of millions of dollars are going to be spent in those areas this year. As a matter of fact, it will be close to $1 billion. Therefore, in terms of direct expenditures, the Government has assigned more funds than ever on both the special recovery projects and the direct employment programs.

In addition, I remind my friend that the Government has provided for very generous and large incentives to the private sector to stimulate job creation in that sector. There are tax incentives which run to $2.4 billion over a period of a few years. Most of them will be taking effect this year.

I remind my friend also that, through the simplification we have introduced to the taxation of small businesses, that sector is going to benefit from a $150 million decrease in taxation provided in the last Budget.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, these direct job creation programs of the Minister are simply not working. That was the reason for the question.

BUDGET POLICIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have here the January edition of Statistics Canada's Current Economic Analysis which is riddled with signs of weakness in the economy at that time. It talks about the Conference Board index of consumer confidence dropping 20 points in the fourth quarter. It talks about the softness in investment plans in Canada, which is clearly going to lead to more unemployment here. Finally, it talks about the weakness in labour market conditions in western Canada as a result of slowing activity in the primary industry, the construction industry, and the service industry. It also reflects a weakness in investment demand.

In the face of this clear evidence of weakness in the economy before the Minister brought down his Budget, why did he proceed with the Budget which, in his own words, was intended to do nothing to change the course of the economy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to some weakness in western Canada. He knows, for instance, that one of the big factors in the last several weeks has been the lock-out in the pulp and paper industry in British Columbia. That lock-out was decided upon by the industry. That comes under the responsibility of the provincial Government. A number of steps have been taken. I am happy to see that the industry is going back to work. I hope that this will indeed produce results in the very near future. That lock-out had a very significant negative effect on British Columbia in the last several weeks.

As far as the general trend is concerned, I indicated that indeed my Budget was planned to reinforce and consolidate the positive trends that were taking place in the economy. I had concluded that this was no time to proceed to any radical change in the general thrust of government policy. I am still of that view.

As far as the general performance of the economy is concerned, I continue to believe that we will experience strong growth this year. Those forecasts are supported by private and public forecasts, both national and international.

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about projections. We are talking about what has happened in the last six months. It is not a short term phenomenon. It is something that started back in August. The Minister has his head in the sand.

The dollar has weakened. It is weak now. It hit 77.5 today, and the only response the Minister has made to that is to increase interest rates. That in itself led to further weakness in the already weakening economy over the past six months.

Will the Minister not admit that this high interest rate policy will only add to the plight of the 1.5 million unemployed men, women, and young Canadians who are looking for a job today?

● (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that we do not have a high interest rate policy; we have had a policy for the lowest possible interest rates in this country. As a matter of fact, if the Hon. Member wants to check the facts, today the prime rate in Canada is half a point below that of the United States. This is in spite of the fact that a few years ago it was as much as 4 per cent more than the United States. Certainly the policy that has been pursued over the last few years has been very much in the direction of a lower interest rate policy and the lowest possible interest rate policy. I would be very interested to hear from my friend what interest rate policy he would like to follow himself.

As far as the dollar is concerned, indeed the Canadian dollar has weakened against the United States dollar, but I would like to remind him that if one takes the weighted average measure of overseas currency during the last month, the Canadian dollar has increased by 2.1 per cent.

The Canadian dollar declined 0.9 per cent against the U.S. dollar since March 30, but it has increased by 4.9 per cent against the Deutschmark, 2.9 per cent against sterling, 4.5 per cent against the Swiss franc, and 0.9 per cent with respect to the yen. This is what has happened to those other currencies vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar during the same period: the Canadian dollar had declined less than the Deutschmark, less than sterling, less than the Swiss franc, and was at the same level as the yen.

DOLLAR'S EXCHANGE VALUE—REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. If the Minister is so proud of the activity of our dollar on foreign exchange markets, why is he pouring hundreds of millions of dollars into the market to support the dollar? The fact of the matter is that our dollar has dropped from 81.5 cents to 77.5 cents and is going down. The only response by the Minister is to raise interest rates. He knows that interest rates are rising dramatically.

Surely the direction of the country is at fault. Surely we should have a new Budget, a new proposal and a new, honest projection. When will the Minister produce new projections and new spending controls that somehow change the economy around and get at the fundamental weaknesses of the Canadian economy?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this a good example of the contradictory policies being recommended by the Progressive Conservatives. The Hon. Member who spoke previously asked what we were going to do to create more jobs and complained that the Government was not spending enough money to help the unemployed. Now we have the next Progressive Conservative Member pointing out that new spending controls should be introduced, that expenditures must be cut back, and so forth.

The Hon. Member knows perfectly well that in Canada, interest rates have not gone up as much as they did recently in the United States. He knows perfectly well, for instance, that today, the prime rate is 11.5 per cent in Canada and 12 per cent in the United States. He also knows perfectly well that in Canada, we cannot have an interest rate policy that is substantially different from that in the United States, and that we cannot afford to let interest rates in Canada drop substantially below those in the United States. I challenge the Hon. Member to come up with a policy and to make a specific proposal that would achieve this. He knows perfectly well it is not a realistic solution.

[English]

MINISTER'S PLANS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, is the reason the Minister is looking for another job because the going has got tough and he will do a John Turner, and abandon the finance portfolio to someone else?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not looking for another job. I have been very honoured and privileged to be asked to let my name stand for a very prestigious position, and I have agreed to do that.

NON-PAYMENT OF TAXES BY HIGH INCOME EARNERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will understand the kindness with which I say, God help the world community if he is accepted. I have a question for the Minister of Finance on this May Day, a symbolic day for ordinary people all over the world. Today is also the day in Canada which comes 24 hours after families have had a last chance to submit their income tax returns.

My question concerns income taxes. Please note, Mr. Minister, that in 1981 there were 239 Canadians earning an average of $635,000 who paid no income tax. There were another 1,200 Canadians earning $100,000 who paid no income tax. At the same time an unemployed man or woman with one dependant would have to pay $600 in income tax this year.

If there is any compassion, any sense of justice left in the Liberal Government, will the Minister bring in a measure before we recess to ensure that wealthy Canadians at last pay their share of taxes?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member looks at the record and compares the situation in Canada with that of other industrialized countries, he will find that the system in Canada in terms of distributing the tax load amongst the various levels of income in the country is as fair as that of any other industrialized country. He says that some lower income Canadians are required to pay so much. It will depend on how they arrange their affairs under the Income Tax Act. There are provisions in the Income Tax Act that provide, for instance, that one can claim losses in one year against one's income, and is dispensed from taxes in that year, but is required to pay in the following years as one is making profits.

There are a number of provisions that have been passed by Parliament, of which I am sure the Hon. Member has been made aware. I would invite him to examine those provisions. He will find that the arrangement is that those who have income are entitled to a number of deductions under the law, but are also required eventually to pay those taxes as the claims that they are making in a particular year, whether in terms of depreciation, claims against losses, et cetera, are used up and they have to pay taxes.

Mr. Broadbent: That answer is just short of being absurd. The Minister ought to know that an unemployed man or woman who must pay $600 in income tax has almost nothing under this law provided by a Liberal Government by which they can provide for any deductions at all. They have to pay their share. We are saying that it is time millionaires in Canada paid their share. That is the point.

UNITED STATES TAX SYSTEM—REQUEST FOR SIMILAR PROVISION IN CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has suggested a comparison with other countries. First, I would say that there are at least a half dozen countries in western Europe that have a tax system that is more fair. However, with reference to the United States, a country closer to home, I would ask him if he is aware that even under President Reagan the wealthy must pay a minimum of 20 per cent tax on their income? If the Minister is concerned about any justice at all, will he at least bring in a requirement that upper income Canadians have to pay a certain minimum of their tax burden so that all other Canadians who must pay their taxes do not pay the whole load in this country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have indeed examined in great detail the provisions of the American legislation in this regard. I have examined this very point very carefully, and have considered it as an option. I decided not to proceed with it when I found the number of loopholes that exist in the United States in their regime. The number of advantages to the wealthy in their system and the comparison of advantages to the better off in the United States appear to show that there are significantly more advantages in the United States than in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister has frequently been accused of being unfair or unjust, but very rarely has it been suggested that he is talking nonsense. With respect, I say that is what he was just doing. I indicated that in the United States every rich person must pay a minimum of 20 per cent. In Canada, rich people get away without paying a cent. We in this Party think that is unfair. We think it should be changed.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Would the Minister agree if we have, as I suggested, 239 Canadians earning an average of $635,000 who pay no tax, and another 1,200 Canadians who earn $100,000 and pay no tax, that their taxes have to be made up by ordinary workers, and by the unemployed, and by pensioners? If the Minister of Finance thinks that if one group who pays nothing has to be compensated by others, in effect subsidized by others, is he telling us that this is just? Is this what the Liberal Party believes in? Is this the new Liberalism? Or is new Liberalism merely a slogan, a covering for the old Liberal injustice?

Mr. Nielsen: Ask Roberts.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about a minimum of 20 per cent. The question is 20 per cent of what? That is what I told the Hon. Member in the previous answer. Indeed, once you look at the American legislation and look at the definition of income, you end up with a situation where that so-called minimum is one that has a very different notion or concept than it would have in Canada if we were to follow the same rule. I invite my hon. friend to examine the American legislation very carefully and to inquire, to investigate, and to study the matter, as I have studied it. He will, I hope, come to the same conclusion that I have come to, that this is not an appropriate route to follow for this country when you look at our whole legislative arrangement and our Income Tax Act.

The Hon. Member talks about a number of people not paying taxes as if these people, year after year, were not paying taxes. That is not the case, Mr. Speaker. Maybe they were not paying taxes this year because they had accumulated losses or depreciation, or had investments which they were entitled to deduct. By not paying taxes this year it will mean that they will be paying taxes next year, the year after, or the year after, because the depreciation you take this year is something you have to account for later on. This is the situation under the Income Tax Act, and it has been the situation in practically every other industrialized country of which I am aware.

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—ROLE OF JIM MACDONALD

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, on April 11 the Prime Minister, in a very unequivocal statement to me in the House, for which I congratulated him, said:

> But of course there should be no active involvement of such staff—

That is, ministerial or exempt staff—

> —in the leadership campaign in an overwhelming way, or any other important way, without that staff either resigning or asking for a leave of absence.

Yesterday I believe the Prime Minister was in the House when he heard his Minister of Justice, of all people, indicate that his publicly announced leadership campaign manager, one Jim MacDonald, is still on the government payroll and will be until at least the end of June—and that is significant—through the laundering technique of being paid as a ministerial speechwriter from a paper company which, in turn, is receiving government funds. Has the Prime Minister taken any action, or will he, to terminate this very obvious attempt, manoeuvre, to get around the Prime Minister's own very worthy guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the exchange yesterday between the Hon. Member and the Hon. Minister of Justice. I understood the Minister to say that Mr. MacDonald was not being paid by the Government, that he was a participant in a company which did contract with the Government, and that company was receiving money from the Government on contract, but that Mr. MacDonald himself was not. That is what I understood the Minister to say yesterday. I see the Hon. Member nods in assent. If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I can see that is untoward in that.

I am sure even in the Tory leadership campaign there were active people in various companies dealing with the Government, whether it be the public utility companies, or the Bell Telephone company. I am sure some of the corporate elite supported Mr. Mulroney's campaign. The fact that the company to which they belonged was contracting with the Government did not cast any doubts on the conduct of those members. In other words, if the facts are as I understood them, and as the Hon. Member understood them, I do not see that they contravene the guidelines.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, really relates, I suppose, to the spirit of the whole necessary activity of establishing conflict of interest guidelines. I merely ask the Prime Minister to put his mind to a manœuvre that obviously circumvents the spirit of those guidelines. Unless the Prime Minister is asking for each of the leadership campaign candidates not only to reject his policies but also to reject the spirit of this own guidelines, surely the spirit is that there should be no appearance of conflict as well as no actual conflict? There are other cases, Sir. Here is a very obvious one in which that spirit is being circumvented. It is a very easy manœuvre. Surely the Prime Minister still has enough power in his Cabinet to indicate that this sort of thing should stop. We are using taxpayers' funds to further a leadership campaign, and that should not happen.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member recognizes that my guidelines apply to ministerial staff. Mr. MacDonald ceased, quite some time ago, to be ministerial staff. That should settle the matter of my guidelines.

There is another question of whether companies which contract with the Government should have none of their people working politically in a campaign of one Party or another. That is another matter. I have no power to direct companies to permit their staff to act in that way.

Mr. Shields: Not much.

Mr. Trudeau: Certainly my power is over Ministers and their staff, but not employees of companies which happen to contract with the Government.

SPORTS

REVIEW OF FEDERATIONS' PLANS

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport. In a letter from the Minister sent to the individual amateur sports federations, in which he said he has approved an advance of fitness and amateur sport contributions for this fiscal year, he states "it is my intention to review the total plan and contribution request for each national organization on an individual basis."

With some 62 sports organizations, will the Minister tell the House how long this individual, comprehensive review will take to complete, and will he assure the House that by delaying further the release of the balance of the funds to the sports organizations he is not jeopardizing our athletes' competitiveness in the Summer Olympics, and internationally?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may correct my hon. friend and say that Canada has more than 62, in fact it has 70 amateur sport for federations and 15 for physical fitness. All we did was ask 22 federations located on Vanier Street to observe and implement the provisions of the Official Languages Act, and federations receiving 50 per cent of their budget from the federal Government and with 20 per cent Francophones among their membership, to try to provide services in French. We did not ask employees to become bilingual. We did not ask the coach to become bilingual. We merely asked these federations to provide services to Canadian athletes in the language of their choice. That is what we asked them to do!

[English]

Mrs. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is in effect holding the sports federations hostage.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER UNDERTAKE CONSULTATIONS

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, the Sport Federation Executive has on repeated occasions attempted to meet with the Minister, has attempted to consult with the Minister, and has attempted to discuss this and other issues with the Minister, but the Minister repeatedly refuses to respond.

Will the Minister assure the House that he will immediately consult with the Sport Federation Executive and resolve this matter in a fair and conciliatory manner, and stop using the threatening and almost blackmailing tactics which he has publicly demonstrated in the past?

• (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I may be mistaken, but there seem to be two different positions within the Progressive Conservative Party, one being that Francophones and Anglophones in this country are entitled to receive services in their own language . . . Or else the Party Opposite is being hypocritical—

Some Hon. Members: That's right!

Mr. Olivier: —Mr. Speaker, what we are doing is giving all Canadian athletes, from Moncton to Halifax to Vancouver, a chance to receive services in their own language. Mr. Speaker, we are also providing funding in the amount of $30 million per year, which comes out of our taxes, and it is being given to people who are entitled to receive these services in their mother tongue. If you do not agree with that, stand up and tell the country!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM FRANCE

HOUSING

MORTGAGE RATE PROTECTION PLAN

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Could he inform the House when he will introduce legislation to give effect to two measures announced in the Budget Speech, first, the mortgage rate protection plan and, second, the proposal to give borrowers the right to prepay their mortgages at any time?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, indeed we have had extensive consultations with the housing and construction industry, with consumer groups and with financial institutions. These consultations have been concluded. The legislation is being drafted. I hope the legislation will be introduced in the House before the end of May and that it will receive the prompt consideration of the House and the support of all Parties so that it can come into effect before the summer.

I would like to add that under the budget proposals every mortgage holder who has taken out a mortgage after March 1 will be eligible for the program when it comes into effect. Those who have taken out mortgages since March 1 will be eligible under the new program as soon as it is approved by Parliament.

REQUEST FOR FREEZE ON MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I am sure he will have noted over the weekend that Richard Thomson, Chairman of the Toronto-Dominion Bank, indicated that he expected the prime rate in Canada to reach 15 per cent within the next 12 months. At the same time, Earl Bederman, Vice-President and Chief Economist for The Permanent, said:

People have been getting bargains in mortgages. They're damn cheap in relation to other rates.

Taking both of those statements into account, and recognizing that at the present interest rate only 14.5 per cent of all renters in Canada will be able to qualify for an average mortgage, will the Minister, in anticipation of the projected increases which both those individuals are telling us are inevitable, freeze mortgage interest rates for the next six months in order to ensure that we will no longer tolerate the kind of gouging which has gone on through the financial institutions of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is rather interesting that the New Democratic Party should rely on the presidents of Canada's major banks to tell them what is going to happen during the next twelve months.

[English]

Mr. Deans: We are not going to the banking leaders in order to find out what will happen. We have been predicting that this would happen, for the better part of the last year.

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL TREATMENT OF MORTGAGE RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister take the necessary steps to ensure that mortgage interest rates are not permitted to rise to the 15 per cent, 16 per cent and 17 per cent levels predicted by these banking leaders? Will he do what was done in the United States and separate mortgage interest rates from other interest rates to ensure that those who want to buy, or who want to maintain ownership of the homes they have purchased, will be able to do so within their means?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that in the past, the Government has implemented measures to help those in greatest need and protect them against high mortgage rates.

I pointed out that we did not expect increases on the scale mentioned by the Hon. Member. In the past, when mortgage rates rose to excessively high levels, we showed that this Government was prepared to take the necessary measures to ensure that those in greatest need would be protected.

I would remind the Hon. Member that our last Budget included a proposal for a mortgage rate protection program that would provide protection against rate increases when mortgages are renewed.

I would therefore urge the Hon. Member to support this legislation when it is introduced in the House, instead of adopting the purely negative and pessimistic attitudes of the New Democratic Party.

[English]

TRUST COMPANY'S REQUEST THAT MORTGAGORS WAIVE RIGHTS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one of the Hon. Member for Trinity and is directed to the Minister of Finance. Is the Minister aware that at least one financial institution—and I am speaking of Sterling Trust—is presently asking mortgagors to waive any rights they may have under the legislation which is to be brought in with respect to mortgage bonuses effective March 1? At least Sterling Trust is asking people renewing mortgages to waive their rights. What is the position of the Government when financial institutions—and there may be more—are asking ordinary Canadians facing mortgage interest rate hikes to waive their rights to discharge without a bonus?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this particular case nor of the case mentioned by the Hon. Member in connection with Sterling Trust.

I find it rather surprising that a trust company should resort to such measures at this time. However, I must say that I hope people who deal with these companies will not hesitate to consult other trust companies that do not resort to such measures.

At the present time, there is no lack of funds on the money market for mortgage loans, and I hope that people who find themselves in a situation where lenders impose such terms upon renewal, or prior to approval, of certain mortgage loans will not hesitate to seek out other institutions to obtain more favourable terms.

TRADE

SHOE IMPORT QUOTAS—GOVERNMENT DECISION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. A long time ago, the Minister received a request from the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Canada for an extension of import quotas. Can the Minister inform the House whether his Government has made a decision, in response to repeated requests from the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Canada?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have not yet reached a decision in this respect.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROVIDE DETAILS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I wish to thank the Minister for his eminently clear answer. In that case, can the Minister inform the House when he will be in a position to reply to the Association and to thousands of employees who are very anxious to know the Government's answer? When will the Minister be able to inform the House, as concisely as he did just now, on what day the Government intends to make this decision?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Cabinet will be considering the situation in a matter of weeks.

STATUS OF WOMEN

SITUATION OF BATTERED WIVES

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, responsible for the Status of Women. In May 1982, as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, I tabled a report on "Violence in the Family", which dealt more specifically with the situation of battered wives.

One of the report's objectives has been met, which was to make Canadians aware of a situation to which no one can remain indifferent. In the light of the testimony received, Committee members made seventeen recommendations which included financing transition homes, a research program, setting up agencies and also the subject of federal-provincial relations in this area.

Five departments were involved in the report's recommendations.

Some Hon. Members: Order! Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order! Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to put his question?

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised the Members opposite are not interested in the contents of this report.

I would like to ask the Minister responsible what her attitude is and what the Government intends to do about the specific recommendations for the departments which I mentioned earlier.

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I say at the outset that I am somewhat disturbed by the derision with which the Hon. Member's comments were greeted, because it is a particularly important report. I would like to assure the Hon. Member that a great deal of work has been done as a result of the standing committee. All 17 recommendations have either been implemented or are being actively pursued. I should like to point out that a federal-provincial working group has been put together and will be making a final report at Niagara-on-the-Lake at the end of this month. That report will be made public at that time.

IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a supplementary question to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. It is two years since that committee filed this report. We have heard many comments from the Minister and her colleagues that sometime there is going to be action. I want to know when there is going to be action. For two years there has been absolutely nothing.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): On the contrary, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands has once again not done her homework. As I said, all 17 recommendations are either under active pursuit or are in place. Indeed, the work that is being carried on by the federal-provincial working group has been received enthusiastically by my provincial counterparts. I would advise the Hon. Member to come in for a briefing to see exactly what has been done. She would then know what she is talking about for a change.

Miss MacDonald: There has been absolutely nothing done, and you should be ashamed.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY LIMITED—DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEE

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. With regard to the privatization of Northern Transportation Company, independent appraisers have now gone into the company. Will the Minister explain why a 30-year employee, who headed up property development, building design and maintenance, who had a very good understanding of the real work of that company, was fired without cause? Why was the employee fired just when independent appraisers are going in to evaluate the work of Northern Transportation Company?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member may or may not know, the reason why we have an independent appraisal is because we had taken a decision along with the board of the company to offer the Crown corporation for sale to private sponsors. It was felt that under those circumstances it would be important to have an outside appraisal of the various costs and assets of the existing company. The outside appraisal has nothing to do with whatever management decision was taken in relation to this individual. If the Hon. Member refers the information he has to me, I will be glad to look into it.

EVALUATION OF COMPANY ASSETS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Transport assure this House that the independent appraiser will evaluate the company, not on the basis of book value of property and assets but on the market value? The book value assets are listed in the annual report at $49 million, whereas the property alone of Northern Transportation has a value of $150 million to $250 million. He should be aware, particularly when—

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member ask his question?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I always respect the opinions of the Hon. Member for Athabasca. I am sure his comments relating to what should be considered as part of the evaluation will be referred to the company that has been commissioned to undertake that appraisal. Considering that they are the professionals in the field and will be following the normal accounting financial practices, I suggest we leave the appraisal up to them.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the recent decision of the Commissioners of Internal Economy, all Liberal Cabinet Ministers, to appeal the Labour Relations Board decision to allow Parliament Hill employees to bargain collectively and exercise the democratic rights enjoyed by all other employees in Canada. Is it the policy of the Government to subvert the democratic rights of this group of employees by blocking the certification bid, without the consent of Parliament, I might add—

Mr. Speaker: This is not a matter which can be subject to questioning this way. The matter is sub judice.

INCOME TAX ACT

REVIEW OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. At page 13 of his Budget of February 15 the Minister indicated that he was going to do another review of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act and that he intended to establish a consultative group. Has the consultative group been set up and, if so, who is on it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must advise the Hon. Member that a number of preliminary steps have already been taken within my department and that I should be able to announce the composition of this task force very shortly.

[English]

TIMING OF REVIEW

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in the House in February the Minister indicated that he hoped it would be done quickly and that it would be reporting back within three months. Is he deferring action and ignoring the plight and the interest of farmers, or why could he not get this done a little more quickly?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I already answered this when I replied to the first question.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

COMPOSITION OF BENEFIT PAYMENTS COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. The Minister has established a committee under Mr. Justice Hall to look at the question of payment of benefits under the Crown legislation. There have been widespread complaints across Western Canada that the composition of the—

Mr. Benjamin: Which Hall?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Gordon Hall—that the composition of this committee does not reflect the interests of western grain farmers. Is the Minister receptive to enlarging the committee he has established with respect to the method of payment of the Crow benefit? Is he amenable to the suggestion of having more producers on that committee?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is well known that the Hon. Member and I probably read different reports coming from different sources. My estimate is that the composition of that committee has been quite widely applauded in western Canada for the basic reason that they are independent and will be able to give a rational objective of the different proposals relating to the method of payment. The Hon. Member knows how difficult it would be to have found senior representatives of the producers community who were not in some way deeply involved in the debate which has gone on for the past two years. He knows full well that those individuals who were appointed represent both knowledge of the grain business and the general economy of the country and, at the same time, have not been in any way attached in a deeply inventive way to one point of view or the other. That is what we want to achieve, an independent, objective evaluation of the different methods, and not to have one side or the other predominate.

REPRESENTATION OF WESTERN GRAIN PRODUCERS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, the western grain producers do not expect to dominate this committee. Rather, they would like some reasonable representation on the committee because only they understand the problems of western Canada, as the Minister will appreciate. On behalf of western grain producers I would again ask the Minister whether or not he is amenable to increasing the membership on that committee so that western grain producers could have reasonable representation.

• (1500)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to give the same answer to the same question. No, I do not intend to increase the membership, but I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that the points of view and interests of the different groups in western Canada as well as other parts of Canada will be well represented as these different groups will certainly be consulted. However, I still believe that it is important to have a group that, while knowledgeable, has not been a part of the past debate and competition, so that Parliament may receive a very honest, rational, objective assessment of what the best method of payment might be.

PETITION

MR. WADDELL—COMPUTER-GENERATED TELEPHONE SOLICITING

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) on Monday, April 30, 1984, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. YURKO—PRINTING OF SPEECH IN HANSARD

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has received notice of matters to be raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko).

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of personal privilege which affects my performance in this House. As a Member of this House, I fully expect that when I rise to speak to the assembly, what I say is accurately recorded and then distributed from the House through Hansard to thousands of Canadians including my constituents.

Yesterday, Monday, April 30, 1984, I had the privilege of speaking on second reading of Bill C-231, an Act to amend the Canadian Constitution Act in regard to the tenure of senators. This was my Private Member's Bill. I spent hours preparing this—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is making the point that there is apparently some concern about whether or not a proper version of Hansard was produced yesterday with regard to his remarks. The Chair will certainly take note of that and investigate it. I recognize the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant).

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate that I have a chance to put my point of privilege before you.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his point concerning Hansard.

Mr. Yurko: I have not made my point.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member cannot make a lengthy speech. The Chair will look into his complaint and will take the appropriate measures.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I intend to have my say.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please resume his seat? The Chair has indicated that the Hon. Member has raised a matter which will be investigated.

Mr. Yurko: I expect the House as well as you to hear my point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the Hon. Member please resume his seat? I recognize the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake.

Mr. Yurko: You have not heard my question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

MR. SARGEANT—STAFF SALARY BUDGETS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which relates to a memo that I received from you, Mr. Speaker, relaying a decision that was made by the Commissioners of Internal Economy which changed the way in which Members of Parliament could administer their staff salary budgets. I would like to raise two points with regard to that matter, Mr. Speaker.

As we all know, Members' staffs are not well paid when compared with persons doing the same or similar jobs but directly employed by the House of Commons or by Cabinet Ministers—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is seeking to raise a matter of privilege which is not a matter of privilege. He may have a grievance. If so, the appropriate channel is the Management and Members' Services Committee. It is not a matter of privilege before the House.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: Statements by Ministers. I recognize the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight).

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On checking the Order Paper, I find that there is no record of any changes being proposed to the western grain stabilization fund. I would presume that the Government, in ordering the business of the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We were dealing with Statements by Ministers.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I was waiting a minute to see whether the Minister might say something.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Point of order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member cannot repeat the matter that he attempted to raise before. The Hon. Member brought to the attention of the House his concern about an improper version of Hansard. The Chair has ruled that it is sufficiently serious and the Chair has instructed that the matter will be investigated. The Hon. Member cannot make another speech on the matter.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member on a point of order which presumably is very different from the matter he previously raised.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that the "blues" specifically recorded what I said last night but Hansard has a totally different version.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has raised a question about whether or not a proper version of Hansard has been produced. He cannot labour that point any further.

Mr. Yurko: Yes, I can.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please resume his seat?

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 262, 662, 739, 762 and 772.

[Text]

HEARING AIDS

Question No. 262—Mr. Young:

1. Did the Department of National Health and Welfare conduct a review of the feasibility of developing standards for magnetic induction for hearing aids with regard to their compatibility with hearing aids and, if so (a) has the review been completed (b) will the results be made public?

2. Does the Department plan to address the question of international hearing aid standards?

3. Did the Department have an advisory committee on hearing aids and, if so, does the Department plan to re-establish the Committee?

4. Does the Department plan to require all hearing aid manufacturers selling their products in Canada to publish in their specification data the frequency response and distortion measurements of the induction coil of their hearing aids?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Department of National Health and Welfare conducted a study of the feasibility of re-introducing mandatory standards for hearing aids under the medical devices regulations of the Food and Drug Act. Such standards would include provisions for electro-magnetic coupling to telephones. (a) The study was completed on September 12, 1983. (b) Copies of the study report are available on request from the Health Protection Branch.

2. Since the majority of hearing aid brands sold in Canada are imported, the question of international hearing aid standards and their compatibility with Canadian regulations will be given careful consideration.

3. No. The Department of National Health and Welfare has never had an advisory committee on hearing aids and does not at present plan to establish one. The Department of Communications (DOC) has recently created an Ad Hoc Technical Committee on Telephone Access for the Hearing Impaired. An officer of the Department of National Health and Welfare is a member of the DOC committee. The question of telephone-hearing aid compatibility will be a major part of the committee's work.

4. If regulations for hearing aids are introduced, requirements for disclosure of technical performance specifications will be included.

OLD AGE SECURITY PENSION

Question No. 662—Mr. Knowles:

1. On February 14, 1984 were any persons in (a) Canada (b) each province, in receipt of the Old Age Security pension and, if so, how many?

2. Of these recipients how many persons in (a) Canada (b) each province were in receipt of the Guaranteed Income Supplement and, of these, in each case, how many were in receipt of the full amount?

3. For (a) Canada (b) each province, what average amount was received as a Guaranteed Income Supplement by recipients of the Old Age Security pension?

4. Do the answers to the above questions take into consideration persons living outside Canada who are in receipt of the Old Age Security pension and, if so, how many of such persons are there, and if they are considered as belonging to the various provinces, what is the number for each province?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes.

FUNDING FOR EMERGENCY SHELTER

Question No. 739—Mr. Fretz:

Did the Government approve funding for an emergency shelter for selected officials in New Brunswick and, if so (a) what will be the final cost to the taxpayer (b) who will be provided shelter (c) what are the criteria for the selection of those sheltered?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The project has been approved in principle only; no funds have been allocated as yet.

(a) Preliminary estimates indicate a cost of approximately $3.3 million.

(b) The basic purpose of the facility is to provide fallout protected living and working accommodation to people carrying out functions essential to the continuation of established authority and the provision of essential services in the event of a nuclear attack on North America. The facility will also serve as an operating centre for peacetime emergencies.

(c) The criteria are determined by the functions to be performed as described in (b) above.

FUEL CONSUMPTION DAIRY

Question No. 762—Mr. Fretz:

1. Was a Fuel Purchase Diary published by Statistics Canada and, if so (a) how many were published (b) what was the total cost to the taxpayer?

2. Was consideration given to a less costly method and (a) if so, what was the result (b) if not, for what reason?

3. What percentage of people surveyed answered the questions?

4. Was a bilingual Diary sent to persons who speak only English and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

1. The Fuel Consumption Diary is a data collection document provided to potential respondents to the Fuel Consumption Survey conducted by Statistics Canada on behalf of Transport Canada. Respondents are requested to record basic information about the vehicle and details for each fuel purchase made during a one-month reference period. One copy of the diary is mailed to the principal driver of each of 1,780 sampled vehicles per month. The unit cost of the diary is approximately $1.50, resulting in a monthly cost of $2,670.

2. Consideration was given to alternative data collection methodologies. Given the identified information requirements, the use of the diary was deemed to be the most cost effective method.

3. Of the persons requested to complete the Fuel Purchase Diary, approximately 70 per cent provided the required information.

4. Bilingual diaries were sent to all survey respondents to allow the respondent to provide the requested information in the official language of his/her choice.

PENSIONS FOR WIDOWS OF VETERANS

Question No. 772—Mr. Towers:

What provisions are made for pensions for widows of deceased veterans and what is the (a) total number of pensioners (b) number of pensioners by province (c) total amount spent on such pensions (d) the average amount of such pensions?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The Pension Act, which is administered by the Canadian Pension Commission, provides for payment for a full widow's pension to the surviving spouse of a deceased member of the Armed Forces if it can be established that his death was attributable to military service, or if he was or should have been in receipt of pension for a disability or combination of disabilities assessed at 48 per cent or higher at the time of his death. The Pension Act also provides for the payment of a proportionate pension to the eligible surviving spouse of a pensioner who, at the time of death, was in receipt of a pension paid for a disability assessed between 5 per cent and 47 per cent.

(a) 21,489 full widow pensioners, 19,040 proportionate widow pensioners, (b) data on widows not maintained in accordance with province of residence, (c) $238,971,408 per year, (d) full widow pensioners $815 per month, proportionate widow pensioners $127 per month.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Evans: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to be able to speak on this Bill today. I have had the opportunity to read Hon. Members' remarks as recorded in Hansard and to hear some comments made by Hon. Members about the Bill. I do not choose to repeat a number of those points today.

I believe it is of unusual interest to note that when we speak of Crown corporations these days, we are for the first time in our history speaking more and more of Crown corporations in general. That was not our practice in the past. Historically, Crown corporations have been brought to the attention of the public and discussed in the House primarily in specific terms. We have discussed a specific Bill or a specific matter relating to a specific Crown corporation for a specific purpose. By and large we have not for many, many years had any significant debate regarding what is to be the role, function and purpose of Crown corporations.

Throughout our history, Mr. Speaker, Canadians have been very pragmatic about what Crown corporations are supposed to do. We have not engaged in any excessive ideology about them. We have throughout time tried to organize Crown corporations to do specific jobs. These specific jobs were primarily jobs relating either to a specific social objective or very often relating to questions of economic growth. In the early part of this century in particular, we found that Crown corporations—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Could we have order in the House, please?

Mr. Crombie: Thank you for doing your best, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, Crown corporations have traditionally been used for specific purposes, either for pursuing social goals or economic growth. In the early part of the century in particular, Crown corporations were primarily concerned with economic growth. That is why when we come to a debate on the role, purpose, function and accountability of Crown corporations, we are not using language which we have ever used before.

The Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada have been able to depend upon the understanding of most Canadians that Crown corporations were established for a good and sufficient purpose—to achieve either social or economic goals. That, of course, lasted until the alarm bell was sounded by the Auditor General's report of 1976. As in Lewis Carroll's novel, Crown corporations just "growed up like Topsy". There was no coherent sense of what their purpose was in a new time, in a new age, in the 1970s.

• (1510)

It is worthwhile repeating the sentence that the Auditor General used in 1976 in his annual report. It is simple but devastating. He said that we now have a "weak and ineffective control of public spending through Crown corporations". That was in 1976. His report to Parliament referred to the weak and ineffective control of public spending through Crown corporations.

Six years later he had this to say in his report of 1983:

> Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

The Auditor General's report of 1983 hearkens back to his earlier report of 1976. He noted that during the six-year period, nothing was done to improve the situation. It was worthwhile for him to note, as he did in his report, just where we had been for the last 20 years in terms of the size and the value of Crown corporations.

In 1962, 22 years ago, there were 28 Crown corporations in this country which controlled $8.4 billion worth of assets. There were 28 Crown corporations; $8.4 billion worth of assets. Twenty years later, in his report of 1983, he noted that there were over 300 Crown corporations employing 263,000 people, with assets of $74 billion and liabilities of $63 billion. We had gone that far in 20 years with almost no debate on what was the purpose, function and accountability of Crown corporations.

That is why we on this side of the House have been saying to the Government for years—certainly for the six years that I have been here: "You have heard the Auditor General's report, you have read the report, you have established the Lambert Commission, and you have heard from the Standing Committee on Public Accounts". Why has nothing been done? All the boards, commissions and special purpose bodies that were established in order to deal with the problem were totally ignored by the Government.

That is why we looked forward to Bill C-24 when it came in. We were looking to see how close it would come to a similar Bill which was established by the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) in 1979-80.

As other Members of the House have noted, the Bill that was brought in four years ago by the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead was vastly superior to the Bill that is before us. The current Bill deals not at all with the one fundamental question that most people walking the streets of the country, if they have any interest in Crown corporations at all, simply want to know, namely: Who is responsible, who is accountable, for federal Crown corporations in Canada? It is a question that might be asked at the provincial level where there are many, many Crown corporations as well. Indeed, there are public utilities at the municipal level which carry out similar functions to that of Crown corporations.

The questions that people ask not only refer to financial management. The real question is: Who is accountable? Is it the Minister? Is it the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray)? Is it a specific Minister in the House? In Bill C-24, is the Minister made responsible? Can Canadians now say: "We know the Minister is responsible"? If you read the Bill, the power and responsibility of the Minister is totally stood on its head because the Minister has responsibility but no power. This Bill takes power away from the Minister and gives it to the Cabinet.

If it is not the Minister who is responsible, then maybe it is the board of directors of the corporations. That is not true either. If you read the Bill you will note that the powers which would normally be assumed by a board of directors are also sucked away and given to Cabinet. If it is not the Minister and it is not the President of the Treasury Board and it is not the board of directors, then maybe it could be Parliament. After all, when the Auditor General first of all sounded his alarm in 1976, it was Parliament he was talking about. Seven years later in his 1983 report—since his former report had been ignored by the Government—he said on page 15:

> I remain concerned—

Seven years later he is still concerned because nothing has been done.

> —about the Government's and Parliament's monitoring and controlling of Crown-owned corporations. During the past year, circumstances in a number of Crown-owned corporations have further illustrated the existing deficiencies. For simplicity, I describe only the events involving Canadair Limited and the Canada Development Investment Corporation . . . to illustrate the continuing accountability deficiencies.

He goes on to point out that we are talking about six basic ways to control corporations. First of all is authorizing and mandate, financing, directing, controlling, reporting and auditing. I will not go through all of those points. The questions related to reporting, directing, auditing and controlling have been dealt with by other Members.

I want to talk about the first one. The Auditor General's report makes it clear that when he talks about accountability, he talks about authority and mandating. That is the best example that we can use and that is what I would like to talk about. He indicated that the essence of accountability, in the first instance, finds itself not in financial management, important though that may be; not in reporting mechanisms, important though they may be; not in financing frameworks, important though they may be. The essence of accountability for Crown corporations lies, in the first instance, on the ability of Parliament to control the authority and the mandating for the establishment and creation of a Crown corporation. That is the point.

In the first instance, at birth, is the right and ability of Parliament to hold Crown corporations accountable to the people of this country. It is in the first creation of the Crown corporation that this must be established. I looked at the Bill to see whether or not the Government had taken that first fundamental step. Did the Government in Bill C-24 provide for the important thing? As the Auditor General understands and as everyone understands, the important thing is for Parliament to be able to control the terms of reference for the creation of a Crown corporation. Indeed, that is such an important and fundamental principle that the Minister put it in his press release; he said that Crown corporations should be created by Parliament. The Bill does not clearly state that. It is not honestly exposed by the Government. There are no less than at least four ways, even with this Bill, that Crown corporations can be established without this Parliament even having a look see or a say in it. First, Mr. Speaker, there is no authority in this Bill for this Parliament to have anything to say about the creation of Crown corporations which are subsidiaries of current parent corporations. As anyone knows who has looked at the literature, the biggest proliferation of Crown corporations has been from parent corporations establishing subsidiary corporations. Bill C-24 does not change that one bit. Crown corporations can go on creating subsidiaries as long as they want without reference to this Parliament.

● (1520)

Second, Mr. Speaker, a Crown corporation can be established without reference to this Parliament if its power derives from an already existing Act of Parliament. And there is an already existing Act of Parliament which allows a Crown corporation to be established without having to come to this Parliament. Some of the most enormous Crown corporations can be established that way. That is indisputable. Large Crown corporations can be established without reference to this Parliament simply because there is an ancient authority in an existing Act of Parliament.

Mr. Peterson: That is not true.

Mr. Crombie: It is true. Third, Mr. Speaker, a Crown corporation can be created by a special Bill, and in doing so the Government knew that it had to come to Parliament. That is why, Mr. Speaker, in that part of the Act where it knew it had to come to Parliament, it limited debate. In creating a special Bill where it knew it had to come to Parliament, it decided it was going to limit debate; and if you read the Bill, Mr. Speaker, you will see it has limited debate to seven hours in the House of Commons and to 30 days in committee. Government can create any corporation it likes in a new Bill and this Bill contains a clause which closes down Parliament's ability to debate it beyond seven hours in the House and beyond 30 days in committee.

Fourth, Mr. Speaker, there is still a very open question with which the Government has not yet dealt, and that is whether or not this Bill is stronger than Section 16 of the Interpretation Act which gives prerogatives to the Cabinet to create Crown corporations without reference to Parliament.

Those are four clear examples, Mr. Speaker, within this Bill, which is supposed to control Crown corporations by giving accountability to Parliament, which shows that in fact the Government can establish Crown corporations, or Crown corporations can be established, without reference to Parliament.

The short point, Mr. Speaker, is that this is not a Bill which expands Parliament's rights and ability to control Crown corporations. What it does, Mr. Speaker, is expand the Cabinet's power to run Crown corporations without reference to Parliament. That is what it does. As a matter of fact, on page 22 the Auditor General in his report of 1983 said in the shortest way I know, and it is not changed by the Bill:

> Taken together with my earlier words about the Financial Statements of the Government of Canada, the result is—

I underline this to the Minister now in the House:

> —nothing less than the fragmentation of the sovereignty of Parliament.

That is exactly what it is, Mr. Speaker, because all that has been talked about is the power of the Cabinet, not the power of Parliament. We have not been talking about the ability of Parliament, acting on behalf of the people of this country, being able to control the power and authority of this Government to deal with Crown corporations.

I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, that the establishment of financial and management systems for Crown corporations, of reporting systems and so on, are very important and fundamental to this Bill, and fundamental to everything about this place is the power of government and the ability to control it. Throughout the whole history of parliament, not only this Parliament but of all Westminster parliamentary systems, the rights of the Speaker, my rights as a Member of Parliament, the rights of a Minister and, indeed, all the rights of the people of this country have been linked to the ability of Parliament to control the expenditures of government.

If you read your history, Mr. Speaker, you will find that the most important debates affecting the rights of individuals in this country and the rights of Hon. Members of this House have been directly related to the ability of this House to control the expenditures of the Crown. All the old battles between kings and parliaments were precisely on that point. Our system of parliamentary democracy exists or does not exist on the basis of our ability to limit the power of government. Our ability to limit the power of government rests directly on our ability to control expenditures and hold the government accountable for those expenditures. That is a simple fact of the history of Westminster parliaments.

That is why people attach so much importance to it, and they finally woke up, Mr. Speaker, when they saw us going from eight Crown corporations to over 300 Crown corporations, when they saw us move to $63 billion from the figure in 1962, when they saw the massive change in the power of government with no control by this Parliament. They instinctively know that if the people of this country, through Parliament, cannot control the expenditures of government, and in this instance the Crown corporations, then its ability to control the power of government generally is fundamentally flawed.

People do not pay attention to Parliament, Mr. Speaker, on a daily basis. Some people do but most people do not. They go about their daily affairs, trying to organize their lives as best they can. What they hope will happen, Mr. Speaker, is that the accountability which they assume Parliament has to hold the Government responsible is in place. That is why, Mr. Speaker, in the final analysis, what we are talking about is not finance. What we are talking about is not finance but the ability of the people of this country to control the power of government through Parliament.

The people know one other thing, Mr. Speaker. They know that this Bill is a whitewash because they know the Government has had the ability to act responsibly but has not done so. That is the truth of it all. No tinkering with the structure of government, bad as it is, can change the face of a bad and irresponsible government.

The only reason we have this Bill before us is that this Government has been badgered to bring something forward; but it is thin and pale and will not restore the ability of the people of this country to hold this Government accountable through this Parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that this Bill provides many more provisions for Crown corporations and for the Government to report to Parliament. The Hon. Member spoke a great deal about reporting, directing and monitoring activities. This Bill sets out a continuous flow of information, from Crown corporations through the responsible Minister, to be tabled in the House and put before parliamentary committees for review and action. The Hon. Member has talked about accountability. The Bill provides that each Crown corporation will have a responsible Minister who will have to account to the House, and to the parliamentary committees, for the actions and activities of each individual Crown corporation.

The Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) has suggested that this Bill does not provide for the control of Crown corporations because there is no control over subsidiaries.

• (1530)

The corporate plan of each Crown corporation which will be tabled in the House requires that if extensive new plans are being made by a Crown corporation it must reveal details of new subsidiaries being established. In any event, they would have to be approved by the Cabinet.

The Hon. Member spoke about the fact that at the present time Crown corporations can be established under the Canadian Business Corporation Act without reference to Parliament. That has been done in the past. Under this Bill a motion will have to be brought before the House. There will have to be 30 sitting days for debate in committee and at least seven hours for debate in the House before a Crown corporation established under the Canadian Business Corporations Act can be established. That motion before the House will set out the exact areas of activity in which the Crown corporation can engage. Likewise, there is no time limit on the establishment of major Bills such as that for the establishment of PetroCan or the Bill relating to CDIC. The Member talked about Section 16—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair cannot allow the Hon. Member to go on at length. Both comments and questions should be brief and to the point. The Hon. Member has had three minutes so far. I think we ought to give the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) an opportunity to respond at this time, after which, if no other Member rises, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary could continue.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to respond as I believe I made the arguments initially. The Hon. Member indicates that if a new Crown corporation is established it will have to come before the House. I wanted to indicate to him clearly that if it is a subsidiary it goes to Cabinet. That does not allow the House to deal with it directly. That is the point in terms of subsidiaries.

I do not know what he was going to say about Section 16. My point in terms of the ability of the House to control the creation of new Crown corporations, let alone to manage the ones we already have, is that the power has been given to the Cabinet. It has been taken away from the Minister and from the House and has been given to the Cabinet. This is nothing more or less, Mr. Speaker, than yet another document by which the Cabinet of the country sucks away power from the House and from its own Ministers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Further questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Tobin: I listened with a great deal of attention to the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) as he is a Member for whom I have a great deal of respect and time whenever he is on his feet in the House or in any other forum.

I would like to make a comment, Mr. Speaker. In listening to comments from Members opposite about this particular Bill I find that this debate has become an opportunity for Members opposite, and for that Party in particular, to vent their spleen about Crown corporations more than an opportunity to look at the particulars of this Bill. I have been here for two days listening to all the speeches and I find the discrepancies in them somewhat akin to the kind of discrepancies we observed during the leadership convention which that Party recently held. On the one hand, Mr. Speaker, there was the Member—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the Hon. Member resume his seat? The Hon. Member cannot at this time make general comments on all the speeches he has heard so far. His comments must relate specifically to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Rosedale.

Mr. Tobin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is my intention. I did not want the audience, as large as it is, to be lost without its having heard an appropriate preamble.

I wanted to point out, Mr. Speaker, that I am trying to decide who speaks for the Conservative Party in this regard. First, we have had spokesmen for the Conservative Party suggesting that Crown corporations be sold off. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) suggests that CN should be sold off. Then the Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney) says that no one would buy it and that it is a mad proposition. We now have the Member for Rosedale being nit-pick about the Bill by condemning the notion of having Crown corporations in a country as large and diverse as Canada.

I feel I must make this comment, Mr. Speaker. Petro-Canada and the attack on it was a good example. Yet we found out in recent days that the Leader of that Party had in fact made a very bad investment in the offshore oil and gas action on the East Coast because of the NEP policy associated with Petro-Canada. I am saying that that Party will better serve this country and itself if it does away with nit-picking and silly criticism and starts to come forward with some policies. There is a terrible vacuum in this House, Mr. Speaker. There is nothing but an echo of rhetoric and criticism in the House.

Mr. Taylor: Why do you not set an example?

Mr. Tobin: It flows across the floor. It is troublesome to me, Mr. Speaker. My ears simply cannot stand it.

Mr. Thomson: Poor baby.

Mr. Tobin: Neither can the Canadian people, Mr. Speaker. Witness the latest Gallup poll. Wake up gentlemen. Where are your policies?

Mr. Taylor: What is your question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie).

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member who just spoke did not engage in rhetoric and simply confined himself to the Bill.

The Member may remember, and you may as well, Sir, that in my opening remarks I indicated that, except possibly for the Hon. Member who just spoke, we have not treated the matter of Crown corporations as a question of ideology. There were pragmatic reasons why certain Crown corporations were established over time and others let go. They have served this country well on a number of occasions at the federal, provincial and municipal levels. My concern was to have the Hon. Member and the Government understand that the nub of the Bill ought to be the accountability to Parliament, and not the increasing power of the Cabinet. That remark still stands.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the accountability process, my colleague referred to the fact that one of its essential elements is the mandate of a particular corporation. I totally concur with him. One of the problems which we have experienced with Crown corporations over a period of years is that in terms of mandate it is a moving target. What Parliament approves gets changed in succeeding years. There is no accountability process to catch up with that moving target.

By what means does the Hon. Member for Rosedale believe Parliament will come to grips with this changing mandate which takes place year after year? How can we hold a Crown corporation accountable to Parliament when, of its own volition, a Crown corporation chooses to change that mandate as the years go by?

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I think there are two approaches. I have already mentioned one. There must be an understanding that the power of the Cabinet needs to be circumscribed. Also, Mr. Speaker, it is very important that we understand that, as a consequence of that, we should expand the powers and responsibilities of the committees of the House. In my view this Bill is almost as much a part of reforming Parliament as it is of specific financial accountability. That is why the Auditor General couched his own recommendations many years ago in terms of parliament's accountability, and not simply the Cabinet's ability to control.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The House will now proceed to debate. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this legislation. Many Canadians are concerned at the proliferation of Crown corporations which consume such a large amount of Government spending and appear very often to have little accountability. It is important to review and re-evaluate the purposes and performances as well as the financing of Crown corporations. This Bill gives us an opportunity—although we should not have a time restriction on it—to look at Crown corporations as a broader concept rather than just look at the immediate aspects of the Bill.

The Conservatives sound as if they would do away with most Crown corporations. That is what we usually hear from them day after day. However, when it came to the crunch when they were in the Government, they were defeated because of the Crosbie Budget which threatened to do away with PetroCan. I can say that this specific item in the Budget was the reason that our Party did not support the Tory Budget and that our caucus voted against the Tory Budget.

• (1540)

Mr. Stevens: Shame!

Ms. Mitchell: We have been blamed ever since for doing the dirt to the Tory government.

Mr. Stevens: Look at what you have done.

Ms. Mitchell: Of course, the Conservatives have never forgiven us. While they are still crying about that, they still refuse to accept the facts about why we voted against that Budget.

It is interesting to note as well that, despite their distortion of the facts, they have made a campaign of this across Canada. I noted that the former Prime Minister eventually recognized the political reality, after he was out of office of course, and backtracked on his earlier policy regarding Petro-Canada. I am sure that the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney), who is very mum on this subject, will probably do the same.

Like many other Crown corporations, I am sure that Petro-Canada needs review, reorganization and certainly more accountability. We would agree with that. However, Canadians realize that it is in their interest to have a Canadian-controlled public company which will plan and develop energy resources for Canada, not only for the present but also for future generations. I suggest that, in the interest of all Canadians no private company would hold that long-term view. I ask what is wrong with having service stations if they help finance this venture? It seems to me that our friends on the right would agree that this is probably good business practice.

Crown corporations are established in order to provide essential public services which private corporations could not provide to consumers in an equal and affordable way.

Mr. Stevens: Like the Challenger.

Ms. Mitchell: I am stating what I feel Crown corporations should be doing.

Mr. Stevens: Should they get rid of the Challenger?

Ms. Mitchell: As public organizations, they should have a social purpose as well as make a positive contribution to the economy. Since Crown corporations are financed by all taxpayers, they must be accountable not only to the Cabinet but also to Parliament. Parliament has a responsibility to make them accountable to the public at large.

Crown corporations should have clearly defined goals, a long-range plan which is known to the public and into which the public has some input. There should be a built-in process of evaluation and financial accountability. Boards of directors should be established and appointed democratically, with nominations from the public. While people with expertise should be included, why should we not consider consumer representatives from the public at large for board positions? Since these corporations are funded by all Canadians, fiscal accountability and sound management is even more essential in public corporations than in private businesses.

I agree completely with the Conservatives that the Liberal practice of political patronage in the appointment of Liberal hacks to Crown corporation boards is undemocratic and really prevents the necessary reforms which are needed in many of our corporations from being made.

Mr. Stevens: What about NDP hacks?

Ms. Mitchell: However, the first and only memorable policy statement that the Leader of the Conservative Party made, at least the only one that I remember, is that he would aggressively appoint Conservatives to positions of power at all levels of Government.

Mr. Blais: That's right.

Ms. Mitchell: This sounds like patronage to me, perhaps more direct and not as sleazy as patronage in which the Liberals engage, but blatant political patronage nonetheless. If the Tories are elected they will need to continue all the Crown corporations that exist now, and perhaps create a few more just to find places to reward all of their friends.

We have a tradition in Canada of government responsibility for providing transportation, communication and social programs to meet the practical needs of all Canadians at prices they can afford. When I travel to other countries, particularly to the United States, I am very proud to hear people, such as artists, speak with some wonder about the fact that we have government support for so many of our institutions. Of course, because of our widely dispersed population and the long distances involved in northern and rural communities, government subsidies must be provided to supply adequately and equally such goods as mail, televison, telephone and fuel services, to mention only a few, to the remote areas. A private corporation could not do this in the interest of all citizens because profit is their first motivation and it could not make much money by running rural phone or mail services.

I believe that Crown corporations that operate on a user pay principle should be carefully scrutinized. I believe these principles run contrary to the reason for setting up Crown corporations, which are really meant to ensure that there is a fair service to meet the needs of all Canadians, regardless of income.

I have been referring to Crown corporations that are primarily in the service field. With respect to the question of economic development, the function of Crown corporations becomes less clear to me personally. Our Party favours a mixed economy in which the Government takes initiatives to develop our resources to ensure environmental protection, sound planning and renewed resources for future generations. When private corporations refuse to take risks to develop necessary industries or new areas of employment, the Government often must act directly.

Mr. Stevens: Why?

Ms. Mitchell: It did this recently. Perhaps my friend could ask that question of his colleagues from the Atlantic region about the Maritime fishing industry when there was a question of there being no industry without government intervention. I might say in that respect that we in the West only wish that equal government attention was given to the fishery on the West Coast.

Regardless of the purpose of Crown corporations, whether it is primarily social or economic, they should be well run organizations with sound fiscal policies and accountability to the public not only through Cabinet but also through Parliament. Unlike most businesses, the public, including consumers, should be encouraged to participate at all levels wherever possible, particularly at regional levels. They should have the opportunity to run for the board of directors. Many Crown corporations are much too large, institutionalized and bureaucratic. Inevitably this leads to a concept of top-down management which, of course, is dominated by political influences, particularly as the policy makers are usually appointed by the Government.

A policy of decentralization should be established wherever a government service is provided. Local communities should be involved in the regional and community planning process. Canada Mortgage and Housing would be a good example of this.

One example of major reform and decentralization of a large centralized Crown corporation was the recent establishment of the Canada Port Corporation. The establishment of local port corporations which gave considerable autonomy in the management of ports in the local region to a local port board is a considerable improvement on the old National Harbours Board. Ports can now approve funds for improving facilities without having to go to Ottawa and the Cabinet only to wait months and probably in the end not get the kind of improvements they wanted, as has happened previously.

However, although the Minister was urged in committee and in the House, he did not trust democracy enough to go all the way. In typical Liberal fashion, he had to maintain political control by personally appointing the board of directors. He refused to allow open nominations, which would have been one way of circumventing political patronage. He also excluded local municipalities and communities, which are very much affected by local port development, from having any kind of meaningful participation in the policy and planning structures.

Another long established and essential Crown corporation is Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In this instance it seems to me that there is a confusion in roles between the needs of consumers who need affordable housing and should have a right to it in our country and the desires of housing developers who want to make as many bucks as possible by having housing under the control of the private sector, provided, of course, that there are lots of government subsidies and tax write-offs. CMHC is not accountable to the elected Members of this House. There is no housing committee in the House of Commons. There is no place where we can discuss the housing needs and problems of our constituents and of the country as a whole. Housing is a very critical and basic need affecting every family. Surely this is a prime example of a Crown corporation that should be much more accountable not only financially but in the establishment of its goals and priorities for housing programs.

Decent, affordable housing should be the right of Canadians. It should not be left to the whims of bureaucrats or of HUDAC developers to establish housing policy. Yet that is what has happened. There should be long-range planning based on population trends. That is another thing that does not happen. There should be a sound controlled mortgage assistance policy so every time we have a new budget we do not need to have a new program that nobody understands and that lower income people usually cannot use. There should be assured financing for social housing so that societies that are planning housing should not have to do all their planning for a year or two, putting all kinds of effort and funds into initial planning, only to find in the end that there are no funds available.

The development of housing is a social investment. It creates jobs and is an industry that should be stabilized rather than being based on ad hoc programs which vary from one political budget to another. This corporation and the housing industry itself should be accountable to a committee of Parliament to develop sound, long-range non-partisan planning for the future housing needs of Canadians. Accountability involves more than financial accountability. There must also be accountability for policy objectives and for the quality of service in relation to the social goals and needs of our people.

I want to cite two examples of CMHC policies which have been of considerable concern to this Party and to many of our constituents. As I have pointed out several times in Parliament, CMHC has chosen to ignore the fair wages and hours of labour provisions of the Canada Labour Code as a result of pressure from private, non-union construction firms and the powerful HUDAC lobby. This means that housing societies in Vancouver, which in many cases have been helped by pension funds provided by construction unions, are not allowed themselves to employ union construction firms to build their housing. Highly skilled and experienced union tradespeople are unemployed in very very high numbers in British Columbia, as they are in other parts of Canada, while CMHC, by its policy, prevents housing societies from using union labour and using firms which are unionized.

CMHC and other Crown corporations should be required to adhere to decent labour standards under the fair wages provisions. I was told by CMHC officials that because it was a Crown corporation they did not apply. I think those labour standards should apply. Also, I think policies such as mandatory affirmative action should apply equally in Crown corporations right across the board.

The unfair negative evaluation of CMHC social programs in the news last year is another example of a biased kind of report done by private people with vested interest. This definitely influenced public opinion across Canada very unfairly. We had no chance to hear about this in the House or to have alternate points of view presented in committee. The City of Vancouver had a housing researcher who used the same facts, analysed them and came to a conclusion the opposite to that in the CMHC report, that there should be continued support for co-op and non-profit housing, with some changes perhaps in the application of it. There was no opportunity to hear, as I said, any of these reports or to hear from witnesses from housing societies and co-ops in a committee of the House. There was no chance for us as Members to participate in representing the views and the needs of our constituents. I am pretty sure we have all had practical experience as housing has been very difficult in many areas of Canada.

The negative impact or impression that was left on the public was a great disservice to people who have worked for many many years in housing societies and co-operatives to build affordable housing, who had put in hours and hours of volunteer time and who had developed housing for low and middle income people. Certainly there is room for improvement and modification in most Crown corporations, and CMHC and the non-profit housing program is no exception. This could be done again with sound objective research, wide involvement and with accountability to Parliament and to the public in general.

I do not have time to go into other examples in the time that I have left, Mr. Speaker. I know I have concentrated mostly on the kinds of Crown corporations which relate more to social policies, my area of concern in this caucus as housing critic. However, we all and the public share a very great concern. I think the negative image of Crown corporations is certainly exemplified most in the examples of de Havilland and Canadair. I am sure most Members have mentioned the $2.6 billion of government funds allocated to these two companies. Executives in de Havilland got bonuses to the tune of $155,000 while workers were laid off. de Havilland spent over $500 million, tax dollars again, to cover its debts for 1983 alone. The CDIC also gave bonuses to seven senior officials to the tune of $82,000. We can go on and on about executives and the gifts they receive.

Another area where more accountability is needed is from the very minister responsible for this situation, a minister who is not elected and is not responsible to this House. We have no way in which to question him. He is like an emperor in British Columbia as the Senator appointed for that territory. He makes decisions with no reference back to democratic government and to committees which should be established in this House.

Finally, in reviewing this Bill I share the concern of other Members. It is unfortunate that we are restricted by imposed time limits. We all agree that changes are needed to make Crown corporations more accountable. There should be regular reviews, not only budget reviews but reviews of programs in terms of the service the people of Canada deserve. The mandate of those corporations should also be reviewed. It is very doubtful that this Bill will allow accountability to Members of Parliament and through us to the people of Canada. It is the people of Canada after all who pay the bill for all Crown corporations, Mr. Speaker. People are also paying in some cases for inefficiency, political expediency, when they should be paying for a much more efficient service.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, according to the standard the Hon. Member laid out to the House with respect to whether or not it is necessary or possible to have Crown corporations, could she indicate whether there are any Crown corporations which the federal Government now owns that she feels are dispensable? If so, what are they?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I do not feel, partly because we do not have a way of getting information in this House, that I am the person to evaluate every Crown corporation in Canada. I think that would be pretty presumptuous of me. I have some personal opinions, but I do not have enough data to mention this in the House. I think there should be a way of making evaluations. Most institutions are self-perpetuating, that is the nature of large institutions, but there should be times when some Crown corporations are terminated. What we would be most concerned about is whether they are of value of the people of Canada, whether tax dollars are justified from that point of view and whether they are run efficiently. I think that would be the criteria at which we would look.

• (1600)

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) mentioned that a number of our Crown corporations have become "far too large". Would the Hon. Member agree with the comment that Crown corporations can add personnel more easily to their payrolls than can private industry and that consequently in most of our Crown corporations there is an over-abundance of staff? That was certainly found to be true in Canadair. It had 22 vice-presidents and now it has only 12. They have retired a few and have done away with 338 jobs. This means that 338 people were being paid for their good looks or for some other reason.

If the Hon. Member believes that a Crown corporation can act as efficiently as a private corporation, which is under the control of someone who wants to make a profit from the operation, how would she or her Party control the tendency to increase the number of employees in Crown corporations, because they are being paid, not from a payroll as a result of its operations, but from tax revenues of the country?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very valid question. Having worked in a public agency myself, I can say that it is natural, as is the case in the Public Service, for bureaucracies to tend to grow and perpetuate themselves. Therefore we have to build something into the system to reverse this. It does not mean that the purpose of the corporation is invalid or that there is not a need for a particular Crown corporation. There may or may not be a need, but I would think that it comes back to the debate about accountability.

I am not an expert in this area, but if the Government really wanted to improve the situation—and certainly it has a responsibility to see that tax dollars are used efficiently and effectively—there could be an ombudsman service or an auditing service which would have real clout and could make changes. That is why it is important to have more accountability to Parliament or to bodies established for that purpose.

Mr. Taylor: There is another point to which I listened with interest when the Hon. Member was speaking. That was the matter of homes for our people. I do not think there is any disagreement among Hon. Members of the House that we want Canadian families to own their own homes. I assume that is an objective of the NDP as well as of the PCs and the Liberals. In meeting that objective we have to be realistic in terms of setting the final prices of homes. Otherwise we simply bar scores and perhaps even hundreds or thousands of families, particularly young families upon marriage or with small children, from ever buying homes. Some of my own constituents have said that they would love to own homes but that they are unable to accumulate that much money.

Also the Hon. Member mentioned union wages and fair wages. I believe in fair wages, because often union wages are not fair. Plumbers who are charging $18 to $25 per hour shove the price of homes impossibly high so that people cannot buy them. Also there are carpenters who are insisting upon $12 to $16 per hour, whereas others are quite prepared to work for $8 or $10 per hour. I believe in fair wages and I believe in unions. However, how does the Hon. Member reconcile keeping the final prices of homes within reach of our people when hourly rates go into the building of homes?

Ms. Mitchell: In relation to the first question, while I think there are many Canadians who want to own their own homes, time have changed. It is interesting that in urban settings well over 50 per cent of the people are tenants, many of whom are so by choice. We cannot always think about this question in traditional terms. However, certainly those who have families should have the right to own homes.

When I talked about housing, I talked about shelter in a general sense. That included rental housing and co-operative ownership, which is different but somewhat like a co-operative rental situation. We must have a range of ways for people to accomplish this. We must have fair wages. When we talk about fair wages legislation, it does not mean that people have to unionize if they do not want to. It comes somewhere within the realm of ensuring the payment of sensible and practical wages so that workers are not exploited by getting excessively low wages.

I also referred to housing developments, non-profit developments or co-operatives where larger housing developments are being built and are more deserving of unions. Quite often in the case of individual homes people want to put in some of their own labour. However, there is no question that the role of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation—and this was the point I was attempting to make—should be to develop programs from a long-range point of view, not just this ad hockery. These programs should allow for choices, for people within certain income ranges to get into starter homes with some assistance, and for people who simply do not have downpayments to have co-op housing available to them. It is also very important to have decent rental accommodation, including rental accommodations for people with higher incomes. We are talking about a range of programs, but certainly CMHC should be responsible for them in the interests of Canadians, not in the interests of private developers.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga)—Supply and Services—Procurement of armour-plated automobiles. (b) Reported deficiencies in vehicles; the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker)—Regional Development—Lingan-Phelen coal mine project in Nova Scotia. (b) Lack of employment; the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett)—Labour Conditions—Unemployment in Atlantic Canada—Request for Minister's advice. (b) Plight of jobless.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For debate, the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis).

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair should have seen the Hon. Member on the government side. I apologize to the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings. The Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson).

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Hon. Member of the Opposition for standing aside at this particular time.

First, I want to commend the Opposition for having established its task force to look into Crown corporations. Also I commend the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) for the work he did in chairing that task force. I believe this approach, followed through to its logical conclusion by Members of Parliament, will make us all better equipped to deal with the very complex issues that we face. This type of undertaking to develop policy should be made far more on the basis of a House approach, mandated by Parliament. I do not necessarily believe that it should be restricted to the particular Parties in Parliament and be funded by those particular Parties.

Having said that, I find it very difficult to understand why the Hon. Member for Calgary South, in commenting on this particular Bill to regulate and make Crown corporations accountable, said that the Bill was an almost incomprehensible piece of legislative mishmash and gobbledegook. The Bill is very complex. It is not going to be perceived at one glance as solving all of the problems we face with respect to Crown corporations.

On the other hand, the main point I want to make today is that this Bill responds almost measure for measure to the concerns that were raised by the task force of the Official Opposition. It is perhaps not unusual, but very beneficial that the recommendations contained in the provisions of Bill C-24 almost mirror the recommendations put forward by the Opposition task force. These were the two groups researching this issue. They came to almost identical conclusions. This is why this Bill should not be the subject of partisan debate. I believe we should get this Bill into committee as quickly as possible in order that should there be any technical problems inherent in it, we can deal with them on a non-partisan basis, and this House has demonstrated that it is prepared to deal with it on that basis.

I wish to deal with the recommendations of the Tory task force. I will go through them one by one in order to show how we have responded to those concerns and our solution in dealing with them. The first is the requirement for the submission of business plans by Crown corporations, that they be tabled in Parliament and be examined by appropriate parliamentary committees. That is in our Bill.

Second, the Opposition study recommended clarification of the role of the Auditor General in auditing Crown corporations as well as clarifying the relationship of the Auditor General who audits Crown corporations with the private sector auditor. The role of the auditor and the Auditor General is very clearly set out in this Bill. This is what we have done. I might also add that we went to considerable lengths to weigh carefully the views and the recommendations made over the past years, not only by the Auditor General but also by the Public Accounts Committee and the Lambert Commission. In essence, we have chosen to follow Lord Macauley's famous dictum, namely, choose wisely, consult liberally. I know the "consult liberally" aspect of this dictum might be anathema to the Opposition, but I suggest that that is the way, through consultation, and through careful study that is epitomized in the results of this Bill. That is the way in which we have been able to come to the conclusions we have arrived at.

The third aspect of the Tory report calls for improved accounting procedures and practices. Our Bill sets out, in a way that matches the view of the Opposition task force, the concerns about ways of improving accounting procedures and practices. We go one step further. We take the additional step of requiring by legislation that statements set out information clearly and in accordance with the major businesses or activities of each Crown corporation. In other words, we are using a new type of accounting approach for Crown corporations whereby each of their individual businesses, even if they are all contained within one corporate shell, have to be accounted for separately. That was not the generally accepted accounting practice previously.

With regard to some of the remaining recommendations of the Opposition task force, you will find slight differences between our approach and that adopted by the Opposition. I am prepared to elaborate on these differences at the present time, but because they are largely technical in nature, I believe they would be best resolved without polemics in the House and on television. We should sit down in committee and work through these areas in a very non-partisan manner. Since we are not there, and with the emphasis on trying to get us there sooner, let me deal with these points.

First, the Opposition seeks a rationalization in the relationship of Crown corporations to the Government based on a return to effective, individual ministerial responsibility. We have done this. Each Crown corporation is the specific responsibility of a Minister who is available in this House. Each Crown corporation is that Minister's responsibility to account for to this Parliament. A Minister can be called to account publicly at any time in this House for every one of our Crown corporations.

I am wondering what the implication is of the criticism of the Opposition. Is it that there should be only one Member, whoever looks at the financial statements, business plans or ideas of a Crown corporation? We do not feel that that is realistic. We do not know of any system in the world where only one Minister is involved in looking at the business plan and in paying attention to the public policy aspect inherent in Crown corporations or in any particular Crown corporation. For example, why should the designated responsible Minister not be able to consult with the Minister of Finance, the President of the Treasury Board, the Prime Minister, or even the whole Cabinet, on particular issues affecting Crown corporations? It is only good advice. It is good practice to seek the advice and recommendations of other Ministers, particularly those who have a particular concern about a Crown corporation.

In our Bill we have clarified this relationship between the Government and the Crown corporation and strengthened the existing system whereby an individual Minister is designated for each parent Crown corporation. The role of the Government per se is clarified. Surely that must have been what the Opposition was seeking. Why then the hassle on these particular provisions?

Another area where the disagreement is more rhetoric than actual is the classification system, the way in which we have classified Crown corporations as to whether they have largely a social or commercial purpose, whether or not they are in competition with the private sector, and the way we have scheduled those Crown corporations. Our approach has been to segregate the commercially-oriented Crown corporations according to the extent to which they are exposed to competition from the private sector. That makes eminent good sense. If the Crown corporation is competing with the private sector in a particular area, why should that Crown corporation not have some of the advantages in a competitive marketplace that the private sector corporation has?

This does not necessarily mean that there should be a Crown corporation in an area which is being adequately served by the private sector. It does not mean that we as a government want to hold on to our Crown corporations. In fact, in a companion Bill before Parliament dealing with the Canada Development Investment Corporation, part of the specific mandate is articulated there. The Government is to continue the policies of trying to dispose of Crown corporations which are no longer essential to the public purposes and to the service of public needs in Canada. That is one area in which I think the Official Opposition and the Government would find accord and harmony. Again, there is no reason for bickering or hassling.

• (1620)

Another area in which I believe the apparent differences between the Government and the Opposition are more perceived than real is that with respect to the acquisitions and new incorporations of Crown corporations; in other words, the establishment of new Crown corporations to undertake certain activities. We have proposed that the Government be permitted to incorporate a parent Crown corporation under the Canada Business Corporations Act.

In some cases, one would have to agree with members of the Opposition who say that it would be most appropriate if there were to be a special Act of Parliament passed such as the ones which have been passed before for large operations such as the CN when establishing a new Crown corporation. However, why should every new Crown corporation need to go through that type of legislative parliamentary scrutiny when most Crown corporations fall under the umbrella of one of the following four Crown corporations: CN, Air Canada, Canada Development Corporation and Petro-Canada?

I hope that Hon. Members are trying to introduce a degree of private-sector accountability into the decision-making processes of Crown corporations. That type of accountability is critical. However, why should an airline not be able to hive off some of its operations into a separate Crown corporation for business reasons only?

In order for us to use a Canada Business Corporations Act type of subsidiary corporation, there are constraints which must be met. First, that subsidiary corporation must fall within the overall mandate of the Crown corporation itself. It cannot go on a new lark and it cannot go from widgets into doughnuts. That is one type of control which we have and we still require that the Crown corporation receive the consent of Parliament. The matter would automatically be referred to a parliamentary committee for 30 sitting days, and then an opportunity would be afforded for at least seven hours of debate in the House before the new corporation is established.

I know what kind of constructive work can be done in 30 sitting days by a parliamentary committee that is dedicated to making things work rather than one which is hell-bent on electoral gains and political advantage. That is one very responsible measure. When we are speaking about seven hours of debate in the House as an additional control on the establishment of Crown corporations, we are speaking of at least two full days' debate. I ask if we really do need to impose that type of shackle on a corporation such as Air Canada, which might want to hive off some of its tourist-generating activities into a subsidiary corporation for accounting and management structure purposes. The private sector has no such constraints; yet we have put these constraints on our own ability to act in this area.

I am prepared to listen to reasonable arguments from the other side and I believe that they would best be heard in committee. I am prepared to hear why these safeguards are not adequate, particularly when referring to corporations which fall under Part II of Schedule C such as the big ones which compete with the private sector in various areas.

Another area on which the Tory task force recommended clarification was that of the responsibilities of directors and officers. The issue involving the appointment of officers, directors and chairpersons of federal agencies and boards is one which our task force on regulatory reform looked at very candidly and very thoroughly. Three members of the Opposition were members of that task force and we came to the unanimous conclusion that full public scrutiny by subjecting appointments to congressional debates, like those which occur in the United States is not the proper way to go. We felt that there is a better way to go in terms of appointments. We suggested that anyone should be entitled to recommend people who would be competent to fill particular positions. However, we felt that after consultations, it must in the end be the decision of the responsible Minister. This decision would be made after consultations and after soliciting a public list of names. That conclusion received unanimous Opposition approval from members of both the NDP and the Conservative Party.

There are very good reasons why it should be the Government that appoints directors of Crown corporations. The Government is the shareholder. It is the body which is responsible to the Canadian people. It is the trustee for the Canadian people. If we as a Government cannot act to remove the directors who manage and control a Crown corporation, then how can we say that we are responsible? How can the Minister stand up in the House and say that he is responsible? How can Opposition Members pin down anyone on this side of the House with respect to a Crown corporation if we do not have the ability to control those who are responsible for management and control on our behalf? We in turn must act as trustees for the public interest.

Through this Bill, Mr. Speaker, we are striving for control, direction and accountability. I fail to understand how this can be achieved without the Government having the ability to appoint directors and chief executive officers.

Another aspect of this Bill of which I am very proud is the fact that we have control over the remuneration received by those directors and chief executive officers. In my opinion, that is critical because there are times in our public lives when we cannot have increases in wages and salaries being paid to executive officers of particular Crown corporations.

Mr. Lewis: Or bonuses to de Havilland.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I must inform him that his time has expired. Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) to answer one question. How can the president of a Crown corporation be held accountable? If a board of directors has any role to play in a Crown corporation at all, how can that board hold the president of a Crown corporation accountable if, in effect, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) makes the appointment? Could he answer that simple question for me?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, if what we are trying to do is to invite a comparison between the public sector involved in the control of a Crown corporation and the shareholders of a private corporation, then there is something I would like to say about that. In a private corporation other than a Crown corporation, shareholders or investors are the ones who elect the directors to act on their behalf. In a private corporation such as a Canada business corporation, an Ontario business corporation and, I would venture to say, even an Alberta corporation, there are certain times at which the shareholders are entitled to act and to undertake by resolution certain responsibilities. This is particularly true with a corporation whose shares are not widely held. There are provisions in the law whereby the shareholders, for whom the directors are merely trustees acting on their behalf, can undertake that direct responsibility. To me, entering into the role of being able to appoint a chief executive officer is merely by-passing the role of the directors and going directly to the people for whom those officers are working. That is a power which we have under this particular law.

• (1630)

I fail to see how that differs from a closely held corporation in the private sector. There is no difference whatsoever. As a matter of fact, what it does is to allow the type of accountability which Hon. Members opposite have been talking about. It allows us to act very quickly if the chief executive officer is botching it up. Then we do not have to call a directors' meeting in order to dismiss that individual. There might be times when we would want that to take place.

Mr. Thomson: That, Mr. Speaker, is exactly the point. The Hon. Member has just confirmed it. What is a board of directors for then? I am quite prepared to admit that there is a vast difference between a multi-shareholder company and a single shareholder company such as we have in a Crown corporation. But, as the Hon. Member has just said, if need be the board will be by-passed. Therein lies the problem. That is exactly what happened in the case of Canadair. The directors served no purpose whatsoever. My point is: Why have them? Why resort to the subterfuge?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, the directors can play a very valuable role in a corporation. I do not know whether in the Hon. Member's business life he had a lot of outside directors in his corporation, but if he did he would realize that they performed many more functions other than just choosing the chief executive officer. As a shareholder of a corporation, I am sure that he would have indicated to the directors who he wanted to serve as the chief executive officer. Forget the sham. We are laying it right there. The chief executive officer will be accountable to the people of Canada, the shareholders of the corporation, through the Minister. That is not a sham; it is calling a spade a spade. It is putting the responsibility there.

The Hon. Member mentioned Canadair. The trouble was that the directors were by-passed. By-passed by whom? Members on this side of the House agree that what happened with Canadair was a disgrace. We did not have the type of instrument in Parliament to supervise adequately what was going on. We as the shareholders did not have the type of business strcuture, such as is proposed in the CDIC Bill, that could give us instant results. It can place before Parliament, very quickly, quarterly results of Crown corporations such as we are proposing so that we as Members acting for the shareholders, the public of Canada, can perform the watch-dog interest that is critical.

I want to ensure, and I think it is shown by the board of the CDIC which is proposed, that we are setting up a good structure which will adhere to sound business principles and which will have a blue chip board of directors—people with proven competence in business areas; people with proven competence in running big businesses in many sectors in Canada. That is why I would like to see the CDIC Bill as a companion Bill to this one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There being no further questions or comments, it is my duty to inform the House at this time that the eight-hour period provided for 20-minute speeches, comments and questions has now expired and the House will now proceed to ten-minute speeches. The Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis).

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, you recognized me 35 minutes ago for a 20-minute speech, and out of courtesy I deferred, and if my colleague from Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) had not asked a question, of course I would have been within the 20-minute time period. So I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, will not see the clock for at least ten minutes toward the end of my—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I take the comment of the Hon. Member as an invitation for the Chair to seek unanimous consent for him to make a 20-minute speech at this time. Does the House agree?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues across the way. I do not really mind if there are no questions; that does not bother me at all. I will certainly try to stay well within the 20 minutes.

In dealing with Bill C-24, as my colleagues have done, I intend to be critical of the Bill. It seems to me that this is indeed another example of the state of the Government in that we have had, over the past number of months, indeed over the last few years, a number of Bills brought before us that have been rushed in, have been deficient in make-up and not really ready to be presented to the House. I had hoped to spend a few moments dealing with some statistics, but my colleague from Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), who was very eloquent in that area, did a good job. I intend to get involved only in one statistic that my colleague from Rosedale did not cover, that is a statistic having to do with special enterprises. I quote the following from a recent article in The Financial Post which reads:

Statistics Canada publishes data on what it calls government enterprises—"agencies engaged primarily in operations of a commercial or industrial nature, which either compete actively with similar operations in the private sector or monopolize activities that would otherwise be carried out in the private sector."

In 1981, this description fitted 155 federal agencies and subsidiaries (total assets: $50.9 billion);

These were the agencies which compete with private industry and, in fact, to continue the quotation:

—there are six of these animals among the top 50 non-financial firms ranked by The Post, ranging from Canadian Wheat Board (number nine) to Air Canada (number 35)—

I intend to quote fairly extensively someone who is well known to my colleagues on the other side of the House. I thought I would use an article by Mr. Paul E. Martin, son of a former illustrious Member of this House and now President and Chief Executive Officer of The CSL Group Incorporated, simply because if I were to use entirely original material in speaking to this Bill this afternoon, I am sure I would have a great deal of criticism and comments from my colleagues opposite. It seems to me that if I quote to them from what was said by one of their own people, perhaps it will carry some weight with them.

Mr. Blais: Was he ever a Member of the House?

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Martin has the qualifications of the Liberal Party at his back and there is no question about that. I will be quoting some excerpts from an article written by Mr. Martin in a publication called Policy Options of March, 1984. While I will not, of course, try to deal with the whole article, nonetheless it will not change the thrust. Let me begin with a very brief quote from Mr. Martin's article. He says this:

● (1640)

Governments are by nature slow in seizing opportunities, facing up to changing conditions, or simply correcting mistakes.

He goes on to say:

Indeed, it would not be unreasonable to suggest that one of the reasons for the unwarranted expansion in the activities of Crown corporations arises from governments' attempt to shortcircuit Parliament in the development of policy.

Is this why, Mr. Speaker, as others have said, and in particular my colleague, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), that this legislation does not cover 109 Crown corporations mixed with joint enterprises and their subsidiaries? Is this also why we have a dearth of regulations in this particular piece of legislation? My colleagues have all pointed out, Mr. Speaker, and I do not intend to repeat it, the lack of regulations available to us and the continual reference in this piece of legislation to regulations. The fact is that the Bill relies entirely on regulations, and we have no idea what those regulations will be. This is not the first time we have been faced with that situation in this House, and when we have been faced with that sort of thing, we found to our grief that when the regulations did come out, they did not bear much resemblance to what we felt was the intent of the particular legislation.

I want to deal again briefly with Mr. Martin's article. He goes on to say, and I quote:

It is difficult to envisage a circumstance in which Crown corporations can be as efficient as private sector companies. Not that the latter are models by any means. But, lacking some of the inherent advantages and political constraints of Crowns, private enterprise is forced to be more disciplined, and hence more cost effective.

Do we really believe, Mr. Speaker, that the post office in attempting to get into the retail business is going to be effective? Is it going to pay taxes comparable to other merchants in small communities? Is it going to use tax free trucking to carry the merchandise back and forth? Is it, indeed, going to attempt to hide the inefficiency of the post office by getting itself involved in competition with small businessmen? Obviously, that is an area which all of us must decry.

Let me quote again from Mr. Martin, and I said I was going to quote fairly extensively from the article in order to make my point. He said the following:

And government owned companies possess some very powerful advantages.

First, Crowns operate and invest without fear of bankruptcy in the knowledge that government will not let them go under. This in turn enables their managements to engage in programs in which the cost incurred may well be disproportionate to the benefits gained but which nonetheless result in a major long-term advantage over private sector competitors who are more subject to short-term cash flow fluctuations.

I ask the non-rhetorical question, Mr. Speaker, of my colleagues across the way: How many of you know companies in your constituencies which would be successful if money were available, if it were not a problem; if agencies like the Federal Business Development Bank would provide funds to no end; if there were guarantees from federal agencies; if Revenue Canada were not on their backs trying to put them out of business? If, indeed, that was not a problem, how many companies in your constituencies would in the long run make a profit? I suggest to you, Sir, that in my own constituency I can think of at least a dozen which have had some very serious difficulties, and if they could have had unlimited resources for the first two or three years there is no question but that over the long haul they would have made money. Going back to Mr. Martin again, he said:

—Crown corporations have superior access to government and thus the greater ability to influence government policy that affects them. Indeed, it is not unusual for their personnel to be drawn from the very bureaucracy which has the final policy say over industries in which the private and public sectors compete.

On the Order paper I have a number of questions regarding the Savin Corporation which buys photocopiers from Japan and resells them. It was purchased by the CDC when it was losing money. It is now in the market selling below cost, competing unfairly with other companies which either produce or buy and resell photocopiers. Yet, how many government corporations do we fund today using the Savin photocopiers? I know that my constituency and the surrounding area are flooded with them. I assume the same is true in other constituencies. I doubt that mine would be an exception. I assume the same is true in Ottawa and other areas. Certainly, to have access to the Government is a very real benefit to a Crown corporation. Quoting again from Mr. Martin, he said:

I would suggest that, as the need for Crown corporations to spearhead frontier development declines and the need for commercial discipline becomes paramount, the time has come to consider privatization of mature Crown corporations.

I want to make a point here, Mr. Speaker, that I am now getting into an area which I am personally advocating. The task force, which was very effectively headed by the Hon. Member for Calgary South and the Senator from the other place, has not dealt with this particular question. The excellent report of the task force left out this particular area of privatization. I think it felt that its terms of reference did not go that far. I suggest that I would like to see some privatization of our Crown corporations. I go back to Mr. Martin to make my next point. He said, and I quote:

It is important to emphasize that privatization in no way detracts from the national symbolism of the institutions concerned. They would still be as much Canadian as if owned by the government. The major difference would be that ownership, instead of being concentrated in the hands of a government elite, would be spread out among the Canadian public. In fact, it can be argued that government is so large and so remote that people have difficulty regarding its ownership as their ownership.

There have been some comments made by different speakers, particularly from the New Democratic Party, having to do with the actions of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), when he formed the Government, regarding PetroCan. I believe it is fair to say today, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians by and large recognize finally that PetroCan is much the same as other major oil companies in that it charges as much, is involved in price wars, and is selling service stations. They do not feel the personal relationship, which has been suggested through advertising, with that Crown corporation. That Crown corporation, they now realize, is not making money, is building itself an empire and is generally acting irresponsibly, as many Crown corporations do where there is not sufficient restriction.

I would like to go back to Mr. Martin's article for one last time to help me make my point with regard to privatization. Mr. Martin said, and I quote:

The advantages to be derived by privatization, wherever possible, are powerful.

First, it eliminates the twin problems of Crown corporation lack of accountability and crowding out of the private sector by the simple expedient of joining the private sector and accepting the discipline of the market place.

Second, it would force government to be explicit in its policy directives. Crown corporations are too often used either as a means of developing policy outside of Parliament's scrutiny or as a means of avoiding the making of a policy altogether.

● (1650)

All of this having been said, however, the... most important reason for privatization arises from the opportunity cost of tying up scarce financial resources in well established Crown corporations, once the original public policy objectives have been met. Important new policy initiatives are being forsworn because of a lack of funding. Does it make any sense to tie up billions of dollars in mature Crowns while turning our backs, to an important degree, on entrepreneurs who would develop new technologies and people who would benefit from new or further training?

I could go on at some length dealing with those other parts of Bill C-24, Mr. Speaker. I could deal with the loopholes that, as my colleague from Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) said, prevent Parliament from dealing with Crown corporations. I could deal with the fact that there will be less information available and continuing problems with the Attorney General. However, the fact is that Bill C-24 is just not adequate.

I will not go into great detail on this, but I would like to mention a problem that I spent hours debating in the House about one and a half or two years ago. A Crown corporation headed by the man who is now the head of VIA Rail was determined to buy equipment from Japan. I questioned the Government, the Minister and the head of the Harbours Board. I pointed out, and was never challenged, that the equipment in question had never before been made by any other company than the one in my constituency. The company in my constituency had bid low, had met the delivery dates, and in fact could do a better job than any other company in the world. Yet this Crown corporation gave a $20 million contract to Japan. Shortly thereafter, in another bid in South America, the Belleville company was successful. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, patently absurd that we would have a Canadian Crown corporation buying offshore, having all the advantages to buy from a Canadian company, while foreign companies on another continent recognize the expertise of the Canadian company.

That is an example, Mr. Speaker, of a need for new thoughts, ideas and approaches. It is a need, Mr. Speaker, for a new Government. If the Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) were in the House now, I would say to him through you that the polls suit me just fine. Let us have an election, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to have an opportunity to address Bill C-24 in the short amount of time remaining this afternoon. As I am faced with dealing with my remarks within a 10 minute time-table, I would like to zero in specifically on the lack of regulations. By that I mean the fact that the Government has brought in Bill C-24 and has not given the Opposition any opportunity to review the regulations which are going to play such a major part in the actual functioning of Bill C-24. We have not seen them. The Bill gives wide regulations-making power to the Government. We would like to know exactly what the form and content of those regulations will be.

I refer, Mr. Speaker, to Clause 95(10) in which, by regulation, the Government intends to classify major business activity. I refer to Clause 97 which will, by regulation, apply Bill C-24 to subsidiaries. I refer to Clause 101(7) whereby the Government can deal with incorporation and acquisition of subsidiaries by regulation. I refer to Clause 102(2) where, by regulation, subsidiaries and Crown corporations can be exempted from Section 101. I refer to Clause 108(4) where, by regulation, the Government will regulate how agent companies may sell or dispose of property. I refer to Clause 118(3) which defines remuneration. I refer to Clause 124(4) which defines, by regulation, the form and content of the exemption of by-laws from Clause 124. I refer to Clause 130(7) which describes circumstances requiring the approval of corporate plans by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I refer to Clause 134 wherein the Treasury Board will set the form and content of corporate plans and also set the form, content and timing of operating budgets. I refer to Clause 131(2) wherein Treasury Board may require operating budgets from any C-I corporation. I refer to clause 132(1) wherein Treasury Board may exempt any C-I corporation from requirement to submit a capital budget. I refer to Clause 132(2) wherein C-II corporations may be directed by Treasury Board or the appropriate Minister to submit capital budgets. I refer to Clause 132(4) wherein Treasury Board can approve spending items beyond the budget year. I refer to Clause 132(8) wherein the Minister of Finance may require his approval for a capital budget. I refer to Clause 135(4) wherein the Minister of Finance may exempt a Crown corporation from Clause 135. This clause defines what transactions involve borrowing and specifies the manner of granting approval under Clause 135. I refer to Clause 139(6). This clause troubles me considerably, Mr. Speaker. Therein Treasury Board may prescribe regulations for the preparation of financial statements and supplement or augment generally accepted accounting principles.

Some two years ago, Mr. Speaker, we engaged in a pretty hot and heavy debate in the House. We were able to dissuade the Government from trying to set generally accepted accounting principles by regulation. As a chartered accountant and a fellow of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario, I object very strenuously to any government trying, by regulation, to set generally accepted accounting principles. That is for the profession of accounting to do. The Government has no business doing that. It has no business telling doctors how to take out an appendix. It may be in the business of allowing professions to self-regulate, but once again the Government is trying to set generally accepted accounting principles by regulation. As a professional, I object.

By Clause 142(5) the Governor in Council intends to set regulations prescribing how auditors will be selected. By Clause 152(4) the Treasury Board may make regulations on the form and content of annual reports. In these latter three cases, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the regulations go far beyond what the House can approve.

I would respectfully suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we call it five o'clock. Within the time limit available to me I have tried to keep my speech specifically on the subject of regulations, and thereby tell why we are specifically objecting to the regulation-making part of the Bill. I ask that I be permitted to continue the next time this Bill is brought up in the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to make a minor change to the orders of the day for tomorrow and announce it to Members of the House. Tomorrow, the order of business will be the following: Bill C-7, Bill C-8, Bill C-11, Bill C-14, Bill C-16, and Bill C-6. I believe there is a minor change there. Bill C-14 has been moved from the last place on the agenda to the fourth position. This is according to an agreement that was reached by the House Leaders earlier this day.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council if in fact that has been communicated to our House Leader?

Mr. Evans: To my knowledge, that is correct. I want to announce it in the House so that the changes can be made to the orders of the day for tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS— MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Shall all orders and items preceding No. 67 stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Before putting the motion to the House, the Chair would like to express some concern with regard to Private Members' notices of motion. It seems that lately, notices of motions contain more and more arguments that normally would form the basis of a speech. The Chair does not intend to interfere with today's projected business, but nevertheless I would like to caution Hon. Members that, as stated in Citation 423 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition:

> A motion should be neither argumentative, nor in the style of a speech, nor contain unnecessary provisions or objectionable words.

Members will have noticed that sometimes very thick and complicated legislation is brought to the House by way of a very short motion. This case is not the worst example. Some motions have been introduced in the House with a number of "whereas" or superfluous paragraphs, which has been of some concern to all of the chair occupants. This is brought forward in the House just to warn Members of the situation.

DISARMAMENT

ADVISABILITY OF REDUCING NUCLEAR WEAPONS AND RESUMING DISARMAMENT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should call upon the nuclear powers to seek a temporary freeze by all nations on the testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and delivery systems pending a genuine reduction in nuclear arsenals, and for the early resumption of negotiations on a treaty for comprehensive disarmament under enforceable world law, which should include:

1. disarmament by all nations to the level of arms required for internal security;

2. an international inspection organization able to monitor disarmament and detect violations of the agreement, using both satellites and on-site inspection;

3. a world peace force able to enforce disarmament and prevent international aggression, the members of which should be individually recruited;

4. an effective system of world courts and arbitration tribunals; and

5. a world development fund through which a fixed proportion of the resources made available through disarmament will be devoted to development in the poorest nations.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the subject of the motion that I put before the House today, seconded by my colleague from Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), is, in essence, human survival. Its substance is a series of concrete proposals to establish an international climate that is co-operative rather than confrontational, that recognizes that international security must rest in a commitment to joint survival rather than in the threat of mutual destruction, and one that ultimately reduces the risk of a nuclear holocaust.

The motion which is before the House in my name today calls for the Canadian Government to press for an immediate freeze by all nations on the testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems. This is to be followed by the resumption of negotiations on a treaty for general disarmament under a reliable system of enforceable world law.

This motion underlines the deep concern felt by members within all Parties and which is reflected by the Canadian public in public marches, referendums and many other public illustrations of concern. It is a concern that the deteriorating state of international relations brought about by nuclear weaponry is so great it is a cause not only for alarm but for a call for action that is being heard across the country.

I need not review before the House the horrific statistics that indicate the probability of nuclear war or the absolute destructive power that nuclear weapons possess. Let me simply say that these facts point to one fundamental conclusion: the risk of extinction is not just one more item on the agenda of issues that face us as parliamentarians today. The life and death of every human being on earth and every future human being transcends all other issues that are on our parliamentary schedule and those of other nations. Surely we can agree on this much.

Less than two generations after the carnage of the Second World War, the world is marching toward the brink of a new abyss, toward a conflict whose consequences would exceed experience and defy imagination. It is not enough for us to remind ourselves that nuclear war is horrible and to assure ourselves that we are not for extinguishing mankind. Immediate steps must be taken to transfer our security reliance from the nuclear weapons system to another universally accepted system.

Kurt Waldheim, a former Secretary General of the United Nations, argued in his 1980 report on nuclear weapons as follows:

—Only a system of international security, based on the observation of the principles of the United Nations Charter and of other universally accepted instruments of international law, can provide a mutually acceptable basis of security. This must be, therefore, the goal on the road to disarmament. The Charter and nuclear weapons date their existence from the same time. The future road should point to a full reliance on the Charter, and the elimination of all nuclear weapons.

The present motion is unique, and in an important sense, historic. It has been introduced in the Congress of the United States of America. Within a few months it will have been introduced into the Parliaments of Australia, India, Italy, Jamaica, Kenya, New Zealand, Nigeria, the United Kingdom and the European Parliament.

The initiative has been proposed by Parliamentarians for World Order. It is the first time that legislators around our globe have risen simultaneously and, in unison, introduced concrete proposals for peace. It is my opinion, and that of 800 of my parliamentary colleagues on every continent, that this motion outlines the minimum requirements for humanity's survival.

• (1710)

Some Hon. Members will say that the proposals contained in this motion are unrealistic. They are not. Those who believe that we can carry on for another fifty or a hundred years with a system of nation states, arming themselves with ever more lethal weapons, while the earth is depleted of its resources and millions starve, are only fooling themselves. A realistic look at the requirements for human survival must lead us to seek reform of our international system.

The nuclear powers today possess approximately 50,000 nuclear weapons. These weapons have the destructive power of more than one million Hiroshima bombs. The risk of nuclear war is real. It could be triggered by accident. The Accident Measures Agreement, signed in 1971 by the United States and the Soviet Union, states:

—despite the most elaborate precautions, it is conceivable that technical malfunction or human failure, a misinterpreted incident or unauthorized action, could trigger a nuclear disaster or nuclear war.

On at least three occasions in the last two years, American nuclear forces were placed on alert: twice because of the malfunctioning of a computer chip in the North American Air Defence Command's warning system; and once when a test tape depicting a missile attack was inadvertently inserted in the system.

A nuclear war could begin through the escalation of conventional conflict. There are suggestions today that in the Iran-Iraq conflict it may be as close as two years from now when nuclear weaponry is introduced into that conflict. President Kennedy himself stated that the odds on the Cuban missile crisis leading to a full-scale nuclear exchange were about one out of three or even. Fear that the world would be held by terrorists should the nuclear capacity fall into their hands, cannot be dismissed as irrational, Mr. Speaker. Imagine for a moment if Libya had had this capacity during the past several weeks in that tense situation with Great Britain. While there may be only a small probability of a nuclear war this year, it is a fact that over a sufficiently long period of time the probability of nuclear war must approach statistical certainty. We cannot maintain the atomic arsenals we have indefinitely and survive. Sooner or later, something will go wrong.

While it is impossible to know with certainty that a full-scale nuclear war will end human life on this planet, most experts have concluded that the long-term impact of radioactive fallout and the ecological effects, when added to the short-term effects of blast and fire, will end life as we know it. From inside the political and military system, there are voices of warning in the world today, including that of Ambassador George Kennan, Secretary Robert MacNamara, and Admiral Robert Falls.

Talk of a "limited" or winnable nuclear war is ludicrous. Two questions demand answers. We must ask, at what point will the escalation stop? If generals, diplomats and politicians are not able to prevent a nuclear war from starting, can we expect that they will be able to stop it once it has begun?

The late general, Lord Louis Mountbatten of Burma, said shortly before his death:

—the nuclear arms race has no military purpose. Wars cannot be fought with nuclear weapons. There can be no victory. Their existence only adds to our perils because of the illusions (of security) that they generate.

The key advantage of the freeze proposal that I have put before the Canadian House of Commons today is its common-sense simplicity. At one stroke, it would cut through the tangle of technical complexity that has frustrated many arms control efforts. Senator Mark Hatfield, Republican co-sponsor of the freeze resolution in the U.S. Congress, stressed this:

—the moratorium concept has the inestimable political virtue of simplicity. Its benefits to mankind are readily apparent to all and sundry rather than only to a handful of scientists and strategic analysts. There would be no mistaking the moral implications of an agreement to stop the arms race. To a world now cowering in the face of the awesome dangers and technological complexities of the arms race, a moratorium would symbolize hope.

A freeze would forestall a dangerous new round of superpower weapons systems, such as the MX missile and a new Soviet intercontinental missile. Given their astonishing accuracy, these weapons will push both sides toward a "launch-on-warning" nuclear response.

A freeze would prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons to an increasing number of countries, such as Libya, a country which I just mentioned.

Unlike other arms control measures, a freeze would stop the nuclear arms race and set the stage for disarmament.

It will be said by opponents of the freeze that it is unacceptable because the "other side" is ahead. But we can agree that nuclear weapons are different from other weapons. More bombs do not necessarily mean more strength. When each side can destroy the other many times over, words like "ahead" and "behind" lose their meaning. Congressman James Leach, a Republican from Iowa, illustrates this point in his intervention in the American forum as follows:

—The problem with the logic of those who would reject a freeze, in favour of unrestrained weapons development until an idealized treaty is negotiated, is that their position hinges on the assumption that more nuclear weapons really matter. Death is death. A human being cannot die twice. If two rivals are locked in a small room in a duel to the death where one has 1,400 pistols and the other 1,200, the one with 1,400 has no advantage when one or both parties are likely to be killed or maimed with the first pistol used—

While a nuclear weapons freeze would set the stage for disarmament, nothing short of comprehensive disarmament will ensure our survival. Only by removing the atomic weapons can we remove the threat of nuclear holocaust. Yet as long as the risk of war remains, the nuclear powers will not give up their arsenals. It will be said that talk of general disarmament is idealistic. We must, however, come to grips with general disarmament under world law, if we wish to be realistic about having a world to pass on to future generations. Nations must give up the right to wage war. That is the minimum necessary for survival.

Shridath Ramphal, Secretary-General of the Commonwealth, speaking a few weeks ago to the consultation of National Voluntary Organizations in Ottawa, touched on this theme when he said:

—Nurtured as we are on the doctrine of the nation state, and the concept of national sovereignty which sustains it, we so easily fail to catch a glimpse of the world as a whole.

The sovereignty of all nations in the nuclear age rests in Moscow and Washington. We will only regain our Canadian sovereignty, and other nations will only regain their sovereignty, when the superpowers relinquish the power to annihilate mankind.

To achieve lasting disarmament, four institutions are essential. They are outlined in my motion before the House today. First, an international inspection organization. If nations disarm, they must know that their adversaries are doing likewise. No man will pull down his pants, bend over, and hope someone passing by will resist kicking him. Second, an international police force is necessary. If nations are to reduce the size of their military forces, they must have an alternative on which they can rely for their security. The global police force must be strong enough to enforce two world laws—that no nation may invade another nation and that no nation may rearm. This needs to be enforced.

• (1720)

Third, an improved world judicial system is needed. If nations are to renounce the battlefield as a place to settle disputes, they must have an alternative. Fourth, a world development fund to redirect resources from the arms race to development is needed. To disarm, nations must have security, and there cannot be security in a world where half the population is hungry. This motion recognizes these four institutions as cornerstones of an interdependent global community.

After 30 years, superpower negotiations have reduced neither the quantity of weapons nor their destructive power. The negotiations have provided a stage on which a global audience views its own powerlessness. At present those negotiations, however tenuous, have ceased altogether. Thus we are at a very critical juncture. We must find an alternative approach to the arms race. This is what the marchets in our cities are saying, this is what the municipal-based referendums are saying, this is what the vigils are saying, and this is what the worship services are saying across the country.

President Eisenhower wrote to an American publisher on April 4, 1956 making a crystal-clear point. He said:

> When we get to the point, as we one day will, that in any outbreak of general hostilities, regardless of the element of surprise, destruction will be both reciprocal and complete, possibly we will have enough sense to meet at the conference table with the understanding that the era of armaments has ended and the human race must conform its actions to this truth or die.

In concluding my comments in support of my motion before the House today, I invite Hon. Members on all sides to join with me in support of this motion for human survival.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, as chairperson for the Parliamentarians for World Order in Canada, I am pleased to rise and support this proposal. As the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) stated, the substance of this resolution was initiated by the Parliamentarians for World Order internationally.

I would like to make a few brief comments about that organization. It is an international organization of legislators working for disarmament, development and strengthened world institutions. The organization now has over 600 Members of Parliament or legislators in 31 countries. This resolution, which in different words has been called "the call for global survival", has been sent to Members of Parliament around the world, for a total of 25,000 letters to 115 countries in 10 different languages.

It is unfortunate that we must debate such important questions as the freeze on nuclear weapons, and a means to deal with international conflict with so little interest in the House and with so little input from Members. That is partly due to our rules in this Chamber and partly due to our Constitution. However, it is my hope that the debate this afternoon might at least stimulate or encourage the Government to permit a wider debate on these issues which are of such great concern to Canadians. I think we were all struck by the immense numbers of Canadians last weekend who marched in the streets because of their concern about nuclear war; I think there were over 100,000 in Vancouver.

I know other Hon. Members want to speak, so I will not take much time. However, I want to put on the record some facts with respect to the threat of war today and over the last few years. People have a tendency to forget or to bury their heads in the sand and think that such things will not happen. Since 1945, since the end of the so-called Second World War, there have been 66 regional wars throughout the world, wherein more than 9 million non-military persons were killed and another 6 million military personnel were killed, for a total of 15 million in 66 wars since 1945.

In 1982, the nations of the world spent more than $650 billion on armaments. That is equal to the total Gross National Product of Latin America and Africa. Of this amount, $100 billion was spent on the production of nuclear arms, which now number 50,000. In contrast to that, the moneys required in the world to provide adequate food, housing, health care and education amount to only $18.5 billion. I say only $18.5 billion when compared with the $650 billion spent on armaments. What a pity, what a shame!

In the United States today, 53 per cent of every tax dollar is spent on military expenditures. That is the greatest percentage in the history of the United States during peacetime. Thirty-five percent of all world armaments are produced in that country, and the 50,000 nuclear weapons which now exist in the world have one million times the destructive power of the explosion at Hiroshima. Imagine that, if you can. The nuclear arms existing in the world today have the capacity to wipe out or destroy 800 million lives in one day. If a nuclear war were to start at the beginning of the day, before the end of that day 800 million lives could be destroyed. Turning to another point, the world now spends 2,300 times more for military activities than for peace activities. I just wanted to put those facts on the record because they are very relevant to the resolution introduced by our colleague today.

Since I want to give other Members a chance to support and talk on this resolution, I will simply say that when we have 50,000 nuclear bombs with a destructive power one million times the Hiroshima bomb which can virtually destroy the world, certainly the only alternative is disarmament and arms control.

I said at the beginning of my remarks that I regretted the fact that we carry on this debate with so little interest in this Parliament. It is too bad we cannot have a process or procedure whereby we could vote on these issues as we did with capital punishment. In that case it was a free vote because we were dealing with life and death issues, something very close to the conscience of Members of Parliament. Here we are dealing with something which could destroy 800 million lives, and we have to deal with it in a process like this. I think that is a very unfortunate set of events. It is too bad that we cannot do what was done in the United States which has so-called non-binding resolutions. The Senate of the United States passed a resolution in favour of a nuclear freeze. It expressed the will of the members of the Senate but it had no binding force on the President. At least the people of the United States knew where their members stood. I wish we could do that in this House. If we cannot do it tonight, let us have an opportunity to do it together and to have a much more lengthy debate with more Members involved. It is vitally important to the people of Canada and of the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate this afternoon. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) for introducing the motion today as well as the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) who spoke on the pressing problems of nuclear weapons and world conflicts that have occurred since World War II, and the intense building of nuclear arms. I will not repeat much of what has gone on, but I do want to put some of my concerns on the record.

I agree with the importance of this being a broader debate in Parliament. People throughout Canada should become more educated about the real danger of the nuclear holocaust and the events which could lead up to it. It would be devastating for the human race. I plan to circulate as widely as possible the speeches given in the House of Commons by all Members of Parliament who speak today, regardless of their political affiliation. It is a common cause and there is a common bond with regard to the issue we are debating.

I had the honour and the privilege of attending the Seventy-First Interparliamentary Conference in Geneva from April 2 to 7 of this year. We had a delegation in Geneva to discuss some issues that are pertinent to the debate today. Three topics were discussed at the interparliamentary conference: first, a panel on world population; second, an emergency resolution or supplementary item, as it was referred to, on the Iranian-Iraqi war, and, third, a panel on arms control and disarmament. I was proud to be part of the Canadian delegation on the latter panel, namely, that on arms control and disarmament.

The presentation by the Canadian delegation on that panel began by pointing out the peace initiatives of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the broad, if not unanimous acceptance of his peace initiatives by this Parliament and the Canadian people. It is worth putting on the record again today that, out of the findings of the peace initiatives that were started, and that must continue, there were ten principles that represented a common area of interest and agreement between East and West emerging from the wide-ranging discussions that were begun there. It is not only East and West but also the developing and developed countries that hold these concerns. The ten points are as follows: Both sides agree that a nuclear war cannot be won. Both sides agree that a nuclear war must never be fought. Both sides wish to be free of the risk of accidental or surprise attack. Both sides recognize the dangers inherent in destabilizing weapons. Both sides understand the need for improved techniques of crisis management. Both sides are conscious of the awesome consequences of being the first to use force against the other. Both sides have an interest in increasing security while reducing the cost. Both sides have an interest in avoiding the spread of nuclear weapons to other countries. Both sides have come to a guarded recognition of each other's legitimate security interests. Finally, both sides realize that their security strategies cannot be based on the assumed political or economic collapse of the other side. That would just not happen.

Further, the Canadian delegation at the interparliamentary conference in Geneva put forward the priorities officially supported by Canada. First, Canada will press for a comprehensive and multilateral nuclear test ban treaty. On this subject there is preparatory work in progress, and it has been going on for some time, so that Canadian parliamentarians and the Canadian people can contribute their share to what will be a difficult process of deliberations.

Second, Canada will be pressing for a more effective non-proliferation regime. I personally pointed out that although it is not currently part of Canada's official proposals, many parliamentarians and Canadian people are pressing for a policy of nuclear weapons-free zones. I applaud all those countries which forwarded this concept at the interparliamentary conference. There were some 100 countries in attendance at the conference, including all of the countries that presently have a nuclear weapons capability or have nuclear weapons within their arsenals.

Third, Canada will press for a convention to prohibit chemical weapons. Until such time as a convention can be put in place, we call upon countries of the world to confirm or re-confirm their adherence to the protocol agreement of 1925 banning the use of chemical weapons. This has come to the fore because of the situation arising from the Iranian-Iraqi war.

Fourth, officially Canada will press toward the objective of prohibiting all weapons from use in outer space. Certainly the development of weapons for use in outer space only further endangers the tinder box in which we now live. I believe we must maintain this last frontier for peaceful and mutually beneficial purposes.

In addition, on the official position of Canada we strongly put forward that we would support negotiations to limit and reduce nuclear arms. We would participate actively in negotiations to limit and reduce conventional forces. Further, we would seek step by step to achieve ultimately general and complete disarmament consistent with the legitimate security needs of states. This ties in very well with what the Hon. Member for Waterloo said about the need for an international police force to protect states that still fear aggression from other countries.

We all realize that the major stumbling blocks to arms control and disarmament agreements are the methods of monitoring or verification and the trust of others throughout the world. We must not let the problems that lie there be excuses for not being able to overcome those hurdles. Whether we consider ourselves East or West, developed or developing countries, we must look forward to the day with optimism when we will not have to explain to our children the atrocities of war or why weapons of mass destruction exist on the face of the earth.

We should always remember that not one of us owns any piece of this planet. Although we may have a deed to a piece of property, ultimately none of us own the planet. We have inherited this planet from past generations. We will let down future generations unless we find a way to pass it on, hopefully in a better state than when we found it. By allowing the escalation and threat of nuclear weapons to increase along with other weapons of mass destruction, we are not honouring that obligation to future generations.

I now want to turn to the resolution that was adopted at the Seventy-First Interparliamentary Conference in Geneva. The panel which dealt with the arms race, arms control and world disarmament passed this resolution unanimously. As I have already pointed out, all countries in the world which are governed by some form of Parliament, whether or not we in the free world agree with that form of Parliament, are represented at the inter-parliamentary union. This resolution was adopted unanimously.

I believe that the resolution covered the four points which were mentioned by the Hon. Member for Waterloo. I would like to look at a few of the highlights of that resolution today. Point No. 10 of the draft resolution reads as follows:

> Calls upon Parliaments and Governments, especially those of the most heavily armed countries, to exert efforts for reducing the enormous expenditure entailed in accumulating arms for military purposes, as well as to channel the human and material potentials released by the reduction of military expenditure towards economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries;

Point No. 12 of the resolution reads as follows:

> Calls upon Parliaments and Governments to support the creation of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various parts of the world—particularly in areas of tension—wherever all the States of the region show interest and give their agreement;

I find this point to be of particular interest since I have put forward two private Member's Bills in an attempt to declare Canada a nuclear-weapons-free zone. In the last Parliament, I put forward Bill C-678, and in the first session of this Parliament, the session we are now in, I put forward Bill C-203. I must say that that Bill has received some support, just as the motion today is receiving some support from all sides of the House of Commons. I was gratified to find that this section of the motion was adopted by all member countries of the inter-parliamentary union.

Point 13(a) of the resolution to which I have referred reads as follows:

> To initiate parliamentary debates on disarmament problems, to launch appeals and issue statements in favour of the cessation of the arms build-up, to adopt measures freezing and reducing-military expenditure, to support the prohibition of foreign bases and troops on the territory of other States and the disbanding of military blocs;

Point No. 13(b) reads as follows:

> To intensify parliamentary contacts on the regional and sub-regional levels on such problems as the strengthening of confidence and security, the creation of areas of co-operation, understanding and neighbourliness, without nuclear weapons;

I believe that the Members who have risen in the House today and the Members who will rise after me have no problem agreeing with that point. I encourage the parliamentarians who are here today and the Canadian people who have followed and will be following this debate to educate our friends and neighbours to promote international peace and arms control and certainly to promote the reduction and elimination of nuclear weapons so that all of mankind can live in a better world.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, because other members wish to speak in this debate, I will keep my remarks quite brief. However, I wish to note that this debate has two distinguishing characteristics. First, there is representation in support of the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) from all sides of the House. This is a non-partisan debate and indeed it is a high level debate. I believe that the issues which have been put forward have been approached from a level of deep political concern in a way that lifts us above partisan debate.

The second characteristic of this debate is the unique nature of the motion before us which is being introduced internationally in many Parliaments throughout the world. Just as we here in Canada are speaking in this hour that is available to us, so too there are parliamentarians in other nations who are addressing in their own Chambers the very same questions. To me, this represents a very significant gain in the international understanding of our common concerns and the understanding of the common ground on which we all stand as we seek collective security with economic development for all, the only sane course of action for a world which has become not only international but truly interdependent. We do live in a global community and it is those of us who are specifically charged as elected politicians in national legislatures who must rise above the domestic concerns which are always real and pressing and put into place a system that will ensure true security with economic development in the world.

I wish to take a moment to note that one of the leaders of the United Nations, Mr. Brad Morse, the administrator of the United Nations Development Program, spoke at one of the first forums that was held at the United Nations by Parliamentarians for World Order, the organization which has sponsored the very motion we are debating. Mr. Morse was a distinguished Republican Congressman in the United States Congress before moving on to his post at the United Nations. I would like to read the words of Mr. Morse to indicate to my colleagues what today's debate is all about. Mr. Morse said:

> We have to make a great and noble leap in our thinking about profound issues of public policy, from parish to planet; from nation to United Nations; from abject poverty for most of our human family to progress in equity and well-being for all; from the tragic absurdity of armaments to the sanity of peace that can ennoble and enrich all of us.

The most recent forum held by Parliamentarians for World Order at the United Nations last November was a forum which was conducted under the title "Global Militarization versus Economic Development". It was a forum which tried to relate these two principal concerns in life today, development and disarmament. It was a forum which tried to show that the two characteristics of our world today are militarization and deprivation and one which tried to show that the East-West conflict has North-South dimensions as well. These are the global concerns that this organization has tried to put forward.

At that forum, the keynote speaker was the distinguished Secretary-General of the Commonwealth, Mr. Shridath Ramphal, a man who is well known in our country. To be frank about it, Sir, he gave the forum a rather gloomy prognosis of the state of the world today. I would like to read to the House a few of the words with which Mr. Ramphal left us, because they are words worth pondering. He said:

> We are losing the ethic of peaceful settlement. Resort to force is becoming less disreputable. In fact, the gravest contradiction of all may arise if democracy begins to stand in the way of internationalism as the notion takes root that there are votes in war. We allow the machinery of peacemaking to rust away. It it any wonder that militarism is ascendant?

That, unfortunately, is a characteristic of the world in which we live today. My colleagues have already pointed out the enormous amounts of money that are being spent on the arms race literally at the cost of the poor of the world.

Mr. Ramphal went on to make another point, and I would like to conclude my remarks on this note. He said:

> Whatever the lunacies of the rich, why do poor countries persist in adding to their military budgets? . . . In an international climate dominated by militarism, some Third World leaders have sadly allowed themselves to regard modern weapons systems almost as symbols of progress or as necessary props for political power . . . What is needed is a new global ethos that rejects the military culture.

That indeed is the challenge that we as parliamentarians face when trying to grapple with larger responsibilities.

I would like to conclude by saying that last week I visited Peru. To see an example of what a combination of militarism and deprivation does to a people, one would only have to look at the people of that country. In that country, 45 per cent of the budget is spent on military armaments, the army and all the accoutrements that go with modern warfare. All of that is at the expense of the greatest deprivation that I have seen in my many years of travelling through Third World countries. It was brought home to me very forcefully.

● (1750)

In the nuclear arms race the major nations of the world—the five permanent member nations of the Security Council which have weapons and, in particular, the two superpowers that have 95 per cent of all the nuclear weapons in the world—are continuing to build a vertical mountain of nuclear weaponry, while other nations of the world are extending a horizontal network of conventional arms in ways that are horrendous to contemplate in terms of their economies and also are manifesting a militaristic culture. I believe we have to consider seriously how to get rid of it.

Even if the world could eliminate all nuclear weapons, which it seems is a political impossibility, the world from then on would have to live with the knowledge of how to construct nuclear weapons. I put this question to the distinguished Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) and I ask him to consider it. I put this question to him very seriously and I know he may have an opportunity to respond tonight. How is it possible, as a new political challenge, to make knowledge—as distinct from actual possession—the actual deterrence? This course of action has been labelled by Jonathan Schell among others as "existential deterrence". This would entail the abolition of nuclear arms in progressive steps, starting with a reciprocal no-first-use pledge.

The threat of deterrence would ultimately consist of the ability of one side to construct nuclear devices once it was known that the other side was doing so. The critical time factor of split-second death would be removed. On the basis of my experience as a politician, I recognize that the chances of moving into such a mode are quite remote without a tremendous political push forward. I believe that Canada has a real role to play in making a contribution to the verification systems in the world that need to be developed both in conventional arms, as we are doing in the contributions that the Canadian Government has made so far to the Stockholm Conference, and in the verification techniques that still have to be developed for outer space weapons in order to stop that escalation of nuclear technology beyond the point where it is today.

I make a very fervent appeal to my colleagues in this House to take very seriously the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Waterloo, because it has opened up the very high level, non-partisan way in which we are speaking on behalf of humanity. Indeed, we are speaking about the survival of my children as well as the children of every Member of this House of Commons and their grandchildren. That is our responsibility. I believe that Parliamentarians for World Order have helped to lift up our thinking, and now as politicians we will have to follow it through.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I support this motion very strongly, but I support it as a second step rather than a first step. I would like to give an idea of where I think we should go first. This, I think, is tremendously important. I think many Hon. Members have seen the cartoon about the two men knee-deep in gasoline. One of them has seven matches and the other has ten matches. The matches represent nuclear weapons. Both of them are arguing about who has more matches and whether one has bigger matches than the other. It seems to me that the argument of how many nuclear weapons we have in this particular proposal is part of the solution to that argument. I have become convinced that we are working from the wrong place to start with. Maybe we should be draining the gasoline from the tanks, because we are not getting anywhere by just making these proposals.

I was very pleased when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke on February 9 as a result of long discussions he had with leaders of many, many countries around the world, including the major NATO countries, the Warsaw Pact countries, the five nuclear powers, and, in particular, the two superpowers. He came to a series of conclusions. I think that these conclusions may be the very basis for the beginning of the kind of negotiations that would bring us to a freeze. I would like to mention these quickly. The Prime Minister said that there is among all of these nations, including the superpowers: agreement that a nuclear war cannot be won; agreement that a nuclear war must never be fought; a wish to be free of accidental war or of surprise attack; recognition of the dangers of destabilizing weapons; the need for improved techniques of crisis management; recognition of the consequences of the first use of force; an interest in increasing security and reducing costs; prevention of horizontal proliferation; recognition of each other's legitimate security interests; and, finally, recognition that their security cannot be based on the political or economic collapse of the other side.

It seems to me that if we start with this—and I met with a group in the United States just recently who were talking about a common ground—it would provide the common ground. I hope the Prime Minister, when he leaves here, will carry on with the idea that these particular points could be a basis for a group of countries which would be involved in some kind of third party action to bring the two superpowers and the other nuclear powers to recognize that we must come to the point of freeze. I believe the gasoline must be drained from the tank before there can be agreement on a freeze.

Admiral Eugene Carroll said the other night that he felt a nuclear war was probable by about 1992. We must move to do the two things I am suggesting.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I believe in many of the objectives that have been set out in this motion, but I do not believe in world government and I do not believe in an enforceable police force that will force nations to do things that they do not want to do. I believe in seeking a just peace, but I do not want a world government that is going to come in and tell people what to do and use armed forces to do it—an enforceable police force. It smacks too much of world government. I believe in the sovereignty of people, and people should have the right to decide their own destiny.

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder, as the hour is drawing near, whether the House would agree that the question be put.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am rising—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): First of all, if I may, speaking to the point raised by the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean), let me say that the previous question can be put on a point of order.

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to commend the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) for moving this motion. In view of his proposal, it is clear that differences of opinion exist within the Progressive Conservative Party.

We have heard the views put forward by the previous speaker, which in fact reflect a lot better the position of the Progressive Conservative Party.

[English]

I want to commend the Hon. Member for Waterloo because he has presented a wide-ranging resolution that is provoking a great deal of interest and will provoke a great deal of debate. I would ask him to recognize that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and indeed the Government, have been very active in attempting to promote greater dialogue and greater discussion between the two superpowers to reduce the level of international tension and provide an environment within which better discussions could take place. I would invite the Hon. Member for Waterloo to use his substantial influence within his caucus to encourage the Tory Party to support the initiatives—

• (1800)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair regrets to interrupt the Hon. Minister but the time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PROCUREMENT OF ARMOUR-PLATED AUTOMOBILES. (B) REPORTED DEFICIENCIES IN VEHICLES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, the questions I have asked in the House, and on the Order Paper, regarding the purchase of special vehicles to protect diplomats and our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), are really designed to bring to the attention of the Government some rather startling deficiencies and, may I say, inefficiencies.

For example, what is the role of Mr. John Morgan, reportedly retired from the American secret service? Who recommended him as an expert in this area for our purposes in Canada? There is also the bidding process itself, and interdepartmental squabbling and reported paranoia between the RCMP, the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Supply and Services, and officious people involved in these Departments such as Superintendent Muir of the RCMP, Mr. Steve MacEachern from the Department of Supply and Services, and Mr. Barry Weaymouth from the Department of External Affairs who recently went off on another trip to Miami.

I am, of course, concerned to see that the mechanical deficiencies with the summit seven cars are remedied, particularly the problems with the glass. I would like to know if Hesse Eisenhardt, who supplied these cars will again be able to escape any guarantee provisions. What were the results of the legal opinions with respect to the glass deficiencies in these cars? Was there any reason why the Canadian Government decided not to sue the company for these deficiencies? Taxpayers are entitled to know these things even if some egos in various departments are bruised.

What is the process which allows the Department of External Affairs to take the risk with our diplomats in the field? Also, I wonder if the Minister will produce the external affairs report of the internal audit of emergency buys for bulletproof vehicles?

With regard to the Prime Minister's new limousine, which he does not like because the windows do not open, I assume Mr. Morgan had some role in purchasing this car. Is the price we paid for the Prime Minister's vehicule the same, allowing for currency differences, as that paid for a similar vehicle for the President of the U.S.? What role did Superintendent Muir and Sergeant Banks of the RCMP play in this matter? Were specifications drafted by Sergeant Banks, changed by Superintendent Muir, and, if so, was there any good reason for it?

With respect to the vehicles known as "Popemobiles" which are being purchased—I understand there are three Oldsmobiles—John Morgan, apparently is involved, but where does this leave Sergeant Banks who was offered to the Department of External Affairs as an expert? Also, why is John Morgan signing his name as an RCMP member, as he did on February 22 when he entered the protective materials plant in Miami? Also, was this contract a predetermined contract, as with respect to the Prime Minister's limousine, but with all the fanfare of a legitimate bid?

I am very skeptical that the taxpayers of Canada are getting value for their money. I am skeptical about the legitimacy of the bidding process and I am very suspicious of what I consider to be the incompetence and the in-fighting I detected in the Departments concerned.

I would also like to know if there is an approximate $30,000 differential per vehicle in some instances between the Hesse Eisenhardt bid and that of another supplier, and, if so, how do you explain this attitude towards the bidding process? Why do so many vehicles appear to be predestined to be bought from the Hesse Eisenhardt Company, particularly when there are reports that this company may be the subject of yet another change in ownership?

● (1805)

I will have other questions, Mr. Speaker. I would like to have some sign that the Government recognizes that there is a problem, that it is prepared to be honest in assessing the causes, and is taking the actions required to remedy the situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the question put by the Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) on April 12 of this year. Following an exhaustive study of possible sources of supply, a contract for a 1983 model Cadillac Fleetwood limousine was given to Hesse Eisenhardt in August 1983.

Both Canadian and American companies appeared on the list of prospective suppliers of the Department of Supply and Services. However, none of the domestic companies was able to supply a vehicle with the type of armour-plating desired. The RCMP then consulted the U.S. Secret Service, which replied that the only American company capable of supplying an armoured vehicle meeting the security standards for the President of the United States was Hesse Eisenhardt. Consequently, the RCMP asked the Department of Supply and Services to negotiate a contract with Hesse Eisenhardt, for supplying the limousine.

As far as the Summit meeting is concerned, it is correct that seven cars, made by Chevrolet and provided with armour-plating by Hesse Eisenhardt, were purchased for that occasion. As far as I know, there was never any mention of deficiencies in the armour-plating of these vehicles. However, there may have been complaints about certain mechanical deficiencies. In fact, no manufacturing defects could be found in any of the armoured vehicles acquired on behalf of the Department of External Affairs. I must point out, however, that further questions on the subject would have to be answered by the Department of External Affairs rather than the Department of Supply and Services.

As for the purchase of vehicles required for the Pope's visit in September 1984, to which the Hon. Member for Pembina seemed to be referring, the RCMP has recommended calling for tenders. Furthermore, a number of companies have asked the Department of Supply and Services to let them bid on the contract. It was therefore decided to assess the capabilities of prospective suppliers by sending each one a call for tender. Eleven companies, both Canadian and American, received an invitation to bid, and each company's capabilities have been thoroughly examined. The overriding criterion for selecting a supplier was the availability of the type of steel required for armour-plating. Although Protective Materials International Inc. of Miami Lakes, Florida, made a lower bid, it was felt that since the company did not have the required steel in stock, it would not be able to get it from the manufacturer in time for the delivery deadline.

In view of the urgent nature of the order, it was decided to give the contract to Hesse Eisenhardt. In fact, this company was the only one to have enough of the right kind of steel in stock and the expertise required to do the armour-plating within the established time frame. Consequently, a contract for Can. $358,725 was given Hess and Eisenhardt on March 6, 1984.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—LINGAN-PHELEN COAL MINE PROJECT IN NOVA SCOTIA. (B) LACK OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, on April 11, 1984 I raised a question in the House with the Minister responsible for regional and industrial expansion (Mr. Lumley). The question arose from the tragic fire at Devco's No. 26 colliery in Cape Breton.

As the Minister knows, 1,400 people are out of work because of the fire. The Leader of the New Democratic Party in Nova Scotia sent a telegram to the Minister calling on the Government to speed up development of the coal mine, a move which would provide jobs and spare these people severe economic hardship. I am advised that to this date nothing has changed in that regard. The situation is the same as it was two and one-half weeks ago. They need assistance to get another mine going. There are 1,400 miners out of work. The unemployment rate is 30 per cent to 40 per cent. There was a wire sent which reads as follows:

> Due to the serious fire and sealing off of No. 26 colliery Glace Bay and loss of over twelve hundred jobs District 26 United Mine Workers of America executive and membership request you press for the immediate opening of Lingan-Phelen mine and three new mines from one slope at former Number 20 colliery Glace Bay to alleviate any further unemployment in this area.

In his answer to me the Minister indicated that:

> My officials have been working since Friday with the Devco officials to bring this information to my attention. It is hoped that we can make a decision with respect to the new mine as soon as possible.

• (1810)

That is not good enough. The problem is that there are contracts of sale involved here. We know that the American government is aggressively moving toward an attempt to get contracts with Korean and Japanese markets. Unless there are very serious moves made soon we would lose these markets and these jobs could be gone forever.

Also, with regard to a wire we received concerning a telegram which was addressed to the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), I would hope that the Parliamentary Secretary would relay this message to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It states:

> The United Mine Workers of America District Executive Board is requesting Minister of Employment and Immigration for the immediate lifting of the waiting period for men from the 26th colliery who because of the disaster of the fire will have to wait additional time to qualify for UIC.

Again, because of the inaction of the Government, these workers are unable to collect their unemployment benefits. In our opinion, they are unnecessarily being laid off. There are programs put forward for the opening up of other areas or slopes. They have now sealed off the fire but the situation is exactly the same. These workers need help and they need it now.

[Translation]

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the concern of the Hon. Member and I commend him for the interest he demonstrated last April 11 when he directed his question to the Minister.

Mr. Speaker, the one thing we have to keep in mind concerning the fire in shaft or slope No. 26 is that everything has been sealed off to prevent oxygen from getting into the mine.

As a result it is impossible of course to assess the damages to facilities and machinery and to make a study to establish whether it would be profitable to re-open the mine.

In his question, the Hon. Member suggested that we ought to speed up development of a mine called Lingan-Phalen. Again I commend him, but that would not be the answer because what matters is finding a long-term solution. I do not think that if we were to speed up development of the Lingan-Phalen mine, we would actually be able to rehire immediately the 1,400 people who, unfortunately, are now unemployed.

One thing for sure is that, since the fire, the Minister has been making every effort. He has asked for a report and urged his officials to give a fully satisfactory answer to the Hon. Member in the best interests of those miners.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that no effort has been spared and I am convinced that the best interests of the miners will be taken into consideration.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC CANADA—REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S ADVICE. (B) PLIGHT OF JOBLESS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, on April 12 I raised the matter of the desperate situation in which the Atlantic provinces find themselves, and have found themselves over the past number of months with respect to the unemployment that exists there. I specifically referred to the construction trades in and around the Saint John region, Moncton, Bathurst and Campbellton. Quite frankly, we find it intolerable.

I mentioned in the House before that the norm in the construction trades seems to be in the vicinity of 75 per cent to 83 per cent unemployment, which basically covers the entire construction trade segment. The frustration of these people is that there does not seem to be any sort of a response from the Government to the plight in which they find themselves.

For instance, in the Saint John region a new hotel complex recently opened up with a mere handful of jobs in relation to the number of unemployed in that region. For somewhere in the vicinity of say 150 to 200 jobs there was a lineup of over 1,500 people who were making job applications. Some people stood literally all night in that line-up so they would be the first to be considered for a job. The management of the hotel complex had to bring in a team of people to process the applicants who were lined up for those jobs.

In the shipyard in Saint John we find a union with approximately 1,100 to 1,200 members, with nine people as of yesterday working in that yard. Imagine nine people out of a complement of 1,100 to 1,200 workers in one of the most modern shipyards in the country, probably in North America. This Government has spent a lot of money developing that yard, but it has not done a single thing to pump any sort of meaningful work into that yard that would create jobs for more than a handful of people. That is the frustration, Mr. Speaker.

We now find that the City of Moncton has the highest unemployment of any city across this nation. That is totally unacceptable. The City of Moncton is supposed to be the hub of the Maritimes. It is supposed to be the rail centre for the CNR with its repair depots. But what do we hear, Sir? We have heard consistently over the last number of months, and the past couple of years, of lay-off after lay-off after lay-off in a Crown corporation that is directly controlled by this Government. This Government should be addressing itself to finding meaningful ways to increasing employment in that Crown corporation in Moncton which so desperately needs jobs instead of lay-offs.

We have been attempting for months and months to encourage this Government to increase grain shipments through the Port of Saint John. We are not asking for many, but one or two additional shipments during the season would make a tremendous difference to the amount of work created in that port. The Port of Saint John is one of the finest facilities in North America. It is one of those rare ports with the capacity, the capability and the work force to handle most any circumstance of shipping that we could possibly conceive of or require. This Government cannot come to grips or cope with the desperate situation that exists in the Port of Saint John, even by increasing the number of grain shipments by an additional one or two, which is all we were asking.

Speaking of the Port of Saint John, we could easily consider in a meaningful way the creation of a free trade zone. It has an ideal geographical location. The Maritime region of New Brunswick is next to the great market of New England with its 48 million people, practically twice the population of Canada. Imagine the benefit to the Maritime region, to the Port of Saint John and to that entire area if the Port of Saint John were declared a free trade zone. What about the literally billions of dollars in additional revenues that could be generated over a short period of time, creating jobs in a region that is starved economically for the maintenance of its current job level?

There are many things to which this Government could address itself to alleviate the difficulties which the Atlantic and Maritime region is facing. Instead, this Government seems to be contented with the attitude of, "send down a few paltry dollars from time to time through a new Government job creation program which will dry up in a few months, only to keep the soup kitchens rolling. It is difficult for most people in the country to realize that soup kitchens are on the increase. Not since the great depression have we seen anything like we are currently experiencing. It is a sad fact of life, but, due to the apathy of government, the number of soup lines is on the increase.

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should first point out that, according to the latest unemployment data as compiled by economic region and published by Statistics Canada—they are for the week ending March 17—it is not in Moncton that the unemployment rate is the highest. With 18.6 per cent unemployment, this city ranks twelfth.

While unemployment is admittedly a serious problem in New Brunswick and indeed elsewhere, it is heartening to note that unemployment in that province did fall from 15 per cent in December 1983 to 14.7 per cent in March 1984. For Canada as a whole, during the same period, unemployment has increased by .3 per cent. All the signs show that the economy of New Brunswick, which is getting close to the pre-recession level, should continue to improve this year. According to the Conference Board reports, the mining, manufacturing and construction sectors should also show substantial growth. In fact, the housing construction, pulp and paper, lumber production and retail industries already show a marked increase compared with last year's performance. Opportunities are therefore improving for New Brunswick workers.

The Minister has already mentioned the frigate program. The $3.9 million contract granted to the Saint John Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co. Ltd. will certainly prove to be beneficial to the economy of the Saint John area. Included in the construction projects are the Maritime Forestry Complex in Fredericton at a cost of $45 million, the restoration plans for downtown Moncton at a cost of $41 million and the development of the Sussex potash mines.

Unemployment and conditions prevailing in the building sector and the various industries of Atlantic Canada are matters of ongoing concern to us. However, in view of the improvement in the economic picture and the new projects now underway such as the frigate program, the Government is convinced that still more jobs will be created.

I therefore urge the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett) to promote the projects and programs developed by the Canadian Government; I am sure he is pleased with them and will be glad to tell all and sundry that Saint John Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co. Ltd. in New Brunswick have been awarded a $3.9 million contract and that the $42 million Fredericton Maritime Forestry Complex and the $41 million improvement program in downtown Moncton are the workings of the Liberal Government led by Mr. Trudeau. These programs are aimed at improving the situation in Atlantic Canada and more especially in New Brunswick. All the work done under the job creation programs such as the temporary job creation programs slashed by the Conservative Government in 1979 and brought back by the Liberal Government will result in an improved situation in New Brunswick.

Adjournment Debate

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.23 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

PEACE RIVER JOB TRAINING PROJECT

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to press the Government on a matter of grave concern to a number of mentally and physically handicapped people in the Peace country, not to mention their families and friends who are concerned with their well-being.

These people with special needs have developed a feeling of pride, accomplishment, and skill, by being a part of the vocational training centre project. The project receives crucial federal funding. This on the job training project provided both trainees and the general public with a valuable learning opportunity.

This project is now about to come to an end as a result of the termination of the federal funding. The trainees will suffer. Roger Jackson, and the board of directors of the sponsoring association will see their dreams falter, and the friends and families of the trainees will lose hope for their loved ones. No comparable service is available in this northern community.

As well, Mr. Speaker, the Government will suffer because these trainees may well end up drawing unemployment insurance and social assistance, without training. This is how the Government will suffer because it will be spending without gain.

Surely the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), who could find $140 million to provide jobs in Liberal ridings, can find a mere $200,000 in comparison, to help these people with special needs.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CERTAIN ALLEGATIONS PUBLISHED IN NEWSPAPERS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, on February 6 and 8 of this year, I asked the Leader of the Opposition some questions about his relationship with non-resident Walter Wolf. The House will recall that, contrary to the rules that apply during an election campaign, Mr. Wolf allegedly gave the Leader of the Opposition $250,000 for the avowed purpose of dumping the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). This scheme was orchestrated by a certain Michel Cogger. This morning, the press reported that the same Michel Cogger was being prosecuted because of certain schemes which again involve Mr. Walter Wolf and that this time the amount involved was $200,000.

Could the Leader of the Opposition inform Canadians about his entourage? As long as Mr. Cogger is not required to pay the $200,000 mentioned in the suit, he must be given the benefit of the doubt. However, the events surrounding this transaction and the unlawful payment of $200,000 into the campaign fund of the Leader of the Opposition raise a number of questions and deserve a formal statement on the part of the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. It is said that we know a person by the company he keeps, and it is clear that in this respect, the Leader of the Opposition has left many Canadians with a number of questions marks.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

CLOSURE OF OFFICE OF EQUAL OPPORTUNITY FOR WOMEN

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, in this, the last year of the International Women's Decade, the decade meant to signal the advancement of women, the Liberal Government moves to close the Office of Equal Opportunity for Women. That is the one office that has provided some limited support and counselling to the 100,000 women in the public service who are in the lower income brackets.

The closure of this office has been protested by Members of Parliament, by the Public Service Alliance of Canada, by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, by the Women's Adviser to the Prime Minister, and by thousands of individual women, but to no avail.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister responsible for the status of women, and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) have decided they know better.

Last February the Minister responsible for the status of women denied that the office would be closed. At least that is the impression she left with the House when she said in response to questions:

There is no intention to close that office on April 1.

As with so many of her statements, the Minister can again virtuously protest that she kept her word, because the office did not close on April 1 but on May 1. How semantically misleading can you get?

The Government, Sir, closes the office. Thousands of women will be denied its services.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IMAGE PROJECTED THROUGH DECLARATIONS BY CERTAIN SPOKESPERSONS FOR QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, today, we read in La Presse and other newspapers that once again, representatives abroad of the Government of Quebec have been making statements about certain situations, and I am thinking for instance of the statement made by Mrs. Beaudoin about the Pope, who according to her, was not very well informed about the moral situation in this country or rather, in the Province of Quebec. Yesterday, the Premier of Quebec said the matter was blown out of all proportion and that it was a tempest in a teapot.

I suppose it is not terribly important to the Premier of Quebec. However, as a citizen of Canada and Quebec, I think that our international image is certainly not being improved by the Quebec Government's actions. Remember what happened when the Premier of Quebec went to France? He said that once our senior citizens are dead, Quebec will vote for independence. Here again, he did not think what he said was terribly important. Another blunder was made when the Premier of Quebec went to Italy and said that the Italian President had expressed his support for the cause of independence. However, the President of Italy, through his Ambassador here in Canada, sent a number of documents back to the Premier, including his passport for "Quebec 1984".

Mr. Speaker, according to the Government of Quebec there is no problem. However, I am very concerned about the image we are projecting abroad, because of the actions of a province like Quebec. It is a shame that the Quebec Government, elected according to our democratic rules, refuses to consider the real situation in Quebec and is trying to get its message across through all kinds of underhanded manoeuvring, which can only have an adverse affect on the status of Quebecers and Canadians in general outside the country.

FISHERIES

RESTRUCTURING OF PACIFIC FISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of State for Social Development made a speech on behalf of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) to the Fisheries Council of Canada in which he spelled out the approach the Government will take to restructure the Pacific fishing industry.

The Minister laid out a series of measures which are guaranteed to cause an uproar among fishermen and their communities. He then went on to say:

We hope and expect to receive the same level of co-operation from the opposition Parties that they gave last year to the Atlantic restructuring legislation.

I want to tell the Minister and his colleagues, clearly and plainly, that if he intends to treat this legislation in the same underhanded and irresponsible way as the Atlantic legislation, holding it back until the last possible moment in order to limit debate, and if he persists in bringing in legislation designed to restructure the industry by wiping out the livelihood of a large portion of the Pacific fishing fleet, he should not expect too much co-operation from this Party.

I serve notice that we will accept nothing less than a full debate in this House, and that we will press for the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry to travel to the West Coast to discuss the effect the rumoured legislation will have on fishermen and their communities.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE RENEWAL COSTS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) what steps the Liberal Government was taking to prevent financial institutions from demanding that Canadian home owners waive their rights before granting a mortgage renewal. The Minister had no answer, but he went on to suggest that home owners seek out other institutions to obtain more favourable terms.

All Canadian home owners with a mortgage know that if they seek out another institution it will cost them legal fees, appraisal fees, survey fees, and other costs. For a renewal on a $50,000 mortgage it could be as much as $1,000, whereas for a renewal with the same institution it would be a minimal fee.

It is unfortunate that the Minister of Finance has no idea of the problems of ordinary Canadians, and has no intention of helping them. The Liberal Government is simply standing by while mortgage interest rates continue to climb.

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, 77 cents and sinking! The Canadian dollar continues to plunge on world markets as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stands idly by, twiddling his thumbs. How can we instill confidence in the Canadian economy? How can we encourage investment? Most important, how can we create new jobs when our currency flounders about like that of a Third World banana republic?

The only response of the Liberals to the declining dollar has been to increase interest rates, a move which can only worsen the already ridiculously high level of unemployment. Canadians must, for our own sakes, make the necessary fundamental changes to our political economy so that our currency remains sound, investment is enhanced, and employment increases. Since the Liberals are unprepared to make these changes, it is high time they were replaced by a Conservative Government which will do so.

"ETHICAL CHOICES AND POLITICAL CHALLENGES"—DOCUMENT ISSUED BY CATHOLIC BISHOPS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House the importance of the statement made yesterday by Bishops de Roo and Proulx, representatives of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops. The Bishops, following on the landmark document which they released 16 months ago, have released a new report entitled "Ethical Choices and Political Challenges". They have again had the moral courage and conviction to point out the major problems which face this country, and to challenge the present Government, especially those candidates running for leadership of the Liberal party, to face those challenges.

In their report they lay out the stark reality that our present economic growth is characterized by soaring corporate profits and an almost complete lack of new job creation. While profits for banks and multinational companies in Canada hit record levels, two million Canadians cannot find productive work. The Government lacks any effective control over the new technologies and the profit-motivated priorities of the private sector which created these problems, yet insists that the private sector will solve our problems.

● (1415)

When we see the distribution of benefits in our society becoming increasingly unjust, as we have seen over the past few years, we have to ask what are our values and priorities. The Bishops have asked the right questions, and they should be thanked. It is up to the leaders of our country to provide honest and serious answers.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATE CHARGES

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Finance. In their absence I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister.

How can anyone justify or accept the high interest rates which were recently announced by the Farm Credit Corporation? The Minister must know that interest rates have risen from 13 per cent to 14 per cent for a five-year loan, and to 15 per cent on a 20-year loan. At the same time a farmer can get a loan from a chartered bank as low as 13.5 per cent. A home owner in the City of Toronto can get a mortgage at 13.25 per cent. Farmers are forced to pay more than people in downtown Toronto. These rates are unaffordable at this time because agriculture is already close to $20 billion in debt. Bankruptcies in the farm sector are up more than 58 per cent over last year's levels. How can the Government justify these rates when it only pays 12.5 per cent for its five-year money?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I invite the Hon. Member to check the length of the loan terms made by the Farm Credit Corporation. The rates charged by the Farm Credit Corporation are closely tied to the cost of borrowing for a similar term by the federal Government. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of this. There is a close relationship between what we have to pay for the money we borrow for similar terms and the rate at which we lend that money to farmers through the Farm Credit Corporation. The best evidence that the Farm Credit Corporation is running its operations very carefully in that regard to benefit the farmers is, as the Hon. Member knows, that the Corporation is not making a lot of money on its operations. On the contrary.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, we would not expect the Farm Credit Corporation to make any money. We would expect it to break even.

INTEREST RATE REBATE PROGRAM

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister of Finance completely abandoned the idea of the interest rate rebate program which was in place for two years from 1981? Has the Minister completely abandoned that program?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that program was set up at a time when interest rates reached and, in fact, went over 20 per cent. The Hon. Member knows that since then there has been a very significant decline in interest rates both in Canada and the United States. Obviously the program was abandoned when there was a significant decline in interest rates.

I do not expect a repeat of the situation that occurred a few years ago, but as Minister of Finance I have to monitor the situation on a constant basis. Decisions of that nature are generally announced in Budgets, as the Hon. Member knows. In spite of what he said, I remind him that there is no shortage of farmers applying to the Farm Credit Corporation for loans. In fact many farmers find that the Farm Credit Corporation offers better rates and better opportunities than the banks or other financial institutions, including the credit unions and co-operatives.

PROPOSED AGRI-BOND PROGRAM

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance must recognize that many farmers across Canada do not accept the rates presently being offered to the farm community by the Farm Credit Corporation. Will the Minister consider implementing a further study of the agri-bond issue, a matter that was referred to the Finance Committee some time ago? Would he support that, and ask for legislation which would provide better funding for the Farm Credit Corporation?

• (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the issue has been referred to a parliamentary committee because it is indeed an issue which deserves study. There are arguments in favour of such a proposal, but the Hon. Member also knows that there are many difficulties and drawbacks in that particular proposal. The parliamentary committee will examine these difficulties and in due time will submit a report in that regard.

I would invite my friend not to concentrate on one particular approach or one particular option. As I have indicated, when interest rates were very high steps were taken to help farmers in difficulty, and the Government has shown that it does care in that regard. We will continue to monitor the situation.

REQUEST FOR SPRING PAYMENT TO FARMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. However, in his absence—I see he has just arrived.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where's the beef?

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and deals with the western grain stabilization program. Farmers are facing the most severe economic problems they have faced since the 1930s. The rate of bankruptcies has risen over 100 per cent. Some farm groups indicate that 10 per cent of farmers have not been able to pay last year's fuel bills, and the situation is very, very serious.

Our Members on this side of the House have called for some quick action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: Our Leader has called for action from the Prime Minister.

Mr. Dubois: Where is he? Where is your Leader?

Mr. Gustafson: We have seen no action taken. Our House Leader, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is supposed to be Question Period. Would the Hon. Member ask his question?

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to ask my question but there is too much noise.

Our Deputy House Leader, the Hon. Mr. Nielsen, has asked—

Some Hon. Members: Order. Order.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the Hon. Member realizes that it is the practice of the House to refer to Hon. Members by constituency or by function, and not by name.

Mr. Gustafson: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Yukon, Mr. Nielsen—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gustafson: —asked the Government House Leader, in writing, for some quick action. The Government and the Minister have disregarded that request.

Mr. Dubois: What is your question?

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, the farmers need money this spring.

Mr. Speaker: Order. With all due respect to the Hon. Member, when an Hon. Member takes more than five minutes with an exchange, it is at the expense of the backbenchers of his own Party. I would invite the Hon. Member to ask his question.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, my question is the same one we have been asking for over a year.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gustafson: Will the Minister make a payment to the farmers this spring? They need the money.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Yes or no? Are you really serious?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that we are bound by legislation until the legislation is changed.

An Hon. Member: So change it.

Mr. Whelan: We cannot make a payment under the present legislation. The new legislation will be presented in the House very soon.

Mr. Gustafson: When?

Mr. Whelan: We have said that earlier this week, and we still stand by that.

REQUEST THAT INTERIM PAYMENT BE MADE

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, again my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister will note that farmers have not received a payment since 1979. The Minister will also know that farmers have each paid $4,800 into the fund since 1979. If interest payments were attributed to that money at bank prime rates, it would have amounted to $7,100.

Mr. McKnight: Per farmer.

Mr. Gustafson: Yes, per farmer. In the announcement he made in Winnipeg, the Minister suggested that he would pay out $2,500 to $3,000 per farmer.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gustafson: And he suggested that he would probably pay that amount next fall. I ask the Minister again, will he consider making an interim payment as he did twice in the spring? And will he make the payment when the farmers need the money—and they need it now? And will he make it at a level which will help them solve their cash flow problems?

• (1425)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that 25 per cent of the farmers did not join this plan and he is trying to get the impression across that every farmer in western Canada will benefit from this payout. It is a voluntary plan. The federal Government puts $2 in for every dollar the producers put in, plus we administer the plan free and pay the interest on the money at the same rate it costs the Government of Canada to borrow. The Hon. Member knows full well how far this money can go. He also knows full well that the producers have received every dollar they put in that plan right from the beginning up to last year, if he wants to be fair about it.

The Hon. Member knows also, Mr. Speaker, that the plan is not going to do everything he is trying to intimate. For instance, the Premier of Manitoba says: "Pay out all that money and just get rid of it", which would make the plan unsound. We have an actuarially sound plan at the present time. We want it to remain that way, and so do the producers.

The advisory committee, which is made up of farmers from western Canada, have approved what we are doing, and approved it unanimously. These are farmers from western Canada who are in contact every day with other farmers, and their surveys show that what we are doing is what the farmers want.

INCOME TAX

HIGH INCOME EARNERS—INCREASE IN NUMBER NOT PAYING TAXES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who was busy yesterday trying to defend our very unfair personal income tax system. He made two points; first, that the loopholes used by the rich are available to everyone, and, second, that the system is fair. The Minister should try to explain to the ordinary worker or pensioner, or virtually anyone in the reasonable income category, where they are going to get the money to use those loopholes. He knows it is unfair.

My question really concerns the change in the system as it has developed in recent years. It relates to the fact that, between 1970 and 1981, those individuals earning over $100,000 and paying no tax increased in numbers from three to 1,500, and the number of those earning over $200,000 and paying no tax virtually doubled between 1980 and 1981.

Will the Minister acknowledge to the House that the reason we are seeing more and more rich individuals in Canada in a position where they are not paying their fair share is because the Government has introduced new tax loopholes for their benefit?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it would be typical of the New Democratic Party to qualify any incentive, complaining of the tax system, as a loophole. If the Hon. Member would look at the Income Tax Act he would see that there are a number of tax incentives which have been provided in order to encourage investment and stimulate the economy. Some of these incentives have to do with research and development, which is very important in creating jobs. Some have to do with capital investment or investment in equity, which this country needs. These incentives have been provided for all Canadians in order to encourage them to invest in the Canadian economy, thus stimulating economic growth.

I indicated something yesterday to the Hon. Member, and I will repeat it to him again today, taking a very simple example. You may have $100,000 of income this year but if, through your activities, the risks you have taken, you lost $150,000 last year, you are entitled to claim your loss last year against your income this year.

Mr. Broadbent: Why?

Mr. Lalonde: That is typical New Democratic Party. The Hon. Member asks why.

Mr. Deans: How about the man who is not working? What does he get?

Mr. Lalonde: Because the New Democratic Party does not want any growth. The New Democratic Party is always living in the past. It does not want to see growth in this country. It is as simple as this. You have provisions in our tax system whereby you are encouraging people to take high risks in order to stimulate the economy, to stimulate growth and create jobs. If people lose money one year, they are entitled to deduct it against their income the following year, or the year after that.

You may find yourself indeed with high income one year and no tax to pay, but it will be because you have incurred losses in order to help stimulate the economy and create jobs. This is what is happening. It is the same situation in the area of research and development. The NDP Members should know a little bit about incentives in the economy.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, at least the Minister has the integrity to look uncomfortable with the hogwash he was just presenting to the House. We believe that if someone invests and creates jobs they ought to make a profit, yes. But we also believe that if they make a profit and gain income, they should pay tax on that income like everyone else.

LOSS OF REVENUE TO TREASURY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in his Budget of 1981 the then Minister of Finance said: "There are more winners than losers in the upper income group." This Minister of Finance was responsible for a Budget which introduced additional loopholes of use only to upper income Canadians. In light of those facts, will the Minister explain to the House why the Government no longer publishes documents which show how much revenue is lost to the Treasury because of these loopholes? Will the Government make that available to the Canadian public now? What is the Government afraid of?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in order to clarify the Hon. Member's hogwash in that regard, I would like to take him on, on what he said. He said if Canadians make profits they should pay taxes. That is fine. If they have losses should they be able to claim them against their income? That is the question the Hon. Member should answer before going on with this type of questioning.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister ought to realize that he is supposed to answer the questions that are put to him in this House. He has just ignored my question.

Mr. Lalonde: I have heard that hogwash before.

Mr. Broadbent: I will be happy to debate that hogwash with the Minister any time, in the House, or in the national election I hope we will have soon, and listen to him try to defend that position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR TAX INFORMATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this information, which was provided for only two years, shows how much revenue is lost to the Treasury because of the loopholes made available to upper income Canadians. Does the Minister not think it is fair that when these people get the benefits, and the revenue has to be made up by ordinary taxpayers, the least those taxpayers should get is a document outlining the amount of money upper income Canadians are not paying to the Treasury that they ought to be paying? Will the Minister provide that information to the people of Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): The Hon. Member is again misrepresenting the situation. He is talking about tax expenditures.

Mr. Broadbent: Misrepresenting what?

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, you are misrepresenting the situation. What the Government published on a couple of occasions was the tax expenditure table. This is not a matter having to do with loopholes; it is the total amount the Government is providing in incentives in the economy to all Canadians through various systems of incentive in the tax system or otherwise.

Mr. Broadbent: Let's have it, then.

Mr. Lalonde: This table has not been kept for a few years. I do not have it. I do not have any particular objection to collecting it and producing it in future years. I have no particular hang-ups about that. I will take the Hon. Member's view as a representation. I thought at that time it was a helpful table, but it has not been produced for a few years.

Mr. Broadbent: Why?

Mr. Lalonde: Well, I invite my friend to look at the contents of the last few Budgets, which he has not even bothered to read, if I understand his questions in the House. I am afraid he should begin to read at least the information he has obtained before asking for more.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

CLOSURE OF OFFICE OF EQUAL OPPORTUNITY FOR WOMEN

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for the status of women I will direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. The Minister must know that yesterday's announcement closing down the Office of Equal Opportunity for Women in the Public Service has caused widespread concern. The move has been opposed by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, the women's rights adviser in the Prime Minister's Office, and by interested groups right across the country. In light of all that opposition and the clear injustice to people who are looking for advancement, why did the Government take that step?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this step was not taken by the Government. The Public Service Commission is an autonomous agency reporting to this Parliament. I am concerned about the implications and impressions conveyed by the decision of the Public Service Commission to close this office even though the Commission issued a release saying that the work of this office is to be continued by the various branches of the Commission. In my view, the impression given by this step is not consistent with the firm commitment and action of this Government not only to foster equal opportunities for women but to make sure this action takes place through a strong, effective, and ongoing affirmative action program.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister can wash his hands of this matter. The Government took all the credit when it set up the office, and now it wants to wash its hands of it when closing it down. This specific agency was dedicated primarily to low income workers in the Public Service to give them the opportunity for jobs and advancement. Both I and the people affected want to know from the Minister what assurances his Government will give that it will provide opportunities and jobs for low income workers in the Public Service. They have had enough rhetoric from the Government, and they now find the Government is closing down the only office that gives them some opportunity.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I realize my hon. friend has just become Treasury Board critic. I hope he will have that job for a very long time, and in light of yesterday's Gallup poll I am sure that is going to be the case.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: I suggest to my hon. friend that if he does some elementary homework he will find the Public Service Commission is not a branch of the Government as such; it is an autonomous agency which, by law, is not subject to control by Government. It reports directly to this Parliament. I suggest my hon. friend do as I have done and express his concern to the Commission. I hope, with this consensus on both sides of the House, the Commission will take appropriate action to reassure women across the country that the Commission is not lessening its commitment to providing opportunities for women in a way consistent with the meaningful action of the Government as such in programs under the direct control of the Treasury Board. I challenge my friend to back me up in my efforts and the efforts of this Government.

Mr. Crombie: Do something and I will.

SPORTS

BILINGUAL SERVICES FOR ATHLETES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). Two months ago, the Minister had some pretty harsh comments on the lack of bilingual services for Canadian athletes, and I agree that his comments were justified. Recently, on April 19 of this year, the Sports Federation of Canada approached the Minister, saying that it was interested in working with the Government on preparing guidelines dealing with private sector advertising and bilingualism. Considering this evidence of the Federation's good faith, can the Minister inform the House today why he failed to communicate and negotiate with the Federation, and discuss the matter, before announcing his guideline, as stated in the press release?

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member was not being inclusive when he said the Federation was acting in good faith. To my knowledge, most of Canada's sports federations recognize the fact that our athletes must have access to services in both languages, and I do not see any problem in that respect.

The Hon. Member asked whether I agreed to meet people ... When asked, I have never refused to meet any of the federation presidents.

• (1440)

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROVIDE EXPLANATION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I think that yesterday, when answering questions put by the Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville, the Minister was less than courteous in his remarks about the very relevant questions she put to the Minister. Today, I would like to take this opportunity to invite the Minister to apologize and also to ask him why, since he has been invited to the next general meeting, he is not taking advantage of this opportunity to explain his position to the delegates. Furthermore, why is his Department refusing to make a financial contribution to the cost of simultaneous interpretation services, the availability of which proves the good faith of this federation, and especially since the Minister would have an opportunity to set up services in both languages?

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to point out that I have no apologies to offer for the position I have taken on this matter. My criticism is that the Progressive Conservative Party has two policies on bilingualism. It is against English or against French, whichever is most convenient. What I find appalling is that you will not let Francophones receive services in French—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister should address the Chair.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING FOR MANITOBA RESERVE SCHOOLS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who has recently been soliciting support from native people for his leadership bid. He will know that yesterday and today Indian people in Manitoba have been demonstrating in the City of Winnipeg over their concerns about the lack of adequate funding for on-reserve education. The Minister has been fond of paying lip service to the idea of Indian control of education on their reserves. Can he tell us what he is prepared to do immediately to provide adequate buildings and services for on-reserve schools in Manitoba or, for that matter, across the country?

Mr. Nielsen: Donate $10,000.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for the Yukon has just offered to donate $10,000.

Mr. Nielsen: No, you.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I would inform the Hon. Member, without agreeing to his verbiage and preamble, that I met with the Indian leadership of Manitoba in my office just a few minutes ago. I am meeting them again at 3.15 p.m.

They are aware of the work that has been put together in a Cabinet submission from the Assembly of First Nations, reviewing the whole educational system for the Indian people and identifying the very large shortfalls of money that must be made up to bring it up to the standard of the non native communities. They are also aware that, in the interval, I have another Treasury Board submission trying to obtain the necessary money to correct the immediate situation in Manitoba as well as other parts of the country. I hope to have that before the Treasury Board before the end of the month.

In the meantime my officials are working with the four chiefs immediately involved to iron out over the next day or two the precise amount of money that will be required in Manitoba. We have a general idea but it has to be refined. That will be done in the next couple of days.

I believe and hope that the chiefs are satisfied that everything is being done in the short term that possibly can be done. Again, I will be meeting with them probably around 3.15. If the Hon. Member wants to get a further progress report tomorrow, that is fine. I will do so.

Mr. Sargeant: I guess the shortfall is the result of the administration up until today.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSURANCE ON FUNDING

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has identified correctly that there is a serious shortfall. Indeed, one study has indicated that reserve schools in Manitoba are 30 years behind in services compared to provincial schools. Provincial schools in Manitoba receive roughly $8,000 per student per year, whereas reserve schools receive $4,000 per student per year.

Will the Minister assure us right now that the package that he is putting together this afternoon and the rest of this day will at least bring reserve schools up to the minimum provincial standards so that on reserve students are not made to pay for his Department's seeming unwillingness up to this time to fund education adequately?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that assurance without having gone to Treasury Board and received the approval. If I gave that assurance, the Indian leadership, who are very astute in these matters, would know that it was a canard. They would know it was not true. They would know that I had not gone to Treasury Board yet. They would know that a commitment of that kind was merely window dressing without any validity behind it, as indeed I am sure they feel the Hon. Member must be aware of that himself. To an extent, he is doing nothing but grandstanding himself right here in the House.

Mr. Oberle: You are the trustee.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): To grandstand on a serious issue like this, that impacts on the life of the Indian people and the educational system, to me leaves something to be desired in terms of morality on the part of the Hon. Member.

The fact of the matter is that I cannot give that undertaking. I would like to give it, but I cannot.

PUBLIC SERVICE

FORTHCOMING PAPAL VISIT—EFFECT ON WORKING ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In September of this year the National Capital will be host to His Highness, Pope John Paul II. As Head of State for the Vatican, he will be visiting our National Capital and will be received with the usual warmth, affection and attention.

[Translation]

On September 20, during the Pope's visit to the National Capital area, an important event will take place at the Equestrian Park in Nepean, where the Pope will say Mass. The logistics of this event will, of course, be a problem, since more than 250,000 people will be going to and from the Park.

[English]

The organizers are planning special arrangements in matters of health, security, transportation, and social services. Given that the federal Government is the largest employer in the National Capital area and will want to participate and co-ordinate its efforts with the organizers, can the Minister inform the House what working arrangements can be expected of public servants on that day, September 20, 1984?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have been actively considering a number of options with respect to the best way to deal with the situation on this forthcoming historic date. I hope to have an announcement to make in this regard before too many more days go by. I know the interest in particular of my hon. friend in this subject. I hope to be able to have some announcement to make before too many more days go by.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND—EXECUTIVE BONUSES—EMPLOYEES' WAGES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue who is answering questions about de Havilland in the House. I want to pursue a question that the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands put to him a couple of days ago with respect to the payment of $155,000 in bonuses to the executives of de Havilland.

I have seen a government document which states that a part of the current rescue plan for de Havilland will be to seek a concessionary wage settlement with the company's union that reflects the severity of the company's financial situation. It goes on to say that continued government support will be conditional on reaching such a settlement. Why are the unions being asked to make financial sacrifices while the management of the company is receiving bonuses?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will recall that in my previous answer I said that these bonuses applied to the year ending in May 1983, and that no bonuses were paid this year.

The Hon. Member will also recall that for the Dash-8 program, for instance, a tremendous effort was made to make sure the program would be developed on time, and in fact, results were way ahead of the projections.

I think the Hon. Member should separate the two questions and consider the issue of the bonuses within the period for which they were given.

[English]

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I hope that you understood that answer better than I did.

BONUS PLAN

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In the year 1982, the year for which the bonuses were paid, the company lost $230 million. Normally, when companies lose money there is not a bonus paid to management. Would the Minister explain under what part of the bonus plan were bonuses paid to the management for the year 1982?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I must remind the Hon. Member that the entire situation at de Havilland should be considered. Obviously, developing the Dash-8, for instance, demanded an all-out effort on the part of all employees as well as management.

We must not forget that, at the time the company was ready to market the aircraft, the market situation was deteriorating, and today, we are taking steps at de Havilland to provide for better marketing of the aircraft. As soon as market conditions improve, the company's financial situation will improve as well.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NAVAL UNIFORMS

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It pertains to blue uniforms for Canada's naval forces. Last October, in response to a question from the Member for Halifax West, the Minister praised the green uniforms we presently have in the Canadian Navy, and stated: "There is no intention of changing that state of affairs". Last Friday, the Member from Halifax, the Minister for International Trade, held out the possibility of blue uniforms for our Navy, and stated: "I am satisfied very substantial progress has been made in this matter". Could the Minister of National Defence tell us whether the Minister for International Trade was simply getting a head start on the upcoming federal election campaign with some promises, or was he in reality signalling a change in government policy in this matter?

• (1450)

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman, since he paid attention to my reply to the Hon. Member from Halifax last October, that there is indeed no change in the government policy as I announced it at that time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: There you go, Gerry. Down the tube.

An Hon. Member: Halifax will never be the same.

Mr. Bradley: To say the least, Mr. Speaker, I am surprised about that answer.

BLUE UNIFORMS INQUIRY

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, we have here then a Minister of the Crown who is speaking at a naval establishment as a Minister of the Crown, announcing a Department of National Defence or government program, and yet in theory announcing things which the Government is saying do not exist. I am sure that if the Minister were making the statement he would have some knowledge through Cabinet, or some approval from the Minister of National Defence. If not, he should not be a Minister of the Crown. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, where there is smoke there is fire.

Mr. Corbett: Not in this case.

Mr. Bradley: Could the Minister tell the House exactly where the naval blue uniforms sit and when we can expect a comprehensive explanation or a response from the Minister of National Defence on the issue?

Mr. Lewis: Who is telling the truth?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thought my reply was quite clear. I gave it in October and I reiterated it here today. Perhaps the hon. gentleman was there at the press conference given by my colleague. I was not there. As I understand it, the quote that he has given is misleading.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosby: Maybe John Turner told him something.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

CLOSURE OF OFFICE OF EQUAL OPPORTUNITY FOR WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the status of women. It concerns the closure of the Office of Equal Opportunity for Women. The Minister told me on February 20 that this would not happen, that there would be no closure of the office. What is she doing to reinstate this office or to beef it up? Does the Minister not agree that it is essential for women in the public service to have a separate advocacy centre, an advocacy and watchdog centre, just as we need a separate office for the status of women, which is her ministry, and that it should be detached from other Government personnel offices in order to provide a range of services, including counselling support, training, and watchdog services? Does the Minister not agree with this? What is she going to do to have this office reinstated and beefed up?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do agree with the Hon. Member. I have been assured by Commissioner McQueen that in fact these services are going to be strengthened. The office as it was known no longer exists, but it is indeed integrated into the new affirmative action program and is being strengthened. All of the people currently employed will continue to be employed. However, I am as concerned as the Hon. Member, and I have arranged to meet with Commissioner McQueen next week to see that these services continue.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, considering the Minister had all this information way back in February, why is the Minister waiting until now to meet with the Public Service Commission on this matter? Did the Minister not hear the response of the President of the Treasury Board, whose views are apparently much stronger than hers on the continuation of this particular office? Does the Government not have any influence at all over the Public Service Commission in making sure programs that are going to offer opportunities for women are implemented? How can they implement their own affirmative action program if this is the case?

I want to ask, Mr. Speaker, a specific—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member should ask a supplementary question.

Ms. Mitchell: Since the closure of this office particularly concerns low income public servants, something like 95,000 women clerks and secretaries, who need this office and need it as a separate entity not integrated in other—

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member ask her question?

AIRPORTS

LANGUAGE NOTIFICATION GIVEN TO SAINT JOHN RENTAL CAR AGENCY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister who would have knowledge of the Department of Transport. The Minister will know that in the Saint John airport employees who have been employed by the rental car agencies have been notified that they must become bilingual in those positions by January of next year. Can the Minister assure us that the people who now hold those positions will find themselves secure and that indeed they will not be thrown out of their jobs?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I know many things, and one of them is that it is not normal for a Minister to answer for his successor after he has left a Department. I will find out all the facts and make sure my hon. friend has an answer.

Mr. Corbett: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. Of course the Acting Prime Minister realizes that if the Minister of Transport were in the House I would have placed that question before him.

POSITION OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, while the Acting Prime Minister is looking into this matter, will he kindly make sure that we are made aware of the facts about this situation within a reasonable period of time so that those employees can assess their situation and hopefully be assured that they will not be turfed out of a job by a policy which, in this particular situation, is not relevant to the one that exists in Saint John?

Mr. McKenzie: Or any other airport.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, that was inferred in the answer I gave. I will make sure of that in exactly four minutes.

FINANCE

LEGISLATION AFFECTING FARMERS' REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday he assured holders of home mortgages that the proposal for mortgage insurance in the Budget would be retroactive to March 1. Will the Minister of Finance give that same assurance to farmers who have sold land, that the RRSP to shelter $120,000 of capital gain will also be retroactive to March 1 regardless of when the legislation is passed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I refer the Hon. Member to my statement in my Budget.

POOLS

SPORTS POOL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport. Send him in here. He is right behind the curtain.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: The federal Government is violating Criminal Code regulations with this new sports pool. The reason is that the prizes are fixed, which means it is a lottery and not a pool. The federal Government is also violating a 1979 agreement with the provinces which stipulates the former will stay out of the lottery field. Surreptitiously and blatantly, yesterday or early this morning—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, I presume, is going to ask a question?

Mr. Paproski: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This morning the Government changed the pool to a lottery by Order in Council. I would like to ask the Minister: did you do this?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that I was still giving information to a Member of the Official Opposition who wanted further details. That is why the Hon. Member had trouble finding me. The answer to his question is: No.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River.

Mr. Frank Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Mines.

Mr. Paproski: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Oberle: I will let Steve go ahead, and I will wait.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Edmonton North has a supplementary question.

ORDER IN COUNCIL INQUIRY

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, I do not consider this matter very amusing at this stage of the game. We put through a Bill here which set up a pool, and this Government has surreptitiously and blatantly changed a government Act without coming to Parliament. It changed the pool to a lottery. Did the Minister, by Order in Council, change the pool Bill that we now have in the House of Commons to a lottery, either yesterday or this morning? Yes or no?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I refuse to comment on the proceedings before the courts, because I have great respect for our judicial system. And I have no intention of commenting on the kind of argument the Hon. Member wants to start.

We have always maintained publicly that it was a sports pool. Now, the Progressive Conservative Party is absolutely against our helping amateur sport; it does not want us to support medical research; it is against our helping culture and the arts. And so it goes . . . Mr. Speaker, what they like to do, every 15 or 20 years when they are in power, is to give everything to the provinces and make it impossible for the federal Government to receive international athletes by, for instance, providing funding of $200 million for the Calgary Games. That is why we are trying to help our amateur athletes across Canada and not just in one province.

• (1500)

[English]

Mr. Paproski: I have a supplementary. I want to know whether he is violating the Criminal Code. Yes or no.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has had a supplementary.

Mr. Paproski: That is a real phoney answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports from standing and special committees.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PAPROSKI—POOLS—ORDER IN COUNCIL INQUIRY

Hon. Steven E. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has been given a question, a supplementary. I hope he has a valid point of privilege.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask you, Sir, as the first commoner of this House, if a Minister of the Crown can, surreptitiously, by Order in Council, change a government Act.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports from standing and special committees.

Mr. Paproski: I would like to know. On a point of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Tabling of documents. The Hon. Minister of State for Finance.

Mr. Paproski: I am serving notice—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Edmonton North has in no way related his remarks to a matter of privilege. He has an argument. He may have a difference as to facts, but in no way has he presented anything which remotely touches privilege.

Presenting reports from standing and special committees.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, if I may have that chance, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Edmonton North on a point of order, having failed to make a point of privilege.

Mr. Paproski: I am merely asking for an explanation here, Mr. Speaker, and I know that you will be able to help me. We passed a Bill in this House which entitles the Government to run a pool for the Olympics. I am just saying that we passed this Bill and we said that this Government would do it according to that particular rule. That is fine. Now I want to know—

Mr. Speaker: A point of order relates—

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I want to know—

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please resume his seat? The Standing Orders of the House of Commons are the procedure by which we are governed. If the Hon. Member can cite a standing order of the House of Commons and indicate in what respect he has a matter of order, the Chair would be more than pleased to hear it.

A matter relating to facts, a matter relating to whether or not certain events have taken place, is not a point of order, nor is it a matter of privilege. The Hon. Member may want to reflect. There are other avenues available to him to raise a matter which he may feel is a grievance, a matter on which he has a difference of opinion. Other opportunities are available in the procedures of this House. I invite him to reflect carefully. I am sure that, experienced parliamentarian that he is, after mature reflection he will realize that another order of proceedings would be more appropriate.

Mr. Paproski: Well, I want to thank you for that but I am still going to raise it.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-7 would enact the amendments to the Customs Tariff set out in the notice of ways and means motion tabled as part of last April's Budget.

Before noting a few details of the Bill, I should like to summarize the tariff amendments. First, improvements are being made in the rates of duty and other provisions of the general preferential tariff for developing countries. Second, we are increasing the limits on the value of goods that Canadians returning from abroad can bring home free of duty and tax. Third, duties on certain machinery parts are being increased. Finally, there are a number of miscellaneous changes affecting the dutiable status of a limited number of products.

The first group of tariff amendments which I should like to bring to the attention of the House relates to the general preferential tariff or what over a period of years has become known as the GPT. Hon. Members may recall that, as part of the 1981 Budget, there were a number of improvements made in the GPT, including new or lower rates on a broad range of products from developing countries. These rates had been recommended by the Tariff Board in response to a request from the Minister of Finance for a report on the impact on Canadian production of including new products under the GPT and of reducing to "free" the existing rates on other products.

• (1510)

The amendments in the Bill now before the House implement most of the recommendations made by the Tariff Board. That report was tabled in the House in May, 1982. Anyone interested can see the details in that report, on which interested parties were invited to comment. The comments received were carefully reviewed. While a few departures from the board's proposals have been made as a result, most of the board's recommendations are being adopted.

The amendments now before us provide for new or lower GPT rates, mainly free rates, on a wide range of products. The specific tariff amendments are set out in Schedule I to the Bill. The new lower rates would apply to qualifying imports, which in 1982 were valued at $11 million.

There are other amendments to the general preferential tariff included in this Bill which were not within the scope of the Tariff Board's study. The most noteworthy is the continuation of the general preferential scheme itself for another ten years to June 30, 1994.

Like Canada, most industrialized countries originally implemented their preferential tariff schemes for specified periods during which the impact of the preferences could be monitored and the need for their continuation determined. Those countries have also extended, or announced their intention to extend, their schemes. Canada's decision to extend the GPT rate was announced in May, 1982 by the Canadian delegation to a meeting of the Special Committee on preferences of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

Provision has also been made in the Bill for a liberalization of the so-called "rules of origin" under the GPT. The purpose of these rules of origin is to ensure that only bona fide developing countries received the benefits of the general preferential tariff. Goods substantially manufactured in industrialized nations which are shipped through GPT beneficiaries or have had only minor processing done on them in beneficiary countries are excluded from entry under the general preferential tariff by rules of origin. The rules are being amended so that value added in any GPT country will count toward the 60 per cent GPT content that products must have to be allowed entry at GPT rates.

Previously, the content requirement could be met only in the country from which the goods were being exported to Canada. This new measure was also announced by the Canadian delegation at the UNCTAD meeting I mentioned a moment ago and is in line with action taken by other industrialized countries.

Another change in the general preferential tariff is a new provision to give the Governor in Council authority to waive the requirement that goods must be shipped directly to Canada from GPT countries in order to qualify for GPT rates. This provision, which is similar to ones already in place for the British preferential and most-favoured-nation tariffs, will provide the authority needed for a flexible and speedy response to meet particular problems which arise from time to time with respect to shipments from developing countries. I might add that the Bill also includes a number of purely technical amendments to the GPT.

I should now like to turn to tourist exemptions. Prior to the April, 1983 Budget, the Department of Finance received many representations from individuals and several Members of this House asking that the value limitations on duty and tax-free exemptions for Canadians returning with purchases made abroad be increased. It was decided to meet those requests because the limits had not been increased since 1974. Their real value had been substantially eroded by inflation. The increases in the exemptions will also speed up customs clearance procedure, making it more convenient for travellers at our airports and other entry ports and reducing costs of administration.

The following are the specific changes in tourist exemptions. The quarterly exemption, available once in each calendar quarter after an absence of not less than 48 hours, is being increased from $50 to $100. The annual exemption, available once a year, after an absence of not less than seven days, is being increased from $150 to $300. The value of goods that can be brought back tax and duty-free under the "casual" exemption, which does not provide for a frequency limitation, is being doubled from $10 to $20. The minimum absence requirement under that casual exemption is being reduced from 48 to 24 hours.

In addition, the value of goods that can be entered under the tourist item which provides for a "flat" duty and tax rate is being increased from $150 to $300. The flat rate is being reduced from 25 percent to 20 per cent to take account of the lower duty rates applying as a result of the Tokyo round of GATT negotiations. There are also a number of purely technical changes in the tourist exemptions. All of these changes should make compliance with them less onerous for the travelling public and should reduce government cost in administering these provisions.

The exemption increases included in this Bill are reasonable and respond to the representations and needs of the travelling public without having any adverse impact on Canadian business or on our balance of payments situation.

I said something about the changes in the Bill respecting the general preferential tariff and the new provisions regarding tourist exemptions. I now want to turn to the tariff increases provided for in this Bill. Schedule III to this Bill contains amendments to certain machinery tariff items. While some of these amendments have the effect of lowering rates of duty, there are increases on feed pellet mill dies and rolls and on certain bulldozer parts.

Let me first say that the general policy of the Government is to work toward freer international trade and not to propose tariff increases, particularly in cases where existing rates are bound under international agreements such as the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, or GATT as it is commonly called.

Having said that, one might ask why we are proposing in this Bill to increase tariffs, even if the increases affect only a few specialized products. The answer is simply that these exceptions to the general rule are being made in the interest of equity.

During the Tokyo round of multilateral trade negotiations, it was decided to bind at "free" the rates of duty on a wide range of machinery and machine parts which had been entering Canada on a duty-free basis under the duty remission provisions of the machinery program on the grounds that they were unavailable from Canadian production. Some of the products covered by this agreement were dies and rolls used in feed pellet mills and a number of bulldozer parts.

Unfortunately, at that time Canadian officials were unaware that these particular articles were about to be made in Canada and that the Canadian manufacturers were counting on the fact that under the machinery program, a tariff could be applied to imports when production commenced. Accordingly, we have a situation where tariff protection considered necessary to the viability of Canadian manufacturing had been removed. In view of this, it was concluded that the appropriate duties on the feed pellet mill dies and rolls and bulldozer parts should be reinstated. Before these few tariff increases can come into effect, Mr. Speaker, they must be negotiated with our trading partners. These negotiations are now in progress. Accordingly, the Bill provides that the increases are to come into effect on a date to be proclaimed by the Governor in Council.

• (1520)

As I have mentioned, not all of the amendments in Schedule III provide for tariff increases. Provision is made for reduced rates on crawler loaders and crawler pipelayers and parts. These decreases together with the higher rates on the bulldozer parts essentially represent a package of tariff amendments designed to standardize and simplify the tariff treatment of all crawler machines and parts.

In addition, the fourth major section of the Bill includes a number of miscellaneous tariff changes. The other tariff amendments set out in Clauses 5, 7, 8 and 9 and in Schedule III of the Bill do not have the significance or impact of the amendments which I have already noted. Many of these miscellaneous tariff changes are of a technical nature and are designed to reflect anomalies or to overcome administrative problems. Others are of a more substantive character, such as the new tariff items to implement the Tariff Board's interim report covering firebrick and other refractory products. These new items simplify and modernize the treatment of those products, taking into account representations made subsequent to the tabling of the board's report.

A new item is being introduced to provide duty-free entry for church carillons of a certain character. This item has been requested by a number of Members of the House on behalf of churches in their constituencies. The tariff on mixing consoles and tape recorders used by professional sound recording studios is being removed to assist the Canadian recording industry in its efforts to remain competitive by employing the most modern recording equipment.

Tariff-free provisions are also being established for certain other products from developing countries, and these products are set forth in the Bill. These miscellaneous changes are in line with the Government's policy of keeping our tariff responsive, within the limits imposed by our international obligations, to changing economic and technical needs.

I hope that the House will agree that these tariff measures should be given speedy passage since they do provide significant benefit, both to the developing countries and to Canadian manufacturers, Canadian importers and Canadian private citizens.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, we were not intending to take up a great deal of time on this Bill but we took a look at the Bill again and are rather disturbed by some of the things it contains. I wish to bring to the attention of the House the nature of this particular piece of legislation.

In brief, the legislation extends the general preferential tariff, that would normally have expired on June 30 of this year, until June 30 of 1994, a 10-year period. Second, as the Minister has indicated, it makes provisions for Canadians returning as tourists by doubling the amount of the former duty-free allowance on goods brought into the country. Third, the Bill does make certain tariff changes.

I would like to deal with the matter piece by piece. First, I would like to direct your attention, Sir, to the various schedules in this Bill. As you are perhaps aware, Sir, the tariff system in Canada includes four general tariff structures. The first tariff structure is the British preferential tariff. The next tariff is the most favoured-nationl tariff. Then there is a tariff called the general tariff, and finally a tariff called the general preferential tariff. All that sounds wonderful until one begins to understand that all the countries in the world fall either under the British preferential tariff, the most favoured-nation tariff or the general preferential tariff, except for one country. There is one country in the world which we in this nation apparently hate, disdain, distrust and have no use for at all. That country, which must pay higher duties than any other country in the world on its imports into Canada, is the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

Indeed, when looking at the Bill, one would find, for example, that if Saudi Arabia were to import vinegar into Canada, it would have to pay a 25 per cent tariff. However, the general preferential tariff on vinegar is free and the British preferential tariff on vinegar is 10 per cent. I do not know who is bringing vinegar into the country but if, for example, Saudi Arabia wished to import cigar boxes into Canada, it would have to pay a 35 per cent tariff. However, the general preferential tariff is free and the British preferential tariff is 11.3 per cent.

The Bill goes on. We all know the propensity of the Saudis to produce liquor. They are well covered by this tariff because the tariff on liquor from Saudi Arabia is dramatically higher than the tariff on liquor from any other country. I am thumbing through the Bill, Sir, so that I may tell you specifically what the amount of that tariff is. It is clear that the Saudis certainly would not be able to develop much of a market in Canada for their booze, if they should ever decide to produce booze, under the terms of this Bill. On bottled spirits like brandy, the Saudis would have to pay a $6 tariff, while the British preferential tariff is 75 cents. That is rather rough on the Saudis.

I believe that it is a bit ridiculous that the Government should produce a Bill which includes something called a general tariff when only one country in the world is subject to that tariff.

The Minister has come forward in the House and said that this is a great Bill. However, I would think that, when reviewing this piece of legislation, somewhere along the line we should simplify it. I believe that somewhere along the line, we should get rid of all this useless printing. I do not know, Sir, how much is imported into Canada from Saudi Arabia and I do not know why we should hit the Saudis with all these extra tariff charges that we do not charge any other country in the world, but that is what we do. I ask you, Sir, why should we deal with a Bill which contains schedules such as those in the Bill before us without giving it some deep consideration?

Beyond the points which I have already mentioned, Sir, we run into another series of tariff charts. In the course of preparing my comments on this Bill, I felt it was important to obtain a list of countries and their corresponding tariff arrangements from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). A great many countries fall not only under the most favoured-nation status but under the general preferential status and indeed the British preferential status as well. The usual arrangement is to use the lowest tariff. Why would a country not have only one tariff arrangement with Canada? Why would an importer have to find out which under the particular circumstances would be the lowest tariff applicable to his country?

It is even more strange, Sir, to learn of some of the countries which fall under the most favoured-nation status. We have had difficulties with some countries in the world. We have had difficulties with the philosophy and the activities of the U.S.S.R., for example, but that country is considered to be a most favoured-nation. Hungary is a most favoured nation. Czechoslovakia is a most favoured nation. But poor old Romania is not only a most favoured nation, but it is entitled to a general preferential tariff because it is underprivileged. It has not only a rotten communist government, but it is most favoured. On top of that, it is entitled to general preferential treatment.

When one analyses this whole course of events, one begins to wonder under what circumstances and under what arrangements certain specific nations should have certain specific treatment from the Government. When we are discussing a Bill that affects the tariffs we are going to charge people bringing goods into the country, surely we should pay some attention to where we are going as a nation in terms of foreign trade. What kind of objectives have we got in terms of developing Canada and Canada's trade with the rest of the world? What kind of foreign aid stance should we take? If everyone is a somebody, then no one is an anybody. That is what we have here.

We pretend to assist certain countries of the world with trade preferences by giving them the benefit of the general preferential tariff, but the fact is that we give that general preferential tariff to virtually every country of the world. There is no real, specific benefit to those countries that perhaps we are trying as a nation to help.

Second, it is apparent, when one analyses the chart of the tariffs available, that some countries whose trading activities are such as to damage Canadian industry and who organize their affairs in such a way as to prevent Canadians from having reasonable access to their home markets, are given by this Government general preferential tariff treatment when they bring their goods into Canada. We are the proverbial good boy scouts. We take a kneeing every time we deal with them, yet we allow them to bring their goods into our country in many cases virtually, duty-free.

I specifically draw to the attention of the House the problems we have had in the aircraft industry. This House has been beset with problems concerning de Havilland. One of the problems de Havilland has is the unfair competition that it is experiencing from an aircraft corporation owned, operated and run by the Brazilian Government. Yet Canada gives to Brazil general preferential tariff rating on all of its imports into Canada. We do so even though Brazil will not allow us anything like that type of preference when we are selling our goods to Brazil, even though the Brazilians operate in the aircraft field and in the financing of aircraft in such a fashion as to damage seriously and mortally our exports of aircraft from de Havilland into the South American market.

It is absolutely ridiculous that we should continue to give certain countries general preferential tariff benefits when their trading stance and the way they operate in the world is to do damage to Canadians and to Canadian business. I think it is important that the Government be prepared to go over the various countries with the House and declare and explain why this Government is prepared to give various countries the general preferential tariff rate it is obviously, by this Bill, intending to extend. There has to be a rethinking as to who should get trade advantages with Canada.

I think Canada has an obligation to help certain of the less fortunate people in the world. We have to help them help themselves, because I think we owe that to the world as good citizens. But surely as good citizens of the world we should not dilute that assistance by giving it willy-nilly to everyone, willy-nilly to those who really do not justify that assistance. For example, South Korea was certainly an underdeveloped country at one time, but now it has virtually taken the world over in terms of shipbuilding and in terms of steel. Indeed, we have had to put anti-dumping charges against steel imports coming from that country. There comes a point when an underdeveloped country ceases to be entitled to privileges beyond what is reasonable. That is particularly so when the trade arrangements we have with those countries are prejudicial to Canada and when those countries operate in such a fashion as to use Canada as a dumping ground for their products to the detriment of Canadian industry and Canadian jobs.

When we deal with a Bill of this nature, the Government has an obligation to talk not only about housekeeping changes in tariff structures, but it has an obligation to say how this particular piece of legislation improves opportunities for Canadians, improves job opportunities for Canadians, and improves business opportunities for Canadians. If one is looking at it from an aid point of view, it helps foreign aid opportunities to justify Canada's place in making this a better world. This Bill does not do anything of that nature. It just covers the waterfront and carries on with the same old scheme that has lost all sense of validity when we give preferences to everyone. We have no sense of a constant tariff provision. There is no rationale in our tariff rates. The Minister was not prepared in his explanation to defend the rationale behind the tariff-setting system.

Tariffs are something we use—perhaps they are not as valid today as they were at one time—as an inducement to other countries to allow them, force them, or encourage them to give Canadians an opportunity to trade in their countries. When a country sells goods to us at no tariff or at a very much reduced tariff, we expect that country to give to our exporters, manufacturers, and vendors of goods opportunities in its market. Trade is a two-way street.

Over two million Canadians depend on foreign trade for their livelihood. Under this Government our share of world trade since 1968 has slipped from 5.8 per cent to 3.7 per cent. If we were able to increase our share of world trade by 1 per cent today, we could increase the number of jobs held by Canadians by very close to 600,000. Yet, does this Bill do anything toward that aim or objective? Not on your life. There are in it just a few housekeeping amendments to allow Canadians to come in with $300 worth of goods when they could have brought in only $150 before. It does not even put any imagination into the subject.

We have an obligation when we are considering a Bill of this nature to ask the Government where we are going in foreign trade. Where does this Bill, in terms of tariff protection for Canadian industry and the change in that protection, help Canadian industry or, in the converse, help Canadians get into foreign markets? There is precious little in this Bill, Sir, which in any way helps.

• (1540)

The Minister mentioned bulldozer parts. He said he was increasing the tariff on bulldozer parts. Well, that is what the Bill is all about. The Bill also, I am told, Sir, if I have it correctly, reduces the tariff on certain mynah birds, which are members of the starling family and which have traditionally been allowed into the country. The Bill is to amend the Act to exempt the Chinese Talking mynah bird and the Hill mynah bird.

Mr. Roche: It is like a "mynah" bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend says it is a "mynah" bill.

Somewhere along the line there has to be some better explanation as to why we should be changing the tariffs of Canada other than to deal with the problem of mynah birds. There is no provision in this Bill whereby the Government can make specific exemptions to specific countries on tariffs. A country falls within one of four categories. Most countries get some kind of preference, all except the Saudis, I would say. However, surely to goodness if we are going to improve our trade position, or if we are to be able to extend a helping hand to a specific foreign country which needs that help, there should be some specific direction, some specific look at each country's position and how that country should be treated vis-à-vis Canada. This Bill does not do that.

Let me speak for a moment about the British preferential tariff. You may recall, Sir, that in the early 1930s, the Government of the late R. B. Bennett created, as a result of the Commonwealth Conference, the British preferential tariff. That was the first preferential tariff that we ever had in this country. It was followed later by a most-favoured nation type arrangement. The British preferential tariff was a special arrangement which went a long way to holding the Commonwealth together and giving Canada significant trading opportunities. As a result, a number of subsidiaries of Canadian companies were created around the world. I specifically think of the Canadian subsidiaries of the Ford Motorcar Company, for example, in what is now Zimbabwe. That subsidiary was created because it was an agency in South Africa where Canadian Ford automobile parts and components were sent and converted into automobiles there, and that was of benefit to Canada. The British preferential tariff has pretty well disappeared as an advantage now because, indeed, aside from certain trade arrangements with Australia and New Zealand, the British preferential tariff is not as good as the general preferential tariff accorded to most Commonwealth countries. As far as most Commonwealth countries are concerned, they carry on under the general preferential tariff.

It would seem to me, Sir, that in proceeding with this Bill, the Government should do some rethinking. The Government should say that, in a sense, the British preferential tariff system has served its purpose and that it should be set aside, removed. The countries in the British Commonwealth which qualify for the British preferential tariff as well as the general preferential tariff should perhaps benefit from the general preferential tariff, and other countries should have the regular tariff. I believe we could probably organize in such a way as to get along with one or two tariffs: first, a tariff structure for all countries in the world and, second, a tariff structure for those specific underdeveloped countries where an easy access to the Canadian market would help. I feel we no longer need four tariff structures. Obviously, the general tariff structure does not mean anything. Only the Saudis pay that. The British preferential tariff system really means very little. Why could we not, then, handle the whole matter with two structures? That would simplify things dramatically. We could have one structure which was a regular tariff and one structure which gave to underdeveloped, less developed, nations a special privilege or preference in Canada.

In doing this, it would be my submission that we should analyse carefully those countries to which we want to give special privilege. It should be countries which are growing, countries we can help. It should not be every country in the world, or every underdeveloped country in the world, but only certain undeveloped countries which should be given virtually tariff-free access to Canada. The rest of the world should pay the same tariff. We should not discriminate. That does not mean that, in not discriminating, we cannot make separate arrangements with countries which are not included for specific items of trade. That would be a sectoral approach to what are perhaps special bilateral trade arrangements on special goods from special countries.

It would seem to me that in the interests of the country we should move ahead. This Bill should be redrawn and simplified, and if we make tariff item changes, we should make them after rethinking them. This, Sir, is what I recommend to the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

The Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche).

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to detain the House unduly, but I want to make a few comments on the trade liberalization aspects of the Bill before us. First of all, the changes made in extending the preferential tariff treatment which are listed are not an altruistic measure taken by Canada. Indeed, they are in harmony with the move today in the world to recognize that each country benefits according to the way in which it facilitates its trade with other nations. If we are going to be able to sell Canadian goods to those expanding, developing country markets where huge population increases are happening, we have to enable those countries to reach into Canada. Therefore, I support this Bill.

However, I believe that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has made an extremely important point in calling to our attention the failure of the Bill—and even the Minister's own speech—to indicate clearly enough that when certain countries increase their ability to perform—as we say, they graduate—they would no longer receive preferential treatment.

I was glad to see that the Bill before us follows, or at least it certainly takes note of, one of the principal recommendations made to the House by the parliamentary Committee on North-South Relations which reported to the House about two years ago. In the section on trade we recommended that the general preferential tariff be extended to include all manufactured goods of the world's poorest countries, and that graduation criteria be established to identify those countries no longer in need of preferential treatment. As both myself and my colleague from Mississauga South pointed out, Mr. Speaker, the Government had failed in this Bill to indicate clearly that the extensions of the general preferential tariff are supposed to be aimed at those least developed countries. That is a very important principle which ought to be followed.

In a statement the Minister said he wanted the developing countries to receive the benefits of the preferential tariff, but he did not specify or make clear that as Canada increases or liberalizes its trade benefits, we have in mind those countries which truly need access to our markets if they are going to be able to develop some self-reliance and become full partners in the trading system of the world. We have to consider why the Minister's speech, indeed the Bill, are inadequate responses to the points raised by my colleague and by myself.

The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that Canada today does not have a strategy for international development. We had a strategy from 1975 to 1980, some of which was implemented, some not. But at least it was a clear course of direction, covering trade matters, international financial institutions and development assistance. There was a course of action that the Canadian people and this House could see clearly. We are now in the fourth year of the subsequent decade and there is still no strategy for the 1980s. I would certainly like to have the Minister's view on why the Government does not have a full strategy for international development and Canada's role therein. If that were the case, it would be clear for everyone to see why these partial measures are being taken. It would also be clear whether we are in fact aiming this Bill at the least developed and most heavily populated countries of the world, or whether we are being less discriminating in our trade moves.

Before I leave the subject of the North-South committee's recommendations, I want to draw to the attention of the House that, although the Government has accepted our recommendation concerning the general preferential tariff extension to some extent, it has yet to respond to what we considered at that time, based on a very extensive analysis of trade conditions, that there be a major public inquiry on the question of adjustment measures. We know that if we are to allow greater entry to the products of developing nations, that is going to cause dislocation in the Canadian economy. I do not know any politician in his right mind who would advocate measures which will throw his own people out of work. The most famous example of this is, of course, the textile industry. It is well known that the Canadian textile industry is shored up by subsidies and that textiles can be produced at a much lower cost in many other countries, as indeed they are. Yet it would be an irresponsible measure for any of us to recommend holusbolus that we close down the Canadian textile industry in an effort to provide more jobs in the developing world. Having said that, it is clear as we move into the post-technological society—whatever this new society of computership and high technology is going to be called—that we have to set a course, examine our industrial strengths and set into motion a process of conversion of those industries no longer competitive in the global economy.

In a very strong recommendation the North-South committee suggested that the Government immediately launch a major public inquiry of the industrial sectors which are likely to be at long-term competitive disadvantage in relation to developing countries, with a view to adopting effective adjustment measures. In light of that, I fail to recognize why the Government has just turned its back. The Government responded that it agreed with the thrust of our report, but I am calling the attention of the House to this fundamental need for a public inquiry into the adjustment measures which are going to be required if Canada is going to be able to modernize its productive capacity so that it harmonizes with the global demand for an increase in world trade generally. My colleague has already stated that Canada's share of world trade has slipped from 5.8 per cent to 3.7 per cent. Surely that is sufficient evidence to impel us to take measures to increase our share. Surely that is the motivation for taking those steps which will increase the capacity of the growing population of the developing world to buy from us. Trade is a two-way street, Mr. Speaker.

Changes are called for, for example, in the international development strategy for the 1980s, which was adopted by consensus at the United Nations in 1980. I believe the measures set out in the international development strategy should be adopted by Canada as a proponent nation, recognizing the truth today in the North-South dialogue that the global economy is so interdependently structured that when the North goes into recession, as we have done, we cannot come out of it until the South is given an opportunity for its own expansion. We cannot live by ourselves. It is not simply a question of altruism to put forth that viewpoint; it is a question of economic survival.

The international development strategy was conceived and developed along those lines. The world being in an economic crisis today is a further reason for Canada to project its own international development strategy for the remaining decade of the 1980s.

I have just returned from Peru, which is a country that has a major aid program from the Canadian Government. If one wants to see all the effects of the complex web of relationships today in one location, even a small location like Peru, that is the place to see it. We see the effects of the debt crisis. The debt crisis in many countries is caused by the bottom falling out of their commodity export markets while they have to pay more for the importation of manufactured goods from industrialized countries. The debt crisis is caused by the gap widening between their exports earnings and the cost of imports. This debt crisis, which is now of staggering dimension, is affecting countries all over the world, but it is particularly noticeable in Latin American countries, which perhaps had too easy an access to the banking institutions of the 1970s which wanted to lend them money under the concept of a never ending expanding world economy.

Peru is an example of how the debt crisis has meant a larger cutback in development programs for its own people. There are people in developing countries today who are farther behind in achieving their own self-reliance than they were a few years ago, even with all the development assistance that is still taking place. I am quite sure that the Minister recognizes as well as I do the reality of what I am saying. It gives more truth to my earlier comment that we must be able to put together a package that includes the items of international development assistance, preferential trade relationships, and the development of indigenous energy supplies, both renewable and non-renewable. This package must include the enlargement of the international financial institutions, particularly the facilities within the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. We must develop an entire enlarged package that can be sustained by the sufficiency of world liquidity, which exists today, in order that Canadians and the Canadian Government have a meaningful relationship with the expanding populations of the world with whom we have an interdependent relationship.

Those are some of the general comments that I felt impelled to make because of what I regard to be a piecemeal legislation that approaches a very serious and deep problem from a rather narrow base. I believe that there is an opportunity for Canada to play a constructive role in the enlargement of the world economy. We cannot do this alone since we are too small and have too many problems in our own country. However, it is to our own advantage to play a greater role in the push for global economic negotiations as a means of implementing the international development strategy for the 1980s. It is in our interest to do this.

I say to the Minister very frankly that I believe there is a lack of impetus and momentum in the Government today in the development of our relations.

I believe Canada should take an approach that would incorporate Bill C-7 into a larger framework which would have a much more meaningful impact on the international community and would indeed benefit the Canadian people and result in the creation of more jobs in our society. Such an approach would reflect a greater concern about the staggering effects of the rising debt burden on developing countries, the monetary policies of industrialized countries and the trade barriers that still exist, despite some of the piecemeal benefits in the present legislation. We have yet to recognize that the economic recovery of industrialized countries depends on the ability of growing markets in other parts of the world, particularly in the developing countries, to buy.

When we recognize that millions will continue to face starvation if we do not make the necessary structural improvements in the world institutions, it becomes a two-pronged motivation for greater action. There is a political and economic imperative that challenges us as politicians to do this. There is a human imperative that challenges us as human beings to do this. I have just given the example of my most recent examination of this subject in Peru. As human beings we should recognize that the extended suffering of millions upon millions of people is not a proper basis for any kind of society to call itself advanced in a world of technology that is able to produce sufficiently to feed and house every member of the human community.

We have taken some satisfaction from the fact that all of us are agreed as political Parties that Canada must reach .7 per cent of Gross National Product in international development assistance by 1990. I think that is a recognition of a sense of concern that is present in the House. Certainly, it is present in the country. When all is said and done, despite different approaches which people take on economic subjects, we want to do the right thing within our capacity to do it. I believe that reaching .7 per cent by 1990 would be, in my view, a minimal requirement.

The point I want to make here and on which this bill touches is that development aid is only a fraction of what needs to be done to build the economies of the South. It is not development assistance that will build the economies. It is, I would even say, of marginal benefit to developing countries. It is the enlargement of their capacity to become self-reliant; it is the enlargement of their capacity to plug into world trade. This Bill begins to approach that.

However, there are a number of steps that could be taken, and I believe this Bill could be viewed as a foundation. There are a number of steps that need to be taken if Canada is to be fully involved in contributing to the expansion of the world economy.

I think that Canada through the United Nations' system, which is intimately involved in all the intricacies of the subject, should work to expand the resources and quotas of the International Monetary Fund so that that fund itself could provide, along with the facilities of the World Bank, access to the least developed. We are seeing now the effects of the stringent conditionality of the IMF in many countries that are turning to it for assistance because of the debt crisis. We saw only last week the results of such stringent measures in Dominica where there were riots as a result of controls being put on the local economy with deleterious political effects in the country. We are going to have more of that if ways are not found to increase the capacity of the international financial institutions to respond to today's need. That is going to require, I think, more of a sense of commitment that perhaps we hoped we were going to see as the North-South Summit was held in Cancun in the fall of 1981, which once more failed to deliver the goods.

I think that Canada must take an active part in efforts to initiate a process of basic reform of world trade and financial arrangements. This reform will take the nature, in the main, of an enlargement of the facilities within the institutions. It should take a much more vigorous look at the effects of protectionism, and we should commit ourselves to contributing actively to negotiations within GATT and preparatory discussions regarding a new trade round.

I think the GATT results of its most recent trade round were certainly of some benefit, but marginal compared to the need. And, similarly, with more leadership in the GATT system in an effort to develop further the integration of developing nations into GATT, we have to pay much more attention to what UNCTAD is attempting to do in enlarging the trade capacities of developing countries.

I have to say with some real regret that the most recent UNCTAD conference in Belgrade, which I think was held about a year ago—I do not know whether you can call any conference a failure; it is not a failure if people come out of it still talking to each other,—certainly did not accomplish anything toward the enlargement of the trade capacity of developing nations, and again I say that the enlargement of that trade capacity is in the interests of the whole North-South dialogue. I believe a re-examination is needed in terms of a new GATT round and a much more serious effort made to respond to the message of UNCTAD in acting against protectionist trade barriers.

Finally, we need to develop a new strategy of international development co-operation, as I have said, that would respond to and harmonize with the United Nations international development strategy for the 1980s. I do not think that much in this way can be done realistically until there is greater public awareness in our country and greater public education of the people on the complexities of the international monetary and trading system of the world today.

When we look at relations with developing countries, the reality is that this subject goes so far beyond CIDA and so-called foreign aid or international development assistance, it goes so far beyond it, as I indicated a moment ago, as to render almost marginal those activities of an aid nature, when the real need is to enlarge the productive capacity of the whole world in such a way that we increase our trading capacity one with another.

We have failed to keep pace in Canada. Not only have we lost our share of world trade in the life of this Government, not only have we declined from 5.8 per cent to 3.7 per cent of world trade, but we have not kept pace with the United States, Japan, and EEC in the enlargement of their trade with developing countries. Our trade balance on both sides, import and export, with developing nations is somewhere around 12 per cent, maybe 13 per cent. In the case of the United States, Japan and the EEC, it varies from, say, 20 per cent to the low 40s.

I have taken this moment to use the opportunity, which the minister provides us by bringing in what I call a piece-meal Bill, to remind the Government of its responsibilities and its obligations to take a much more sweeping approach through publishing a strategy, setting out a course of action to help Canadians understand the dimensions, and also to make the point that it is in our own interests to do these things.

I come from Edmonton South. I can tell you there are people today out of work in Edmonton South who were never out of work before in their lives. Why are they out of work today? Because of the recession and because of the cutbacks in the productive capacity of some of their own industries. I am leaving aside here the whole question of the deleterious impact of the National Energy Program on the economy of my own province and my own city. I feel pretty strongly about that, but I do not want to make a political attack on the Government in this speech because I really want to make an effort to have the Government listen and respond to this need for an enlargement of thinking in our approach to the construction of policy of a trading international financial institution and energy and commodity pricing of all those elements that are at the basis of the international economy today. The Government should hear how it would be in the interests of those people in Edmonton South who are out of work, were they able to witness and participate in a replugging of Canada into the industrial economic growth of industrialized countries, starting with ourselves.

● (1620)

There is a crisis in the world today. It is a crisis which has many dimensions. Bankers are replete with their own definitions of this crisis. It is a crisis of people in our country who are out of work as a result of the failure of the economy to expand. There is a crisis in developing countries where their debt is so horrendous that it results in a cutback in their own development programs. There is a cutback in the lives of people who are suffering as a result of the inability of the world economy to get going again.

I say to the Government that we now have a tremendous opportunity to use our ability to build an economy which can reach out to the expanding world in a way that lifts up Canadians and helps to make us a full participant as a vigorous and vibrant nation in a growing world economy, leading to some economic stability and a sense of social justice for the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join in this debate for a few moments. Often when we are considering a Bill of which most in the House take little note, a Bill such as Bill C-7, it is wise to take a little more in-depth look at what we are talking about. For example, what is this Bill that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) seemed to pass off so lightly in his opening remarks? He used the term once or twice that it was a kind of housekeeping Bill.

The main thrust of my remarks today will be that I believe the House of Commons is not acutely aware enough of what the export-import or general trade picture of Canada is all about. Tied in with that, of course, we must give more thought to the question of customs tariff. Are we indeed dealing with the rest of the world in the most prudent way?

Since I have been in the House of Commons, the Bill we are now considering amending has been amended 11 other times. For example, it was amended in 1973. It was amended three further times in the period from 1974 to 1975. In the period from 1976 to 1977, it was amended four times. In the 1977-78 session, it was amended again. Again it was amended in 1979-80. Finally, it was amended in the 1980-81-82 session.

If we attempt to identify what is the existing law, bearing in mind the Revised Statutes of Canada which are dated 1970, we find that this is one of the most confusing pieces of legislation on the statute books of Canada. Granted, we can go to the Canada Statute Citator and go through the various amendments. However, I am suggesting that because of the amendments and the basic complexity of the Bill, it is now almost impossible for the average Member of the House to come up with a meaningful position, for example, with respect to Clause 2 of Bill C-7. I refer to Clause 2 because it sounds so innocent. It simply reads:

Section 3.7 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor—

The net effect of that clause would be to have the expiry date for Sections 3.1 to 3.6 lengthened from 1984 to June 30, 1994. It is not until we go to the Citator that we see the true significance of that 10-year extension. Mr. Speaker, I know that you follow these statutes very closely; perhaps it is no news to you. However, I think it would be news to many people in Canada if I indicated what in fact is being covered by that rather innocent Clause 2 to which I have referred.

In fact, in the Canada Statute Citator there are literally pages of amendments to the 1970 Customs Tariff Act, as it appears in the Statutes of Canada, which are now being amended by Clause 2. I will not read into the record—because Hon. Members who are interested will do it—the two to three dozen subsections affected by what is being proposed in Clause 2. I am simply using it as an illustration of how casual Ministers of the Crown can become with regard to Bills which they are introducing.

To use the words the Minister dropped on us, he hoped that there would be speedy passage. Why did he hope that there would be speedy passage? It was probably because he does not know what the Bill means. Certainly he would not entertain questions. He would be most embarrassed if I asked him questions about any of those three dozen subsections to which I have referred and which will be affected by Clause 2 of Bill C-7. I will go further and suggest that the Minister has not even read those subsections, yet he recommended a speedy passage.

I should like to deal with Clause 3 of the Bill before us. Again it sounds innocent. It simply reads:

Section 11 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Then it continues:

The Governor in Council may, by order,

(a) make such reductions of duties on goods imported into Canada from any other country or countries as may be deemed reasonable by way of compensation for concessions granted by any such country or countries; and

(b) extend any reduction made pursuant to paragraph (a) to any other countries as may be required by Canada's international obligations.

It is subsection (b) which is really the amendment. However, I should like to point out that when one reads that subsection, one naturally asks, "What is the effect of including it?" Then one looks to the explanatory notes and sees that the section I have just read is the same as that in paragraph 3 of the Budget motions introduced with the Budget on December 7. In short, you are told nothing. All you are told is that on February 7 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) tabled in the House a motion that had the same words as Clause 3 which now appears in the Bill with no further explanation. Most people would be interested in why the Minister felt it was necessary in December to move the motion. The Minister did not touch today on why we are now being asked to give speedy passage to this Bill, including Clause 3. I raise that because I did a little homework. I thought we should check into Subclause (b) to find the reason they have extended the first paragraph, which reads:

● (1630)

Extend any reduction made pursuant to paragraph (a) to any other countries as may be required by Canada's international obligations.

The bottom line is that they have added that subclause because they do not want to come back to this House. They want the ultimate in freedom. At the present time the Government is able to negotiate with countries under the present Section 2 of the Customs Tariff Act. As I indicated, it has the right to make compensation for concessions given by other countries.

Apparently because they have to make those changes in a spirit of bartering or negotiation, there are certain circumstances that may trigger the necessity also to include other countries. That is what they mean by "extend any reduction made pursuant to paragraph (a) to any other countries as may be required by Canada's international obligations". Does that wording have to be that wide? Is it really appropriate for this House of Commons, which represents the people of Canada, to say, not to any designated Minister but to the Cabinet; "If you think it is necessary to make a change and extend that change to any other country as may be required by Canada's international obligations, you go ahead and do it and don't worry us about it"? That is what we are being asked to do.

Think of the implications, Mr. Speaker. What does the Government mean by "Canada's international obligation"? Is it talking about aid obligations? Is it something to do with the CIDA program, our obligations in NATO or our obligations to such international financial institutions as the World Bank? We do not know. We are being asked to give the Government the right, a blank cheque, to extend as it sees fit any reduction made pursuant to paragraph (a) to any other country as may be required by Canada's international obligations.

Not only do I raise the question of how complicated this Bill has become. Not only is it a question of all the amendments to which I am referring. We also have to realize that if the Government has its way with the Bill in its present form, it will take even more away from the House of Commons than we have had taken away over the last decade.

It is not time for us to consider that because of the complexities and the admitted difficulties of moving quickly, of making deals with international countries and partners that perhaps have to be finalized without undue delay, it is necessary to have a committee of this House meet on a constant basis to consider whatever those in Revenue Canada feel is needed in the line of either regulation or amendments to existing legislation?

If they feel they have a deal cooking with one or more countries that may, if entered into, require some type of change with other countries because of Canada's so-called international obligations, surely a committee of this House could be structured. In a preliminary way it could hear the problem and advise the respective caucuses as to whether it thinks the Government is right or wrong. I do not feel in an elected House of Commons that it is proper for this type of further delegation to be made. It is not appropriate for us to say: "Do not ask for whatever authority you need in specifics but ask in a blanket way and the more you shelter us from what you're doing, the better".

I do not want to fault Revenue Canada or, for that matter, the implications of the customs legislation generally, but the fact is that we have not done well under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with respect to trade with the developing world. My colleague from Edmonton highlighted some of the problems. If you review trade with the developing world, Mr. Speaker, you find that in the case of European countries about 30 per cent of their trade at the present time is with the developing world. In the case of Japan it is about 30 per cent. Of all the trade the Japanese are doing with every country of the world, about 30 per cent is with developing world countries. In the case of the United States it is 43 per cent. In the case of Canada it is 10 per cent.

We have to start asking what has gone wrong under the "emperor" who, when he became emperor in the country in 1968, said that he was going to explore a third alternative. He was going to shift our trade away from the American orientation to what he called the third option. If you check the figures, Mr. Speaker, you see that in 1965 when the Prime Minister spoke about shifting the orientation that we then had with the United States, total trade with the United States as far as the Canadian side was concerned was about 65 per cent. When the emperor took over, 65 per cent of our trade was with the United States. Now that he is leaving us it is 73 per cent. We have 8 per cent more of our trade now with the Americans than when the emperor began his reign.

When this type of thing is happening, is it not time for us in the House of Commons to begin taking a better look at legislation such as Bill C-7 and to say: "We need more input to make sure that you fellows are not going to continue to make the mistakes that you have been making with respect to export-import trade and, in particular, with respect to the levers that you may have, such as customs legislation." I am suggesting that a committee of the House could meet constantly to take a better look at this Bill.

Second, I am suggesting that we should not, without due consideration, let more authority be taken from the House and given to the Cabinet of the day as is contemplated by Clause 3. In effect, Clause 3 would simply say to the Cabinet: "If you think some international obligation is affected by some deal that you have cooked up, go ahead and make the changes without reference to the House". Too much is at stake for us to consider that.

I only wish that I had a little more time to speak, Mr. Speaker, because I would like to deal with the question of raising the duty free amount of money that Canadians can spend in foreign lands. These exemptions are coming at a time when we are living with such a severe external imbalance. At a time when our dollar is now coming close to 77 cents, is it not strange that we are telling Canadians that they can go out of the country and buy twice as much as before because we do not want to keep them unduly limited by these exemptions? Surely the time has come for the House to begin taking a more serious look at the question of whether or not this is really in the best interests of all Canadians. We must bear in mind that this change has already been put in place. If this Bill is passed, it will have retroactive effect to April 20, 1983.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. I would like to caution Hon. Members at this point that although the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) made reference to clauses in the Bill, discussion at second reading is on the principle of the Bill and questions or comments should not deal with specific clauses.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) a question. The Bill, an amendment to the Customs Tariff Act, contains a whole series of schedules which deal with the British preferential tariff, the most favoured-nation tariff, the general tariff and the general preferential tariff. Is it the view of the Hon. Member that we need four separate tariffs, bearing in mind that the general tariff now applies only to Saudi Arabia? Is it his view that the Saudis should be penalized by being the only country in the world required to pay $6 a bottle for booze imported into Canada?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the comments of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) when he was making the case as to why the four schedules to which he has referred appear to be almost out of date or archaic. I think he has made a good point. If there is substantiation for his argument that Saudi Arabia is the only country that seems to have been isolated in this way, I find it to be a most strange turn of events.

In line with what I said earlier, I think it would be very helpful if not only the schedules in the Bill but the entire Bill itself was overhauled and streamlined with the hope that more people who are dealing with this type of legislation in a day-to-day sense can deal with it and understand what it means without hiring high-priced brokers and others who must intercede and who in many cases themselves do not even understand the effects of many of these clauses and schedules. My short answer to my hon. colleague would be that if, at committee for example, he is able to substantiate what he has said concerning the situation of Saudi Arabia, I believe it must be rectified and rectified quickly.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York-Peel is our Party's external affairs critic and that position would obviously have a great deal of reference to trade. I was wondering if he had taken a look at the question of whether the British preferential tariff had any real value any longer and whether it would be possible to simplify the entire tariff structure by having one general tariff and a separate preferential tariff for under-developed nations with which we may want to deal on a special basis. I wonder if it is his view that we could perhaps get rid of the British preferential tariff, particularly bearing in mind that it really does not offer much in the way of preference to any nation and bearing in mind the fact that Great Britain and Ireland are now members of the European Community.

Mr. Stevens: Again, Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of my hon. colleague, I think this is an excellent example of how the statute is rather out of date in so many ways. The term "British preferential tariff" is a term which presumably came from the days of the British Empire and the British Commonwealth and is simply not in tune with today's terminology. I see no reason that there could not be a smoothing out and simplification of the terminology and schedules to which my hon. colleague has referred.

I have in front of me the Canada Statute Citator which is published every year by McGoldrick. It is very difficult to find this in the customs tariff section of that book but the book does set out exactly which countries are treated as British preferential tariff countries. If any Hon. Members are interested, I could tell them which countries are included under that tariff.

If any Hon. Members are curious as to whether or not Christmas Island, the Cocos Islands, Guyana, Lesotho, Ghana and India are included, I could give them the answer.

In answer to my colleague's question, I would say we do not need so many schedules. We do not need so many so-called preferential categories. Those categories could be simplified and I hope that when this Bill gets to committee one of the things which would be explored with the Minister and his officials is why this is not being proposed at the present time.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of my colleague, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), which concerns an area of Ontario with which I think the Hon. Member is very familiar, the Lindsay area. There is a manufacturing plant there which manufactures inner tubes and some minor rubber products. That plant has been very adversely affected by the importation of products from South Korea and Taiwan.

I directed the officials of that plant to the Anti-Dumping Tribunal which ruled that there was not sufficient evidence to determine that dumping was occurring. A considerable number of jobs were lost at this plant which means a lot to the community. I think the officials of the plant were probably given the brush-off by the Anti-Dumping Tribunal and I have a deep concern over the number of people whose jobs will be affected.

I believe we see too much evidence of small plants trying to establish themselves, employing up to 50 people and then running into deep trouble because of foreign goods coming into the country at a much, much lower price. I would like to hear the views of the Hon. Member about situations like that.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the point made by the Hon. Member illustrates why Members of the House should be taking a much deeper interest in the type of legislation that is now before us. I am suggesting that there could be a committee of this House before which the Minister and the officials of Revenue Canada could explain why they want to make these changes. That would be a good idea because it would help cover the very points raised by my colleague.

We all recall that the last round of tariff negotiations in Geneva was held in almost complete secrecy. We had negotiators there, but the rank and file manufacturer in Canada—the people who were going to be affected—had no direct input.

• (1650)

That is in complete contrast to the American approach. The Americans, first of all, went to their manufacturers, invited them to attend and hear what proposals were going to be raised in Europe, and asked for their comments and criticisms. The package that the Americans then negotiated was a package that virtually anybody who had an interest in the United States was given an opportunity for input. That is not so in Canada. It is always secret. It is always left up to the Cabinet or the Department involved.

My suggestion to the Hon. Member would be that he make a case of what is happening in Lindsay and point out the repercussions that an import will have on employment in Canada. It is safe to say that every time we allow greater importation of goods, it is generally labour-intensive. What we are gaining on the other side through the exportation of goods is very low as far as labour is concerned. In short, we are exporting not only raw materials; in many cases we are exporting jobs with them. The manufacturing occurs in some other country, such as South Korea or Taiwan, and we import back. This cannot carry on. There is no way that we can solve the unemployment problem in this country—the projections made by the Minister of Finance confirm this—if we do not get a balanced trade position, especially on manufactured goods that are now $20 billion in deficit as far as overall trade is concerned.

I thank the Hon. Member for his question because it is really at the heart of why we should be getting more into this type of legislation than the Minister indicated when he said: "Let us give it speedy passage". Speedy passage has resulted in almost two million Canadians being out of work.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Debate. The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour).

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, in making a contribution to this debate, I would like to salute the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) for being present today. I would like to compliment him on the courage and candour of his remarks which were made yesterday on another trade matter at a conference held at the Lester B. Pearson Building. I might say that had he stayed yesterday for the rest of the speakers, he would have found their comments as equally interesting as his own, and perhaps, in some cases, more so. I do not mean to belittle his comments. There were a lot of interesting things said yesterday on the matter of proposed sectoral free trade between Canada and the United States.

I would like to ask the Minister before he leaves why it is that a Bill such as the one we are discussing, Bill C-7, purports to help the Third World in a way that my colleagues have spoken about earlier, when at the same time as a Bill such as this is coming forward, members of the Opposition have representatives of governments coming to them asking why the Government of Canada is doing serious things in terms of their own economies. I am thinking, for example, of a person from Mauritius who came to see me not very long ago to ask why it was that the Government of Canada had unilaterally imposed a quota on cardigan sweaters from Mauritius which was threatening to throw their economy into considerable difficulty.

Mauritius is not a member of the fabric union. They have been debating with the Government of Canada for a long time about the state of the sweaters coming into Canada. They are good sweaters. It is an under-developed country. Suddenly, someone—I do not know whether it was the Minister himself—informed them that they would have a quota imposed on them. Mauritius, I gather, is just getting on its feet economically. They are building up their manufacturing sector. It is a strategically important country to the West, situate as it is in the Indian Ocean. As a result, Mauritius has been hit very severely by a unilateral act by the Government of Canada with respect to one of its exports to Canada.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is a member of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Kilgour: As the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) points out, it is a member of the Commonwealth.

Is it another example of the Government appearing to do something to help the Third World—we on this side are all for that, particularly with respect to trade—but on the other hand, behind the curtain, under the table, slipping a notice, in this case to Mauritius, telling them that they must not get uppity and put their people to work because they cannot export to Canada more than a given quantity of a particular item.

Mr. Speaker, if you have not had the pleasure of reading this Bill, please do not. It is enough to give anybody a headache. Even those of us who have spent much of our lives trying to interpret statutes in front of judges find it virtually incomprehensible—from the first clause, as the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) noted, to the last explanatory notes which are, shall we say, unhelpful. They provide no more light on the matter than the clauses themselves. I wonder why the Minister of State for Finance could not have produced something that was at least comprehensible to Canadians as a whole.

I am led to believe that the substance of the Bill is as follows. It will provide for tariff reductions for goods from developing countries—that is the general preferential tariff—and tariff reductions will be provided for various goods not produced in Canada, such as diesel engines for crawler machines and electronic carillons for churches. There will be increases for certain "wear" parts of machinery. These changes were announced in the Budget of April 19. The tariff reductions are retroactive to October 20, 1983. The tariff increases will not take effect until proclaimed. The date of the proclamation for increases will not be determined until the conclusion of the ongoing GATT negotiations.

Second, the limits on goods that may be brought back into Canada by Canadians travelling abroad are doubled. What person of good will and reason would object to that? Certainly, Mr. Speaker, your wife and mine and the wives of anyone who is able to travel abroad would support that.

The quarterly exemption is increased to $100 from $50. The annual exemption rises to $300 from $150, and the casual exemption rises to $20 from $10. These measures are retroactive to April 20, 1983.

Third, the Bill points out that the expiry date for the general preferential tariff has been moved to June 30, 1994 from June 30, 1984.

Parts of the Bill, Mr. Speaker, are almost funny. They are housekeeping measures. As other speakers might have pointed out earlier, certain mynah birds, which have traditionally been allowed into the country, are members of the starling family which are not allowed into the country. The Act has been amended to exempt the Chinese Talking Mynah and the Hill Mynah.

Fourth, in the humour section—and that is not humour at all—the wording of some of the clauses of the French version are revised. There is some clarification that goods eligible for the general preferential tariff may be produced in more than one eligible country.

Finally, the Bill provides Order in Council authority to exempt goods from the need to be shipped directly from the country of origin to qualify for the general preferential tariff.

There are approximately 3,500 customs officials across Canada. Very recently, one of the customs officials came to speak with me. He indicated that customs officers are given no training whatsoever. They are essentially presented with the leaflets that Canadian tourists and Canadian travellers are given and in effect, I gather, are told to enforce the law. How can any competent customs officer interpret the provisions of amendments such as these? The Hon. Member for York-Peel referred—he may not have used the term Byzantine—to the eleven amendments which have been made to the Customs Tariff in the past number of years.

• (1700)

Unless we train our customs officials, I am told it is simply impossible for them to administer the laws passed by this Parliament. If it is impossible to enforce and interpret provisions of a Bill such as this, what is the point, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, of all of us sitting here at so much an hour passing Bills like this which are going to be unenforceable and incomprehensible to the men and women who have to interpret the various provisions?

I end on that point with a plea to the Government at least to provide training to new customs officers and to provide adequate manuals. The Minister may argue that they have manuals, but again I have information from someone who works every day in the field that the manuals are so huge and so difficult to interpret that most customs officers do not even bother to refer to them, at least in some areas. I would assume that would include the area we are talking about today.

On the question of the developing world, if I may, I would like to associate myself with what has been said by others, particularly my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche). He has been interested in the Third World for virtually a lifetime and what he says, Mr. Speaker, I feel should carry immense weight in this House.

The Third World desperately needs to trade with the developed world. I have been told, as I am sure you have, Mr. Speaker, time and time again, that it does not want aid as much as it wants the ability to trade, and it cannot trade with us unless it has the right to have its goods enter Canada. To that extent I certainly support the spirit of the Bill, which is to provide for a tariff reduction for goods supplied by developing countries. Please let there be no doubt about that.

It is so hard to get to the more basic problems. Not very many years ago, Mr. Speaker, it was my good fortune to attend a conference on crime prevention in Venezuela. There were people there from all over the world, including the developing world. You appreciate, Mr. Speaker, we were talking about crime, and one of the representatives of, I believe, the Republic of India—stood up and told us that in his view the real crime was the fact that the developed world—the 15 or 20 countries which are considered to be developed—would go into world markets for oil, would buy spot oil at prices which certainly the Third World could not afford. In other words, as a result of Canada buying oil and bidding up the price of oil in the world spot markets, we were making it more and more difficult for Third World countries to buy the oil which they desperately needed to develop their own economies.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, how many people who might hear my voice are, like myself, shamefully guilty of wasting energy from the time we get up in the morning to the time we go to bed at night? The wastage of energy in Canada is simply, in my view, obscene. We waste energy here in this building, with respect, Mr. Speaker. We waste it in our offices. Virtually since birth, most of us have acquired the habit of wasting energy at each and every conceivable opportunity. When we can turn on one light or ten lights, we do it. I was just looking at the lights in the ceiling of this Chamber and wondering why they are really necessary. I do not know how much it is costing an hour, but every one of those lights is on. I am sure the Chamber could operate as efficiently with less energy used.

It seems to me that before we can begin to help the Third World, we must look at some of its more basic problems. There is the question of Third World debt. Is it really useful for a country like Brazil or Mexico to be encouraged by the financial institutions, public and private, to bid up their debts to the maximum feasible extent, as they did during the last six or seven years, to be now in a position where in many cases their entire export earnings cannot pay the interest on their foreign debts? It seems to me, with respect, that is not a very good thing to encourage the Third World to do to itself.

I am told, Mr. Speaker, rightly or wrongly, that there are Canadians who had their loans called, or their credit cut back, because of the present need of the Canadian banking system to cover the indebtedness to it of the Third World. In effect, it seems to me Third World countries are being put into terribly difficult economic positions partly because of loans made by the Canadian banking system and partly because of conditions which have gone sour in many of those countries. And Canadians are losing their jobs, losing their businesses, in some cases losing their homes—and I speak of my own riding in that regard—by reason of loans being called and interest rates in the Canadian banking system going up.

May I be permitted, in passing, to point out that in Edmonton today we have, I am told, about 40 per cent unemployment in the construction industry. One of our malls put an advertisement in the paper for 200 summer jobs and 5,000 people showed up for those jobs, and they were summer jobs at that. Another story out of Edmonton yesterday suggests that university students lined up—slept through the night in some cases—for the few jobs available through the Hire-a-Student Program.

I come back to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that over the last five years the so-called developed world has done a great deal to hurt the undeveloped, less developed or the developing economies of the world. I would like to make some points in this regard by quoting from a very penetrating article written not too long ago by Ivan Illich entitled "Outwitting the 'Developed' Countries". He points out that by persuading or pushing on to the developing world modern solutions we have caused them all sorts of grief. He said, and I quote from the article:

> Rich nations now benevolently impose a straight jacket of traffic jams, hospital confinements, and classrooms on the poor nations, and by international agreement call this "development".... traffic jams develop in Sao Paolo, while almost a million northeastern Brazilians flee the drought by walking 500 miles. Latin American doctors get training at the New York Hospital for Special Surgery, which they apply to only a few, while amoebic dysentry remains endemic in slums where 90 per cent of the population live.
> Buses are alternatives to a multitude of private cars. Vehicles designed for slow transportation on rough terrain are alternatives to standard trucks. Safe water is an alternative to high-priced surgery. Medical workers are an alternative to doctors and nurses. Community food storage is an alternative to expensive kitchen equipment. Other alternatives could be discussed by the dozen.
> Why not, instead, make one or two months (of education) a year obligatory for all citizens (of Latin America) below the age of thirty? Money is now spent largely on children, but an adult can be taught to read in one tenth the time and for one tenth the cost it takes to teach a child ... not only can he (an adult) contribute to the education of his children, but to that of other adults as well.

Who here can disagree with the point which Mr. Illich, who is, I believe, a priest or a former priest, is making? The developed world, it seems to me, comes along with a Bill like this and says: "Look, developing world—we are so good to you we are going to extend the general preferential tariff on some of the items".

Let me list some of them. Just leafing through the Bill, Mr. Speaker, we are going to give them help on things like biscuits, not sweetened; biscuits, sweetened; orchids, sardines, shellfish, lobsters, caviar—I wonder about that. Then there is tobacco leaf, whisky, gin, rum, brandy, vodka and alcoholic perfumes, whatever they are. Do you drink them or put them on your arm? Vinegar, labels for cigar boxes, photographs, plans and drawings, music for mechanical piano players, matches of paper, shoe blacking, baths, toilet bowls, grindstones, logging cars, flooring tiles and woven fabrics, among others. We say we are going to continue a tariff preference on these items, but, by George, in the case of Canada's proposed trade aid fund we are going to make it absolutely certain that 80 per cent of what you need in your economy is going to come from Canadian producers, whether we have producers or not, it seems to me, in that particular field.

• (1710)

Essentially, Mr. Speaker, there is too much hypocrisy exhibited in Bills like this. I think it would be very helpful if all Members, especially a new government, were to look at some of the basic issues and deal with them rather than apply band-aids such as the one I am holding.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member will know that the general preferential tariff, which is essentially for under-developed or less developed nations, still applies to countries like Brazil and South Korea. Both of those countries have been exporting fairly technical manufactured goods to the rest of the world and both restrict Canadian imports. Both countries have used the general preferential tariff to enter the Canadian market in a predatory fashion.

Is it the view of the Hon. Member that they should continue to receive this foreign aid, so to speak? Or should they have applied to them the ordinary tariffs, the same as any other manufacturing country? Is it his view that the general preferential tariff should be extended so as to cover virtually every fly-speck on the map in the sense that a country which really needs help does not get any more help than we give the south Koreas or Brazils of the world?

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I am very hesitant to try to compare tariff knowledge with the Hon. Member from Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). He is an expert on tariff matters. However, it seems to me that Brazil is still an undeveloped country that needs some help. Perhaps in his next question he could tell me what its average per capita income is. Obviously some people in Sao Paulo may be doing well but there are millions of Brazilians living outside of the major centres. If you could locate a plant in those areas, it seems to me they should then be entitled to export to Canada on a preferential tariff basis.

The Andean pact, which applies to Venezuela, for example, is proposing to reduce imports from countries like Canada over the next few years. Therefore, I wonder why Canada continues to buy about $1 billion worth of oil from Venezuela. I guess that has gone down in the last couple of years, but at the same time Venezuela is making it harder and harder through its membership in the Andean pact for Canadian oil processing and technical equipment to enter Venezuela. There is a whole range of goods, particularly in Alberta, that we would like to export to Venezuela but we are faced with the Andean pact tariff barrier. I guess that speaks to this question even if it does not answer it.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the standard of living and the general wealth of the average person in Brazil is not that great. However, the Hon. Member will know from being in Brazil that a great deal of the population lives in more than ordinary affluence. Some industries, particularly the aircraft industry, are operated in such a fashion as to seriously impede through predatory pricing the sales of Canadian aircraft, particularly those of de Havilland.

Is it the view of the Hon. Member that we should continue to give countries like Brazil that advantage when they do not seem to concern themselves about predatory practices and taking advantage in the Canadian market? Should we perhaps not play a little tougher when we run into predatory practices of people masquerading as under-developed countries or less developed countries when the poverty in those countries is largely because they refuse to allow equal opportunities to their own citizens?

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, so the record is clear, I have never been to Brazil. There was a suggestion in my colleague's question that I have been and it should not be allowed to stand on the record. If the Hon. Member is prepared to send me there at his expense, I will be happy to go.

Mr. Blenkarn: I thought with your foreign trade experience you would know about that.

Mr. Kilgour: The question of aircraft is a very interesting one because it is my understanding that this industry is the one example of a truly internationalized industry. The industry all over the world has decided that you can make the steering wheel in Brazil, the engine in Britain and the fuselage somewhere else. As I understand it, there are very limited tariffs applicable to aircraft parts around the world. There is also the argument that that is the way the auto industry may—I underline "may"—go in the future. If it does, then presumably an under-developed Third World country might be capable of making the seat covers for all the planes built in the world. South Korea might produce something else, and Brazil something else. Barbados, for example, may produce a third item. The question of the aircraft industry is a fascinating one and I hope the Hon. Member makes a speech so I can ask him about how he sees the future of the industry as perhaps applicable to other sectors as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In the opinion of the Chair, Hon. Members are straying somewhat from the general contents of the Bill. I invite them to stick with the subject matter.

Mr. Cooper: The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) talked earlier about some of the concerns he had about this particular Bill. Parliament, he said, may have a little trouble scrutinizing the direction in which the Government is going and the kind of things it is trying to accomplish. One of his suggestions was the concept of having a committee study this type of situation. Would the Hon. Member who just spoke have some thoughts about the kind of committee he would envisage? Would it be a standing committee or part of the External Affairs Committee? I would like him to expand on that because I know of his interest and work in this particular area.

● (1720)

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the question, which was not discussed before, gives me a chance to point out that I would like to see the committee consist of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, because it may astound you, Mr. Speaker, to know that to the best of my knowledge that committee has not met formally on any matter other than estimates since June 9, 1983.

It is rather odd that members of all Parties want to get on that Committee yet the Committee, for all intents and purposes, never meets.

Mr. Roche: It does not do anything.

Mr. Kilgour: It does not do anything, as the Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) says. As best as I can determine—I know that the Chairman of the Committee will be mad at me for this—the Chairman does not seem to be very interested in having it do anything and certainly the Minister is not interested in having it do anything.

Mr. Roche: Interested in cocktail parties.

Mr. Kilgour: The Minister or the Chairman?

Mr. Roche: The Chairman.

Mr. Kilgour: May it be very clear, Mr. Speaker, that that comment is coming from the Member for Edmonton South. It is a very important point that if there is to be a standing committee representing democracy in Canada in an important area like that, there are 100 things it should be doing, including the matter raised by the Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), rather than sitting, waiting and primarily having basically informal discussions with visiting people from around the world. While that may be interesting, there is much more the Committee should be doing, possibly including the matter referred to by the Member for Peace River.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, we have had some fascinating debates with regard to customs over the years. I have been participating in customs tariff debates since 1963. It is always a challenge to ask the Minister or Parliamentary Secretary concerned with the legislation to refer to the various schedules and numbers and read out what is in the customs tariff. They supposedly know their way around. I must confess that few, if any, have ever been able to do so and even fewer have ever expressed a desire to do so.

In these various schedules there are all of these numbers, columns and various exceptions included in it and finally at the bottom there is always the phrase for all the category items "not otherwise provided for". It becomes rather confusing.

Clearly there are some interesting provisions here. One needs only to look at Clause 1(3) to see that the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) was right on with regard to the development of what could be called world industry. Even some of our Canadian firms, such as Massey-Ferguson, will put engines constructed in Italy by Fiat or by other firms from Scotland into their tractors or combines. Of course, automobiles are made from an amalgamation of goods from many places. Let us not forget about TV sets and video component assemblies. Some stage of their manufacture perhaps will take place in Taiwan and then come to the United States or even Canada, notwithstanding the purists in the Department of External Affairs, because Canada does have some commercial relations with Taiwan. There are other examples.

It is only fair that a finished article being imported into the country should have a level of duty for Canadian purposes determined by the value of the goods in the country in which the components were made. Otherwise, the process becomes totally inaccurate.

Let me give an example of when I believe I beat the Department. I was sent some cigars from the Philippines in a very heavy wooden box. In fact, the box weighed far more than the cigars. The clerk placed this on the scale and wrote the figure based on the duty on tobacco. There was not only the tobacco duty but sales tax as well. The box itself was not taken into account. I had a final assessment of approximately $25, I believe, which I thought was rather excessive. I believe $17 was returned to me. I inquired about the box and the wrappings for which they were charging me. While I did not object to the assessment of the cigars, the carved wooden box was another matter. Frankly, at the time I received a wooden cigar box for free as far as duty was concerned. I did not say anything because it would have confused them. They would not have been able to figure it out, other than by charging me the total price for cigars.

I believe we should get more explanation from the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary with respect to Clause 10 since it is retroactive to April 20, 1983. While undoubtedly there are very good reasons for putting this clause forward, it is incumbent upon the Minister to come forward and say precisely what this effect will have. Does it mean that duties which were formerly leviable against certain commodities are now being moved back and the retroactive date will be April 20? Certainly one would hope that there will not be the imposition of additional duties dating back from April 20, 1983, and that this Bill will be the authority for having levied those additional duties.

I think the House will agree completely that with respect to the special tariff that is levied under the general preferential tariff for Third World countries, one would like to see what effect it has had now that it has been in place for approximately ten years. While it is proposed to extend it for another ten years, has it really met the stated objectives at the time of its introduction? As I recall, it was introduced by the Finance Minister of the day, John Turner. He introduced that measure with a view to giving a particular break to Third World countries in so far as our tariff schedules were concerned. But has it worked? Has there been an improvement in trade from those countries to Canada? If not, it is useless.

I would hope that the Minister can come forward with some figures which will show that while not all Third World countries have benefited, a number of them have benefited from the lowering of duties under this particular preferential tariff.

● (1730)

There are always humorous things in the customs tariff. I came across some right in the very early pages. Let us look at page 4, Clause 8. It reads:

The French version of Schedule A to the said Act is further amended by adding immediately after the reference to "à ciel ouvert"—

In other words, "open sky", which is the term to be used. The clause continues:

—in tariff item 49217-1, a reference to—

The English would be "and their pieces". This is going to make a fascinating examination. I am sorry I have not had time to do so. But what on earth are they talking about in Clause 8 when they talk about "open sky"? Then we have this number 49217. I suppose one could have a quick look to see if 49217 is mentioned at all.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It isn't.

Mr. Lambert: That is all right, then. It does not have to be. It can be in the tariff. I will have a look at my copy. But then Clause 9 reads:

Schedule C to the said Act is amended by repealing paragraph (2) of item 99214-1—

And then we wonder. It continues in (2):

Any bird of the Starling family (Sturnidae) except the European Starling (Sturnus vulgaris)—

And then what is added? It continues:

—and the Chinese Talking Mynah or Hill Mynah (Gracula religiosa);

This is also fascinating insofar as these particular ones are concerned.

Then we can look over the various items under Schedule 1 which are being changed. We get the distinction between non-sweetened biscuits and sweetened biscuits, orchids, sardines, sprats or pilchards when they weigh so much. Then we have shellfish, lobster, and caviar. I want to draw this to the particular attention of the Chair because there is a very serious distinction between the Excise Act and the Excise Tax Act. Here on page 6 of Schedule 1 we find tobacco unmanufactured, for excise purposes under conditions of the Excise Act where there is a duty payable and not a tax.

Here we have "not otherwise provided for—unstemmed tobacco when imported by cigar manufacturers. Then we find stemmed when imported by cigar manufacturers for use in cigars. Then we find whiskey, gin and rum. All of these are being incidentally extended for the general preferential tariff. I suppose that means that certain ministers of the provinces will go running down to the Caribbean countries at the time of the CPA annual meetings and negotiate the best deal they can get for their various liquor commissions for liquors particularly exported from the Caribbean countries. There is a good deal, I must say, about liquor in this Bill, Mr. Speaker.

Then we move from liquor to vinegar. However, as I said, one could have a much more detailed examination of all these changes if one had the total schedule of the Customs Tariff before one. They have a very serious effect in various parts of the country. It is not known what the effect would be of really moving to free trade with either the world or the United States or to counter the Common Market.

I remember attending a conference some years ago in New York with regard to the establishment of a Japanese-North American trading bloc to counter the Common Market. There were a lot of fine theories put forward at that time, but we note that nothing has been done, and I have not heard anything more in at least 15 years about this type of, shall we say, setting up a counter trading bloc with the European Common Market.

Our Customs Tariff has been the subject of some very severe criticisms in the past. In my experience here in this House we have gone through both the Kennedy round and the Tokyo round which, in effect, is something like 18 to 20 years of experience in dealing with the reclassifications under the Canadian Customs Tariff. I understand that there is another Bill as well having to do with the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. I think if my memory serves me correctly that Bill will do something with regard to classifications of items in order that there is a uniformity of definition or description and one does not discriminate against any particular country in invoking anti-dumping provisions.

With regard to our own Customs Tariff, we have seen a lot of reduction. The one thing I do not like is not so much what is in the Customs Tariff Act as content but behaviour under the Customs Act. We have had action taken by the administration at the present time with regard to textiles, finished textiles, high quality ones, where there were slowdowns at the ports of entry and now we are having some difficulty. I had a call from a number of importers or dealers in computer parts which had to be sent back to the United States where they are manufactured. They had to be sent back for repair and then re-entered.

Unfortunately there are times when the staffs at certain of the airports, the customs officers, are absolutely swamped. They get a sort of annual average establishment. Unfortunately there are periods when there is an awful lot of traffic. Notwithstanding the fact that certain limited local additions may be made, the customers are kept waiting. There was an occasion last week where if a representative of a firm had not gone out to the airport and pounded on the counter to get, shall we say, earlier service than that company would have had, and then taken the part the representative obtained and gone helter-skelter to Calgary by car, the company would have lost the account because competition is very tight. Unless people are able to deliver a service, the account is lost.

• (1740)

Sometimes this is not appreciated in the service departments of government like customs where, frankly, customers are told; "We have handled so much today that we are not handling any more". It was not closing time but they had been under the gun all day. Local superintendents have advised me that they are looking into this matter and will take the necessary action under the Customs Act. But we could take a long time to study the customs tariff. Many more Members of the House could take an interest in it in order to understand the effect of certain proposals. This is the one Bill which is the least understood of all legislation. It is fed down the pipe and people simply say: "Let it go on the nod". That should not be. Such is the nature of the Customs Tariff Bill that it is difficult to understand and few people pay attention to it, yet they are very seriously affected by it from time to time.

I hope the Bill will go through Committee of the Whole and ultimately receive passage. I understand that certain features of it are needed and overdue in the Department of National Revenue on the customs side. However, the fault for that lies with the Government in waiting so long to bring forward the Bill for discussion in the House. Then the Minister arrives and says: "Rush, rush, rush; we need it". That is hypocrisy and bad management in the House.

I am taking my time to say these things because they have to be said. I refuse to be stampeded by being told that the Department needs this Bill now or needed it yesterday. It should have been brought forward a month ago.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? On debate, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby).

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, second reading of Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, provides an opportunity to discuss two subjects of major importance to Canada. First and foremost, the Bill involves in an indirect way international trade and, second, it involves in a very direct way Revenue Canada, both in its administration and in relation to the laws it administers.

Let me begin by reviewing those two main features of Bill C-7. The Bill provides special tariff considerations for goods produced in so-called developing countries, otherwise known as the Third World. Of course, these are goods which are not available in Canada that we can allow to be imported without affecting similar goods processed within Canada. There is no exact similarity in the kinds of goods which will be permitted to be imported from Third World nations.

This legislative initiative through customs tariff arrangements allows us to consider the whole aspect of international trade, its effect on the Canadian economy and on Canadian people. Also we have to deal with Revenue Canada, both in its administration of the laws and with respect to the laws themselves. Bill C-7 changes the dollar values applicable to goods brought into Canada by residents of Canada who are returning from foreign travel. These changes in the dollar values of goods imported in this way are very substantially increased. As I understand it, for long term periods outside Canada, seven days or more, a Canadian resident can bring back $300 worth of goods. That is an increase of $150 over the previous dollar standards. The same applies in terms of the percentage increase for goods which can be returned to Canada after a shorter stay, that is, an increase of $50 to $100.

For some people who travel abroad and return to Canada with goods, this is a very substantial increase. I know from personal experience that some Canadian residents in their foreign travel would take that as immediate legislative authority to double the amount of goods they bring into Canada on their return. In some cases that is very substantial. I know people who upon returning from shopping trips in the United States bring back a large amount of goods and claim a value of $150. In some cases they require a truck when they return because they take that legislative, mandated increase as authority to double their purchases and in that way increase the amounts of goods and services they bring back to Canada.

I have never known Canadians to overestimate the value of goods which they brought back to Canada. That is to say, I have never known them to say that the goods they brought back were substantially more in terms of dollar value than the restrictions allowed. I say that only partly with tongue in cheek because I do not know how Revenue Canada would ever be able to ascertain the total dollar amounts involved in a change such as this.

I want to speak about this more directly with respect to the administration of the revenue laws by Revenue Canada, because it is in an area where a great deal of judgment must be exercised by the administrators of the law. I do not suppose there is a customs officer on any border point in Canada who does not see time and time again Canadians returning with goods which they must suspect are greatly in excess of the dollar values permitted. However, what action should they take? Should they bother in every case that they encounter to demand proof of the value of the goods or otherwise attempt to assess the value by some objective standard?

The point I want to make and underline is: Is this another case in which the government through the legislative process will create a situation that will result in difficulties for Canadian citizens? In other words, is the Government inviting Canadians to bring back more and more goods from foreign travel and then find when they arrive at the border point that they have to submit themselves to a rigorous examination process which will possibly result in violations of laws of Canada, in prosecutions, in other enforcement actions or in imposition of sanctions in respect of those laws?

To put it bluntly, is this a case in which Canadian citizens will be lulled into thinking that the Government of Canada does not really care that much about the dollar value of the goods they bring back to Canada and, having given Canadians that impression, it then imposes with great force the full burden of the law? I would like to know the answer to that question. I hope in any final disposition of the Bill that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) will make very clear the exact instructions which will be issued to customs officers with respect to the enforcement of these new dollar values.

I should explain quickly that Revenue Canada, as it is commonly known, is actually the Department of National Revenue with two specific divisions, as I understand it—first, Customs and Excise and, second, Taxation. We in the House of Commons know all about the activities of Revenue Canada in its Taxation division. We know all about the harsh administration of tax laws. We know all about the quota systems imposed by senior officers in Revenue Canada, Taxation. But we know very little about Revenue Canada on the customs and excise side. I can state from my experience that customs officers can be equally difficult and present similar difficulties to Canadian residents as the officers of Revenue Canada, Taxation.

I do not underestimate the importance of the duties performed by the officers of Revenue Canada, either on the customs and excise side or on the taxation side. The statistics I have from the Department of National Revenue report from 1983 indicate that the Taxation division of Revenue Canada produced revenues of $56.9 billion, a very substantial portion of the total revenue of Canada. As I understand the statistics, the customs and excise side produced $3.2 billion in revenue. That is revenue from a variety of taxes including import duties, sales tax, excise tax and other excise taxes and duties. I suppose added to that are what are called sundry collections. That division of the Department of National Revenue, that is, Customs and Excise, has a wide variety of laws to administer.

As Members of Parliament and representatives of the people, our duty is to ensure two things: first, that the laws enacted by Parliament are fair in their application to the people subject to them; second, that the public administration of the laws, in this case by the Customs and Excise division of Revenue Canada, is fair. One is justified in addressing both of those points in the context of Bill C-7 because we now have reason to believe, as a result of our experience with Revenue Canada on the taxation side, that the administration of the laws may be questionable.

Those are the two points I want to make with respect to the provisions of Bill C-7 that relate to the importation of goods by Canadian travellers, namely that the written law be clear and that the administration of the law be fair to Canadians.

That brings me to this point. What we have done in Bill C-7 is double the value of goods that can be brought into Canada by travellers from abroad, as I have said several times. However, all of us in this Chamber know that Canadians are in the habit of giving a liberal interpretation to that designation of dollar value. Without naming names, I suspect there are many Canadians who bring back literally hundreds of dollars worth of goods into Canada, the value of which cannot be easily determined. I suspect in the normal course of things that some Canadians will interpret this change in the law as a permit to double the amount of goods they bring back.

I would like to know from the Minister of National Revenue how the officers will interpret these new dollar limitations. Will this be enforced more strictly than in the past or will they recognize that what the Parliament of Canada has authorized in Bill C-7 is an increase of 100 per cent of what has gone on in the past? In other words, Canadians who brought in a certain amount of goods and material on return to Canada may now feel free to double the quantity of goods and materials they are in the habit of bringing back to Canada. Will they now be faced with strict enforcement and will that result in the imposition of sanctions and penalties which are included in the law?

The reason I am so concerned about that is that there seems to be a tendency among law enforcers, whether they are involved in revenue or penal laws, including criminal laws, to demand stricter enforcement. Stricter enforcement of the law seems to be the order of the day. I want to say something very generally about strict enforcement of the laws. I am appalled by the situation that we often find ourselves in where relatively innocent citizens, those who contribute to the economy, work on a day-to-day basis, and so on, are called to task for minor infractions such as failing to file an income tax return on time or some other minor infraction of income tax law, some minor infraction of the traffic laws or laws that relate to hunting regulations and that sort of thing. More citizens are brought before the courts of Canada for those kinds of infractions than on serious criminal charges.

If we want to stamp out illegal activity in Canada and want to use the resources of government to do that, let us stamp out rape, murder, robbery and housebreaks. Never mind stamping out the minor infractions of Canadian citizens which they commit inadvertently or without any guilty intent, such as exceeding the values that relate to goods they bring into Canada on return from travel abroad.

I am told there are certain advantages to increasing the amounts that apply to goods brought into Canada by Canadians returning from foreign travel. Certainly the inflation we have experienced in the past decade justifies a substantial increase in its own right. It is my sincere hope that this will not result in a substantial change in the manner in which these laws are enforced, or it will end up to the detriment of those we are trying to benefit, our fellow Canadians.

We have reason not to trust the administration of Revenue Canada with respect to this kind of change in the law. Let me say very quickly that I have great confidence in the public servants of Canada, particularly those in the service of the Department of National Revenue. However, like any employees, they require clear direction. Employees require a code and management direction that makes it very clear what their responsibilities are and how they are to administer the laws which they are charged with.

I want to take this opportunity to say to the Minister of National Revenue and those who serve directly under him that they should make certain in the administration of this new law that instructions are given that will be consistent with the intent of this law, which is to benefit Canadians returning from foreign travel. Keep that in mind and make it the guide. This is a law to benefit Canadians, not a law to change the administration of our revenue laws.

I mentioned international trade. As I said, that subject is implicit in the provisions of Bill C-7 that relate to importation of goods from the Third World.

I see the clock is approaching six. I will take the remaining minute to underline the importance of international trade to Canada. We have had a dramatic increase in our trading capacity over the past decade. I understand that at present our international trade amounts to approximately 30 per cent of our Gross National Product. The 1982 figure for our international trade is $84.6 billion. It becomes immediately evident that that is a very substantial sum of money when you consider that the total amount spent by Canada as a nation on government business is $100 billion. I see the clock is approaching six.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow morning.

At 6 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

OFFICIAL REPORT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw a comment which appears on page 3347 of Hansard concerning the Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. That comment was a private jest and not meant to be taken seriously. However, in the cold light of print it assumes a character that is untrue and unwarranted, and I apologize to the Chairman.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert) moved:

That this House recognizes the tremendous financial difficulty that farmers have been placed under and therefore recommends that the government immediately consider injection of much needed cash into farming through:

(1) the immediate payout of a substantial initial payment from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund in order to assist with seeding costs;

(2) the repeal of all sales taxes, well-head taxes and other taxes being charged to fuels used for farming and fishing; and

(3) an immediate interest rate reduction on Farm Credit Corporation loans so that viable refinancing of farms can take place.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the situation for farmers in Canada is so critical that my Party has decided to take the time of Parliament once again to try to convince the Government that it should take some action in the farming area. This is the third day that we have debated agricultural issues in the last month or so. We hope in the process of repeating that possibly the Government might learn something. We hope that government members are not the slow learners they appear to be.

The motion before the House is an attempt to point out to the Government that it has some responsibilities and that there are some areas to which it can react and act very quickly. The three points that we chose as possible methods of injecting funds into farming are as follows. First is the one about which we have been talking for the last year or so, the triggering of the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. The second is a rebate or repeal of the taxes on farm fuel. The third is a reduction in the interest rates of the Farm Credit Corporation which would help some farmers who happen to fall into that particular category.

There are many other ways in which the Government could inject cash into the farm economy. However, what we have chosen to emphasize are only three ways in which the Liberal Government could act now and immediately inject funds into the agricultural industry and therefore have some immediate benefit. The Government could proceed with these changes this week or next week. Although for many farmers it would be too little and too late, it would provide relief for some.

I want to quote from the Catholic Bishops Ethical Reflections on the Economic Crisis. This paper was reinforced by the Bishops recently in a statement to the Macdonald Commission. It reads as follows:

—we firmly believe that first priority must be given to the real victims of the current recession, namely—the unemployed, the welfare poor, the working poor—pensioners, native peoples, women, young people—and small farmers, fishermen, some factory workers, and some small businessmen and women. This option calls for economic policies which realize that the needs of the poor have priority over the wants of the rich; that the rights of the workers are more important than the maximization of profits; that the participation of marginalized groups takes precedence over the preservation of a system which excludes them.

It is difficult to believe that I am making that quotation refer to the prairie farmers and other Canadian farmers. Farming is the number one industry in Canada. This Government has allowed it to slip to the point where many farmers are disappearing from farming entirely. They are on the poor end of the economy.

Recognizing the farmers as a marginal group is a real shock to those of us who grew up close to the farming industry. We have to credit this to the unconcern of this Government and its lack of understanding of the farming industry. It is not only the grain producers but farmers all across Canada who feel this neglect by the Government.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will probably stand in his place and tell us that the Canadian farmer is better off than farmers anywhere else in the world. That may be so, but he will be misrepresenting the situation on the farm these days for many farmers. In 1979 there were 124 farm bankruptcies in Canada. In 1983 this had increased to 488 bankruptcies, an increase of over 250 per cent. Comparing January and February of 1984 with January and February of 1983, there was a 63 per cent increase across this country. In the west there was more than a 100 per cent increase in bankruptcies.

Anyone who knows the farm situation recognizes that bankruptcies are only the tip of the iceberg. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture states that for every farmer who goes bankrupt, there are 10 in trouble or who will pack their bags and leave the farm. During the last five years, close to 20,000 farms have disappeared. I challenge the Minister of Agriculture to state that that is good for agriculture and good for Canada.

This motion contains some very simple proposals which can be put into effect immediately. First, it proposes an insured pay-out from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. It proposes that the Government make that pay-out now and not at election time. I know the Minister will tell us that that cannot be done, but where there is a will there is a way. As was suggested by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) yesterday, the Minister could make an interim payment. We are told that that has been done before.

The Minister could put the enabling legislation before the House. In the last two years since we have known that the triggering system did not work very well, the Minister has had enough time to do so. He could put the enabling legislation before the House now and have it passed as quickly as possible. If he would propose a Bill which would be honest, above-board and do what it is supposed to do, it would have our support. However, we will not buy a pig in a poke. Such a Bill could contain a triggering system which would be retroactive to the last calendar year and the initial payments could then be made for the 1983 calendar year, with a final payment if necessary at the end of this crop year.

Let us not allow the Minister or the Government to use such a Bill as a lever to get less palatable Bills through the House simply because opposition members want the Bill passed quickly and are more concerned about farmers than the Government. Let us not hear government members say: "We will pass this Bill if you will pass some of the others". These kinds of shenanigans are evidence of the low priority the Government gives to farmers' problems. After having witnessed the promising Liberal leadership contenders invade Saskatchewan last week, such shenanigans would show a great deal of contempt for Saskatchewan.

The Minister has made a great to-do about where the money for these projected pay-outs would come from. The last pay-out from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund was made in 1978. Since that time farmers have put $300 million into the fund. The Government has committed $600 million to the fund but it has never had to find that money. Not one cent of the payment which the Government is now suggesting would come directly from the Government. In the accounts of Canada I cannot find anywhere an item indicating that the Government has actually paid that money into the account. The Government has made paper transactions by theoretically putting money into a trust fund and then borrowing it back. The Government has never had to pay any money out and it would not have to pay any money out if it made a payment right now. Unfortunately, even if farmers were to receive a payment from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, it would be too little, too late for many beginning farmers.

The second proposal contained in our motion is the repeal of taxes on farm fuels. Farmers will spend approximately $1.5 million on farm fuel this year and because of the recent increases it may be considerably more than that. That figure does not include the energy that is used to produce fertilizer, another large portion of the costs of farming these days. Of the cost of farming, upward of 20 per cent is made up of taxes which are put in place by the federal Government. If the Government had a great desire to help farmers, it would do something immediately for the primary producers like farmers or fishermen. However, in this particular motion we are more interested in the farmers. The Government could reduce by 32 cents per gallon—approximately 7 cents per litre—the cost of fuel. That would be a reduction in fuel costs of approximately 20 per cent. Farmers who use a considerable amount of fuel would be helped by $1,000, or more in their costs. For every thousand gallons of fuel that farmers bought, they would save $300. That is a sizeable injection of cash into the farming industry.

• (1120)

The third area of concern that is brought forward in the motion is the matter of the interest rates of the Farm Credit Corporation. This would help a few farmers who have Farm Credit Corporation loans, but the problem is much greater than those loans. For example, just last week The Leader-Post of Regina carried a quotation from the Royal Bank of Canada. It reads:

> The Royal Bank, one among many, told 84 Saskatchewan farmers last fall that they should get out of business.
> "The year before, we didn't tell anyone they should sell out," . . . "But it's just not worth it for some of them to put another crop in the ground. The problem is definitely getting larger."

That statement was made by the Royal Bank of Canada. It told farmers: "Quit, before you get too deep into trouble". The quality of farming does not count any more. The best farmers in the area are finding themselves going under because of interest rates. The Farm Credit Corporation could relieve a few of them.

Presently, with capitalization of approximately $132 billion, farmers owe over $20 billion. These are 1982 statistics. That is approximately 15 per cent. That does not sound too bad, but there is a catch because the interest rates are killing the farmers who are trying to start a farming operation. For instance, if a farmer had a $1 million investment in a farm—which these days on the Prairies is a fairly modest farm; a couple of sections of land—and borrowed money at a modest rate of 10 per cent, he would be paying $100,000 interest. In an average year that farmer would be very lucky to make a profit of $80,000 from those two sections of land. If there were no other costs involved, he might be able to meet the interest payments. The only farmers who are able to survive under those circumstances are the farmers who have already capitalized and do not have to depend on the production of their land to keep them going.

Considering all farmers—those who have paid for their land and those who have not paid for their land—of every $2 that they take in income, they pay $1 to the banks and the Farm Credit Corporation for the financing of their operation. What we are recommending is a small relief for that particular problem. We must put the credit on a realistic basis for farmers. We could be very nostalgic about this. A realistic basis for farm credit is approximately 5 per cent. In the days when farmers were able to borrow at 5 per cent, they could make a go of it. As well, the profit margin was greater then. We must put before the agricultural industry some kind of a credit operation which will allow it to farm and continue farming and to finance farming from within the agricultural industry.

• (1125)

In my last few comments I want to put before the House a kind of comprehensive plan for agriculture. In simple terms, which the Government might possibly recognize and understand, we could establish some kind of income stabilization plan which would recognize all of the problems of high input, high taxes, lower returns, high cost of credit and high cost of transportation. Recognizing all of these costs, we could put before the farmers some kind of income stabilization plan so that in the years when things are tough they can survive and in the years they do well, they will possibly make a profit.

If we do that, not necessarily at a rich level but at a secure level, taking into consideration all the factors of production, we can then provide something for the farmers which would keep them going in tough times. I know that some of our friends from the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party may not value the industry enough to try to control the markets in such a way that we are able to do this, but let me say that if the Government cannot bring itself to put forward an income security plan for the farmers, taking into account all these considerations, then we are going to have to do it on a piecemeal basis. And that is really what we are suggesting today.

However, in the long run we really have to go beyond the three suggestions in our motion. Besides providing adequate credit, we must protect the farmers from bankruptcies during the periods they are affected by weather and low prices. We must provide a tax system which would allow a farmer to get started. Right now, it is very difficult for a new farmer to get started because the moment he starts making a little profit in a good year, he loses it to taxation.

We must establish national marketing agencies which take the speculation and unfairness out of production of some of the crops. We must establish stabilization plans for as many of the products as possible. We must provide low transportation costs and costs of fuel at a level which has some relationship to the price farmers will get for their crops. What we need, Mr. Speaker, is a holistic approach to agricultural problems so that farmers can survive.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. A question period is now provided for. Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment directed to the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). I begin by saying I know from previous experience that the Hon. Member's remarks are always well prepared and given very seriously. This was no exception. However, I was attracted to his closing remarks when he used the phrase "an income security plan", and I would like to ask him if he would mind giving us a little more detail. For example, is it a form of stabilization? Is it a plan which the Hon. Member envisages would be based on costs of production for a wide variety of agricultural commodities? Or does he envisage a plan which is more or less on the traditional stop-loss concept based entirely on the market price situation? I feel it would be useful if we had a little more detail.

• (1130)

Mr. Hovdebo: I see an income stabilization or security plan as one which possibly allows us to dismantle the model situation we presently have which assists the farmer when his apples freeze, but not when he gets hailed out. That is covered by insurance. Right now we have a series of hit and miss stabilization plans, insurance plans and income security plans. Instead of taking each of the crops separately and saying that when you do not make it in this particular crop, your income from your operation, to stay alive, should be within a certain area, I would like to see a method whereby the moment you start hitting that area there is a place where you can go. Perhaps it has to be an insurance plan where you pay in some years and receive in others, such as with the Western Grain Stabilization Plan. Mainly, however, I think we want to put before the farmer some kind of security so that he knows that even when things are bad he is at least going to cover his expenses.

I know there is a problem. U.S. farmers, for example, said, when we were talking about a stable price for grain, well, if we gave $5 a bushel for wheat right across the board they would be ploughing the raspberries under and seeding wheat because there would be some security there. Basing it on price has some dangers. I know from experience that basing it on anything which does not fluctuate to some extent relative to production has some dangers. It is a very complex situation but I think it should be tackled; otherwise we are going to keep on losing farmers at the same rate.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, the second part of the Hon. Member's motion refers to:

(2) the repeal of all sales taxes, well-head taxes and other taxes being charged to fuels used for farming and fishing;

I would like to know how many cents per gallon the Hon. Member is talking about there. I would like to know if they have done any research on what the figure is because I have written letters to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières), as well as trying to do some compilations ourselves, and there does not seem to be any hard and fast figure as to how much tax is actually collected. Can the Hon. Member supply us with any information he might have?

Mr. Hovdebo: I do not have the figures with me but our understanding is that the total amount collected is something less than $250 million.

Mr. Mayer: For farmers and fishermen?

Mr. Hovdebo: No, just farmers. For primary industries, I guess we were looking at when we were doing it. Our Party in Saskatchewan did a compilation and came up with seven cents a litre in provincial and federal taxes which could be removed without affecting the amount received by the oil companies. That comes to 32 cents a gallon. Whether you can take it all from the federal level or not is difficult to figure out because some of it is very indirect. Increases in the well-head tax are not always directly attributable to the cost of fuel. But our understanding is that it could be seven cents a litre.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment and ask the Member a question. I received a letter today from a farmer who felt he just could not make it, so he called an auction sale. He thought he could get enough to satisfy the banks. When the bids came in he got a $3,000 offer for a $50,000 tractor and a $500 offer for a machine worth $75,000. He saw that he was not going to be satisfied that way and had to call off the sale. What he is going to do is sell some of his land from a two-section farm sufficient to satisfy the banks. The farmers are in dire straits and they are now having difficulty keeping their land. Two sections is not very much, and when they have to start selling part of that to satisfy the banks, where are they going to be a year from now? I would like to have the Hon. Member's comments.

Mr. Hovdebo: I know exactly what the Hon. Member is talking about. The moment they sell that land they reduce their productive base and are less able to pay interest on what they have left. They usually do not reduce their debt, just the interest. Right now in the Western Producer there are ten columns of ads for land for sale, which is about three times as much as there usually is. In my area around Nipawin, Tisdale and Melfort there were over 200 quarters of land available for rent or sale. Farmers are trying to get out now before they have to spend the money to put another crop in the ground. They are farmers, they cannot see the land sit there without producing so they are going to borrow money and put the crop in the ground, but they would rather have someone else do it if possible because they know they are not going to make it. For every farmer who goes bankrupt there are ten who pack up and leave or sell out.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, just by way of a comment, there are two federal taxes on vehicle fuels. The first is the 9 per cent tax which works out to roughly three cents a litre, and then there is the excise tax of 1.5 cents a litre. That is refundable upon application to farmers, fishermen and commercial users. I wanted to put that into perspective in case anyone thought that the total federal tax was of the amount stated, seven cents or eight cents per litre.

Mr. Hovdebo: There is a variation between the amount of tax on fuels in the various provinces. The total amount which could be removed in Saskatchewan is seven cents and that is the basis on which I made my comments. I am not that familiar with the taxes and I must agree with the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) when he says it is pretty hard to figure out exactly how the well-head tax collected by the federal Government, which the Hon. Member did not mention, really increases the cost of fuel as well. It is a tax regardless of whether you call it a royalty or not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Resuming debate.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where is the beef?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member wonders where the beef is. I know where the baloney is.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: I want to say to the Hon. Member who moved the motion today that I visited his area on Sunday evening last and I am fully aware that there are farmers in difficulty. I met about 400 of those farmers in a place called Hudson Bay, a small and fairly nice community of about 2,200. Some of those farmers have not had a crop in three years and they are in a very difficult position, not so much because of what the Government did but because of the weather. Certainly we in the Government have a lot of authority but not enough authority to direct what kind of weather farmers should or should not have. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of that. He comes across as if it were the Government's fault.

• (1140)

He also talks about the loss of income. World prices of grain have gone down as much as $48 a tonne in less than six months. Is that because of something the Government of Canada did? Our system of supplying the world market with grain through the Canadian Wheat Board is probably one of the most efficient in the world. I am sure the Hon. Member approves of that system. He did not say that, but I have heard him talk about if before. I know his Party stands on that.

He also did not say that there are quite a few farmers in different parts of Canada who do not fit into the bracket he is talking about. Very few of the farmers who have organized themselves into a marketing system and are efficient producers are in economic trouble, unless they did something way outside of normal procedure and good farm management. About 50 per cent of our farmers are still in very good shape in Canada. These are farmers who perhaps did not expand. They are farmers in the kind of productive entities which I mentioned earlier.

The Hon. Member quoted the Catholic Bishops. I would like to quote a priest, Reverend Paul Mooney, who was raised on a farm in Essex County and now lives in Zurich, Ontario where he has a parish. He is quoted in the London Free Press as saying:

> Many farmers have gone broke in the last few years. Many got big because the government and banks told them to get big, then everything went haywire. There's been a tremendous human cost in stress and even suicides.

The article goes on:

> The greatest enemy is the farmer himself... he's a rugged individualist, Mooney says, not mincing words. I'd hoped the recession had maybe gone deeper so it would get them on their knees and they would do something.

When things are going great farmers are rabid capitalists and free enterprisers for that system. However, when things go bad, even Conservative Members of the House of Commons want the Government to step in and become involved in the free market system. They condemn Crown corporations, but today they are asking us to get more involved in the lending system with the Farm Credit Corporation because the banks refuse to do this for people.

I am pleased that the Members opposite have given us the opportunity to debate this important subject. I am glad that they share my concern for farmers and my enthusiasm about the potential for the industry as well. The motion asks that the House recognize the tremendous financial difficulty that farmers have been placed under. That is something which Members on this side of the House have recognized for a long time, Mr. Speaker. We have gone beyond recognition to action. We have undertaken a whole series of initiatives to help farmers deal with the pressures of a difficult economic time.

I can list a host of programs which the Government has initiated. It has initiated advance payments for stored crops, stabilization plans, support for fruit and vegetable storage construction, shared cost programs with the provinces for agricultural development, special interest rates for farmers in financial difficulty, and enabling legislation for national marketing programs. The list goes on and on, Mr. Speaker. Hon. Members talk as though the Government had done nothing.

The Hon. Member who tabled this motion comes from the Province of Saskatchewan where agriculture is the basic and most important industry. What have their previous NDP and present Conservative Governments done with agriculture? They have done very little compared with what the federal Government does. In Saskatchewan the federal Government spends practically double what either the previous or present governments have. We also provide the benefit of the Farm Credit Corporation and advance interest-free loans on crops. The total involvement of the federal Government in Saskatchewan is nearly $500 million a year, whereas the province contributes less than $100 million a year.

The Hudson Bay district is called a disaster area. However, the Premier of Saskatchewan has never officially written a letter to me, to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or anyone else saying that it is a disaster area and they would like the Government to participate in the program. They have told me they are going to put money in their budget for this and want the federal Government to participate. I told them we would listen to their representation as soon as it was made. However, up until yesterday we had not received such a letter. The Government of Saskatchewan brought its budget in several weeks ago and has never made that official request. That government allocated $4 million in its budget and suggested the federal Government match that. However, that request has never been officially made in writing although the Minister of Agriculture and Premier of Saskatchewan know the proper procedures.

The motion mentions three specific things and I will try to deal with them in order. The suggestion that the federal Government issue an interim payment from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund is very tempting, Mr. Speaker, to say the least. There is no doubt that many western grain farmers are experiencing financial difficulty. That is why we have taken the initiative to amend the Act so that the payments will be based on a crop year rather than a calendar year and that the triggering mechanism will be changed to take into account per unit cash flow as well as total income.

As I said in Winnipeg last week, the Western Grain Stabilization Act is the main federal program protecting incomes of prairie grain farmers. It is a voluntary Act, Mr. Speaker. Farmers may join it if they want to. About 75 per cent of the grain farmers joined it and 25 per cent have not seen fit to join. Through that program the federal Government contributes $2 for every $1 contributed by the farmers. We administer the Act and pay interest on the total accumulation of funds every year.

Mr. Mayer: It is like a black hole. All the money goes in and nothing comes out.

Mr. Whelan: The basic concept of the program is very sound, but we need to change the pay-out mechanism to provide a more stable level of support, especially during prolonged periods of depressed world prices and markets. World prices and world markets have a greater effect on farmers' incomes than anything else, and they know it.

On the surface it would seem that to make an interim payment would be an easy thing to do. Let us first look at some practical considerations. When we made interim payments in the past it was after the end of the year under review and because we knew the receipts had projections of costs. With all this data the existing formula indicated that a payment was going to be required. That formula today does not indicate a payment will be required for 1983. There is no way the present legislation can trigger a payment. That is precisely why, on April 25, the Government announced that legislation would be introduced to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act. We are planning to improve the program and expect that these improvements will trigger a substantial pay-out to producers for 1983-84. I expect the Western Grain Stabilization Act to be introduced within a matter of a few days.

Earlier I indicated that we were considering the possibility of making an interim payment after the Bill had received second reading if it was clear the legislation was going to pass. However, Mr. Speaker, the Department of Justice has informed me that we cannot do so until and unless the amending Bill receives Royal Assent.

Let us take another look at the question of making an interim payment. We must first remember that a major thrust of this legislation is to make payments more promptly. The proposed switch to a crop year instead of a calendar year means that a farmer would only have to wait until October or November, just two or three months following the end of the crop year, for a payment. Under the existing Act, Mr. Speaker, there is a delay of nearly 10 months from the end of the calendar year until payments can be processed. The legislation does not allow any triggering. Last year 37 million tonnes of grain were sold, the largest volume in Canada's history. We do not have the time to study the formula here, but the western grain stabilization people in Winnipeg will show you exactly what triggers the plan.

Mr. Mayer: That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Whelan: It does not trigger under that volume system. However, by greatly reducing the length of time between the end of the crop year and a possible pay-out, the new legislation should correspondingly reduce the need for interim payments.

• (1150)

There would also be substantial administrative problems to overcome if we were to make an interim payment under the new legislation. The thing is that expenses considered under this program are calculated by Statistics Canada using a July 1 reference date, and it takes a couple of months after that to produce the final figures. It would be difficult to project those figures in the absence of the survey data.

It is also difficult to project receipts. What about when you run into unforeseen problems such as what happened when the St. Clair River was plugged full of ice? The boats could not move and millions of dollars were lost every day. That situation had never taken place in the Great Lakes since shipping was started in the Great Lakes system. There were over 100 boats held up. At least 50 per cent of those boats, I would think, were boats coming from the Lakehead or boats going up to the Lakehead load up with grain. That cost millions and millions of dollars and there was a backlog of hundreds of thousands of cars of grain sitting on sidings because the elevators in the Thunder Bay area were chock full of grain. Everything was supposed to go according to schedule, but it did not go according to schedule because of the ice phenomenon that took place in Lake Huron and in the St. Clair River.

Finally it must be noted that if the legislation is passed, we will likely be making a payment of roughly $300 million in late October. I would argue that prairie farmers will need that money just as much in the fall as in the spring. Many farmers operate on a line of credit. They borrow in the spring and repay the money in the fall. Farmers also make a lot of their machinery purchases in the fall. Land payments are usually made in the fall also.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Bankruptcies take place in the spring.

Mr. Whelan: I am sure the stabilization money which can be upped to $6,000 per producer would be well appreciated in the fall. I would urge all Members to give speedy passage to the Bill—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Bring it in.

Mr. Mayer: When are we going to get the Bill?

Mr. Whelan: —so that payments can be made at that time.

Mr. Mayer: Bring in the Bill. You cannot pass a phantom Bill.

Mr. Whelan: You have a Bill right now. Mr. Speaker, they have—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There will be an opportunity for questions and comments later on.

Mr. Whelan: There is a Bill before the House to which they can give speedy passage, just like that, if they want to.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where is it?

Mr. Whelan: I am talking about the one that is before the House increasing advance payments, doubling. That is before the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Bring it in.

Mr. Mayer: Where is it?

Mr. Whelan: It is before the House. Deal with it, if you want to. Show your real sincerity by giving that speedy passage and adjourning this debate—

Mr. Mayer: Where is it?

Mr. Whelan: It is in the House. It has been tabled in the House.

The second part of the motion refers to fuel taxes. It is always interesting, Mr. Speaker, how quickly the opposition members turn to elimination of taxes when they want the Government to do something to help some sector that is having financial difficulties. Then in the next breath they will be criticizing the Government for not doing enough to bring down the deficit. Their Leader says he is going to bring down the deficit. He is going to bring it down by billions of dollars, et cetera.

Mr. Mayer: So do some of your leadership candidates.

Mr. Whelan: He is going to bring it down by abolishing taxes. That is what they are advocating at the present time.

Mr. Mayer: One of your candidates says he is going to eliminate your Department.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How about the member from Bay Street? He wants to bring down the deficit.

Mr. Whelan: Federal taxes on fuel are made up, as the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) mentioned, of 1.5 cents per litre excise tax on gasoline and a 9 per cent sales tax on gasoline and diesel fuel. The 1.5 cents per litre excise tax is rebated to all commercial users, including farmers. And there is no excise tax on diesel oil or propane.

Exemption from the sales tax on fuels used by farmers would save Canadian farmers an estimated $91 million a year. The Government, however, would not only lose that $91 million in revenue, but it would have to set up a complex and expensive mechanism for policing such a rebate.

In the past decade, a major consideration in government policy has been to maintain a close relationship in farm fuel costs with the United States. Fuel price monitoring by the Government has shown that between 1976 and 1978, the U.S. enjoyed a small advantage of one to two cents per litre over Canadian retail fuel prices. The advantage turned in Canada's favour by 4.5 to six cents per litre during 1971-1981, even though taxes in Canada remained two to four cents a litre higher than in the U.S.A.

Mr. Mayer: That is ancient history. This is not a history course.

Mr. Whelan: During this period, prices in both Canada and the U.S. remained substantially lower than in the European Economic Community countries, such as the United Kingdom, France, Italy and West Germany, again countries with which we compete.

In the last couple of years, we have witnessed a very substantial rationalization in the Canadian petroleum refining sector. This is partly due to the deep recession we have been through, and partly due to the successful conservation efforts by all sectors in Canada. Rationalization has brought with it retail price wars which have benefited all consumers, including farmers.

The Government is always willing to discuss ways in which input costs to food production can be reduced. As you know, a Private Member's motion is presently before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade, and Economic Affairs. Debate on this subject will provide ample opportunity to review farm fuel taxes in relation to other sectors.

The final portion of the motion, Mr. Speaker, deals with interest rates and the Farm Credit Corporation. I am proud of the record of the FCC over the years in providing long-term credit for farmers and I am equally proud of the responsive way it has helped farmers in the last several years.

Subsidizing interest rates is an expensive business, Mr. Speaker, but we have been glad to do it for those farmers who are in serious difficulty. As I will show in a few minutes, there are very few farmers who are paying the current interest rate of 15 per cent.

Mr. Mayer: Those paying it are going broke.

Mr. Hargrave: Some pay 16.5 per cent.

Mr. Whelan: I would first like to point out that the FCC has loans outstanding to 79,000 farmers. That means that there are some 225,000 farmers who do not feel they need long-term credit from the Farm Credit Corporation. They are farmers who own their own land and carry their operational credit with banks and other lending institutions.

The recent increase in interest rates is of concern to all Canadians. Like other Canadians, farmers will undoubtedly alter investment and borrowing plans because of changes in interest rates. However, it must be recognized that the Government has initiated programs which will, and do, go a long way in reducing and stabilizing the cost of credit to the farming community.

You are all aware of the Small Business Development Bond Program under which a total of 17,263 loans were made for $2.7 billion to December 31, 1981. Of this amount, 2,902 loans for $587 million were extended to farmers and fishermen. On December 31, 1981 the program changed to the Small Business Bond and has been used for debt consolidation purposes. Since January 1, 1982 a total of 2,878 loans for $562 million have been approved to farmers.

This program in collaboration with commercial lenders provides credit at interest rates substantially below the current market rate, about half the regular cost of borrowing money. When the interest rate was 20 per cent, farmers could borrow under that program at 11 per cent, and a lot of them did.

The Farm Credit Corporation has been a major force in providing credit to the farm sector under reasonable terms and conditions. In the fiscal year that just ended on March 31, 1984, the Farm Credit Corporation extended 5,736 loans for about $758 million, the largest level of lending activity in its history. These funds were extended at interest rates of between 12.75 and 13.5 per cent. Of all the loans extended, 962 loans for $175 million were extended under the Special Farm Financial Assistance Program where farmers receive a four percentage point rebate for two years. These borrowers have an effective interest rate of 8.75 per cent for two years, which cost the Government approximately $29 million in subsidies. When the Opposition said we did nothing, I gently remind them that we did a lot.

I see you are motioning to me that my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, as on a number of previous occasions the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has tried to make the point that the federal Government puts far more money into agriculture in a particular province than does the provincial government. Today he used Saskatchewan as an example. Since he has made this argument a number of times in the four years that I have been here, could he present to the House the amounts of money collected from farmers by the federal Government and the provincial governments? It seems to me the federal Government is collecting at least in proportion to its double pay-back what the provinces do.

As an example, the provincial share in Saskatchewan of income tax collected from farmers this year was 51 per cent. I think it will be a little more next year, but it is only 51 per cent of the federal tax. Farmers are paying premiums for federal programs on which the province does not collect. For instance, there is the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. Crop insurance premiums are met by the federal Government, but the province does not become involved except to handle some of the administrative cost. The programs were developed as federal programs. Because farmers pay far more to the federal Government than they do to the provincial government, they deserve to expect to collect back far more income through the federal Government than through provincial sources.

• (1200)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am just amazed that the Hon. Member would rise and say that. The facts are available to anyone. They show that the provinces are by far the biggest spenders. Sure, we collect the taxes, but we have the block funding to the provinces aside from the programs about which I have talked.

The Hon. Member talked about the program for crop insurance. Last year his province alone received $56 million of federal money that went into crop insurance. The producers pay the other $56 million. Under that great Conservative Government of Saskatchewan, the province administers it, and it even appointed a minister in charge of crop insurance. I believe for one million people that Government now has 31 cabinet ministers in Saskatchewan. I must congratulate Hon. Members from Saskatchewan. I understand the other day that province reached the million point in population as a result of an increase in the birth rate and people returning to Saskatchewan from such rich provinces as Alberta.

When the Hon. Member is talking about funding, does he not realize that in Saskatchewan we are paying nearly 80 per cent of the cost of all post-secondary education? That is block funding which goes to them. Also there is all the money which goes to them for hospitalization and medical care. Again that is block funding, and we have no control over it whatsoever. The provinces and municipalities in Canada today spend nearly 68 per cent of the tax dollars collected, not the federal Government. It is block funded and transferred to them by the federal Government.

I am sure the Hon. Member could hear a better lecture from the Department of Finance or even from university students. I was chastized in the House by one of his colleagues when I said that we gave $5 billion to schools of higher learning. Then university students who have an office here in Ottawa contacted me and said: "Mr. Whelan, you were wrong". Do you know what they told me, Mr. Speaker? They said that it was $6.4 billion—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson).

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Whelan) stated that he hoped we would give quick passage to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. It must be made clear for the record that our Party has been calling for this since last fall; for months we have been calling for this.

Mr. Mayer: For a year and a half.

Mr. Gustafson: My Leader, the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney), asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether he would bring it in before the Easter recess, but the Government failed to act. The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) sent a letter to the Government House Leader asking for quick passage, but that has not happened. Yet the Hon. Minister is telling us that he wants quick passage. Certainly we will give it quick passage, because farmers need the money this spring.

Also the Minister said that they will pay out $300 million. There is close to $1 billion in that fund. If they were to pay out $300 million, they would not even give back the money farmers have paid in since 1979. Certainly the Minister must be able to make a calculation based upon the fact that farmers have paid in since 1979 $900 per year, except for last year when it was $1,200. That would amount to $4,800 per farmer. If they were to pay interest on the money, it would amount to $7,100 per farmer. Certainly the Minister must make a fair assessment of the needs of farmers in this situation. We on this side of the House have been calling for it for months.

Mr. Whelan: The Hon. Member makes it sound so simple. Under the Act at the present time the calendar year is used.

Mr. Gustafson: Answer my question.

Mr. Whelan: Just a moment, please. The calendar year, because of tremendous volume of sales, et cetera, does not allow for any triggering. This is why the Act has to be amended.

Mr. Mayer: Oh.

Mr. Whelan: That is what the legal advisers told me. A payment cannot be made until the Act has been passed and has received Royal Assent.

We know what the Act will do. There can be a payment and there will be a payment in the next two years, probably, unless market conditions improve. The Hon. Member is suggesting that we should bankrupt the program, and that there is $1 billion in the fund. We pay interest on the money. Even up until today farmers have received every dollar which they put into the two payments. They were ahead of the game for a while, but now they are even. The Hon. Member is trying to get across that we should make the plan unsound. It is an actuarially sound plan, and we have the Western Grain Stabilization Act Advisory Committee comprised of farmers. I met with them in Winnipeg. They are farmers from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. They said that what we are doing is satisfactory, along the lines that they want the Act amended and how they want it to work.

Mr. Gustafson: You are playing politics with farmers' money.

Mr. Whelan: These were the facts they brought forward after meeting with farmers in grain-producing areas of the prairie provinces, including the Peace River district of northern British Columbia.

Let us be factual and put the facts on the record, rather than trying to make out that the plan is not administered properly and that we can just reach into it, like a well, and grab a pailful of money and run away. He knows full well that that will not save a lot of those farmers because their debts are so high. Those are the ones who will not reach the maximum anyhow, the $6,000. The average pay-out according to the figures show that it will be somewhere around $3,000. Bigger farmers who paid in the maximum amount will be getting about $6,000, but they are in the minority. Also he knows that 25 per cent of farmers have not seen fit to join the fund. Many of them are in financial difficulty and they will not receive one penny from that plan.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, what concerns me is the fact that the Minister said that even if the Bill passes, there will be no payment before the fall. I do not know what the representatives on the advisory committee are hearing from farmers. However, we as rural representatives on this side are being told by our farmers that they need the money now, that they cannot wait until the fall, that they have to buy fuel and fertilizer. If they cannot pay for these products, they either cannot get them or have to ask merchants for credit, and the merchants are in trouble.

Has the Minister considered the possibility of bringing in an amendment to the Western Grain Stabilization Act, an emergency section, that provided for an immediate initial payment of $2,500 or $3,000 maximum for farmers of western Canada? That would pass within a matter of minutes in the Senate. I am sure with the electronic equipment of the Western Grain Stabilization Board in the form of computers and so on, they could turn out those cheques in a matter of two or three weeks. Has the Minister considered this?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The time for questions and comments has expired, but the House may want to hear the response of the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Under the circumstances, and since it is not very often that we have an opportunity to question the Minister, would it be possible to obtain unanimous consent of the House to extend the question period for another 10 minutes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course, the Chair is in the hands of the House. I shall put the question. Is there unanimous consent to extend the question and comment period for another 10 minutes?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1210)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the intent of the press conference in Winnipeg during the adjournment of the House was to implant in the minds of people and the lending institutions that we are interested and want to do something so that money can be obtained to buy fertilizer, seed, fuel and so on. I have said in the House that I was under the impression, and the legal people have corrected me, that if the Bill had received first and second reading and gone to committee, the intent was clear and you could probably pay half of the money if you wanted. I was told I would get into trouble with the Auditor General. I would not mind getting into trouble, even with the Auditor General, if we could make a payment. We will do what we can.

We are considering all of the options, including some that the Hon. Member mentioned, even making the Bill retroactive to 1982-83, starting it in a different year so that a payment could be made as soon as possible.

As the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) said, there is money there. It is not like taking it out of some envelope. Everyone knows how much money there is, how it has been contributed and how the interest is being paid. I am as concerned as other Hon. Members about supplying money to those farmers. The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) knows that a good portion of them will need much more than can be supplied under the Western Grain Stabilization Act or under the Farm Credit Corporation. They may need some kind of a system as that suggested by the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer). A large group in his area are asking me to buy or take over their farms, rent them back for three years, and if they become economically viable, they want the option to buy them back. We are considering all of these suggestions. I do not want to be in the land ownership business. Many banks are becoming some of the largest land owners in Canada. Of the money we took from the Farm Credit Corporation last year, approximately 60 per cent went to the banks to refinance farmers, consolidate their mortgages and that type of thing. I have the same concern as the Hon. Member from Moose Jaw about trying to get money into the hands of farmers as quickly as possible.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, the Minister talks about putting facts on the record. There are a couple of facts that should be put on the record. First, he is part of a Government that paid literally hundreds of thousands of dollars in bonuses to an aircraft company that cannot manage its affairs, one which has lost hundreds of millions of dollars. Second, he is not willing to pay out money that producers have contributed. He should know that in many ways money is like another barnyard commodity. When you pile it up, it causes a big smell; but if you spread it around, it does some good. What we want to do with the Western Grain Stabilization Act is spread some of that money around.

The Minister quoted a Reverend Mooney and said that farmers should be on their knees. Surely the Minister of Agriculture for this country is not advocating that farmers should be put on their knees and have to come grovelling to the Government for programs. If that is his attitude, he is a total embarrassment to the Canadian farming population and should resign. I would like the Minister to clarify what he meant by putting farmers on their knees. That was a disgraceful statement to make.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I quoted from the London Free Press relating to a priest I know. He meant they should be praying for better weather, crops and so on. The London Free Press is a well-known paper. I quoted verbatim from it. I am not suggesting anything like that to Hon. Members.

When I suggested anything previously, I did not receive any support from the Opposition. When I suggested in 1977 Government approval of 100 per cent of income assurance for farmers, they said: "There's Whelan interfering now". Now they want me to rush in and spend billions of dollars. If we had done what I suggested in 1977, there would not be the hardship there is today for the farmers. I do not pretend to be any Messiah, but a blind economist on a galloping horse could see what was going to happen to some farmers if world prices collapsed, as they did. We did not know for sure that they would. The farmers had no protection against that. Prices were on an ever-increasing spiral. When there was a change as a result of inflation, they went down. That happened to many of them.

The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette is the official agriculture critic for his Party. He has not told me how bad or good his own farm operation is. I am told that he is a good farmer. I take it he is not in financial difficulty. He knows that what he did in his own operation is probably slightly different from what some of the other farmers did, those I quoted from the London Free Press, who wanted to expand under encouragement from government. He will find very little encouragement from this Minister for that kind of expansion. I am a strong believer in the family farm being protected and staying alive. The Palliser growers and some others are talking about getting bigger and bigger, doing more farming and becoming more efficient.

The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) quoted the Catholic Bishops. He knows that it is not so much the little farmers who are suffering. The priests talked about those who expanded rapidly and got caught in the spiralling inflation. Then the economic depression took over.

The Bill I was referring to was Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. It received first reading on March 8. They have not passed that. They are so concerned about that. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) brought that Bill into the House of Commons on March 8. They say they do not know anything about it. Why are they not pressing for that Bill if they are so concerned about farmers? Why not get on with that Bill and pass it in ten minutes?

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister should make it clear to the farmers of western Canada that the advance payments grain Bill was given first reading and the Opposition indicated it would give fast approval to the Bill. However, this Government and its House Leader have not brought that Bill forward in the House. If he brings it in tomorrow, we will pass it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In the opinion of the Chair, that is not a point of order. It may be a point of clarification or a contribution to the debate.

Mr. Mayer: It's a good point nevertheless.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a couple of points. First, does the Government not feel any responsibility to those who are good farmers and are in trouble for a variety of reasons, one of them being the policies of this Government? Second, in 1974-75 when the original Bill was passed, the Opposition put before the Government at that time a recommendation that the net income be part of the Bill. If the Government would have had the common sense to accept it at that time, we would not have the problem of now having to change the Act.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is certainly correct with regard to some of the suggestions they put forward. All the advice we received from those who did the studies on grain marketing, production and the cost of production, never estimated that that many tonnes would be sold. They never estimated that world prices would go down as much as they did. Members opposite keep talking about Government action. If other governments had acted as this Government did and previous governments did dating back to 1935, and had a grain marketing system like the Canadian Wheat Board and fed the world market in an orderly fashion, instead of selling it in distress fashion to get as much money as they could, there would not be such problems.

It is the grain dealers who make the money. They care very little about what the farmers receive. In the big country south of us, the multinationals control the grain sales. The Hon. Member knows that. They are bigger than the government. Three times since I have been Minister of Agriculture their Secretaries of Agriculture had to interfere in that free marketing system because of what was happening to it. Last year they interfered with a payment in kind. It cost between $15 and $20 billion to short the market. That is what they hoped to do. With the help of God, they shorted it away more than they intended to do. They did not even have a payment in kind program for oilseeds and it was shorted by 40 some per cent. Corn was shorted by 54 per cent. All they wanted was a 22 per cent short. They spent billions of dollars on that kind of program that did not do what they wanted it to do.

• (1220)

The Hon. Member mentioned the suggestion of his Party. Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt about that but when I suggested a 100 per cent income assurance program in his province in 1977 at a provincial and federal Ministers of Agriculture meeting in Yorkton, Saskatchewan, I did not receive the support of any provincial government. I did not receive the support of farm organizations or the Official Opposition. I was not told that I was doing a great thing and should forge ahead with it. If that proposal had been given unanimous consent, we would not be discussing this matter here today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now resume debate.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the questions that still must be answered and the clarification that still must be made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), I wonder if I could seek the unanimous consent of the House to have a further ten-minute question and answer period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House grant unanimous consent to prolong the question, comment and answer period?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed. Could the Chair have an indication of how long this period would continue, please?

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, that depends upon what kind of answers the Minister of Agriculture gives. Further to that, it depends upon his honesty. I would not say that he has been—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is now engaging in debate, I am afraid. I take it for granted then that the question and comment period will be extended another ten minutes. I would hope that the questions and especially the replies would be brief and to the point, in keeping with the spirit of this question period.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by saying that I resent very much the implication made by the Minister that all those farmers who are in financial difficulties today are either bad farmers or poor managers. That, Mr. Speaker, is simply not true. I believe the Minister could only allege that if in fact he is completely out of touch with western Canadian farmers.

The Minister was in Saskatoon last week. However, I suspect that he met with the urban community and not the agricultural community. Every day of the last few weeks I have been in contact with farmers who are going bankrupt and quitting farming either voluntarily or otherwise. To suggest that they are all responsible for their own difficulties because of their own management failures is certainly to insult those farmers. Second, it seems to me that that suggestion indicates that the Minister is ignorant of economic conditions. Does the Minister really believe that all those farmers in western Canada who are in economic difficulty are either bad farmers or poor managers?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the record will show that the Hon. Member has made a slight misinterpretation of what I said. I said that a lot of farmers were good producers but because of the collapse of the world markets at $40 a tonne and because farmers had over-expanded and were living on inflation, when inflation went down they went down with it as well.

I am sure that if the Hon. Member would like to check my records, he would find that some farmers were bad managers. However, please do not put all farmers in the same category. A great many of them are efficient producers and are doing the very best they can. However, the markets for some of those products that they are producing like pork and beef are sick markets. These farmers have been led by the head of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association who has told them time and time again not to let Whelan put in a marketing board because it will destroy them.

Please do not tell me that I do not know anything about what farmers are saying because I probably attend more farm meetings all over Canada than any other politician in Canada. At one of those meetings, a farmer stood up and said: "Mr. Minister, in this democratic country it is my democratic right to go bankrupt if I want to go bankrupt by producing beef". In two years he did go bankrupt because he would not follow the lead of other farmers who have organized themselves into marketing boards and have some say in the marketplace. Those farmers have some say in what they get for the product rather than letting some cigar smoking broker tell them what they must receive for beef or pork. That kind of thing is as ancient a marketing system as any other marketing system in the world.

That farmer to which I referred should have taken a look at the other farmers who are using a marketing board system. There are such systems in every province of Canada and some of them are very strong. I myself only deal with three or four of them but there are over 100 marketing boards in Canada run by provincial governments. The producers who belong to those marketing systems, as I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker, do not find themselves in financial difficulty because they have some say in the market price.

There are a great many good, hardworking farmers who are using the best feeding programs but are still in trouble. A neighbour of mine held the record for the best transfer of feed into beef of any young farmer in Ontario. He got into serious difficulty and owed $1 million because the market did not return his input costs to him. He over-expanded at the same time. With some help, he is now making a recovery.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, in his speech I believe the Minister of Agriculture made a veiled suggestion that the federal Government might become involved in the land banking system. Was this intentional or was it a slip of the tongue? Is the federal Government contemplating entering into that kind of a program?

Mr. Whelan: I said very clearly that we did not want to enter into that program but that a great many producers are suggesting that we take over their farms. These suggestions have come particularly from a write-in program of farmers who live in an area of the Province of Manitoba which encompasses parts of two constituencies. I could show the Hon. Member the letters written by these farmers. These letters outline how much money the farmers owe and indicate that the farmers will not plant a crop this year because there has been bad weather in that area for two out of three years and because there have been depressed prices. Some of those farmers have indicated that they did not even take out crop insurance this year because they felt they could not afford it. It was too big a risk and they were gambling on the weather being on their side and on having a good crop.

I do not wish to enter into the land banking business but I could tell the Hon. Member that there are a lot of banks entering into this business and the banks will be the biggest land owners in Canada. During my remarks I mentioned that out of the approximately 320,000 farmers in Canada, we have loaned money to only 79,000 farmers. There are 225,000 farmers who have borrowed money from sources other than the Farm Credit Corporation.

One banker told me that the banks do not want to foreclose on farms because they do not want to own that much land. He said that the banks knew the farmers were not going to be able to pay that money back but the banks lent them that money. Under the Bank of Canada Act, the banks have a responsibility, when lending money to farmers, to lend no more money than the farmers can pay back. However, a great many banks have done that and they realize that they made a mistake.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave).

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to have the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) answer my question now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister has had opportunity to do so. The Chair sees other Members rising. I would like to accommodate them as well. I recognize the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) made his remarks, he made a rather brief but nevertheless firm statement about the two-way trade in agricultural products between the European Economic Community and Canada. He did not go into detail on this matter but I would like to ask him if he would respond now to questions that he has received on this matter.

I would particularly remind the Minister of the fairly recent and quite dramatic increase in imports of beef and other meats such as pork from such countries as the Republic of Ireland, Denmark and even Holland. The Minister is aware that these meats arrive in Canada with very significant subsidies which are paid by the governments of the exporting countries. Some of these subsidies are as high as 50 cents a pound in Canadian currency. Will the Minister recognize what is happening and respond to the sensible suggestion of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association that a countervailing duty of the same amount be applied immediately to take this situation in hand?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to say to the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) that I do not intend to get into the land banking business.

I wish to say to the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) that I am as concerned as he is about the beef and other meat products that are arriving in Canada heavily subsidized by the European Community. However, I am more concerned about those who are bringing the products in. Meat packers in Canada are bringing that meat in because they can make money on it. This is being done by good corporate citizens of Canada. That meat is not swimming across the ocean by itself. Those people are bringing it here.

• (1230)

Another startling thing I discovered on an Air Canada flight—the people's airline—is this. After eating a meat bun, I was informed that it was a new promotional program between Canada and West Germany. They said: "The meat you just ate was from West Germany". I said: "What in hell is going on now"? I was informed that Air Canada was trying to entice Canadians to go to Frankfurt; that it was a new promotional program and they wanted Canadians to realize what kind of meat they would eat when they got there. I have made representations to Air Canada about this matter, because I think it is terrible. I believe we have a countervailing duty already enforced on meat products. Revenue Canada held an investigation, has enough evidence, and if it has not done so already, it will shortly impose it.

Mr. Hargrave: Have you made that announcement?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There is one minute left in the extended question period. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister two quick questions. First, why is the Hon. Minister misleading the country when he indicates that the Opposition is holding up Bill C-23, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act? He knows as well as the rest of the House does that the Government calls these Bills, not the Opposition. We are ready to pass it, so bring it in instead of spending so much time on corporations and lowering the morals of the country.

Second, why is the Minister working for the banks instead of the farmers? He says: "Let the farmers borrow money for their spring work". Does he not know that most farmers have already borrowed to the hilt, as far as the banks will go? They will not accept the promises of this Government to make a pay-out under the Western Grain Stabilization Act and use that as collateral. The promises of the Government mean nothing. Why not work for the farmers for a change and forget the banks? The banks are doing all right by themselves.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Unless the House is disposed to prolong the question and comment period—

Some Hon. Members: Let him answer the question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —we should now proceed to debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to a very interesting discussion between Members of the Official Opposition and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I would now like to take this opportunity to speak to the motion before the House today, a motion that very accurately reflects the recommendations my party has been making to the Government, especially in the past two years. We are stressing the importance of making a substantial payment from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund to assist with seeding costs; the need for repealing all sales taxes to help farmers; and the need for an immediate interest rate reduction on Farm Credit Corporation loans. These are some very pertinent recommendations the Progressive Conservative Party has been making and has been urging the Government, whose insensitivity is almost obscene, to implement.

Mr. Speaker, before going any further with my comments I would like to remind the House that I knew the Minister of Agriculture when he was a member of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I remember very clearly how he insisted on the importance of long term agricultural policies and how at every meeting, he would emphasize the need for security and stability in the agricultural industry. I must say that, as Minister of Agriculture, he has not succeeded in practicing what he preached as a member of the committee. Maybe it was easier at the time for him to say what he wanted and what he wanted his Government to do, but as Minister, he has not succeeded in giving this vital sector of our economy the stability and security he was seeking at the time. Of course, the Minister never misses an opportunity to point out what he has accomplished. Mr. Speaker, I admit there are sectors that are doing fairly well, and I am thinking of dairy farmers. It is a fact that there has been a very substantial improvement, and my comments in this respect must be positive. Where the agricultural industry as a whole has a turnover of $50 billion, the dairy sector's share is $18 billion. As I said, agriculture generates a turnover of $50 billion, and affects about one-fifth of the labour force. Considering that agriculture is a very special industry, as the Minister is no doubt aware, I would have expected him to explain how the agricultural industry differs from industry in general. If we agree, Mr. Speaker, that we have to eat in order to live, and not the other way around, we must be consistent when dealing with an industry like agriculture. We must explain with all due honesty, to all Canadians and Canadian business people, that the agricultural industry pursues that objective and that its needs are so special that we cannot make an economic assessment of agriculture as we would of any other industry. We must ensure the survival of agriculture and we must continue to promote agriculture, for the well-being of our fellow citizens. And if we are consistent, if we believe in this principle, we must propose and introduce legislation that is finely tuned to the needs of an industry that is vitally important to our economic development and to the Canadian economy. Mr. Speaker, if we hold the principle that we must eat to survive, we must make it clear to all other sectors in this country that a government with any sense of responsibility, with any respect for its citizens and for this very basic need, has a duty to propose solutions—should, in fact, feel entirely justified in doing so—that may seem to discriminate in favour of this particular sector. However, let us remind these other sectors that before they can do anything else, they first must be able to eat.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I have raised this very important issue, namely, that in the agricultural industry, we will have to do some very special things that will be criticised by other sectors. Today, I would have liked to hear the Minister talk about this principle and the special measures that must be and that should have been taken in the agricultural sector. When the Government is criticized for not doing enough and for not providing safeguards, very often the Minister is quite content, in fact he is more than content, Mr. Speaker, which I find a little offensive, to point out that he has done more than some of the provinces. As though the federal Government and provinces should be competing instead of working together towards a common goal which would be, first, to feed Canadians and then to allow thousands of farmers to sell their products outside Canada. Are we doing this? No, the Department of Agriculture is being managed as though it were any other department. However, it has a very special mission, one that is very relevant to our responsibilities as Members of this House. Mr. Speaker, the Minister is going to say once again that he has spent millions and millions and millions of dollars which, in some cases were wasted through lack of planning. That is what we have against the Department of Agriculture and this Government, Mr. Speaker.

We would like to see an agricultural policy based on the principle that we must feed Canadians, and that we must do so without political interference. Ensuring that Canadians have access to high quality food is certainly a praiseworthy goal which we should be defending here in the House, and if that is true and if all Members of this House shared this view, Hon. Members would have no trouble rising above partisan considerations and establishing long term policies, instead of merely seeking payments just before an election. Mr. Speaker, I think the time has come to ask the Government, and I may point out that what I am saying in the House today arises from profound convictions and a very special concern that I have, first of all, for the farmers in my constituency and also for farmers in the West, the East and Ontario. We have to make sure that our agricultural policy is impartial. That is important. Bearing in mind the principles we are called upon to uphold in this House and our own responsibilities, we should be able to meet as often as necessary with the provinces, the agricultural sector and the farming communities involved so as to establish a truly long-term agricultural policy which puts the emphasis on both stability and profitability. Such is the role and responsibility of a Minister of Agriculture and a Government whose primary concern should be to see to it that people have enough to eat. By the same token, we Canadians as a country might be still more generous than we have been so far with respect to the Third World and other nations where people are actually starving to death.

Our agricultural capacity is potentially unlimited and our climate enables us to initiate rather extraordinary endeavours. The technology is there, Mr. Speaker, but financing does seem to be a problem. Because he was unable to come up with adequate policies in hard times, the Minister must be held responsible for his failure to look far enough into the future to realize that our economic situation might worsen, as numerous precedents have shown. Precisely because it was unable to see what the future had in store for us, we are quite justified in censuring the Government for such unforgiveable oversights which have put thousands of farmers in a precarious situation, even though the Government is not doing anything to help them out of their predicament. Why did this Government in particular wait until it was confronted with urgent problems, instead of making concerted efforts with the provinces and the people directly concerned in an attempt to face up to the situation and find policies designed to restore stability? Nothing has been done. The Government chose to take a band-aid approach every time a group of farmers or agricultural communities from Eastern or Western Canada sought assistance. As a result of such undependable policies, thousands of farmers have been forced right out of the agricultural sector in the past few years.

Mr. Speaker, I too represent a province where agriculture is a significant economic component. But again I must say that if we fail to keep in mind the basic principle that a Government must first make sure that the people have enough food on the table, all our arguments rest on meaningless premises, we are going the wrong way and we are not facing up to our responsibilities. I would go even further, Mr. Speaker, and suggest that all Members should realize that the agricultural context has changed so much that it is no longer possible to run farming operations the way it was done before. We are all aware of that and we know that family farms are not passed on from fathers to sons, but that they can be sold and bought. We know how much money is involved and we realize that young farmers today must carry enormous debts. We all know that, Mr. Speaker, yet nothing has been done to find a solution. We readily lend money to a farmer, but we are not quite so eager to sit down with him and help him get through hard times when he is experiencing difficulties with his operations. We are aware of that. Perhaps $15,000 or $20,000 would do nicely 25, 30 or 40 years ago, but these days we are talking in terms of $300,000 and $400,000.

The son of a farmer who owned his land can go into debt because the possibilities are there. There are tools, farm credit is available, so he can apply for a loan. The problem is that he cannot make ends meet as a result of past and current interest rates. The farmer cannot meet his financial obligations and at the same time run a profitable operation to ensure his future on the farm. We are aware of that, but we have yet to take appropriate action. We shall have to consider developing policies to help the young farmer who wants to buy a $300,000 farm, because the Minister knows as well as I do that, with today's interest rates, and I am not saying that he is responsible for them, we cannot meet this need for continuity in family farms and the farming industry. We know about this and we have to be ready in the near future to examine with complete objectivity how and through which policies we can prepare and guarantee this takeover of the industry by younger farmers. As I said earlier, we have a basic responsibility to ensure the survival of the farming industry and this cannot be achieved without stability and security. Therefore, we must think it over seriously and develop policies designed to give the young farmers who are only too willing to continue in agriculture the financial means to purchase their parents' farms and this does not mean what it did 35, 40 or 50 years ago. It seems to me that this Government has yet to understand this situation which is still quite new but which now exists and will continue to exist.

In the circumstances, we clearly cannot be satisfied with a Minister of Agriculture telling us what he has done, the efforts he has made and the millions he has spent, wasted or handed out. Of course, the Government has done certain things, but it was always to solve a problem which was already something of the past, when the harm had already been done. This is a piecemeal approach, Mr. Speaker, and not a long term policy. I therefore urge the Minister of Agriculture today to think seriously of the co-operation which he should promote instead of fanning competition with the Provinces as is now the case. What I want to hear, Mr. Speaker, is not that the Minister has given more to the Quebec Government or that Mr. Garon should have invested in Quebec's agricultural industry. What I want to hear is that the Federal Minister is willing to discuss, negotiate and find a solution about marketing boards, for instance, especially as concerns the joint pork plan. What I want to hear, Mr. Speaker, is that something has been done to compensate for the weather problem last summer in the Province of Quebec, and probably elsewhere. In any case, I have received representations telling me that the farmers lost millions of dollars. This was not easy to accept in view of the increase in interest rates, but the farmers have pulled through. A request has also been made to the Quebec Government, and it seems that the Federal Government is waiting to see how Quebec will respond. I urge the Minister of Agriculture on behalf of thousands of Quebec producers to call a meeting if need be. If there is any lack of good faith on the part of his Quebec counterpart, I urge the Minister of Agriculture to organize the meeting by himself in the interests of the farmers. It does not matter to me whether the Federal Minister of Agriculture likes or dislikes his counterpart in Quebec, Saskatchewan or any other Province. What is important is that the Federal Minister of Agriculture should know that he has a duty to the farmers and the Canadian population to ensure the survival of our agriculture. Mr. Speaker, that is why I would like to see policies based on an objective approach that would rise above partisan considerations which certainly do not have their place in an area as vital as the future and survival of agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, that is what I had to say, and I did not want to spend my time criticizing the Minister of Agriculture but rather, I want to ask him to start concentrating now on the survival of the agricultural industry and the policies that will ensure its continuation, policies that should be developed in co-operation with all sectors concerned and with the provinces. Mr. Speaker, I appeal today to the Minister of Agriculture, in the spirit of true federalism, and I would do so to any Minister of Agriculture, to bear in mind the concerns of our farmers. Many other sectors are equally concerned about economic policies that have failed to achieve the results promised by this Government and anxiously awaited by all Canadians. Once again, the Minister must realize that agriculture is a vital industry, that it is not like any other industry in this country, and that there is one objective, one goal we must all strive for, which is to give Canadians access to quality food at a reasonable price.

We must be prepared to act responsibly and realize that this industry is very special and requires special measures which we have a duty to take and are expected to take by the Canadian people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to ask the Hon. Member if he is aware of what is going on. It sounds as if we treat provinces differently. Quebec does not receive treatment different from any other province. It has refused to sign the agreement on crop insurance. Every other province has agreed to it.

Does he also not realize that almost 50 per cent of the farm income in Quebec is from the dairy industry? Does he not realize that the industry really started to become healthy from November, 1972? Does he also not realize that on the matter of frozen apple trees the federal Government moved in, not only in Quebec but in Ontario, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, because they had a variety of trees which were uninsurable, and it cost us over a period of two years about $56 million?

He intimates there is confrontation. Quebec producers have made representations to me about crop losses. Under the agreement we have with all the provinces, if the province feels the loss is too big for them, then they make representations to the federal Government. I have not received that kind of representation from the Province of Quebec. They have said they will participate in the plan but they have not made that kind of official representation to the federal Government. I take it for granted that it is the provincial government which refused to do that because the last time I met with the provincial minister in Ottawa we talked about a stabilization program for pork and he seemed to be very agreeable at that time. I do not know what his position is at present. I know, Mr. Speaker, that you are very much aware of the fact that we do not have a potato marketing agency for eastern Canada because Quebec, not the producers but the province, has refused to go ahead with that. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that I take over total authority for agriculture? I do not know for sure but under the Constitution I probably could.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, first of all to answer the Minister's question I would like to point out that I did not accuse the Minister of any lack of co-operation or objectivity in his dealings which the Government of the Province of Quebec. I did not accuse the Minister of being less than honest with the Government of Quebec. I merely said, Mr. Speaker, that assuming that at some time, certain provincial ministers . . . I remember hearing about losses incurred as a result of weather conditions last summer. When the Minister of Agriculture is prepared to make a recommendation, I will also be prepared to consider it. Obviously, it is always the same old story: Is it the province or the federal Government? I am simply asking the Minister, in view of his responsibilities, to make his position clear. While the Minister cannot be blamed if a provincial minister turns down a generous offer or ignores a positive response from the federal Government, on the other hand, we ought to know exactly what the federal Minister is prepared to do about a given request, depending on the situation. In any case, I suggest, and this is not meant as criticism, I suggest and I recommend increased co-operation for the purpose of establishing a national agricultural policy, corresponding to the needs of all sectors and all regions.

I feel the principle of decentralization with respect to farm products and agricultural sectors should be seen within the context of a broad national policy. I would especially urge the Minister to show even greater willingness to co-operate and to consult with the sectors concerned.

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member not realize that I am probably the most approachable and co-operative Minister of Agriculture on the Federal and provincial scene?

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that the Minister does not know how to co-operate, but when I see how important the agricultural sector is and when I see the need for setting up agricultural policies that should rise above partisan consideration, and I assume the Minister agrees with me, I want to ask the Minister to set up agricultural policies that are not subject to political pressures and especially not introduced the day before an election.

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, has the Hon. Member not studied the agri-food strategy which developed after 180-odd meetings across Canada? In my view and that of many other people, this is the most advanced 20-year agricultural program of any country in the world.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said before, and I do so willingly, because I think it cannot be said often enough. What is important in Parliament, as the Minister is aware, is that we can use a motion to demand immediate proposals. We regret the delay with respect to measures that must be taken to cope with the problems facing farmers today. I also urge the Minister, speaking on behalf of millions of farmers, to show greater willingness to consult and hold meetings with the sectors concerned in order to develop policies that will provide security for farmers, which is what we are seeking, and especially stability and the assurance that their farms will survive, which is far from certain today, considering the economic situation. That is all we want.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being no further questions, the House will now proceed to debate. The Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky).

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, could we perhaps call it one o'clock and I could begin my comments as soon as the House resumes debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree?

ABORTION

PLEA ON BEHALF OF UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, every Hon. Member of the House, along with thoudands of Canadians, has grieved with the parents of the babies murdered in the Toronto Children's Hospital, as the stories on the Grange Commission's inquiry appeared in front page news throughout Canada. How could anyone kill such innocent and helpless babies?

Yet every week across this nation, not only in Toronto but in every major city in the country, helpless unborn babies are being aborted, and the daily press scarcely mentions these murders. More space is given to the hue and cry when baby seals are killed than when these helpless human beings are denied life. It is ironic that there is so much interest in trying to find the person responsible for the terrible deaths in Toronto, while at the same time many in our society condone or say nothing about respected doctors and hospitals in their own communities removing unborn children, human beings, from the wombs of their mothers.

When are the Government and the House of Commons going to show concern for unborn babies equal to that which they show when a born baby is killed? Neither should be accepted, and yet taxpayers' money is now being used to encourage abortion, not to save the life of the mother or of the child, but as a birth control measure. These innocent and helpless babies, born and unborn, are created by an omnipotent God. How long is Government going to condemn one and condone the other?

AGRICULTURE

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT'S LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, CP is showing substantial profits, especially on its railroading—no pun intended. In fact, The Globe and Mail reports this morning that CP is "heading for a speedy recovery". Western farmers should also be aware that at a time when they are experiencing record financial problems the CPR is making good profits, and that John Turner has just been re-appointed to its board of directors.

That is typical of the Government, Mr. Speaker, because it has a miserable record as far as Canadian agriculture is concerned. In fact there is only one bill on the Order Paper in this session pertaining to agriculture. That is Bill C-23, a Bill to increase cash advances on prairie grain. This morning in the House the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) berated the Opposition for holding up this Bill. In fact, the opposite is true. We on this side have supported the Minister and promised quick passage of the Bill, but even our support does not appear to be enough for the Minister, because the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) has not even called the Bill for second reading yet.

The same is true for two other measures the Government is apparently proposing; a red meat stabilization plan, and amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. The Government has asked us for support, but surely we cannot be expected to support phantom Bills. We must see the Bills before we can support them. the only thing that has been passed in this session pertaining to Canadian agriculture has come from this side. The Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) had a motion passed referring the Agri-bond concept to the finance committee. The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) also had a motion passed asking for a reduction in federal taxes on fuels used in farming and fishing.

We on this side are serious about assisting producers of food. The Government, unfortunately, is only interested in putting the blame on someone else for its own inadequacies.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND—SIZE OF MANAGEMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on de Havilland in Toronto and the latest leaked report about the difficulties of that Crown corporation. I put a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) some time ago, and he turned it back on me saying that it was a question of either jobs or cash—we had to give the cash to keep the jobs and, if we did not give the cash we would not get the jobs. Well, we have given the cash, and now we are going to have cutbacks in the jobs. That is an untenable situation.

I checked with the people on the shop floor of de Havilland this morning. I found that de Havilland has top heavy management. For example, in 1981 there were 3,500 employees on the shop floor and 1,900 management employees. In 1984 there are 1,300 floor employees and 1,400 management employees. I found out that there is a slush fund for management retirees, and nothing for the workers except further lay-offs.

On behalf of the NDP I would like to suggest four things. One, we must support this industry. I remember, from my childhood in Etobicoke, the difficulties AV Roe had when the Avro-Arrow was cancelled. We must support our aeronautics industry. Second, we must support export credits, as other countries are doing that. Third, we must have some new initiatives. We must update. We should be flying to Ottawa in Dash-8s rather than DC-9s, for short hauls. Fourth, we must have accountability. We must have a corporate plan ratified by Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEDUCTIONS FOR GRATUITY INCOME EARNERS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, for the third time I rise in the House to deal with the injustice which is being perpetrated on gratuity income earners throughout Canada and which the Minister responsible at the federal level has not deemed advisable to rectify by making it possible for them to get benefits consistent with their global incomes. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, you will realize why, on behalf of the 60,000 gratuity income earners in Quebec alone, I must beseech and beg the government to introduce the necessary amendment as soon as possible, so that these workers who must bear the brunt of these hard times may be eligible to unemployment insurance benefits consistent with their incomes.

Mr. Speaker, I dare hope, that the six dozens of Hon. Members from Quebec who certainly realize the importance of my motion, will not hesitate to twist the arm of the Minister responsible to settle this matter before it is too late.

The reason I had to rise in the House today to deal again with this issue is that so far I have received no reply from my hon. friends opposite.

THE MONARCHY

SCHEDULED VISIT OF HER MAJESTY—OPPOSITION TO POSSIBLE CANCELLATION

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, 1984 marks the date for two significant anniversaries in the life of our nation. The visit to Canada of our country's head of state, Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, is a fitting tribute to celebrate 200 years as a province in New Brunswick, and the bicentennial of the arrival of the United Empire Loyalists in Ontario.

• (1410)

As Head of State, Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth is an important part of our Canadian heritage.

The Queen's visit will promote enthusiasm and interest in those areas where she will be present, and will provide local tourism with a much needed stimulus, particularly as unemployment remains a problem in Canada.

A decision to cancel the visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II for a summer election would be viewed by Canadians with considerable regret. The suggestion in today's edition of The Citizen by a Liberal source, which reads: "Those who would be really upset by the cancellation of the Royal visit don't vote for us anyway", should read: "All Canadians regardless of political stripe won't vote Liberal if a cancellation occurs for partisan political reasons."

S.O. 21

As our national Head of State, the Queen is above partisan politics. I invite government Members to consider the seriousness of this irresponsible newspaper quote before any hasty decision is made to cancel the Queen's visit for any reason.

RAILWAYS

GRAIN FREIGHT RATES—IMPACT ON FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Prairie farmers are now getting the opportunity to see first hand the effects of the new Crow rate regime at their local elevator. Freight charges are to go up a whopping $1.90 a tonne, or an increase of 35 per cent on August 1 this year on average, with increases of up to 45 per cent for farmers in Manitoba. This comes at a time when farm bankruptcies have gone up by 78 per cent on the Prairies over the same period last year and grain prices are falling.

Farmers were worried about the cap on federal contributions, and we in the New Democratic Party tried to have this cap removed. Now, because farmers have moved a larger volume of grain in an attempt to pay their bills, they are being penalized with an average increase of 35 per cent in their freight rate even though actual costs for the railroad have risen only 4 per cent in the same period.

Government advertisements last year said rates would increase "gradually from the current 13 cents per bushel to about 25 cents in four years". Actually on average farmers have had to pay an extra 1.5 cents per bushel from January 1, 1984, and now with an additional 5 cents per bushel on August 1, 1984 this amounts to an increase of 6.5 cents per bushel in just seven months. So much for government promises compared with government actions.

PARLIAMENT

BELL RINGING IN LEGISLATURES

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, approximately two years ago the bells rang in this House continuously for almost two weeks. The work of the House stalled, the Official Opposition went on strike, with cause. I was concerned. I wrote to then Speaker Madame Sauvé on March 9, 1982, and I said:

> Without firm and direct action by the Speaker to resolve this question, a dangerous precedent will be established for the future—one that will allow Opposition Parties to abruptly halt the work of Parliament at will and for indefinite periods of time.

Yes, the precedent set by this Parliament has spread. The ringing of the bells was used in the Manitoba Legislature, resulting in adjournment of its session. Then it was used in Saskatchewan by the Official Opposition. It will spread to other legislatures. In the Alberta Legislature, the Official Opposition consists of two NDP Members. Are they to be permitted to shut down the Alberta Legislature at will by a bell-ring episode?

The Canadian people are just beginning to realize the enormity and the consequences of the use of this unusual procedure to halt the nation's business. I believe that a constitutional amendment is necessary to place bounds on this growing cancer. To stimulate discussion on the matter, it is my intention to bring forth a Private Member's Bill incorporating a constitutional amendment to limit and place bounds on this growing disruptive parliamentary practice.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA RATE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, and of the Minister of Finance on the day the Bank of Canada rate comes out, it is difficult to know to whom to address a question. I will ask the Acting Prime Minister, if there is one. There are seven of them out in the country acting now as though they would like to be Prime Minister.

The Bank of Canada rate has just gone up again to 11.13 per cent, a considerable increase, which means that bank prime interest rates and all interest rates will be going up. Interest rates have gone up over 2 per cent on 365-day bills since the Budget was brought down. The Canadian dollar has decreased in value something like 3 cents since the Budget was brought down. Our gross domestic product is going down and not up, and the country is in a desperate economic shape. Will the Government now bring in new policies or a new Budget, or take some action that will start to reverse these horrendous economic developments since the Budget of February 15?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite is being his usual exaggerated self when he speaks of the economy being in—what was his word—horrendous shape. Of course the economy is not in horrendous shape. The economy is in very good shape, and it is getting better all the time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLaren: If the Member opposite had any ability to understand economic facts he would know perfectly well that the growth in the economy is proceeding at a stable and effective rate. We are seeing improvements in the manufacturing industry. Interest rates and unemployment are not increasing at any level which should cause real hardship or real concern today.

When the Hon. Member opposite speaks of the impact of interest rates in the economy, he should realize that the increases have been of a minimal nature. They are not of a substantial character. They arise in part, as he knows perfectly well, from interest rate increases in the United States. Over the longer run the circumstances of the Canadian economy will ensure that those interest rate increases are not of a massive nature.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the Minister of Finance has come into the House. I want to ask him about interest rates. As he no doubt knows, the Bank of Canada rate has just gone up to 11.13 per cent. The Minister of Finance heard the halting and unintelligible answer of the Minister of State for Finance when I asked him my question.

The Minister of Finance said on March 22, 1984:

> Our policy is to keep interest rates as low as we can sensibly keep them in this country and still have an economy which will grow.

In view of the fact that interest rates are now going up again and the economy is not growing, will the Minister take action to reverse this state of affairs? Will he admit that his February 15 Budget was of no assistance, and will he now take other actions and bring in other measures before this House to try to reverse the terrible position in which we now find ourselves?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first I heard not an unintelligible but a very intelligent answer from the Minister of State for Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: We didn't.

Mr. Lalonde: If it was unintelligible, the problem is with the Hon. Member who asked the question, not with the person who gave the answer.

As far as interest rates are concerned, indeed the bank rate went up today by 0.29 per cent of a point. That follows a situation where we have upward pressure in the United States, as the Hon. Member knows, but even at the present moment the prime rate at the banks, which is the rate that affects people most, is still half a point below that in the United States. My hon. friend knows that.

As far as the economy not growing is concerned, my friend is wrong again. The Canadian economy is growing, and it is growing at a rate that compares favourably with most other industrial economies at the present time.

As far as the request which the Hon. Member has put forward is concerned, I have indicated that the Budget of February 15 contained a number of measures, and some of them are already before the House. I hope they will get quick and early consideration by the House. I was disappointed to see that some measures that would have helped business, in spite of an agreement with some spokesmen for the Conservative Party, have not received the early consideration that we were promised. I hope we will be receiving quick and early consideration of those measures because they will be beneficial to the taxpayers of this country.

● (1420)

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister's policies have had a singular lack of success. In the United States there is growth of over 8 per cent this quarter, whereas in Canada we are having a decline, not growth.

The Minister said in the House on March 26 that he was monitoring the situation carefully. Everything that has happened since March 26 has been bad. He went on to say:

> If need be, we will make the necessary adjustments. In the meantime I see no reason to change the basic policy that we have been following.

Since then the unemployment rate is up again, and over 1.5 million Canadians are out of work, interest rates are up, and the dollar is down. When will the Minister show some concern? When will he listen to Canadians and take some steps to try to relieve the situation in which we find ourselves? The answers he has given in the House are unsupportable, unsavory, and unsatisfactory. When will he take some steps to adjust the situation in accordance with these facts which today show that interest rates will go up again?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was ready to welcome the Hon. Member back to the House because he has been away for quite some time, but I did not know that he had been outside the country as well. Indeed, he will be happy to hear that, contrary to what he said, the Canadian economy in the first quarter did not decline. It has increased. It may not have increased as much as the Hon. Member would have preferred, but it has increased.

Mr. Crosbie: What did it do in February?

Mr. Lalonde: What he says is completely wrong and false, and the rest of his question follows on that false premise.

FEDERAL DEFICIT—STATEMENT BY LIBERAL LEADERSHIP CANDIDATE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. One of his colleagues and Liberal leadership candidate, John Turner, is promising to cut the federal deficit in half, or by $15 billion, by streamlining social programs, running a more efficient bureaucracy, and by other measures. When he was Minister of Finance, Mr. Turner doubled government spending and he expanded, tripled, and indexed many of these same social programs. If the Minister's former colleague feels that $15 billion could be cut from the Budget, does the Minister agree that this can be done? If so, why is he not doing it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see that the Conservative Opposition

Members are worried about the dynamic and very challenging proposals made by the various candidates for the leadership of the Liberal Party, which will hold its convention in mid-June. I should think that my colleague might perhaps be better advised to ask the candidates what means they intend to propose to achieve that objective. The Hon. Member knows that, in my budget, I said that we had to steer towards a progressive and systematic decrease in the deficit. That was my proposal. If the race for the leadership of my Party provides some of my colleagues with an opportunity to make concrete proposals to be implemented in the next few years, I will of course be delighted to entertain them, should I be a member of that Cabinet. Second, I would suggest that it shows that, unlike the Progressive Conservative Party, the Liberal Party does have people who think about the future.

PROPOSAL TO DISBAND THREE GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. If historic patterns repeat themselves, all we will see in the future is increasing deficits from any Liberal administration. He talks about other proposals being made by his colleagues. The Minister of Employment and Immigration suggests that at least three federal Departments should be axed—Economic Development, Social Development, and Labour—to save the taxpayer money. Does the Minister of Finance agree that the Liberal Government is wasting taxpayers' money, or does he feel that these three Departments should be shut down?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Quite obviously, Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of question which should not be directed to me, but perhaps I might give the same answer as the one I gave to the previous question and say that at least the Liberal Party has people who think about the future.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ORDER BANK RATE ROLLED BACK

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the increase in interest rates. He has just suggested to the House, in his smiling way, that the increase is not really that great. He will now know that the rate is at its highest level in 18 months. Also he will know that we have had a record number of small business bankruptcies in the past two years, that farm bankruptcies are increasing this year at a rate, depending upon the province, of 100 per cent to 150 per cent or 160 per cent, and that all businessmen across Canada are saying that, if we do not have lower interest rates, whatever recovery we now have may be stopped.

Considering that the Liberals promised in the 1980 election campaign to have a made-in-Canada low interest rate policy, will he deliver what they promised and order Governor Bouey to roll back the interest rate increase which was announced today?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party keeps asking the same question over and over again. I have already given him an answer on this subject.

I have clearly indicated to him that I shall not give any instruction to the Governor of the Bank of Canada like the one he is suggesting because it would be counterproductive in terms of the development of the Canadian economy.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Just for once the Liberals should learn to be consistent. If they are not willing to fulfill their promises, they should not make promises in the first place.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER IMPOSE CAPITAL OUTFLOW TAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with the economics argument which the Minister usually makes on this question. He has told us in the House that, if they lowered the interest rates as they promised, there would be an outflow of capital to the United States. If the Minister is concerned with that, will he do the following: lower the interest rate, but then bring in a money-changer's tax and levy such a tax on all outflows of capital beyond a certain level? Most Canadians will keep their money in their Canadian bank, as they ought to do, but those who want to speculate and take advantage of the dollar situation should have a tax imposed on them. Will the Minister do that?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is interested in preserving Canadian jobs, if he wants small businessmen and farmers to survive, and if he wants mortgagors to be able to maintain their homes, will he tell the House why he gave a negative answer? Why is the Minister unwilling to levy a tax on speculation, on large amounts of money going out of the country which ought to be reinvested in the Canadian economy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, for the very simple reason that I want to preserve jobs in the country. I want to help people in the housing area. I want to ensure that there will be confidence in the Canadian economy from Canadian investors as well as foreign investors, and not resort to the kind of naive intervention which the Hon. Member is recommending.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND—GOVERNMENT DOCUMENT INQUIRY—FUTURE OF EMPLOYEES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to either the Prime Minister or the Minister responsible for reporting to the House on de Havilland. It is a very simple question. Does the Government have in its possession a Cabinet document predicting that its present policy respecting de Havilland will cost the country hundreds of millions of dollars and will result in the loss of hundreds of jobs at de Havilland this year? If the Government has such a document, will it send the contents of the document to the appropriate committee of the House of Commons so that Parliament can see all the facts about the de Havilland arrangement, and come to its own judgment as to whether or not this matter, which is now being kept secret by the Government, is in the national interest?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have a feeling the Hon. Member missed a few sittings of the House and standing committees, otherwise he would have known that the Minister responsible appeared many times with the projections and financial statements of those corporations, including de Havilland, and provided committee members requesting information with every detail on the corporations' financial situation and development plans.

If I remember correctly, the same Minister will appear shortly before the Committee of the Whole with other financial statements, and all Members in this House will have an opportunity to ask questions on the corporations' financial situation.

PROJECTED FINANCIAL AND EMPLOYMENT LOSSES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is missing much more than a few sittings of the House, he lacks honesty, as he is fully aware that the figures that were available some months ago are not those we are concerned with today.

I would like to put the question to him once more. Is it true that the government now has a Cabinet document, dated around mid-April, pointing to the loss of millions of Canadian dollars, and of at least 300 jobs at de Havilland this year?

• (1430)

[English]

Is there such a document? If there is, in the interests of letting the whole truth be known, will the Minister put those facts before the committee? We are talking about facts that came to the attention of the Government since the committee hearings he has talked about. Will he tell the whole truth?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Without any hesitation, Mr. Speaker, first I must point out to the Hon. Member that, as a former Minister, he cannot have forgotten what a cabinet document is. He is nodding, so there he has part of the answer to the question he should not even have put, if he remembers what a cabinet document is.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the document to which the Globe and Mail referred is the same document that was mentioned some weeks ago, and about which the Minister in charge made a statement explaining those figures.

As far as jobs are concerned, this is no novel thing either, because due to the slowing down of business at Canadair, various forms of lay-offs are expected. However, this government will endeavour to ensure competitive financing of the Dash-8 on markets abroad, in order to keep abreast of our competitors, and support other business activities within the corporation, not only to maintain existing jobs but to create new ones, which remains this government's goal.

COST BENEFIT ANALYSIS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, two facts are clear. One is that Canadian jobs at de Havilland are going to be lost by this Government. Second, facts which the Government has, it is hiding from the House of Commons. We want to have those facts and save those jobs. Has the Government prepared a cost-benefit analysis of its present de Havilland proposal? Does it have that cost-benefit analysis, and will it make it available to the House of Commons?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, earlier the Hon. Member wanted to teach the government honesty. I must point out it is dishonest of him Mr. Speaker, to state that the government is hiding the facts on de Havilland's or Canadair's financial situation.

The Hon. Member simply ignores that at many sittings of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, and of the Standing Committee on National Accounts, these corporations' financial statements were reviewed and all pertinent questions answered by the Minister.

He did not mention either that there will be more committee sittings where other financial statements will be tabled, and the Minister in charge will appear to answer all questions.

As far as de Havilland's marketing and viability studies are concerned, it has always been the intention of the Canada Investment Development Corporation, from the start, to make such studies so as to ensure the financial and marketing consolidation of those corporations. Studies are now in progress, and recommendations will be submitted to Cabinet in due course.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN METHOD OF ESTABLISHING BANK RATE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister has been blaming American interest rates for our problems. He will know that this week the Americans were able to borrow their T-bill money at 10.68 per cent. We had to pay 120 bases points more than the Americans. He will know that the American economy is on a roll. American government policies create jobs; our Government tears down jobs. The Minister will not bring forward a new Budget. Will he at least do one thing to establish confidence in the country? Will he change the method by which the Bank of Canada rate is established? Will he direct the rate at which the Bank of Canada will advance money to the chartered banks in a way that is consistent with keeping jobs in the Canadian economy and building the economy, instead of having our whole interest rate structure depend on a daily or weekly option of Treasury bills?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the commercial Canadian bank rates are not purely determined by the weekly auction by the Bank of Canada. The best evidence of this is that the Bank of Canada rate has moved up over the last several weeks without a similar increase in the prime rate by the commercial banks. There is no automatic relationship between what happens with the Bank of Canada rate and the commercial rates that are available to Canadians from the commercial banks.

If my friend looks at the daily comparison of selected Canadian and U.S. yields, for example, he will find that on 30-day prime corporate paper, in March and April the Canadian rate has been lower than the American rate, not higher, and that the 90-day prime corporate rate has been very lightly over the American rate. In fact the latest figure I have is at the same level as in the United States. I do not think my friend can argue seriously that Canadian rates are systematically higher than American rates. Evidence in the last several weeks has been to the contrary.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SET BANK RATE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the Minister cannot fool us any longer. The Canadian dollar was under pressure. To take the pressure off, he increased the rates in Canada. The Minister knows that the problem goes further than that. The Treasury bill option is a deal at the margin. In this country people are altering their interest rate expectations by the price that the Government of Canada pays at a Treasury Board auction once a week. Will the Minister do something to inspire some sense of confidence and give the people of this country some feeling that the Government, and not the Bank of Canada with its Treasury bill auction, is in charge? Will he at least set a Bank of Canada rate appropriate to the economy of this country so that we can keep what new jobs we have?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed to hear the spokesman for the Conservative Party advocating a complete rejection of the market system. I thought the Conservatives were rather favourable to the notion that we have a market economy and that the market determine the prices of either money or products in our society. My friend is proposing a very novel approach for the Conservative Party. If it is one that the Conservative Party wants to put forward, and if it does represent the view of the Conservative Party, I will be very interested in studying it further. In the meantime I see a lot of his colleagues nodding their heads negating this view taken by the Hon. Member on behalf of his Party.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

SEIZURE OF UNLICENSED SATELLITE TRANSMITTERS

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Communications. Can the Minister confirm that the CRTC, along with the RCMP and the Department of Communications, carried out a series of raids within the last week on operations of unlicensed transmitter satellite TV signals? If so, how many of these raids were carried out in Canada? Was the community of Red Lake, in the district of Kenora, one of the communities affected? What does the Minister intend to do with regard to the equipment that has been seized and the people who have been denied television signals?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the situation that exists at the moment is that the CRTC has indeed been enforcing, as is its duty, the Broadcasting Act of Canada. I am informed that some of these operations are re-transmitting signals, either in competition with licensed cable operators or using the airwaves to transmit to a number of people. Quite obviously, this must be done in accordance with the Broadcasting Act of Canada as passed by the House of Commons. These groups which are indeed operating broadcasting undertakings need licences to do so.

REQUEST FOR CAP ON MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and deals with only one aspect of interest rates, that being mortgage interest rates. In answer to a question put to him by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, the Minister indicated that there is no direct relationship between the Bank of Canada prime rate and interest rates charged by the chartered banks. Surely he must know that between February 16 and today the prime rate has risen by 1.29 per cent, and between February 16 and last week interest rates for mortgages have risen 1.5 per cent. This would show quite clearly that there is a relationship between what the Bank of Canada charges and what the banks charge for mortgages.

Since he is often quoting figures from the United States, the Minister will also know that in the United States mortgage interest rates are regulated. Will the Minister take steps now, before it is too late, to put regulations in place that will assure those people who wish to purchase homes in Canada, or who wish to renegotiate or must renegotiate their mortgages, that the banks will not be allowed to charge in excess of what is now being charged for mortgages that are currently available?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I refer my hon. friend to the answer I gave to the previous question. I did not say that there was no direct relationship between the two; I said that there was no automatic relationship.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, now I see.

Mr. Lalonde: Suddenly the Leader of the NDP understands. I indicated that what was happening on a daily or weekly basis with Treasury bill rates auctioned by the Bank of Canada did not automatically signify an immediate rise in interest rates. I showed the Hon. Member that the best evidence was the prime rate itself which has remained stable for several weeks in spite of fluctuations in Treasury bill rates. Concerning the Hon. Member's question about mortgage rates, he spoke about the banks, but he should also speak about the credit unions, co-ops, financial institutions, trust companies and all private lenders. The answer to that question is no.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that the Minister will allow interest rates for mortgages to rise as high as they rose in the last two to three years, and it is clear that he will see people lose their homes because he is too stubborn to recognize the realities in Canada at the moment.

MORTGAGE RATE PROJECTIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister knows that, with the present rate of interest, only 14.5 per cent of all renters can in fact qualify for mortgages. Surely the Minister knows that out of the 200,000 housing units that we require in Canada yearly in order to meet the current need, we are currently building at a rate of only 109,000 housing units a year.

Is there no way that we can convince the Minister that allowing mortgage interest rates to continue to rise can only create further unemployment on the one hand, and tremendous hardships for people who must renegotiate existing mortgages on the other. Will the Minister not take any steps now to ensure that mortgage interest rates will not be allowed to reach a level that will make it impossible for average Canadian families to own a home?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can engage in all the dark fantasies he wishes. If he wants to believe and act as if the interest rates were going to rise to 20 per cent and 22 per cent, he is free to do so. I do not believe that that is what will happen, and I do not want to act as if it were going to happen. That is the responsible thing to do at this time.

In the Budget, I put forward a number of measures concerning mortgage rate interest protection. I intend to introduce that piece of legislation before the end of the month. I hope we will get the support of the Opposition when it comes to dealing effectively with these issues, dealing with the Interest Act and with mortgage protection, rather than getting the foot dragging that we have seen in the opposition Parties in the last few months when dealing with economic measures.

THE ADMINISTRATION

MINISTERS' APPEARANCES IN HOUSE OF COMMONS AND COMMITTEES

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Once again, three of the Government's most important Ministers who have a significant influence on the high unemployment figures in the country are not present in the House. I wonder if the Prime Minister could comment on the division of the time of Ministers between their duties in the House of Commons, particularly during Question Period, and their duties in Standing Committees. I would single out the Minister of Employment and Immigration who was present this morning and appeared for the first time in over two months before the employment committee, at which he gave the indication that he was not returning soon. Could the Prime Minister comment on the importance of Ministers' presence in the House during the week, performing the duties for which they are paid?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking me to comment on this. I think it is particularly ungracious for the Member to comment on ministerial absences when our ranks are so full today, and when most of the front bench of the Opposition, with one or two smiling exceptions, is away. Does the Hon. Member not feel that it is his duty, and particularly the duty of the Leader of the Opposition, to be present in the House once in a while, Mr. Speaker? Our Minister was here yesterday.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, government Ministers have an obligation to attend to the business of the nation. That is why they are paid to be here, and that is why they ought to be here.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

EXPENDITURES BY MINISTER OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister comment on the over $20 million that the Minister of Employment and Immigration is expending on government advertising, most of which contains his name printed in the corners, with many blank spaces, since that program is apparently under the jurisdiction of a friend of the Minister from Toronto, a Mr. Peter Zarry, who has been under government contract to the tune of more than $400,000 for administering these programs which are apparently in support of the Minister's leadership campaign?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is just a jumble of inaccuracies and allegations. The Minister of Employment and Immigration is indeed spending a lot of money to create jobs in the country. He is also a leadership candidate. I do not suggest that he should stop trying to create jobs for Canadians simply because he is also running for the leadership of the Party.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

AUDITOR'S TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minsiter who is responsible for Canada Post. At the present time the principal director of the office of the Auditor General is conducting an audit into Canada Post. However, under his terms of reference he is restricted when examining the horror stories told about Canada Post.

As an example of those horror stories, employees in Toronto report that a $750,000 sorting machine had to be disconnected because it was inefficient and was causing delays. As well, employees report that Canada Post is continually forgetting trailers full of mail in its parking lots, and as many as 54 trailers have been forgotten for up to six weeks. Will the Minister take the necessary steps to see that the Auditor General can begin investigating these horror stories, and others, which are being told about Canada Post?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I first want to congratulate the Hon. Member on his appointment as official Opposition critic for matters relating to the Canada Post Corporation. Within the Official Opposition Leader's team being against bilingualism seems to be a good thing to get promotions. As for the question asked by the Hon. Member, I shall refer it to the President of the Canada Post Corporation.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, as usual, the Minister does not know what he is talking about.

WEEKEND OVERTIME

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, on May 1 the Times Colonist of Victoria reported that since March 18 management in the Victoria office has been paying employees extra money for working weekends in order to prepare mail for non-existent Air Canada flights. Will the Minister also see that Mr. Warren, or the Auditor General, will investigate this horror story?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that the horror stories referred to by the Hon. Member are more akin to figments of his imagination than to anything factual.

NATIVE PEOPLES

FUNDING FOR ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question would be directed to the Secretary of State if I could have his attention. The core funding for native organizations is long overdue. It has been delayed by a full month now.

• (1450)

Native leaders are starting to come to the conclusion that these funds are caught in the tangled web of the Liberal leadership race. The Minister supports John Turner, while the Dakota Ojibway tribal council gave a donation to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is there a legitimate reason which the Minister can give this House of why the funding for native organizations has been delayed a full month?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's phrasing is a little subjective. The main reason for the delay is, basically, the fact that over the past year, many provincial and national associations have had to cope with various changes including a large number of new associations. With a view to establishing objective criteria that, in the fact of such problems, would be used in acknowledging these associations, we have tried to reach a consensus and an agreement with representatives of the major associations.

Next week I shall be meeting with representatives of the Métis, in an attempt to seek a solution to this problem. As soon as we have reached a consensus, payments will be made in the manner agreed upon with the organizations.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, the Government changed the funding policy for native organizations. When it does that, it has to accept the responsibility to see that that policy works. That funding is still a month overdue. When is the Government going to sit down with native leaders in order to make that policy work, or does the Liberal Party only care about native people when it is thinking about votes?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is upset but I feel he does not know the facts. If he had spoken to representatives of the main associations concerned, he would have realized that six months ago I started informing each association that we were going to revise program criteria to allow for the new situation that was created last year when a number of national associations were split and when many associations were set up provincially. It was to cope with this new situation that we initiated negotiations and exchanges, and as I said in my previous answer, we are discussing criteria for acknowledging these new situations while maintaining the program's objectives, which are to give the representing associations the financial base they require to carry out their responsibilities. That has nothing to do with the inferences being made by the Hon. Member, which, I feel, are only aimed at poisoning relations in a situation that is very difficult, although in the past, we have always received the co-operation of native representatives.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

LOBBY AGAINST FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is a very easy question, designed to enhance his leadership ambitions so long as he gives the right answer. What action are the Minister and his Department taking to counter the high priced, high powered propaganda put forward by the anti-trapping lobby which is a danger to the Canadian fur industry and to the livelihood and way of life of thousands of Canadian trappers?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I wish, Mr. Speaker, through you, to say that I totally agree with the conclusions reached in the preamble to the Hon. Member's question. I believe it is a dire and unjustifiable threat to the livelihood of many of our northerners. I can only say that I am, combined with many of my colleagues in Government, putting together a governmental policy necessary to mount an educational advertising campaign designed to impact upon the mentality of many of the foreign countries which are contemplating taking prejudicial action against the product of our trappers.

RAILWAYS

GRAIN FREIGHT RATES—INTERIM ADJUSTMENT COSTS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister will know that the new freight rates for western grain are announced. The average rate is $7.70 per tonne. That is an increase of a full 33 per cent over the current year. These rates which have been announced are for the next crop year. The main reason for the increase is the interim adjustment, and the reason for that is that the producers are being asked to pick up the full shortfall in the estimates. Would the Minister tell the House why the Government is not picking up its share of the adjustment fund?

The Bill did not come into effect until January 1, yet the interim adjustment is going to be totally picked up by the producer at a time when the producers are experiencing considerable financial difficulty and the railways are experiencing pretty good financial health. The differnce is something like $20 million to $25 million. Would the Minister look into this situation and do what he can to ensure that the railways, or the Government, pay their share of that extra charge, instead of asking the producers to pick up the full $20 million to $25 million extra in cost?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I met yesterday with the Senior Grain Transportation Committee at its monthly meeting. We discussed the new rate which was set as of August 1 by the Transport Commission. I believe it is fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that the primary reason for the increase in the rate is due to the additional volume of grain which is being moved. The cap which was set under the formula was at 31.3 million tonnes. The fact of the matter is that there will be an additional three million tonnes moved this year. The farmers will, of course, receive a substantial income from those quite substantial additional sales above what was expected.

The important consideration which should be looked at is that there was virtually no increase in the costs which would affect railway rates. In fact the cost of the railways was about parallel to what it was last year. Therefore, there was virtually no inflationary increase in railway costs. Any increase in the rate was really due to that substantial increase in the sales, and in volume of grain which is being exported through our transportation system.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW FIGURES

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, either the Minister does not understand my question or does not understand the formula by which rates were set. Very simply, the Government picked up the first five-twelfths of the increase in the present crop year. The producers picked up the next seven-twelfths. What has happened is that the volume estimate was low, and the Government is now going along with the formula which suggested that the producers pick up the full interim adjustment. Instead of the Government paying its share of the first five months, it is asking the producers to pick up the full year's share. Very simply, that is going to cost the producers $20 million to $25 million.

The Minister cannot have it both ways. The volume estimate for next year is only 31.8 million tonnes, as I understand it. That is down substantially from this year. Therefore, the total reason, almost exclusively, for the increase in the rates next year is due to the interim adjustment this year, of which the Government is refusing to pay its share.

Let me ask the Minister again to go back and check the figures and see what he can do about ensuring that the producers do not have to shoulder that extra $20 million to $25 million.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is suggesting that his interpretation is the one which has to be accepted by this House. I would suggest to him that he in fact look at the statement which was issued by the Canadian Transport Commission, which states it is the additional cost related to the volume which raises shippers' charges in the 1984-1985 crop year, because these additional costs have to be factored into the new rates scale.

The fact of the matter is that the CTC itself, which has studied these factors, is indicating that the increase in rates is due to the additional volume of grain—

Mr. Mayer: But you are asking the producers to pick up the full shot.

Mr. Axworthy: —which is being moved, which, in fact, substantially increases the income coming into the farmers' hands because of the additional sales. I would simply suggest that the Hon. Member read what the CTC has to say.

INCOME TAX

EXTENSION OF FILING DATE FOR RESIDENTS OF BELL ISLAND, NFLD.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Last week the Minister extended the time limit for the filing of income tax returns for communities in Saskatchewan and Manitoba which were hit by a snow storm. There are many communities in eastern and northeastern Newfoundland which have been denied regular mail service because of unusual ice conditions. One of these communities is Bell Island in my own constituency. Will the Minister extend the time limit for communities such as Bell Island which have been denied regular mail service because of unusual ice conditions?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the St. John's taxation centre has set up a mechanism to identify the returns of the taxpayers who were affected by the pack ice in the area, and to allow them a filing extension on a case by case basis. I want to assure the Hon. Member that in these cases there will be no late filing penalties applied.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

GRAIN TRANSPORTATION EARNINGS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and is supplementary to the subject raised previously. My understanding is that the Minister's scheme to impoverish the farmers in western Canada and to enrich the railways has resulted in a per share earning for the CPR of about $3.50. Will the Minister tell us what his estimate of this plan is in terms of enriching CPR shareholders?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that really is a kind of nonsensical question. The Hon. Member has been in this House long enough to know—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is very difficult to expect a Minister to be able to answer that kind of a question without notice. I suggest it should be on the Order Paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I can ask the Government House Leader his intentions with respect to the business of the House for tomorrow and possibly into next week, if he is in a position to let us have that information.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to confirm the business of the House for the next few days, in the following order: Tomorrow, Monday and Tuesday we will consider Bills C-24, C-10 and C-25; Bill C-32 on Wednesday; and I wish to designate next Thursday as an Opposition day. As my colleague knows, of course, all those plans may change but, as I usually do, I will give the Official Opposition advance notice of any change.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, did the Government House Leader mention what was going to happen concerning progress on the farm stabilization legislation? I did not catch it if he did.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: No, I did not mention that, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, can the Government House Leader tell the House when, if at all, the Government is going to proceed with that legislation?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: We usually proceed with Bills on the Order Paper and, as my colleague knows, that Bill still does not appear on the Order Paper.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to belabour that point, but the Government House Leader will know that this matter is very much of interest to members of the Opposition. The Minister will know that this morning his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, gave his iron-clad guarantee that the western grain stabilization legislation would be introduced for quick consideration at the earliest possible date. Has there been consultation with the Minister of Agriculture and will the Bill be brought in, for example, during the course of the next week? That is one possibility.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we would plan to introduce that Bill next week. I would like to remind my hon. friend that according to Standing Order 22(2), and I quote:

> Government Orders shall be called and considered in such sequence as the Government determines.

We will assume our responsibilities in due time.

PETITIONS

MR. TOUSIGNANT—POSTAL SERVICE FOR NORANDA

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition signed by 2,200 of the 10,000 residents of the City of Noranda in my riding. Those people are complaining because Canada Post has closed their post office and they have to go to Rouyn for service, a location whose access is difficult and, I would even say, dangerous for the elderly.

Those people therefore humbly ask this House that the service to which they are entitled, be restored and, needless to say, they have my full support.

MR. EPP—CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-10

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by some 1,200 persons from my constituency and others. It is a follow up to an earlier petition of 6,000 names in which the petitioners request the Government to withdraw Bill C-10, the provisions of which are totally unacceptable to them.

CONSUMER PRODUCT WARRANTIES ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-235, an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and to provide for standardization of warranties and to define the minimum provisions thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, this Act would clarify the rights and obligations of consumers as they exist regarding warranties, and would provide for a single, uniform regulation of warranties.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Introduction of Bills

BROADCASTING ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING TAPING BY SCHOOL BOARDS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-236, an Act to amend the Broadcasting Act (educational use of programs).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member should have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, this Bill would enable school boards to tape radio and television broadcasts for use in schools at a cost which is not prohibitive, without incurring liability for copyright infringement.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-237, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, this Bill would ensure that a public servant or employee of a Crown corporation hired prior to the day of the coming into force of the Official Languages Act and still employed without being rehired since that day is able to continue to occupy his position or compete for any other position without his ability to perform in his second official language being taken into consideration. In essence, this Bill will restore the merit system to the RCMP, the Armed Forces and the federal civil service.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ADMINISTRATION OF COLLECTIVE AGREEMENTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-238, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (collective agreements).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, this Bill would ensure that the administration of a collective agreement would not have a discriminatory or detrimental effect on the employees covered by the agreement in comparison to other employees not covered by the agreement.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 260, 728 (revised) and 747.

[Text]

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY LIMITED

Question No. 260—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. In the 1982 annual report for the Northern Transportation Company Limited (NTCL) under Section 7, Property and Equipment, with regard to buildings, other structures and site development, was there an increase in expenditure from $19,665,000 in 1981 to $28,701,000 in 1982 and, if so, for what reason was this increase necessary?

2. What equipment was purchased and, in each case, what was the purchase price?

3. What buildings were bought and/or sold and (a) where are they located (b) what were their individual costs (c) what are their appraised values (d) what were the total site development costs and, in each case, where are the development sites located (e) how much was spent on the sites?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): The Northern Transportation Company Limited advises as follows:

1. During consolidation, certain assets of a subsidiary company, totalling $4.1 million, were inadvertently classified under "Buildings, Other Structures and Site Development" whereas these assets should have been included under "Other Equipment". This error was detected very shortly after receipt of our 1982 annual report from the printer but because the total value of property and equipment was correctly reported, it was decided not to recall the 1982 annual report.

For 1982, Note 7, Property and Equipment, should have read as follows:

	1982 ($000's)
Land	$ 2,049
Vessels	68,001
Buildings, Other Structures and Site Development	24,632
Other Equipment	20,846
	115,528
Accumulated Depreciation	67,468
	48,060

2. Total purchases of property and equipment for 1982 amounted to $8,260,000 and are correctly reported on page 12 of the 1982 annual report.

3. Included in total purchases of property and equipment for 1982 was the construction of a new camp facility in Tuktoyaktuk, Northwest Territories, at a cost of $4,448,000 which included site improvements and development in connection with this camp. In addition, another $500,000 was spent on site development, purchase of mobile homes and miscellaneous upgrading of existing structures at other locations.

No other buildings or structures were bought, sold or constructed.

SUPPLY REVOLVING FUND

Question No. 728 (Revised)—Mr. Blenkarn:

With respect to the Supply Revolving Fund, in the fiscal year (a) 1982-83 (b) 1983-84 (c) 1984-85, what was the forecast or actual total expenditures and revenues for the Advertising Management Service and was this ever shown as a separate item in the Main Estimates and, if so, is it so indicated now and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): In 1982-83, the actual total expenditures and revenues for Advertising Management Services were $49.664 million and $48.557 million respectively. In 1983-84, the forecast total expenditures and revenues are $51.310 million and $52.0 million respectively. In 1984-85, the forecast total expenditures and revenues are $54.914 million and $55.0 million respectively.

Advertising Management Services was shown as a separate item in the Main Estimates in 1982-83 and 1983-84. The Advertising Management Services is not shown as a separate activity in 1984-85 because it is a sub-activity of the Printing and Communications activity. In 1983, the Treasury Board approved the Operational Plan Framework for Supply Administration which effectively reduced the number of activities from thirteen to seven. All departments and agencies are required to submit Operational Plan Frameworks in accordance with the requirements of the Policy Expenditure Management System. This framework including a program activity structure must be approved by Treasury Board. The relationship between the old activity structure and the new is depicted on page 3.55 Supply and Services, Canada, 1984-85, Part III of the Main Estimates Expenditure Plan.

AERONAUTICS ADVISORY BOARD

Question No. 747—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there a Aeronautics Advisory Board and, if so, what (a) are its terms of reference (b) is the (i) name (ii) background or expertise (iii) term of appointment of each member (c) remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses (i) do the members receive (ii) did the members receive to date (d) other funding, if any, is provided by the Government?

2. During the fiscal year 1982-83, did the Board meet and, if so (a) how often (b) how often is it required to meet (c) what matters did it consider (d) what reports and/or recommendations were published?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): 1. The Aeronautics Advisory Board has lapsed. It had advised on research and development projects between March, 1979 and January, 1983. Members were drawn from different parts of the Canadian aviation community. The chairman received a per diem, and travel expenses were reimbursed for members who were retired or came from a university.

2. During fiscal year 1982/83 the Board met four times at its own discretion and considered the Canadian Air Transportation Administration (CATA) Research and Development program and other federally supported development programs in aeronautics. The Board produced an assessment of Research and Development activities in CATA.

Mr. Evans: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I have raised before with the Parliamentary Secretary the subject of the response to question No. 679 which has been on the Order Paper since mid-February. It was on the Order Paper in the previous sitting. Can he tell me, first, when that question will be answered? Second, can he give me a guarantee that that question, which has to do with the appointment by the present Prime Minister of Ministers to Cabinet, will be answered before the Prime Minister leaves his responsibilities as Prime Minister?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows I will do everything in my power to see that the question is answered. He also knows that I have absolutely no power to make that guarantee.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hovdebo:

That this House recognizes the tremendous financial difficulty that farmers have been placed under and therefore recommends that the government immediately consider injection of much needed cash into farming through:

(1) the immediate payout of a substantial initial payment from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund in order to assist with seeding costs;

(2) the repeal of all sales taxes, well-head taxes and other taxes being charged to fuels used for farming and fishing; and

(3) an immediate interest rate reduction on Farm Credit Corporation loans so that viable refinancing of farms can take place.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak on this particular Opposition motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), that this House recognizes the tremendous financial difficulty that farmers have been placed under and therefore recommends that the Government immediately consider injection of much needed cash into farming through the three points mentioned here: the immediate pay-out of a substantial initial payment from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund in order to assist with seeding costs; the repeal of all sales taxes, well-head taxes and other taxes being charged to fuels used for farming and fishing; and an immediate interest rate reduction on Farm Credit Corporation loans so that viable refinancing of farms can take place.

This particular motion is threefold and focuses on things that have been emphasized in the House over the last little while. It focuses on the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, the question of sales and well-head taxes charged for fuels, and the question of Farm Credit Corporation loans in order that farmers who are refinancing their loans at this time would be able to refinance at a reasonable rate.

I have received letters on all of these issues from farmers in my constituency, Mr. Speaker. All of them have been requesting action on each of the points mentioned above. Regarding the Western Grain Stabilization Plan, a farmer from Sifton in my riding writes:

I feel that the formula should be re-written to tie in the cost of production along with returns for production, i.e. net returns as opposed to gross returns.

Grain has not changed drastically, however, cost of production has skyrocketted, thereby placing extreme burdens on farmers.

The letter from this farmer in Sifton continues:

Perhaps Eugene Whelan would be willing to re-examine the present formula in view of the fact that he is considering running as leader of the federal Liberals and he needs western support.

This need for an immediate pay-out is something which all of us in the New Democratic Party have been raising. I was glancing at the statement I made on March 5 in the House which pointed out the fact that the projected net farm income in Manitoba for 1984 is lower than the actual net income in 1973. Before the Easter break we offered the Minister all the co-operation of the New Democratic Party to have these amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act passed but nothing happened. We had the announcement during the Easter break and still nothing happened. On April 30 we were here, Mr. Speaker, and nothing happened. May 1 came around and nothing happened. May 2 came around and nothing happened. Today is May 3 and the Minister appears to have been talking through his invisible hat. It is rather like the clouds that bring no rain.

You may have heard it said, Mr. Speaker, that farmers and others are sometimes caught between a rock and a hard place. I would submit that at the present time the farmers are not merely caught between a rock and a hard place, but are caught between an anvil and a hammer. The situation which many of them are facing is very drastic. Within the northwest region of Manitoba there are some 5,000 farmers. Many of them have been surveyed and at the present time 65 are in such desperate straits that they can get neither a bank nor a trade loan. In other words, there is no bank willing to give them credit in order for them to buy the seed they need to go on to the land. There are no companies prepared to give them the necessary loans to get into the seeding operation. These are the types of concerns I would like to underline as I speak on this motion put forward by my colleague.

It is often said that a picture speaks louder than words. I would like to share the type of representations I have been receiving on these matters that the farmers are facing. I have a letter dated April 19, 1984. This is another illustration of a farmer caught between the anvil and the hammer. This is a farmer who is being beleaguered by Revenue Canada. I would like to show you the repercussions that this type of thing has. This farmer writes:

I am a farmer and a school bus driver. As bus driver wages I earn about $6,000 which is certainly not enough for a family of five to live on. My gross farm income the last years has averaged about $20,000 with a net of about $4,000. I spend much more time working on the farm than the bus job. Besides, my wife and our older daughter do much farm work. Now I am being taxed on my farm home as though I am not a farmer. I am being penalized because I am not earning more on the farm than off the farm. How unjust can our tax system become. My family is working hard to make ends meet. Now, if I could net more income on the farm, I would have more money, but I wouldn't be taxed on my farm home. Gross injustice. What are you doing about this?

This is an illustration of the anvil and the hammer that the farmers are being caught between at the present time. I am receiving these letters on a daily basis. I have one dated April 24 which says:

I'd like to express my appreciation for what you are doing for us here in northern Manitoba. Also I'd like to express my concerns about the plight of many farmers in our L.G.D. of Mountain.

That stands for the local government district, Mr. Speaker. This is an area of municipal jurisdiction which does not have all the status of a municipality. The letter continues:

I thought it might be of interest to you to see how much land is up for tax sale in the L.G.D. It seems to me Mr. Whelan should be able to see that all is not well with the farm if every year there is a considerable increase in land going up for tax sale.

I counted the number of properties listed for sale for arrears of taxes in one small L.G.D. There are 34 municipalities in our constituency. I counted 56 pieces of propety in a small local government district which are up for tax sale.

As was mentioned earlier in the House today, there are many farmers who are concerned about increased freight rates. The worst fears of the farmers are being realized. According to a report in the Manitoba Co-operator:

Government officials said the 10 per cent safety net on the export basket price of grain won't be triggered by the projected increase.

A Government official said the process simply means farmers have more money in their pockets this year, but will have to pay it back in freight rates next crop year.

Some of these fears are plaguing many of the farmers because they cannot afford this. This is particularly true in constituencies such as mine where the average income of people is around two-thirds of the national average. This can represent a substantial loss to the farmers.

Perhaps you have been wondering whether I have been referring to people who are constantly writing to MPs. I just want to give you an illustration that there are many people who because of the drastic situation on farms are writing to me for the very first time in their lives. As a matter of fact, some of these people who are writing and phoning me as their Member of Parliament are contacting a Member of Parliament for the very first time. Another letter I have received reads:

● (1520)

I have never written to you before—

He goes on to say:

I do not like what is happening in Ottawa lately concerning the Western farmer—

He goes on to explain the expenses on the farm and the difficulty farmers are facing in these tough times. He continues:

Perhaps you have heard all about this before, but I think we should have all or some of the federal or provincial taxes of gas, diesel, etc., removed. FCC should have more money given to them at lower interest rates—

He also comments on the Western Grain Stabilization Program and the necessity of amending this Bill so there would be a pay-out. Just to give you an indication, Mr. Speaker, of the type of alienation farmers are facing in western Canada, this individual goes on to state:

The Liberal Government does not care or knows nothing about what the West wants . . . the Liberals have been in power for about 13 or 14 years and promised a lot of things for the west and we have seen very little done, mostly for Ontario and Quebec.

The lack of recognition for the needs of western farmers is something that I do not think has sunk sufficiently into the minds of Cabinet members.

I want to give you another illustration, Mr. Speaker, of the type of representation we receive. I am doing this basically to try to convince the Government of the types of problems the farmers have. I am going to read a resolution that was passed at a pot luck supper meeting held in Swan River. I pulled this particular illustration from my riding because the Hon. Minister for Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has been to Swan River. In fact, this is where he got his green hat. I thought the Minister might be interested in knowing what the farmers who gave him the green hat have to say about his lack of involvement in dealing with agricultural problems. This is why I have chosen this illustration from Swan River from among the other representations I have received.

This particular resolution was passed on April 26. It was passed at a pot luck supper to which I was invited. It was an excellent meeting. Just for your edification, Mr. Speaker, I will indicate the way some of these rural people operate. Farmers and others brought food for the supper. As part of their own fund raising, they also collected a minimal sum at the door regardless of whether they brought food or not. It is almost a tradition. They invited me to speak. Once you speak you are subjected to questions and answers. These questions and answers go on for one or two hours. I think the Minister of Agriculture would be delighted to face some of these meetings. He would be able to understand some of the feelings and learn about the personal experiences of the farmers. These are not just statistics, they are personal experiences. This group made up of well over 100 people unanimously passed the resolution I will now share with you:

Whereas the Government of Canada has announced a payment of $300,000,-000.00 from the Grain Stabilization Fund and

Whereas this payment represents only the money farmers have contributed to the plan, and

Whereas this payment is intended to be made in October, and

Whereas many farmers are in desperate need of financing for current expenses of planting a new crop, and

Whereas farmers were promised from the outset of the plan that the Government would contribute $2.00 for every $1.00 farmers contributed,

Therefore be it resolved that the payout be increased to include an equal amount of Government money and be it further resolved that this payout be made immediately so as to assist farmers with their spring seeding expenses.

During the course of his speech the Minister of Agriculture, in response to some illustrations and examples which my colleagues from Saskatchewan gave, asked: what the provinces are doing. He seemed to indicate that the federal Government is doing everything for the farmers while the provinces are doing nothing. I want to correct that for the record. I want to give a couple of illustrations of what has been happening in Manitoba.

The New Democratic Government headed by Howard Pawley has been working diligently on the whole agricultural question. For example, the government has established a beef stabilization program. When this was introduced it was poohpoohed. People said he would get no participation, that "Maybe you will get 7 per cent of producers participating", he said. But what has happened? Seventy to 75 per cent of the producers representing 70 per cent to 75 per cent of the province's livestock are in this beef stabilization program. Some $25 million has been given to this program.

Also a hog stabilization program at the provincial level has been introduced. Some $7 million has been expended on the program. The Manitoba Agricultural Credit Corporation has also been working very aggressively. It has been providing loans to beginning farmers at reduced interest rates. We find in the interest relief reduction program that some 1,300 people have participated. Some $6.7 million has been expended at the provincial level. In addition, some farmers have been able to buy down their interest rates. This has helped farmers who have had ready cash and were caught in a high interest rate situation. They have been able to buy down the high interest rate. Some 600 people have benefited from that program.

If you were to take into account the amount of money which the provincial government has given by way of program or subsidy to the farmers in the two years the New Democratic Party Government has been in office, some 30,000 farmers have profited. The impact per average family farm has been $6,400. I would challenge the federal Government to match that type of assistance to farmers.

I see my time is coming to an end, Mr. Speaker, but I want to mention a few other points concerning the farm fuels sales tax and the well-head tax on farm fuel. At the same meeting in Swan River on April 26, another resolution was passed. Let me read it for the record:

> Whereas some of the corporate fuel companies have reduced the cost of farm fuels by 4.5 cents a litre or 20 cents a gallon if paid for within 30 days,
> And whereas federal tax on farm fuels is high,
> Therefore be it resolved that the federal government match the corporate oil companies by eliminating the federal fuel tax.

Some companies have been taking this kind of action. The particular group assembled there have given this challenge to the Minister to respond in a favourable way. As I talk to many of the farmers in my riding, they tell me that their farm fuel bill has doubled in the last couple of years. There has been a tremendous increase in expense in farm fuels. For most farmers right now it is their number one cost. Many farmers had been involved earlier in loans and refinancing. For them, their number one cost is still interest rates. I want to emphasize the importance of this. As was mentioned earlier, we are always getting conflicting statistics from the Government as to what the exact amount is of the farm fuels sales tax. This is something which should be investigated and acted upon.

• (1530)

In conclusion, I should like to refer to a letter that I received from a farmer in the Swan River area. I use this as an illustration simply for the benefit of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). He wrote:

> We are always told that our products have to compete on the world marketplace. But Sir, how can we compete when our own Government in its bid for taxes and power puts us farmers at a disadvantage? Just look at the price of fuel in the U.S.A . . . Hope you don't think I'm a born complainer but unless the Government in Ottawa does some serious thinking about their policy, we will all go down like the Roman Empire.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a comment rather than to put a question to the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky), and he may want to add to it. I followed his remarks during the course of his speech and each time he referred to an increase in costs, I made note of it. This is what I wrote down: a 15 per cent increase in Farm Credit Corporation interest rates. I do not know what has happened to the six and five as far as that corporation is concerned. Also he referred to a 30 per cent increase in grain freight rates. Again I do not know what happened to the six and five. Then he referred to a 35 per cent increase in fuel costs in the last few years; no six and five there either. I do not have the figure for fertilizer, but I understand that it has increased as well. There has been a continual increase in input costs. What effect is that having on farmers in the Dauphin-Swan River area?

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that it is having a disastrous effect upon farmers in Dauphin-Swan River. As I indicated, based upon a survey conducted in my region, 65 farm families are in such dire straits that they cannot obtain money from any bank or trade company to put seed into the ground this spring.

Of course, farmers are very enterprising. I know members of their families will help them and chip in, but I am afraid that there will be an increased number of foreclosures and bankruptcies in my area. Our farms are not particularly large. They are not the size of those south of the Trans-Canada Highway. Farmers there are experiencing a very difficult situation. Unless there is some immediate pay-out from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund or some other action, I really fear for the farmers in my area. Once we take farmers off the land, city boys or girls will not farm land in rural areas. Any impressionistic or other observations I have made indicate that if we are to have a vibrant agricultural economy in our area, our farming sector, our vital food sector, will have to receive some kind of support. Farmers cannot really cope with these types of increases in our area.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) a question. A recent press announcement indicated that the Farm Credit Corporation was making available some $825 million this year in long-term loans and so on. If the Hon. Member were really doing his job by getting out and encouraging farmers in his area to take advantage of this long-term credit, he would know that this is the difficulty. At least in my area that has always been the problem. Of course, interest rates are a concern as well, but it is really important for farmers to obtain long-term credit. The FCC has that $825 million. I think it is a couple of hundred million more than it was a few years ago. I wonder whether the Hon. Member is really doing his job of ensuring that his constituency receives its share of long-term Farm Credit Corporation loans.

Mr. Lewycky: My response to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is, yes, I have been doing my homework. I have talked with farmers about the Farm Credit Corporation. I have asked them to see the FCC people. They have told me that they are unable to obtain these loans and that they are far in excess of what they are able to pay by way of interest rates. They have told me that when the interest rate is compounded, they end up paying more than the 15 per cent.

Perhaps it is the Parliamentary Secretary who ought to be doing his own homework. He would see then that some action has been taken in this regard. Perhaps he should do that rather than shoot off his mouth glibly without having conducted any investigation on this issue. It is a major problem. We would not be receiving that kind of representation from people when we are talking to them in the coffee shops or wherever if it were not important. We have been talking to farmers in our area about that. Obviously he has not been doing his homework, if that is the kind of feedback he thinks he is getting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there further questions or comments? For debate, the Hon. Member for Welland.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, one might ask why a Member of Parliament from southern Ontario who has largely a blue collar constituency would enter into this debate. I have farmers in my area, in the Niagara Peninsula, and as Hon. Members know, farmers are among the most productive sector throughout Canada.

The Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) quite realistically put forward some of the problems in his area. I sympathize with the plight of some farmers in that area of Manitoba. There should be no doubt in the minds of anyone here that many farmers are under tremendous financial pressure. The extent of their difficulties varies depending on the individual, the size and type of the farming operation, the commodities produced and so forth.

Spring is traditionally a time for hope and new starts in the agricultural sector. Judging from the planting intentions of prairie farmers—and this is what the Hon. Member was talking about—there is hope for a good crop year. Recent surveys indicate that prairie crop producers expect to increase seeded acreage by 2.7 per cent over 1983 plantings. In March, a survey by Statistics Canada also indicated that Canadian farmers expect to increase fertilizer used this year by 4 per cent over 1983. Surely these are reasons for hope.

Mr. Hovdebo: And the price has increased by 5 per cent.

Mr. Parent: Surely the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) will have his turn in a few moments. If he will let me share some of my information with him, perhaps he will be able to question me on it at the end of my remarks. I would be happy to answer his questions.

Hope alone will not help farmers to put in the new crop or keep them going until their livestock is ready for market. As we approach planting season, there is heightened concern about such mundane matters as cash flow and credit and, ultimately, who will make it through the season and who will not. We are dealing with a highly industrialized sector of the economy. I am talking about the farming industry, because many of the implements used by farmers are state of the art. Whereas it used to take thousands of men and women to man our farms, only between 4 per cent and 5 per cent of our entire population is involved in that industry at the present time.

The federal Government is aware of and extremely concerned about the financial pressures and important decisions facing farmers at this time of the year. This is why we have taken a number of major initiatives over the past few months to help strengthen and support the financial position of Canadian farmers.

• (1540)

I would like to discuss some of these initiatives and explain some of the positive effects they have had and will have on Canada's agricultural economy, starting with some of the concrete financial assistance programs that have actually put cash in farmers' hands in recent months. One of the oldest and most reliable is the Agricultural Stabilization Program. Under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, we have been spending an average of about $350 million a year on stabilization payments for named and designated commodities.

Early in the winter, the $66.8 million stabilization program for eight designated commodities was announced. These commodities included 1982-83 crops of winter wheat, apples—I see the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) is here; he would have an interest in that and can corroborate what I am saying—greenhouse cucumbers, onions, carrots, cabbages, rutabagas and white beans.

As of a week ago, the federal Government had processed claims and issued cheques to nearly 17,100 producers of those commodities. The accusations of the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River are not totally accurate when he says we are not doing anything to help the farmers. I would also point out that all farmers do not live in the west. As I will point out in my speech, many farmers in Ontario, Quebec and, yes, even the Maritimes, are going to be affected by the acts and actions of this Government.

In February, a support payment of $4.48 per tonne for the 1982-83 grain corn crop under the same Act was announced. Claims from some 1,200 corn producers have been processed to date. In total, the federal Government expects to pay out $14.8 million to corn producers this spring. About 80 per cent of that will go to Ontario farmers. We have a broader spectrum here than just the farmers of the west. Our farmers are situated in every province of this country.

Other federal programs have put money into the pockets of the fruit growers this winter. This is where I become involved. In our area, the Niagara Peninsula, where we grow such fruits as apples, pears, peaches and, of course, grapes—we produce 80 per cent of the grapes of Canada and 80 per cent of the wine in Canada—we are affected by what happens to the fruit growers.

In late December, cheques were delivered to all apple producers eligible under the Eastern Canada Apple Industry Compensation and Re-establishment Plan. Under this program growers whose orchards suffered frost damage could receive $40 per standard tree affected. This money will help them to re-establish their orchards this year. Meanwhile, British Columbia fruit growers received cash assistance under two other federal programs. One of these was a $4.84 million purchase and resale program to help the East Chilliwack Agricultural Co-operative process its 1983 raspberry crop. Under the other, the Agricultural Products Board agreed to buy up to $3.2 million worth of B.C. peaches and pears to help fruit growers in that province market their 1983 crop.

These are positive things that the Government has been doing. We should be telling Canadian farmers and the public at large about these. All of those programs have helped to improve the cash flow situation of the participating farmers, providing them with funds with which to pay their bills and purchase inputs for the 1984 planting season. I hope we will hear more about this as the debate continues in the House today.

On April 1 the federal Government increased the target returns level for industrial milk and cream production by 1.5 per cent, from $43.18 per hectolitre to $43.83 per hectolitre. This increase will help dairy farmers cover higher production costs. Changes to yet another program will help Newfoundland livestock feeders. I am referring to the increase in feed freight assistance rates to all destinations in Newfoundland. This was announced a mere two weeks ago.

Agriculture Canada spends over $1.2 billion annually to assist the nation's agri-food industry. Many of the programs funded by the Department are aimed directly at farmers. Among these is the federal-provincial crop insurance program. The federal Government contributes around $150 million a year to this important and successful program.

Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, we make it possible for farmers to borrow more than $200 million a year, with the interest rates being at a lower rate than would otherwise be possible because the federal Government guarantees these loans. The federal Government also helps farmers' cash flow situation through to advance payments programs. In total, about $500 million a year is advanced to farmers, with the Government paying the interest charges. This allows them to pay their bills and market their products in an orderly manner.

A couple of months ago the Government introduced Bill C-23 to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. The Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River alluded to that in his remarks. Under the proposed amendments, the maximum advance for individuals will double from $15,000 to $30,000. Emergency advances will also increase. Both Opposition Parties have expressed support for this Bill. I am hopeful that it can be passed in the very near future.

While we are talking about programs in support of prairie crop producers, I want to mention initial grain payments. The initial payments for spring wheat, Durum and designated barley will decrease this year, that is true. However, initial payments for feed oats, feed barley and designated oats will increase from 1983 levels. These levels are, of course, based on world grain markets. However, you can be sure that it was the Government's intention in setting these prices to help farmers as much as possible to maintain cash flow.

This discussion of initial grain prices brings us to another important program for the prairie grain producer. I mention this because some Members on this side have been paired with western ridings so that they can have direct input to our caucus. I am paired with the riding of Wetaskiwin. The Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) stepped out of the Chamber for a minute. I am sure he will be back. This discussion of initial grain prices brings up the matter of the other important program for prairie grain producers. One program that has been debated this afternoon is the Western Grain Stabilization Act. In the Speech from the Throne in December, it was announced that the Government would be looking at ways to make the Western Grain Stabilization Act more responsive to the needs of producers. In January, we lowered the level of producer contributions to the program from 2 per cent to 1.5 per cent of eligible receipts. Just eight days ago the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board announced proposed amendments that would make the program more flexible and more responsive to the needs of the grain producers. At that time they also outlined the key changes Parliament will be asked to approve. This is a lot of quick action on a major program in a very short time, yet we hear calls for a large initial payment from the program immediately. It takes time. It has to filter through the system. I am sure we would all like to see a pay-out from the fund as soon as possible to help farmers with their seeding cost. However, the formula will not trigger a payment until the laws governing the programs are changed. That is what we hope to do in this Parliament as soon as we can.

Mr. Mayer: When?

• (1550)

Mr. Parent: The Hon. Member from the opposite side has asked when, and I say to him that as soon as we can get the co-operation of all sides of the House, I am sure that this Bill will go through right away.

Mr. Mayer: You have it right now.

Mr. Parent: According to preliminary calculations, each eligible producer could receive about $2,500 or slightly more this fall if the program is changed as proposed. Very shortly, the Government will be introducing the legislation to change the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Meanwhile, I would simply point out that administrative costs of issuing an interim payment and a final payment only a couple of months apart would hardly be warranted.

I hope that when the legislation does come before the House—and it will be here before too long—the Opposition will see that it receives speedy passage for the sake of the western grain farmers. I am sure that it is obvious from all of the activities to which I have referred that the Government has been working hard to help Canadian farmers cope with the financial pressures of producing food today. We have not ignored the plight of the farmers in the west or those in the east. I hope we can count on the support of every Member of the House to continue to improve the lot of the great Canadian food producer.

I would be willing to answer any questions that Hon. Members may have with regard to the remarks I have made.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable interest to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent), particularly when he set out all of the various programs of the Government under which payments have been made over the past year. He spoke about payments to corn and grain producers in eastern Canada, he spoke about payments to fruit growers and apple producers, and he spoke about changes in feed freight assistance. I would point out to him that all of these programs are government funded programs and non-contributory programs. There is never any problem when making payments to producers under these programs.

The Western Grain Stabilization Program is a contributory program. The farmers of western Canada contribute to that program yet are not able to benefit from it. They have not benefited from that program since 1979, and yet the farmers in western Canada are in serious trouble. They need those payments and they need them right now.

The Hon. Member spoke about the co-operation of Members on this side of the House. The amendments to the western grain stabilization Bill have not seen the light of day in this House. When they do see the light of day, we will be told by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Senator in the other place that the payment will not be made until the fall. That will not help the farmers of western Canada.

The amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act will be of some assistance, but that Bill has been sitting on the Order Paper of the House since last March. There has been no attempt on the part of the Government to bring that Bill forward despite the fact that members of both Opposition Parties have indicated to the Government time and time again that they would pass that Bill and give it three readings in one day. Does the Hon. Member for Welland feel that it is fair to the farmers of western Canada that we have no western grain stabilization Bill and that the advance payment Bill is sitting on the Order Paper?

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member, I would say that his points are well taken and I agree with him when he says that this legislation should be brought before the House just as soon as possible. Hon. Members may ask why we have not done so yet. I do not have the specific answer to that question except to say that the legislation with which we have been dealing has been important for all of Canada as well and I for one, along with the Hon. Member and all of my other colleagues, would surely urge that this particular legislation be brought forward at least before the end of this session and, if possible, even before the end of this month.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Welland if he and other members of his caucus have raised this issue in caucus meetings and if they have pressured the Minister of Agriculture and the Senator from the other place to bring this legislation forward. If they have not done so, I would ask the Hon. Member why they have not done so.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member well knows, and as must be the tradition in his caucus as well, I would first point out that what is discussed in caucus stays there. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister in the other place have been approached by members of this caucus, and I am sure that those Ministers are very much aware of the feelings of the members of this caucus.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member two short questions. First, did I understand the Hon. Member correctly when I heard him say that he was not in favour of an interim payment because of the costs involved in mailing both an interim payment and a final payment? Is that what the Hon. Member said?

Mr. Parent: No, Mr. Speaker, I did not say that.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of comments to make and a question to ask. Perhaps it is clarification that I require. I was in the lobby at that particular moment, but I understood the Hon. Member to say that the initial prices of barley had increased. I wonder if the Hon. Member is not forgetting that, between the time of the last change in price and this one, there was an interim increase thus making the present initial price of barley lower than it was a month or two ago.

Second, if the maximum payment to farmers will be $2,500, and if the person who receives that $2,500 is likely to have paid $1,200 into the fund this year, because I believe that is the maximum amount that may be paid in, that means that the farmer will receive only an additional $1,200. That is not as large an amount of money as the Hon. Member for Welland has indicated. Those are the comments I wished to make.

Third, I wish to ask the Hon. Member a question. The Hon. Member suggested that the prairie farmer would not do too badly this year because of the increase in the amount of grain that will be seeded and because of the possibilities of a better crop. Of course, that is a pretty dangerous statement to make because right now a good part of the west is pretty dry. As well, there will be an increase in fertilizer costs, an increase in fuel costs and an increase in transportation costs. Possibly we will grow a little more grain. Could the Hon. Member tell me how much the initial price that is being paid for grain will be decreased and how relative that is to the increased amount of grain that will be grown?

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, there are three questions involved here and I would like to answer the last one first. No, I cannot give the Hon. Member a specific answer to that question because I do not have those figures in front of me. However, I will try to answer the other two questions.

When speaking about the programs in support of the prairie crop producers, I said specifically that the initial payments for spring wheat, Durum and designated barley will decrease this year. I also said that initial payments for feed oats, feed barley and designated oats will increase from 1983 levels. I believe that that answers the specific question asked by the Hon. Member.

Regarding the $2,500 that will be received, I have no quarrel with what the Hon. Member has said. He said that the farmer will have paid into the fund up to $1,250. I suppose my question to him is simply this: when someone pays in $1,250 and gets out $2,500, most businessmen in Canada would consider that a pretty good investment. When the Hon. Member said that that is not a lot of money, that statement is an expression of his judgement. Surely help like this is better than no help at all. When someone puts 50 per cent into any kind of investment and gets out 100 per cent, I think that that is an improvement.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment to clarify the situation. There has been no pay-out under the Western Grain Stabilization Plan since 1979. If a farmer contributed the maximum to the plan, as most farmers did, that farmer would have contributed $1,200 a year for four years, making a total of $4,800. If interest rates paid by the banks were added to that contribution, the farmer would have to his credit over $7,000. We only suggested that an initial payment of $2,500 be made, about one-third of the amount the farmer has already paid in. That is his own money and that is all he is asking for.

• (1600)

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, the comment is duly noted and I am sure the Minister as well as I myself will take notice of it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For one brief comment or question, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, just to indicate how the farmers feel about this, I attended a meeting in the town of Strathmore, to which farmers drove several miles, to discuss the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Of that group of farmers, there was not one who did not want to opt out. They felt that they would do better to keep the money themselves and place it in a bank to make interest. This is not a stabilization program. The Government should start realizing that. It is not being fair to the farmers who are contributing. The Minister makes a lot of the fact that some farmers do not contribute. Well, quite simply, they did not join the plan. Those who did join the plan cannot get out. If these farmers were given the option, there would not be anyone left in the plan, because they are so dissatisfied with it. I think the Government should realize this.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, with regard to that specific comment, I take it the Hon. Member at this point is in favour of all farmers opting out of any of the stabilization programs that we have. I put that in the form of a comment or question, Mr. Speaker—I do not know if I can ask questions of him. It would seem to me that he is taking a position now. If I understand him correctly, that is what he is saying.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell)—Labour Conditions—Allocation of food provided by Vancouver food bank. (b) Benefits of economic recovery. (c) Productivity increase—Effect on employment; the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer)—Western Grain Stabilization Act—Request for early introduction of amending legislation; the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan)—The Administration—Liberal Party leadership campaign—Role of contract employee. (b) Ministerial staff guidelines.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hovdebo:

That his House recognizes the tremendous financial difficulty that farmers have been placed under and therefore recommends that the government immediately consider injection of much needed cash into farming through:

(1) the immediate payout of a substantial initial payment from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund in order to assist with seeding costs;

(2) the repeal of all sales taxes, well-head taxes and other taxes being charged to fuels used for farming and fishing; and

(3) an immediate interest rate reduction on Farm Credit Corporation loans so that viable refinancing of farms can take place.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the subject we are debating today is certainly not new. The subject, in perspective, is simple, namely, interest rates. In listening to the discussions in this House today, my mind went back to the introduction of the Western Grain Stabilization Act some seven years ago. I remember at the time trying to understand the formula. I expressed my concerns at that time in the House to the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. I said, "There is no one who can understand the formula. It will not work". He said, "I understand it and it will work". Seven years later, we are back to reality.

As one of my colleagues said a moment ago, the happiest guys in western Canada are the ones who stayed out of the plan. It is essentially a lottery.

What the Government has done in this academic-type of formula is to average out a farm area which extends a thousand miles east and west. There are whole sections in that farm area which have had two, three, four or five bad years in the last seven years, yet the farmers there are not allowed to collect. The plan is based on an average over the whole area—the largest, homogeneous agricultural area in the world.

That was the fault of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act of 1938. That Act was scrapped in 1957 and replaced with a crop insurance program. Any pretence in the House that legislation, which was brought forward to cope with the difficulties under the Western Grain Stabilization Act, will be resolved in the next two or three weeks and presented to the House is nothing but sheer, unadulterated fraud and scam. It would take the best brains in the world to improve this Act to make it work. That is why my colleague was quite wise when he said a moment ago that the luckiest guys are the ones who did not join the plan. They can take the amount of their contributions, put them out at bank interest, and have three times as much coming as the Government is attempting to provide under these amendments. It is the farmers' money. They do not even use government money.

In my area, we passed a resolution on this nine months ago. We knew the Government's plan would not work. We decided to pass out all of the money, have the interest come back, and we would do our own stabilization. We decided to let the nitwits in Ottawa spend the next 100 years trying to figure out a new formula that would work. It would take them that long when dealing with such a vast agricultural area where the weather cannot be controlled by public servants or by Ministers.

The motion by the NDP is very timely and supports what has been going on on this side of the House for four years. I went back and looked at a motion brought to the House three years ago by the Conservative Opposition, dated June 1, 1981. It read:

—extending the Small Business Development Bond to unincorporated farmers,

That was part of the Budget of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), under the administration of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), which set up the small business development bond concept. The motion was rushed through and became law before the Government was defeated. It applied that principle to individuals as well as incorporated individuals and incorporated companies. It was a motion put forward on June 1, 1981, by the Official Opposition in answer to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) request of the Opposition that it put forward ideas which would be helpful and constructive, ideas which the Government could act on. That was the first proposal.

The second proposal was to amend the Farm Credit Corporation Act, the Agricultural Stabilization Act and the capital gains tax to ensure that Canadian farmers had access to necessary and sufficient funding. Those were the general resolutions put forward in a motion by the Opposition on an Opposition Day three years ago less one month. The next year, the Government brought forward amendments to these pieces of legislation. That was on March 30, 1982—two years plus a couple of months ago.

The Government brought in legislation. One piece dealt with the Farm Credit Corporation to get away from the high interest rates that the Treasury of Canada was charging the Farm Credit Corporation. The Bill recommended that the Farm Credit Corporation be allowed to borrow money by any means. I stood in the House and congratulated the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) that he should be so lucky as to have an amendment before him that allowed him to do anything he wanted in order to get interest rates down. He accepted that praise. He went on television and made a statement that he would be doing that immediately. That was in 1982. It was two years and two months ago that all this happened. The Minister stood in this House today and said that even if the Bill did come before the House and the amendments were passed, the Government would still be unable to make a payment until the fall, and then only a small fraction of it because the Government cannot bend the formula too much.

Seven years ago, when this Bill originally came out, I wrote to my constituents and recommended that they stay out of the plan. I told them that it was like a lottery and that the only people who should participate are young farmers, farmers so young that they might live until they are old enough to have a chance in a million of getting something out of it. I suggested that they should start farming at 15 and plan to die at 75. It is a matter of luck. They are gambling on the weather as well as everything else which affects the growing of crops.

I do not want to push the point too far, but this was lousy legislation from the very beginning, supported by academic minds going back to Cornell University 60 years ago. My God, the Minister had to stand and take the rim-rocking he took today. He spread through this Chamber vapours of fertilizer that covered the whole area for an hour, but it still is fertilizer.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that the farmer is meeting a cash flow situation, and not just in the west where the western grain stabilization is in effect, but all across the country. His gross income is steady, but the cost inputs have risen so dramatically during the last seven or eight years that even the most efficient farmer in the world cannot accomplish a net gain because there is a cost in there which grew over which he had no control. It was foisted on him by a government which pushed the banks into a deliberate policy of high interest rates thought up by the morons in the Bank of Canada and the Department of Finance who believe you can stop inflation by raising interest rates. Exactly the opposite is the truth, Mr. Speaker. I have said in this House over and over again that interest rates are the main cost. Interest rates are the inflation.

If one looks at the figures for 1982, one sees that every large corporation in Canada averaged out all its costs. If you isolate the main cost, you find that 62 per cent of all the costs of every major corporation in Canada in the year 1982 was in interest. If that does not get through the fog, the brick wall which surrounds the minds of these mandarins who follow a theory which was proven wrong 30 years ago, then this country is doomed, as is the United States and all of Europe as we follow willy-nilly this nonsense that the civil servants of all our countries can plan so much better than the individual. That is the issue here. I would say that this motion, put into this perspective, serves once again, Mr. Speaker, to remind the people who are listening, reading, watching and worrying, that there is still hope.

This Parliament has amended the Farm Credit Corporation Act which enables that corporation to borrow money at half the interest rates and lend it out at half the interest rates, not costing the federal Treasury a nickel but ensuring that there is fair value for the money. In the original Farm Credit Corporation Act we charged the farmers by statute a maximum of 5 per cent. This Government, which has been in office for the last 20 years, ignored that statute, ignored that pledge of honour to the farmers in all parts of Canada. Now there is a long-term interest rate of 15 per cent, Mr. Speaker.

We must honour this Minister, who is not an evil man. He would do the right thing if he only knew what it was. He was all for the Farm Credit Corporation Act three years ago when he introduced it. All Parties supported him in 1982 when it was suggested that it be amended. He said he was going to do it. Why has he not? Because there is another clause in that legislation which says, "With the approval of the Department of Finance". You can understand now, Mr. Speaker, the candidate for the Leader of the Liberal Party when he says, "When I become Prime Minister I want to be able to fire Ministers of Finance which ignore Parliament". Well, he can start right now. There are three of them all along the line, such as, for example, the Hon. Mr. Turner, the Hon. Jean Chrétien, and I am naming them just to make it clear. They are now candidates. Four successive Ministers of Finance have bent their knees to the dictates of a few in the Department of Finance who say that they and God walk alone with the truth.

It is not a new phenomenon. It happens all over the world. When Ministers, and ex-Ministers particularly, get down to talk to their counterparts from all the countries of the world, whether it be Russia, China, the United States, Great Britain, France or Italy, it does not make any difference to the civil servants which Party is in power. They call the tune. That is the real issue we are facing across Canada and in many other nations. When are we going to tackle this mythology that only the elite can rule, the self-styled elite? They actually believe religiously that once you graduate from a well-known university, climb up the ladder with your nose in the right attitude and arrive at the right place, you alone speak with God.

On this particular motion, I know where the hearts of every Member of Parliament are. We are all together on this issue, whether we are Liberal, NDP or Conservative, but the time has to come sooner or later when Cabinet Ministers are willing to resign their positions if Parliament's wishes are being changed. Until a Cabinet Minister is willing to resign on principle and say why, there will be no change.

That is the question which should be asked of these candidates who are running for the leadership of the Liberal Party today. Are they going to volunteer to resign if they become leader and find themselves overruled by their own employees? That is the tragedy of what we are witnessing today. This is not a matter just for farmers. It is a matter for small-businessmen, young people trying to buy a home, older people as well as people trying to go into the export business with the great risk and uncertainty that goes with it. Even the great and the mighty are on their knees: Massey-Ferguson, International Harvester, General Motors, Ford. You never saw such great enterprises coming to Government so fast to get help. The fact is that we are not fighting a mist, we are fighting a belief, a single belief which is quantitatively wrong. Therefore, let us, as Members of Parliament, once again reassert the dominance which the people have given us by electing us and say that we are willing to vote against our own Party, that we are willing to resign from positions of power, if Parliament's wishes are broken. But Ministers just seem to accept this situation. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has apologized to this House. Parliament has said that all children, orphans or not, have equal right to family allowances. Yet regulations put through by Order in Council, which the Ministers do not know anything about, said that neither orphans nor pregnant teenage girls can get family allowance. Who else in Parliament has stood up with me and kept pounding at that issue? There are no votes among the orphans who are under 18. And here is a similar case where the will of Parliament, supported by all Parties of this House in 1982, on the question of interest rates, on these four subjects, is being flouted and ignored, and the Minister does not even know it.

There was an advertisement which appeared three weeks ago in all the rural papers of Saskatchewan with the picture of the Minister of Agriculture. He is preaching the views of the experts in his own Department. I do not know whether or not he read it. He is talking to the people of Saskatchewan, and this is what he said:

> World demand for grains and oilseeds is expected to increase by up to 50 per cent in the next 10 years.
> There are also new markets appearing for our meat products in many Pacific countries too.

It is exactly the opposite, Mr. Speaker, of what his colleague in the other place is telling the farmers and what the Minister said today. There is a great future for agriculture in every country of the world! The Minister knows it. We all know it. There is a great future for our forest and fibre industries, as well as our fish industry. Everyone knows it. The World Food Council has been warning the world, asking us to rally our strength and produce all we can. There will be money made by all countries out of this. Yet we cannot change the law. My God, all you need do is to bring in an item in the Estimates, get it through and you will correct it when you get around to changing the law. They do it all the time.

• (1620)

To sit here as a representative of a rural area and have to listen to that claptrap, Mr. Speaker, comes real hard. I have looked into the faces of these farmers who have fought so hard to get up and going these last 30 years. They have seen all they fought for put in danger today because the Government would not follow the laws of this Parliament which allows them to cut interest rates in half and no one loses any money.

I speak with some feeling, Mr. Speaker, because I have dealt with this subject for many decades. But I say to this House once again that there is no place for any one of us to hide on this issue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? For debate, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture.

[Translation]

Mr. André Bachand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to inform the House about what the Government has done for farmers over the past years through the Farm Credit Corporation. I realize there are still some serious problems in the agricultural industry, but the situation is not as gloomy as some people would have us think. The federal Government is providing substantial assistance to Canadian farmers who are suffering the effects of the present economic situation. The Government's intervention is not a temporary affair but goes back to 1929, when the Canadian Farm Loan Board was created to help farmers who were unable to obtain all the long term farm credit they needed. The Board and its successor, the Farm Credit Corporation, have been meeting farmers' needs for 55 years now.

To give Hon. Members an idea of the funds invested by the Corporation in farming, the Corporation now has about 79,300 active loans, representing a total investment of $4.7 billion at this time. This clearly represents a substantial contribution to the financial well-being of Canadian farmers. During the financial year ending on March 31, 1984, the Corporation approved some 5,736 loans under its regular credit program and the special Farm Financial Assistance Program, totalling $758 million, which represents an increase of $141 million over the previous year. Not long ago, the Government approved a budget for approximately $825 million, the funding that will be available to the Farm Credit Corporation for loans to Canadian farmers in 1984-85.

The mission of the Farm Credit Corporation is to help young farmers and farmers who are just starting, in other words, farmers whose assets are not sufficient to serve as collateral for loans from commercial lenders. The Farm Credit Corporation plays a vital role. Young farmers and owners of small, developing farms are far more vulnerable than established operations. They have fewer assets but need considerable capital to establish and maintain a viable operation. Furthermore, they must be able to borrow capital on favourable terms, something the commercial sector is unable to provide. In fact, the floating interest rates or rates adjustable at frequent intervals that are offered by the commercial sector do not take into consideration the particular constraints of the agricultural sector.

Throughout the Canadian labour force, the only people who are really suited to primary farm production and who are anxious to work in this area are the sons and daughters of farmers. They are, in fact, the only people with a knowledge and practical experience of farming.

We must therefore facilitate the transfer of farm operations to the younger generation, so as to keep this human resource in the farming sector, and maintain and increase productivity in the agricultural industry.

This will happen only if we offer interest rates at reasonable levels as well as favourable credit terms, something commercial financial institutions normally do not do.

In addition, family farms are transferred gradually. In general, the son or daughter will purchase the farm bit by bit while acquiring the assets and experience needed. Eventually, they take over the whole operation. As the land itself is the basic requirement for most farm producers, beginners generally need credit to purchase land. On the average, farm real estate represents close to 80 per cent of total investment needs in agriculture. Credit requirements for land purchases are therefore very high. While parents generally want to help their son or daughter get established on the farm, they must recover the assets accumulated in their farm to be able to retire, or to distribute their property equitably amongst the family members. Even young people who are getting started with the assistance of their family will therefore need credit on terms not generally offered by the business sector. This is where the Farm Credit Corporation comes in. At the present time, the FCC offers the farm community loans of up to $350,000 or $600,000, depending on whether the operation involves one or more eligible applicants.

The Farm Credit Corporation loan limits were increased twice during the last three years to meet the needs of farmers more adequately. In view of the special financing requirements of farm operations, the Government has offered them, by way of the Farm Credit Corporation, long term farm credit programs on terms not generally available either to them or to other small businesses, to promote farm production. These terms include mortgages at interest rates frozen for five, ten or thirty years, repayment periods of up to thirty years, flexible repayment schedules, a recovery policy which takes into account temporary financial problems and the cyclical nature of farm income, loans of up to 100 per cent of the assets stated as equity as well as a financial advice and consultation service for farmers.

The Farm Credit Corporation puts a lot of energy into its consultation services program because the farmer needs a sound understanding of financial management in order to succeed. The FCC offers advisory services at the preliminary stage, when the loan is approved and at various subsequent stages. While financial advice is available to all farmers, the FCC concentrates on its new borrowers or on other borrowers in need and those who request assistance.

The purpose of the advisory services offered by the FCC is to help farmers manage the financing of their operations in such a way as to eventually reach their personal and economic goals.

The FCC borrowers who need advice are generally those with limited assets and a high level of indebtedness, with an expanding operation but little experience, with a high-risk operation or financial difficulties. The credit advisors of the FCC provide borrowers with the assistance they need to start a bookkeeping system, and to interpret and analyze financial data so that they can identify and solve problems as soon as these crop up. Borrowers normally follow the program for two or three years. This is long enough for them to learn to manage their financial affairs efficiently. As of March 31, 1984, 4,800 borrowers were registered in the consultation services program, which accounts for 30 per cent of all FCC borrowers.

In addition to managing these credit programs, the FCC co-operates with other federal agencies and departments, provincial governments and private credit institutions to meet the special needs of the agricultural industry. For several years now, it has been co-operating with the Provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Alberta and has been involved in their interest subsidization programs. The FCC has intensified its efforts in this field in 1982 and 1983 by being involved in the Saskatchewan farm purchasing program as a lending institution.

Last year, the FCC signed an agreement with the Province of Ontario to act as a lending institution under the assistance program for new farmers.

The FCC lends to farmers who represent high risks for the private sector. A survey carried out by the corporation has shown that the average Canadian farm had net assets of 85 per cent. On the other hand, those farmers who obtained a regular loan from the FCC had net assets of nearly 50 per cent in the last five years. The average net assets of farmers who obtained a loan under the special Farm Financial Assistance Program were even lower, namely 35 per cent in the 1983-84 fiscal year and 40 per cent in the previous year.

● (1630)

The loan-to-equity ratio is also indicative of the risks involved. As the FCC was authorized in 1975-76 to lend up to 100 per cent of the value of the property offered as equity, the loan-to-equity ratio is increasing. The FCC has granted a greater percentage of its loans to farmers who offer less equity than in the past. This tendency to lend to farmers with lower net assets and a higher loan-to-equity ratio results from the fact that the corporation is lending to younger farmers with limited resources, and also from the difficult economic situation.

The special Farm Financial Assistance Program was reintroduced in the June 1982 budget. Loans to farmers under 35 continue to account for the larger part of the funds loaned by the FCC, making up 62 per cent of the total. Most of these farmers own little land and have few personal assets. Whether they want to get into farming or to extend their operation, these young farmers must borrow larger amounts for longer periods. Many of them, especially those who must consolidate their debts, cannot offer additional equity, which means an even higher loan-to-equity ratio.

As Hon. Members are aware, the FCC has administered the special Farm Financial Assistance Program since its implementation in November 1981.

Under this program, farmers facing financial disaster were offered for a two-year period an interest rebate on their loans from the FCC. Parliament allocated funds to the FCC to cover the rebate guaranteed on these special loans.

When the program was launched in November 1981, the Government had set aside an overall budget of $50 million, including $5 million for interest rebates of 5 per cent, the key element. The funds earmarked for the program were soon exhausted and it ended on March 31, 1982.

This time the interest rebate has been set at 4 per cent and the $200 million allocated to the program have made it possible to pay out $16 million in interest rebates. The program was renewed in the April 1983 Budget with an additional $100 million Government commitment.

Between November 1981 and March 31, 1984, the Farm Credit Corporation spent in excess of $341 million under this program and more than 2,200 Canadian farmers had received or are still receiving assistance thanks to the program.

When the program was set up, the Government was expecting the economy to pick up steam during the two-year rebate program. We all know that the recovery was sluggish in the agricultural sector, and the Government is now considering the possibility of extending the rebate period or other mechanisms to help farmers who are still strapped for cash. As the Minister pointed out, a decision will be made soon.

Mr. Speaker, I should emphasize that the role of the Farm Credit Corporation is to make mortgage loans available only to those farmers who are now considered as high risk ventures. The Farm Credit Corporation was not established to assume the responsibilities of the banks or extend credit to commercial agricultural operations. In the late seventies, when the agricultural economy was booming, commercial lenders asked for a larger slice of that market. Despite a decline in agricultural activities, I expect that they will continue to make farm loans. The Government is keeping a close watch on long-term agricultural loan market trends and is considering various alternatives to provide funding for the Farm Credit Corporation. For its part, the FCC is now seeking ways to reduce rates on those high interest loans. The Government is firmly committed to support the agricultural community and we are trying to find the best means to shore up that industry just as it is getting out of the doldrums.

I should like to remind Hon. Members that the Farm Credit Corporation is one of the very few lending institutions whose loan recovery policy is geared to the cyclical nature of farm income. As long as an agricultural operator stands a reasonable chance of pulling himself out of a precarious financial situation, the FCC will give him free rein.

The federal Government helps Canada's agricultural community through credit programs on which farmers can rely to make their operations more profitable. It is through the Farm Credit Corporation long-term mortgage loan programs and the medium-term loan program under the Farm Improvement Loans Act that the federal Government makes sure that Canadian agriculture remains one of the most efficient and most productive sectors of our economy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King).

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? For debate, the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to participate in this debate inasmuch as it affects the area which I represent, namely, that of Okanagan-Similkameen. I congratulate you on your correct pronunciation, Mr. Speaker. Some others have failed in that regard.

The farmers in Okanagan-Similkameen, and in British Columbia as a whole, face, I believe, the most desperate circumstances of any farmers in all of Canada. Therefore, it is appropriate that we speak to this resolution today.

I have in my possession a letter which I recently received from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), which begins with this statement:

> It was with some dismay that I read a report in the British Columbia Grower's News, entitled "M.P. Raps Government"... the report cites statements by you criticizing the scarcity of funds available through the FCC and the outrageously high rate of interest for what loans the corporation does make.

The letter goes on to say:

> I would like to take this opportunity to inform you of some of the things Agriculture Canada and the Canadian Government have done, and are doing, for the fruit farmers of British Columbia.

I believe he must have circulated his three-page letter to everyone in his caucus because there has been a repeated recitation of the points made in the Minister's letter to myself. The Minister is certainly justified in explaining to me, to the House, to Canadians, and to the world-wide constituency, of which he is so pleased to speak and which he claims to represent at every opportunity, the contributions of the federal Government to Canadian agriculture. No one disputes that. Likewise the farmers of Canada, and of British Columbia in particular, are justified in telling the Minister of the areas in which he is failing them. They are significant to their difficulties.

● (1640)

In the statement recently circulated by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, which deals largely with farm credit, a number of resolutions and points are made to which the Minister, I think, should pay attention because they would assist the farm community. The Federation of Agriculture had a resolution about the elimination of the 9 per cent federal sales tax on farm fuels. We agree with that. It speaks of Section 31—restricted farm losses and the application of that section. We agree with that. It speaks of amendments to the capital gains tax law. It speaks of duties and sales taxes on imported agriculture products. It speaks of tariff protection. It speaks of stabilization payments. Most specifically, it focuses on the Farm Credit Corporation, its policy and the ability of the FCC to address the concerns of the Canadian farmer.

Yesterday, Mr. Jack Wessell, General Manager of the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture, together with Mr. Harold Allison who comes from my riding, a rancher of note, Vice-president of the B.C. Federation of Agriculture and Chairman of the B.C. Cattlemen's Committee, were in Ottawa bringing a message of special concern from B.C. farmers of the very special and damaging circumstance with which B.C. farmers must contend, circumstance which this Government and this Minister seem inclined to ignore and gloss over in their statements and policies. These deal with the high cost of labour, land, equipment and supplies, which are the highest costs in Canada. In many cases they are the highest costs in the world.

I would like to point out to the House and to the Minister, because I know he will read my speech with rapt attention, the labour situation that exists in British Columbia. This is an area with a highly organized labour force. Farmers in British Columbia must compete with other areas of employment. Just last week we met with a group of mining executives from British Columbia who pointed out to us that the costs of mining in British Columbia are the highest in the world. The labour costs in British Columbia mining are the highest in the world. In the forest industry in British Columbia the situation is the same. The labour costs are the highest in the world. In transportation as well the labour costs are the highest in Canada and perhaps in the world. And then we have food merchandising. Let me read from the March 1984 issue of Country Life, which is British Columbia's agricultural newspaper. The article reads:

> According to a recent article in the Vancouver Sun, these food workers are now approaching the second year of a two-year agreement which saw wages rise 85 cents an hour last year, and will see wages again rise 76 cents to 83 cents this April.
> These raises will bring the hourly wages of a part-time clerk stocking shelves in the store to $16.78 an hour, while full-time clerks in the same category will earn $618 for a 40 hour week: a total of $32,136 a year.

It goes on to explain that on top of that there is an additional about 40 per cent in benefits. The article continues:

To add insult to injury, a comparison of the wages of the retail employees to similar employees in other parts of North America is in order.

It goes on to compare the $16 an hour in B.C. for food handlers to the $12 in Ontario. It is much less in Manitoba and much, much less in the State of Washington, U.S.A. The writer of this article states:

I don't think it is hard to understand why local fruit growers only receive less than five cents a pound for apples, while consumers pay more than 50 cents a pound.

That is the cry of agriculture in general. Why can we not get more of the money which the consumer pays? The Minister knows that these circumstances exist and that they plague B.C. agriculture. He has been there. He has met with farmers in British Columbia.

A few weeks ago I participated in a meeting in Kelowna at which the Minister met representatives of the B.C. fruit tree industry. This meeting was a direct result of representations which I made to the Minister following a very dramatic Labour Day rally in Penticton at which nearly 1,000 farmers, many with tractors and trucks which tied up highway traffic, took their protest to the public.

During the meeting with the Minister, one intelligent, industrious, keen orchardist—and I see the Minister coming into the House and he will remember that man—explained the situation of high costs. I think it was Rob Dawson who indicated to the Minister the high level of wages which must be paid to Okanagan farm labour, high in comparison with other areas of Canada and in comparison with other competing areas in the world. He posed a question to the Minister: How do we survive in this circumstance? I remember well the Minister's response. He said, "I hope you are not suggesting that you should pay lower wages". I am sure the Minister remembers that. Of course, that is not the position which the farmers of B.C. take. We know that farm workers are not overpaid for what they do. We know that we must maintain wage scales competitive with other segments of the B.C. economy if we are to have labour on farms.

I recite this episode because it demonstrates an absolute contradiction in the position which the Minister is taking with respect to the B.C. farm community. On the one hand he says, as he did to Rob Dawson in Kelowna, "I hope you are not suggesting that you should pay lower wages", in other words go on paying the highest farm wages in the world. Go on paying for all the social benefits which are demanded as part of your employment payments. Go on paying the highest cost for agricultural land in Canada. Go on paying the highest costs for water, power, services, farm equipment and supplies. In telling the farmer to keep on paying these highest costs, the Minister contradicts his position as indicated in his statement on stabilization. Now he changes his tune and says that he recognizes no differences in input costs and that stabilization is at the same level from coast to coast. Not only did he state that, but he indicated that if a provincial Government recognizes that these cost differences exist and does something to assist farmers to cope with higher costs, the federal Government will penalize them. In other words, he is saying that if the Province of British Columbia helps farmers to stay in business, to keep from going bankrupt, to pay their bills and labour costs, the federal Government will penalize them by refusing them stabilization. Mr. Wessel and Mr. Allison came to Ottawa to plead with the Government on behalf of B.C. farmers. They wanted the Government to recognize the circumstances because if it did not B.C. farmers could not exist. I suppose we could say, so much for co-operative federalism, so much for the philosophy or the attitude of the man who has hopes to lead the Liberal Party!

• (1650)

Only a few days ago we heard an Hon. Member on the government side talking in the House about getting payments out when they should get out. We should get them out to the people when they need them. At that time I rose to speak about the Minister's kind letter to me in which he mentioned stabilization payments being made on behalf of apple growers for the 1982 crop. It was marvellous, but the problem was that the payment came in 1984. We must remember that farmers started having input costs to produce their 1982 crop in November, 1981. Many farmers have told me, the Minister and anyone who would listen, that by the time the payment arrived they had used up most of its benefit in bank interest. They should get the payment out when it is helpful. I am sure the Minister appreciates that. Farmers appreciate it when it comes in the form of a cheque with a date that means something to them.

The Minister is aware of some of the irritants affecting farmers. We should not be nit-picking over detail when they are in trouble. I am thinking of the protest in the Okanagan which was brought to the attention of the Minister at a meeting in Kelowna. I know it is a tough, controversial issue. It concerns retroactive changes to the crop insurance program which prejudice the interests of orchardists who signed up in good faith and discovered later that the program had changed. I believe it was pointed out to the Minister that some $1 million was involved or had been reduced from payments made to farmers who were already in deep trouble. Many of them will probably be unable to survive.

I had occasion to meet with guests today from the Okanagan who told me that three or four orchards in south Okanagan have gone into receivership or bankruptcy. They told me about their peach operations, how advance payments were made and then at the end of the season they had to repay money to the packing house which advanced payments, through the federal Government program I admit. The payment from the market to peach growers in the Okanagan was $58.84 per tonne. This is what the selling agency was able to send to packing house organizations for distribution to growers. However, it cost about $400 per tonne to produce the crop. Certainly their costs are higher than in other areas of Canada, but these are the facts.

How can the Minister justify saying to farmers faced with deficits that he knows it costs $400 per tonne to produce peaches, that the market returns $58.84 per tonne, but if the provincial Government gives them any assistance, they will be penalized in the national interest? That does not make sense. No farmer in British Columbia will accept that philosophy, nor should they be asked to accept it.

Farmers know what appeared in the headlines of the Osoyoos Times over a dramatic picture of a dump truck dumping tonnes and tonnes of packed peaches last year because there was no market for them. Why was there no market? It was because the federal Government allowed imported peaches into the country as fresh fruit and in canned or processed condition. There were no hindrances. The anger of the farmers was demonstrated in the Labour Day rally. They asked for some protection to be provided, not against reasonably-priced products but against products that were dumped from other producing countries, notably Australia. The Minister knows the effect of Australian packed fruit, processed and canned fruit, in the Okanagan. It has resulted in the closing down of every cannery in the Okanagan Valley but one, and it is now in the process of being sold.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair regrets interrupting the Hon. Member, but his speaking time has come to an end.

Mr. King: I am sorry too.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member will be able to answer questions in the 10-minute period provided for questions or comments.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that I left Cabinet committee to come down here to hear the Hon. Member. I hope I heard all his comments, but quite a bit of what I heard was a little inaccurate, I might say.

He talked about imports. He knows what representatives of his own province said when there was a discussion about controlling imports. They said that they could not do that because they exported lumber. He knows very well that they export apples to some 30 or perhaps 40 countries and have done so for years. When we talk about imports and exports, it is a two-way street. If we are to be rough on some imports, we can be sure that someone will be rough on our exports.

Also he talked about the crop insurance changes. He knows full well that the province initiated the changes in crop insurance. It was not the federal Government. We practically okayed what they wanted. The members of the advisory committee on crop insurance were asked what they thought about it, according to the records that I have, and they did not see much wrong with it, until they discovered that the new plan in some instances was not as good as the old one, and they wanted to change it back. When talking about controlling imports, I remember a provincial Minister in British Columbia saying that British Columbia was one of the biggest exporters of lumber and of other horticultural crops to other parts of the world.

I am sure the Hon. Member knows quite a bit about crop insurance. He was an agent for that federally-funded program. Imagine, that terrible federal Government! He was actually an agent selling that insurance where the federal Government funds 50 per cent of the premium, the producer pays the other 50 per cent, and the province administers the program. As an agent, he was paid for doing that.

The Hon. Member knows that stabilization is not the same from coast to coast, unless it is a nationally-marketed commodity. There are eastern and western regions for stabilization. The Hon. Member could have read the whole letter and stated how many millions of dollars I was able to send to the two different groups. I am going by memory, but I believe it was a total of $8 million to buy surplus products in their warehouses so there would not be distressed selling. That money was provided interest-free. When you add all that we spend in British Columbia, you find that we care as much about agriculture in that province as does the provincial Government. and maybe a little bit more.

The Hon. Member talked about using income from the provincial plan. Does he not consider income from a government the same as income from a factory? He talked about treating people with equity. You have to take into consideration all of these programs. We offered 100 per cent income insurance under the stabilization program. That plan, which we offered federally, was superior to everything that British Columbia had, except the cow-calf program. They refused to join. They agreed that it was better for the other crops in British Columbia.

I repeat what I said earlier. We offered the plan, and not one province came forward and said it wanted the plan, that it would work out some kind of agreement. They did not accept it in 1977, but now they are asking for it. That is about all I want to say. I did not hear the rest of the Hon. Member's comments. You will notice that most of my comments were corrections to what he said.

Mr. King: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister had been here from the beginning because I did mention his letter. I said he was certainly justified in explaining to everyone the federal Government's contribution to Canadian agriculture, and nobody disputes that. I also said that farmers have an equal right and justification to tell the Minister the areas in which he is failing.

With respect to tariffs, let me read what the British Columbia Minister of Agriculture said. I quote the following from the Penticton Herald of September 9:

> Agriculture Minister Harvey Schroder said Wednesday he is seeking imposition of temporary tariffs on imported fruits and vegetables when they are surplus in British Columbia. The request was made on an informal base to Federal Minister Eugene Whelan.

It is true that crop insurance changes did originate with the provincial Government. The provincial Government asked the Minister and the federal Government not to impose those changes for one year. The provincial Government, which initiated the changes after seeing the implications, asked that they be withheld for one year.

I do not remember the point that was made regarding stabilization. I do remember the Minister saying that everything the federal Government was offering was superior to anything available in British Columbia. In that circumstance, why then are the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture and the B.C. Cattlemen's Association here and why has the BCFGA made representations? Why are they making these representations if what the Minister is offering is superior? Obviously it is not superior. It is obvious that the provincial program of assistance recognizes that regional input costs are grossly higher than those which the federal Government notes on a national basis.

Obviously the provincial Government's program is much more attractive. It is the only reason why farmers in B.C., the Okanagan Valley in particular, are in existence today. It is because of the assistance provided by the provincial program. The Minister can laugh, but if he imposed his will, farmers in British Columbia would be put out of business.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must be aware of the recent B.C. budget which cut the Agriculture Minister's budget by several million dollars. The controlled atmosphere temperatures for storage for the fruit industry would not be there if it were not for the federal Government. They used half the federal budget in British Columbia. I congratulate them for that. The producers were quick to recognize the legislation and to take advantage of it. They did that to their advantage.

They did have a couple of bad years. The Hon. Member also knows they had ten good years previously when they were able to use the storage for their apples. The Hon. Member talked about stabilization for 1984. He knows that the final sales are not made for nearly a year. With the controlled atmospheric temperatures, you can keep apples that long. They are in excellent condition when they are taken out of storage and put on the market. The market can be supplied for 12 months of the year. The Hon. Member is intimating the 1982 crop was all sold in 1982 but the payments were not made until 1984. He knows the year-end is not until the new 1983 crop is about ready to be harvested in September.

Mr. Mayer: It should have been paid sooner.

Mr. Whelan: Why don't you just shut up for a minute? The Hon. Member makes noise, but that is about all he does. He has opposition in his own riding. When I was in Winnipeg the other day, I was told the Hon. Member has opposition in his riding because he is not right-wing enough. You asked me to say that, Charlie, and I did.

Mr. Mayer: You said you would come out and campaign for me. That would bring me back to the left.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. We will resume debate at this time.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to take part in this debate because of the importance of the agriculture sector and the resource sector. The summary of the challenges and choices which came from the royal commission headed by the Hon. Donald Macdonald was made available a week ago. It states that one of the challenges is the resources and the environment.

One challenge is to manage Canada's resources for maximum benefit over time and to ensure a pattern of development in harmony with enhanced environmental quality to continue the emphasis on the primary sector engine of economic growth. It stresses "to continue the emphasis". Under our very capable Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), this industry has gone forward. Unlike other sectors, we are subject to world economic conditions.

• (1710)

In his book entitled The Third Wave, Alvin Toffler points out that we can no longer isolate ourselves from the impact of conditions or policies that are put in place by other countries in the world. I look at this statement in the context of the huge surpluses and subsidies that are paid out in the European Common Market. I look at it in the context of the dropping commodity prices in the Canadian market. This is where we must look for assistance for Canadian farmers.

We have one of the highest standards of living of any country in the world. Consequently, we have set the precedent of a domestic price and an export price for some products that have been grown in Canada over the years. I believe that assistance to the farmers must come through the marketplace itself in co-ordination with the various policies that are brought forward by the Government and the Minister of Agriculture in particular.

I should point out that the sales tax which has been discussed here today is not a new tax that was brought in under the National Energy Program. That tax has existed for many years. In fact, the November, 1978 Budget reduced that tax from 12 per cent to the current 9 per cent.

To put this in perspective, I would like to place on the record some estimates of savings to farmers. After depreciation, fuel costs amount to a small percentage of a farmer's total costs. As a percentage of total costs after depreciation, fuel costs amount to approximately 8 per cent. Therefore, we are talking about a saving of a per cent of the cost of farm fuels, which account for 8 per cent of farm costs. In fact, we are talking about 9 per cent of 8 per cent. The excise tax on fuels is 1.5 cents per litre and is refundable upon application. This tax is not a net expense to the producer.

Another point I wish to make abundantly clear is that it is not only the federal Government that applies taxes to oil and gas producers. For example, in Saskatchewan, provincial royalties can be as high as 30 per cent although some wells and developments may enjoy three-year to five-year royalty holidays. Under the Oil and Gas Conservation Act in Alberta, a levy is imposed on the operators of oil and gas wells and oil sands projects. This levy is basically a provincial Crown royalty on crude oil and gas, varying with production, based on a two-tier formula. This levy could amount to as much as 36 per cent, but at the present time is only 20 per cent.

On February 1, the Government of Canada reduced to zero the tax on natural gas and gas liquids. Was this saving passed on to the consumer? We must remember that farmers are consumers of natural gas as well. As most of us realize, natural gas is an ingredient of ammonia-based fertilizers. On checking the price of fertilizer, I have not found that it has decreased. In fact, the cost of natural gas to the consumer increased at the same time as this tax was removed.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, my question to the Opposition is, if this tax to which we are referring is reduced, will that benefit be passed on to the farmers? Can members of the Opposition give me the assurance that this will happen, or will the prices simply increase to make up the difference between what it is now and what it will be if the tax is removed? I know that they cannot assure me that this benefit will be passed on, yet they are basing their argument on the assumption that the price to the farmers will be reduced automatically if the tax is removed. It did not happen with natural gas and I would certainly want some assurance that it would happen in this case.

Opposition Members have not suggested that there should be a reduction in royalties and taxes at the provincial level as well. However, members of the Opposition did not mention what happened in Ontario when dye was introduced into farm fuel. The Ontario Minister of Revenue passed legislation two or three years ago which required that colour be added to the diesel fuel used in farm vehicles and tractors to distinguish between that diesel fuel and the diesel fuel used in highway vehicles. What happened when that was done, Mr. Speaker? A great many of my constituents suffered severe damage to their farm equipment. Not only were the filters on those tractors and combines plugged up, but in some cases the injectors and engines were ruined. The introduction of this dye was legislated a few years ago and that type of dye was only changed last year after tremendous expense to the producers. If that type of dye were to be used in the fuel for highway vehicles, I can imagine what would happen on our highways, especially during rush hour. However, there must be some way of distinguishing between the fuel used for food production purposes and the fuel used for highway vehicles.

One point that neither of the Opposition Parties mentioned is that as a result of the Government's pricing agreement on energy, there has already been a huge saving to the Government. This saving has affected not only Canadian farmers but all consumers, and it came about because of the blended energy price formula which was brought in under the National Energy Program. Opposition proposals would have created a higher price which, from what we understand, would have been effective until 1984. It is now the year 1984 and the Government's blended price is in place. That saving is accruing not only to the farming and producing sector but to our entire economy.

I believe that Canadian farmers should realize that there are other areas of savings that have been passed along to them. I would like to go one step further and point out to Canadian farmers that under the National Energy Program, we achieved self-sufficiency as of last November. Over 4,000 oil wells were drilled and completed in Canada in 1983. I am speaking now of oil wells and not of gas wells. Previously, the best year for the drilling and completion of oil wells was 1980, before the National Energy Program came into effect, at which time approximately 2,600 oil wells were drilled and completed.

I could go one step further and compare those figures with United States figures. The ratio is approximately the same. Approximately 10 times the number of wells were drilled in the United States during those same years as in Canada. The National Energy Program has been a success and has increased the level of Canadian ownership from approximately 28 per cent to 38 per cent.

The Government has moved in these areas to make sure that one of our strategic resources has been Canadianized. We have also made sure that we have become self-sufficient. Although we do not have a long-term security of supply in the oil sector yet, judging by the number of oil wells drilled and completed in Canada this year, we are well on our way toward achieving that security of supply.

We do admit that there has been a decrease in the number of gas wells drilled. In the Province of Alberta alone, there are something like 11,000 gas wells which are capped because the market for natural gas is not sufficient. Consequently, operators haved eased off on the drilling of gas wells. However, this has been a success, and I would like to indicate that there has been tremendous progress made since the federal Government introduced the National Energy Program.

I would like to reflect back just for a moment. I see here the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). I know he would like to speak and I intend to give him ample time.

A little over two weeks ago I spoke in the House about the rural economy and the pressures that farmers are facing. I am well aware of the hardships, particularly those faced by farmers who do not have a large amount of equity in their operations—young people who are trying to get established. They are confronted with higher input costs on the one hand and lower receipts for the products they sell on the other. They are caught in a very difficult position. The Farm Credit Corporation, as was pointed out earlier today, has increased the amount of funding available to them. That is not the only answer. We must have in Canada a countervailing force in the marketplace to counteract the buying power of the very large retail chains which have formed buying groups to put pressure on the marketplace. In many cases it is fair to assume that producers' prices are set at the retail level and reflected downward—everyone else having a share of the profit if there is one. We have to re-examine the whole pricing sector in Canada if we are to achieve the maximum potential of our resource sector.

I said at that time that farmers should study the legislation available to them, both at the provincial and at the federal level to enable them to establish a price at the farmgate that would reflect their costs of production, plus a reasonable return on investment and labour.

I do not think there have been any suggestions presented here today or two weeks ago when there were two Opposition Days in the same week. I do not think any of the proposed actions, individually, will put the farm sector back on its feet. It has to be a co-ordinated effort involving programs put forward by the Minister of Agriculture. The House must consider some new programs, which I will speak about at another time. I have been in consultation with the Minister of Agriculture regarding some new proposals.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions? Are we resuming debate? Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments this afternoon on the motion, but I want to be fair to my hon. friend from the NDP who wishes to say a few words. I will attempt to split with him the time that is remaining. I know that the Minister, who is here, would like to hear both of us.

There is no end to the problems in the agricultural industry despite the fact that the Minister, in his condescending way, and the Member who has just finished speaking tell farmers how well off they are, how good they have it and how benevolent a government they have looking after their needs. This Government is managing the crisis in agriculture. It has and it will. There are no programs. There are no schemes. There is no light at the end of the tunnel. They are managing the crisis. And yet the farm economy in our country is measured by the bankruptcies that are experienced every year. It is measured by increases or decreases in the farm economy every year. The Minister and the $800 a day royal commissioner will tell us that we have to look at the history. At the turn of the century 49 per cent of the working population of this country was involved in some agricultural-related activity. today it is less than—what is it, Mr. Minister, 3 per cent?

Mr. Whelan: It is 4.4 per cent.

Mr. Oberle: It is 4.4 per cent. Well, it is less than 3 per cent in the United States. So I assume that the Government plans to reduce that percentage and reduce family farms—this rural, unsophisticated, smelly kind of business—to get on with concentrating and integrating farm operations. It will get into it in a big way because this Government obviously thinks that big is always better. The Government thinks that the family farm is really a way of life that belongs in the past. I say that it is not a way of life that belongs in the past, although I agree that it has become a very expensive way of life.

Farmers pay very dearly to live on the farm. They contribute much of their energy and resources to keep the family farm alive, despite the Government. Farmers throughout the country agree that it is high time and a matter of urgent priority for Canadians to bring about a change in government. We need a government that is committed to a different set of priorities in terms of the industrial and economic structure of our country—priorities which put emphasis on the prime resource sectors of our economy; agriculture being the main pillar, along with mining, fishing and forestry. We must concentrate on our natural strengths once again and rebuild our economy that way. Only then can we pursue the high-tech, value added schemes for secondary manufacturing industries.

I would like someone to tell me, particularly the Minister of Agriculture who travels around the world, how are we to live with the high-tech revolution, our secondary manufacturing schemes, particularly in the aeronautics field? How are we to replace between $30 billion and $35 billion of foreign exchange earnings that are generated by agriculture, forestry and mining? It is a dream that is far in the future. We have to rebuild our prime resource sectors.

What are the problems in agriculture? It does not matter where you touch it, it is like an elephant. There is a problem everywhere you touch it. The key problems are laid out in this motion, the immediate pay-out of some of the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, which incidentally belongs to the farmers. There is no intention of paying out any of the Government's money, as I understand it, from this fund. All that is being paid out is the farmers' money.

When we are told there is a fund, I do not believe there is a fund. Certainly, there is a bookkeeping entry, but the money is in the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the Government. Of course, there is an accrual of interest, but there is not a fund. The Government has not paid into a fund. It is a bookkeeping entry. If the Government had paid into a fund it would have had to go elsewhere to borrow money to sustain its operations. Let us not be fooled about that. The Government has not been too generous. It does not pay anything toward this fund.

Why are we asking for an immediate pay-out of some of the Western Grain Stabilization Fund? The reason is that the average farmer in Canada does not have enough money to put in his crops. This, as it happens, is the season of the year when farmers put in their crops. I am sure that the Minister of Agriculture understands that. It is in the spring when crops are planted. Whether it is tomatoes or wheat, whatever is put in, it is usually put in at that time of year—

Mr. Benjamin: He is putting in a crop of a different kind.

Mr. Oberle: That is right. He is trying to seed a crop of a different kind. His harvest is on June 16. Indeed, it will be one of the earliest crops. It will be a hail-out.

• (1730)

We do not want to be unkind to you, Mr. Minister, but it is not funny. The farmers are in this kind of financial situation because of a number of factors. They have all been enumerated here today and will be again in future debates. The input costs have increased out of all proportion, and what is particularly serious about the input costs is that they are uncontrollable. I suppose that if you cannot afford a new combine, you can always buy a used machine. There are all kinds of used farm equipment one can pick up at auction sales. In our part of the country, there are all kinds of auction sales and every morning when you turn on the radio you are told about at least five or six of them because farmers just cannot hack it any longer. So you have some control over that. You can delay purchasing a new combine and buy a used one. But there are certain costs, so-called input costs, over which you have no control, such as fuel tax, and related to that is the cost of fertilizer. For the Minister's edification, when you plant a crop you always put on fertilizer right after, so that is a cost which accrues to the farmer at this particular time, not in October when the Minister is planning to make a stabilization pay-out. They are faced with these costs right now.

I will tell the Minister something else. The suppliers who supply the fertilizer and the fuel, the bulk plant agent in the farm community, do not have the flexibility either to carry the farmer for these five or six months. There is no flexibility left in the small and medium-business sector. It needs its money now.

The former speaker said that farmers should not be so ungrateful but should look at what we have done. We have secured ourselves of enough energy for the future and, not only that, we have Canadianized the industry. We now own the industry. Well, a big help that has been to the farmers! We now own PetroCan. We have paid out $6 billion to own a part or a greater share of the Canadian energy sector. That $6 billion has had to come from somewhere, and the farmers are paying a big share of that $6 billion. Has it created a new barrel of oil? Has it created any jobs? Of course not. We have our priorities all wrong. We should have established some priorities to save the family farm. We should have taken $2 billion of that $6 billion to help the farm economy. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, the farmers have never asked to get anything for nothing.

We here in the capital decided that it is much better for us to have a so-called cheap food policy, that it is much better to make sure of our standard of living, and it is quite true, we do enjoy a very high standard of living in this country. However, I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, it is not owing to this Government. It is not owing to most of the other workers in our society. It is to the credit of our farmers who are working for nothing to grow cheap food so we have to spend only 24 per cent or 25 per cent of our disposable income on that commodity. That is not because of good management. That is because we have killed our farm economy and the farmers are working for nothing. They are not receiving any kind of return on their investment. Their investment is high. Land costs are very high. Machinery costs are very high. Yet the farmer still produces cheap food.

The Government says that if we did not have that cheap food policy and if the farmer were to get a return on his investment which is commensurate or equal to the return on the investment of any other industry, be it lumber or any other industry, food prices in this country would have to treble. That would happen if the farmer were to get a decent return on his investment similar to what is earned in any other industry. Therefore, if the Government permitted that to happen, we would have to find some other way to help people buy food. We would need to have a sort of negative income tax or more welfare. Certainly, old age pensions would have to be doubled. That is the incredible situation which exists, and the Government has no flexibility, so it dumps it on the farmer. What makes it worse is that after having a cheap food policy in this country, we turn around and export that cheap food. We sell wheat and cereal grains below the cost of production everywhere in the world, to Japan, to Russia, and to the European Economic Community. A couple of years ago we sold barley to the European Economic Community. I believe it was at $140 a tonne. The European Economic Community knows that without a decent agricultural policy, if it relied on the rest of the world to provide it with its food, it would be in serious trouble. It is a sophisticated, modern industrial society, but it pays a lot of attention to its farm economy.

I do not know what the prices of barley are today. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) could tell us what they are a little later because he was involved with it on a daily basis, but two years ago the European Economic Community resold our barley. It bought it for $140 a tonne and resold it for $230 a tonne. Do you know what it did with the $90 profit? It gave it to its farmers in the form of a subsidy. That makes a lot of sense. We are the only innocent traders in the world. We are the only people, a lower middle power in terms of the industrial scheme in the world, who think that you should give away food. We think we should not enter into supply-management arrangements with foreign countries to protect our own interests. We think we should give everything away and pay what it costs in return for everything we import.

If this Government really wanted to do something, what it ought to do is to get together with the United States, Argentina and Australia which, combined, sell 95 per cent of the wheat and cereal crops, not to form a cartel or anything like that but to determine what the cost is of the production of the wheat which we give away to the rest of the world. Then we should arrive at an agreement, which may have to involve some production management and some schemes which would increase and decrease production. Then we could agree that no one would sell below that break even cost, and that break even cost would of course have to reflect the cost of production, including some return on the investment of the farmer, and the transportation costs.

After debating the Crow rate in the House for a year and a half, after we fought over who should get the subsidy and who should pay it and where it should go, we did not subsidize our farmers. We did not subsidize our railways. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, whom we are subsidizing. We are subsidizing Russia, Japan and the European Economic Community, because they are the people to whom we are shipping our grain. We are exporting our cheap food after spending a year fighting over who pays and who receives a subsidy. Not once did the Minister mention that we are not really subsidizing any of our own producers or our own railways. The cost of transportation is a cost of delivery and production of this most vital of our prime commodities, and we are giving it away.

Has the Minister talked to the United States, to Argentina or to Australia to see what they are doing, because they are in the same fix. I have gone to Washington with some of my colleagues and talked to some of our counterparts down there. They are saying, "What a great idea. We must do it. But every time we talk, because we are the leaders in the field, we get it in the neck from Canada because it will underbid us. It does not want to talk to us".

Has the Minister ever given any thought to producing a kind of policy which would give us a reasonable return? Of course, the rest of the world is saying, "What a cruel hoax that would be, to arrive at a supply-management agreement among the food producing countries when the whole world is starving for our food production", and that is quite true. Naturally, we should make a contribution to a world food bank. We should be responsible in terms of the unique position we are in and of our potential and ability to grow food. We should recognize also that there is great need for our production out in the world. Is it really the responsibility of the food producing countries only or should the other industrial countries make a contribution? What would a scheme look like which would involve all industrial countries, including the communist countries? They should make a contribution to a world bank which would be there in times of need so that millions of people would not starve to death from time to time in Africa, Asia and elsewhere. An ambulance driver should not ask whether he is going to get paid when he picks up an accident victim. What a cruel hoax it would be for an ambulance driver to say: Can you pay for the ride? But he has to be paid. He is not going to leave someone lying in the ditch, but eventually he has to be paid.

The same is true for a food-producing country. It cannot be the responsibility of the farmers only in countries like Canada, Australia and the United States to maintain a cheap food policy which permits domestic consumers a very privileged standard of living. It cannot be the responsibility of producing countries only to maintain a cheap food policy to feed the world. No, there has to be a broader responsibility.

What can we do? We can get together with our industrial partners in the world. There is a starving world out there. We have the capacity to produce but we need help to produce cheap food. There is no shortage of demand for our food in the rest of the world, but there is a shortage of demand for food with a price tag attached. We could commit ourselves to producing the necessary infrastructure, storage and handling facilities to get our food to places where it is needed. Then the other industrial countries such as Germany, France, Japan and others would pay into the food bank. They would then ask: What would it cost? Well, it costs us $4.50 or $6.50 to produce a bushel of wheat. That would reflect transportation costs and everything else. That would be the floor price. The other industrial countries would pay into the food bank, we would control and manage it and we would have one crop year of wheat in our storage bins ready to be delivered anywhere in the world. But we cannot do it on our own.

I am asking this Minister, sitting there smiling and grinning in his condescending way, if he has ever thought about anything like that? Has he ever talked to the other industrial countries and asked them whether they accept the responsibility of feeding a hungry world? Or is he going to continue to dump the social responsibility we have to the underprivileged in our country and the rest of the world on to the backs of our farmers? That is his policy now, but it is high time for a change.

Mr. Whelan: I just have a short comment, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to say that we have discussed this many times with our trading partners. But the United States refuses to become involved in that kind of venture. I think it is most necessary. I have said many times that it is wrong for us to subsidize our producers because they do not have enough of a return to give them a decent living and we are supplying food to other countries at a price below the cost of production. Some of those other countries may not want to produce their own grain so long as we are going to continue that kind of system. The U.S. spent $15 billion or $20 billion this year purposely to interfere in the market system, trying to make the commodities scarce.

Both the Hon. Member and I know that in Canada we have a system which is old, but it guarantees a year's supply of stocks on hand which will supply the market in an orderly fashion. I discussed that with the Minister of Agriculture of France, Michel Rocard, this week. I am really surprised, but happy, to see a Conservative suggesting this kind of a controlled marketing system, bringing order in the marketplace. I am very happy and it has been worthwhile listening to the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions? Resuming debate the Hon. Member for Regina West.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I found it fascinating to listen to this debate today. The first thing I want to say is that it would not have been necessary to move this kind of motion had the Government learned anything from the difficulties experienced in agriculture over the last 15 years. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was in this House when we dealt with the first grain stabilization Bill in 1970-71. At that time there were some Liberal Members of Parliament from western Canada. I invite the Minister, who sends out more speeches than any other Minister, to get his speech writers to do a little research into the record of debates. I also invite him to talk to his colleague at suppertime instead of doing so while I am speaking.

Mr. Mayer: They do not understand, so they will explain to each other.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I invite the Minister to talk to the former Member of Parliament for The Battlefords, Cliff

McIsaac, and find out what he had to say about the western grain stabilization Bill in 1970-71, and the second Bill in 1974, 1975 and 1976.

In his press release the Minister said something about basing payments or triggering payments on cash flow. I and other Members of the House, Mr. Speaker, moved amendments on both grain stabilization Bills starting in 1971 to have the payments based on net income, not gross income. Well, he learned that much, but I want to remind him that he had better have two or three other amendments in his Bill, if and when he puts it in front of us, so that payments should be based not only on an overall basis but on a regional basis in the Canadian Wheat Board district. They could also be made out according to an individual crop.

The Bill is designed to protect the grain producers' income according to what the market is doing. Crop insurance will protect them from the weather and this legislation is supposed to protect them from the market. It is a double-barrelled operation. When we suggested that the payments should be made according to individual crops, as and when their prices fluctuate, the Government of the day, the then Minister of Transport, told us that we were getting into crop insurance. I invite the Hon. Minister of Agriculture to stay in the House and to check Hansard from 1970 to 1975.

Mr. Whelan: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I really want to stay and hear the Hon. Member but I have to catch an airplane. He can rest assured I will read Hansard and the great contribution I know he is going to make.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I must include in my comments a mention of the efforts made by many Members of the House to get a grain income stabilization program to protect grain producers from the fluctuations of the world market. To expect producers to bear the burden by themselves in competition with the treasuries of our competitors is totally unfair. The nation as a whole should share those costs.

I listened to a number of candidates for the leadership of the Conservative Party last year, Mr. Speaker. I am now suffering through listening to seven Liberal candidates for the leadership of their Party this year.

Mr. Ferguson: You will not be disappointed this time.

Mr. Benjamin: I hear them saying they are going to come up with new ideas. Well, what is wrong with the old ones since they have never been implemented? Old ideas such as, to quote Mr. Diefenbaker, parity, not charity. Old ones from the 1940s, 1950s and 1960s: price related to the cost of production plus a decent living. What is wrong with those old ideas? They have never been implemented. Let us blow the dust off them and do it. The legislation, if and when we get it, must include additional amendments to those the Minister has proposed in his press release, which none of them want to announce in Parliament. They want to do it somewhere out in the hills.

• (1750)

I heard the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) and other Members talk about higher freight rates. That is amusing, ironic and disgusting. This Party brought in legislation to raise the freight rates for farmers and forced it through. The ink was hardly dry on the legislation when a former Minister of Transport, executive vice-president of James Richardson and Sons, went out to Regina a week ago and cried about these poor grain producers having to pay higher freight rates and higher fuel taxes as a result of a Conservative budget in Saskatchewan. Where the heck was he last year? Mr. Lang was one of the leading spokesmen to erect the statutory grain rates and cause farmers to pay higher freight charges. The Tories are the ones who agreed with the Liberals that the Crow rate had to go and freight rates must go up. I agree that they said it should not be done today but, rather two or three years down the road. That is like cutting the dog's tail off one inch at a time instead of all at once. They both supported higher freight rates for grain producers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mayer: So did you.

Mr. Benjamin: I do not know what happened to the old idea of parity, not charity, of prices related to the cost of production plus a decent living. Mr. Speaker, they have had parity all right. Since World War II there has been parity for banks, lenders and large corporations. They get their cost of production and profits. However, if it is a grain producer, a fisherman, a little storekeeper, or a lower middle income homeowner, they must tough it out and tighten their belts. They must show restraint.

Our agricultural producers cannot compete in a world market in terms of exports or imports unless this nation as a whole will commit the finances necessary to make sure they survive. There was a famous episode in the Parliament of the United Kingdom when Mr. Churchill brought in a reduction in the rations on coal and fish. Aneurin Bevan said to the then Prime Minister that England was an island of coal surrounded by a sea of fish and only the organizational genius of the Government could see to it that they have a shortage of both. It has only been due to the organizational genius of successive national governments in this place that we have lost three quarters of a million farmers across Canada since 1950. This wild rush to bigger-is-better and to make sure that banks do all right has resulted in the Farm Credit Corporation being nothing more than a lender of last resort at rates that are as high or higher than banks charge.

The Western Grain Stabilization Act needs to be dealt with quickly, Mr. Speaker. We can assure the Government that it can go through all stages in three days at the most. I am sure the Senate will need only a couple of hours when it comes to doing some work. When it comes to leisure, they can take weeks, but when it comes to doing some work, they will deal with it in a couple of hours. We can have Royal Assent on the evening of the third day. I will be willing to remain here for an extra hour if necessary. However, the amendment had better include payments being triggered not only on a net income but based on a regional basis and on individual crops.

I hope the one farmer who is left sitting over there will ask the Minister to renew and reopen the ability to opt in and out under the revised grain stabilization Bill. The 25 per cent or more of the grain producers who opted out were smart. They realized that it is going to be four, five, six or more years before there is another pay-out. Most of them are ahead of the game. They would have liked to have come into the plan, but they saw what the plan would involve. It is like some insurance policies. You must be struck by lightning at high noon in front of the city hall on a Tuesday next year in order to collect. That is what was wrong with the grain stabilization Bill. The ability to opt in or out must be revised and updated. The Minister must include those additional amendments in the legislation. He had better table it for first reading and get going on second reading by next Tuesday or Wednesday.

The next item in the motion, Mr. Speaker, deals with the repeal of fuel taxes. As I mentioned earlier, the former Minister of Transport, the guy who helped kill the Crow rate, is crying because of the increased fuel taxes on railroads meaning higher freight rates for farmers. He was right. The headlines of recent weeks say that the new freight rates starting August 1 will be higher than expected. They are going to be higher than expected every year until 1991, Mr. Speaker. I hate people who say, "I told you so", but I did tell you so last year and the year before and the year before that. I hope that people on the Government side will believe me now. Mr. Speaker, those kinds of taxes on primary production are totally out of place, whether on farmers, fishermen or forest products. If we need to raise revenue we should raise it through our general tax system for all citizens based on ability to pay and based on the taxable income they earn, no matter how they earned it.

An immediate interest rate reduction requires that we do some of the things which Mr. St. Laurent did during the Korean War and which Mr. Diefenbaker did in 1959 and 1960. Sometimes they were ridiculed for it. They pegged the dollar and the interest rates and put on foreign exchange controls. They did not worry about what our dollar was worth compared to the American dollar. The issue is what our dollar is worth to us in Canada and what it is doing for us here. I do not know if my colleagues in my own caucus would agree with me, but I personally hope the Canadian dollar goes down some more compared to the American dollar. That is great for our exports.

Mr. Mayer: Exactly.

Mr. Benjamin: But it makes our imports more expensive, so Canadians will buy more goods made in Canada. That is not protectionism. However, it is protecting our own people from what is going on in the rest of the world. I am not suggesting we can insulate ourselves entirely, but those are some of the things we can and should be doing.

I wish my Party had not had to move this motion today, Mr. Speaker. It should not have been necessary. I hope it will persuade the Government to make efforts so that the whole nation will contribute to our tax system to cover costs for our farmers, fishermen and other primary producers whether it be for interest rates, grain prices, or whatever. That is a must. Let us quit worrying so much about the welfare and good order of the Canadian dollar compared to the U.S. dollar, or the welfare and good order of bank profits and bailing out corporations or ensuring corporate profits. None of those corporations pay their fair share of taxes toward the cost of running this nation. Let us get the priorities reversed, as my colleague from Prince George-Peace River said. Let us look after the overwhelming majority of people in this country rather than the few to whom the Government has been consistently pandering for the last 15 years.

• (1800)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please, it being six o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 62(11), to advise the House that the proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—ALLOCATION OF FOOD PROVIDED BY VANCOUVER FOOD BANK. (B) BENEFITS OF ECONOMIC RECOVERY. (C) PRODUCTIVITY INCREASE—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, there is an economic emergency in my home province of British Columbia. I would like Members of the House of Commons to know about it.

Recently in the House I told the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) during Question Period that there was a record number of people making use of the Vancouver food bank. Now local newspapers in my riding, such as the South Vancouver Review, the Highland Echo, and the East-Ender, to name three, are reporting that people are being turned away from the food bank. What a terrible situation it is in 1984 to have food banks to feed poor people.

In The Globe and Mail for Saturday, April 28, 1984, the headline read "B.C. employment level highest since Depression." It reported that 39.5 per cent, almost 40 per cent, of young people between the ages of 15 and 19 in British Columbia are unemployed and that 25.9 per cent of those between the ages of 20 to 24 are also without jobs. Those figures are surpassed only by Newfoundland parts of New Brunswick and West Virginia, areas which are notoriously depressed areas in North America.

I think that British Columbia must be declared a national emergency area. An emergency federal-provincial meeting must be held. I urge the Minister of Finance to meet personally with Premier Bill Bennett as soon as possible. B.C. has already qualified for the first time in its history for a fiscal stabilization grant. That means British Columbia for the first time is a have-not province.

We need more federal initiatives than this for Western Canada economic development. For example, in forestry we could use emergency funds right now in the short-term for tree planting. That would put some of the young people to work this summer. In the long-term we have to replenish our resource base in British Columbia. Tree planting would help that. In fisheries we need more federal funds for salmonid enhancement to improve our fishstocks. We need more environmentally sensitive economic planning.

We are also hurting in British Columbia because of our provincial government. Many of my constituents are afraid that come the next federal election, we have Brian Mulroney or John Turner as Prime Minister, we will see Premier Bill Bennett's policies on the federal level. There has been much talk of turning B.C. into a high-tech area like Japan. While I am in favour of high-tech, in facing the future we have to be careful. Our real strength is in our resources in Western Canada and in British Columbia. A wise person would say concentrate on your strengths, concentrate on your resources.

We need in the longer term a regional plan for Western Canada to get our economy back on track. Our industries are resource based, they are cyclical; for example, fishing, mining, forestry, agriculture, oil and gas. These resources are being gutted right now by federal and provincial inaction. Our future is being sold and we will be left with nothing. We are losing our forests. We are losing our fish stocks. Our agriculture is being threatened by a provincial government which will not live with the agricultural land freeze. We need a sector by sector approach to deal with Western economic development. That is the real way to develop the West.

We should look at the Pacific Rim for markets. We should have an Asia-Pacific Foundation as soon as possible. We should look to education and training of our young people so that we can develop industries in British Columbia. We should diversify our economy through secondary industries in British Columbia. We have to improve our labour relations as well. I think I know of a way whereby we could do that. We should stress worker ownership which would reduce unemployment and inflation. There would be less capital flight and less alienation among our workers. There would be greater productivity and greater competitiveness. Finally, we should look for regional marketing and ways to get people to reinvest their profits in British Columbia.

There is a national emergency in my province. Surely in 1984 people should not have to go to food banks. We in the NDP have a proud tradition; we are and have been advocates of the ordinary people. Now, more than ever, we are determined that people in British Columbia will obtain jobs and not have to go to food banks to get their daily necessities.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) questioned where the economic recovery in Canada was going and asked who was getting the benefits of the recovery. He particularly zeroed in on the problems in British Columbia. He mentioned tree planting and unemployment.

I should like to indicate that the federal Government has already taken steps to put the unemployed people of that province back to work. I will just refer to one example, the Environment 2000 program, into which we are putting funding because the province was not doing it. That is not only the case with British Columbia but with other provinces as well. I worked on that particular program because I realized how the forests were being ravaged and that no replacement planning was taking place, not only to provide for future forests but also to maintain the spawning beds of fish in the streams and rivers. I am pleased that the Government of Canada has been able to assist in this sector.

In the budget forecast, real GNE is expected to increase 4.9 per cent in 1984 or roughly about 1 per cent real growth per quarter. This represents a moderating pace of economic growth compared with the very strong real growth obtained in the first four quarters of the recovery. This pattern is typical of economic cycles in Canada.

This economic growth is projected to be accompanied by a stable inflation rate of about 5 per cent in the near-term, followed by further modest reductions over the medium-term. The rebound in productivity growth which was first witnessed in 1983 after nearly a decade of lacklustre activity performance in Canada is expected to continue in 1984 and beyond. This sharp movement in productivity growth, combined with a consolidation of Canada's hard-won gains on the inflation and cost fronts, will serve to improve Canada's competitive position internationally and lay the framework for sustained, non-inflationary real income growth in Canada over the medium-term.

Some further economic data have become available since the Budget. While month to month movements in economic indicators are always very volatile, the information to date indicates that the economic recovery in Canada is continuing. This view is shared by Canadian forecasters. The most recent survey of real growth prospects by the Conference Board indicated that Canadian private sector forecasters are looking for an average 4.4 per cent real growth throughout 1984.

Here are the facts. Compared with the levels of a year ago, average real Gross Domestic Product for January and February was up 6.1 per cent. Over this period industrial production has risen 12.8 per cent and retail sales are up 5.6 per cent in real terms.

Since the final quarter of 1983, employment increased 0.2 per cent in the first quarter of this year. The unemployment rate for March, 1984 is 1.1 per cent below the rate of one year earlier. Housing starts remain rather low, averaging 145,000 units over the first quarter. A record trade balance of $25.2 billion was recorded in January, although the figure fell to $13.7 billion in February. On average, over recent months the trade picture has been very strong. There has been a sharp deceleration in inflation. The year over year increase in March, 1984 was down to 4.7 per cent.

The Hon. Member asked who was benefiting from this recovery. Clearly all Canadians benefit from an economy that is growing and creating jobs, that is registering large increases in productivity and that is becoming more competitive. The financial health of the corporate sector is rapidly being repaired and in foreign markets Canadian companies are increasingly competitive. These trends are reinforced by the favourable improvements in productivity and production costs in Canada. These developments will continue to generate more jobs for Canadians and encourage new investment in business plant and equipment.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT—REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I have a concern which I want to raise with the Parliamentary Secretary this evening. It goes back to a question on April 18, the last question in the House before we went home for the Easter break. I asked the question of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) who at that time answered in the House in areas connected with the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Those areas have been well talked about. They were talked about today in the Opposition debate on agriculture.

• (1810)

We have a simple straightforward legislative measure designed to stabilize income from grain in the Wheat Board area, the three Prairie Provinces plus the Peace River country. It is designed on the basis of a dollar contribution from the producers to be matched by $2 from the Government. The formula in place is supposed to make payouts when income on the Prairies from the sale of grain falls below certain averages.

Anybody with vision, able to hear and think, has to know that that formula is not working the way it was intended. We are not being critical of the Government because when the Bill was brought forward in 1976 or 1977 it did not have the correct formula. We understand that it was not necessarily right at the time. In hindsight, things could have been done differently. We are talking about today. The Bill was passed by this House. It did not fall from Heaven like a tablet of stone, in which case it would be tough to argue and amend. It was made in this place and is capable of being changed or amended in this place.

The NDP and the Official Opposition both agreed to co-operate with the Government and pass amendments that would provide much needed cash to western producers as quickly as possible. We agreed to that. We on this side have indicated our concern for well over a year, back to February or March, 1983. We are asking that the Government come to its senses and begin to spread around some of the money available through this fund.

A question I had on the Order Paper which was answered on January 27 of this year simply asked the amount of money in the fund at the end of December, 1983. I will place that figure on the record. It is $864,091,918.74; $864 million. The fund had built up to such a level it was considered enough of a nestegg to protect the solvency of the fund against any possible or future drawdowns. The fund was at such a level that it triggered an automatic reduction in the amount of premium the producer was paying. The producer's levy went from 2 per cent of his gross sales to 1.5 per cent. That is a clear indication that there was a lot of money in the fund.

Everybody knows that there are financial problems on the Prairies, of many kinds and in record numbers. I do not want to be dramatic and talk about this being similar to the thirties, but there are as many financial problems on the Prairies as at any time since the 1930s. On the one hand we have a measure that creates a fund which grows to such an extent that the contribution to increase that fund is decreased by a triggering mechanism. On the other hand, we have producers in financial trouble. There does not seem to be any interim mechanism so that we can get that money to producers and spread it around.

We on this side have offered to co-operate with the Government. In February, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) moved a motion in the Committee on Agriculture encouraging the the Government to do something. We showed support there. When the Minister responsible in the other place appeared before the committee on February 13 he said the problem was mentioned in the December, 1983 Throne Speech and it was his hope they would be presenting amendments during the session which would improve the responsiveness of the program and increase its acceptability to producers. That was in February. It is a simple measure, there is co-operation from the Opposition, producers have financial problems, money is available at least to address some of the problems of producers, and yet nothing happens. What do we get? We received a fancy press kit which was issued in Winnipeg a week ago yesterday. It does nothing. It is really only an essay indicating what the Government intends to do.

• (1815)

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) who just spoke said the Government does not want to do anything in the House. This is a clear example of that. We have been encouraging the Government to do things in the House and what do we get? We get a press release that was made outside the House telling people what the Government intends to do. What we need is action. The press release did not do anything. We have not seen any legislation. Even if we go along with the Government's intentions, nothing will happen until the fall. There is absolutely no reason why we could not make an interim payment, and there is absolutely no reason why we could not make that payment within two weeks. We could do that if the will to do so existed.

There are all kinds of electronic systems in place for mailing and for putting money into circulation. I believe there are several millions of cheques that go in the mail each month to various recipients across the country. This payment would involve something like over 100,000 cheques. That would be no problem at all as far as our capacity to put things in the mail is concerned.

What I do not understand is why the Government is in fact delaying this. The latest thing I have heard is that the Government intends to introduce a Bill in the Senate. If that in fact is the case, it is another indication that the Government has no intention of addressing this matter on an urgent basis. If it wants to get a Bill through quickly, it should bring it into the House where we will deal with it very quickly, and then it will go to the Senate. If it goes to the Senate, the Bill must first go through the Senate committee system. As a rule, we in the House do not pre-study Bills. If the Bill goes to Senate, it will further delay its implementation at a very, very critical time. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will stand and announce when the Bill will be presented so that we in the House may in fact do something to support farmers at an extremely critical time of the year.

[Translation]

Mr. André Bachand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), I am happy to announce that legislation to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act will be introduced in Parliament in the very near future. In fact, the text of this legislation is now ready, and, to my knowledge, it now is or will be the subject of discussions between the House Leaders this week.

We want to thank the Members of the Official Opposition for supporting quick passage of the amendments which will be submitted for parliamentary approval. It is good to know that the Official Opposition agrees with us on the need to amend this Act as soon as possible to make it more flexible and better suited to the needs of western farmers. The Western Grain Stabilization Act is the main federal program aimed at protecting the income of Prairie grain growers.

However, this program must be amended, especially to provide better protection to producers against sudden fluctuations in prices and costs during the periods when increased volumes are being marketed. We therefore propose to add a unitary readjustment payment for making cash available to ensure that the program will be better suited to the financial situation of participating grain growers during the periods when production and the volume marketed are increasing.

For instance, under the present stabilization payment formula, no payment would be made for the calendar year ending December 31, 1983. However, if the recommended amendments are approved, a substantial payment of over $3 million could be made for the crop year ending July 31, 1984. Other amendments are also being considered following the recommendations of the Producers' Advisory Committee of the Western Grain Growers' Income Stabilization Administration and other organizations of the farming and grain-growing industries.

Among the amendments suggested, there is a recommendation that the program application period coincide with the crop year so that a closer relationship may be established between the income from a given crop and the production costs incurred for this same crop.

Two other measures providing for the participation of eligible spouses and the possibility for participants to withdraw from the program every ten years will eliminate some of the discriminatory provisions of the existing legislation.

It is obvious therefore that the rationale behind the program is not being questioned. The sole purpose of the proposed amendments is to make the system more flexible, to the benefit of Prairie wheat growers.

With the support of the Opposition, the new program will soon become a reality.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. This House therefore stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

FINANCE

LIBERAL LEADERSHIP CANDIDATE'S STATEMENT ON REDUCING DEFICIT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, two position-three position John Turner, who is running for the leadership of the Grits, has stated that he is going to reduce the deficit by $15 billion, but he is having difficulty explaining how he plans to do this.

As a suggestion, if Mr. Turner could provide us with the formula he used when he was Finance Minister to create a deficit of $5 billion from a surplus of $700 million in a matter of three years, as well as how he managed to increase spending by 99.8 per cent and raise the cost of living 38.5 per cent, we could perhaps be on to the formula needed to reverse Grit uncontrolled spending.

Obviously the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has been unable to curtail this uncontrolled spending trend as government spending on a public accounts basis has increased a whopping 668 per cent. If Mr. Turner would only be so kind as to provide us with the formula, following the next election the Progressive Conservative Government could use the formula in reverse to end the sinking of this country into further debt.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED WORKERS OVER 50 YEARS OF AGE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, it is frustrating to be over 50 years of age for both men and women, when they are looking for work. They work the best years of their lives in an industry. As soon as things get tough and the demand for the product slackens, the first to be laid off are those over 50. To make matters worse, no other firm, or the federal Government, is interested in hiring women or men over 50.

The Government and some businesses say: "You cannot work long enough to build up a pension", or: "Sorry, we don't have any openings", and then confide that they want younger people. As a result of bankruptcies of businesses and firms closing their doors, they are made to feel unwanted.

"I have worked like a horse all my life", a man 56 years of age said to me, "and now I am treated like a dog." He is becoming bitter, and I do not blame him. He and thousands like him are not responsible for the recession. They hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) tell the House, day after day, about the millions of dollars that they are providing for the unemployed, and when they go to the employment offices, or to government offices, they are brushed off and told: "The course is full; come back in three months", or: "You are too old to learn a new trade; go on welfare."

I ask this Government when some of these millions it talks about are going to eke their way down to the level of the unemployed. When? I wish the Government would realize what these people who have worked all their lives are now going through. Reduced federal taxes and the elimination of red tape would be of some help. Then Canadians would invest their money and provide work in Canada instead of exporting our money and jobs.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

FISHERIES

ATTITUDE OF QUEBEC GOVERNMENT—REQUEST THAT FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, early this week I was on the lower North Shore where I met with fishermen from Blanc-Sablon and Kégaska, to find a way to settle the dispute between Mr. Garon and the fishermen about the installation of certain facilities on the middle and lower North Shore.

Mr. Speaker, considering the fact that Quebec is scarcely prepared to move on this issue, I would ask the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) to see to it that salting sheds and ice machines are installed on federal property, and to spend the $10 million where we can spend it at this time, in order to help these fishermen, who could be operational very soon.

Where the Province refuses to co-operate in various fishing villages, it will have only itself to blame for the consequences. At the present time, Mr. Garon is acting against the interests of fishermen on the middle and lower North Shore, and I feel, Mr. Speaker, that we must speak out against this behaviour.

The people, including the fishermen, are now being held hostage by the Province of Quebec.

The federal Government is still prepared to maintain the funding of $10 million for the middle and lower North Shore, but if we do not succeed in reaching an agreement with the Province of Quebec we will only be able to install the facilities in question where the federal Government owns the land.

Mr. Speaker, my point is that the money is still available, but if we cannot help fishermen where the land does not belong to the federal Government, Mr. Garon will have only himself and his government to blame.

NATIONAL PARKS

RIDING MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK—CALL FOR PUBLIC CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak under Standing Order 21 regarding Riding Mountain National Park, the only national park in Manitoba. The Minister responsible for national parks is currently conducting a review of the Department's plans, and is upgrading its 1977 master plan into a management plan. The recent departmental newsletter indicated that there will be consultations in Step 2 and Step 5 of the revision process.

We have some real concern about the lack of public consultations in the past. This kind of public review is something which only happens once every five years or so, and we call upon the Minister to provide an opportunity for genuine consultation this time around.

My own office has a list of some 20 items of concern. For example, Grandview Council met with me again last week and made representations about having the Grandview-Rossburn Road opened up through the park. Church group licences within the park expire in 1985. It is important that these groups that work well with young people be included in the new management plan. The Dauphin Town Council has expressed real concern about the stability of the town's water supply. I could go on.

It is important that the Minister personally hear the concerns of the municipalities, of the residents of the area, and of concerned organizations. I have approached the Minister about coming to meet with the area municipalities and I am pleased that he has given agreement in principle to that proposal. I now urge him to come quickly to some decision on the date when he will be available.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the incompetence of the Government manifests itself no more profoundly than in the area of housing. The Government has failed to meet even the most reasonable expectations of Canadians in terms of government programs designed to provide affordable shelter.

The Government has failed completely to develop a social housing program. In fact it has become increasingly difficult, if not impossible, for even the average Canadian with a steady income to find shelter. The high cost of money, fluctuating interest rates, and the current increases in interest rates create new fears and anxieties for Canadians who are worrying about what to do when their mortgages come due.

What are the options, Sir? In 1979 we provided the option of mortgage deductibility programs. It is always interesting to hear members of the NDP berating the Government for failing to respond to a crisis in our country since they supported the Government and made sure that such an innovative program, which would have saved thousands of people from losing their homes, was not implemented.

There are other programs which are available. The Governments of other countries do much better. They look at housing as a social right and, in so doing, make sure that the subsidies or innovative programs that they implement are not designed to help the banks or mortgage companies but are designed to help average home owners.

POOLS

EFFECT OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 21 because of the Government's misrepresentation of its intention last June 29 when it passed Bill C-95, an Act to provide for government-operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events, and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act.

In statements and replies in the House and in committee, the Government took pains to ensure that the legislation would not enable the Government to engage in a lottery. On that basis, and because of the clearly indicated importance of this legislation for the funding of the 1988 Olympic Games in Calgary, the House passed that legislation. What has been created on the basis of that legislation is not what was understood as having been within the powers of that legislation.

On December 7, 1982, before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, the then responsible Minister said in reference to the 1979 agreement with the provinces:

> We have chosen to respect that, and if we establish this sports pool we will continue to respect the agreement we have with the provinces and we will expect them to continue to do so also... because the agreement we have with the provinces deals with the lottery field. Our legal opinion is that a sports pool is something very different.

The fact that the Government has chosen to change, by Order in Council, and in the dead of night, the sports pool legislation passed after lengthy debate in the House, underlines the urgent need for a full and public airing of this matter.

FISHERIES

CALL FOR REVITALIZATION OF WEST COAST INDUSTRY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, when the Cassiar Packing Company went into receivership last summer, hundreds of shoreworkers, fishermen, and small businesses had their livelihood severely disrupted, if not completely eliminated. The banks, the few remaining conglomerates, and the Department of Fisheries have squeezed this industry dry and it is now time to turn the tide and bring vitality and employment back to the West Coast fishing industry.

The Minister of Fisheries has stated to me that his Department, in conjunction with the Department of Indian Affairs and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, is presently working on a proposal. It is a proposal to get the Cassiar fishing fleet back onto the grounds, to renew the gainful employment Cassiar shoreworkers once experienced, and to rejuvenate the financial future of the small businesses and the community services which depend on Cassiar producing at full steam.

I believe it is incumbent upon the Minister to reveal publicly his Government's intention to see the Cassiar operation in Prince Rupert and the Skeena slough open for the summer season. Too little has been done to date. For this operation to start up, details must be finalized and made public by the end of this month. My constituents want jobs, not welfare. The Government should not forget that over $600 million has gone to restructure the Quebec and East Coast fishing industries. How about a sense of fairness?

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—STATEMENT ON BANK OF CANADA GOVERNOR ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. His cabinet colleague, the Minister of Justice, is quoted as saying today that the first act he would take as Prime Minister would be to fire the Governor of the Bank of Canada. The Prime Minister has been very tolerant of the criticism of the proposals of his Government by the Liberal leadership candidates, but surely this is going too far. I must ask the Minister of Finance is this an example of cabinet solidarity? Is he prepared to stand there and have his whole monetary policy shredded by his cabinet colleagues? Or is he going to seek the resignation of the Minister of Justice at this time?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard the alleged statement by the Minister of Justice, but—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If you do, what will you say?

Mr. Lalonde: —I would like to repeat what I have said in the House, and outside the House, that the Government has full confidence in the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: Not all the Government.

Mr. Lalonde: We have given him full support. I have had requests from the opposition benches to take steps vis-à-vis the Governor, which I have always refused. The Governor and I work very closely together. I am happy to say that, indeed, we share the same views on the economic situation and the steps which are required to ensure that the economy is going to grow. Not only has the Governor my full confidence, he has the full confidence of the Government.

Miss Carney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance may have full confidence in the Governor of the Bank of Canada, but clearly his own cabinet colleagues do not have confidence in the Minister of Finance and his monetary policy.

FINANCE

MORTGAGE PROTECTION LEGISLATION—REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): The Minister of Finance is telling Canadians not to panic in view of the increases in interest rates which he himself admits are expected to follow the increase in the bank rate yesterday to an 18-month high. The Minister must know that, since he brought in his Budget, five-year mortgage rates are up 1.25 per cent and one-year mortgage rates are up 1.5 per cent. Since Canadians are still shell shocked, some of them lost their homes in the last cycle of rising interest rates, why does the Minister not introduce his mortgage protection Bill which he keeps promising? Why does he not bring it in at the earliest possible opportunity, so that Canadians can sleep nights without fear of losing their homes?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say two things with regard to the important point raised by the Hon. Member. First, I believe we have a duty as parliamentarians to avoid creating unnecessary fears amongst Canadians concerning the evolution of interest rates. I believe it is very irresponsible for parliamentarians to spread fear to the effect that interest rates might know the same kind of increases which happened in 1981 and 1982. There is no reason to believe this, and there are no serious analysts, either in the United States or in Canada, who share that particular view. Therefore, I believe we should, as parliamentarians, reassure Canadians that they have no reason to fear that we will know the kind of increases which we have known in 1981 and 1982.

Second, I am indeed very eager to introduce the Bill to which the Hon. Member has referred. I have asked the Department of Justice and the draftsmen to proceed with that Bill with the greatest possible speed. Now that we have concluded our consultations with the industry, I expect the Bill to be introduced by the end of May, and I am happy to hear that the Conservative Party is going to co-operate to make sure that this Bill is passed very fast so that Canadians can have the benefit of the protection ensured by the Bill.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We are always co-operative.

• (1120)

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I suggest it is the height of hypocrisy for the Minister to suggest that parliamentarians should be reassuring Canadians about monetary policy when his own Cabinet colleagues are calling for the resignation of the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

STUDY OF SHELTER PAYMENTS FOR LOW INCOME GROUPS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Public Works who is responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. He is aware that fear of interest rate increases keep many tenants awake nights since they know that higher financing costs will be reflected in their rents. We are aware that CMHC has studied—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has a concern about a second supplementary raising another subject with another Minister. If the Hon. Member is right on with her first subject—

Mr. McGrath: She sure is. It was mentioned in the first question.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member for St. John's East please be quiet for the moment? I am cautioning the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, interest rates apply to tenants as well as to mortgage holders. I am addressing my question to the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

My question is: since we are aware that CMHC has studied proposals for shelter payments for low income groups, in view of the rise in interest rates, will the Minister commit to some form of protection for low income tenants—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is raising another subject with another Minister. The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF TOP SALARY EARNERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Public Service Commission. We know from that Commission's annual report that there was an increase of 967 civil servants earning $60,000 a year or more. That represents a 73.4 per cent increase. In a time of restraint, of six and five, and the laying off of civil servants, can the Minister tell us why he thinks it was a good idea for the Government to increase that category by 73.4 per cent?

An Hon. Member: No one is answering.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously the Minister concerned failed to hear. Would the Hon. Member repeat his question?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the benches are a little thin over there, and now they are a little thick at the same time. To the Minister responsible for the Public Service Commission. He will know that civil servants earning $60,000 a year or more are in the top paid category. Last year 967 more people were moved into that salary bracket, an increase of 73.4 per cent, an enormous increase. Can the Minister tell Members of this House and the Canadian people why, when restraint is indicated, when we have six and five, and we have lay-offs, the Government felt it necessary to increase that category of upper income fat cats by 73.4 per cent?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear why I did not respond immediately to my hon. friend's question. He was directing the question to the Minister responsible for the Public Service Commission. That is the President of the Privy Council, not the President of the Treasury Board. When it comes to being thick, I think my hon. friend is about as broad as anyone on the other side of the House, and they are a pretty thick bunch over there.

To try to deal with my hon. friend's question, as far as I am aware, the requirements of the Public Service Compensation Restraint Act have been strictly followed and applied by the Government. My hon. friend has asked quite a detailed question. I will get him a detailed answer and get back to him as soon as possible.

PARTICIPATION OF WOMEN IN UPPER INCOME GROUPS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to find out that the President of the Privy Council is responsible for the Public Service Commission. He is also the House Leader, and the thickness gets a little more binding.

• (1125)

Perhaps the President of the Privy Council would like to answer this question, if he is responsible for that Commission. In that report we also discovered that over 40 per cent of public service employees are female. We also found out that in 1983, 3.7 per cent of civil servants earning $60,000 or more a year were female. There was a drop from 1982 to 1983 in the number of upper paid civil servants who are female.

Can the Minister explain to the satisfaction of the House why the proportion of women earning these upper salaries is declining, when the Government claims its employment strategy for equal opportunity is working? Why is the percentage of females in the upper brackets declining?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in an effort to be helpful to my hon. friend, I will try to give him at least a preliminary answer. I would first like to point out a contradiction. In his first question he complained about an increase in the number of employees who are getting the higher salaries. In this question he is complaining because not enough people are getting the higher salaries.

With respect to the role of women in the upper categories, we want to expand opportunities for them and that is why, as part of the affirmative action program, last fall we announced a target to double the number of women in the senior executive category over the next several years. This is a matter which we want to improve. We are working to do that by way of a definite numerical objective which we have set out. My hon. friend has raised a concern which we share. We are working to deal with it.

Mr. Hawkes: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has had a supplementary. The Hon. Member for Skeena.

PROPORTION OF WOMEN LAID OFF

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council. It is with regard to the release of the Public Service Commission annual report. I am sure the President of the Privy Council is aware that women form only 40.6 per cent of the Public Service. As my friend pointed out, less than 4 per cent of those earning more than $60,000 are women, while 65.6 per cent of those earning $20,000 or less are women. In the past year 63.3 per cent of those laid off due to privatization and re-organization have been women. This is a 50 per cent increase in lay-offs of women since 1982. Would the Minister comment on that, in light of his Government's response many times in the House about wanting to pursue affirmative action for women? Does the fact that two-thirds of the lay-offs in the Public Service are of women constitute affirmative action?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that, with regard to the lay-off situation, there is no deliberate effort to have it impact more severely on women than on men. If, due to operational requirements, certain workers are not required and that group is made up of more women than men, there will be the result my hon. friend mentions. However, I can assure my hon. friend that there is no intention to have our lay-off provisions more severely to women than to men.

NUMBER OF WOMEN EMPLOYED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. She commented earlier this week with regard to the closure of the Office of Equal Opportunity for Women. It seems that the only person on the government benches who opposed that is the President of the Treasury Board, who answered my last question.

Does the Minister responsible for the Status of Women feel that the over-all increase by two-tenths of 1 per cent of women in the Public Service across Canada is good? This resulted in a change from 40.4 per cent in 1982 to 40.6 per cent last year. Does the Minister believe that demonstrates affirmative action, keeping in mind that that rate of increase means that women will be fairly represented in the Public Service, at least statistically, by the year 2004?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, of course I am not satisfied. However, I am satisfied that a change is taking place and that there are some shining lights in the report. I would point out to the Hon. Member that in the CAP program, which is the Career Assignment Program, for the first time women accounted for the majority of new participants in the two management courses. I think that is an indication of where we are going.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the Minister missed my first question which demonstrated that in almost every category women are on their way down. They are being laid off faster, and tending to conglomerate in the lower wage categories faster. Every possible negative statistical evaluation related to women is clearly demonstrated in this report.

• (1130)

APPLICATION OF COMPENSATION RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question relates to six and five. As the Minister knows, 96 per cent of the jobs at over $60,000 are held by men, and the increase under six and five this year means that they will get a $3,000 increase, whereas for the 65.60 per cent of women in the Public Service earning less than 20,000 it will mean a maximum of only $1,000. This means that the Minister must agree that six and five discriminates against women in the Public Service, that two-thirds of the lay-offs last year affected women in the Public Service, and that the closure of the Office of Equal Opportunity discriminates against women as well, even though it was only able to increase the participation of women by two-tenths of one per cent. Perhaps the Minister could comment on six and five and how she feels about that kind of blatant discrimination against women in the Public Service.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member gives a very lengthy second supplementary which is hardly in the form of a question. However, if the Hon. Minister wishes to comment.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that the Hon. Member has taken what he wants out of the report, highlighted the negative aspects, and has chosen to ignore the more positive aspects of the report, albeit they are slim. But there are some positive aspects in it.

With respect to six and five and discrimination, there is no doubt that more women are affected than men. However, as to deliberate discrimination, I would deny that. There were men who were affected as well as women.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

CHURCHILL FALLS POWER CONTRACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. My question exemplifies the sense of frustration and injustice felt in Newfoundland today over the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada to declare the Churchill Falls Water Rights Reversion Act to be ultra vires. Since the Churchill Falls power contract represents probably the greatest grievance in this country today and is a festering sore in Confederation, what steps does the Government of Canada intend to take to correct this great injustice to the people of Newfoundland?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the Premier of Newfoundland plays a very hard game. Sometimes he goes the political road, and at other times the legal road, and most of the time both roads. When he loses, he blames the federal Government.

Be that as it may, the decision of the court was on constitutional grounds. My hon. friend knows that this is a provincial matter. His colleague from St. John's West was suggesting a mediation role by the Prime Minister. That is about all that can be done by the federal Government, unless the federal Government wants to be chastised by the Supreme Court for acting in an area which is not of its jurisdiction.

Mediation is not a bad idea, and I understand that in the past, Ministers of Energy, Mines and Resources have made suggestions that there could be a mediation, a conciliation, or even an arbitration for that matter. However, that necessitates the consent of the two parties.

For the time being I think we should let some days pass. I observed that the Premier and the Minister of Energy of Quebec immediately offered resumption of previous negotiations which apparently had made some progress. I read in the paper this morning that the Premier of Newfoundland was still hoping that there could be a negotiated solution to this matter.

Mr. McGrath: I would say to the Minister that the Government of Canada clearly has a responsibility here, given the fact that there is a separatist Government in Quebec and that it buys the power from Newfoundland for less than three mills and sells it to the Americans for 28 mills. That is $800 million for Quebec and $8 million for Newfoundland.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, while the National Energy Board has the authority to regulate the construction of new interprovincial power lines, it does not have the authority to regulate interprovincial electricity exchanges. Has the Government considered an amendment to the National Energy Board Act which would essentially extend the common carrier principle to electrical power lines? That is an area where the federal Government can act.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I really do not know the technical answer to that, if such an amendment were considered. Nevertheless, the gist of what I said still stands, namely that this is provincial jurisdiction. It is a dispute between two provincial Governments.

The Supreme Court decision made the implication that it was on constitutional grounds, not on social or economic grounds. I think many people will agree that there is an element of imbalance in the original contract, and I would think that the provincial Government of Quebec does agree to that, to a certain extent. That is my reading of the press on that subject.

Negotiations took place before. I read in the press that there was agreement that they were progressing. It seems to me that the provincial Government of Quebec is not obstinate on the subject. I think it is willing to compromise and willing to discuss the matter. It seems to me that, now that there is a certainty on the legal side, the provincial Governments of Newfoundland and Quebec should get together to negotiate a fair settlement.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary to the Hon. Member for York North, due to the importance of the subject.

FEDERAL JURISDICTION OVER PIPELINES

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, the question that surely must occur to a number of people is why the federal Government is prepared to use its federal power to lay a pipeline that crosses from west to east under its jurisdiction and not at the same time permit the laying of electric lines that would transmit power from Labrador, Newfoundland, into the United States through Quebec?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, my friend seems to forget what the nature of the problem was. The nature of the problem was a contract that was signed in 1968, if my memory serves me well—

Miss MacDonald: 1969.

Mr. Pepin: In 1969. Thank you for the correction from the University of Kingston. The agreement was signed, and apparently no provision was made for escalation, which is somebody's fault. This is the basis on which discussion has taken place.

The Supreme Court seemed to be stating the old adage, "A contract is a contract is a contract", pacta sunt servanda, and they have applied that principle. Now the two parties can negotiate in the full knowledge of what the legality is of the matter.

FUTURE POWER LINE INQUIRY

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, that may well apply to the past, but what I am asking the Acting Prime Minister with respect to the future is simply if it is not possible that the federal Government, using its federal power for a federal works, would permit the laying of a line now from a new source of power in Labrador for the benefit of Newfoundland, transporting that power across Quebec to the United States or elsewhere?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as Acting Minister of Energy I would like to remind the Hon. Member that Parliament enacted a piece of legislation authorizing organizations in one province—hydro in one province—to apply to the National Energy Board to build lines across other provinces to transmit electricity to third parties. That piece of legislation was passed in Parliament a couple of years ago. I invite my friend to go back to the statutes and read them.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

WEST REGION TRIBAL COUNCIL

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but in his absence I will direct it to the Parliamentary Secretary or the Minister who is taking questions. The West Region Tribal Council met with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in Ottawa on March 29. They followed up their meeting with a letter on April 17. The Council was promised a reply within 15 days, in other words by April 13. I am wondering if the reason why a reply has not been forthcoming is that the Minister is spending all of his time in the Liberal leadership race? Will the Minister be following up on the Council's request, which is very serious because they represent so many Indian reserves?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes, the Minister is extremely keen on resolving this matter, as he indicated in the House yesterday. I am informed that a Treasury Board submission is being prepared, asking for funds in order to remedy the situation and, furthermore, that the Minister will be meeting with the band again on the eighteenth.

VALLEY RIVER INDIAN BAND—PROPOSAL TO PURCHASE BALLAST PIT

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister who is answering for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Repeatedly in the House, and elsewhere, we have been raising the problem of purchasing a ballast pit for the Valley River Indian Band under the Native Land Claims Program. We have not received any kind of response to date. Would the Minister comment on whether this is forthcoming and whether this particular land claim will be satisfied so that this gravel pit, that is at the centre of an Indian reserve, will be given to the Valley River Indian Band?

• (1140)

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will convey the representations of the Hon. Member to the Minister for his consideration.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

RURAL AND NATIVE HOUSING IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for CMHC and housing. As he knows, the federal Government relies entirely on the provinces to deliver its social housing program. In the Province of British Columbia that delivery system has broken down. There is no delivery of the social housing program, particularly in the mid-central and northern areas of the province. What discussions are under way with the Province of British Columbia, and perhaps with other provinces as well, with a view to regenerating new interest in the program and to improving it?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his interest; however, I might correct his statement slightly. It is not social housing which has run into difficulty. It is rural and native housing which, of course, is part of the general social housing program. Certain provinces, including the Hon. Member's own province, have opted out of this program which by law requires 25 per cent participation of provincial Governments.

My hope is that we will be able to include a very minor amendment when we bring in the mortgage protection plan and, with the support of Hon. Members on both sides of the House, I think we should be able to solve the problem. I recognize that until and unless there is a minor change in the Housing Act, my hands are tied, and I regret that very much.

PROVINCIAL PARTICIPATION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I appreciate his concern, but it is quite obvious that the provinces are so strapped, mainly because of the burdens which have been imposed upon them by some other programs of the federal Government, that they simply cannot come up with the necessary funds to meet their part of the program.

Has it occurred to the Minister that perhaps we should return to what we did in earlier stages, namely, to deliver these programs directly without the participation of the provinces in this critical area of native and rural housing? With the increases in interest rates such as we are experiencing again, there is fear, anxiety, and despair in many areas of Canada which the Minister should at least attempt to correct.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept completely the premise of the Hon. Member's question. I do not accept that it is only the economic situation which has forced some provinces, one of which is among the most prosperous provinces in the country, to opt out of this program, to give notice that they did not want to continue participating at 25 per cent. Frankly, I am surprised that the Hon. Member's representations are not made also to his provincial capital.

Mr. Oberle: They are.

PUBLIC SERVICE

FORTHCOMING PAPAL VISIT—EFFECT ON WORKING ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, this morning my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board and is supplementary to a question I put to the Minister on Wednesday, May 2, which appears in Hansard on page 3327. It concerns the Pope's forthcoming visit to the National Capital and more particularly, the Mass that will be celebrated at the Equestrian Park in Nepean on September 20 at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Could the Minister inform the House, in connection with certain arrangements for federal public servants, and I am thinking more specifically of their hours of work on September 20, whether he now, as he promised last Wednesday, has further information on arrangements for the day of the Pope's visit?

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations among the Treasury Board Secretariat, public service unions, and the organizers of the papal visit. As a result, I am pleased to inform the House that the Treasury Board has approved arrangements under which employees, who will be absent from work as a result of circumstances arising from the papal visit, will be granted earned leave or time off, to be made up at a later date.

Specifically, the Treasury Board has approved this policy under which deputy heads are encouraged to approve the use of earned vacation, compensatory leave or lieu day credits, leave without pay, or time off with pay to be made up at a later date, when employees so request, provided appropriate arrangements are made to ensure that essential services are maintained.

I might add that detailed arrangements will be worked out within Departments in consultation with public service unions as local plans are made and their impact on local transit and transportation routes can be determined.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier for his special interest in this subject which is an important one for the entire city of Ottawa and for all federal employees.

PARLIAMENT HILL

PUBLIC WORKS—AUTHORIZATION FOR LAWN ALTERATIONS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Would he indicate who authorized the unpardonable depredations of the approaches to the Parliament Buildings, particularly the border of the parliamentary lawn which has been completely devastated, its trees and flowers uprooted, and its wall is now being demolished, at some cost, I might add, not only to the public purse but to traffic patterns on the Hill, as well as to the general aesthetics?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will take the responsibility for it.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. LeBlanc: I am afraid I cannot join with the Hon. Member in some of his more flowery rhetoric. Anyone recognizes that if improvements are to be made, if a wall in dangerous condition is to be repaired, there should be an attempt to perform two or three other jobs in a co-ordinated manner at the time the lawn is being excavated in the area of the wall, so that portions of the operation do not have to be repeated.

I, too, regret the inconvenience, although we have tried to keep it to an absolute minimum. I reassure Hon. Members that the Hill will be restored—and an historian is working on this very subject—to its proper appearance, in fact going back to the 1920s. Shrubs will be replaced. Some of the tress that were removed were diseased, so we decided that if we were to excavate the lawn we should try to do the complete job. Also I should inform Hon. Members that the work will be terminated rather quickly. I am sure that will go some way toward reassuring them.

COST OF SUMMER PROGRAM

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, there have been rumours that there is an upcoming special program and that this is in anticipation of it. If that is the case, would the Minister tell the House and the people of Canada the cost which is likely to be encountered, not only for the depredations which have already occurred but for any special programs of a public nature which may be organized to take place on the lawn later this summer?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the exact arithmetic in my head. I think the total cost of the program is in the area of $2 million. I might say to those Canadians who visit Parliament Hill that we will be presenting Son et Lumière, a very well known technique of historical re-creation. This appears to be a rather wise investment of public funds.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): At this time?

Mr. LeBlanc: I might say also that there are those of us who think that the history of Canada is slightly wider than the one spectacle allowed on the parliamentary lawn, that is, the Changing of the Guard.

TRADE

EXPORTATION OF LOGS FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for External Relations. Pacific Forest Products, a subsidiary of CP Enterprises, has closed its Victoria plywoods mill and laid off 130 workers. At the same time it is exporting an increasing number of logs. Even the Liberal Government should be able to understand that when Pacific Forest Products exports these logs, it is really exporting the jobs of these laid-off workers. Will the Government act in the interests of Canadian people and Canadian workers and refuse further permits for the export of raw logs? Will it undertake an aggressive sales campaign to open new markets for Canadian lumber in such places as North Africa, the Middle East, and China?

• (1150)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, on the opening of new markets, I stand in good stead, having just returned from Algeria and Tunisia where there is a growing market for lumber. On the export of logs, I will have to refresh my memory. When I was Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce there were regulations and limitations on the export of logs. I would suggest that these measures still exist. I will find out exactly what is the state in the instance to which the Hon. Member referred.

EXPORT PERMIT CONDITIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister looks into it, he will find that the present provincial regulations are nothing more than a farce. I hope the Government looks at it and, if not the Government, at least some of the Liberal leadership candidates.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member ask his supplementary?

Mr. Manly: My supplementary relates to the export permits. The Department has refused to give information about the details of these permits, saying it would undermine the competitive edge, and that these details are confidential. Considering the importance of forest manufacturing to the Canadian economy and the fact that these resources should give a competitive edge to Canadian workers, will he at least release the details of these log export permits so that the Canadian people will know the extent to which their jobs are being sold off by Pacific Forest and other forest companies?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, my first answer obviously inferred that I was in agreement with the Hon. Member on the non-desirability of the export of raw products. Having said that, and having recalled that there was such legislation, my hon. friend will understand that I now have to look at the circumstances. I would like to look at the position of the provincial Government. It may well be that the provincial Government or some companies have asked for an exception in this matter. I will look into the details and answer as rapidly as I can.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for External Relations and Acting Prime Minister. Will he tell the House whether his Government intends to join the Organization of American States?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the question is prompted by a statement made a few days ago by the President of Mexico when he suggested that Canada should join. He will be in Canada in a few days and will have ample opportunity to make his case to the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There has been a long debate on the subject. I remember when travelling in South America back in 1969 that the leaders of those countries were divided on the position Canada should take in respect to joining the Organization of American States. We had a thorough review of that debate recently. Cabinet has not yet made the final decision.

TIMING OF DECISION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that the matter has been before Cabinet for three, four, or five months. How long will it have to stay there before the Government makes a decision one way or the other?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised by the modesty of my hon. friend. Three or four months is a very short period. I thought he was going to say three or four years. In fact I would have increased that. It has been debated in Canada for many years. Canadians are very much divided on the subject. I suggest that even South Americans are divided on the subject. Therefore it is not surprising that the Government should have debated it for another three months.

FREE TRADING ZONES—STUDY INQUIRY

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for industry, trade and commerce. Have any studies been initiated to determine whether free trading zones would be an advantage to this country? If such a study has been instigated, or is currently under way, will he identify the areas being considered for the establishment of a free trade zone?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that such a question should be placed on the Order Paper. Where a Member seeks a level of detail, the Order Paper is proper for it. However, the Hon. Member may put a supplementary if he wants.

Mr. Corbett: All I asked is if there has been a study initiated to determine whether a free trade zone would be an advantage to this country and, if so, where. I will go further. Is the Minister prepared to identify some funding to be made available for such a study to be implemented, to consider the feasibility of the Port of Saint John being established as a free trade zone?

Mr. Rod Blaker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there is no difficulty in answering the Hon. Member. The matter of export free-trade zones was brought into the last Throne Speech. Investigation and research have been done by the Department. There are at least two places in Canada which have made specific requests to be considered for the purpose of these export zones. There are two theories, what might be called and is referred to departmentally as the low road and the high road, the latter being the type you see in Miami in the United States. These are very extensive free-trade zones. The question also included whether they might be of interest to Canada. In that regard I will answer personally, not on behalf of the Government, that I think so.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PAPAL VISIT—TIME OFF FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. It is supplementary to the question of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier concerning time off for federal Government employees in Ottawa for the Pope's mass. Can the Minister state that the policy that he elaborated with respect to Ottawa can be applied to federal government employees in Edmonton on Monday, September 17, when the Pope's mass will occur at Namao, requiring considerable travelling time? Second, have any consultations been held with provincial Governments to ensure that provincial government employees can also receive time off to attend the Pope's mass in their area?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the policy I announced is designed to apply to federal public servants in all locations which His Holiness the Pope will visit. The policy is not limited to the National Capital region. With respect to provincial government employees, that is a matter for the provincial Governments to determine. I am sure that the special task force working on the papal visit will be or has already been in contact with provincial Governments on this matter.

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—STATEMENT ON BANK OF CANADA GOVERNOR ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, will the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether the Minister of Justice was speaking for the Government when he proposed to fire the Governor of the Bank of Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, that question has already been answered by the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The question was asked earlier in the proceedings.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect, the question was asked. There is no obligation on the part of the Government to answer. The question was asked. If the Right Hon. Member has another question other than that one—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are not allowed to tell us what to ask.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question was asked previously today. It has certainly been asked now by the Right Hon. Member. The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead, if it is another question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, we will check the record.

MINISTER'S AUTHORITY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Will the Acting Prime Minister tell us for whom the Minister of Justice, a senior Minister in this Government, was speaking when he proposed to fire the Governor of the Bank of Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had answered the question, inferring that what the Minister of Finance said was good enough. The Minister of Finance said he did not know all the details of this announcement. My understanding is that it was uttered during a commercial, which obviously does not count.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: The Minister of Finance answered the question quite clearly by stating that the Government had full faith in the Governor of the Bank of Canada, that he personally had the best of relations and the best of understanding with the said gentleman.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead, and the question certainly has been asked.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BE REQUIRED TO RESIGN

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, on this question which goes to the fundamental nature of parliamentary democracy in this country, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister if it is the intention of the Prime Minister, for whom he is speaking today, to seek the resignation of the Minister of Justice for stating a disagreement with the Government of Canada on a matter of profound public policy dealing with the status of the Governor of the Bank of Canada? Do these Ministers operate with absolute impunity when they disagree with the policy of the Government of which they are members, or are they subject to any discipline at all? Are there any standards at all which they must meet? Will the Minister of Justice be required to resign?

• (1200)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Prime Minister would want to look at the transcript of the statement to which my hon. friend has referred. My hon. friend, who tried so hard to bring some discipline to the Conservative Party, should be the first to understand the situation. A leadership campaign is going on.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): They are Cabinet Ministers.

Mr. Pepin: Candidates must travel a very narrow road. I am expressing my own view when I say that, to my knowledge, the Prime Minister has been rather understanding of the situation. Again, the Prime Minister will be present on Monday and if the former Prime Minister would like to raise the question again, I am sure he will have the time to do so.

POOLS

GOVERNMENT-OPERATED POOL—ALLEGED ILLEGALITY

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is the time for me to ask leave to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 30 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring consideration.

Mr. Speaker: It is.

Mr. Paproski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I ask leave to move this adjournment under Standing Order 30 for the sole reason that the necessity for this course of action arises from the clear evidence that a fraud has been perpetrated on the House through the misrepresentation of the Government last June 25 when it passed Bill C-95, an Act to provide for government-operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act. The fact that the Government has chosen to change, by Order in Council and in the dead of night, the sports pool legislation passed after lengthy debate in the House underlines the urgent need for a full and public airing of this important matter.

If you would allow me, Sir, I would prove that the Government started with the premise that the 1979 agreement to relinquish lotteries to the provinces should be reversed and that the federal Government should get back into the lottery business. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the subsequent Ministers of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport spoke before the committee. I do not know whether or not they intentionally lied but people in Edmonton would say that there has been a misrepresentation. People in Calgary are saying that the Bill was not used for the purpose of the Calgary Olympics but was used for the purpose of breaking a 1979 agreement so that the Government may get into the lottery business again rather than conducting a sports pool.

I would like to mention as well a misrepresentation regarding advertising. If I can prove chronologically that this advertisement indicated that the introduction of sports—

Mr. Speaker: I call to the attention of the Hon. Member that at this stage he is seeking leave to introduce a motion on a priority basis and his argument should be restricted to the procedural point.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I am saying that the urgency of this motion is that if we are to be governed by Order in Council, what would happen if a security Bill was passed in the House and then suddenly Mr. Finn and the Hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) changed it? What would happen if, after agreement to a particular Bill by the House of Commons, the Solicitor General felt there is not enough contained in that Bill so he would want to get Gordon Osbaldeston out of bed at two o'clock in the morning? What would happen if he would feel that because something within the Bill violates the Criminal Code, he would want to call Gordon Osbaldeston to put something extra in the Bill and govern by Order in Council?

The urgency of the matter is that if this can be done with this Bill, what about other Bills? I am not against the Olympics. If the Government says it wants to run a lottery, it should say so in the House. It should not—

Mr. Evans: Order.

Mr. Paproski: —I am not going to say lie.

Mr. Speaker: At this point the Chair is concerned about what is debate. The Hon. Member has, under the provisions of Standing Order 30, requested permission to put a motion to adjourn the House. The argument is a procedural one at this point.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I feel that the Order in Council is in conflict with the legislation. I do not think I must elaborate any further than that. I believe there has been an injustice done in the House because of what the Minister and the subsequent Ministers of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport have perpetrated on the House of Commons and the Members when they surreptitiously went ahead and changed the entire legislation by Order in Council. Sir, I would like to leave the matter with you as first Commoner to decide what should happen.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, may I address the question of urgency of debate?

Mr. Speaker: It is only the Hon. Member who is requesting permission at this point. Debate has not yet been conceded.

Mr. Lambert: Urgency is the matter I wish to address.

Mr. Speaker: According to the provisions, one Member can apply to the Chair and request permission and the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) is the only Member I propose to recognize at this stage. If the motion is granted, then it becomes a totally different matter.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say one more thing.

Mr. Speaker: All right, I will hear final argument from the Hon. Member for Edmonton North.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, let me say that the urgency of this request stems from the fact that tickets are being offered for public sale in games of chance, the terms of which are subsequently and illegally different from the terms in the legislation passed by the House of Commons on June 29, 1983.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Edmonton North has given the Chair the usual notice of his intention to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 30. The issues related to the Act to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events have quite obviously been a continuing concern for many Members of the House, but the Chair has reservations as to the urgency for debate and as to whether it is a proper subject to be debated under Standing Order 30.

● (1210)

The principle involved in this case is that a review of an existing law can only, under the rarest of circumstances, be regarded as an emergency provision under Standing Order 30.

On April 30, 1975 Speaker Jerome defined this principle when he said:

—that the emergency provisions pursuant to Standing Order 26 ought to be distinguished, or their use ought to be distinguished from those items which, in a regular legislative program of the House of Commons and regular legislative consideration, can come before the House by way of amendments to existing statutes, or in any case will come before it in other ways.

My predecessor, Madam Sauvé, also ruled in the same way on similar applications on July 9, 1980 and on July 15, 1980.

It is clear to the Chair, therefore, that this subject does not meet the strict emergency provision of the Standing Order. Furthermore, the Hon. Member has other avenues for debate open to him. Next Thursday has been designated as an allotted day and the estimates for the current fiscal year are presently before the committees of the House.

For these reasons, I must decline the Hon. Member's request.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. What recourse do we have—

Mr. Speaker: The Standing Order does not provide for recourse to the decision of the Speaker under the circumstances.

Order Paper Questions

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK (YELLOWHEAD)—NOTICE OF POSSIBLE POINT TO BE RAISED

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I simply rise to reserve my right to review the Hansard record of Question Period today and to perhaps have a point raised next week with regard to the rights of Members of the House in putting questions.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Member of course has always that right, and it will be scrupulously observed. If he wishes to raise it by way of a note to the Chair, the Right Hon. Member can be assured that every courtesy will be extended in the circumstances.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 551 to 556 inclusive, and No. 685.

[Text]

AIR CANADA—COMMISSION PAID TO CENTRAL TRAVEL SERVICE

Question No. 551—Mr. Nowlan:

1. Does Air Canada or any other airline pay any commission to Central Travel Service and/or to the Department of Supply and Services and, if so (a) what amount (b) is it less than the amount customarily paid to private travel agencies for like services and, if so, does the airline provide the Government with (i) a reduction in air fare equivalent to that commission customarily paid to private travel agents (ii) compensation in the form of tickets or reduced ticket prices for government employees or employees of the Central Travel Service which would be equivalent to commission and, if not, for what reason?

2. Do employees of the Central Travel Service or of the Department of Supply and Services receive special privileges from the airlines and, if so, what are they and what is their monetary value?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The airlines do not pay a commission to Central Travel Service. Air Canada and CPAir are charged a percentage of the net sales value for billing services. Such charges for the F/Y 1982-83 were $837,000. See reply to question No. 555 answered this day.

2. No.

PRIVATIZATION OF GOVERNMENT TRAVEL SERVICES

Question No. 552—Mr. Nowlan:

1. Did either the Central Travel Service or the Department of Supply and Services examine the reasons for privatization of employee travel by the Government of the United States and by some provinces?

2. Does the Government discount the possibility of the privatization of its travel services and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes. 2. No.

APPROVAL OF AIR FARES

Question No. 553—Mr. Nowlan:

1. What are the names and titles of employees of the Central Travel Service and of the Department of Supply and Services who establish and/or approve air fares and what are their qualifications for these positions?

2. What criteria are used in the selection of employee air travel options with respect to fares and what agency provides the data from which the selection is made?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Air fares are established and/or approved by the Canadian Transport Commission.

2. The onus is on individual departments to seek and consult with the CTS agents to obtain the best air fares to meet travellers' operational requirements.

CREDIT FOR OVERPAYMENT OF AIRLINE TICKETS

Question No. 554—Mr. Nowlan:

After tariff verification by an airline and when an overcharge is proven, is a credit paid by the airline to either the Central Travel Service or the Department of Supply and Services?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Credits for any overcharge are paid by the airlines to DSS who in turn credits the Department that originated the travel.

COST OF ADMINISTERING GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEE TRAVEL

Question No. 555—Mr. Nowlan:

In 1983, what was the total (a) cost to each of the Department of Supply and Services and the Central Travel Service of operating and administering government employee travel (b) revenue received from airlines by the Department of Supply and Services?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): (a) DSS/CTS costs are inclusive to department level. For FY 82-83 these were $929,000.

(b) The revenue received by DSS from the airlines for operating a central billing system for airline travel for FY 82-83 was $837,000.

INDEPENDENT AUDIT OF AIRLINE TICKETS PURCHASED

Question No. 556—Mr. Nowlan:

In the past two years, was there an independent audit of the airline tickets purchased by the Central Travel Service and the Department of Supply and Services and, if so, by whom and what were its findings and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): The Auditor General's representative is presently conducting an independent, in-depth audit on travel in both the Central Travel Service/Department of Supply and Services and individual selected departments. There has been no other audit of the Central Travel Service by the Auditor General or by any other audit organization external to the department during the past two years.

All airline tickets issued through the Central Travel Service system for government travel are audited daily by the Department of Supply and Services for accuracy of rates. In addition to this audit, there is an obligation upon the departments to verify all travel claims including the correctness of fares for the trips taken and any discrepancies are reported to DSS for recovery action.

Over the past two years up to January 1984, $207,175 has been recovered and credited to the individual departments that originated the travel.

POLAR CONTINENTAL SHELF PROGRAM

Question No. 685—Mr. Clark (Yellowhead):

1. During the spring of 1983, did the Polar Continental Shelf Program of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources operate a camp called the CESAR Camp in the Arctic and, if so, on what dates?

2. Was the camp abandoned and, if so (a) for what reason (b) on what dates?

3. Did the Department of the Environment request a clean-up of the camp after it was abandoned?

4. Did the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources conduct a search for the camp after it was abandoned and, if so, was it successful?

5. Were empty fuel barrels left on the ice after the camp was abandoned and, if so (a) how many (b) by whom (c) for what reason?

6. Were full fuel barrels left on the ice after the camp was abandoned and, if so (a) how many (b) what was their value (c) by whom (d) for what reason?

7. What was the disposition of the buildings and other materials at the camp?

8. In the opinion of the Government, do fuel tanks and other debris abandoned in the Arctic constitute a continuing source of environmental damage?

9. Does the Government prosecute or penalize private companies which leave fuel tanks, fuel, buildings or debris on the site of an abandoned camp in the North and, if so, is any prosecution or penalty being (a) contemplated (b) pursued in relation to the CESAR Camp?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Department of the Environment as follows:

1. Yes. March 13 to May 23, 1983.

2. Yes. (a) The ice floe upon which the camp was located was breaking up rapidly. All personnel were safely evacuated. (b) May 23, 1983.

3. No.

4. Yes. No trace of the camp was found.

5. Yes. (a) 605. (b) Camp management. (c) The ice floe upon which the camp was located was breaking up and aircraft operations to remove fuel barrels could not be completed.

6. Yes. (a) 265—mostly aircraft fuel. (b) $84,325. (c) Camp management. (d) The ice floe upon which the camp was located was breaking up and aircraft operations to remove fuel barrels could not be completed.

7. Four wooden frame buildings were left standing. Seven steel bed frames and six oil stoves were left on the ice due to lack of space on evacuating aircraft. All combustible materials were burned.

8. Abandoned oil drums, fuel tanks, vehicles and other debris are a blight on the landscape in many populated and unpopulated areas of the Arctic, but, so long as they do not discharge or emit deleterious or toxic substances, they do not constitute a continuing source of environmental damage.

9. Yes, where an offence has been committed. No prosecution or penalty is being (a) contemplated; (b) pursued in relation to the Camp CESAR.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On a number of occasions I have asked the Parliamentary Secretary to inquire why there is such a time delay in answering question No. 2, which has been on the Order Paper since October, 1983. The question is:

1. Does the Minister of Transport have a private parking stall at the Winnipeg—

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, he has called attention to the number of the question. It is clearly identified. He does not have to repeat the question.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I was only reading the introductory question. We are interested in the cost and whether there is such a private parking stall. It is not a difficult question. I would appreciate it if the Parliamentary Secretary could make enquiries as to why there is a delay.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I placed a question on the Order Paper in November, 1981 in regard to Liberal Cabinet Ministers flying in Liberal workers to work in the last provincial election in Manitoba. There is no reason that I can think of why it would take three or four years to answer the question. I would appreciate it if the Parliamentary Secretary could make some inquiries.

I also placed starred questions on the Order Paper on April 10, Nos. 791 and 792, in regards to the advertising management group. There have been reports that the head of the advertising group is being paid $2,000 a day. I think I am entitled to know, as well as the Canadian public, whether that is correct and if, in fact, Mr. Zarry is receiving $2,000 a day.

As far as I know, Order Paper Questions are supposed to be answered within a period of something like two weeks, and it has been almost a month since those questions were placed on the Order Paper.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, there is no time limit for answering questions, as the Hon. Member should rightly know from reading Beauchesne's or the Standing Orders. I have requested information from the Department with regard to the questions which he has referred to me in the past, and I will do so again.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, on a further point of order, the Parliamentary Secretary indicated that there was no time period for answering questions. Could he explain to me what is the purpose of placing starred questions on the Order Paper if the Government does not have to answer them?

Mr. Evans: They are answered verbally in the House.

Mr. Speaker: This is an old matter which has been raised many times. I think it is clear that there is no automatic period of time required for the answering of questions.

The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question that I asked approximately two weeks ago. He has indicated that he would look into it. I am referring to question No. 759. I would like the answer, as it pertains to conjugal units at Canadian penitentiaries. I would like to raise the matter in the adjournment debate, but I require the information so that I can be sure that everything I intend to say is accurate.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I will do my very best to get the answer to the Hon. Member as quickly as possible.

Mrs. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary about Question No. 234 which is approaching its eight-year anniversary on the Order Paper. It was first placed on the Order Paper by my predecessor, the late Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville, on June 11, 1976. The question asks who have Air Canada passes. As a matter of fact, I raised this matter during Question Period last June, and I was assured then that the question would be answered soon. Would the Parliamentary Secretary give me an indication of when the question will be answered, or does the Government really have something to hide?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Government has nothing to hide. The answer to that question will be forthcoming soon.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am inspired by the interest shown on this side of the House in getting some facts out of the Government. I would like to point out to the Parliamentary Secretary that I have had on the Order Paper for a considerable period of time a series of questions with respect to each of the departments of government, asking each Minister the names and positions of their exempt staff and whether or not any of the exempt staff are receiving emoluments from an agency of the Crown or from a Crown corporation, aside from the amount specified for payment of exempt staff salaries. In some instances I have had some very quick and complete answers, but other departments seem to be either unwilling or unable to give me this very simple, straightforward information, which I am sure would involve about two minutes of their time. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he would simply make another inquiry with respect to this matter so that we can be satisfied that there is no impropriety with respect to the payment of Ministers' exempt staff.

Mr. Evans: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-24. It is called an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act, but the burden of my argument will be that it should be more accurately called a Bill to erode further Parliament's existing very modest control over 183 federal Crown corporations and subsidiaries.

Why do I say that? First, I point out that the Bill has 134 pages. I put it to you, Sir, that if the Customs Act, which we were discussing a few days ago, was difficult for anyone to read, including lawyers, this one is even more so.

• (1220)

The Bill, as drafted, is basically enabling legislation. It gives wide regulation-making powers rather than specifying clearly and in detail how the mechanism of control, direction and accountability are going to work. Without seeing those regulations—I point out that the Government has provided no regulations to date nor given any indication it is prepared to do so—it is impossible to know precisely what the Government intends with this Bill. For example, C-I and C-II corporations are required to submit corporate plans, but the form and content of those plans is left to regulations and not specified. Operating in capital budgets are required from C-I and C-II corporations, but the Bill authorizes the Treasury Board, by regulation, to exempt any corporation or group of corporations from the requirement. In the Government's quest for flexibility, and due to the haste with which the Bill was prepared, the legislation represents a regime of excessive administrative discretion.

Second, on the vital question of ministerial responsibility, I cannot in passing help but note that earlier, Sir, the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) made the comment about firing the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Pepin) told us, in effect, that that was not a question of ministerial responsibility, that it was done during a commercial break. So I ask what concept of ministerial responsibility do Hon. Members opposite accept? Bill C-24 leaves the Minister as the de jure shareholder, but requires Cabinet to approve most major initiatives such as the appointment of directors, auditors, chairman and chief executive officers and the approval of operating and capital budgets, corporate plans and by-laws. In short, Bill C-24 continues the current situation where the Minister is nominally responsible but Cabinet exercises the burden of the shareholders' powers. In being accountable to many, Crown corporations will, in my view, continue to be responsible to no one.

Third, again on the important question of boards of directors, the Bill, as you will know, Mr. Speaker, proposes that the duties and responsibilities of directors under the Canada Business Corporations Act apply mutatis mutandis—if I may be forgiven a bit of Latin—to directors of Crown corporations. Bill C-24 goes into no detail on how the duties or responsibilities would apply in specific instances. And is that not the important matter in terms of practical experience?

More importantly, Bill C-24 seriously erodes the practical powers and prerogatives of directors and undermines the attempt to upgrade their duties and responsibilities. In the private sector, the essential prerogative of a board is to monitor the chief executive officer's stewardship of the corporation, to hire or fire him and set his or her remuneration. Under Bill C-24 all these functions are exercised by Cabinet. Cabinet appoints the chairman and chief executive officer and sets their remuneration, appoints the auditor, approves, varies or rescinds by-laws, and may direct a board to approve a by-law. In addition, the chief executive officer, who is generally not the chairman of the board, is required to advise the Government of any significant variations in actual performance from approved corporate plans, budgets and the like, giving the reasons.

Fourth, again on the important question of the proliferation of new Crown corporations, on the surface Bill C-24 takes some positive steps to avert the unnecessary proliferation of Crown corporations. It appears that in future the creation of a Crown corporation will require parliamentary approval via a special Act. There are major loopholes, however, and I will list four of them. First, the parliamentary approval process applies only to parent corporations, not to subsidiaries. It has been through subsidiaries, you will know, Mr. Speaker, that the greatest proliferation has occurred.

Second, the juxtaposition of Section 100 with Section 155 appears to turn the prohibition on its head by allowing parent corporations to be set up under the CBCA with only Cabinet approval and a motion in Parliament.

Third, the Government will still be able to incorporate parent Crown corporations where an existing Act of Parliament allows it to do so. As you will know, Mr. Speaker, there are a sufficient number of such Acts now in existence to satisfy most of the need for new Crown corporations.

Fourth, Bill C-24 could be interpreted, I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, to suggest that Ministers, as representatives of the Crown, many not be bound by Bill C-24's prohibition on the creation of parent corporations.

More generally with respect to the question of proliferation, the restrictions placed on debate of any special Act, which, as you know, Mr. Speaker, is 30 days in committee and seven hours of continuous debate in the House, are too severe, in my opinion. Placing any such restrictions is, in any event, contrary to a fundamental principle that one Parliament does not bind, by legislation, the internal workings of a future Parliament.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Hear, hear!

Mr. Kilgour: The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) is very perceptive, Mr. Speaker. In this respect, therefore, Bill C-24 represents a significant and dangerous precedent.

Fifth, on the scope of coverage of Bill C-24, it simply does not cover many of the major structural problems relating to Crown corporations. Bill C-24 is silent on matters of internal government organization; silent on the privileges and immunities of Crown corporations, for example, immunity from the Combine Investigation Act; silent on public servants on boards of Crown corporations; silent on the extent of the Government of Canada accounting entity; and silent on the creation of parliamentary oversight committees for Crown corporations. In addition, Bill C-24 covers only wholly-owned corporations. It does not apply to the more than 100 mixed and joint enterprises. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I make the point that the Bill is not at all in substance what it purports to be in form.

I have a few other observations to make in the time still available to me, Sir. I would like to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) and the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) who have done so much work on this important Bill. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary South, has pointed out—he is the chairman as you perhaps know, Mr. Speaker, of our own party task force on Crown corporations—virtually every section of substance has attached to it a regulation making the power which it purports to define subject to a subsequent regulation. The question put by the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) earlier is just, I suppose, a prime example of what I am talking about.

The example which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary South, used is that Section 100 appears to say that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) must approve the terms, conditions and timing of any and all borrowing by a Crown corporation. Then, Mr. Speaker, Subsection 135(4) authorizes the Governor in Council by regulation to "exempt a specified Crown corporation or a Crown corporation of a specified class from the application of the section". In other words, as my colleague has pointed out, the Bill is "a pig in a poke". It looks good to people who do not read it. The title is attractive. Some people have been fooled by it. However, the Bill, as I said at the beginning, really should be entitled "An Act to erode further Parliaments' existing very modest control over 183 federal Crown corporations and subsidiaries".

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, may I thank you for recognizing me to speak on Bill C-24. Let me first state that the subject of Crown corporations and their control is not new to me. As a provincial minister for a number of years, I had the opportunity to create some Crown corporations. Perhaps the most noteworthy one was the Alberta Home Mortgage Corporation. I want to say that the administration, regulation and management of Crown corporations is not an easy or simple task. It is an awesome responsibility which is often thrust on ministers of the Crown who are simply not trained or equipped to handle the complexity of policy, direction or formulations within these complex conglomerates. In most cases it is not laws or even regulations which govern these giant public monopolies. It is essentially inertia, established practices, and most of the time a very powerful handful of very skilled top civil servants.

To my knowledge there now exist somewhere around 400 federal Crown corporations. The federal Government now taxes and recycles some 22 per cent of the entire Gross National Product of this nation. Much of this tax take is used up and recycled through public sector Crown corporations. All of these Crown corporations are supposedly responsible to Parliament for their financial administration, as well as their public relations and economic, social and structural accountability. Just how can Parliament, with some 282 Members, possibly keep a watchful eye on these 400 monolithic complexes? Unless some Members of Parliament, or even Senators, are placed in the front lines of policy and administrative decision-making in the Crown corporations, Parliament can only deal superficially with the results of maladministration, debilitative policy, innovation and choking inertia within the upper structural levels of these Crown corporations.

The only solution, Mr. Speaker, is to place elected Members or Senators from Parliament in the board rooms of these Crown corporations, so that they can report on and provide balance to the decision making at the very top. I have done this provincially and I can tell you it works. A new and needed dimension is added to the board room when one or more elected Members are present. Reporting to Parliament or even the Minister becomes instant rather than delayed. That is why I have on the Order Paper a Private Member's Bill to place elected House of Commons Members or Senators on the board of directors of federal Crown corporations. Senators could, and should, be used extensively as watchdogs in this regard. It would give a lot of them something to do. Surely if Senators are permitted to sit on the board of directors of private corporations, they should also have access to seats on the board of directors of federal public corporations.

The Hon. Minister, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), in his report New Legislative Proposals for the Control and Accountability of Crown Corporations, states that the Government will be responsible for the major strategic decisions of Crown corporations and must therefore be in a position to review their plans and requirements. The Bill would give the Government the authority to require that the necessary information be supplied. Does that means to say that in the past this authority was not there? Such information is always after the fact, voluminous, and often impossible to interpret sensibly by a poor inexperienced, untrained and overworked Minister. This is nonsense, Mr. Speaker. The Crown corporation hierarchy become the dictators of policy, direction and even accountability to the Minister. This poor overworked Minister then comes before a parliamentary committee trying to protect what he does not really comprehend.

Then the report says that responsibility for the appointment of the board of directors of parent Crown corporations will rest exclusively with the Government. It will also appoint the chairmen of boards and the chief executive officers. May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that Parliament itself should have the responsibility of selecting Members for the boards of directors of a selected number of major Crown corporations. Indeed, I believe that the Senate should have the power, the duty and responsibility to place a limited number of Senators on the board of directors of most of the major Crown corporations. Preferably one Senator from the Government side and one from the official Opposition should sit on the boards of directors of a few of these major Crown corporations. Parliament would be much better informed. But the Government appoints these Members generally to protect its interests and its political backside.

Just what would be wrong with appointing a Government Member and an Opposition Member as watchdogs to some of these boards? So what if there is frequent controversy over regulation and policy decisions because there is two-Party Member or Senator representation on some of these boards? Would this not create greater accountability and somewhat greater caution at the board level of these public Crown corporations? Of course it would. Maybe then the rate of growth of Government could truly be reduced, at least to below the rate of growth of the GNP.

There is basically no more vital matter than limiting growth of the government sector, which in my view will exceed this year 50 per cent of the GNP. To control the growth of Government, Parliamentarians must control the growth of public sector Crown corporations. What does the President of the Treasury Board say in his report on this legislation regarding the role of Parliament? Well, he wants to clarify that role and states:

> Explicit parliamentary approval would be required for the establishment of any new parent Crown corporations, for their mandates, and for subsequent changes to their mandates.

This is great, but subsidiaries could and would be created willy-nilly by Government and Ministers. This hardly represents parliamentary control.

Then he says Parliament would continue to have authority to approve the financing of Crown corporations' activities where appropriations are required. What is meant is that governments would provide the control. Furthermore, capital can be accumulated through means other than annual parliamentary appropriations. Indeed, debt could be accumulated at resounding annual rates without parliamentary approval. Then bail-out by Parliament becomes mandatory. Such is the case regarding Canadair, de Havilland and a few other Crown corporations.

He says parliamentary approval would be required for disposal of the ownership of a parent Crown corporation. Great! However, assets of the corporation can be disposed of in bits and dribbles as desired. What about disposal of subsidiaries? Can these be sold willy-nilly?

Then the Minister says Parliament has the right to expect a systematic flow of timely, pertinent information on the management of Crown corporations. That is wonderful. What alternative could the Minister put before Parliament except that Parliament should have access to information from these Crown corporations?

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I believe there is need—one minute left? I hardly got started, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Evans: It seems like an hour to us.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has made a good beginning, but it is hardly a beginning in the area of growth of government and Crown corporations. If the Minister tells us honestly and forthrightly that this is just the beginning in dealing with the control of growth in the management of these Crown corporations, then I would be prepared to support this Bill as an initial first step. However, I want to suggest that far more action is necessary in this area of government accountability to Parliament.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to say a few words on this vital and important Bill.

● (1240)

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend my allotted time on Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act dealing with Crown corporations, talking about one very important issue which my colleagues might find a little esoteric and somewhat arcane, but it is fundamental to our view of this legislation. It is important because it demonstrates a huge and gaping flaw in Bill C-24. It is also important because the Government has shown characteristic sloppiness in handling this issue, as the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) has repeatedly made clear.

The general issue relates to Clause 100 of Bill C-24, and in particular whether C-24 is binding on the Crown. As you know, Clause 100 restricts the incorporation or acquisition of new parent Crown corporations. If Bill C-24 is not binding on the Crown, as we on this side insist is the case, then Clause 100 leaves the Government with a huge loophole whereby it can continue to acquire or incorporate new Crown corporations with no scrutiny or control by Parliament.

Hon. Members will remember that that was the way the CDIC was acquired in 1982. Since then we have had the incredible problems with Canadair, de Havilland and the other Crown corporations. This is the way that Loto Canada was incorporated in 1975. The only time we hear of Loto Canada is when it is in dispute with the provinces and the courts. This is the way that VIA Rail was acquired in 1978. Subsequently there have been shut-downs and changes in VIA Rail which drastically hurt western Canadians. There are other examples of this technique. It seems that the only time the Government is willing to go to Parliament on behalf of Crown corporations is for bail-out money, when it wants to write off $1 billion for Canadair or another $.5 billion for de Havilland, or throw away $125 million on Consolidated Computer Inc.

Section 16 of the Interpretation Act says, in effect, that a statute is binding on the Crown only if the statute expressly says it is binding on the Crown. This is very important when we consider the lessons of history. Hon. Members will recall that the Ontario and Supreme Courts recently held that the federal Combines Investigation Act did not bind the Crown in the form of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and Uranium Canada Incorporated in the so-called "Uranium Cartel" case, which is a national scandal. Why is this, Mr. Speaker? It is because the Combines Investigation Act does not say that it is binding on the Crown.

Our concern is that there is no clause in Bill C-24 which says that C-24 is binding on the Crown either. There was such a section, Clause 4, in Bill C-27 which was tabled by the Clark Government in 1979 relating to Crown corporations. There was a distinct move by the Clark administration to declare that these measures would be binding on the Crown.

What are the implications of this omission from this Bill? Simply put, Bill C-24, as now cast, does not remove the prerogative of the Crown to incorporate or acquire new Crown corporations by Order in Council as it has done in the past. Over the past decade this has been a means whereby the Government has intentionally and successfully evaded Parliament in the creation or acquisition of new Crown corporations.

How does this major loophole fit in with the Minister's statement that Bill C-24 would force all new Crown corporations to be created by, or pursuant to, an Act of Parliament? This is the claim which the Minister makes. However, it does not do that, Mr. Speaker. Was this an oversight? Was it a mistake? We think not. We think the "oversight" was intentional. We think the Government wants to keep this loophole. When this "oversight" was called to the attention of the Government, its response was "Oh, no, Bill C-24 is binding on the Crown. That was our intention". If it was the intention, Mr. Speaker, why does Bill C-24 not say so, as the Interpretation Act and the Supreme Court of Canada require?

Members opposite have told us that there are legal opinions that Bill C-24 is binding on the Crown. Where are these legal opinions? We have asked for them but have not seen one yet. Surely if there are legal opinions justifying the Government's actions, it should be prepared to table them. A senior Government official has stated that the head of the Department of Justice was of the view that Bill C-24 was binding on the Crown. Again, Mr. Speaker, we have asked for a copy or some verification of that opinion, but to no avail. Mr. Speaker, we do not believe that such an opinion exists. We do not believe that the Department of Justice feels that Bill C-24 is binding on the Crown. We suspect that the Department of Justice has never held this view and that the Government ignored the advice of the Department of Justice and then had the dishonesty to suggest that the Department of Justice supported the Government's position.

Government Members wonder why Members on this side of the House do not trust the Government's word. We challenge the Minister and the Government right now. If there is a legal opinion from the Department of Justice, or from anywhere else for that matter, that Bill C-24 is binding on the Crown, table that opinion here and now. If the Government wants Bill C-24 to be binding on the Crown, as it says it does, then move an amendment right now to include the necessary clause in Bill C-24. To do otherwise leaves this Bill hopelessly flawed and grossly deficient and leaves the Government and the Minister open to a legitimate charge of callous and gross misrepresentation. To fail to bring in this amendment will allow this huge, gaping loophole to continue and will allow the proliferation of Crown corporations to continue.

Aside from my specific concern, I would like to discuss some of our basic concerns regarding this Bill. As the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) has pointed out, it is basically a Bill which provides wide regulation-making powers rather than specifying details on control, direction and accountability. Without details, it is really impossible to know what the Government intends. For instance, some corporations are required to submit corporate plans, but the form and content of the plans are left to the regulations. This, of course, goes to the heart of our Party's position that Crown corporations should be accountable. Where there is a requirement for Crown corporations, and we agree that there is a requirement in some areas, they must be accountable to Parliament, and through Parliament to the public. These abusive powers and the secrecy which surrounds Crown corporations is a matter of direct concern to us.

Some of our specific concerns relate to the Minister's responsibility. This Bill leaves the Minister as de jure shareholder, but requires Cabinet to approve major initiatives such as appointments, approval of operating budgets and other details of running the Crown corporation. As my colleague from Capilano (Mr. Huntington) said, in being accountable to many, Crown corporations will continue to be accountable to no one.

Another of our specific concerns deals with directors. No details are provided on how the duties or responsibilities of directors will apply. More importantly, the Bill erodes the powers of a normal board of directors. In the private sector, the board usually monitors the performance of the chief executive officer. It sets the pay and can hire and fire based on performance. Under Bill C-24, this control is exercised by Cabinet. When one reviews the performance of Crown corporations and their boards of directors in the past, it is very clear how open to abuse and political patronage this system is. One need only think of the board of directors of Canadair to understand my point.

Another of our concerns deals with the audit. This Bill gives considerable scope to the Auditor General. It does clarify the relationship between the Auditor General and the private sector auditors of Crown corporations. This has historically been a matter of concern for the Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), particularly in his role as Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee. However, we do not believe that the way in which this Bill deals with this issue is comprehensive.

I could deal, Mr. Speaker, with our concerns about the proliferation. As I have said, this Bill will continue to allow the Government to create new corporations by Order in Council. I could deal with the scope of the coverage. I could deal with many of our concerns about this Bill. However, you have indicated to me that my time has expired and I thank you.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating once again Bill C-24, the Crown corporations Bill. The purpose of a second reading stage debate in our parliamentary lexicon is to determine whether or not the principles embodied in a Bill are worthy of the support of the people who represent the electors in this country in the Parliament of Canada.

Before any parliamentarian should support a piece of legislation, I believe he should have a sense of clarity in his mind as to whether there is a need for a particular piece of legislation. In that respect, I thought it might be instructive to review briefly for the House one particular Crown corporation which is close to the hearts and minds of those of us who live in the City of Calgary, Alberta. Of course, it is a fairly new Crown corporation which came into being mid-way through the 1970s. That Crown corporation is called Petro-Canada. It has had many subsidiaries that have grown like Topsy since it was initially formed.

Has that Crown corporation created a problem? I had never run for public office and was not a member of the Chamber when Petro-Canada was formed. I was merely a member of the community. I am sure Hon. Members will recognize that the oil and gas industry is important to the City of Calgary because it is a major employer and a prime source of economic health to that community. We have also discovered recently that it can be a major source of economic disaster.

Back in the 1970s Petro-Canada was established from funding by the Government of Canada through the Parliament of Canada. The first thing that corporation did was to hire employees from the marketplace. It was willing to pay 30 per cent to 40 per cent more than the marketplace was paying people at that time. This meant that it immediately distorted the marketplace and created, in effect, runaway inflation in salaries. In turn, this affected all of those companies that were previously in existence. The multinational and large corporations were able to compete because of the residual economic power they had, but it created enormous difficulties for small Canadian operators. That was the first effect of this Crown corporation.

Being a Crown corporation, it was subject to the laws of Parliament and the control of Cabinet. It operated in an industry that characteristically was mainly composed of what I would call peculiar people. I suggest that peculiar people are needed to meet the aspirations of such an industry. What we have in terms of the engineers and geologists who guide us in exploration work is a group of people who go to university for many years and obtain many years of experience, are willing to sit in the bush in temperatures of 30 and 40 degrees below zero for many days. They do this to help the country achieve self-sufficiency in oil and gas. I think that is peculiar. But those peculiar people are extremely skilled and very independent. They are special people in this country who are out in the field having to make life and death decisions instantly. They are responsible for millions of dollars of shareholders' money in the drilling of those wells. They have a particular temperament and philosophy and are willing to work 24 hours a day.

All of those are characteristics that do not hold well for employment by the Government in the bureaucracy. Nevertheless, the Liberal Government of the day decided to form that Crown corporation. It is now 1984. What do Calgarians see when they look at the Calgary skyline? They see the tallest building in town which has a red stone exterior. That tallest building is the PetroCan tower. It is a Crown corporation tower.

What does one find when one enters the front doors of that building? One finds that floor after floor of that immense tower are closed. One only sees emptiness because no one is working there.

Mr. Thacker: Where did they get that stone?

Mr. Hawkes: Where did they get that stone, I am asked. It did not come from Canada. It was quarried in Norway, polished in Italy and placed on the exterior of a building in Calgary—primarily an empty building.

If one walks across the street into another building which has existed for some time, one sees that it is entirely empty. This building was leased by Petro-Canada and it is still paying rent for it today. There is no one in the building, yet the taxpayers of this country are paying for it every month, the result of a long-term lease.

Why did the Government of Canada buy service stations? Were those service stations in trouble? Was it a means of creating more employment? I do not think so.

The Government of Canada, through Petro-Canada, constructed a building which is now half empty. Furthermore, those employees who do occupy half of that building were transferred from buildings that are now empty and for which the Government is paying rent. As well, this is occurring in a city in which 25 per cent of the office space is vacant. Therefore one must ask why we have these two tallest buildings owned by the Government of Canada through its Crown corporation. I suggest that when one visits my City of Calgary to see this red building and walks through the front door, one is visually struck by waste.

Another example of waste by this Crown corporation concerns the long-term leases for drilling rigs which it entered into. Petro-Canada turned around and created another subsidiary Crown corporation to take those leases from the parent company since it could not use the rigs and had to pay for them. Petro-Canada now has a subsidiary Crown corporation that loses money while making Petro-Canada's bottom line look a little better.

In the five years that I have been here I have seen budgets introduced in this Chamber every year that have increased the cost for people to heat their homes and drive their cars. A tax has been placed on every gallon of gasoline and home heating oil solely for the purpose of enabling a Crown corporation to buy service stations.

Mr. Kilgour: Which they are now selling.

Mr. Hawkes: It now says that it will sell some of those service stations. At the same time, the Liberal Government during the last two years has voted to cut money that was allocated to senior citizens and money that was allocated for the purpose of education and health. Furthermore, the Government has introduced budgets that were designed to increase the amount of money that it could give to Crown corporations. It has traded pensions for senior citizens for extra cash to enable executives in Petro-Canada to fly first-class and to build half empty buildings.

There is a need for a Crown corporation Bill. It is sad that the Bill currently before this Chamber will do nothing to restore parliamentary accountability and control over those corporations.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, after looking at Bill C-24, I think the first two or three clauses alone would provide enough material for a speech of at least twenty minutes.

[English]

This Bill is supposed to cure a lot of things. However, what it has done is create greater confusion than hitherto. The first mistake was one of fundamental decision by the Cabinet, confusing the Financial Administration Act with the incorporation or the creation and control of Crown corporations. The two are disparate. The Financial Administration Act has existed since time immemorial. It has to do with certain practices of government. That is not the creation, maintenance and control of Crown corporations. The title is just a dog's breakfast—"An Act to provide for the financial administration of the Government of Canada, the establishment and maintenance of the accounts of Canada and the control of Crown corporations". That is a total dog's breakfast. It is typical of this administration.

What do we do from here on in? Under Clause 3 we proceed to move by Order in Council. Orders in Council transferring the categories are tabled. They may be referred to a House committee for discussion and examination, and that is the end of it.

• (1410)

Would you believe, Mr. Speaker, that after going to the trouble of referring an Order in Council made under Clause 3 of the Bill, under Subclause 2.2, an additional section thrown in there, the report which the committee may make cannot be debated. It states that within 15 days the Order in Council has to be tabled. Then it is referred to a committee. It states, and I quote:

(2) An order laid before a House of Parliament pursuant to subsection (1) stands referred, for a period of thirty sitting days commencing on the day on which the order is laid, to such committee of that House as may be designated or established by that House for the purpose.

If the Order in Council is referred to the committee and it produces a report on the Order, under Subclause (3) "no motion for concurrence in the report may be made in that House". What a gesture of fultility! The Order can be as false and full of trickery as that referred to by my colleague from Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski), SOR/84-350 dated May 1, 1984 dealing with lotteries and pools. That Order was made at eleven o'clock at night after getting the appropriate officials out and a quorum of three Ministers. That was to get away from the strictures of the Criminal Code. A fast shuffle of name was made. That should not be allowed.

We do refer Orders in Council to a joint committee of the House but that committee is very limited in its examination of such Orders in Council. It only examines whether there is power under the legislation to make an Order in Council, whether the Governor in Council subcommittee was properly constituted and that there is no retroactivity beyond that allowed in the legislation. That is all. Nothing can be said as to the content of the Order in Council, whether it is morally right, legally right or wrong.

• (1420)

The procedure that Australians follow is not open for us to follow. If we are speaking about Senate reform and the Senate serving a very useful purpose, we should speak about the Australian Senate. Orders in Council passed by the Government of Australia are submitted to the Senate for complete examination to determine whether those Orders in Council are within the power of the Government. Those things are done here in Canada. Further, however, the Australian Senate determines whether or not Orders in Council are right and whether or not they do an injustice to anyone. Frankly, if the Australian Senate does not like an Order in Council, it stands revoked. That is as it should be.

I would say that within one year, Mr. Speaker, almost 50 per cent of government enactments could be passed by Order in Council. I came across an Order in Council the other day which was passed in 1981. This Order in Council affected the Immigration Appeal Board dealings with convention refugees. That Order in Council denied to Members of Parliament any access to written judgments unless the individual concerned or counsel for that individual had requested beforehand a written judgment with reasons. That is bureaucratic arrogance simply because Members of Parliament who inquire on behalf of constituents in immigration matters are acting as agents on behalf of those constituents just as much as any counsel acts as agent.

Bureaucrats who cannot stand outside examination of their actions deny Members of Parliament access to information by Orders in Council under some supposed right of privacy invented by the bureaucrats, interpreted by the bureaucrats and employed by the bureaucrats. The net result is that the ring of secrecy grows tighter all the time. Do not think, Mr. Speaker, that Members of Parliament can get that kind of information through the access to information legislation that has been passed. The people concerned only need say that, in their judgment, it would not be in the public interest to release the information that is sought. That is all there is to it.

I would like to say right at the outset that the Bill is deficient, although many Members have shown it to be otherwise. For instance, certain schedules exist whereby Crown corporations may be moved from one column of a schedule to another column by Order in Council. There is no responsibility to Parliament. The Minister is the one to whom a Crown corporation shall be responsible.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would say that we should look at the proposal put forward by the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko). He proposes that our Government should emulate the governments of many European countries and of some provinces in Canada and place Members of the House or of the Senate on the boards of Crown corporations so that they can act as watchdogs as well as have access to specialized information regarding the operation of those Crown corporations. That would be a far superior addition to this Bill and would establish some form of control over these Crown corporations without having the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) and others be absolutely flummoxed by misleading reports from some Crown corporations which carry on business in some of Canada's major industries.

On that score, this is a bad Bill. This Bill should only serve as a white paper for reference to a committee so that that committee may see what can best be done with Crown corporations as we know them in Canada.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I would like to make some comments with regard to Bill C-24 which deals with the financial administration of Crown corporations. First I would like to talk about some general aspects of Crown corporations per se and then I would like to look at some of the functions of Crown corporations. Third, I would like to underline some of the general failures of Crown corporations as we see them to be right now; and finally, I would like to offer some illustrations of some of the concerns expressed in my own riding regarding the operation of Crown corporations as they exist in Dauphin-Swan River.

First I want to say that Crown corporations in and of themselves need not be failures. Perhaps the Government has given Crown corporations a bad name because of its poor monitoring of Crown corporations. There has been a lack of accountability for Crown corporations at the creation stages, the developmental stages and any review stages further along the line. As has been outlined by a number of people today, what Crown corporations really need is a greater accountability to Parliament and a greater accountability to the public in general.

I do not think that anyone would quarrel with the fact that Crown corporations are a part of our national scene and, as the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) has stated, are a part of our entire economy. Crown corporations are viewed as being a part of our nation as a whole. I suppose it might be useful to contrast this situation with the one found in the United States simply to point out the uniqueness of Crown corporations in our national scene. Of the 100 largest corporations in Canada, ten are Crown corporations. Of the top 250 corporations in the United States, not one is a Crown corporation. Some of Canada's largest airlines, railways, radio and television networks and even one of the major oil companies are publicly owned, and of course, these companies have many subsidiaries as well.

Crown corporations cover a wide range of territory. In the area of transportation, there are Crown corporations such as the CNR, a company to which I will refer later in my comments. In the area of communications, there are Crown corporations such as the CBC and Canada Post. Later I wish to make some observations about the malfunctioning of Canada Post. In the area of energy there is Petro-Canada, and in the area of finance there is the Bank of Canada. Many people sometimes fail to realize that the Bank of Canada is in the same kettle of fish as the other Crown corporations because it has been perceived as an arm of government. Other Crown corporations in the financial area are the Federal Business Development Bank, the Farm Credit Corporation and Canada Mortgage and Housing. Of course, reference has already been made to Crown corporations in the industrial areas, such as Canadair and de Havilland. We find that Crown corporations exist in all areas of Canadian society.

It is important for us to recognize and underline the fact that it is not only the federal Government that is involved in Crown corporations but all governments, including provincial governments, regardless of political stripe, are involved. For instance, the Conservative Government of Ontario founded Ontario Hydro and the Saskatchewan Government is involved in the potash industry. As well, the Alberta Government has shares in Pacific Western Airlines. All governments are involved in Crown corporations and they all face the same problem of accountability to which I referred at the outset of my speech.

It is not that governments do not know how to make Crown corporations more accountable but it is rather a problem of political will. Governments have not been willing to act in this area. However, as was mentioned by a previous speaker, there are some illustrations of the monitoring of Crown corporations at the provincial level. Whether we look at the British Columbia example or at the Saskatchewan example since 1946, we see that members of the Legislative Assemblies of those provinces have been involved in one way or another in monitoring or reviewing the work of Crown corporations. Some work has been done in that area.

• (1430)

I would like to underline at the outset that Crown corporations are a part of the national scene. Just because they have been given a bad name does not mean that they cannot be improved upon, but we would like to see a greater degree of accountability. I would like to suggest with regard to Crown corporations that even if we were to look at two functions which Crown corporations could serve, we would see that there is a place, if it is properly accountable, for Crown corporations to function in Canada, be it at the federal or provincial level. Of course, we do not usually refer to those agencies that are under the control of municipal governments as Crown corporations, but that is another area at which we could look.

Crown corporations could be vehicles of public policy. In other words, they could serve Canadians and fill the gaps within the system that a private enterprise may not meet. This has been recognized by some individuals. I would like to quote some remarks which were made by Pierre Franche, the President and Chief Executive Officer of VIA Rail. He said:

> I believe Crown corporations often have a role to play where private enterprise does not want to play the role and the national interest demands it be played on private enterprise terms.

I have had conversations with the President, who was previously involved with the National Harbours Board, in trying to upgrade Churchill. Before he stepped into VIA Rail, I was pleased that he had a vision for VIA Rail. Unfortunately, at least in my riding, there has not been any kind of concrete evidence that his vision for areas that were served by VIA Rail is actually being realized. That is one of the functions which Crown corporations could serve.

The second type of function I would like to underline is the idea of providing some sort of economic direction, showing responsibility and generating some kind of economic climate wherein Crown corporations are working. There are different aspects which could be useful objectives for Crown corporations but, unfortunately, there has been a drastic failure in achieving the objectives generally, wherever we look. Public dissatisfaction with Crown corporations illustrates this on a national basis where the objectives or the functions are not being met. Enough has been said about Canadair and de Havilland that I do not have to emphasize this point.

Previous speakers have underlined some of the thorny problems which illustrate why the objectives have not been met on a national basis. A lot of this has occurred as a result of the lack of monitoring Crown corporations. The Government has allowed Crown corporations to stay away from many of their original functions. They have become autonomous entities unto themselves—going their own way, independent in their own actions without accountability in any way, shape or form. It seems that a lot of board members and directors have lost their sense of accountability.

In conclusion, I would like to illustrate how Crown corporations have failed in specific areas, such as in my riding of Dauphin-Swan River. I could talk about the failure of the FCC, I could talk about the failure of the Federal Business Development Bank and others, but I would like to underline two failures in particular.

I would like to underline the failures of Canada Post and the failures of the Canadian National Railways. Canada Post, of course, has been one of the primary concerns for constituents in my area. I have received many many telephone calls, letters and petitions and I have had many conversations with regard to Canada Post's failure to provide service to the public, with regards to the withdrawal of service, and the negative impact that Canada Post has had on the local economy.

I see I am receiving a signal to conclude, Mr. Speaker. I would like to mention that the same thing has been true of the CNR. It has been making applications for the abandonment of rail lines, such as the one to Amaranth. In all of these, the Crown corporation has not acted in an accountable fashion. If there was more accountability, we might be able to make Crown corporations work in such a way that they would be of benefit to the people they are supposed to serve.

I appreciate the opportunity that I have had to share the concerns that we have in the riding of Dauphin-Swan River with regard to how Crown corporations are operating.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to make a few comments on Bill C-24 this afternoon. I would like to continue along the line on which my hon. friend from Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) was speaking. He attempted to examine the function in our system of Crown corporations. He may have some doubt as to the function of Crown corporations and the system, although he should not have following his socialist philosophy, but there is no doubt that under the present circumstances the function of Crown corporations is to be the instrument of public policy. Whenever the Government wants to escape its responsibility and its accountability to the House of Commons and to the people it represents, it incorporates a Crown corporation and hides it away some place. So I have no problem understanding the function of Crown corporations. The problem is with the way that the system has grown like a cancer; it is totally out of control. The Government does not even know how many Crown corporations there are. The Canadian people do not know how many Crown corporations there are. They grow, are very dynamic and grow like a cancer.

I asked the Chairman of Petro-Canada in committee recently how many subsidiaries Petro-Canada had. He rattled off a few, but he was not sure as to the totality of the corporations in which it is involved, either wholly-owned or subsidiaries where it is a partner in joint ventures and so on. It is becoming a very dangerous situation. There is no way to make comparisons with any country in the western world in terms of their approach to this kind of exercise of government responsibility. There is no government responsibility, either in this Bill or in the existing structure. It is government irresponsibility.

My hon. friend from Dauphin says that the Government has given Crown corporations a bad name and that they do not have to be failures. I disagree with that statement. Crown corporations will always be failures because governments inherently—because it is the nature of the beast—cannot operate anything effectively and efficiently. It is against human nature to send bureaucrats and elected people out to run businesses. They are not good at it.

I would like to tell the House what Adam Smith said about corporate power. As we know, there are large corporations and so-called private corporations in Canada today that might as well be Crown corporations because they are so large, so cumbersome and so totally out of control that they not only influence public policy but dictate public policy. When they get into difficulty, of course, the first thing that they do is go to the bank and when the bank will not help them any more they come to the government and say "Bail us out". This happens all the time. There is no longer any accountability among big corporations.

Adam Smith told us 200 years ago, in speaking about corporate and public managers, that being the manager of other people's money rather than their own, it cannot be well respected that they should watch over it with the same anxious vigilance with which their partners in a private corporation watch over their own money. He said that negligence and profusion, therefore, must prevail more or less in the management of the affairs of a public company. That is what Adam Smith said 200 years ago and his words are just as relevant and true today. There is no way that an Ed Clark looking after a barrelful of money that does not have a bottom in it would be as vigilant and careful as someone else would be who was dealing with their own money. These corporate managers have their own language. It is an old subculture. It is the parallel structure of these people opposite who are completely out of control. They have their own language. Let me just quote—

• (1440)

Mr. Evans: Adam Smith's comments apply to both private and public sector managers.

Mr. Oberle: Would you just be quiet for a moment, please. You can talk later. You have not heard yourself think yet.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Oberle: Let me give a quotation from the annual report of one of these Crown corporations:

> Your management directs a closely articulated international reinforcing inherently dynamic enterprise that responds well to the capabilities that are fundamental to the modern managerial methodology and systems.

Did you write it all down, Sir? Let me just tell you what it means, perhaps, in connection with PetroCan, to be "closely articulated, internationally reinforcing, inherently dynamic". Well, it is "inherently dynamic" because when we incorporated PetroCan, as you know, Sir, there were to be 180 or so employees in that particular company. It was to be a window on the world. It was to make deals with foreign lands—

Mr. Blais: "Into the industry".

Mr. Oberle: All right, into the industry. It was to keep the industry honest.

Mr. Evans: Don't confuse him with the facts.

Mr. Oberle: Then a year later, two years later, the bureaucracy grows and grows and grows.

Mr. Blais: So did the assets.

Mr. Oberle: How much were the dividends to the shareholders? How much in dividends did you get last year from PetroCan? Can you tell me that? How much additional equity did you buy in Petro-Canada? Do you know that? Here is a Minister of the Crown. I challenge him to tell me how much the dividends were from PetroCan to the Canadian shareholders, the voters, the electorate.

Mr. Pepin: We reinvested it.

Mr. Oberle: The other Minister says it was reinvested. All right. How much of the dividends was reinvested and how much additional equity did you buy with my money? It is "inherently dynamic". It is out of control. You have no control over that place. Tell me how many subsidiaries PetroCan has, Mr. Deputy Prime Minister?

Mr. Pepin: "Acting Prime Minister".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I know the Hon. Member is an experienced parliamentarian, and I am sure he knows that his remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Blais: You did not like it. You wanted to sell the thing. You are biased.

Mr. Oberle: I apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, but through you, perhaps I could ask the Acting Prime Minister who sits here in the House, together with one other Minister, to tell me how many subsidiaries Petro-Canada has.

Mr. Fulton: 200.

Mr. Oberle: My socialist friend says 200. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask how many would the Acting Prime Minister say?

Mr. Pepin: As many as it needs.

Mr. Oberle: As many as it needs to exercise the Government's purpose, and the Government's purpose is to keep Canadians in the dark, to keep Parliament in the dark. Do not tell them anything. What about the executive officers of PetroCan, or any other Crown corporation? Are they elected by the directors? Oh, no, these are people appointed by these people opposite.

Mr. Pepin: It was the same way when you were in power.

Mr. Oberle: They make decisions over which Parliament and the Canadian public have absolutely no control. Let me ask the Acting Prime Minister another question. How many new jobs did PetroCan create last year? How many new barrels of oil has PetroCan found?

Mr. Evans: Order.

Mr. Oberle: And show me in the PetroCan Bill where we gave it the authority to build service stations and get into the neighbourhood service station business. There is a legitimate role for government in the marketplace.

Mr. Pepin: That is debatable.

Mr. Oberle: Just because the CNR, our great transportation system and our communication networks, have to become instruments of public policies because of the sheer geography and nature of our country, that does not mean we should get into the food chain business, that we should get into fertilizer, that we should get into selling gasoline in competition with private entrepreneurs.

Mr. Benjamin: Why not?

Mr. Oberle: That is not being an instrument of public policy.

Mr. Benjamin: See if they can cut the mustard.

Mr. Oberle: That is being greedy, centralist, socialist—

Mr. Benjamin: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: Well, you would like that, of course. These fellows over here are the socialists and, of course, they would like that; but they have nothing on these guys across the way.

Mr. Pepin: That is a debatable subject.

Mr. Oberle: They are so far ahead of you in their central planning, in their total integration and in their total concentration of all that has to do with the economy. You are babes in the woods. That is why you will be wiped out in the next election, because these people over there will be telling Canadians so many lies about the virtue of being in business and buying and controlling everything from Ottawa. They will be telling Canadians about all these virtues and, as the saying goes, some people can be fooled all of the time and some will be fooled once again.

Mr. Benjamin: They do not know how to run a Crown corporation. We know how.

Mr. Oberle: But I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that you cannot fool all the people all the time and, therefore, there will be a change in government and we will have to rethink when that change comes how we want to build and rebuild our economic and corporate structure in this country.

Mr. Blais: Yea, Bennett!

Mr. Oberle: Socialism, Sir, has been attempted for the last 15 years across the way. It has been attempted all over the world. These fellows are saying it does not necessarily have to fail, and it does not always necessarily have to fail; but it always does because socialism does not work except in heaven where you do not need it and in hell where you already have it.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be recognized for debate on Bill C-24. I thought you were going to recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). I would be glad to defer to him. He seemed to want to get into the debate earlier.

Mr. Evans: I have.

Mr. Clarke: The Hon. Member indicates he has already spoken on the Bill, but I see he still has things to say. Perhaps he will get another opportunity.

There are many interesting features about this Bill and I want to go over a few of them in the few minutes which are available to me today. The first interesting feature is that the Opposition has been calling for some kind of reform in Crown corporation accountability for years, probably decades. So has the Public Accounts Committee. As the Speaker well knows, that is a relatively non-partisan but certainly all-Party Committee, and in many reports, which I will be referring to later, it has been calling for reform of Crown corporations. The Auditor General as well—and I will have more to say about him later—has been making a plea to the Government to improve the accountability of Crown corporations and others. The Government, for its part, has said that it also wants better accountability from Crown corporations and improved parliamentary control. Sadly, however, the result of its desire and deliberations is the Bill which we have before us today.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the Government, with all the power which is available to a majority Party running the Government, has produced a much watered down Bill—such a watered down Bill, in fact, that we in the Opposition who have been calling for reform have been forced to take a position opposed to a Bill which we had been calling for for all that length of time. That is also a very interesting feature of this Bill.

Third, the Government under the guise of consultation has politicized the office of the Auditor General by a ruse, I would say by a "rabbit out of the hat trick", if you like, and I refer to the well publicized letter of the Auditor General to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He also wrote one to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), who I see in the House today. In that letter to the Prime Minister, the Auditor General included this sentence—he was referring of course, to this Bill:

I am entirely supportive of this version of the proposed legislation.

I do not suggest that my friend—and I count him as a friend—Mr. Dye, the Auditor General, has sold his soul to the devil, but I do believe that the devil has taken advantage of him; and I refer, of course, to the "devil" across the aisle here. The publication of a personal letter from the Auditor General to the Prime Minister was never the intent of the Auditor General. He has stated that and I believe that to be the case. The Auditor General is an honourable man and when he sees someone making an effort to go in the same direction as himself, he likes to congratulate them; but he certainly did not expect that to become a public document.

Mr. Evans: Congratulations, but do not tell anyone.

Mr. Clarke: The other "cat in the hat trick", which the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) might want to talk about when he gets an opportunity again, is the showing to the Auditor General of several different versions of Bill C-24. Most of them are totally unsatisfactory, and he told the Government people that was the case. So that when they finally pulled out this version, it did not look too bad to the Auditor General and he was moved to write that letter. I repeat the sentence of the Auditor General's letter:

● (1450)

I am entirely supportive of this version of the proposed legislation.

That sentence caused me a lot of trouble. I had an opportunity to ask the Auditor General in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates about that letter and what he really meant. Reading from the minutes of the Committee, I said this:

—how were you able to form that strong an opinion so quickly? Did you have input into the drafting of it? Were there other versions that you saw, and this version was better?

Three questions in one, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General responded:

There were a number of versions, quite considerably different versions, particularly in the audit area.

He goes on:

In fact, the bottom line of our views was that the audit provisions ought to be scrapped as they were written. The government continued on its course with a set of provisions that I found to be completely inadequate. I advised the Minister responsible of my views that those sections should all be scrapped.

Skipping a sentence:

I could not persuade the drafters of the legislation to use the language that I rather was taken by in the Canagrex Bill, to have the words "comprehensive auditing" in legislation. That advice or preferred position of mine was not accepted.

Then I asked him another question about a suggestion he referred to and he said:

Should you ask me to appear before you in committee, if this Bill goes to committee, I have a number of preferred options. But taken as a whole, I think this is a considerable improvement over where we are today.

That is why I say they tricked the Auditor General by showing him all these totally unsatisfactory versions and then springing this version here on him. Speaking of the version, he says later on:

The final version that became Bill C-24 does have a number of changes. Taken as a whole, they are not significant, although I am concerned about the definition of a Crown corporation. That changed. At the moment I believe the Bill says—there is no reference to accountability to Parliament. If you look at Clause 95.(1), that has changed, somehow. We were not consulted after about February 28 or so.

A little further on I asked him about the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the Chair has some misgivings about the Hon. Member using quotations on a matter presently before a committee, I understand. Could the Hon. Member enlighten the Chair about the particular quotations he is using and whether they pertain to a matter now before committee? The general principle would apply that a matter before committee is rightfully before that committee and should not be debated simultaneously in the House. I would like the Hon. Member to instruct me in that regard.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, the quotations are contained in the minutes of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. They were elicited during the examination of the Auditor General's estimates. Therefore, I do not think there is any conflict. The estimates have been dealt with by that Committee and we are now debating the Bill, which is not before the Committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for the explanation. Nevertheless, unless the Committee has reported on its findings the matter cannot be before the House. It cannot be in the Committee and the House at the same time. I suppose the Hon. Member could refer indirectly to that matter, but as far as the Chair is concerned, the matter he is referring to is before the Committee and therefore I ask him to come back to the general principles of the Bill and avoid details which are best dealt with at committee stage.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, let me just say that in conversation with the Auditor General, he assured me that he wished he had not said "entirely supportive". He wished that he had used the word "generally", and in fact he thought he had scribbled out the word "entirely" before handing the letter over for typing.

The Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, a prestigious group of which I am a member and a Fellow, felt that this was such an important piece of legislation that it formed a Crown corporation study group consisting of about 12 prominent chartered accountants from across the country and their staff. There are three all-day meetings proposed for this group. I was pleased to be invited to join this study group, not as a politician but as a chartered accountant and past Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. It was agreed that the group's hearings would be off the record and that documents provided to its members be considered privileged. For these reasons, and because the second meeting of the group will be held next week, I cannot comment further on the work of that group. It appears that the undue haste of the Government to push this Bill through will prevent the deliberations of the CICA from being of any use whatever.

I have other comments that I wanted to make, but because of some procedural difficulties I see we are running close to the end of my time. I would just mention one final interesting feature of this Bill, and that is the undue haste of the Government in wanting to have this Bill passed. In my mind the introduction of this Bill would have been adequate to give the Government the impetus it wants to be able to demonstrate to the public that it cares about Crown corporation accountability. I now find the Government is determined to get this Bill through. One can only conclude the Government has some other motives in mind, probably that it is running into difficulty with Bill C-25, the CDIC Bill. We will see about that when the time comes.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, it is a very exciting experience to speak in the House of Commons on a roaring Friday afternoon. It fills one with trepidation! I see my friend, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais), is present in the House this afternoon. I asked him to pay close attention to the speech I made earlier this week, which he did and for which I thank him.

Today I would recommend he pay attention to the business before him since I do not have much hope that the speech I am making will have any profound effect on changing the will of this Government, which seems hell bent on having this Bill proceed. The Government is forcing the Opposition to maintain its responsibility in opposing this Bill because we have to decide whether or not the principles of this Bill are worthy enough of support to allow it to go before committee. As so many of my colleagues have eloquently demonstrated, the principles of this Bill are not only insufficient but also defective. I compliment the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) for drawing our attention to the style, shall we say, exercised by the Government in eliciting the support of the Auditor General for this Bill. If that is an indication of support at a highly competent level, then this Bill is in pretty deep trouble.

I think it has been drawn to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that an analysis of Bill C-24 shows that there are several substantive reasons why we feel it should not proceed. The reasons we find it offensive are centered on the manner in which the Government will be permitted to make regulations concerning Crown corporations, the manner of their operations, the appointment of their boards and, particularly, the bypassing of the boards for the appointment of their chief executive officers. We feel that every section of substance in this Bill has attached to it a regulation-making power by the Governor in Council which is unspecified at the moment. Moreover, there is every reason to expect that the Government will change those regulations, having made them, without accountability to Parliament or without parliamentary input in those decisions. We feel, moreover, that there are no criteria established, especially for the manner in which corporations would be moved from schedule to schedule. That is the beginning of our analysis which has led us to oppose this Bill.

● (1500)

There is also, Mr. Speaker, the question of the rights of Parliament with respect to Crown corporations and the accountability functions of Members of Parliament. Apparently we have to make the point repeatedly that Parliament has no control over the creation of Crown corporations or of subsidiaries of Crown corporations. It is with regard to subsidiaries that the greatest proliferation is taking place. We have heard comments earlier today, as well as on other occasions, about the inability to count the total number of subsidiaries. I doubt whether we even have an accurate count of Crown corporations as such. The information on the number of subsidiaries of Petro-Canada, for instance, is simply not available. While Petro-Canada itself performs certain functions that are of benefit to the Canadian people, it is rather difficult to understand how it is of benefit to the Canadian economy for Petro-Canada to get into the service station business. Moreover, we think that there is insufficient accountability to the Government and Parliament about the way in which the subsidiaries of Crown corporations are run. As a result, the cost of the manner of operation is defective in that the controls are not strong enough.

Bill C-24 says that a Minister need not get parliamentary approval if there is in existence an Act giving the Minister power over a Department. We think the rights of Parliament are again bypassed in that way. When such matters are finally allowed to come before Parliament, the Bill stipulates that Members be confined to 30 days of debate in a committee and seven hours of debate in the House. This is entirely insufficient, particularly in the cases of major corporations which need reviews from time to time. I have already mentioned Petro-Canada. Air Canada is another corporation which surely needs close scrutiny by Members trying to exercise their responsibility to ensure that the best transportation system for Canadians is available at a time of great changes in deregulations in the industry generally.

I would like to discuss the matter of the composition of boards. The way in which this Bill would set up the membership of boards of directors would, in effect, turn them into advisory boards rather than actual boards taking the responsibility of decision-making. The Cabinet would appoint chief executive officers without any consultation with the board of directors of the Crown corporation concerned. If one considers the examples of Canadair and de Havilland, one must shudder at the prospect of the Government extending widely the principle of appointing senior management to Crown corporations without any reference at all to the boards of directors. I must ask what boards of directors are for.

Earlier today, the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) suggested that the boards of directors be strengthened by the inclusion on them of Members of Parliament and Senators. In other words, some Members would be selected out of the House and the other place to serve on boards of directors of Crown corporations. The argument to support that is that the MPs and Senators would perform a sort of watchdog role. In respect of that particular point, Mr. Speaker, I would argue that I do not think that is a good proposal. I believe that Members of Parliament and Senators should not be appointed to the directorship of Crown corporations, but rather that directors should be chosen from members of the public who have demonstrated competence—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order please. The Chair regrets having to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his speaking time has come to an end.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few things about Bill C-24. I am sorry the previous Member did not have more time. I would like to extract a few points from the May 15 news release of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). There are a few interesting things in here that the Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) and some other Tories seem to have overlooked.

The first thing is that the first Crown corporations in Canada were created in 1841. The first Canadian corporation in the form of a public enterprise was a Board of Work in the United Provinces of Canada created to construct a canal system in Canada. By the turn of the century, the Conservatives in this part of the country had taken on the development and management of Crown corporations on a large scale. Today, with eight Conservative provincial Governments, the Party Quebecois in Quebec, which is basically a Conservative Government, and the NDP Government of Manitoba, we find that the corporate holdings of the provincial Governments exceed those of the federal Government in terms of total assets represented. About 75 per cent of the provincial Crown corporations have been created since 1960.

We have an interesting situation here, Mr. Speaker. We hear Tory after Tory getting up and berating Crown corporations. They are not berating the theme of this legislation, the stated function of which is to bring more accountability for Crown corporations to Parliament and to Canada, which is a laudable intention. However, the Tories have not been pursuing that theme. They have been going after Crown corporations but have not bothered to point out the fact that their own Party at the provincial level is the greatest creator and developer of Crown corporations in Canada. They do not want to talk about Peter Lougheed's airline, PWA in Alberta or all the Crown corporations of Bill Davis, Grant Devine and so on. The litany of Crown corporations under Tory administrations goes on and on.

● (1510)

In almost every case, as the Deputy Prime Minister pointed out, there is far less accountability than is proposed in this legislation. However, the very nature of the Tory Party makes them play games in which they tell the electorate that they are opposed to Crown corporations and this kind of accountability for a variety of reasons, but they never bother to tell the truth about Crown corporations and why they are created, which I believe is the responsible thing to do.

They have not pointed out why, as my colleague for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) pointed out, ten of the largest corporations in Canada are Crown corporations while none of the 250 largest corporations in the United States are Crown corporations. We should reflect on that fact because of the nature of Canada and of our history with respect to the United States in particular which has tried to form a branch plant economy in Canada and has only allowed certain kinds of commodities to be created here while preventing us from using its technology and industrial resource base to expand into world markets. The United States has always held back and has returned the profits from Canadian labour, resources and capital back to the United States.

Crown corporations have been developed by socialist governments in Canada, Liberal governments and Tory governments. I should point out that this has been done to the greatest extent by Tory administrations. This is something that the Tories do not want to discuss because their corporate boardroom friends do not like it.

Let me address a number of shortcomings in this legislation which should be remedied. They are important questions to which a number of Members have spoken. There are various Crown corporations listed in the schedules of this legislation. For instance, there are 14 Crown corporations listed under Schedule B, such as the Atomic Energy Control Board, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, national museums and so on. Schedule B at present includes 15 in the list, such as the Medical Research Council and the National Research Council of Canada. There are 29 listed under Schedule C, such as the Canada Ports Corporation, Loto Canada, The Royal Canadian Mint and so on. There are 26 listed under Schedule D, including Air Canada, Eldorado Nuclear, Petro-Canada, VIA Rail and so on. The list goes on.

Since I came here five years ago I have always been concerned about the fact that there is no one in Ottawa who can accurately say how many Crown corporations and subsidiaries exist. While the President of the Treasury Board has introduced a good measure, it should really alert Canadians to how insufficient accountability has been to this point. This has also been pointed out by Mr. Dye, the Auditor General. That provision appears at page 54 of the Bill at Clause 16. It states:

> Each parent Crown corporation shall, within thirty days after the coming into force of this Act, send a copy of every by-law of the corporation in effect on the coming into force of this Act to the appropriate Minister and the President of the Treasury Board.

I submit that that is an open admission by the Government that it does not know what the bylaws are or what the Crown corporations are. This is a method of smoking them out.

The Government takes one further step with Clause 17, which states:

> Notwithstanding section 100 of the said Act—

Which is the strongest clause of the Act.

—where a parent Crown corporation is in existence on the coming into force of this Act and is not named in Schedule C to the said Act six months after the coming into force of this Act, the directors and shareholders of the corporation shall forthwith after the expiry of that period take all steps necessary to dissolve the corporation.

For the first time since Confederation, a piece of legislation has been introduced that will smoke out all of the subsidiary and parent Crown corporations so that they will come under one compilation, Schedule C, of this Bill C-24.

The simple admission by the Government that it is unaware of the bylaws of many of these Crown corporations and subsidiaries is alarming. However, it is beneficial to know that six months after the passage of this Bill all of those Crown corporations which have not filed with the Minister responsible as is required will cease to exist.

There are also some peculiarities written into this legislation which make it quite slippery, as is often the case with that side of the House. This Party has no representation in the Senate and does not intend to have any, particularly while that is a place where the democratic process does not occur.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The last guy who said that was Hazen Argue.

Mr. Fulton: He is not in the NDP. My friend from Saskatchewan is trying to tell me that Senator Hazen Argue is in the NDP.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He made the same speech when he was in the NDP.

Mr. Fulton: Members will be interested to note the following on page 52 under Clause 155(3):

A motion moved in a House of Parliament pursuant to subsection (1) stands referred, for a period of 30 sitting days—

It goes on to state that the references can be made to a committee in either House. Once again we are faced with a piece of legislation that has been designed so that the House of Commons will be avoided by design. All of the sensitive Crown corporation information will never come here. The only thing that will happen is that information will be tabled in the House 15 days after something has occurred. In some cases it will be tabled on the thirty-first sitting day after a session begins. In some cases, such as in this session, it may be years before we actually find out what has gone on on the government side in terms of the tabling or action in the committees of the other House. I do not consider that to be a particularly helpful clause.

Let me discuss two other points that are related to Parliament. The Public Accounts Committee as well as other committees of the House have made recommendations that either committees of the House of Parliament itself should be involved in decisions that affect not only hundreds of millions of dollars, as we know now, but billions of dollars of public moneys. On page 10 of the Bill we find that the Government goes around Parliament once again. It does this not only to permit sensitive issues to go to the Senate and its committees where they will never see the light of day, in this case it says, in Clause 91(1):

The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the appropriate Minister, give a directive to any parent Crown corporation, if the Governor in Council is of the opinion that it is in the public interest to do so.

Once again it is simply done either by Cabinet decree or by making use of the Senate.

I have one final point to make with regard to the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The time allotted to the Hon. Member has expired.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to be able to rise to discuss the Crown corporations Bill, Bill C-24. The mere necessity even to introduce the Bill to the House is an obvious admission on the part of the Government that the Government has totally lost control of Crown corporations. After listening to the previous speaker, and considering the support his Party has shown for the Government in the past few years, it is difficult to understand whether indeed they are for or against Crown corporations.

It is my intention this afternoon to demonstrate to the House the extent to which the control of Crown corporations has escaped the authority and influence of Parliament, which is where the control and influence over Crown corporations and their direction should be placed. In doing that, I will be dealing with the Canada Ports Corporation, which has particular significance in the areas of the Atlantic region and in the western region. I hope to be able to demonstrate through the use of the example of this corporation how out of control this whole matter of Crown corporations has become.

• (1520)

The Port of Saint John is one of the seven national ports of the country. It comes under the jurisdiction of the Canada Ports Corporation. The direction of the Canada Ports Corporation and of its predecessor over the last number of months has not been in the best interests of the port City of Saint John, nor of the people who live there. I would like to demonstrate why that is the case.

It will become obvious from the statistics and from the information which I am about to provide that the policies of the Canada Ports Corporation over the past number of years have had a detrimental effect upon the economic well-being of the Port of Saint John and upon the economic situation in that area. Because of the insensitivity of the Government, unfortunately the port has seen a steady decline in revenues, a steady decline in the amount of business channelled through it, and port activity has suffered considerably.

The first statistic with which I would like to deal concerns the commodity of flour. In 1980, 132,000 metric tons of flour was put through the Port of Saint John, whereas in 1983 it had declined to an amount of 63,000 mts. It is not that we have not addressed ourselves to this issue or that the House is unaware of the situation with reference to the shipment of flour and grain through the port. As a matter of fact, in June 1982, I brought to the attention of the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board the declining situation with reference to shipments of wheat. His response basically was that we should be satisfied with what we had been receiving and that the Government could probably justify itself by not even putting that number of shipments through the Port of Saint John. In terms of wood pulp in 1980, there were 5,506,000 mts put through that port, whereas in 1983 it declined to 368,000 mts. Lumber declined from 164,000 mts in the same year to 77,000 mts in 1983. On and on the story goes.

I understand that the recession has contributed substantially to the fact that revenues from port activities are down. However, 20 some years ago the Port of Saint John was a booming facility. It was one of the gateways of trade into Canada. Indeed, it was the bright spot for the future of that area. At that time, for reasons better known to the Government, it decided to open up the St. Lawrence River and sent up ice-breakers. That was the start of the process of decline in that region. There has been no greater threat to the economy of Saint John since that time. There have been several serious blows coupled with that situation since that time. For example, two major labour-intensive lines were lost to Saint John.

We require more positive action and a more positive attitude on the part of the Government. I am concerned because the Bill does not address itself to the situation. I am glad to see the former Minister of Transport sitting here this afternoon. I hope he will take to heart some of the very serious matters which I am bringing to his attention and will pass on the information to his colleagues. Perhaps we will see some positive results.

If we are to keep pace with the competition, if we are to deal with dwindling cargoes and things of that nature, there must be a positive attitude on the part of the Government. That has not developed over the past, despite the fact that this port is one of the most efficient in Canada. Its labour productivity is second to none. If the figures on the tonnage handled per man-hour are examined, it becomes obvious that the Port of Saint John is the most productive in the country, including those of Montreal, Quebec and other regions. It is incumbent upon the Government to recognize the efficiency and the difficulties which that port is presently experiencing. It employs 6 per cent of the labour force in that part of the country, yet the Government continues to ignore that fact or that it utilizes 5.8 per cent of disposable income in that area. It is the economic heart of Saint John. The port is an extremely valuable facility. Business and labour have indicated their willingness to co-operate with the port. In fact, the port has demonstrated its goodwill in its labour contracts and in its ability to get along. We now need co-operation and sensitivity from a government which has been unwilling to demonstrate this in the past.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate this afternoon in this extended debate on Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

It is interesting to note that while it has taken the Government over four years to come to grips with the issue of Crown corporations, even in its inefficient and inadequate manner, the previous Government, under the leadership of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), managed to come to grips with the entire issue in a matter of about six months. In its short term of office, it was able to present a Bill which would have dealt with the entire problem of Crown corporations.

I am not inclined to argue with my colleague who preceded me, but he suggested that Crown corporations were out of hand. I think I know what he meant; in a sense he was right. However, Crown corporations as far as the Government is concerned are very well in hand. They are just exactly the way the Government wants them so that it can carry out, through the mechanism of Crown corporations, the kinds of activities it wants to do in secret. The Government wants to keep these activities secret from the House of Commons and from the people of Canada. We can find example after example of exorbitant amounts of money being spent by the Government to bail out Crown corporations such as Canadair.

There is no doubt in my mind that the Government has been deliberately slow in bringing in any reforms in the whole arena of Crown corporations. It knows perfectly well that the needed reforms will not be the ones which will suit it in terms of allowing the Government to exercise the devious sort of control it would like to have over a large sector of the Canadian economy.

The Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) and the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) have spent a lot of time studying this Bill. They have spent much more time than many of us have and certainly have identified many of its weaknesses. In fact, when one first looks at the Bill, one would be inclined to think that it was attempting to address some of the real problems existing in Crown corporations.

• (1530)

In listening for a short time this afternoon and this morning to my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) and Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), we are convinced that there is a superficiality to this Bill. It does seem to address the issues of Crown corporations which have been of concern to Members of Parliament. However, when you read the Bill carefully, you find it has not achieved that. The one problem with Crown corporations, the failure to be accountable to Members of Parliament in particular, is not dealt with in this Bill.

I want to deal with the problems and issues raised by this Bill which have not been addressed adequately. As I mentioned, accountability is the predominant problem. The concept of Crown corporations is not new. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) gave the Conservative Party credit for a lot of the past history of Crown corporations. He is quite right that we have been involved and supportive over the years.

Contrary to what he says, we are not critical of Crown corporations per se. We feel there is a real need for Crown corporations.

Mr. Blais: Get your act together.

Mr. Halliday: Our act is together. We all agree there is a need for Crown corporations in certain circumstances. The difference is that we want Crown corporations to be accountable to this House of Commons and the people of Canada, not accountable to the Cabinet, which has been the experience with this Government. That is why it does not want to see any major changes. It knows that a worthwhile change would take away the privilege of the Government to make changes by Order in Council when making appointments and paying debts of Crown corporations in difficulty without any recourse or consultation with Parliament.

One of the most interesting writings on Crown corporations was contained in a presentation given at a conference on Crown corporations in Toronto last fall. The presentation was made by Professor Robert Prichard, a visiting professor of law from Harvard Law School. The presentation was entitled Reforming Crown corporations. He looked at the whole subject in a very thorough manner and tried to make a diagnosis of the problems. He boiled that down to seven major problems and concluded the presentation by what he called "the treatment".

Let me dwell on his seven-point diagnosis. First, the problem is aggravated and compounded by the fact that Crown corporations have proliferated at a rapid pace over the last number of years. As my colleague said, if you ask an official of the Government or a member of the Cabinet how many Crown corporations we have, it is almost impossible to say on any given day how many there are in existence. This proliferation compounds the problem of trying to cope with them.

Second, it is evident that there has not been established an adequate legal and jurisdictional regime to deal with the accountability problem of Crown corporations. This is something we in the Official Opposition would like to see. This is one of the main problems with Crown corporations.

The third item identified in the diagnosis is what he termed the bureaucratization of the accountability process. Bill C-24 just aggravates that situation. We find in this Bill that Crown corporations may be responsible to Cabinet and have certain responsibility to individuals, but there is no consistency in dealing with the problem of where the accountability lies with Crown corporations. There is a mishmash of responsibility, which leads to a definite undermining of the whole process of accountability.

The fourth item has to do with the resistance among bureaucrats to changes in the accountability process. That naturally does not fit in with the concept of the bureaucrats to increase their power and dominion. They object to anything in a Bill such as Bill C-24 that would lessen their opportunity to exert influence at this level.

The fifth item is something we cannot get away from, that is, the politicization of appointments to boards. I have had a little experience in getting to know individuals who are on boards. During the last year it has been my pleasure to know three people who were appointed to a recently-created Crown corporation. One is a chief executive officer. These people perform impeccably well in the private sector. I do not look upon them as being strongly politicized individuals. They may have some leanings, I do not know, but they were successful in their individual enterprises. I hope they will not be disappointed when they take on their role on the board of directors. They may find that the role they played in the private sector is not open to them in the same manner.

I find that there is not enough time left for me to discuss the treatment. I appreciate the opportunity of presenting the problem that exists with Crown corporations.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, it is time that we had an opportunity to examine, even in a superficial way, the proliferation of Crown corporations in this country and the aberration caused in the business community with regard to Canada's economic demise as a competent nation. It evolves around all that we are looking at today with regard to the chaos which has resulted for many businessmen and individuals. There is a horrendous list of bankruptcies. This has produced an almost static figure of 1.5 million unemployed. This has been the case for month after month and there is little possibility that these people will soon get back into the work force.

An examination should be made of the proliferation of these Crown corporations. If you go back to 1962, you will find that a totally new socialistic approach developed with regard to the role of the private sector as compared to the public or government sector.

We have gone from something like 28 Crown corporations to Lord knows how many. You can start around 300 and work up to 600 and find some justification for saying that they have the mark of a Crown corporation. Today there are almost as many individuals working for Crown corporations as there are working in the Public Service of Canada. I believe there are over a quarter million people employed in the various Crown corporations. Another type of partial employment is available through the directorships of these Crown corporations. While there may be examples of very worth-while people who are making a contribution in one way or another to these Crown corporations, boards of directors of Crown corporations have become the Liberal Party's greatest porkbarrel in the history of the nation.

During this debate, many of my colleagues have asked what is the role of a director of a Crown corporation. Becoming a director of a given company in the private sector is dependent upon a personal track record of achievement in whatever sector of the economy one has developed an expertise. Everyone who is appointed as a director of a significant private-sector company in the country has a proven success record.

However, for directors of Crown corporations, that proven success record is based absolutely upon one's leanings toward the Liberal Party. It is based upon how much money one has given or has raised for the Liberal Party and how much work one has done for the Liberal Party. It is based upon the fact that one is a defeated candidate or a defeated Cabinet Minister.

Some of the real horror stories that we have heard and for which we have had to pay the bills relate directly to people who have been found to be incompetent as Members of Parliament by the Canadian people. One such person I might mention who has gone from one beautiful green pasture to the next is Barney Danson. He was rejected by his constituency and ended up with de Havilland. I believe he is in Boston now. He goes from one sweet job to the next, leaving a trail of horror behind him. de Havilland was already in some difficulty, but it was nothing like the difficulty it found itself in after Mr. Danson became president. Who ends up paying those bills, Mr. Speaker? We do.

I happened to take a look at the April 30, 1984, issue of Fortune magazine. A statement on politics and policy in that magazine contains a discussion of the Mitterrand Government in France and its socialistic tendencies which have got France and the French people into difficulty. When looking at some of the comparisons used in that article regarding the difficulties of given nations with their external debts—I see that as an example—Canada's external debt exceeds those of Mexico and Brazil, two countries which we call almost bankrupt. Canada's debt exceeds Argentina's debt as well. As a matter of fact, according to these figures, Canada's external debt is $99.5 billion or 34 per cent of the gross domestic product, whereas Argentina's external debt is $36.5 billion and represents 30 per cent of its gross domestic product. It is not very pleasant to pick up an article like this and see what our financial rating is in comparison with that of other countries in the world, especially when those other countries are in real economic difficulty.

The Government of Canada tries to make us believe that everything is great and wonderful. It tries to make us believe that tomorrow will be a wonderful day, except for the fact that no one seems to have any respect for our dollar. Our dollar is costing the taxpayers of the country high interest rates, a lack of jobs and a lack of housing starts. Who is going to start to build a house now while watching us go down the road again to the high interest situation that destroyed many Canadian families not more than a year and a half ago? Yet billions of dollars are now being spent in an attempt to prop up a dollar that was a disgrace to start with and is worth 77 cents U.S.

Therefore, I would say that we do not need a Bill that is as anaemic as is this Bill. It is anaemic in comparison with our hopes for ever having control over the proliferation of Crown corporations, the incompetence of Crown corporations or the destructiveness to the private sector of Crown corporations. What we in Canada need is the elimination of incompetence and the elimination of many of the Crown corporations that go along with it. We certainly need some form of protection to eliminate the porkbarreling that goes on with the appointments of Grits only to the directorships of these boards. These Grits receive free plane tickets and free directors' fees for doing next to nothing. They end up finding out that for all of their incompetence, they are paid huge bonuses. That is the situation with de Havilland and that is the mess in which we find ourselves. The only way we are going to get out of that mess is by getting rid of these people and putting in power some people who will put some sense into the economy of the country.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, perhaps this Bill was introduced at this time in an attempt to appease the public and the parliamentary outcry over scandals like Canadair. If that is so, it is quite clear that its purpose was not to place Crown corporations under effective public control but to appear to place Crown corporations under effective public control. There is an old saying that British justice must not only be done but must be seen to be done. It appears that this Government does not believe that justice needs to be done but that only the facade need be created.

Previous speakers have pointed out many of the flaws in the Bill. There is no control over subsidiaries. The parent company may escape all of its real obligations by simply emptying itself into those subsidiaries that have already been pioneered. There is no control of the regulations. There is no assurance that elected representatives will be able to receive all the relevant facts, and there is no opportunity for elected representatives to debate certain reports and reject them if they find them to be faulty. This is not too surprising because, contrary to the statement of the badly informed Hon. Member for Prince George—Peace River (Mr. Oberle), Crown corporations are not a socialist invention. If, as he said, they only work in hell, it is because they were invented by capitalist governments.

At times, the CCF and NDP have used something like a Crown corporation as a model, because it was the only thing available under the current federal structure and laws of the country. However, for a century and more back, Crown corporations typically have been created to meet the needs of the most pressing and aggressive business people in the private business world. Until the late 1930s, that was generally done under the leadership of federal Tory Governments, and since then it has been done under the leadership of federal Liberal Governments.

The Tories, of course, feel that they have been shut out from what they call the porkbarrel and they want in again. In the meantime, as was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), they are doing quite well with their provincial porkbarrels. Crown corporations were not created to serve the common people. They were created to serve the needs of big business. One need only look at Ontario Hydro to see a clear example of that at the provincial level.

I would first like to mention some examples of that which I have just indicated. Canadian Pacific created the means for investors to open up the West, to get at the minerals and other raw materials of the country, and to make a bundle by shipping farmers to the West.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) has passed twice between the Hon. Member who is speaking and the Chair in the last two or three minutes. I would suggest that the Hon. Member watch out for this.

• (1550)

Mr. Heap: Of course, Canadian Pacific is the most famous example of a corporation cheating taxpayers by taking subsidies given by taxpayers, and then reneging on commitments to provide transportation either for passengers or for freight. Its successor, VIA Rail, which was really created as a smokescreen for the CP, or the CP-CN, has established an amazing record of being totally free from the control of Parliament. During 1981 and 1982, Opposition Parties tried in every way to get some control over VIA Rail's cutback of 20 per cent of its service. The Government simply laughed at us and protected VIA Rail.

Canada Post has become a Crown corporation. Its prime function now is not to serve the individual person who writes letters, but to serve commercial corporations. It is cutting back on the service to individual letter writers and letter receivers.

There is also the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which for four decades has been following the purpose of funding private investors who are rent-gougers in the real estate industry. There is a small veneer of non-profit subsidy, but most of the subsidy goes to unlimited rental units and rent-gougers. They are now getting into the business of rent supplements, whereby the public purse will simply be used as a way of funnelling money to an unlimited degree to the private profit corporations which are monopolizing the apartment industry in the major cities of Canada.

In reference to housing, there is an example, not of a Crown corporation but of a public corporation that I think ought to be given more consideration in addressing this Bill on the question of the control of Crown corporations. The City of Toronto created a non-profit housing corporation. It did that for the same reason as that for which Crown corporations have been created, it being mainly that a certain major public need was not being met by private industry. The City of Toronto Non-Profit Housing Corporation has many problems. It started out with a great lack of experience and had to learn through a good many of its mistakes. One of its major problems was the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—the delays, misleading statements, reneging on promises, changing of rules in midstream and then the use of changed rules in order to milk not only non-profit corporations but co-ops by changing the basic rent rules after the general program had started. Nevertheless, the City of Toronto Non-Profit Housing Corporation has created low to moderately-priced housing for thousands of people in the City of Toronto who otherwise would not have been able to get it. These people would have had extreme difficulties in finding decent housing. What the City of Toronto Non-Profit Housing Corporation has that does not characterize the Crown corporations that the Government proposes to set up is, first of all, that city council has access to all the facts. It has a mixed board, made up of members of council and other citizens. We can argue about the proportions, but the fact is that council members have direct access to all the facts. The board is annually appointed, which means that the whole council can carry out an annual review. As well, the tenants have a right to appear before the board of directors to state their case. The tenants and the public can obtain information so that at the next general election of the members of the council they can, if they wish, elect councillors who will renovate, improve or correct the Toronto Non-Profit Housing Corporation.

That sort of strength, health and accountability is in no way provided by this Bill. What is really needed federally is legislation which would do the equivalent of what has been done municipally in Toronto and in other places. For one thing, we must remove the immunity of the Crown from ordinary scrutiny and litigation. Consider the scandal of a Crown corporation such as Eldorado being used to protect a whole group of private entrepreneurs who had engaged in a cartel by claiming that because of its being a Crown corporation the matter could not be brought before the courts. That protection must be removed from any Crown corporation legislation.

There must be provision for representation by workers at all levels in the industry. There must also be provision for representation by the users, because it is they who are the watch-dogs, not Parliament. Parliament can be useful in a limited way, but without the people who have the direct experience as workers and as users of the activity of the Crown corporation, Parliament can never be well enough informed to do its job. Above all, there must be guaranteed public access to all the facts, not only by some limited Senate committee or some limited parliamentary committee. There is no good reason why the basic facts of past operations of a publicly-owned corporation need be kept secret. There could be the usual discretionary secrecy when engaging in real estate buying or personnel decisions, which are taken by the City of Toronto Non-Profit Housing Corporation, but the books of the past are open and should be so.

I think the Government should junk this Bill, and bring in a Bill that really meets the need of the public, the need for public corporations that could be controlled through public representatives.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the two or three minutes remaining, and so that another Member does not get his ten-minute speech broken up into three and seven-minute parts, I wonder if we could get unanimous agreement that the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) complete his remarks for the remaining two or three minutes until four o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Agreed and so ordered. The Hon. Member for Spadina.

Mr. Heap: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I mentioned that the City of Toronto Non-Profit Housing Corporation is not the only one of its kind. Ottawa has one, and many other municipalities have carried out the same experiment. I think it would be useful, when this Bill goes to committee, to invite comments from both CMHC and from some of the non-profit housing corporations in order to gain from the experience which they have had. The committee could then make substantial and informed recommendations as to the possible amendments to the Bill or the possible reworking of the whole Bill, if the Government could be persuaded to withdraw it and bring it back in a more appropriate form.

I believe there is a great need to have full public examination of this Bill in committee. I hope the Government will not rush it. I understand the problem which the Government has in trying to guess when it will call the next general election. Nevertheless, I believe it would be very foolish to proceed on a matter of such great importance without hearing from those across Canada who have experience in organizations such as public non-profit corporations which are not Crown corporations. They would be able to provide a great deal of necessary guidance.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that it is almost four o'clock. If it is acceptable to you, I would be willing to have the House proceed to the next order of business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties and I think if you sought unanimous consent to proceed directly to immediate consideration of all three stages of Bill C-205, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle), you would find such consent. The House could then proceed with that Bill very quickly without any speakers since it is simply a Bill to change the name of the Hon. Member's constituency. I believe he will find there is agreement to move right away through all three readings of that Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent for the proposal just enunciated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Agreed and so ordered.

ENERGY

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should, at the next Federal-Provincial Conference, consider the question of extending daylight savings time an additional two months.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion reads that, in the opinion of this House, the Government should at the next federal-provincial conference consider the question of extending daylight savings time an additional two months. It should be noted that although local time falls under provincial or municipal jurisdiction, official time is the responsibility of the federal Government.

The National Research Council presented a publication in 1983 recommending that daylight savings time be introduced on March 1, two months earlier than at present. The report states that recent interest in energy conservation has led to detailed studies of the possible advantages of longer periods of daylight savings time. It appears that significant savings in energy would result if daylight savings time were to start nearer the beginning of March and end about a week later in early November. The main energy saving is attributable to reduced consumption of electricity for evening residential lighting.

Year round daylight saving was first used in some countries during the Second World War. It was used in both Quebec and Ontario from September 1940 to September 1945, and throughout Canada from February 1942 until the latter date, by federal Orders in Council passed under the War Measures Act.

In summary, it can be stated that while the use of daylight savings time is of questionable value in rural areas, in the westernmost portions of certain time zones and in the most northerly areas, it is well accepted by most people in Canada and the United States. It is probably only a matter of time before a move to an extended period is made in both these countries.

The National Research Council has been on record as supporting the extension of daylight savings time since 1974 when the United States experimented with daylight time the year round. Mr. C. C. Costain, head of the Council's electrical and time standards section, has stated that much better than year round daylight savings time would be a symmetrical system with about four months of daylight time after July 1 as is the case currently, and four months instead of two months before July 1. During March and April there would be enough light for schoolbound children in the morning and an extra hour for everyone in the afternoon. The Council would also like to see a one-week extension of daylight time in the fall so as to ensure plenty of light in the early evening on Hallowe'en, October 31.

The National Research Council stated that $23.8 million a year could be saved in the reduced use of electricity, the number of traffic accidents would decrease, the crime rate would drop, the economy would be sparked by increasing retail store business and school children would return home in daylight. The Province of Saskatchewan is on extended daylight savings. There would also be psychological benefits during winter blahs.

Currently before the United States Senate, a Bill is being debated which would advance daylight savings time by two months. A decision is to be reached later this year and should the Bill pass, it is expected that Canada will follow by adopting the same plan.

In the summer of 1983 I questioned my constituents of Winnipeg-Assiniboine regarding their feelings on the issue of extending daylight savings. Some 83 per cent favoured an extension, while some wished to have daylight savings time year round, similar to Saskatchewan. Only 12 per cent were against it and 5 per cent were undecided. As there was such an overwhelming majority of constituents who supported this proposal, I contacted the Hon. James Lee, Premier of Prince Edward Island, who is to be the next chairman of the annual premiers conference, and asked that he place the subject of extending daylight savings time on the agenda of the conference. In response to my letter, Premier Lee stated:

> My colleagues and I in the Council of Maritime Premiers support the extension of daylight savings time and indicated this in a press release in September, 1982.
> The next annual Premiers' conference may be an appropriate forum in which to raise this subject for discussion by the ten Premiers.

The press release which Premier Lee refers to in his letter read as follows:

Daylight Savings Time

> The Council of Maritime Premiers said that if the United States Senate approved a bill now before it to begin daylight savings time on the first Monday of March each year, about eight weeks earlier than is now the case, the three Maritime Provinces would urge similar action be taken in Canada.
> The U.S. proposal, which has already received approval from the House of Representatives would result in energy savings. Should this become a possibility, it must be implemented in as many areas of North America as possible because of the integrated transportation and communication systems on this continent.

I also received a letter of support from Premier William Davis of Ontario who stated that:

> Ontario would be more than willing to consider supporting the extension of daylight savings time if it is also supported and adopted by the other Provinces and by the United States.

As well, there are many other advantages to extended daylight savings time. For example, it has been noted that golfers could leave work at five o'clock and still get 18 holes in before the sun goes down. There are also many housewives who like to golf in the evening as well, so they would be able to go along with their husbands. Of course, this would be more of a benefit to golfers in the United States because our Canadian climate effectively limits our golf season.

• (1610)

If, as in Saskatchewan, it was determined that Canada should be on daylight savings time year round, Air Canada would not have to spend so much money and time on updating flight schedules. The United States is intent on adding a bit of sunlight to the afternoon. As a matter of fact, if legislation does not get the sunlight, technology will. Two NASA scientists postulate that 16 collapsible mirrors could be placed in low earth orbit and then propelled into an orbit 22,500 miles above the continental U.S. At that height the mirrors could track the earth's rotation and, directed by computers, could slowly direct a beam of sunlight from city to city, adding a few hours to the length of each day. It is estimated that this would save the equivalent of $285 million in energy every year and pay for itself within five years. I believe, however, that extending daylight savings time through legislation would be much easier.

I am suggesting that the subject of extending daylight savings time be discussed at the next federal-provincial conference. The ten Premiers could then consider the pros and cons of implementing this proposal in their respective provinces. There has been no response or comment from the west in this regard, and the western Premiers could request that their citizens let their feelings be known on the extension of daylight savings time.

[Translation]

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I do not often agree with the views of the Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), and today is one of those rare occasions that I do.

The suggestion to change daylight saving time or, rather, to extend daylight saving time over eight months of the year, has received the support of the National Research Council, as the Hon. Member pointed out. In fact, the U.S. Senate is currently considering legislation, as the Hon. Member mentioned as well.

We must not forget, however, that changes of this kind will meet with a number of objections in some of our provinces. However, it seems that the arguments in favour, namely, energy conservation, which may mean a few dollars saved per household, and increased public security, should be powerful enough to overcome these objections.

Therefore, I would rather not prolong the debate on this question but simply say that we agree to put this subject on the agenda of the next federal-provincial conference, which would then be able to examine the feasibility of extending daylight saving time an additional two months, in other words, four months before the first of July and four months after.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The question is as follows: Mr. Dan McKenzie moves that, in the opinion of this House, the government should, at the next Federal-Provincial Conference, consider the question of extending daylight savings time an additional two months.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think you will find that there is unanimous agreement that we call it five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there agreement to call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, May 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-24, which is an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. For my part I would like to discuss the legislation within the broader framework of government intervention. Rather than restricting this, the Bill gives the Government increased regulatory power and is therefore typical of the excessive desire on the part of the Government to control, to keep secret and to insulate, from both parliamentary scrutiny and public scrutiny, Acts of Parliament.

My strongest belief, as a former businessman and now as an elected representative, is that if private enterprise can do the job as well or better than government, then the state should not interfere. Where government intervention is necessary, it must be conducted in a spirit of co-operation and accommodation, not in competition with the private sector. I am sure the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development (Mr. Johnston) would share this opinion if given the opportunity to express himself freely and free of Cabinet.

If in fact private enterprise is to be successful, the Government must immediately stop creating impediments to growth and allow the small-businessman the chance to expand and stimulate employment opportunities within his sector. Economic recovery is dependent upon developing the creative capacity of the private sector. Yet the Government continues to interfere in the economy, either directly or indirectly, through mechanisms such as Crown corporations. This constant interference in the marketplace has stifled private initiative and has suppressed investment capital which is so badly needed for job creation. If we are truly interested in creating jobs we need working capital. We have to encourage investment in the private sector, not discourage it. Confirmation of this is provided by the alarming trend developing which is effectively reversing the role of government accountability.

Today the attitude which is prevalent at many levels of the federal bureaucracy is that somehow the taxpayer is accountable to government, not the government accountable to the taxpayer. This is not at all surprising, considering the overwhelming growth of government which has taken place over the past 15 years.

The enormous size of government all but eliminates personal accountability for the economical, efficient and effective management of public funds. During the years of bureaucratic expansion, it appears that the public purse was deemed to be bottomless. All of this uncontrolled growth is designed for the purpose of allowing government increasingly to interfere in the process of free enterprise.

These concerns were expressed very clearly and were shared by the former U.S. Treasury Secretary, William Simon. He said:

> People must be taught to start calling for a rollback of the bureaucracy, where nothing will be lost but strangling regulation and where gains will always take the form of liberty, productivity and jobs.

In Canada today we are witnessing the growth of a disease of government which, if it is allowed to proceed unchecked, will reap untold destruction. Yet Government Members express shock when we criticize a Bill which, far from improving the situation, will only make matters worse by extending the discretionary powers of government and Crown corporations. There is, unfortunately, no shortage of evidence to support the claim that is being made on behalf of the Opposition. To quote page 13 of the Auditor General's report, he noted:

> It may be helpful in visualizing the scale of the problem to think of the whole group as an enormous iceberg floating lazily in the foggy Atlantic; silent, majestic, awesome. The public tends to see only the upper portions, . . . the giants like CNR, Petro-Can, CBC, . . . The great bulk of the iceberg below the surface is less spectacular, less likely to attract public interest, less likely to receive the attention of Parliament, yet costly to the taxpayers.

• (1115)

A list of "wild risks" and "unknown losers" include "the boat that wouldn't float". Between January, 1973 and June, 1979, the Government spent $1.4 million on a fisheries training vessel which was supposed to cost only $308,000 to purchase and refit. The Government of Columbia refused to accept the vessel due to its instability and unsuitability, according to the Auditor General's report of 1979.

Let us take a look at Consolidated Computer Inc. It was a government experiment to take an equity position in this computer company, which it was subsidizing, and it ultimately cost the Canadian taxpayer $124 million. The company was finally dumped. That is proof evident of the inability of the Government to compete with the private sector. Let us look at Maislin Transport Ltd. In spite of being told not to by officials in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the federal Government guaranteed a $33.4 million loan to Maislin in July of 1982. A year later the company declared bankruptcy.

In February, 1981 the federal Government purchased Petrofina for approximately $1.46 billion, or $120 per share. At the time of the purchase the shares were trading for $90 and were estimated by various brokerage houses to have a true value of about $80. In other words, the federal Government paid between $365 million and $486 million more than was necessary in order to acquire a chain of gasoline stations in eastern Canada.

The carrying costs of the money invested by the Government to date in Petro-Canada totals over $700 million. It is important to remember that Petro-Canada was originally intended to give Canada a window on the oil industry. For the amount of taxpayers' dollars spent to date, I certainly hope we have a good view. However, I am not so sure the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development would agree. For instance, on April 8, 1984, he had this to say about the "people's" company:

> I don't see any need for Petro-Canada in the service station business. I don't see that the Government needs to retail gas any more than it needs to retail chocolates—
> If someone came with a good offer for the Petro-Canada service stations, I would be the first to recommend that they be sold provided we are satisfied that the same service is going to be given to the public.

It is strange yet somewhat refreshing to observe a Liberal Cabinet Minister voice his concerns for free enterprise. I wonder where his recently established sense of conviction was when his accomplices and their bureaucratic experts fashioned the National Energy Program.

Government has to start slowing down on its involvement in the private sector. It is most important that when we look at Crown corporations, we assess them from the standpoint of their necessity, not from the standpoint of the necessity of government to get involved in the marketplace. I would hope that where the private sector is serving the Canadian people well, the Government would stay out of the marketplace and leave it up to that sector. That is the sector which can best manage our economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Before recognizing the next speaker, I would just like to caution Hon. Members if they are reading extracts that they read a little slower. It is extremely difficult for the simultaneous interpretation staff when a person is reading very fast.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I assure you that I will speak sufficiently slowly that even those people who do not understand Ukrainian will understand what I am saying.

I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate today and to deal with this legislative initiative which has been taken by the Government with respect to Crown corporations in our country. People who are following the debate will understand that there has been of recent months and years a very substantial concern expressed by many Canadians about the whole question of accountability of Crown corporations. I know that people in my own constituency have asked me how it can be that corporations such as Canadair and de Havilland, by way of example—

Mr. Fulton: PWA.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: PWA is a money maker. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) will know that when the Conservatives get their hands on these things, proper management and accountability prevails. However, I will save that for another debate, Mr. Speaker. I simply wanted to deal at this point in time with the whole question of accountability in terms of the intentions of the Government in this Bill.

• (1120)

Then, to deal with something which has not yet really been covered in this debate, there is the problem, as I see it, of two sets of standards; one for Crown corporations and one for the average Canadian. I refer to the principle of Crown immunity. That simply means that whenever an agency or an official of an agency of government is involved in activities ostensibly dealing with the performance of the duties of government, they are protected from prosecution, criminal or otherwise. For example, if I were to try and set up a cartel, within Canada or internationally, I could expect to be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law by officials of the Crown. By the same token, if I were involved in misleading or false advertising, the people of Canada would say that it is against the law and that person or company should be prosecuted.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Canadian Crown corporations occupy a privileged place with respect to the laws of this land. Crown corporations, agencies and Cabinet Ministers involved in direct competition with the private sector do not have to obey the law. They have the defence of Crown immunity. I think most Canadians would ask how this can possibly be. They think we live in a country with a government under the rule of law, which means not only the governed have to obey the law but governments also have to obey the law. I am sure the people do not realize that if government agencies and Crown corporations involved in commercial activities mislead the public by false advertising or involve themselves in cartels, they cannot be prosecuted. But the law says that is the case. Section 16 of the Interpretation Act deals with Her Majesty as follows:

> No enactment is binding on Her Majesty or affects Her Majesty or Her Majesty's rights or prerogatives in any manner, except only as therein mentioned or referred to.

That means that the agents of Her Majesty, the Government of Canada, are not affected by the criminal law in this country unless there is a specific inclusion in the legislation to make them liable. Crown corporations continue to enjoy special status and they carry on business in the public domain, but they are not subject to the laws of the land. Since Crown corporations have immunity, they can break the law with impunity. There is no way to achieve redress through the courts of our land. We have one law for the Government, and another for you and me, Mr. Speaker, the governed of this country.

We all know the sordid history of the uranium cartel which took place under this Government. Involved were the present Minister of State for Social Development, Senator Austin in the other place, the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in charge of Uranium Canada and Eldorado Nuclear Limited, and others. These people and the Cabinet Ministers involved actually travelled around the world to set up a cartel with respect to the world price of uranium. This cartel was established. As a result, literally hundreds of thousands of Canadians paid unreasonable and unrealistic prices for uranium for the generation of power. The people in the Province of Ontario paid very large amounts due to this illegal activity. The Government of Canada initiated this activity and was the main force involved in the formation of the cartel.

• (1125)

Mr. Orlikow: Did the Ontario Government know about it?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Government of Ontario was completely oblivious, Mr. Speaker, to this whole situation. I always have to inform Members of the NDP about the facts of life. During my political life I have been trying to be helpful to that Party. They do not take my advice and look where they are in the polls. It is just awful. I do not know what I can do to salvage this Party, but I am working as hard as I can in the best interests of the people of Canada and the NDP to make sure that justice prevails.

In December of 1983 the Supreme Court of Canada handed down a decision which, in effect, said that Eldorado Nuclear and Uranium Canada could not be charged for their part in this cartel. They have been exempted. However, all the private concerns which were forced, by virtue of government directives, either to participate in this activity or be out of the picture as far as uranium sales are concerned find their positions in jeopardy. These private companies are taking the full brunt of the prosecution.

The Government is relying on this defence to protect itself and its political friends. Even under the freedom of information legislation the Government will not release documents pertaining to the formation of this cartel. That indicates the power the Government has. In our country we pride ourselves on the principle that the Government operates under the rules of law. That is why it is absolutely essential that we study this legislation to ensure that those who are involved in government are not exempted by their own legislation from any accountability to the courts or the Parliament of this land.

I could give you other examples with respect to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker. A matter was raised with respect to what many people in Canada considered to be misleading advertising. I see I have only a couple of minutes remaining, but I have a letter dated September 10, 1980 from Consumer and Corporate Affairs to Murray Coolican of the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee in Ottawa. In this letter K. G. Decker, Director of the Marketing Practices Branch, said:

> In addition, there have been some cases in law which appear to have established that agents of the Crown, which would include most government departments, cannot be prosecuted.

I raised in the House of Commons the matter of the Royal Canadian Mint, another Crown corporation, advertising silver dollars which in fact were 50 per cent alloy and 50 per cent silver. There was nothing in the advertising which told the Canadian consumer that. Simpsons Limited was prosecuted for advertising jewellery which was not all it was cracked up to be. They were fined $1 million. Of course, there has been no prosecution of the Royal Canadian Mint for misleading advertising.

I have really only started, Mr. Speaker, but I will conclude this part of my remarks on this issue. I know there has been some discussion about changing the competition laws of the country. In this legislation we need a provision to ensure that Crown corporations operate under the same rules as every other company or citizen of the country.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, it is with great respect that I enter this debate to follow those Hon. Members in our caucus who have had many years of parliamentary experience and give a background of Crown corporations in order to let Canadians fully understand the difficulties of Crown corporation operations.

There is a story which I believe helps to explain the problems caused by Crown corporations in Canada and other countries assuming an increasing role in the economic and regulatory activities of a country. It is a story by Barbara Tuchman entitled "The March of Folly". The story is about King Philip of Spain who reigned during the seventeenth century. It is said that he died of a fever which was contracted by sitting too long beside a stove. The problem was that he was unable to find the public servant to turn down the temperature of the stove. This story reflects the difficulty that takes place when people who are not fully accountable or sensitive to what should happen carry out an operation for which the Government is responsible.

While King Philip met his end in an extraordinary way, I do not know whether it will be so obvious when we are consumed by the inability to gain control of the activities being undertaken on our behalf by public servants and others in Crown corporations. However, it is a clear demonstration of the dangers and difficulties that exist in Crown corporations. When one considers the ever-increasing involvement of government in the lives of Canadians, the point raised in this story about accountability and communication becomes more important.

The level of government activity in our daily lives has reached a tremendous proportion, up to 47 per cent of our Gross National Product. This demonstrates the need for more effective management and ability to control and direct this level of activity on our own behalf.

I would also question why we are dealing with a Bill such as Bill C-24 at this time. What is so important about its need today as compared to the last 15 years during which time these difficulties with Crown corporations have been identified by past Auditor Generals and numerous politicians from both sides of the House? These difficulties have been pointed out most recently by one of the Liberal leadership candidates who indicated with respect to Petro-Canada that he would like to make changes and sell some of the gas stations.

While these difficulties have been outlined for some time now, we are suddenly faced with Bill C-24. I guess something is better than nothing and that this Bill has some relevance in that at least some action is finally being taken to come to grips with this problem. However, some of the most important authorities throughout the country have not had an adequate opportunity to study this Bill in detail, to consider its consequences or suggest amendments to address these problems which we have known about for some time.

The Hon. Member who spoke before me indicated several specific examples of the problems which could develop. Due to his full knowledge and understanding of particular areas, such as the uranium cartel and so on, I think he is adequately qualified to point out how this Bill should be modified so that it does not end up as legislation that will not achieve the goals which we set out.

Of course, one of the main goals is to achieve accountability and ensure that Crown corporations have an obligation to serve the public interest while at the same time Ministers and the Government accept the responsibility for their direction. I believe the present legislation will continue to allow Crown corporations to take the responsibility which should be that of the Government in terms of management, personnel and other factors. While political initiative may be behind the action of the corporation, this Bill does not provide for the political responsibility of that action. There could be cases where capable, competent public servants, who may be able to produce a satisfactory result if left to their own resources, may have been interfered with by the political process which in turn has not been accountable for those activities.

In the few minutes remaining, let me proceed to the question of immunity from prosecution according to other Acts. If Crown corporations are to be any value, they will have to be subject to the same laws of the land as other Crown corporations within our economic environment. An excellent example of this was Eldorado Nuclear. In that instance the Combines Investigation Act should have applied. If this Bill is passed in its present form, I suggest that the Cabinet will be the real winner. It will not be Canadians who deserve to have sufficient accountability and the political responsibility which they can judge at the time of a general election. However, this legislation provides the Cabinet with many opportunities to avoid some of the responsibilities and escape some of the controlled mechanisms that should be consistently applied across the board, as was the intent of this very legislation.

In closing, let me comment on this massive government within government, as it has been described by one Auditor General, which exceeds even the current personnel of the Public Service. I think Canadians must come to grips with what is not necessarily a problem of government or Crown corporations but an effect of human nature. I believe it is human nature for all of us to try to achieve as much as possible with as little effort as possible, whether it is in a public activity, political or private enterprise. Therefore, unless there is accountability and an entire range of requirements for responsibility to carry out particular objectives, we will all lose a very great deal.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) who spoke earlier, I had the impression that he and perhaps some of his colleagues were so wedded to the free enterprise system that they are opposed to any and all Crown corporations. I want to remind him that Crown corporations are as Canadian as apple pie. Crown corporations have been created by federal and provincial governments that were Liberal, Conservative, NDP and even Social Credit. They were created by these governments when they came to the conclusion that the free enterprise system was not ready to take the risk. It could not see its way to making a profit in a field which was socially or economically necessary.

● (1140)

And so you have the Ontario Hydro which was created many years ago by a Conservative Government. You have the Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta telephone systems. These are all Crown corporations. Manitoba's Crown corporation was created by a Conservative Government way back in 1907 led by Sir R. P. Roblin. You have the B.C. Hydro created as a public utility by a Social Credit Government. We ought to keep in mind that Crown corporations have been established because they were needed. That does not mean Crown corporations, like privately-owned corporations, need not be monitored, examined and watched to see they do the things which they were created to do. But to operate them as efficiently and as economically as possible, Mr. Speaker, the public needs as much information as possible. A government which creates Crown corporations, be it a federal or provincial government, needs the authority to see that its Crown corporations do the jobs they are supposed to.

There has been a lot of evidence of this, Mr. Speaker. I have given you de Havilland, Canadair and Atomic Energy of Canada, all of which got into trouble. Not only did they get into trouble but it was obvious they were not reporting to government as they should concerning their troubles and what could and should have been done about them. To the extent that this Bill improves the situation by giving government and, therefore, Parliament the authority and power to correct situations which are improper, we will support the Bill.

I want to spend a few minutes now discussing the problems of one Crown corporation which we believe should not be included under the terms of this Bill. I am speaking of the Canada Council. We think the inclusion of the Canada Council under the provisions of Bill C-24 is wrong. We feel the Government has made a serious error in this regard. We believe it is totally inappropriate for the Government to put an agency such as the Canada Council under the provisions of Bill C-24. We believe that the Canada Council Act as it now stands does everything which Bill C-24 would do, but it enables the Canada Council to maintain its independent position free from the influence of politically motivated decisions.

Over the past 25 years the Canada Council has established a reputation for quality of work, delivery of service, and support to the Canadian cultural community. This reputation was built on the principle that government in Canada should support the flourishing of culture and art in our country. But an independent body controlled by bona fide representatives of the arts and cultural community should make the difficult judgments about which artists and cultural endeavours should be funded by government.

Let me point out that the Canada Council was established in 1957 as a result of the recommendations of the Massey-Levesque Royal Commission on the Arts, Letters and Social Sciences in Canada. At that time the Commission stated in its report:

> We should . . . consider it a misfortune if this Canada Council became in any sense a department of government, but we realize that since this body will be spending public money it must be in an effective manner responsible to the Government and hence to parliament.

With the Canada Council we are not dealing with a massive corporation such as some I have mentioned, like de Havilland, Canadair or Atomic Energy of Canada. They are Crown corporations which spend hundreds of millions of dollars. We are dealing with a rather small and specialized organization which has always been clearly recognized as a promoter of culture, apart and independent from direct political influence. If Bill C-24 is passed into law without change and the Canada Council is included in the new Bill, it will therefore fall under the provisions of the Financial Administration Act.

It was a Liberal Prime Minister, Mr. St. Laurent, when introducing the Canada Council Act to Parliament, who stated that the Council should be independent because governments should, and I quote:

> —support the cultural development of the nation but not control it.

Bill C-24 directly contradicts the opinion of the arts community and overturns the principle of an arm's length relationship established by the Massey Commission and the Liberal Government of the day. We ask ourselves why. We think it is for bureaucratic consistency, to satisfy those minds concerned with building better paper empires, more fundamentally perhaps to give senior departmental officials control of cultural development and to politicize the process of the distribution of cultural funds even more. We have seen that kind of politicization in almost every aspect of this Government's operations. We think that has been bad. We think to begin to apply that to the Canada Council and to the arts and cultural community would be a major mistake.

As it operates now, the Canada Council is fully audited by the Auditor General every year, unlike the Crown corporation giants which are more correctly the prime targets of this Bill, and so they should be, Mr. Speaker. The Canada Council fully discloses the names of the organizations and individuals that receive its grants as well as the names of its members and its jurors. These are published in the annual report. Along with this, representatives of the Canada Council appear before Commons committees and other official bodies. They make reports and are subject to questioning on a regular basis.

The requirements of the Financial Administration Act will impose greater administrative costs upon the Canada Council and effectively reduce the already limited funding that the Council must allocate to the arts and cultural community. Under the provisions of Bill C-24, the 21-member board of the Canada Council will have reduced powers and be more subject to the imperatives of departmental officials with the almost certain result that the actions and decisions of the Council will suffer. Specifically the quality of judgment and the decisions made in allocating funds for cultural and artistic endeavours will deteriorate. The needs and priorities of the arts will fall victim to the closer relationship the Council will be bound to have with the Department of Communications.

We believe the Canada Council has over the 27 years of its existence shown itself to be an innovative and active organization using a relatively effective peer judgment system to allocate scarce funding to the Canadian artistic and intellectual community. In doing so it has nurtured research and creation in the fields of social sciences, arts, drama and music and it has produced valuable cultural achievements.

The implications of Bill C-24 are, in the case of the Canada Council, completely inappropriate. This Bill will contribute nothing to making the Council more effective in accomplishing its objectives. The Bill must be amended in order that the Canada Council is excluded from its provisions, just as other specialized agencies of the Government have been excluded.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the opportunity to speak on a Bill like this does not come too often. I am very pleased this Bill has now come to this Parliament, as it has to several other Parliaments through which we have sat. Bill C-24 deals with the organization and operation of Crown corporations to a great degree.

At first glance it would appear that this Bill will give the Government even more power. The Bill does not in any way clarify or specify how the Government intends to use this control of the various Crown corporations for the good of the general public, the taxpayer, or indeed of the corporations.

This Government has, of course, a long record of its treatment of Crown corporations, almost uniformly bad. I can easily agree with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). He pointed out that Crown corporations are supposed to be created to serve the good of the public, when there is a need for a public service that may be lost if the Crown does not come to the rescue. That does not mean that the present Government understands its role in Crown corporations. One suspects that the real reason for many of the Crown corporations the Government has adopted lately is that it wishes the Crown to own as much as it can of the industry in this country. Among the reasons it places very high on the scale is the location of the Crown corporation, which Members of Parliament will be affected and what kind of berth it might provide for some of its former Members or some who will be leaving in the near future.

● (1150)

I would like to deal with the problem of the aircraft industry in Canada in particular. This brings us to Canadair and de Havilland. I and many of my colleagues sat in this Parliament in 1974 when this subject was a matter of active discussion. It is like a page from ten years ago to see the Hon. John Turner discussing what he would do. He was the leader in the movement for the Government to go to Crown corporations.

Despite his record of doubling the deficit, he now holds himself up as the champion of halving the deficit. The question of whether he is able to divide as easily as he was able to multiply is something the voters will have to answer, and maybe even John Turner.

When we debated this some ten years ago, the Government was clearly warned what kind of mess it was getting into if it got into the aircraft industry. My friend from York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) spoke on April 2, 1974. He pointed out that the Government and the NDP were of one mind, that they were lusting for power. At page 1095 of Hansard, the Hon. Member for York-Peel said:

> I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in particular should note that these Members will buy anything sight unseen. When we attempted to have the estimate with respect to de Havilland reduced in committee, Government Members, joined by their allies in the NDP, said, "We don't care what the statement of de Havilland looks like. We don't care whether or not it is earning money. We want that estimate to go through".

The Hon. Member for York-Peel had come across information showing that while the Government was attempting to buy this corporation, it had sales valued at $35 million and was marginally profitable. At the same time the subsidiary of Hawker-Siddeley, England, Hawker-Siddeley of Canada, had sales of $200 million and profitability after taxation of $3 million. We bought the one with the smallest possible profitability and the lower sales. The Government was not interested in buying the one that was a going concern. That was typical of the attitude of the then Minister of Finance. He was totally supported by his chief rival at the meeting in Halifax yesterday. The then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, now Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), said some things which make for comic relief, knowing what we know now about his pet project, Canadair.

This hearkens back to the politics concerned. This company was located in the constituency of Dollard, the preserve of the then Minister of Supply and Services, the Hon. J. P. Goyer. He turned out to be an executive of Canadair when it became fully nationalized and needed some inexpert directors in which this Government's Crown corporations seem to abound. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) was extolling this jump into the future that he had brought about. On March 8, 1977 he said in the House of Commons:

> I might talk for a few seconds, with your permission, about the famous LearStar jet project. I was asked questions in the House this afternoon on that matter. This is becoming one of the greatest success stories in the history of industrial development in Canada. Within three months, we have already sold 71 aircraft at a cost of some $5 million each. The prototype is not even completed but a combination of factors, the fact that it is a long-range plane with a range of over 5,000 miles and a fuel consumption of approximately two thirds that of competitive aircraft, the fact that the demand is greater for that type of plane since many air services have been discontinued throughout the world and executives feel the need to buy planes for their business trips, and also that we now have the expertise in Canada to build that plane, for all these reasons it is a very exciting program.

We could do with a little less excitement and a little more business sense. He is the second choice for the leadership of the Party across the way.

One yearns for one of the few moments of truth that one has heard from Government Ministers in this regard. When the Hon. Jack Horner was Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I asked whether it was still the policy of the Government to sell to private industry the combined air industry which the Government claimed was the reason for nationalizing both of these companies. To his credit, Mr. Horner said that they had run into a problem: when they were losing money, nobody wanted to buy the company, and when they were making money, they did not want to sell. That was possibly the last totally honest answer we have had on this subject in this Parliament.

If one looks at Schedule C-II showing which corporations are being put in this Bill, you find that the Canada Development Investment Corporation in 1982 had a deficit of $1.7 billion. This was largely brought about by Canadair having a deficit of $1.4 billion. Several times the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Cabinet Ministers have been questioned about this. Their answer is: "Do you want to lose the expertise? Do you want to lose the jobs?" It is a sad tale if a company is not able to produce a viable product. However, there must be a limit as to how much you are willing to spend for jobs. Since Canadair has approximately 1,400 employees, it is very easy to figure out what the jobs cost when you have a deficit in one year of $1.4 billion: it comes to $1 million per job. That is a little more than any economy can bear, to be losing $1 million per job created.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, we are debating Bill C-24, the Financial Administration Act, a Bill with a magnitude we cannot predict in terms of its effect on the economic health of our country. It is discouraging to be able to speak for only ten minutes on a Bill that has such great implications for the future of our country, for the health of our economy, for our unemployed and all the other aspects. In the ten minutes allotted to me I will confine my remarks to two very important principles that we have to look at in this Bill. The first is the matter of accountability; the second is the matter of fairness within the marketplace.

The Government wants to have us believe that Crown corporations will always be accountable, that they are accountable to Parliament, that their annual reports will be tabled in the House and therefore the committees of the House are free to examine those reports. That, in the definition of the Government, is accountability.

● (1200)

However, there are reasons why Crown corporations are increasingly unaccoutable to Parliament. The first reason for this is the massive proliferation of Crown corporations. Frankly, we are losing track of how many Crown corporations there are, where they are, what they are doing and even whether they still deserve to exist. The population explosion of Crown corporations is such that we really cannot keep track of which Crown corporations exist in the marketplace.

I listened with care to the remarks of my hon. friend from Rosedale who spoke last week. He was quoting the Auditor General's report and pointed out that the Auditor General has been concerned about the fact that in the past 22 years the number of Crown corporations has been increased by something like 300. In 1962, 22 years ago, about 28 Crown corporations were in existence; there are now over 300 Crown corporations in existence. Back in 1962, the existing Crown corporations had known assets of about $8.4 billion. Today, those assets are now in the neighbourhood of $74 billion with an additional $63 billion of liabilities. We must ask ourselves how we got from the situation which existed in 1962 when there were 28 Crown corporations to the situation which exists in 1984 when there are over 300 Crown corporations.

If Government Members would like to say that these Crown corporations are accountable to Parliament, all we need do is ask ourselves whether those of us who have been here for half of those 22 years have seen legislation enacting each one of those over 300 Crown corporations. The answer is a very simple no. Some parent Crown corporations have within their enabling legislation the right to spawn further Crown corporations. Therefore, it is almost impossible for us to keep track of which Crown corporations exist in the marketplace. There are very different pieces of legislation which enable the Crown corporations to do that.

Today we are debating the Financial Administration Act dealing with Crown corporations. The title of the legislation would lead the general public to believe that because we are dealing with a Bill with a title which includes Crown corporations, it is legislation which affects all Crown corporations. Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. I have received correspondence from a company called Canertech regarding a company in British Columbia which was formed under the Canada Business Corporations Act. I will refer to that company a little later on in my remarks. As well, companies have been spawned by the petroleum legislation which has been passed by the House. On and on it goes and we have simply lost track of them all.

The second reason that there is no longer any real accountability and why there will be a diminishing level of accountability under this legislation is the shift of responsibility within Cabinet. In the parliamentary system of our country, Crown corporations have historically been accountable to the Minister to whom those Crown corporations report. That is eminently logical and I think the Canadian people generally believe that if a Crown corporation falls under the energy program, then the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) will be accountable for that corporation because it will report to that particular Minister. However, under the new legislation we are debating now, that will no longer necessarily be the case.

Accountability is now being shifted from the Minister to the Cabinet. It is being shifted from a specific responsibility to a general responsibility. How can accountability ever be demanded from a general body? I suppose the only way we could do so is to ask that general body to resign. I see that the Government is so interested in this legislation that the number of Members representing the Government who are present in the House has now been reduced to one. That tells us something about their level of interest. Responsibility is being shifted from the specific Minister to the entire Cabinet. No one will accept personal blame for the failure of any Crown corporation.

Another reason for the lack of accountability of Crown corporations is that Crown corporations enjoy a special and privileged position within the country under the terms assigned to them by the Government. My friend, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), in his brilliant remarks regarding the aspect of the responsibility and accountability of Crown corporations, pointed out that the uranium cartel was exempt from any kind of punishment. He pointed out that it was immune from prosecution. Any company in the marketplace must accept responsibility for its decisions. As pointed out by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West, when Sears erred in its advertising, it had to pay $1 million. When the uranium cartel, under the protection of the Government, erred, it did not have to pay anything. It was exempt.

The second principle I would like to raise regarding the matter we are debating today is the principle of fairness in the marketplace. It seems to me that Crown corporations play a kind of schizophrenic role in the marketplace. As my colleague from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) pointed out earlier, the general argument for establishing Crown corporations is that the marketplace is not meeting certain needs and therefore the Government must establish Crown corporations to meet those specific needs. Within the Canadian experience, none of us will argue that particular point of view. However, when a Crown corporation is purportedly founded to meet a need in the marketplace that is not otherwise being met, it at the same time wishes to argue that it is competing fairly and openly in the marketplace.
